THE

RELIGIOUS CEREMONIES

AND CUSTOMS

OF THE

SEVERAL NATIONS

OF THE

KNOWN WORLD.

VOL. I.

XX. 2. 3

2 — 13 — 18

THE RELIGIOUS

CEREMONIES

AND CUSTOMS

OF THE SEVERAL

NATIONS OF THE KNOWN WORLD.

Represented in above an Hundred COPPER-PLATES,

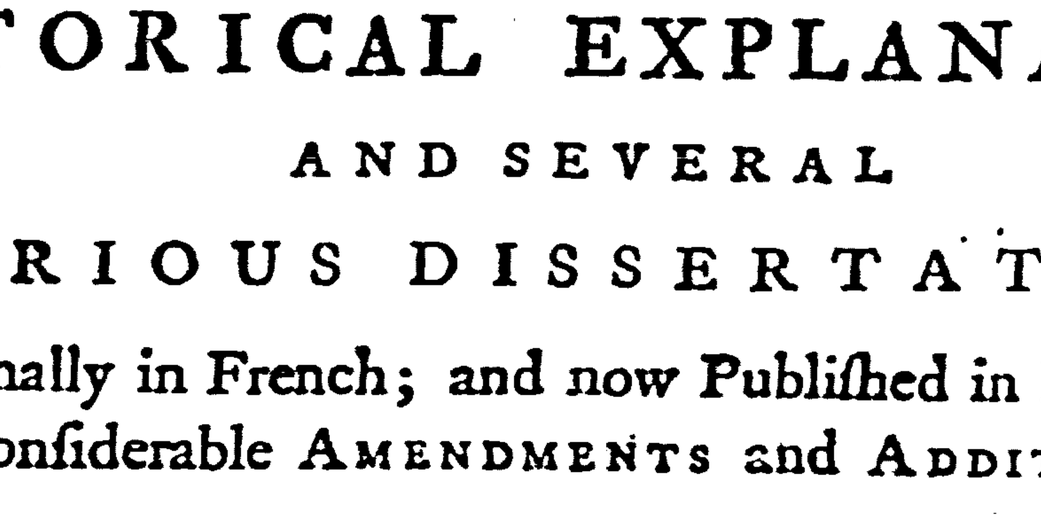
DESIGNED BY THE

FAMOUS PICART.

TOGETHER WITH

HISTORICAL EXPLANATIONS,

AND SEVERAL



CURIOUS DISSERTATIONS.

Written Originally in French; and now Published in English, with very Considerable AMENDMENTS and ADDITIONS.

VOL. I.

CONTAINING

THE CEREMONIES OF THE JEWS, &c.

LONDON:

Printed for NICHOLAS PREVOST, and Comp. at the Ship, against Southampton-street in the Strand.

M.DCC.XXXI.

BIBLIOTECA

DOCUMENT
MICROFILMED
BY CIA

626:04
193.26801

THE TRANSLATOR TO THE READER.

IF there was any one man now living, who had been ſo general a traveller as to have viſited all the nations we have heard of; he would be certainly mentioned with admiration and envy by all curious and rightly-intelligent perſons. And if this imaginary perſon had been bleſſed with ſound judgment and an unprejudiced mind, to guide him in his obſervations throughout, he would doubtleſs be ſtiled a moſt agreeable and amuſing companion, and a moſt rational and profound philoſopher. But ſuch a man as this has never yet exiſted, and in all human probability never will.

For though mathematicians in comparing the dimenſions of our earth with the infinite ſpace of the univerſe, pronounce it to be but a point, a mere nothing; yet with reference to us who move on it, it may be, properly enough, termed vaſt and immenſe. The wide extended oceans which muſt be traverſed; the long, the uncouth tracts of land which muſt be meaſured by thoſe whoſe curioſity ſhould lead them to ſee a very conſiderable part of the globe, would tire the footſteps and exhauſt the patience.

But if the length of the way were alone ſufficient to deter the generality of mankind, from undertaking far-diſtant journies and voyages; what ſhall we ſay to the addition of dangers and difficulties, which muſt be undergone and incurred at the ſame time? Dangers of the moſt dreadful kinds, of infinite variety; and difficulties inſurmountable, but by the utmoſt intrepidity and reſolution. For ſuch is the ſeeming decree of nature; ſuch the averſion between nation and nation; and ſuch the conſtruction of this our terraqueous abode; that we are in continual jeopardy, whenever we exceed the bounds of our native ſoil. If we eſcape the deaths which impend from the bare change of climates and ordinary nouriſhment; others more diſmal threaten us, from the violence of tempeſts, the rage of ſeas, the barrenneſs and unknown paths of deſarts; from precipices, quick-ſands and torrents; and in fine, from the fury of wild beaſts, the venomous bites and ſtings of reptiles and inſects, and from the murderous hands of robbers, ſavages and frantic zealots.

But to what purpoſe ſhould we dwell on the hardſhips which muſt be encountered by thoſe who wander far from home? They are innumerable, which being well known, few or none have been tempted to gratify their curioſity at ſo extravagant a rate; and which perhaps in our days would be eſteemed little better than knight-errantry.

However, all perſons of true taſte and a right turn of mind, greatly prize the relations of travellers, which when methodically digeſted, and drawn up with a ſtrict regard to truth, are of great uſe; eſpecially when they come from the hands of men of penetration and judgment; and when attentively peruſed have almoſt as lively an effect on the mind as if we had been eye-witneſſes of what is communicated to us.

And it is by this means, that the learned and the wealthy chuſe to inform themſelves in all matters of remote tranſaction and import; and grow wiſe and knowing therein at the expence of thoſe whom the love of riches, or the urgent occaſions of neceſſity have driven to the uttermoſt parts of the earth: amongſt whom there have not been wanting numbers of men ſufficiently ſtocked with capacity and learning, to enable them to give a handſom and rational account of what they have ſeen and obſerved in their travels.

From theſe, the authors of this curious work have collected their materials, towards the furniſhing us with a diſtinct notion of all the religions and religious rites, which have hitherto been known to be practiſed. And ſeeing that this compilation is ſo extenſive in its compaſs, and ſo various and important in its ſubjects, which relate purely to the moſt intereſting article of life, religion; it muſt afford a moſt pleaſing diverſity of contemplation and amuſement; and therefore we doubt not, will be perfectly acceptable, to a people whoſe conſtant characteriſtics are generoſity, candor and good ſenſe; a people whoſe peculiar happineſs it is, that they both can and dare to make uſe of their reaſon.

And though a bare enumeration and repreſentation of what is here promiſed were abundantly enough to recommend it to the world; that is not all you will find here. For by a plain and natural method of reaſoning, together with the hints, interſperſed up and down, you will alſo form to yourſelf an idea, and a very clear and competent one too, of the genius, policy, policy, manners and arts of the ſeveral people ſpoken of, and alſo of the nature and chief productions of the ſoil they live upon.

Let none think, that becauſe the learned and the wealthy, either too prudent or too indolent to hazard their lives or waſte their time, never travel beyond the bounds of Europe; that therefore nothing beyond them is worthy our attention. There is ſcarce any nation, even the moſt ſavage and uncouth, but may afford matter of very ſerious reflexion to a man of ſenſe. And ſure this cannot be doubted, when we behold the numbers of perſons, who are impatiently eager and indefatigable in their reſearches as to what concerns the animal and vegetable worlds; for if we argue juſtly, moſt of them would be, and doubtleſs are, in proportion more induſtrious in their ſtudy of the rational world, as this infinitely excels in dignity the two others.

But you may object, that excepting complexions and two or three outward accidents, all men are the ſame; and it is very true, if we conſider their bodies only. But if we are not miſtaken, the body is the laſt thing conſidered, except by thoſe who profeſs to relieve it in caſes of diſeaſe and caſualty. No one ever acquired wiſdom by a bare contemplation on the bodies of men: no, that is obtained by conſidering their intellects and diſpoſitions, their religious and civil inſtitutions, in which there is as great a variety, and conſidering that all men have reaſon for their guide, to the full as unaccountable and amazing, as in any things elſe within the verge of nature.

Beſides, what can we employ our thoughts on more commendably, than in the purſuit of that Proteus, the mind of man, throughout all its transformations? What ſubject is there of greater dignity, or that more nearly concerns us, than that which may help us to attain a true knowledge of what we really are, and of the bleſſings we really enjoy; and from thence learn how to exalt and humble ourſelves by turns. We can judge of our happineſs or miſery, but by compariſon; and how ſhall we compare ourſelves with others we know nothing of?

Many men otherwiſe of good underſtanding, who have never travelled themſelves, or only read and converſed with ſuch travellers as have carried their little prejudices with them wherever they have been; have conceived contemptible notions of the reſt of the world, and conſequently flatter themſelves in the higheſt ſtrain for the chimerical excellence they and their own nation have above all others. Theſe are like the Chineſe, who were wont (and it is likely continue the practice) to place their own country in the center of their maps, and draw little frightful figures upon their borders to repreſent the nations round about them.

But the miſtake that a man lies under in this caſe, is attended with great inconveniencies. It caſts a damp upon his curioſity; it ſtifles the generous ſparks of humanity, which might naturally glow in his breaſt; it ſours his temper and inclines him to a very confined way of thinking; all which muſt certainly combine to make him a worſe man in every concern of life, than he originally is. So natural is it for thoſe who deem themſelves the grand favorites of heaven, to act the moſt unworthily of the divine beneficence! Not conſidering that God is the tender parent of all mankind whereſoever diſperſed, or howſoever diſtinguiſhed, ſtrictly impartial, perfectly-righteous.

A fond pretenſion to the ſtrongeſt God among the Heathens, and a full perſuaſion of election and purity of revelation, among thoſe that have had ſublimer notions of divine matters, have been the ſeeds of the diſſenſion and wars in all ages, and in almoſt all countries. And if we ſeriouſly conſider the natural ſprings and motives, that have deſolated the greateſt part of the inhabited world by turns, we ſhall always find religion to be at the bottom. And if the difference of religion has ſtill this ſad effect almoſt every where, that it keeps up an unkind and unbrotherly averſion betwixt nations, and by influencing their manners diſtinguiſhes them more generally than their complexions, is it not worth while to conſider what the various religions are, which at the ſame time, that they unite their profeſſors together and beget in them a veneration and eſteem for each other, makes them inſupportable to their neighbours about them, though formed of the ſame materials, and by the ſame Almighty hand?

It is with grief we ſay it, the Chriſtians themſelves, though every line of their doctrine breathes brotherly love and unbounded charity, have almoſt ſurpaſſed all others in the blood they have ſpilt, and the ambitious views they have entertained. How often has the Chriſtian dove been transformed into a ravenous vulture? It may be hard to tell the true cauſe, why we act both in our private capacities as we are men, and in our public capacities, as we are nations in ſuch direct repugnance to the precepts of our holy law. But perhaps a very little ſtudy would let a middling capacity into this prepoſterous ſecret.

One thing is, and it ſeems to be too true; a prevailing notion which has obtained among the ſeveral nations, that have pretended to God's ſpecial grace and undoubted revelation; namely, that this ſpiritual bleſſing could not be complete without temporal honour; and becauſe this might be equal to that, nothing leſs than the empire of the world could ſuffice. And hence it has come to paſs, that when occaſion has offered, even the celeſtial and benign ſyſtem of Chriſtianity has been conſtrued into the moſt bloody and tragical inſtitution, that barbarity itſelf could invent, to flatter (ſtrange!) the ſanctity of the religion, and wild ambition of the chief profeſſors of it. As if the father of many children ſhould unnaturally fix all his affection on ſome particular ſon, and command him to murder all his brethren, becauſe he liked not them ſo well as himſelf. But men, it ſeems, will be men, and though Chriſtians have been conſtantly taught to lift up their eyes to heaven, there to look for their kingdom; yet they have made it ſufficiently appear, that they have not been quite ſo ſpiritually given as to content themſelves with that comfortable proſpect. So then, were our religion (we mean Chriſtianity in general) ſtrictly compared with our depredations on infidels, our cruel perſecutions and maſſacres of each other, and the numberleſs abominations and exceſſes practiſed among all ſects of us, it is likely, we might make a more deſpicable figure in the eyes of a rational creature, who ſhould be indifferent to all the religions profeſſed on earth, than the worſt of thoſe we call Barbarians.

The Mahometans alſo, who though they are defective in faith, are commendable enough for their morals, and their acts of piety in ſome reſpects; they in their turn hope, that the whole world will be Mahometan one day or other, and to bring it about, all opportunities are embraced, and all artifices practiſed, ſometimes bloody, ſometimes mild.

The Jews alſo, though now an abject and ſeemingly-abandoned race, and no better than vagabonds upon the face of the earth; yet they live not without expectations of lording it over the kingdoms of the countries, and in the fury of their zeal to trample them under their feet.

And now what ſhall we ſay, when we behold theſe three religions, who profeſs in the pureſt manner to adore and imitate the great Creator and Upholder of all things; what ſhall we ſay, when we behold their diſpoſitions ſo deſtructive to the peace of the world; and at the ſame time perceive the viſible, the univerſal benignity of the ineffable Deity they adore, whoſe mercy is over all his works?

Indeed the Mahometans have ſome colour of reaſon in endeavouring to propagate their faith with fire and ſword, and therein they act conformably to the genius and precepts of their law, which is haughty and boiſterous. But yet ſome how or other, they do not give ſo much into perſecution as might be expected from the heat of their zeal, and pride of their ambition. The exiſtence of the Greek, the Armenian, the Coptic, and other churches under their dominion, is an undeniable inſtance of it.

On the other hand, the Chriſtians have no commiſſion to uſe violence in the ſpreading of their tidings of ſalvation, no promiſe of ſucceſs if they attempt it, and yet how hard do they preſs even upon each other for every trifling difference in matters of faith? And how wofully with the peace of God in their mouths, and the cruel weapons of war, and inſtruments of torture in their hands, have they tormented and torn to pieces the bodies of men, and laid waſte whole empires? Can rapine and murder become the followers of the Prince of peace, the Lamb of God?

We ſee then, that in ſome meaſure the Chriſtians ſeem to obey the fierce commandment of Mahomet, and the Mahometans in ſome degree to be ſoftened by the mild and gentle law of Chriſt.

Theſe two are, in our weſtern parts of the world, called the grand religions; and are doing what they can to bring the reſt of mankind into an obſervance of their reſpective laws; not excepting each other.

And in truth, the Mahometans, to all outward appearance, have great opportunities of ſpreading their faith, from the terror of their arms, the wideneſs of their poſſeſſions, and the ſeeming reaſonableneſs and ſimplicity of their doctrine; which in the main teaches nothing further than the unity of God, and that Mahomet is his prophet. And this belief, together with the injunction of ſome ceremonies and practices which tend to decency, health, and devotion, is eaſily conceived, and chearfully accepted, by thoſe who have been uſed to groſſer ſentiments of God and religion.

The Chriſtians alſo, have great opportunities of preaching the goſpel to all nations. But if we take a brief ſurvey of the preſent ſtate of the world, we may be induced to think that if ever they make any conſiderable acquiſitions to Chriſt's ſpiritual kingdom on earth, it muſt be the work of time, and wholly owing to his own divine influence, and the powerful co-operation of the Holy Ghoſt.

For let us firſt look towards Aſia. This quarter of the world, which humanly ſpeaking is the moſt conſiderable of the four, is in great part poſſeſſed by Chriſtians of various denominations and Mahometans of diſcording ſects: But the greateſt part of it is heathen and idolatrous. Now the Aſiatic Chriſtians are over-run with ſuch errors and ſuperſtitions, that the reformation which might be made of them, might be ſtiled almoſt a total converſion. But can this change be wrought, without the downfal of thoſe who at once protect them in their opinions, and tyrannize them into their ignorance? Then the Mahometans; how are they to be reconciled? Not by any human means viſible to us; that muſt be the work of heaven itſelf, and we muſt patiently expect the bleſſed event. And now for the great and haughty kingdoms of the Pagans in Aſia; they are vaſtly remote from us; they have but very ſlender idea's of our power and learning; they are obſtinately wedded to the inſtitutions of their forefathers and wiſemen, under which they have enjoyed great worldly happineſs and grandeur; they are ſuperlatively conceited of the brightneſs of their lights and underſtanding; they boaſt their antiquity, their arts, and their ſciences; and think too juſtly, that they inhabit the largeſt and moſt fertile portion of the earth, and from thence may naturally enough pronounce themſelves the darlings of heaven. Add to all this a notion which ſeems in ſome degree to obtain among them all, and is poſitively maintained by ſome of them; That as God has ſtamped a difference upon nations, either by the caſt of their complexion, the turn of their countenance, or the proportion of their ſtature, delighting in the variety of his works; ſo from each of them, he requires a different mode of worſhip, and gives a kind acceptance to each. This is an odd notion, but it muſt be owned, that it carries a great air of humanity and univerſal benevolence with it. In a word, it paſſes for a common civility with them, to treat all religions with reſpect and veneration; and this is conformable to what was enjoined to the Jews, and was the conſtant practice of the civilized nations of the ancients. But not to digreſs, let us ſee, how theſe nations are to be prevailed on to depart from the cuſtoms and opinions, which are ſo deeply, ſo religiouſly, rooted in them. Sure it cannot be expected, that the few ignorant though well meaning zealots, and crafty agents, the church of Rome ſends among them, will bring it about. No, they have wit enough to perceive the ignorance of the former; ſubtlety enough to penetrate through the artifices of the latter; and in general, ſenſe enough to tell them, that if all Chriſtians are ſuch lewd and extravagant companions as thoſe they have ſeen, however pure and holy their religion may be in itſelf, it makes no appearance in their morals, and therefore is not for their turn; for they are generally a grave and a prudent people. We here mean the Indian kingdoms and ſtates, the Siameſe, the Chineſe, Japanneſe and ſome others: As for the more Northern idolaters, and ſome of the ſmaller and remoter iſlands ſcattered up and down on the Eaſtern ſhores of Aſia, they are out of the queſtion; firſt, becauſe it is difficult and dangerous to get at them, and ſecondly, for a reaſon which moſt will gueſs at.

Afric alſo, is in good part inhabited by Chriſtians and Mahometans of different degrees of illumination. The reſt are moſtly ſavages and barbarians, too truly and juſtly ſo called. The caſe of the Chriſtians and Mahometans here, with regard to the Weſtern Chriſtians, is the ſame as in Aſia. As to the other Africans, ſo far as we know of them, they are covered by the thickeſt miſt of ignorance. The Negroe idolaters are involved in an obſcurity, much darker than their own complexion: But the bare naming of theſe laſt is ſo ſhocking, that for the honour of the Chriſtian name, we can proceed no farther in the ungrateful task of mentioning them upon this occaſion. Let it ſuffice, that inſtead of treating them with the charity due to fellow creatures, we uſe them worſe than beaſts, debaſing the image of God to a level with the aſs of burthen; and that we foment and abet ſuch diſorders among them, as nothing but the moſt abominable ſpirit of avarice and irreligion could ſuggeſt.

Let us therefore ſhift the ſcene to a more pleaſing proſpect, and view what religious revolutions may happen in America, the new world. And here we have ſome rational hope, that the cloudy gloom which is ſpread over the infinite inhabitants of this new-found continent, may one time or other be diſpelled, and themſelves turned away from their numberleſs errors and fearful ſuperſtitions; but after all it may be juſtly dreaded, that they will only change theſe for others almoſt as pernicious and diſhonourable. The Spaniards and Portugueſe have hitherto made by much the greateſt number of converts here; but the Chriſtians they make, may be judged of the Chriſtianity they themſelves profeſs. To paſs this over, we may ſuppoſe, that in times to come, and as the European colonies ſpread and blend with the Indian natives, their religion and manners, good and bad, will ſpread in proportion; and that the many nations which are now ſavages, will put on the face of the prevailing Chriſtians, to whom they are aſſociated, and by whom they have been or may be governed; but this great change is ſo far removed from us, both in time and place, that we perceive nothing of it diſtinctly. Hitherto it is certain, that the natives of America, both North and South, have been but little amended, if not greatly debauched by their acquaintance with the Europeans, who have ſhewn them ſome dreadful examples of injuſtice and cruelty; and have thereby, as many intelligent perſons think, rendered them more fierce and treacherous than they found them. The laſt of our navigators that viſited the Weſtern coaſts of America, gives a very edifying account of the Southermoſt Californians, and places them in a ſtate of perfect innocence; but at the ſame time delivers his opinion, That it is, becauſe they have not yet been tainted by the intercourſe of the Europeans or others, nor exaſperated by the oppreſſions of invaſion and tyranny.

ſpread

Here let us make a ſtand, and impartially reflect with ourſelves, which ſeem the moſt naturally to incur the wrath and indignation of heaven: Whether thoſe to whom God has condeſcended to reveal himſelf, and declare his ſublime attributes, his infinite mercy in particular, and yet dare to cloath him with all the foul and deteſtable paſſions of the weakeſt, the moſt unworthy mortals: Or thoſe who having no poſitive knowledge of his ſpirituality and univerſality, repreſent him under the borrowed form of an human or any other creature? When the ſaving knowledge on the one ſide, and the palpable ignorance on the other, are duly pondered, the greateſt weight of guilt muſt be adjudged to lie on thoſe who ſhut their eyes againſt the light of the ſun, and pervert juſtice and righteouſneſs in the name of God.

But we mean not to anticipate any thing that may be found in the following ſheets, nor to dictate to you, how you ſhall think or conclude upon the peruſal of what is therein contained; religious and other reflections of all ſorts muſt abundantly flow in upon you at every page.

It remains now, that we ſay ſomething to you in recommendation of the work; but that were needleſs, the title itſelf will do it with every curious perſon. However, we will be bold to ſay thus much of the original compilers; that if to their induſtry and judgment it be owing, that we have a diſtinct and lively view of the ſeveral methods and practices which have entered into the heads and hearts of men to inſure themſelves happineſs in this world, and reſt in the next: If they have put it into our power to ſit calmly and ſedately in our retirements, and run over the ſurface of the whole earth, and without danger either to our perſons or conſciences, aſſiſt at the frantic exceſſes of ſome, the ſorrowful penances, ſolemn adoration, and moſt out-of-the-way worſhip of others: In fine, if by their aſſiſtance we are with very little trouble admitted into the gloomy receſſes of the moſt remote ſanctuaries, and initiated into the occult myſteries and wild ſuperſtitions of all nations, what acceptance, what thanks do not they and their labours deſerve? Nor muſt we forget the juſt taſte and exquiſite art of the engraver, whoſe care has been ſuch as to inform himſelf of all the particulars relating to his ſubjects: By which means he has been enabled to give us, not only the moſt exact repreſentations of habits and buildings; but alſo the moſt lively pictures of the face of each country, and the very countenances of every people upon every occaſion; as is confeſſed and has been often admired by different travellers of the beſt note now living amongſt us. Therefore as no ſubjects ſtand more in need of illuſtration than theſe; ſo hardly any have been ever ſet off with ſuch truth and advantage.

And now a word or two on the general plan of this undertaking, and of this tranſlation, and we will treſpaſs no longer on your patience. And for the firſt, it was the original deſign of the authors to publiſh a complete body of the various religions and ſuperſtitions in four volumes, but finding the materials to ſwell under their hands to a greater degree than they expected; they perceived it neceſſary to enlarge their compaſs to ſix volumes. Four of them are already publiſhed, and the remaining two will ſpeedily ſee the light.

We here preſent you with a tranſlation of three of the abovementioned volumes. And if we ſay, that this Engliſh edition has ſome advantages over the French, we hope it will not be imputed to us as arrogance, nor can it be thought, that we have therein any deſign to depreciate our original. For as he that ſtands upon another man's ſhoulders, ſees further than the perſon that ſupports him, ſo has it been with us. And beſides, we have had opportunities of improving, by conſulting our own travellers, here cited, in their original expreſſion. But a brief recapitulation will diſplay this matter.

In the ſecond volume we have illuſtrated the Romiſh religion and ceremonies with ſeveral notes. In the third volume we have alſo, frequently animadverted by way of note, on what is ſaid concerning the Americans. And in the ſecond part of the ſame volume, we have given at length, and in the very words of the author, a diſſertation on the religious rites and cuſtoms of the Banians, by the reverend Mr. Lord, which the French editors had caſtrated. And this we did for two reaſons; firſt, becauſe it is writ with great depth of judgment and majeſty of ſtile, and founded upon actual experience; and ſecondly, becauſe it is now grown ſcarce and ſells at a dear rate. Such are the additions and improvements we have made to our original; which whether they enhanſe the value of this edition is not for us to ſay.

And now for the body of the tranſlation we have little to add; except that we have done our utmoſt to make it Engliſh, and a juſt interpretation throughout. This is all we need, or can with decency ſay: And therefore, we now leave you to the peruſal of the vaſt and extraordinary matter before you, and wiſh you all the pleaſure you can expect, and all the fruit you can reap from a curious attention to what you will here find.

EXPLA-

EXPLANATION

OF THE SEVERAL

PLATES

In VOLUME I.

And Directions to the Book-binders for placing the Cuts.

Nº 1.

Nº 1. Page 22.

THIS plate is particularly explained at the end of the preliminary Diſſertation upon Religious Worſhip.

Nº 2.

Nº 2. Page 192.

La dedicace de la ſynagogue des Juifs Portuguais à Amſterdam.

A L'Hechal où on garde les livres de la loy.

B Theba ou pupitre où le Hazan ou Hacham liſent la loy

C Les 2 galeries pour les femmes.

La dedicace de la ſynagogue, & l'entrée des livres de la loy, ſe celebra pendant 8 jours le 10 du mois de Menahem 5435. qui ſe raporte au mois d'Aout 1675. on en fait la commemoration tous les ans.

Dedication of the ſynagogue of the Portugueſe Jews at Amſterdam.

A The hechal where the books of the law are kept.

B Theba or deſk where the Hazan or Hacham reads the law.

C The two galleries for the women.

The dedication of the ſynagogue, and carrying thither the books of the law was celebrated for 8 days, the 10th of the month Menahem, 5435. which anſwers to the month of Auguſt 1675. and is commemorated every year.

Nº 3.

Nº 3. Page 195.

A Taled ou voile blanc qu'ils mettent ſur la tête à la ſynagogue pendant la priere, aux 4 coins duquel pend le Siſith, ou cordons à 5 noeuds.

A Taled or white veil worn on the head in the ſynagogue during prayer time, at the 4 corners whereof hangs the Siſith, or ſtrings with 5 knots.

B B Le bras gauche vû en dehors, & en dedans avec la Teffila.

B B View of the inſide and outſide of the left arm with the Teffila on.

C Teffila Scel Jad, ou la Teffila de la main, en grand, & le noeud en form de ד.

C Teffila Scel Jad, or the hand Teffila in large, and the knots in the form of ד.

D D Totafot, ou Teffila Scel Roſc, ou la Teffila de la tête.

D D Totafot, Teffila Scel Roſc, or Teffila for the head.

E E Noeud en forme de ט derriere la tête.

E E Knot in the form of ט behind the head.

F Juif couvert du Taled, & aiant les Teffilin à la tête, & au bras.

F Jew covered with his Taled, and having the Teffilin on his head and hand.

Nº 4.

Nº 4. Page 196.

A Vêtement que les Juifs portoient autrefois, & qu'ils portent maintenant ſous leurs habits

A Robe which the Jews formerly wore, and ſtill wear under their uſual cloths, that they ordinaires

ordinaires pour ne point choquer les manieres des pais où ils vivent.

B Les cordons qui ſont aux 4 coins.

C Un des dits cordons repreſenté plus grand à 5 noeuds, qui ſignifient le nom de Dieu.

D Lampe ſabathique.

E Pain ſans levain avec le quel ils font le Pâque.

F Pain ordinaire ſans levain qui ſe mange pendant la fête.

G Rameau de palme, de ſaule, & de myrthe, joints enſemble, qu'ils tiennent à la main gauche, & le citron H. dans la droite qu'ils aprochent l'un contre l'autre, & les agitent vers les 4 vents.

I Corne de belier avec laquelle on ſonne aux jours de l'an, & aux autres fêtes.

K Baton, ou canne creuſe, attaché au chambranle de toutes les portes, au coté droit, dans lequel eſt renfermé un parchmin où eſt ecrit les paſſages du Deuter. ch. vi. ỳ. 4, &c. & ch. xi. ỳ. 13, &c.

N° 5.

A Les prêtres deſcendans d'Aron donnant la benediction au peuple.

Maniere d'expoſer la loy au peuple avantque de commencer à la lire.

N° 6.

Le ſon du cor au premier jour de l'an.

Le Chipur ou le jour du pardon, tel qu'il ſe celebre chez les Juifs Allemands.

N° 7.

L'examen du levain, &c.

A La maitreſſe de la maiſon qui met du pain levé en divers endroits, à finque ſon mari, qui en fait la recherche, en trouve.

Le repas de pâques chez les Juifs Portuguais.

1. Le plat où eſt un os d'epaule d'agneau, avec un œuf dur.
2. Plat où ſont les Herbes ameres.
3. Plat de figues, pommes, amandes, canelle, &c. hachées & cuites enſemble, repreſentant la maniere dont ils faiſoient les briques en Egypt.
4. Plat avec la ſauce pour tremper les herbes ameres.
5. Moitié du gateau des Levites dont le pere de famille rompt des morceaux, qu'il diſtribue à tous ceux qui ſont à table. N. B. Tous les domeſtiques Juifs ſont à la même table avec lui.
6. Serviette ſous laquelle le gateau a eté caché.
7. Panier où ſont les matſot, ou pain de pâques.

N° 8.

Proceſſion des palmes chez les Juifs Portuguais.

Repas des Juifs pendant la Fête des Tentes.

may not run counter to the mode of the country where they live.

B The ſtrings hanging at the 4 corners.

C One of thoſe ſtrings drawn larger with 5 knots at it, ſignifying the name of God.

D The ſabbath lamp.

E Unleavened bread with which they celebrate the paſſover.

F Common unleavened bread eaten during the feſtival.

G A branch of palm, willow, and myrtle tied together, held in their left hand, and the limon H. in their right, which they put cloſe to one another and ſhake towards the 4 winds.

I The ram's horn which they blow on new year's, and other feſtival days.

K A ſtick or hollow cane, tied to the right ſide of all door caſes, wherein is encloſed a parchment, on which are written paſſages from Deuter. ch. vi. ỳ. 4, &c. and ch. xi. ỳ. 13, &c.

N° 5. Page 203.

A The prieſts, deſcendants of Aaron, giving the benediction to the people.

Manner of holding up the law in the ſight of all the people before they begin to read it.

N° 6. Page 205.

Sounding the horn on New-year's-day.

The Chipur or day of pardon, as celebrated by the German Jews.

N° 7. Page 208.

The ſearch for the leaven, &c.

A The miſtreſs of the houſe putting leavened bread in ſeveral places, that her huſband in his ſearch may find it.

The paſſover repaſt among the Portugueſe Jews.

1. The diſh with a bone of the ſhoulder of a lamb, and an hard egg.
2. Diſh with bitter herbs.
3. Diſh with figs, apples, almonds, mace, &c. haſhed and dreſſed all together, repreſenting their way of making bricks in Egypt.
4. Diſh with the ſauce for dipping in the bitter herbs.
5. Half a Levite's cake which the maſter of the family breaks in pieces, and diſtributes to all at the table. N. B. All the Jewiſh ſervants ſit at the table with him.
6. Napkin under which the cake lay hid.
7. Baſket wherein are the matſot, or paſſover loaves.

N° 8. Page 210.

Proceſſion of palms among the Portugueſe Jews.

Repaſt of the Jews during the Feaſt of Tabernacles.

N° 9.

N° 9.

Simcha Tora, ou joie pour la loy.

A Le cadan bereſcid } ou epoux de la loi re-
B Le cadan tora } preſentant les Rois d'Iſrael, qui etoient obligez de commencer & de finir la lecture de la loi, le dernier jour de la fête des cabanes ; le cadan tora eſt celui qui finit, le cadan bereſcid eſt celui qui la recommence.

C C Deux parnaſſins.

Maniere de conduire les epoux de la loi chez eux.

A Le cadan tora le jour qu'il finit la lecture de la loy, eſt reconduit le ſoir par le cadan bereſcid, qui eſt à ſa droite, & un parnaſſin à ſa gauche, ſuivi des autres parnaſſins, de parens, & amis, eſcorté de quelque ſerjens. Et le jour que le cadan bereſcid commence la loy, le cadan tora le reconduit à ſon tour dans le même ordre, avec cette difference, que le cadan bereſcid occupe alors la place du milieu.

N° 10.

Inſtrumens qui ſervent à la circonciſion.

Petit plat où ſont les emplâtres.

Autre plat où il y a du ſable pour y mettre le prepuce.

Autre emplâtre.

Flacon où ſont les poudres aſtringentes.

Couteau qui ſert à la circonciſion.

Bande qui ſert à retenir les emplâtres.

Petite Verge d'argent ſur laquelle on tire le prepuce.

Tenace, inſtrument qui ſert à tenir le prepuce

A Petit coffre où ſont les noms de tous les membres de la ſynagogue, d'ou l'on tire au ſort les noms de 7 perſonnes deſtinées à porter & à lire la loy. Ce petit cofre eſt diviſé en quatre parties. La premiere marquée 1. contient les noms des Levites. 2. Eſt pour mettre les noms des Levites à meſure qu'ils ont lû. 3. Les noms de tous les autres membres de la ſynagogue. 4. Place pour mettre les noms de ceux d'entre ces derniers, qui ont deja lû.

B Sepher Tora, où le rouleau de la loi ouvert.

C Le rouleau de la loi fermé & entouré d'un ruban fort large.

D Le rouleau de la loi avec ſes ornemens.

E Rimonim, ornement d'argent à ſonnettes, qui ſe mettent aux deux extremitez d'enhaut du rouleau.

F Touche qui ſert à guider celui qui lit.

N° 11.

La circonciſion des Juifs Portuguais.

A Le pere de l'enfant.

B La mere dans une autre chambre avec la maraine, car les femmes Juives n'aſſiſtent pas à cette ceremonie.

N° 9. Page 211.

cha Tora, or joy for the law.

The cadan bereſcid } or ſpouſes of the law
The cadan tora } repreſenting the Kings
f Iſrael, who were obliged to begin and end he leſſons of the law, the laſt day of the Feaſt f. Tabernacles. The cadan tora is he who nds, the cadan bereſcid, he who begins it gain.

C Two parnaſſins.

nner of conducting the ſpouſes of the law home.

The cadan tora on the day he finiſhes the reading of the law, is waited on home by the cadan bereſcid, who is on his right, and a parnaſſin on his left-hand, followed by the other parnaſſins, relations and friends, and guarded by officers. And the day that the cadan bereſcid begins the law, the cadan tora in his turn waits on him home in the ſame order, with this difference, that the cadan bereſcid is in the middle.

N° 10. Page 223.

ſtruments uſed in circumciſion.

ſmall diſh for the plaiſters.

nother diſh with ſand to lay the prepuce on.

nother Plaiſter.

hial for the aſtringent powders.

nife uſed in the circumciſion.

andages to keep on the plaiſters.

mall ſilver rod over which the prepuce is drawn.

incers for holding the prepuce.

Small box in which are the names of all the members of the ſynagogue, whence are drawn by lot the names of 7 perſons appointed to carry and read the law. This box is divided into four parts. The firſt marked 1. Contains the names of the Levites. 2. Is for the names of the Levites as they have done reading. 3. The names of all the other members of the ſynagogue. 4. Place for throwing in the names of the latter, who have done reading.

B Sepher Tora, or the volume of the law open.

C The volume of the law rolled up, and bound round with a very broad ribband.

D The volume of the law with its ornaments.

E Rimonim, a ſilver ornament with bells, ſet upon the two ends of the uppermoſt part of the volume.

F Feſcue to guide the perſon reading.

N° 11. Page 224.

The Circumciſion of the Portugueſe Jews.

A The father of the child.

B The mother in another room with the godmother, for the Jewiſh women never appear at this ceremony.

N. B.

N. B. Celles qu'on voit ici ſont des Chretiennes.
C Le parain tenant l'enfant ſur ſes genoux pendant l'operation.
D Un ſiege vuide pour le prophete Elie.
E Le Moël, ou celui qui fait la fonction de circoncire.
F Le Rabin, un parent, ou un ami tenant la coupe.
Le rachapt du Premier né.
A Un ſacerdote, ou deſcendant de la famille d'Aron, emportant l'enfant.
B Le pere offrant de l'argent pour le racheter.
C La mere de l'enfant. D. La ſage femme.
E La nourrice. Les autres ſont des parens, & amis invitez à cette ceremonie.

N. B. Thoſe here are Chriſtians.
C The godfather holding the child on his knees during the operation.
D An empty ſeat for the prophet Elias.
E The Moël, or perſon performing the office of circumciſing.
F The Rabbi, a relation, or friend, holding the cup.
The redemption of the firſt-born.
A A prieſt or deſcendant of the family of Aaron carrying away the child.
B The father offering money to redeem him.
C The mother of the child. D. The midwife.
E The nurſe. The reſt are relations and friends invited to the ceremony.

N° 12.

Ceremonie nuptiale des Juifs Portuguais.
A Le marié caſſant le verre.
B La mariée voilée.
C C Les 2 perſonnes ſervant de maraines à la mariée.
D D Les 2 perſonnes ſervant de parains au marié.
E Le Rabin. F Les chantres.
G Celui qui ecrit les aumônes que les aſſiſtans promettent.
Ceremonie nuptiale des Juifs Allemands.
A Le marié donnant l'anneau à la mariée tous deux ſous le Taled.
B B Les 2 maraines de la mariée.
C C Les 2 parains du marié.
D Le Rabin. * Le derriere de la ſynagogue.
E Le chantre tenant la bouteille pour faire boire les epoux.
F Deux garçons avec des batons ornez qui marchent devant les mariez.

N° 12. Page 227.

Nuptial ceremony of the Portugueſe Jews.
A The bridegroom breaking a glaſs.
B The bride veiled.
C C The 2 perſons who are inſtead of godmothers to the bride.
D D The 2 perſons who are inſtead of godfathers to the bridegroom.
E The Rabbi. F. The ſingers.
G The perſon who takes an account of the alms promiſed by the byſtanders.
Nuptial ceremony of the German Jews.
A The bridegroom giving the bride a ring, both under one Taled.
B B The bride's two godmothers.
C C The bridegroom's two godfathers.
D The Rabbi. * The backſide of the ſynagogue.
E The chanter with a bottle in his hand for the new married couple to drink.
F The boys with ſticks adorned walking before them.

N° 13.

Les Acafoth, ou les ſept tours autour du cercueil. Les aſſiſtans jettent de la terre ſur le corps.

N° 13. Page 233.

The Acafoth or ſeven turns round the Biere. The byſtanders throw earth upon the corps.

N° 14.

Figure repreſentant le coté imprimé d'un billet pour le ſcrutin.
Figure repreſentant le revers d'un billet pour le ſcrutin, & l'accés, couvert de fleurons.

N° 14. Page 275.

Figure repreſenting the printed ſide of a billet for the ſcrutiny.
Figure repreſenting the back ſide of a billet for the ſcrutiny, and for the acceſſus, covered with flouriſhes.

La ſtructure & la charpente des cellules des Cardinaux.

The form and carpenters work of the Cardinals cells.

N° 15.

L'Entrée des Cardinaux au conclave.
La meſſe du ſaint Eſprit.
Premiere congregation generale des Cardinaux.
Le ſcrutin des Cardinaux pour l'election d'un Pape.
Maniere dont on porte les vivres au conclave.
L'Examen des vivres.

N° 15. Page 277.

Entrance of the Cardinals into the conclave.
Maſs of the Holy Ghoſt.
Firſt general meeting of the Cardinals.
Scrutiny of the Cardinals for electing a Pope.

Manner of carrying proviſions into the conclave.
Examination of the proviſions.

N° 16.

L'Adoration du Pape dans la chapelle.
L'Adoration du Pape ſur le grand autel de St. Pierre.
Les etoupes brulées devant le Pape.
Le couronnement du Pape.
Les Juifs preſentant le Pentateuque au Pape dans le Colliſée.
Les clefs preſentées au Pape ſous le veſtibule de St. Jean de Latran.

N° 16. Page 281.

Adoration of the Pope in the chapel.
Adoration of the Pope upon the high altar of St, Peter's.
Tow burnt before the Pope.
Coronation of the Pope.
The Jews preſenting the Pentateuch to the Pope in the Colliſeum.
The keys preſented to the Pope at the porch of St. John de Lateran.

N° 17.

Le Pape va en ceremonie prendre poſſeſſion du Pontificat dans l'egliſe de St. Jean de Latran, qui eſt la capitale de toutes celles qui relevent de la juriſdiction du Pape dans la Chretieneté.

Compagnie de cuiraſſiers.
Timbales.
Trompettes.
Deux compagnies de chevaux legers.
6 Trompettes.
Deux Litieres de ſa Sainteté.
Patriarches, archevêques, evêques, protonotaires apoſtolics, auditeurs de la chambre, threſoriers, evêques non aſſiſtans, referendaires.
Cardinaux-diacres.
Cardinaux-prêtres.
Cardinaux.
Evéques.
Litiere du Pape.
Chaiſe à porteurs de ſa Sainteté.
Maître de la chambre, ſecretaire, medecin du Pape.
Le Pape precedé des conſervateurs Romains, au milieu des maîtres d'eſtrades, pages, maſſiers, coureurs, &c.
Le ſous diacre portant la croix.
Maîtres de ceremonies.
Le Governeur de Rome, le Prince du throne.
Auditeurs de Rote.
Maître du ſacré palais.
Clercs de la chambre.
Abbreviateurs du grand parquet.
Capitaine des Suiſſes.
Anſpeſſade du S. P.
4 Cameriers portant les 4 chapeaux du Pape.
Cameriers ſecrets.
Cameriers d'honneur.
Princes, barons, titulaires Romains, & titulaires étrangers.
Anſpeſſade du Saint Pere.
Chapelains du commun & ſecrets de la famille du Pape.
Cameriers d'honneur, d'épée, & d'égliſe.

Avocats conſiſtoriaux & fiſcaux.
Scala Santa.
St. Jean de Latran.

N° 17. Page 287.

The Pope going in ceremony to take poſſeſſion of the Pontificate in the church of St. John de Lateran, which is the head of all thoſe holding under the Pope's juriſdiction throughout Chriſtendom.
Company of cuiraſſiers.
Kettle drums.
Trumpets.
Two companies of light horſe.
6 Trumpets.
Two litters of his Holineſs.
Patriarchs, archbiſhops, biſhops, apoſtolic prothonotaries, auditors of the chamber, treaſurers, biſhops non-aſſiſtant, referendaries.
Cardinal-deacons.
Cardinal-prieſts.
Cardinals.
Biſhops.
Pope's litter.
Pope's chair.
Maſter of the chamber, ſecretary, and phyſician of the Pope.
Pope, with the Roman conſervators before him, in the midſt of the gentlemen of the chamber, pages, macebearers, couriers, &c.
Sub-deacon with the croſs.
Maſter of the ceremonies.
Governor of Rome, Prince of the throne.
Auditors of the Rota.
Maſter of the ſacred palace.
Clerks of the chamber.
Abbreviators of the high court.
Captain of the Swiſs-guards.
Anſpeſſade of the Holy Father.
Four gentlemen of the chamber with the Pope's 4 hats.
Gentlemen of the privy chamber.
Gentlemen of the chamber, of honour.
Princes, barons, Roman and foreign titulars.

The Holy Father's anſpeſſade.
Chaplains in ordinary and private of the Pope's family.
Gentlemen of the chamber, of honour, of the ſword, and the church.
Conſiſtorial and fiſcal advocates.
The Scala Santa, or holy ſteps.
St. John de Lateran.

Clergé de St. Jean de Latran.
Anſpeſſade.
Avant garde de cavalerie.
Fourrier major & ſurintendant de l'etable.
Porte manteaux des Cardinaux.
Maſſiers des Cardinaux.
Gentilſhommes des Cardinaux.
Portemanteaux & tailleurs de ſa Sainteté.
Jardinier, barbier, & boulanger de ſa Sainteté.
Ecuyers.
Les haquenées blanches couvertes de houſſes relevées en broderies d'or & d'argent.
Les mules bardées de velours.
Litieres du S. Pere.
Maitre d'etable.
4 Trompettes.
Camericrs hors des murs.

Clergy of St. John de Lateran.
Anſpeſſade.
Advance guard of horſe.
Chief harbinger, and firſt equerry.
Train-bearers of the Cardinals.
Mace-bearers of the Cardinals.
Gentlemen of the Cardinals.
Train-bearers and taylors of his Holineſs.
Gardiner, barber, baker to his Holineſs.
Querries.
White jennets covered with houſings of gold and ſilver embroidery.
Mules with velvet trappings.
The Holy Father's litters.
Maſter of the horſe.
4 Trumpets.
Gentlemen of the chamber without the walls.

N° 19.

La chapelle du Pape.

N° 19. Page 298.

The Pope's chapel.

N° 20.

Les ceremonies des petites meſſes repreſentées en trente cinque figures avec leurs conformitez à la paſſion de notre Seignr. Jeſus Chriſt.
Jeſus Chriſt va au jardin des olives.
Le prêtre va à l'autel.
J. C. arrivé au jardin y fait ſa priere.
Le prêtre commence la meſſe.
Jeſus Chriſt proſterné ſue du ſang.
Au confiteor.
Jeſus Chriſt trahi par un baiſer.
Le prêtre baiſe l'autel.
Jeſus Chriſt eſt pris & lié.
Le prêtre va au coté de l'epître.
Jeſus Chriſt amené chez Anne.
A l'introïte.
St. Pierre renie trois fois Jeſus Chriſt.
Le prêtre dit le Kyrie Eleiſon.
J. C. regardent Pierre lui fait pleurer ſon peché.
Le prêtre tourné vers le peuple dit Dominus vobiſcum.

N° 20. Page 312.

The ceremonies of low maſſes repreſented in thirty five figures, with their conformity to the paſſion of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.
Chriſt goes to the garden of olives.
The prieſt goes to the altar.
J. C. arrived at the garden there prays.
The prieſt begins the maſs.
Jeſus Chriſt proſtrate ſweats blood.
At the confeſſion.
Jeſus Chriſt betrayed by a kiſs.
The prieſt kiſſes the altar.
Jeſus Chriſt is taken and bound.
The prieſt goes to the epiſtle ſide.
Jeſus Chriſt led before Annas.
At the introïte.
St. Peter thrice denies Chriſt.
The prieſt ſays the Kyrie Eleiſon.
J. C. looking at Peter makes him bewail his ſin.
The prieſt turning to the people, ſays, Dominus vobiſcum.

N° 21.

Jeſus Chriſt accuſé devant Pilate.
Le prêtre dit l'epître.
J. C. accuſé devant Herode ne dit rien.
Le prêtre courbé au melieu de l'autel dit tout bas munda cor, &c.
Jeſus Chriſt renvoyé d'Herode à Pilate.
Le prêtre lit l'Evangile.
J. C. depouillé pour étre flagellé.
Le prêtre decouvre le calice.
J. C. lié à la colonne, & flagellé.
L'Oblation de l'hoſtie.
J. C. couronné d'épines.
Le prêtre couvre le calice apres l'avoir offert.
Pilate levant ſes mains declare J. C. innocent.
Le Prêtre lave ſes mains.

N° 21. Page 312.

Jeſus Chriſt accuſed before Pilate.
The prieſt reads the epiſtle.
J. C. accuſed before Herod anſwers not.
The prieſt bending towards the middle of the altar in a low voice, ſays, munda cor, &c.
Jeſus Chriſt ſent back from Herod to Pilate.
The prieſt repeats the goſpel.
J. C. ſtripped to be ſcourged.
The prieſt uncovers the calice.
J. C. tied to the pillar, and ſcourged.
The offering of the hoſt.
J. C. crowned with thorns.
The prieſt covers the calice after offering it.
Pilate waſhing his hands, declares Chriſt innocent.
The Prieſt waſhes his hands.

J. C. couvert d'un manteau de pourpre.
Le prêtre tourné vers le peuple dit, orate fratres.
J. C. condamné à être crucifié.
Le prêtre dit la preface.

J. C. covered with a purple robe.
The prieſt turning to the people, ſays, orate fratres.
J. C. condemned to be crucified.
The prieſt ſays the preface.

N° 22.

J. C. portant ſa croix va mourir pour nous faire vivre.
Le prêtre joignant les mains prie pour les fidelles vivans.
St. Veronique preſente ſon mouchoir à J. C.
Le prêtre couvre de ſes mains l'hoſtie & le calice.

J. C. eſt attaché à la croix.
Le prêtre fait des ſignes de croix ſur l'hoſtie & ſur le calice.
J. C. eſt élevé en croix.
Le prêtre adore l'hoſtie avant de l'elever.
Le ſang de J. C. repandu ſur la croix.
Le prêtre élevé le calice.
Jeſus Chriſt prie pour ſes enemies.
Le prêtre dit le memento pour les fidelles trépaſſez.
J. C. promet le paradis au bon larron.
Le prêtre dit nobis quoque peccatoribus.
J. C. donne St. Jean pour fils à la vierge.
Au Pater Noſter.
J. C. remet ſon ame à Dieu ſon Pere.
Le prêtre rompt l'hoſtie en deux.

N° 22. Page 312.

J. C. carrying the croſs goes to death to give us life.
The prieſt joining his hands, prays for the faithful that are living.
St. Veronica gives her handkerchief to J. C.
The prieſt covers the hoſt and chalice with his hands.
J. C. is fixed to the croſs.
The prieſt makes ſigns of the croſs over the hoſt and chalice.
J. C. is lifted up on the croſs.
The prieſt adores the hoſt before he elevates it.
The blood of Chriſt ſpilt upon the croſs.
The prieſt elevates the chalice.
J. C. prays for his enemies.
The prieſt ſays the memento for the faithful who are departed.
J. C. promiſes the good thief paradiſe.
The prieſt ſays, nobis quoque peccatoribus.
J. C. gives St. John to the virgin as a ſon.
At the Pater Noſter.
J. C. reſigns his ſoul to God his Father.
The prieſt breaks the hoſt in two.

N° 23.

L'Ame de J. C. deſcend aux limbes.
Le prêtre met dans le calice un petite partie de l'hoſtie.
J. C. etant expiré Pierre s'en retourne ſe frappant le poitrine, &c.
Le prêtre ſe frappe la poitrine en diſant trois fois Agnus Dei, &c.
Le corps de J. C. eſt mis dans un ſepulchre neuf.
Le prêtre communie.
On embaume le corps de Jeſus Chriſt.
Le prêtre fait l'ablution.
La reſurrection de Jeſus Chriſt.
A la poſt-communion.
J. C. apparoit à ſa mere, & à ſes diſciples.
Le prêtre tourné vers les aſſiſtans dit Dominus vobiſcum.
Pendant 40 jours, Jeſus Chriſt viſite & inſtruit ſes diſciples.
Aux dernieres oraiſons.
J. C. monte au ciel en preſence de ſes diſciples.

Le prêtre tourné vers le peuple dit Ite miſſa eſt.

J. C. envoye le St. Eſprit à ſes apôtres.

Le prêtre donne la benediction aux aſſiſtans.

N° 23. Page 312.

The ſoul of Chriſt goes down into limbo.
The prieſt puts a ſmall piece of the hoſt into the chalice.
J. C. being dead, Peter returns ſmiting his breaſt, &c.
The prieſt ſmites his breaſt, ſaying thrice Agnus Dei, &c.
Chriſt's body is put into a new ſepulchre.
The prieſt communicates.
The body of Chriſt is embalmed.
The prieſt performs the ablution.
Chriſt's reſurrection.
At the poſt-communion.
Chriſt appears to his mother and diſciples.
The prieſt turning to the congregation, ſays, Dominus vobiſcum.
Chriſt viſits and inſtructs his diſciples for 40 days.
At the laſt prayers.
Chriſt aſcends up to heaven in the preſence of his diſciples.
The prieſt turning to the people, ſays, Ite miſſa eſt.
Chriſt ſends the Holy Ghoſt down to his diſciples.
The prieſt gives the congregation the benediction.

N° 23.

Meſſe ſolemnelle ou grande meſſe.

N° 23. Page 312.

Solemn, or high maſs.

N° 25.

Conſecration de la grande croix.
L'Encenſement des croix.
Le batême de la cloche.
Benediction de la cloche.
On parfume la cloche.
Conſecration d'une image.

N° 25. Page 326.

Conſecration of a large croſs.
Incenſing of croſſes.
Baptiſm of a bell.
Bleſſing of a bell.
Bell perfumed.
Conſecration of an image.

N° 26.

Benediction des habits ſacerdotaux.
Benediction d'une nouvelle croix.
L'Adoration de la dite croix.
Benediction du ſoleil.
Benediction d'un homme de guerre.
Benediction d'une drapeau.

N° 26. Page 334.

Benediction of the ſacerdotal habits.
Benediction of a new croſs.
Adoration of the ſame croſs.
Benediction of a ſun.
Benediction of a warrior.
Benediction of a ſtandard.

N° 26.

Figure des deux fameux ſuaires.
Le S. Suaire de Turin vû par derriere.
Le S. Suaire de Turin vû par devant.
Le S. Suaire de Bezançon.

N° 26. Page 333.

Figure of the two famous handkerchiefs.
Back view of the holy handkerchief at Turin.
Front view of the holy handkerchief at Turin.
The holy handkerchief at Beſançon.

N° 28.

La conſecration du ſel & de l'eau pour benir la premiere pierre.
Benediction du terrain où l'on doit bâtir une egliſe.
L'Evêque va poſer la premiere pierre.
L'Evêque benit les fondemens de l'egliſe.
L'Evêque fait l'aſperſion de l'egliſe par dehors.

L'Evêque fait le ſigne de la croix à la porte de l'egliſe.

N° 28. Page 344.

Conſecration of the ſalt and water for bleſſing the firſt ſtone.
Benediction of the ground where a church is to be built.
Biſhop going to lay the firſt ſtone.
Biſhop bleſſes the foundations of the church.
Biſhops performs the aſperſion of the outſide of the church.
Biſhop makes the ſign of the croſs at the church door.

N° 29.

L'Evêque ecrit l'alphabet ſur la croix de cendres que le ſousdiacre a fait.
Figure de la croix de cendres qu'on a tracée ſur le pavé de l'egliſe.
L'Evêque fait la croix avec de l'eau benite au milieu de l'autel.
L'Evêque aſperge le pavé de l'egliſe avec de l'eau benite.
On porte les reliques en proceſſion dans l'egliſe.
L'Evêque enferme les reliques dans l'autel.

N° 29. Page 347.

Biſhop writes the alphabet upon the croſs of aſhes made by the ſub-deacon.
Figure of the croſs of aſhes made upon the pavement of the church.
Biſhop makes the croſs with holy water in the middle of the altar.
Biſhop ſprinkles the pavement of the church with holy water.
Relics carried in proceſſion into the church.
Biſhop cloſes up the relics within the altar.

N° 30.

Le celebrant oint avec le St. Chrême les douze croix des murailles.
Il fait avec le St. Chrême une croix au devant de l'autel.
Il benit les vaiſſeaux qui doivent ſervir à l'autel.
Il verſe de l'huile and du Chrême ſur la table de l'autel.
Il allume les cinque croix de cire qui ſont poſées ſur les cinque croix d'encens.
Il conſacre les paremens de l'autel.

N° 30. Page 350.

The celebrant anoints the twelve croſſes on the walls with the holy Chriſm.
He makes a croſs before the altar with the holy Chriſm.
He bleſſes the Veſſels to be uſed at the altar.
He pours oil and Chriſm upon the table of the altar.
He lights the five wax croſſes which are placed upon the five croſſes of incenſe.
He conſecrates the ornaments of the altar.

N° 32.

Ordre de la proceſſion pour la canonization de quelques ſaints dans l'egliſe de St. Pierre ſous le pontificat de Clement XI. en 1712.

1. Abbreviateurs.
2. Votans de la ſignature.
3. Clercs de la chambre.
4. Auditeurs de Rote, & maitre du ſacré palais.
5. Acolytes avec les 7 chandeliers.
6. Sous diacre avec la croix.
7. Penitenciers.
8. Abbez.
9. Evêques aſſiſtans & non-aſſiſtans.
10. Cardinaux diacres.
11. Cardinaux prêtres.
12. Cardinaux Evêques.
13. Legat de Bologne, avec le prieur des quartiers.
14. Conſervateurs.
15. Connêtable Colonna.
16. Gouverneur de Rome.
17. Cardinaux diacre aſſiſtant & de l'evangile.
18. Le Pape ſous le dais, porté par les referendaires.
19. Cubiculaires aſſiſtans avec l'auditeur de la mitre.
20. Protonotaires apoſtoliques & ſes adjoints.
21. Generaux d'ordres.
22. Le peuple.
23. Entrée de l'egliſe.

N° 32. Page 358.

Order of the proceſſion for the canonization of ſome ſaints in the church of St. Peter in the pontificate of Clement XI. in 1712.

1. Abbreviators.
2. Voters of the ſignature.
3. Clerks of the chamber.
4. Auditors of the Rota, & maſter of the ſacred palace.
5. Acolytes with the 7 candleſtics.
6. Sub-deacon with the croſs.
7. Penitentiaries.
8. Abbots.
9. Biſhops aſſiſtant and non-aſſiſtant.
10. Cardinal-deacons.
11. Cardinal-prieſts.
12. Cardinal-biſhops.
13. Legate of Bolognia, and prior of the quarters.
14. Conſervators.
15. Conſtable Colonna.
16. Governor of Rome.
17. Cardinal-deacon aſſiſtant, and of the goſpel.
18. Pope under a canopy, carried by the referendaries.
19. Gentlemen of the bedchamber, aſſiſtant with the auditor of the mitre.
20. Apoſtolic prothonotaries, and their deputies.
21. Generals of orders.
22. The people.
23. Entrance of the church.

N° 33.

Theatre dreſſé dans l'egliſe de St. Pierre pour la canonization de quelques ſaints ſous le pontificat de clement XI. en 1712.

1. Le Pape.
2. Siege du Cardinal evêque aſſiſtant.
3. Cardinaux diacres aſſiſtans.
4. Cardinaux, evêques, & prêtres.
5. Cardinaux diacres.
6. Evêques aſſiſtans.
7. Evêques non-aſſiſtans.
8. Penitentiers.
9. Gouverneur de Rome, protonotaires & adjoints.
10. Connêtable Colonna.
11. Generaux d'ordres.
12. Conſervateurs de Rome.
13. Legat de Bologne.
14. Place du maitre du ſacré hoſpice.
15. Auditeurs de Rote.
16. Clercs de la chambre.
17. Prelats votans de la ſignature & de juſtice.
18. Abbreviateurs.
19. Referendaires.
20. Cameriers ſecrets.
21. Cameriers d'honneur.
22. Chaplains ſecrets & communs.
23. Place des ecuyers.

N° 33. Page 366.

Theatre erected in St. Peter's church for the canonization of ſome ſaints in the pontificate of Clement XI. in 1712.

1. The Pope.
2. Seat for the Cardinal biſhop aſſiſtant.
3. Cardinal-deacons aſſiſtant.
4. Cardinal-biſhops and prieſts.
5. Cardinal-deacons.
6. Biſhops aſſiſtant.
7. Biſhops non-aſſiſtant.
8. Penitentiaries.
9. Governour of Rome, prothonotaries, and their deputies.
10. Conſtable Colonna.
11. Generals of orders.
12. Conſervators of Rome.
13. Legate of Bologna.
14. Place of the maſter of the ſacrum hoſpitium.
15. Auditors of the Rota.
16. Clerks of the chamber.
17. Prelates voters of the ſignature and of juſtice.
18. Abbreviators.
19. Referendaries.
20. Gentlemen of the privy chamber.
21. Gentlemen of the chamber, of honour.
22. Chaplains, private and in ordinary.
23. Place of the querries.

24. Caudataires.
25. Maitre de la garderobbe.
26. Offrandes.
* Avocats conſiſtoriaux.
27. Credence ſur la quelle on met les vaſes ſacrez.
28. Autre credence ſur laquelle on met 7 cierges.
29. Credence du Pape.
50. Ceux qui poſtulent pour la canonization du ſaint.
31. L'Ambaſſadeur de l'Empereur.
32. L'Ambaſſadeur du Roi de Portugal incognito.
33. Les Neveux du Pape.
34. Belle ſœur du Pape, &c.
35. Cœur des muſiciens.
36. Dames de qualité.
37. Theatins & capuchins.
38. Gentils hommes.
39. Face du grand autel de la chapelle du Vatican.
40 Le petit throne du Pape.
41. Statue de St. Veronique.

N° 35.

La proclamation du jubilé au ſon des trompettes dans l'egliſe de St. Pierre.
Les Penitentiers ayant balayé la porte Ste. apres qu'elle a eté démurée, le Pape prend ſa croix, & y entre en chantant le Te Deum.
Le Pape depute trois Cardinaux pour aller ouvrir les portes de St. Jean de Latran, de St. Marie Majeure, & de St. Paul.
Marche des Cardinaux deputez par ſa Sainteté pour aller faire l'ouverture de la porte ſainte aux trois autres egliſes.
La garde de la porte ſainte eſt commiſe au milice.
Les penitenciers remettent les pechez aux pelerins en les touchant de leurs baguettes.

N° 36.

Le Pape faiſant l'ouverture de la porte ſainte.
Vêu des loges d'où la nobleſſe regarde la ceremonie de l'ouverture de la porte ſainte.

N° 37.

Les pelerins vont en proceſſion viſiter les ſept egliſes.
Les pelerins montent à genoux la ſcala ſanta.

Les prelats & barons Romains vêtus en penitents lavent les pieds des pelerins & les ſervent.

Le Pape benit les tables des pelerins, & leur ſert à manger, avec les Cardinaux & autres prelats.
Le Pape diſtribue aux pelerins des chapelets, medailles, & Agnus Dei, & ils lui baiſent les pieds.
A la fin du jubilé le Pape poſe la premiere pierre pour fermer la porte ſainte.

24. Train-bearers.
25. Maſter of the wardrobe.
26. Offerings.
* Conſiſtorial advocates.
27. Buſet whereon ſtand the ſacred veſſels.
28. Another whereon ſtand 7 tapers.
29. Pope's buſet.
30. Petitioners for the ſaints canonization.
31. Emperor's embaſſador.
32. King of Portugal's embaſſador incognito.
33. Pope's nephews.
34. Pope's ſiſter-in-law, &c.
35. Choir of muſic.
36. Ladies of quality.
37. The theatins and capuchins.
38. Gentlemen.
39. Front of the high altar of the chapel of the Vatican.
40. The Pope's ſmall throne.
41. Statue of St. Veronica.

N° 35. Page 380.

The jubilee proclaimed with the ſound of trumpets in St. Peter's church.
The penitentiaries having ſwept the holy gate after its unmuring, the Pope takes his croſs, and goes into it ſinging Te Deum.
The Pope deputes three Cardinals to go and open the gates of St. John de Lateran, St. Mary Major, and St. Paul.
March of the Cardinals deputed by his Holineſs to open the holy gate at the three other churches.
The keeping of the holy gate committed to the militia.
The penitentiaries abſolve the pilgrims from their ſins by touching them with their rods.

N° 36. Page 380.

The Pope opening the holy gate.
View of the pews, from whence the nobility ſee the ceremony of opening the holy gate.

N° 37. Page 383.

The pilgrims viſiting the 7 churches in proceſſion.
The pilgrims going up the holy ſteps on their knees.
The Roman prelates and barons, dreſſed like penitents, waſh the feet of the pilgrims, and wait on them.
The Pope bleſſes the tables of the pilgrims, and together with the Cardinals and other prelates, waits on them at the table.
The Pope diſtributes chaplets, medals, and Agnus Dei's to the pilgrims, and they kiſs his feet.
At the end of the jubilee, the Pope lays the firſt ſtone for cloſing up the holy gate.

N° 35.

Les vertus de l'Agnus Dei composé de sainct cresme baume, & pure cire. Extraict du livre appellé le ceremonial, où parlant de la benediction d'iceux les paroles suyvantes se trouvent registrées sur la fin en ceste maniere.

Il se lit que le Pape Urbain V. envoya à l'Empereur des Grecs trois Agnus Dei, avec vers & paroles.

Les tonneres il chasse,
Les pechez il efface,
Sauue d'embrasement,
Et de submergement,
Garde de mort subite,
Les diables met en fuite,
Dompte les ennemis
Hors de danger sont mis
Et l'enfant & la mere
Qui travaille à le faire ;
Il donne maint pouvoir
Aux dignes de l'avoir
La part quoique petite
Tant que la grande profite.

La priere que le Pape faict à la benediction de l'Agnus Dei.

Qu'il efface les pechez, qu'on impetre pardon, qu'il confere les graces.

Que le touchant & voyant les Chrestiens soient esmeus à louer Dieu.

Que le bruit de l'air, gresles, neiges, & tempestes, la furie des vents & des tonneres soient moderez & arrestez.

Que devant le salutaire & glorieux estendart de la croix qui y est figuré les esprits malings s'espouvantent & s'enfuyent.

Que celuy qui le porte, aye vertu contre les illusions, tromperies, astuces, & fraudes du diable, & des esprits malings.

Qu'aulcune tempeste, adversité, air pestilentiel, ou corrumpu, ni mal caduc, aulcune tourmente, tempestes de mer, aulcun feu, ou aultres injures de temps, ne puissent offenser, nuire, ni prejudicier à celuy qui le portera devotement sur soi.

Qu'en l'accouchement soient conservez la mere & l'enfant.

Que tous ceux qui le portent puissent etre toujours en sureté, qu'ils ne craignent aulcun peril, qu'ils n'ayent point peur des ombres, qu'aulcune cruauté du diable ne les endommage, qu'ils ne puissent etre trompez des hommes, qu'ils soient exempts de tout perils de feu, de foudre, de tourmente, & tempestes. Et que les femmes enfantent sans travail, & soient delivrées de mal, & de tout danger.

A Rome chex l'imprimeur de la chambre apostolique 1662.

N° 35. Page 387.

The virtues of the Agnus Dei composed of holy chrism, balm, and virgin's wax. Taken from the book called the Ceremonial, where speaking of the blessing of them, the follōwing words in verse are registered in this manner.

We read that Pope Urban V. sent the Emperor of the Greeks three Agnus Dei's, with the following verses.

It drives away thunder,
It washes away sin,
Secures from fire,
And from drowning,
Preserves from sudden death,
Chases away devils,
Conquers enemies,
Both mother and child
Are freed from danger
Who have a hand in making it:
It gives great power
To such as are worthy of it
The smallest portion
Is as effectual as the greatest.

The Pope's prayer at his blessing the Agnus Dei.

May it wash away sin, obtain pardon, and confer blessings.

May Christians by the touch and sight of it be incited to praise God.

May noises in the air, hail, snow, and storms, the fury of wind and thunder, be calmed and stopped.

May evil spirits be terrified, and fly before the salutary and glorious standard of the cross, which is formed upon it.

May whosoever wears it feel a vertue in himself against the illusions, deceit and fraud of the devil, and other evil spirits.

May no storm, adversity, pestilential or unwholsome air, nor the falling sickness, tempest, storm at sea, no fire or other ill accident of weather, offend, hurt or prejudice him who shall devoutly wear it.

May mother and child be preserved in the time of travel.

May all who wear it be continually in safety, may they fear no perils, or be frightned by ghosts, may no cruelty of the Devil hurt them, may they not be deceived by men, may they be free from all perils of fire, of thunder, storms, and tempests. And may women bear children without pain, and be preserved from evil and all danger.

Printed at Rome by the printer of the apostolic chamber, 1662.

Avec permiſſion des ſuperieurs.

A Copie exacte de la feuille imprimée que le Pape donne avec les Agnus Dei, qui eſt une eſpece de medaille de cire repreſentant un agneau comme on le voit à la lettre B. Cette medaille a pour revers l'image de quelque ſaint.

C Les armes du Pape Alexander VII. qui a donné l'original à la ſuſdite feuille A.

D Le ſcapulaire.

E Le roſaire, chapelet compoſé de 15 dixaines.

F Chaplet ordinaire enrichi de reliques.

G Bague dont les chevaliers de malthe ſe ſervent pour dire leur roſaire, la roſe qui eſt au deſſus tourne à reſſort, & marque avec le petit point noir ſur les 15 chifres, qui ſont autour, le nombre des dixaines deja dites.

H Dixaine pour dire ſon chapelet.

I Pain de St. Genevieve, ou eſpece de petit biſcuit ſec, que les religieux de St. Genevieve diſtribuent pour la fievre.

K Medaille benite de cuivre, que les ſœurs de la charité à Paris portent à leur chapelet pour conſerver leur virginité.

By permiſſion of the ſuperiours.

An exact copy of the printed ſheet the Pope gives with Agnus Dei's, which is a kind of wax medal, repreſenting a lamb, as in letter B. The reverſe is always the image of ſome ſaint.

C The arms of Pope Alexander VII. who gave riſe to the abovementioned ſheet A.

D The ſcapulary.

E The roſary, a chaplet compoſed of 15 glorias.

F A common chaplet adorned with relics.

G A ring uſed by the knights of Malta, in ſaying their roſary, the roſe a top turns by a ſpring, and by the little black ſpot points out on the 16 figures round it, the number of gloria's repeated.

H Tens to ſay the roſary.

I St. Genevieve's bread, a ſort of ſmall dry biſket given by the monks of St. Genevieve, to perſons afflicted with fevers.

K A copper medal bleſſed, worn by the ſiſters of charity at Paris at their beads to preſerve their virginity.

A DIS-

A

DISSERTATION

UPON

Religious Worſhip.

THE greateſt part of mankind would have no knowledge of a God, were not that worſhip, which is paid him, attended with ſome external ſigns; and wherever the ſupreme Being has been leaſt known, there theſe ſigns have been the moſt whimſical and extravagant. Ignorance has carried devotion even to barbarity; and the wiſeſt amongſt an infinite number of formidable zealots, remain the ſtanding objects of Ridicule. Some of theſe have believed, that in order to ſerve God, it was their duty to [a] kill and deſtroy men in a cruel and barbarous manner: others, [b] that they were to ſtupify themſelves by turning round, by beating their breaſt againſt the earth; [c] by laſhing themſelves, by ſwinging over a fire; [d] by remaining in extaſies for ſeveral hours together. The foundation of temples and chapels, the ceremonial part of religion, proceſſions, and the frequenting of churches, all this has been called religious worſhip. In ſhort, people have believed that, in order to obtain the aſſiſtance of God, and the forgiveneſs of their ſins, they were (if I may preſume to ſay it) bound to importune him by an infinite number of repeated exclamations, to dazle his eyes with pompous or extraordinary ceremonies, and with cuſtoms that cramp and tire the mind, and are often inſupportable: but few have been able to raiſe their minds up to that divine Being, and break through that croud of cuſtoms which were as ſo many obſtacles in their way; all which will more particularly appear in the ſequel of this diſcourſe.

I will not here amuſe my reader with enquiring into the origin of words that expreſs that duty, which men have, in all ages, thought themſelves indiſpenſably bound to pay unto a Deity of what nature ſoever he be. It is almoſt needleſs to inform him that, to adore and adorare, are derived from ad and orare, as if we ſhould ſay, ad os referre manum, to pray with the hand before the lips. We leave theſe and many other ety-

[a] The Scythians, Mexicans, Peruvians, &c.
[b] The Turkiſh Derviſes.
[c] The Bramins.
[d] The Quakers, and thoſe called Pietiſts.

mologies to ſuch as think them an ornament to their writings: but we ſhall only ſay, that men have extremely multiplied the terms deſigned to expreſs religious acts; believing, perhaps, that the ſame idea expreſſed in their prayers, in different terms, ſome more ſubmiſſive than others, and ever attended with certain ceremonies which they thought agreable to God, might procure them his aſſiſtance in a more effectual manner. The Greeks and Romans aſcribed a wonderful virtue to particular words and ſuperſtitious forms, which they made uſe of in their prayers, and were even perſuaded, that, by the influence of ſome words attended with fantaſtic ceremonies, they could compel the Deity to be favourable to them. I am willing to believe that no Chriſtian can be ſo madly ſuperſtitious as to imagine that his prayers will have any virtue of this kind: but probably there are very few men who do not believe, they ſhall obtain what they aſk of God, by uſing many ſynonymous terms, attended with that external devotion, wherein is comprehended all the religion of an infinite number of people.

There is no great difficulty to find out the riſe and occaſion of prayer; for no ſooner had the firſt man ſinned, than he was forced to implore the mercy of God, and beg his aſſiſtance againſt the evils which upon his diſobedience ſurrounded him: but even had he retained his innocence he could not have been excuſed from imploring the help of his Creator, and offering up his vows unto him; and hence proceeded [e] Cain and Abel's ſacrifices, though we otherwiſe know not the merit or manner of them. All that can be ſaid on this ſubject is, that it appears (from the teſtimony of Holy Writ) that at that very time Cain was a wicked man. After the death of Abel, [f] when Seth was arrived at an age capable of knowing and worſhiping God, it is to be ſuppoſed that men who led a good life began to form a kind of Church, and fall into a regular worſhip: but the manner of it is likewiſe unknown to us.

As mankind in general have the ſame things to aſk of God, it is not ſtrange that their forms of prayer ſhould be almoſt the ſame, or at leaſt in many things. They all aim at the ſame end, and their neceſſities are alike; but as by degrees man began to loſe the true notion of the divine Being, and took upon him to attribute corporeal qualities, or human frailties to him, he likewiſe loſt the true idea of prayer; he has added ſuperſtition to his worſhip, and ſerved God under corporeal notions; ſo that being no longer capable of contemplating him in ſpirit, whether through pride, fear, or weakneſs, he takes delight in repreſenting him by images, ſtatues, &c. he has offered up unto him all that could be offered to men in order to appeaſe them, and at laſt is arrived at ſuch a degree of extravagance, that he no longer dares to addreſs himſelf to him in a ſhort, eaſy, and plain manner, ſo as to be underſtood both by the people and by himſelf, without formality. This is the riſe of ſo many extraordinary ceremonies, and ſo much extravagant devotion, as well as of an infinite number of forms, uſed in prayer, which muſt have no other than a very whimſical effect, when not underſtood. Such amongſt the ancient Gentiles was the Io Pean, which made a part of the prayers addreſſed to Apollo, and which they did not underſtand, if we may judge of it by the different ways they have explained theſe [g] two words.

Amongſt the ancient idolaters, prayers uſed often to go before ſacrifices, often likewiſe after them, and often between them. There is ſome probability that the firſt race of men did not offer up unto God any blood-offerings, and that having no temples, they uſed at firſt to invoke him in the open fields, or every man in his own houſe without pomp, myſtery, or any of thoſe human inventions, which in length of time produced the irreligion of ſome, and the bigottry of others. This manner of worſhip was too plain and ſimple; they ſoon went into the woods to worſhip, and there built chapels; ſilence inſpired them with devotion; they conſecrated unto God the talleſt trees of the the foreſts. Then they went up to the hills, and in ſhort from thence carried their religious worſhip to the top of mountains, and as they changed places, they took care to leave Gods behind them wherever they came. God has upbraided the Jews with this idolatry; yet we ſee in the Old Teſtament, that before the promulgation of the law, the conduct of the Patriarchs was the ſame in regard to the true God. After all, there was no other evil in this kind of worſhip than the applying it to falſe Deities: devotion requires that ſilence and contemplation, which woods and fields inſpire; mountains and other high places give us ſome notion of God's elevation and ſuperiority over us. And it may be for the ſame reaſon that (according to Arrian) Jupiter [h] was worſhiped upon the mountains of Bithynia; but had no temple conſecrated to him there, (becauſe of the immenſity of God) and the Sicyonians worſhiped ſome of their Gods in the ſame manner. The Getæ and ancient Indians likewiſe conſecrated no temples to their Gods, and as for the ancient Perſians it is well known, that in their irruptions into Greece, they deſtroyed all the temples which they found there, being perſuaded that God being infinite could neither be limited, nor contained within a temple. The ſame Perſians did not repreſent the ſupreme Being by ſtatues, nor erect altars to him; but offered their ſacrifices on high places. It is certain that the idolatry of that nation had a great deal more purity in it, than that of the reſt of the Heathens, but eſpecially was more free from the wild heap of ſuperſtitions and fables of the Greeks. The learned Hide goes ſtill a great deal farther; for he inſiſts, in his Hiſtory of the religion of the ancient Perſians, that they preſerved the true religion for a great length of time. The Romans themſelves, who afterwards multiplied their Gods to that degree, that they had Deities for all the neceſſaries of life: for diſeaſes and health; for the kitchen, and the fire; for the table, and the bed, &c. not to mention that ſwarm of leſſer Gods, which their imaginations had framed for preſiding over their marriages; [i] the Romans, I ſay, continued to worſhip their Gods for above one hundred and ſeventy years, without making any images of them: and had that been ſtill obſerved to this day (ſays Varro) the worſhip paid them would be more pure and holy. It is probable that Numa, the Founder of their religious worſhip, had juſter notions of religion than other idolaters, and poſſibly he might have drawn them from ſuch ſprings as were not entirely corrupted. Thoſe very Romans did not degenerate from the practice of the primitive times, (that is to ſay) from the cuſtom of worſhiping the Gods in woods, and ſetting up their worſhip in foreſts, it was in thoſe places, that they built the temple of Diana Aricina, and of Juno Lacinia; there it was that the temple of the Goddeſs Pomona was ſeen in the form and manner that Chartari has given us it in a figure at the end of this Diſſertation; and it is thus, that the modern Indians diſtribute their idols all over the woods and fields. The people of Guinea, and thoſe of the iſland of Zocotora, repair likewiſe to groves in order to perform their religious worſhip, and chuſe tall hollow trees for their temples. The Deities of the Negroes (according to the relations of travellers) have no other ſanctuaries. The Laplanders have placed their Stor-junkare upon mountains amongſt trees or in places of difficult acceſs; in ſhort, we ourſelves have likewiſe in ſome meaſure ſanctified this rural devotion, and upon a ſuppoſition that God has appointed the ſaints as protectors of the univerſe (which, according to the Scripture, they are one day to judge) have honoured the woods, the hills, and rocks with their names.

[e] Geneſis Chap. iv. [f] Ib. ℣. 26. [g] Some have explained them by ἰὴ παιὰν, heal, O Pæan. Pæan was one of Apollo's ſurnames, others have given other ſenſes to theſe two words. And it is poſſible, that thoſe who derived them from two Hebrew words, which ſignify, Eternal, Jehovah, look down upon us, have given them a better interpretation than either the ancient Greeks, or modern interpreters.

Devotion having thus made her retreat into wild and deſert places, it is not ſurpriſing that ſome men, who pretended to a warmer devotion than the reſt of mankind, threw off the cares of life, gave over all bodily labour, and grew indolent, idle, and even ſavage from their affection to the Gods. Yet this was not ſufficient; a myſterious turn was

[h] Jupiter Caſius was likewiſe worſhiped upon a mountain of that name, ſituate between Syria and Egypt. The ſame Jupiter was alſo worſhiped upon a mountain of Moab, named Peor, and from thence it is called Baal-Peor.

[i] St. Auſtin Of the city of God, Lib. IV. ch. 31. In the ſame treatiſe may be ſeen a large and particular account of thoſe leſſer Roman Deities, who were appointed to preſide over all the actions of life, and even over thoſe that were the moſt mechanic and mean.

was given to this ſolitary worſhip, and penances were added to it. Thus the Bramins generally live under trees, and, with the ancient idolaters, believe, that their religious worſhip can never be either private enough, or ſufficiently concealed; they take care to have the entrance to their * Pagods built very low, ſo that the day itſelf ſhall hardly give any light to their idolatry. They pretty conſtantly live (at leaſt ſome amongſt them do ſo) in woods and wilderneſſes, that they may practiſe their worſhip in a voluntary and affected miſery, in imitation of the ancient Brachmans and Gymnoſophiſts, who in their ſolitude denied themſelves the greateſt neceſſaries of life; who from the riſing to the ſetting of the ſun (as St. Auſtin tells us) ſtudiouſly applied themſelves to the fixing their eyes on it without ever moving them, ſtanding in the midſt of burning ſands, ſometimes upon one leg, ſometimes upon the other. The Turks have had their ſhare in this kind of devotion, witneſs the ſolitary life which many of their Derviſes lead amongſt rocks and in woods according to the accounts given us by the moſt celebrated travellers. The Chriſtians too have taken up this kind of painful and ſolitary devotion. We have formerly had, and ſtill to this day continue to have among us ſome of theſe pious recluſes, whoſe auſterities are in all reſpects equal to thoſe of the Indian Bramins, and who voluntarily practiſe every thing the moſt whimſical, tormenting, or cruel, that the human body can undergo. In ſhort, it is certain, that in all ages, men have had a ſtrong inclination to carry their devotions into places of ſolitude, where doubtleſs they imagined they ſhould find the means of ſerving the Deity in a manner more worthy of him, with greater myſtery, and leſs diſtraction; and perhaps took a pride in expiating thoſe diſorders amongſt the wild beaſts, which they had not been able to avoid in the company of men.

When the ancient idolaters arrived at any place, they were careful to offer up a kind of ejaculatory prayer to the Deity of the country. And when they were on a journey, they paid their homage to the Deities; which they ſuppoſed to be preſent in thoſe places through which they paſſed. Neither the Fauni, the Dryades, the Napeæ, the Gods preſiding over the limits of countries, nor any other were omitted; nay, the reſpect which the Romans paid to the Gods of their very enemies was ſo great, that before they ſat down before any town[k], they deputed prieſts to entreat them to retire out of it, fearing they might not take the place, ſhould the Gods prove the ſtronger, or that they ſhould be forced to make priſoners of them in caſe they were defeated. Upon any emergency of ſtate, it was the cuſtom for ſome one to ſacrifice himſelf for his country, to the end, that the Gods might accept the voluntary death of one man as an atonement for all the people. Many nations offered up men in ſacrifices, and it was thus that the Ammonites worſhiped Moloch; the Carthaginians, Saturn; and the Scythians of Tauris, Diana; and this is a cuſtom to this day practiſed in the religion of ſeveral nations of America. It was in uſe amongſt the Mexicans, till the arrival of the Spaniards in the new diſcovered world. But other nations, not of ſo cruel a diſpoſition, went no farther than ſcarifying and ſcourging themſelves in order to pacify their angry Gods; and we find amongſt ourſelves ſome remains of this bloody devotion. There are ſome Chriſtian penitents, who in their proceſſions ſcourge, and flay, and tear their very fleſh off, to draw down upon themſelves the divine mercy: and theſe pious proceſſions are often performed in times of public calamity, to implore the aſſiſtance of God, and thoſe ſaints who are appointed the protectors of our ſtates.

As men grew civilized, they built cities, devotion appeared with a greater luſtre, and removed from fields into cities. We have already hinted, that the Perſians believed, the ſupreme Being could not be contained within the narrow limits of a temple, yet temples were abſolutely neceſſary both for the conveniency of worſhip, and the honour of religion. Nay, thoſe religious places ſeem to raiſe our zeal and give ſtrength to our devotion, devotion, God being preſent and preſiding at ſuch aſſemblies. Such of the Heathens as enjoyed the leaſt ſhare of knowledge believed this; and God has declared it; for (ſaith he) where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midſt of them. The Greeks and Romans made their addreſſes to their Gods in temples: of which all antiquity is a witneſs. But under pretence of religion debauchery ſoon crept in; and at laſt became almoſt an act of faith in the worſhip of ſeveral Deities. Bacchus, Saturn, Adonis, Pan, Flora, Priapus, and Venus were worſhiped in a very irregular and diſſolute manner. At Babylon the women proſtituted themſelves in honour of this laſt Deity, who was worſhiped by the name of Mylitta[l]; and the nocturnal myſteries of Ceres were infamous and abominable. Chriſtianity no longer admits of any of theſe abominations; but yet parties of pleaſure, declarations of love, intrigues, and other ſcandalous appointments, continue to be made in our churches; and the devotion of pilgrimages, nine days retirements, &c. are very often owing to different cauſes from thoſe of religion.

* This word here ſignifies the temple of the Deity, and is likewiſe uſed for the Deity itſelf.
[k] Coram obſeſſâ urbe ſacerdotes Deos evocabant, &c. See Brouwer, de veterum ac recent. adorationibus.

But be this as it will, religious worſhip being now confined to temples, the appointment of miniſters for the Deities became neceſſary. God himſelf inſtituted thoſe whom he deſigned for the ſervice of the true religion, and mankind thoſe for the falſe; but in the one and the other, they have been multiplied to an infinite number from worldly motives, and from this cauſe has ſprung up ſo many uſeleſs creatures, who pretend a right to ſerve at thoſe altars which maintain them. True religion by degrees became leſs ſpiritual, tho' more over-run with ceremonies, and the falſe more myſterious and fantaſtical. The prieſts found means to hinder men from acting till they had been conſulted; they ſet all the ſprings of the paſſions in motion, were at the head of all intrigues, and made themſelves maſters of the courts of Princes; in ſhort, they damn'd people for God's ſake. So great has the authority of prieſts ever been in all religions[m]. We know the power of the Augurs, Soothſayers, and Prieſts amongſt the Greeks and Romans, of the Magi among the Perſians, of the Druids amongſt the Gauls, of the Bards amongſt the Celtæ and Britons; and the world to this very day is governed after the ſame manner. The Mufti and other doctors of the Mahometan law are too often the grand wheels in the debates of the Divan. The inhabitants of the new world, Africa, the Eaſt Indies, &c. undertake nothing without the advice of their prieſts and fryars; ſure it is unneceſſary to produce examples of what is practiſed amongſt ourſelves.

Let us proceed then, to give a ſuccinct account of all the cuſtoms which men have obſerved in the religious worſhip and honour of the Deity. The Romans worſhiped the Gods as ſoon as morning appeared; they honoured them with praiſes on feſtivals, and other ſolemn occaſions. The law of the twelve tables was expreſs on this point. Let thoſe Gods be worſhiped which have always been acknowledged as ſuch, and thoſe men whoſe merit has gained them a place in heaven, ſuch as Hercules, Æſculapius, Caſtor and Pollux, &c. Let chapels be conſecrated in honour of thoſe virtues, to which thoſe holy men are indebted for their Apotheoſis. They were applied to in time of want, and the Romans had days of penance, as we now have among us. They went in proceſſion[n] barefooted, &c. The ancient Germans ſacrificed to their God Thor every Thurſday, [o] to be preſerved from lightning, thunder, and hail; vows were had recourſe to, in order, as it were, to bind the Gods, and bring them over to their intereſt by propoſing advantageous conditions to them. [p] The contract made with them on ſuch occaſions was carried into their temples, and placed at the feet of their ſtatues; and as ſoon as the favour implored of their Gods was obtained, it was no more than juſtice to fulfil their vow, and then the contract tract was cancelled; this was giving a kind of releaſe to the Deity, with whom they had contracted.

[l] Vid. Caſtell. & alios de feſtis Græc. In Theſmoph. Muliebre pudendum colebatur.

[m] Amongſt the Germans the prieſts gave ſentence of life and death upon criminals, many nations formerly choſe their prieſts for kings. In the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, China, Japan, &c. the prieſts and monks have an unlimited power. Men are ſo framed by nature, that there is an abſolute neceſſity that prieſts ſhould have reſpect paid them, in order to maintain the dignity of religion. The queſtion is to ſet reaſonable bounds to that reſpect, ſo as not to fall into their exceſſes, who give themſelves up blindly to the paſſions of prieſts.

[n] Nudipedalia. V. Tertull. Apolog. [o] V. Olaus Hiſtor. [p] Vota concepta Tabellis inſcribebant ----- ita conſcripta ſignabant ----- obſignata affigebant Deorum ſtatuis ----- Voti compotes facti Tabellas ſolvebant, id eſt lacerabant. Brouwer, de adorationibus.

Concerning prayers, Jeſus Chriſt forbids his diſciples to lengthen them by vain repetitions: and indeed a repetition of the ſame thing in prayer, proceeds neither from zeal nor reſpect. Probably the prayers of idolaters might be very tedious: but it is ſurprizing that Chriſtians ſhould have fallen into the ſame error; I cannot ſee any more merit in thinking it a duty to repeat the ſame prayer to God fifty times in ſuch a ſpace of time, than in whimſically perſiſting to preſent fifty copies of the ſame petition one after another to a Prince. [q] Amongſt the Turks there are a ſort of bigots, who affect to repeat the name of God with a kind of rapidity more like madneſs than devotion. The ancients were very fond of uſing the number three in their prayers (of which we have here given ſome inſtances)[r]. They likewiſe believed, a long ſtring of titles and different ſurnames to be agreable to their Gods, as ſo many inſtances of their grandeur and power; and for fear of aſcribing to them any diſagreable name, they took care to mention thoſe attributes [s] with a ſalvo or corrective form, but this is not all the ceremonious part of prayer; for when they prayed aloud, a miniſter of the Gods [t] rehearſed the prayer to the people, who repeated it in ſo many words, and no more; and the ſame thing is now practiſed amongſt the Roman Catholic and Engliſh Chriſtians, as well as amongſt the Turks. I ſay nothing concerning the prayers uttered in a low voice in public aſſemblies, nor concerning the [u] common places conſecrated to this pious uſe, as well amongſt the ancients as moderns; every religion has its own particular ones; nay, it would be impoſſible to do without them, unleſs men were reſolved to introduce diſorder and anarchy into religion.

I ſaid that the Romans worſhiped their Gods as ſoon as the morning appeared; I may add, that it was the cuſtom of almoſt all the nations in the world, even the moſt ſavage. At day break the Perſian Magi began their hymns in honour of their Gods, and ſaluted the riſing Sun, that body of fire which they looked upon as an Eternal Principle. The ancient Tartars likewiſe began the day with invocations to the Sun, to whom they every morning offered up the choiceſt of their meats and drinks, but idolaters of a more ſtrict piety did not confine their devotion to the morning only. All the hours of the day are proper for the practice of this duty; for which reaſon the evening as well as the morning hours were ſet apart for the ſervice of the Gods, without mentioning the many ſacrifices, ceremonies, and nocturnal prayers in uſe amongſt the Heathens. The Mahometans call the people to prayers five times a day, and he who will be a faithful Muſulman muſt be exact herein; they appear at this their devotion in ſo modeſt and humble a poſture, that it is impoſſible to expreſs a more profound ſubmiſſion. The [w] Jews and [x] Chriſtians [s] For inſtance this, quoquo nomine, quoquo ritu, quâquâ facie te fas eſt invocare; and this other, ſive Deus, ſive Dea es: not daring to aſcertain the ſex of the Deity whom they worſhiped. [t] Præco, ἱεροκήρυξ.

[q] V. Thevenot. [r] For example: Horace ſaith to Diana, quæ laborantes utero puellas ter vocata audis. Tibullus. Ter cane, ter dictis deſpice Carminibus. Ovid. Ter tollit in æthera Palmas.

[u] Theſe common places and catechiſms are above all things neceſſary for the common people, who have not capacity enough to underſtand their religion without ſuch helps; and if among Chriſtians the reverence which is paid to them is arrived to a degree of ſuperſtition, it is no way owing to ſuch as inſtituted them; nay, the clergy may be placed in the rank of common people in this reſpect, and perhaps intereſt is the caſe; for the more ignorant a man is, the more is the doctor reſpected by ſcrupulous conſciences. Ignorance is a ſort of mother, who pampers a vaſt number of idle children; from thence proceeds family religion. The famous oracle of Delphos recommended to the Athenians the obſervance of their anceſtors rites: (V. Cicero. de legibus:) and ſome people are to be found, who, of all the editions of the Pſalms of David which were turned into verſe by Clement Marot, and Theodore Beza, chuſe thoſe wherein the moſt obſolete words are as it were conſecrated, in order to ſing in the ſame language with their anceſtors; and perpetuate a religious obſcurity in the devotion of their families.

[w] Mr. Roſs in his Religions of the world, gives us an account of ſeveral cuſtoms which the Jews practiſed during their prayers; for example, he ſays, that they pray with their cloaths tucked up, their faces turned towards Jeruſalem, and their hands upon their heart; that when they are at prayers, they muſt neither touch their naked skin, break wind any way, nor ſuffer their thoughts to wander; and that nothing muſt interrupt them, even tho' they were liable to be bitten by any venomous creature, &c. The Jews pray three times a day. V. Father Simon in his I. Diſſertat. upon the cerem. of the Jews.

[x] The Roman Catholics have canonical hours. In ſeveral of the Proteſtant ſtates there are prayers once a day, and ſome of them leave the people to do as they pleaſe. After all, woe to them that do not pray to God, as it is their duty; a good Chriſtian always makes God his chief object. Some Caſuiſts have conſidered all the occaſions proper for prayer; and have put ſome pious queries concerning it, as whether it is lawful to praiſe God and ſing Pſalms, &c. when a man is in the act of generation? Or when we are eaſing ourſelves?

ſtians likewiſe have their hours for the practice of public prayer, and worſhip of the Divinity. We will now ſee what other particulars men have thought neceſſary in order to ſerve God with purity, and what they have imagined the ſupreme Being might require of them on this occaſion; tho' we ſhall not diſtinguiſh divine inſtitutions from thoſe merely human.

We all know that the Jews have always, and ſtill to this day do conſecrate Saturday to the practice of their devotion, which they obſerve with almoſt a childiſh ſtrictneſs; and beſides this, they have appointed ſolemn days in commemoration of the favours they have received from God. The Chriſtians have ſubſtituted Sunday in the room of it, and obſerve the Paſſover and Pentecoſt of the Jews in remembrance of Jeſus Chriſt, the Founder of Chriſtianity. They afterwards conſecrated days in honour of his Apoſtles. In ſhort, feſtivals have been ſo multiplied out of reſpect to the ſaints, that every day in the year has its patron [y]. So that were this heavenly hierarchy to be honoured according to its deſerts, we ſhould be under an obligation of leading a life perfectly diſengaged from all worldly employments. But the Roman Catholic Church has wiſely provided againſt ſuch an exceſs, and moſt of the Proteſtant Chriſtians have retained no more than four ſolemn feſtivals in their reformation, viz. Chriſtmas, Eaſter, the Aſcenſion of our Lord, and Whitſuntide.

The Heathens likewiſe conſecrated ſolemn days to their Gods, on which it was not lawful to do any work, and [z] the Greeks made a law whereby they confirmed the keeping holy thoſe days. Labour of any kind was looked upon as a profanation of the feſtival, to prevent which the Romans ordered [a] herald to make proclamation, commanding every one to abſtain from labour; for if the prieſt perceived any work going forward during the [a] ſacrifice, the ceremony was profaned. All quarrels and diſputes were ſuſpended at that time in honour of the Gods: but as ſoon as the feaſt was over, all things went on in the uſual courſe, and law ſuits recovered their ground. All profane people were prohibited to aſſiſt at theſe ſacred ceremonies; and [b] thoſe who were preſent were ordered to obſerve a religious ſilence, leſt during the converſation any word of ill omen might ſlip from them; not that their devotion was therefore the more ſincere; no, it was only a ſilence of ceremony, which by length of time perhaps became a real devotion: for as it is poſſible that ſome men might have a truly pious attention during the celebration of thoſe myſteries, ſo it is likely, that cuſtom might at length gain over ſome ſouls to religion: but be that as it will, [c] ſilence in the temples, and at the altars during divine ſervice, has ever been looked upon as the greateſt ſign of that reſpect which is due to God. The ſame thing may be ſaid as to purity of heart; for it is impoſſible, that a man who is defiled with crimes can be agreable to the Deity. Such an one therefore was of neceſſity and in formal terms to be excluded from his [d] worſhip, and if this was the cuſtom of the Pagans, much more neceſſarily ought it to be confirmed amongſt Chriſtians. The office of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper rejects thoſe Chriſtians who lead a ſcandalous life, and exhorts them to repentance, denouncing God's judgments againſt them: and, if (notwithſtanding ſuch admonitions) they continue ſtill in their perverſeneſs, then the church excommunicates them.

The

[y] There is no probability, that God or his ſaints ſhould be pleaſed with the devotions of thoſe days, which are only employed in luxury, pleaſure, and vanity. All that is religious in them conſiſts amongſt ſome Chriſtians in a few ceremonies which are of no ſervice to devotion; and their zeal is heightned only by common places and loud exclamations.

[z] Lex apud Athenienſes jubebat, ut ſacra diis rite fierent, non avocato ad alias curas animo. Vide Brouwer, de adorationibus & legem apud S. Petitum, de Legibus Atticis.

[a] A flaminibus præmittebantur qui denunciarent opificibus, manus abſtinerent ab opere, ne, ſi vidiſſet ſacerdos facientem opus, ſacra polluerentur. Feſtus.

[b] The formulary of the Greeks was, favens eſto omnis populus: that of the Romans, favete linguis. Ut rite peragi poſſit ſacrum, nullâ malâ voce obſtrepente, imperatur ſilentium, ſaith Seneca.

[c] The Imans, or prieſts, in their exhortations to the Mahometans, ſtrictly recommend ſilence and attention to them during the time of prayer.

[d] Procul eſte prophani. Omnis præfatio ſacrorum eos quibus non ſunt puræ manus ſacris arcet. Tit. Livius.

The Romans uſed to begin their public worſhip with the invocation of Janus, proofs of which will appear in the [c] notes, and they obſerved many other ceremonies which may be more particularly ſeen in the authors, who have written concerning them. The Romans believed, that Janus was he who introduced them to the Gods, and, as their advocate, carried their prayers to them. They likewiſe believed, that he firſt inſtituted the worſhip of the Gods, and built temples and altars to them. As all devotion begun with him, ſo it ended with the Goddeſs Veſta. She was the ſymbol of religion, the guardian of the ſacred fire, and depoſitary of the myſteries of religion, rerum cuſtos intimarum, ſaith Cicero; ſo that it was but reaſonable to cloſe all devotion with that Deity; yet, the Greeks by a contrary cuſtom began their devotions with Veſta, as you may ſee by ſome inſtances in [f] the notes; in the ſame manner fire was the firſt object of the prayers of the ancient Perſians.

Matrimonial converſation excluded people from the temples of the Gods, which is proved by ſeveral paſſages from the ancients; and the ſame thing was obſerved amongſt the Jews, who looked upon all defilements of body as capital, but chiefly the impurities of women, or ſuch other uncleanneſſes as men contracted by converſing with them. The Brachmans were obliged by their religion to be chaſte, which they do not much obſerve, if we may believe travellers, who deſcribe thoſe people to us as the greateſt hypocrites upon earth. We are aſſured that the Samaritans do not converſe with their wives during the ſabbath; and the Mahometans are likewiſe rigid obſervers of every thing that tends to purity of body; for they not only abſtain from women at the time of their devotions, but they even have divers kinds of ablutions, which they uſe more or leſs according to the degree of their defilements. If we may credit St. Gregory the Great, a man who had lately converſed with his wife ought not to enter into a church, it being diſreſpectful unto God; but we may preſume, that S. Gregory did not think it amiſs if in this caſe Chriſtians were left to the teſtimony of their own conſcience. The Roman Catholics oblige their prieſts to live unmarried, and the duty and rules of their office condemn them to a [g] perpetual chaſtity. But this ſort of abſtinence (give me leave to uſe the expreſſion) was not the only one preſcribed in former times. The ancient Egyptian prieſts abſtained both from wine and [h] women; and the Jewiſh from all kind of ſtrong liquors. The prieſts of Iſis and Cybele abſtained from certain meats; and in general all prieſts, to whatever of the Heathen Deities they belonged, obſerved faſts and abſtinences on particular religious occaſions. They likewiſe affected to throw off all the cares of life, and depend upon public charity in honour of ſome of their Deities, taking up the profeſſion of a voluntary poverty, this was practiſed by the votaries of Cybele the mother of the Gods. They uſed [i] in a devout manner to carry the images of their Deities thro' the ſtreets, and from one province to another. Theſe images made a ſtrong impreſſion on the mind of pious Heathens, and procured the holy pilgrims of the Goddeſs a handſome maintenance, which helped them to undergo the hardſhips of their poverty.

There

[c] Te primùm pia thura rogant, te vota ſalutant, ſays Martial to Janus; and Ovid, Jane, tibi primùm thura merumque fero. This is farther proved by a Roman prayer, taken out of Livy. Jane, Jupiter, Mars Pater, Quirine, Bellona, Lares, Divi Novenſiles, Dei indigetes, Divi, quorum eſt poteſtas noſtrorum hoſtiumque, Deique Manes, vos precor, veneror, veniam peto feroque, uti Pop. R. Quirit. vim victoriamque proſperetis.

[f] Pauſanias. Sacrificant Veſtæ primùm, tum ſecundo loco Jovi Olympio. Porphyrius, A Veſta Cœleſtium Deorum ſacra primùm auſpicati.

[g] Inſupportable burden! the weight of which was fully perceived by the reformation of the Proteſtants. Their clergy marry and religion is never the worſe for it, tho' ſome people pretend that a married life, and the cares of a family, divert a miniſter from his duty to the Church. But the clergy who are debarred matrimony, often keep miſtreſſes, which certainly cannot be more innocent than having a wife.

[h] They abſtained from fleſh, and from wine, the more effectually to extinguiſh the flames of concupiſcence. The ancient Bruchmans did the ſame. The Gymnoſophiſts lived upon rice and fruits. The prieſts of Ceres abſtained alſo from eating of fleſh, which was one of the three precepts that Triptolemus had given them.

[i] It appears that men are well enough pleaſed with ſeeing a certain ſet of devotees ſequeſter themſelves from the reſt, which we might almoſt call the Corps de Reſerve of Piety. Theſe bigots profeſs poverty, abſtinence, and retirement; and yet in the midſt of their ſolitude they by degrees find themſelves richer, better fed, and more at liberty than the reſt of mankind. The men of the world, whoſe buſineſs or pleaſures will not allow them time to pray, are over-joyed to find men who will take upon them the care of praying for them, and ſecure them a pardon from God, without the former's being at any other trouble, than paying a little money and ſubmitting to a few ceremonies.

There were ſeveral ways of contracting impurity by dreams. In Ariſtophanes's Frogs a man calls for ſome water to waſh himſelf after a diſagreable dream; and a certain number of days were requiſite for the recovery of that purity, often ten, [k] and ſometimes thirty. The Jewiſh law preſcribed ſeven days for the purification of a man who was Seminiſluus, and of a woman who had her courſes; thirty three days for a woman who had brought forth a man child, and ſixty ſix for a female child. Amongſt the ancient idolaters, if a man committed murder or any other act of violence, he was forbidden approaching the altars till he had firſt [l] waſhed himſelf; and Chriſtians in ſuch caſes enjoin penance; in ſhort, every criminal action whatever, every action grounded upon impurity of body or mind, was deemed diſpleaſing to the Deity, and excluded a man from all religious myſteries. Funeral rites were placed in the ſame rank. The Jews pronounced ſuch as had touched dead bodies defiled; and it was a cuſtom amongſt the [m] Greeks to hang up the hair of their dead at the door, that people might avoid defiling themſelves by going into the houſe.

The purifying of the body, tho' ever ſo inconvenient and troubleſome, is ſtill much eaſier than that of the ſoul; and as there was a neceſſity to preſerve an image of the latter, for this reaſon the uſe of luſtral water was inſtituted, which the Chriſtian religion has aboliſhed, and brought in holy water in the room of it. The prieſts and people uſed to take ſome of this luſtral water into their hands when they went into the temples to ſacrifice; and amongſt the Chriſtians, thoſe who keep up the uſe of holy water aſcribe ſeveral virtues almoſt miraculous to it; we may allow it one quality which is inconteſtable, viz. that it is a memento to Chriſtians not to appear in the preſence of God without a clear conſcience, that otherwiſe all aſperſions with holy water, however devoutly performed, [n] can have no merit but in the eyes of men. Altho' the devotion of the Heathens was ſo nice in the uſe of water for religious purpoſes, yet it did not preciſely determine, whether they ſhould uſe ſpring or ſea water, &c. [o] for which reaſon they were at liberty to uſe that which was moſt agreable to them. Nevertheleſs, ſea water was much eſteemed on this occaſion, which was the reaſon that abundance of people uſed formerly to pay their devotions on the ſea ſhore; if a man found himſelf defiled with any crime, he needed only go and plunge himſelf into the ſea, and ſay his prayer on the very place of purification, and he was cleanſed; yet it was an eſtabliſhed cuſtom for them to waſh in running water, and as they were obliged to bath often, the prieſts of ancient Egypt took care to build their temples and chapels on the borders of the Nile. The Indians of the preſent age obſerve the ſame precautions, moſt of their Pagods being ſituated near ſome river: beſides this, they have an extraordinary veneration for the waters of the river Ganges: but as they cannot at all times be near enough to waſh themſelves in its ſacred waters, the Bramins tell them that all other waters will have the ſame virtue, if, whilſt they are bathing, they pronounce theſe words; O Ganges purify me. In like manner the Romans paid a great reſpect to all rivers and fountains; for as they believed that thoſe waters were governed by ſome Deity who continually reſided in them, the people were com-

[k] Feſtus: Denariæ, ſaith he, vel tricenariæ ceremoniæ, quibus ſacra adituris decem continuis diebus, vel triginta, certis quibuſdam rebus carendum erat.

[l] We here ſpeak of ſuch violences only, which officers of juſtice could not come at the knowledge of, either becauſe of the dignity of the offender or of ſome other particular reaſons. Water was not always uſed on this occaſion amongſt the Heathens; and Ovid juſtly condemns it in his Faſti.

[m] V. Eurip. at the beginning of his Alceſta. They likewiſe kept water always ready at their doors in order to waſh the body of the dead.

[n] There is a fine paſſage of Lactantius upon this ſubject ----- Flagitiis omnibus inquinati veniunt ad precandum, & ſe piè ſacrificáſſe opinantur, ſi cutim laverint; tanquam libidines intra pectus incluſas ulli amnes abluant, aut ulla maria purificent.

[o] You may ſee on this ſubject, Lomejerus de luſtrationibus Veterum. The Indians likewiſe uſe luſtral water. They water the fore part of their houſes carefully every morning with cows urine, which they pretend, procures them the bleſſing of the Gods; they believe too, that this urine has the power entirely to blot out their ſins.

i

manded to uſe great precaution in bathing, [p] and not to trouble the water, a profound ſilence was likewiſe enjoined for fear of diſturbing the repoſe of the Deity.

[q] The Romans uſed likewiſe to waſh the feet of new married women, it being an emblem of that purity required of them in marriage. They who were going to offer a ſacrifice [r] frequently waſhed their whole body, and ſometimes their head only. As for the cuſtom of waſhing of hands, it was ſo uſual in all religious worſhip, and is ſo well known, that I need not enlarge upon that ſubject; inſtances of it are frequent both in Holy Writ and prophane authors. The cuſtom of waſhing the feet upon a principle of religion was not quite ſo common, but yet often practiſed; and perhaps Jeſus Chriſt alluded to it, when he waſhed the feet of his twelve Apoſtles; tho' on the other hand it appears, that in the Eaſtern countries the cuſtom of waſhing the feet of thoſe who were invited to a feaſt, was but a common civility; and the ceremony is now practiſed by the Pope and other Roman Catholic Princes, as a piece of Chriſtian humility.

But ablution, or bathing was not always neceſſary, for they often only made uſe of aſperſion or ſprinkling with water, which was done with a branch of Olive, Laurel, or with an inſtrument made on purpoſe; yet the celebration of the more auguſt myſteries, ſuch as thoſe of Ceres, required ablution, or the dipping the whole body: the oracle of Trophonius could not be conſulted, till a man had firſt bathed himſelf ſeveral times in the river Hercyna; and when the perſon who came to conſult the oracle was juſt upon entring the cave, where this famous oracle was pronounced, two young men, aſſiſtants to the prieſts of it, waſhed him over again; in ſhort, purification by water was formerly almoſt an univerſal cuſtom amongſt the Heathens. The Jewiſh religion likewiſe required continual ablutions: and as people inſenſibly accuſtom themſelves to regard things appointed for ſacred uſes, with a kind of ſuperſtitious awe, thoſe very things which were only ſigns, at length became the eſſential part of their religion; an error with which Jeſus Chriſt reproached the Jews. At this very time the ſame ablutions are practiſed with great care and exactneſs by the Turks, as well as all Mahometans; and indeed the baptiſm of Chriſtians may be looked upon as a kind of ablution [s].

Covering the head was alſo an eſſential cuſtom in religious worſhip, and the Jews to this day, obſerve to keep their heads covered with a veil during all the time of public devotion in their ſynagogues, as they did formerly. The Turks who profeſs a religion for which

[p] Theſe two paſſages prove what is here advanced:

Hujus Nympha loci, Sacri cuſtodia Fontis,
Dormio, dum blandæ ſentio murmur aquæ.

Parce meum, quiſquis tangis cava marmora, ſomnum
Rumpere, ſive bibas, ſive lavêre, tace.
NYMPHIS LOCI.
BIBE, LAVA.
TACE.

I have taken them from the diſſertation of Mr. BROUWER de adorationibus.

[q] Aqua petita de puro fonte per puerum feliciſſimum, vel puellam quæ nuptiis intereſt, de quâ ſolebant nubentibus pedes lavari. Varro in Briſſon. de nuptiis.
Aquâ aſpergebatur nova nupta, ſive ut pura caſtaque ad virum veniret, ſive ut ignem & aquam cum viro communicaret. Idem.

[r] Diis ſuperis ſacrificaturi ſeſe lavabant, inferis rem ſacram facturi tantùm aſpergebantur. Brouwerius de adorationibus.

[s] One part of the Greeks commemorate the inſtitution of baptiſm by bathing themſelves in the river Jordan; which ceremony is revived every year with great licentiouſneſs. A fine repreſentation of baptiſm! which ought to lay before us the neceſſity of the regeneration of man become Chriſtian! We ought not to omit placing the bleſſing of bells in the number of eſſential ablutions, as it is practiſed amongſt the Roman Catholics. It is a kind of baptiſm, ſince they waſh them with holy water, and give ſome ſaint's name to them, by whoſe invocation they offer them up to God, to the end that the ſaint may protect them, and help the church to obtain of God what ſhe deſireth of him, in the words of the Ritual of Alet. This ablution is ſo much the more neceſſary for bells, as they repreſent, (as in the words of the foreſaid Ritual) the church who inciteth the faithful to praiſe God, &c. The ſounding metal of bells which is heard at a great diſtance, is a figure of the perpetuity of the goſpel, the ſound of which has been carried all over the world. They are likewiſe types of the miniſters, and preachers of the goſpel. The waſhing of the bells is attended with a benediction, to the end, that being once bleſſed they may have power to make an impreſſion on the heart by the vertue of the Holy Ghoſt, ----- and that their ringing may drive away all evil ſpirits, &c. we may hereto add, that when the ſound of the bells of churches ſtrike the organs of the ear, it inſpires the heart of many Chriſtians with devotion.

which they are in a good meaſure indebted to Judaiſm, imitate the Jews likewiſe in remaining uncovered whilſt at prayers in their moſques; and the Romans after waſhing themſelves, uſed always to cover their heads when they approached any of their Deities; and this they did partly out of reſpect, and partly out of ſuperſtition: but ſigns being arbitrary, our great and only care ſhould be to fix our attention upon the object repreſented by them. We uncover our heads when we pray to God, or approach any thing that is ſacred, and ſo likewiſe when we go into a church. But grounded on what whim is it, that the reformed Proteſtants cover their heads during the reading of the Bible, and the preaching of the miniſter, and yet uncover themſelves when they ſing Pſalms or pray? Theſe very reformed miniſters in ſome countries preach with their heads covered. But let us return to the Romans. The cuſtom of covering their head, or being veiled during divine ſervice was general among them; that is to ſay, whilſt they were offering up their devotions to their Gods, &c. They likewiſe covered themſelves in caſes where they were to move compaſſion; and this cuſtom was not only kept up on thoſe occaſions, but in nuptial ceremonies too, to ſignify the bride's modeſty, and that virgin ſhame which being then upon expiring, retired from the heart up to the face to give it an additional glow of beauty. In a time of mourning the face was covered; the ſame was obſerved by criminals condemned to execution; it is probable, that the uſe of veils was firſt introduced to prevent our thoughts from wandring upon objects before us during religious worſhip; and perhaps too to teach us how unworthy we are of beholding the Deity; yet, in ſacrifices to ſome particular Gods this cuſtom was not obſerved; for example to Saturn, [t] Hercules, Ops or Rhea, &c. But the Grecians never ſacrificed to their Gods with their heads veiled.

Theſe veils were commonly white, and ſo likewiſe were the robes ſet apart for religious ceremonies. White is the ſymbol of that purity of ſoul, and of that ſtate of innocence with which we ought to appear in the preſence of God; it is likewiſe the emblem of joy in oppoſition to black, which repreſents grief. The Romans uſed to offer up white victims to their Gods in ſacrifices of thankſgiving, and were of opinion they could do nothing more agreable to the ſupreme Deity than to ſerve him in white: but as for the infernal Gods, as they believed them to be miſchievous and wicked, taking delight in the misfortunes of men, and that living in perpetual darkneſs, they muſt certainly be of a ſad and melancholy complexion, ſo they worſhiped them according to the temper they believed them to be of; and cloathed themſelves in black in honour of them. The ancient Chriſtians uſed to dreſs thoſe who had been newly baptiſed in white; and it is well known, that the Roman Catholics have conſecrated this colour to their religious worſhip: but the reformed Churches, and the Proteſtants in general, who have thrown almoſt all ceremonies out of their worſhip, have likewiſe rejected [u] this colour. We do not ſee them wear it during divine ſervice; their miniſters being always clothed in black, even when they preach *. The Proteſtants generally dreſs themſelves in black, when they go to take the Sacrament, or at leaſt chuſe ſome grave colour on that occaſion. As for the Turks they deteſt black [w] as being an omen of ſadneſs and ill-luck, but they eſteem white and green as ſacred, which laſt is the colour appropriated to the deſcendants of Mahomet. Green above all, is forbidden to Chriſtians and Jews, but they may wear yellow or [x] black.

The

[t] Among the figures which follow this Diſſertation; ſee that medal repreſenting a ſacrifice of Hercules, that which repreſents piety veiled, whereby the manner wherein women veiled themſelves when they offered up a ſacrifice will appear. That repreſenting the Emperor Severus veiled for the ſame ceremony, and that which repreſents a Phrygian cap which they put on on the like occaſion.

[u] I do not believe any juſt reaſon can be given for it; perhaps they only left off that colour at the time of the reformation, the better to diſtinguiſh themſelves from the Roman Catholics; but let a man be in white, black, or red, that circumſtance has nothing to do with religion; true piety is in the heart; for the choice of colours is merely the effect of fancy and of opinion unſupported by reaſon, which ſuppoſes decency and purity to be where they are not. There is no colour but may, if you pleaſe, bear ſome advantageous relation to religion, if white be the emblem of purity, black is that of ſorrow and humiliation in the preſence of God; green of hope; blue of love, &c. [w] The Perſians call it the devil's colour. [x] The Jews of Morocco are diſtinguiſhed by their black caps from the Moors, who wear red caps. V. Saint Olon's ſtate of Morocco.

* This is falſe as to the clergy of the church of England, who not only always perform divine ſervice in white, but likewiſe often preach in that colour.

The Gentiles, in order to pay a greater honour to their Deities, uſed to follow them bare footed in proceſſion. This honour was always paid to Cybele the mother of the Gods; and the Roman ladies at all times went bareſoot into the temple of Veſta, which cuſtom of going barefoot was likewiſe obſerved at proceſſions in times of public calamity. The ſame thing was practiſed alſo by the Jews, when they were to humble themſelves before the Almighty God, tho' in a more ſevere manner; for to this they added ſack-cloth and aſhes. The inhabitants of Crete would not ſuffer any one to enter the temple of Diana with ſhoes on; the devout ladies of Greece ſeem to have formerly been as ſcrupulous as the Roman upon this article; for they uſed to follow the proceſſion of Ceres, with their feet bare and their hair diſhevelled, as may be collected from a paſſage of Callimachus. The myſterious Pythagoras enjoined his diſciples to ſacrifice to, and worſhip the Gods barefooted: but perhaps he thereby deſigned to recommend that humility of ſoul and ſimplicity of heart, which is ſo indiſpenſible in all religious worſhip. In this manner it was that God, whoſe deſigns are infinitely above all human ceremonies, commanded [y] Moſes and Joſhua to looſe their ſhoes from off their feet.

This cuſtom of pulling off their ſhoes amongſt the Heathens upon a principle of religion, was turned, by degrees, into a groſs and ſenſeleſs ſuperſtition. The Romans uſed to drive away caterpillars and other inſects which deſtroy the fruits of the earth, [z] by the means of women who walked barefoot round the trees. Sorcereſſes likewiſe in all magical ceremonies, took off their ſhoes, which appears from ſeveral paſſages of Ovid, Horace, and Virgil: but let us return to the cuſtom of going barefoot in honour of the Deity. The ancient Chriſtians obſerved it in their ſolemn proceſſions, whereof you may find examples in eccleſiaſtical hiſtory. The Emperor Theodoſius the Younger, and the Patriarch Proclus, both of them condeſcended to humble themſelves thus low, when they aſſiſted at thoſe proceſſions which were made at that time upon account of ſeveral earthquakes. Heraclius went farther, for he reſolved to carry the croſs upon his back, and bear the weight of that holy burthen during a long proceſſion, tho' he was almoſt born down by the weight of his imperial robes: but as he preferred the humble weight of the croſs to all the grandeur of Empire, he pulled of his clothes and ſhoes, in order to perform his journey to mount Calvary with leſs pain and fatigue. To this very day the Roman Catholic penitents commonly march barefooted at their proceſſions. The moſt devout of the Fathers of Mercy, walk after the ſame manner both at Portugal and Goa, when they perform their great and ſolemn proceſſion on Holy Thurſday. The Capuchins, whoſe life ſhould be a continued courſe of Penance, wear nothing on their feet but ſandals, which are hardly ſufficient to guard them from thorns and briars: but there are Chriſtians who carry their humility ſtill much farther, obliging themſelves to go up the twenty eight ſteps of the Santa Scala on their knees, in order to pay their adoration to the Sancta Sanctorum. A fatiguing, but exemplary devotion, exceeding all others, as it ſets aſide the uſe of our feet. As to the laudable cuſtom of being barefooted, whilſt men are to humble themſelves before the Deity, it has been introduced into all the religions of our days. Wherever appeared any ſigns of a religious worſhip, there likewiſe was ſeen a kind of penitential ceremonial, which men had eſtabliſhed in order to make ſuch a formal atonement, as they thought the ſupreme Being might require of them. The Indians of Peru, obſerved this cuſtom as the greateſt mark of humiliation, which they could offer up unto the Gods. They never entered the celebrated and magnificent temple of the Sun, till they had firſt put off their ſhoes in the porch of the temple; the Turks take off their [b] Pabouches, before they enter the moſques, and if their feet be not quite bare, they are at [y] V. Exod. chap. iii. Joſhua chap. v. [z] Plin. Hiſt. Nat. Lib. XVII. [a] The Santa Scala or Holy Ladder, is compoſed of twenty eight ſteps, which it is ſaid Jeſus Chriſt went up in order to appear before Pilate. Good Catholics aſcend theſe ſteps on their knees, and at each ſtep obtain indulgences for three years. At the top of the Santa Scala is a chapel, which is called the Holy of Holies, becauſe of an image made by the angels.

[b] A kind of ſlipper made of one ſingle ſole, and the upper part of Morocco leather.

at moſt covered with their drawers. [c] The Indians pay the ſame reſpect to their Pagods: but let us not ſo far deſcend into particulars on this head as to become tedious[d]; we will then proceed to thoſe other cuſtoms which the wit of man has eſtabliſhed, in order to make themſelves agreable to God.

It was an obſervation amongſt the ancients always to enter a temple with the right foot foremoſt. This was likewiſe obſerved, when they went into any great man's houſe, and the Romans were extremely exact and ſerious in trifles of this kind[e]. The great Auguſtus, who was a Prince of as good underſtanding as any that was ever known, could not endure that they ſhould put on his left ſhoe before his right, believing that the good or bad fortune of the day was owing to his ſhoe. Vitruvius tells you very gravely, [f] that the ſteps going up to a temple muſt be of an odd number, to the end, that ſetting the right foot upon the firſt ſtep, the ſame foot may be foremoſt at entring the temple. We cannot think that God has any regard to ſuch inſignificant cuſtoms: nevertheleſs, a man of gravity, who was of ſome note amongſt the Chriſtians, [g] laid it down as a rule in the building of a church, that the upper end ſhould always front the Eaſt. Alet's Ritual tells us, that the firſt ſtone laid in the foundation of a church, muſt be ſolid, angular, and of about a ſpan ſquare at leaſt. There are many other trifling circumſtances of the ſame nature, which we ſhall not here mention. The ancients uſed likewiſe to caſt down their eyes in their way to the temple, and in their invocations of the Gods. This commendable cuſtom, when occaſioned by the converſion of our hearts to God, was uſed to ſhew the greater humility during divine ſervice. [h] Nor is it ever more commendable than on this occaſion, ſaith Seneca. A good Muſulman muſt likewiſe walk to his prayers with his eyes on the ground: but as vice in diſguiſe is hardly to be diſtinguiſhed from virtue, it very often happens among us, that a downcaſt look is ſuſpected as a ſign of hypocriſy. What would the world now think, to ſee a multitude of Chriſtians going to church, all of them with their eyes fixed on the ground, and returning home in the ſame manner? But if a downcaſt look be a ſign of modeſty, the eye lifted up to heaven is a mark of that confidence which we ought to have in God; and for this reaſon, it is often obſerved, that we caſt our eyes upwards to heaven when we are praying to God with fervency.

According to the ancients, the forehead, which is the ſeat of modeſty, was conſecrated to their particular genius, therefore in paying their devotions to the Gods, they ſometimes lifted their hand to their forehead and touched it; and this is ſtill obſerved amongſt the Eaſtern Indians. According to Tavernier, they fold their arms in the act of adoration, and carry their hands to their forehead: almoſt the ſame thing is practiſed in ſeveral other places of the Indies. They will oftentimes carry their hand to their head out of reſpect, and even throw themſelves on the ground in the fervency of their devotions. This they likewiſe practiſed in the Eaſt, in honour of their ſovereigns: yet, in former times, the devout women did not confine their religious worſhip to that alone; but untied their hair too,

[c] The veneration which the Indian Mahometans have for the chief of the Faquirs, who are a ſort of Monks, is carried ſo far, as to put off their ſhoes when they proſtrate themſelves at their feet in order to kiſs them. Does it not ſeem as reaſonable for the Roman Catholic Chriſtians to take off their ſhoes likewiſe, when they go to kiſs the feet of the Pope, who is the Vicar of Jeſus Chriſt, and the viſible Head of the Church?

[d] We muſt likewiſe inform the reader, that the German prieſts obſerved this cuſtom of going barefoot, out of reſpect to their idols; that the Celtæ and the Gauls did the ſame; and that the Chriſtians of Æthiopia enter their churches barefooted. Nor muſt we omit obſerving, that it was a cuſtom amongſt the Romans to go barefoot at funeral obſequies.

[e] Theſe are Suetonius's words. Si mane ſibi calceus perperam ac ſiniſter pro dextero induceretur, ut dirum abhorrebat.

[f] Gradus in fronte conſtituendi ſunt, ut ſemper ſint impares; namque cum dextro pede primus gradus aſcenditur, idem in ſummo templo primus erit ponendus.

[g] Durant.

[h] This is likewiſe greatly recommended to Chriſtians: but can we give that name to a fantaſtical mixture of pride and humility, which is often met with in Chriſtian aſſemblies? It is a fine ſight, that of ſeeing people humbling themſelves before God, and valuing themſelves leſs than the vileſt inſects, with all the ſplendid attendants of vanity: A paſtor ſpeaking to the people in all the pomp of worldly eloquence; all the while ſcrupulouſly exact in flattering the ears of his audience, whilſt he is ſpeaking to God in their behalf; ſhewing his wit in the confeſſion of their ſins and his own, and making a ſhew of his parts to the ſupreme Being, whilſt he is acknowledging himſelf guilty before him. It is a pleaſant ſcene afterwards to ſee theſe paſtors and auditors going out prodigiouſly ſatisfied with each other, and ſo pleaſed with what has paſt, that they are already thinking of improving the ſame, and rendering it ſtill more magnificent and agreable on the firſt occaſion.

too, and prayed in that manner. Indeed they did not put this in practice, unleſs they were to implore the aſſiſtance of the Deity upon ſome extraordinary occaſion; and this we now ſee amongſt Chriſtians alſo. I muſt confeſs, that this kind of humiliation has in it ſomething very moving, nor can we ſee women with their hair hanging looſe about them, drowned in tears, and lamenting and beating their breaſts, without being ſenſibly affected with it. St. Gregory of Tours gives us a pathetic deſcription of a devout proceſſion of penitents of both ſexes in his time, who, in order to humble themſelves in a ſolemn manner before God, put on robes of mourning, and covered with hair-cloth, their hair being ſpread upon their ſhoulders, in this condition followed the tunick of St. Vincent, and walked forward in hopes of ſharing the divine mercy, under the protection of that wonderful garment, in which they had placed their confidence. We have ſtill preſerved this religious cuſtom, and carry the venerable relics of the ſaints at the head of our proceſſions, that their merit may procure us the grace of God, and avert his judgments.

We juſt now ſaid, that the people of the Eaſt threw themſelves on the ground in the heat of their devotion. The ancient Romans likewiſe uſed to proſtrate themſelves before the ſtatues of their Gods, and at as great a diſtance too, as they could perceive them at entering their temple. We are informed, that certain monks of a monaſtery near Cairo, never lay themſelves down to ſleep, till they have firſt thrown themſelves with their faces to the ground one hundred and fifty times, and kiſſed the duſt of the pavement. This too is practiſed by the Turks, who fall down on their faces, whenever they hear an Iman pronounce the name of God with a loud voice. The ancient Egyptians uſed, after the ſame manner, to proſtrate themſelves before Anubis, whereof you may ſee a repreſentation, in a medal at the end of this Diſſertation. The different poſtures which are uſed by the Turks, when they pray unto God, [1] have ſomething particular in them, and which we ſhould certainly think a very ridiculous behaviour in our churches. You may make a judgment of them by the following figures. Nothing can be more ſhocking ſhocking (according to my notion) than to ſee a devotee, who, under the pretence of rendering himſelf agreable to God, addreſſes himſelf to him in an affected poſture. The Banjans proſtrate themſelves before their idols with their hands on their head. [k] As for bowing the body, or even only the head, it hath ever been practiſed in religious worſhip, as being a natural ſign of the reſpect which we owe unto God. The Roman Catholics, the Grecians, and ſome other Chriſtian communities, have preſerved this cuſtom in their religious worſhip. The reformed Churches think it ſufficient to take off their hats, when the preacher hath ended his ſermon, and when they are at prayers, they pray in a ſtanding poſture, without bowing their body. [l] Some of them indeed pray on their knees, the Roman Catholics obſerve to be ſtanding at the time of their ſinging Deus in adjutorium, Magnificat, &c. The people are on their knees during prayers; they ſtand up at the Goſpel, and ſit at the ſermon, &c. The Proteſtants of the Church of England kneel when they are at prayers. The rule of all Chriſtian Churches is, that every one ſhould be modeſt and obſerve a decency, during the time appointed for divine ſervice. The ſermon ſhould be heard with reſpect, and the prayers with fervency; both which the paſtor ought to exhort them to. The moſt devout of the modern Jews wrap the veil they wear on their head round their neck during their being at the ſynagogue, in order to hearken to the prayers with the greater attention. [m] To ſee with how much devotion they perform this duty towards God, read the treatiſe of R. Leo of Modena, concerning their cuſtoms and ceremonies. The Litanies ſung by the Roman Catholics and Greeks ought likewiſe to be included amongſt cuſtoms, in religious worſhip, that deſerve our notice; as being deſigned to excite an holy compunction in the hearts of the faithful, and chiefly of the meaner ſort of people. As to the counting of prayers by beads, it is a cuſtom which, in ſome meaſure, eaſes the memory of devout perſons, who are under an obligation of offering up to God a ſet number of prayers, as an atonement for their ſins. This cuſtom is more ancient and univerſal than perhaps we imagine: for it appears, that the ancient [n] Romans had a kind of chaplet in uſe among them; and we refer you to four medals which will juſtify that cuſtom.

[1] When an Iman pronounces the name of Mahomet, the Turks bow down their heads upon their knees, to expreſs the veneration they have for the Founder of their religion.

As to bending the knee in adoration of the Deity, this too is one of the moſt ancient cuſtoms in the world; yet I cannot help obſerving to my reader, that St. Baſil diſcovered a type both of ſin and grace in genuflection. We bend the knee, ſaith he, and this repreſenteth our fall by ſin; we afterwards riſe again, and this typifies unto us the divine mercy that raiſes us again; and gives us aſſurance to look up to heaven. The juſtneſs of this type will ſtrengthen the well diſpoſed mind againſt the depraved notions of thoſe who would deſtroy all types, to advance reaſon in their room. But let us go on with our enquiry into the cuſtoms eſtabliſhed in religious worſhip. In former times, during divine worſhip, the face was turned towards the Eaſt. Many paſſages from the ancients might be brought in proof of this: but it will be ſufficient barely to name ſuch authors in whoſe [o] works they are to be found. It is a rule laid down by Vitruvius, that a temple ſhould be diſpoſed in ſuch manner, [p] that thoſe who go to ſacrifice at the altar, may turn themſelves to the Eaſt. The altar too (according to Vitruvius) ought to be turned towards that part of [k] The people of Japan, Tartary, China, &c. likewiſe proſtrate themſelves before their idols: but this has ever been ſo general a cuſtom in the Eaſt, that it would be needleſs to enlarge on it.

[l] The moſt devout bow their body, or their head, or hold their hands before their faces; but at the ſame time we ſhall ſee many of them who pray in a careleſs indolent poſture, and being ſeated on a downy cuſhion, with great patience expect the end of the longeſt prayer, after a comfortable nap during the whole ſermon. It is with juſt reaſon, that the Jews blame thoſe who pray to God ſitting. Nemo niſi ſtans rite orat, ſaith Maimonides. We may ſee, by the accounts of travellers, that the idolaters of the Eaſt and Weſt Indies worſhip, or pray unto their idols, ſtanding at leaſt. Nevertheleſs, the ancients uſed to ſit at certain religious ceremonies; as for inſtance, at the ſacrifices and feaſts of funerals; called Parentalia, &c. The idolaters of the iſland of Hiſpaniola, after a great many ceremonies in honour of their idols, uſed to ſeat themſelves croſs-legged in a ring, and pray with their faces towards their idols.

[m] The ancient Jews, by four different words, expreſſed four kinds of ſubmiſſions to God. 1. The act of proſtration. 2. The bowing of the head. 3. The ſinking of the head and half the body even with their knees. 4. Kneeling.

[n] See Du Choul. The Mahometans, as well as Eaſt-Indians, and ancient inhabitants of Mexico, according to ſome accounts, uſe beads at their prayers.

[o] Apuleius in his Metamorph. Ovid. Lib. IV. de Faſtis. Valerius Flaccus in Argonaut.

[p] Ædes ſacræ deorum immortalium ad regiones, quas ſpectare debent, ſic erunt conſtituendæ, ut -------- ædis ſignum, quod erit in cellâ collocatum, ſpectet ad veſpertinam cœli regionem, ut, qui adierint ad aram immolantes, aut ſacrificia facientes, ſpectent ad partem cœli orientis, & ſimulacrum quod erit in æde, & ita vota ſuſcipientes contueantur ædem & orientem cœli. Vitruv.

of

of the world. Probably the origin of this cuſtom [q] is owing to the early idolatry of men who worſhiped the Sun; and this idolatry obtains to this day, [r] amongſt the Eaſt Indians and Americans. The primitive Chriſtians borrowed the cuſtom of turning themſelves to the Eaſt from the Heathens; which is plainly proved by a paſſage of St. Auſtin [s]. This cuſtom is come down to us, and ſtill obſerved amongſt the Roman Catholics: but the ancient Jews, on the contrary, turned themſelves towards the Weſt; that they might not imitate the idolatry of the Heathens. When they were on a journey, or obliged to live without the walls of Jeruſalem, they uſed to pray with their faces turned towards that city. As for the Mahometans, they turn themſelves towards the South, upon account of the city of Mecca, where the ſepulchre of Mahomet ſtands.

Nature hath endued mankind with particular motions, whereby he expreſſes, almoſt without any deſign, the afflictions of his ſoul, and the diſquiets of his mind. Such, for example, is the uſe he puts his hands to, when he begs a favour of God, on any preſſing occaſion, or endeavours to excite compaſſion in an enemy who oppreſſeth him. It would therefore, methinks, be very abſurd, to place thoſe motions in the number of ceremonies, ſince they are, as it were, born with men; and yet they have thought fit to blend even theſe motions, ſimple as they are, and expreſſive of nature, with ceremonies. Therefore, when the ancient Heathens prayed to their infernal Deities, they extended their hands downwards; when to the Gods of the ſea, they ſtretched out their hands towards the Ocean. The Turks croſs their hands over their ſtomachs. The Chriſtians intermix or claſp them together: ſome diſtinguiſh themſelves in their prayers by the ſign of the croſs. Thoſe who are fond of quotations might here find an opportunity of ſhewing their learning, both from the ancients and moderns. We ſhall leave ſo fruitful a field to them, and only obſerve, that there is nothing to be objected againſt theſe cuſtoms, when they only contribute to fixing the mind during the time of prayer: yet there are (even amongſt Chriſtians) an infinite number of devotees, who look upon outward ſigns as the moſt eſſential part of religious worſhip: and many recommend joining of hands, or making the ſign of the croſs to their families, without one word concerning that attention, and raiſing the mind towards God required in prayer.

The altar hath ever been one of the principal inſtruments of divine worſhip, therefore it muſt not be omitted. In former times it was the place appointed for prayers and vows, and for taking of oaths too, [t] and then the hands were laid upon it. It was a cuſtom amongſt the ancient Jews to confeſs their ſins unto God at the altar; which was performed in the following manner. They laid their hands between the horns of the offering, as near the altar as poſſible, where it was going to be ſacrificed, and in this poſture they repented them of ſuch ſins, as they acknowledged themſelves guilty of. Great part of the Chriſtian Church hath preſerved the altar for the ceremonies of ſacred worſhip. There maſs is ſaid, God is worſhiped, the ſaints are invoked, there too their relics are expoſed. We ſhall not enter into the particulars of all the different ceremonies practiſed at the altars of the Roman Catholics; but only deſire the reader to obſerve, that by an abuſe, which is a diſhonour to Chriſtianity, they [u] are, in Italy, made ſanctuaries for the moſt

[q] The Sun was formerly worſhiped by moſt nations in the world. And that day of the week which we have dedicated to God, the ancients dedicated to the Sun, whoſe name it has ſtill retained among the Germans and Engliſh.

[r] The Sun is worſhiped in the kingdoms of Bengal, Guzarat, Decan, &c. Theſe people, when they pray or waſh themſelves, turn their faces towards the riſing Sun. In Canada, Florida, Peru, &c. the Sun is acknowledged as a Deity; as likewiſe amongſt the idolaters of Africa.

[s] Cum ad orationem ſtamus, ſaith St. Auſtin, vertimur ad orientem, ut admoneatur animus ad naturam excelſiorem ſe convertere, &c.

[t] The Roman Catholics take oaths at the altar, either by laying their hand on the goſpel, or receiving the communion from the hands of the prieſt, &c.

[u] Not only the altars, but likewiſe the convents. A murderer, a fraudulent bankrupt, and ſuch other raſcals fly boldly thither for protection; and ſhould a magiſtrate have the aſſurance to oppoſe it, he would be deemed guilty of ſacrilege, which the inhabitants of thoſe ſacred places, and the miniſters of the altar, would not let paſs unpuniſhed. The prayers of the monk, the ſermons of the prieſt, and the excommunications of the biſhop, would ever attend him: ſo that people are often obliged to ſee the majeſty of God, and that of his ſaints and their relics prophaned by malefactors, whom the charity of prieſts and monks protect, in oppoſition to the ſecular power.

moſt wicked and hardned criminals. It is true indeed, that this is a very ancient cuſtom, and that the Jews and Heathens countenanced it; but the Jews tolerated it only in caſe of crimes committed by chance and undeſignedly; and methinks the reſpect due to the Chriſtian religion ſhould require that all evil cuſtoms, introduced by the ancient Heathens, be entirely aboliſhed. To this reſpect paid to the altars, the idolaters added that [w] of embracing the doors of temples, and the ſtatues of their Deities; weeping and lamenting at their feet, tearing their hair, and promiſing to lead a better life; and after theſe ceremonies, thoſe likewiſe of careſſing their Deities, [x] embracing their knees, of putting ſmall crowns on their heads, and of offering unto them flowers and fruit. And theſe are cuſtoms [y] which ſome of the Chriſtians have appropriated to God, and to the ſaints, and chiefly to the bleſſed Virgin; in many places in Europe they put a crown on her head, offer up flowers and fruit to her, in order to render her more propitious to them, and honour her with the nobleſt names and moſt illuſtrious titles; and in their prayers to her uſe the moſt endearing expreſſions. The Grecians made an addition to the cuſtoms which we have juſt mentioned; they took branches, with wool twiſted round them, and touched the knees of the Deities whom they implored in their wants with them; and when there appeared any probability of being favourably heard, the ſuppliant took the liberty to be more familiar, and with his palm-branch touched the right hand, and even the chin and cheeks of the God to whom he offered up his petition. The Chriſtians have likewiſe, in ſome manner, retained this cuſtom in honour of the ſaints, and it is well known with what benefit many, amongſt the faithful, have touched the images of ſaints with handkerchiefs, linen cloths, &c. and how many bleſſings have been poured down on families, for having kiſſed theſe images in the heat of their devotion.

It was likewiſe the cuſtom amongſt the ancients to turn themſelves round when they worſhiped the Gods, and Pythagoras ſeems to recommend it in his ſymbols. By this turning round, ſaith Plutarch: ſome will have his deſign to have been to imitate the motion of the earth: But, adds he again, I am rather of opinion, that this precept is grounded on this notion, that as all temples are built fronting the Eaſt, the people, who entered them, turned their backs to the Sun, and conſequently, in order to face the Sun, were obliged to make a half turn to the right; and then, in order to place themſelves before the Deity, they completed the round in offering up their prayer. M. Dacier, who tranſlated theſe words from Plutarch, [z] inſiſts, that by this manner of turning, Pythagoras intended to give us a precept for adoring the immenſity of God, which fills the univerſe. Strange madneſs of human imagination! ever pleaſing itſelf with ſtifling that ſimplicity which the Father of light and truth requires of us, under the practice of obſcure and myſterious ceremonies. However that may be, the [a] Romans uſed to turn to the right, and the [b] Gauls, on the contrary, to the left. The Eaſt-Indians obſerve the ſame ceremony. They turn to the right in walking round the ſtatues of their Deities; and at every round are obliged to proſtrate themſelves with their face to the ground. The ancient Jews alſo practiſed this way of turning to the right. They went up on the right ſide of the altar, and came down on the left, as it appears by a precept of the Miſchna. In this cuſtom of turning round, the ancient Perſians had in view the immenſity of God, who incompaſſes, and comprehends all things in himſelf. This ceremony is ſtill obſerved in the maſs, and, without doubt, contributes much to the merit and majeſty of that auguſt ſacrifice. For it raiſes devotion in the heart, it turns a Chriſtian from ſenſual to ſpiritual things, by taking him off from the vanity of exterior [w] V. Tit. Liv. 1. Decade Lib. II. & Virg. Æneid. Lib. II. Plaut. in Rud. Stat. Sylv. Lib. V. Lucan. Lib. III.

[x] They choſe the ſofteſt words, and the moſt tender and paſſionate expreſſions; and took care never to utter any thing, but what they thought of equal weight with thoſe things which they knew ought to be moſt agreable to the Gods. A very little pains will furniſh the reader with a great number of inſtances of this kind, from the writings of the Heathens.

[y] Vide in the Life of St. Gertrude, printed at Lovain in 1637. remarkable inſtances of divers miraculous cures, &c. which St. Gertrude wrought in favour of thoſe devotees, who honoured her after this manner. There is no ſaint, who, in proportion to his power, hath not ſhewed a great regard to thoſe who ſerved him in this way; and this kind of devotion was ever attended with ſome extraordinary favour.

[z] Dac. in the Life of Pythag. [a] Plutarch. in the Life of Camillus, Plaut. Curc. [b] Plin. Hiſt. Nat.

exterior ceremonies, and from the delight ariſing from the pomp and pageantry of religion, as if they were really religion itſelf.

Were we to enlarge on the ſubject of religious kiſſes, on the hymns, and ſacred dances performed in honour of the Deity, three capital points in ceremonious religion; we might find matter for a complete Diſſertation upon them only. We ſhall therefore ſay as little as poſſible upon them. [c] It was uſual to kiſs the hands, and often the very mouths of the Gods. [d] It was likewiſe the cuſtom to kiſs their feet and knees: in ſhort, it was a part of devotion [e] to kiſs the doors of temples, the pillars and poſts of the gates, [f] the ground of any foreign country when a man firſt ſet his foot on it; and indeed, what would they not have kiſſed? Since it was ſufficient, for the extravagance of ſuperſtition to find out any whimſical object, to perſuade mankind to place their faith in it. It is from a ſuperſtition of this nature, that the Turks, and other Mahometans, who go in pilgrimage to Mecca, [g] kiſs the black ſtone which they call Hagiar Alaſuad, and the four corners of the Kaba. The modern idolaters in the Eaſt-Indies and America [h] obſerve likewiſe, that part of the religious worſhip, which the Roman Catholics have conſecrated in honour of the croſs, and relics of ſaints; the Catholics have likewiſe conſecrated it on occaſions of ceremony; as in the aſperſion of holy water, the prieſt kiſſes the Aſpergillum or ſprinkling-ſtick, and at the proceſſion on Palm-Sunday, the deacon kiſſes the palm which he preſents to [i] the prieſt. But it is needleſs to enlarge upon this ſubject, or to be particular as to the time and manner of the prieſt's kiſſing the altar, of the kiſſes beſtowed on the incenſory, patin, and chalice, the white ſtole, the prieſt's hand, &c. [k] When people could not conveniently kiſs the object of their worſhip, they uſed to kiſs their own hand, and ſo throw up kiſſes to the Deities. This act of devotion is common amongſt the Spaniards, and Portugueſe, who croſs their thumb with the fore finger, and kiſs their hand at making the ſign of the croſs, in honour of any image that is at a diſtance from them.

As to muſic in religious worſhip, it has been in uſe from the remoteſt ages, and the cuſtom is very general. Perhaps there is ſcarce a nation in the world who do not think it their duty, in their way, to ſing the praiſes of the ſupreme Being; and it appears that the ancient Heathens were of opinion, that [l] muſic appeaſed the anger of their Deities, and brought them down upon earth: for which reaſon the pagan devotion was generally attended with concerts of voices and inſtruments. The firſt muſicians, ſuch as Linus, Orpheus, &c. were looked upon as a kind of prophets, and probably were at the ſame time prieſts, phyſicians, and magicians, like unto the prieſts of the Eaſt-Indians, the Lamas of the Tartars; and the Bonzes of Japan. However that may be, the Romans, the Grecians, and the Egyptians, uſed conſtantly to have muſic at all their religious exerciſes, as at ſacrifices and rejoicings in [m] honour of the Deities. [n] Nonſenſe was always an ingredient in the praiſes which compoſed their hymns; and the panegyrick of the God was often a compound of obſcenity and impertinence. It was the cuſtom to turn into verſe, and ſing devoutly whatever was moſt incoherent and fabulous in the legends of their Gods and heroes, who were the ſaints of the Heathens: for the unity of a ſupreme Being was a point

[c] V. Cicer. 5. in Verrem. Lucret. Lib. I. Tacit. Ann. Lib. XV. &c. [d] Apul. Milet. 11. Prudent.
[e] Tibul. Lib. I. Eleg. 5. Arnob. Lib. I. Virgil. Æneid. Lib. II. &c. [f] Homer. in Odyſſ. N.

[g] The Mahometans pay a great veneration to this ſtone, calling the pearl of paradiſe, which, by its brightneſs, formerly gave light to all the territory of Mecca; but the ſins of mankind have made it black, as they ſay. Jacub Ben Sidi tells us, that Mahomet ordered the people to confeſs their ſins before this ſtone, and there to weep, lament, and implore the divine mercy, &c. The Kaba, or ſquare chapel, was built by the angels, according to the tradition of the Muſulmans; but was carried by them up to the ſixth heaven, to be preſerved from the waters of the deluge. The Kaba which they have at preſent, was made by Abraham, to whom God ſent the ſhadow of the firſt for a model from heaven. Vide the little book, intitled, Reſpublica Arabiæ.

[h] Vide The Hiſtory of the conqueſt of Mexico, the Hiſtory of the Yncas's, the Voyages of Dellon, Tavernier, &c. to the Eaſt-Indies.

[i] Vide the Rituals. [k] Vide Apul. Minut. Felix. Job. chap. 31. [l] Vide Horace Od. Lib. I. Od. 36. Et thure & fidibus juvat placare ------ Cuſtodes Numidæ Deos. Arnob. Vos æris tinnitibus & Tibiarum Sonis ------ Perſuaſum habetis Deos delectari, &c.

[m] On this occaſion, they uſed different ſorts of inſtruments, according to the Deities which they worſhiped.

[n] Vide Proofs of this in the hymns which are aſcribed to Homer, and Orpheus. Vide likewiſe the hymns of Callimachus, and the chorus's of the ancient tragic authors. Ariſtophanes in Acharnan. ſpeaks of Phallic verſes, ſung in honour of the Phallus, or membrum virile, which was carried in pomp in the Bacchanalia. Thoſe verſes and figure muſt needs inſpire a pleaſant devotion.

a point generally granted by them, and all the other Deities were looked upon as the ſubſtitutes of that ſovereign Being. Theſe Deities had, each of them, their ſeveral diſtricts and employments; and the praiſes ſung in honour of them, generally turned upon their capacity in the diſcharge of their office, the favours they conferred on their votaries, their miracles, &c. The Jews and Chriſtians have likewiſe conſecrated muſic to religion. The former, on this occaſion, made uſe of trumpets, drums, and cymbals, joined with the voices of the Levites and people. As for the muſic of the primitive Chriſtians, nothing could be more plain and ſimple. They ſung the praiſes of God with a loud voice, after the manner of the reformed [o] Proteſtants of our days. There are more ceremonies, more art, and more variety in the muſic of the Roman Catholics: but it ſometimes may be lawful to mix the agreable and uſeful together in devotion; provided thoſe graces be not carried to ſuch an exceſs as to ſtifle devotion, if I may be allowed the expreſſion.

[p] The modern Heathens, even the moſt ſavage amongſt them, have hymns and muſic, both vocal and inſtrumental, in honour of their Deities. The greateſt part of the religion of the Americans conſiſts in dances and ſongs, whereby they think they pacify their Deities, and pay a true reſpect to them. This is an ancient opinion, which in the earlieſt ages drew the profoundeſt veneration of the whole world upon poets and muſicians; for in thoſe days they were looked upon as the interpreters of the Gods, and as inſpired perſons; but religion was never the better for it. The Jewiſh prophets were animated by the ſound of inſtruments. We have an inſtance of this in [q] Eliſha. [r] Saul, who was troubled with an evil ſpirit, found relief by the charms of muſic. Not to inſiſt upon there being any thing ſupernatural or divine in theſe two examples, I will venture to ſay, that the ancient Heathens have endeavoured to perform the ſame things by the help of muſic; and if we are to believe all that antiquity has handed down to us concerning the [s] extraordinary cures of Xenocrates, Thales, Empedocles, &c. of the ſtrong Enthuſiaſm of the Heathen ſoothſayers, their prophecies, and oracles; they have ſtill done much greater things: but truth generally comes down to us with a large addition of falſhood.

Tho' it be natural enough for dancing to ſucceed muſic, yet would it be very difficult to find any tolerable relation between that and religion. The Deity, it is true, requires a chearfulneſs in his ſervice; yet this chearfulneſs ought to conſiſt in freedom of mind, and ſuch an inward ſatisfaction as is the companion and conſequence of that freedom. The greateſt part of mankind has no notion of this kind of chearfulneſs, and imagine that a real chearfulneſs conſiſts in ſinging and dancing. It was this notion, which made the idolaters introduce ſenſual pleaſures into religious worſhip: nor are we to be ſurpriſed to ſee debauchery, and the ſacred myſteries of religion thus go hand in hand together; it being the natural conſequence of a religion, wherein the Deity was ſuppoſed to be made for mankind. [t] They uſed to dance round the altars and ſtatues; [u] and invented that ſort of dances for the ſake of the Gods; nay, and every year ſent a ſet number in pilgrimage to the place conſecrated to ſome particular Deity, [x] in order to perform dances in honour of him. Men and women, young and old, bore a part in theſe dances. At Rome the Salii, who were the prieſts of Mars, themſelves led up theſe brawls round the altars of the Deity, all the while devoutly ſinging his praiſes. In ſhort, theſe dances were ſo much the taſte of the ancient Pagans, that the poets made no difficulty to

[o] In many places the ſinging of Pſalms is accompanied with organs.

[p] We are not here to take the word muſic, in its genuine ſignification: for moſt of theſe idolatrous people rather make a hideous noiſe than ſing. They know nothing at all of the harmony, or charms of muſic.

[q] 2 Book of Kings, chap. iv. ỳ. 15.

[r] It is probable, that this evil ſpirit was a violent fit of melancholy madneſs, which poſſibly muſic might calm. Aſclepiades, a Greek phyſician, cured phrenſies this way.

[s] Zenocrates healed ſome kind of mad people by the ſound of inſtruments. Thales of Crete cured the plague by playing on the guitar. Empedocles began to ſing in order to appeaſe the anger of a furious young fellow. The verſes of Tyrteus the poet revived the drooping courage of the Lacedemonians. Moſt of the oracles were given in verſe, in the midſt of tranſports and fits of Enthuſiaſm.

[t] Vide Callimachus in his hymns, and Euripides in his Iphig.

[u] V. Ariſtoph. in his Frogs, &c.

[x] Vide Callim. hymno in Delum.

to make the Gods themſelves [y] dance. The idolaters of the Eaſt and Weſt-Indies, together with the greateſt part of all other idolaters, have the ſame eſteem for this cuſtom. The beſt part of the worſhip they pay to their Deities, conſiſts in dances; nay, ſome of them never ceaſe dancing and leaping till they drop down giddy and raging mad. The inhabitants of Braſil, and other barbarous people compel, thoſe priſoners, whom they are going to ſacrifice, to ſing and dance; which is the higheſt inſtance of inhumanity.

Amongſt the Chriſtians, it is with much difficulty, that they avoid this indecent and licentious cuſtom of dancing, in their religious worſhip. They who have travelled in Europe, can teſtify what abuſes are committed in ſome countries, in the celebration of Chriſtian feſtivals. Neither dances, maſquerades, nor the groſſeſt ſtage drolleries are omitted. The feſtivals of the Sacrament, and paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt, are not free from them; and on theſe occaſions is often ſeen an odd jumble of penitents and buffoons, who, undoubtedly, pretend to do honour to the religion by this extravagant mixture.

We muſt not forget the crowns put on the heads of their Gods; this too was an inſtance of a very ſingular veneration. Particularly it was their cuſtom, to crown the houſehold Gods, the Genii, the tutelary or guardian Gods, and thoſe whom they invoked on any emergent occaſion: but indeed the ancient Heathens, in general, had no Deity whom they did not crown out of a principle of religion. They adorned them with flowers, and offered up perfumes and incenſe to them; and all this was, as we may ſay, a continuation of religious cajolery due to their goodneſs. The ſcrupulous notions which men imbibe, from a principle of religion, are of a vaſt extent. As all the actions of life were depending upon ſome Deity, it was but reaſon not to neglect the famous Priapus, the God of gardens, a Deity ſo venerable for ſome particular faculties. Ladies of the leaſt turn to gallantry, offered crowns and flowers to him: but the moſt zealous of them uſed to [z] crown a very remarkable part of his body. As that part was the particular object of their gallantry, they, in gratitude, thought it their duty to make it likewiſe the object of their devotion. Yet not only the Deities were crowned; but the prieſts, who ſacrificed, were crowned, as well as the Deities, and very often the people too attended the religious ſolemnities with crowns on their heads. The crowns which were offered unto the Gods, [a] were commonly hung up at the doors of their temples, but farther it was equally the cuſtom, both amongſt the Greeks [b] and Romans, to crown thoſe Deities, whoſe favour they were in hopes of obtaining. by ſo ſolemn an acknowledgment of their ſuperiority. Not that the bare circumſtance of crowning them was ſufficient, in order entirely to gain their good will; it was likewiſe neceſſary to ſet apart the fineſt trees ſtanding on their juriſdiction, that were more peculiarly theirs; and from thence to take the materials of thoſe crowns. Thus the Oak was appropriated to Jupiter, the Myrtle to Venus, the Laurel to Apollo, the Pine to Cybele, the Poplar to Hercules, Wheat Ears to Ceres, the Olive to Minerva, Reeds to all river Gods, Fruit to Pomona, the Alder, to Pan, and Hay to poor Vertumnus, whoſe power and merit were not worth any thing better. But as the leaſt of the Deities had a vote in the aſſembly of the Gods, it was therefore neceſſary that he too ſhould be crowned, to the end, that when it was his turn to ſpeak, he might not ſay any thing contrary to the intereſt of the ſuppliant, who might have been unpolite enough to forget him.

[y] Heſiod. in his Theogony, makes the muſes dance; Horace does the ſame by Venus, the graces and nymphs. And in the poets, Diana, and all the rural Deities are often ſaid to dance.

[z] In Liberi ſacris honeſta matrona pudenda virilia coronabat, ſpectante multitudine. St. Aug. de Civit. Lib. VII. C. 21. Another ſaith, Quæ ſi contigerit fruenda nobis, totam cum paribus Priape noſtris, cingemus tibi men -- coronis. A Priapus crowned in this manner, muſt have been a delightful ſight. I know not whether the miniſters of the Heathen religion found their account in it, poſſibly it may be imagined our age can afford no ſuch example, but it is a miſtake: ſome years ago, in a certain town of France, the women, grieved at not being able to produce any proofs of their fruitfulneſs, went and offered up their prayers to St. Rene; but their prayers alone not proving efficacious enough, they began to fall on him with their teeth, and their devotion was ſo great, that they had ſtript the ſaint of his virility, and were going on in this extravagant manner, to demoliſh him, had not the biſhop of the place prevented them, by wiſely putting a ſtop to their zeal.

[a] Flava Ceres tibi ſit noſtro de rure Corona
Spicea, quæ templi pendeat ante fores.

[b] Vide Tibull. Plat. Πολιτ. Sophocl. Oedip. &c.

4.

him. As for the illuſtrious Priapus, it is well known, that his head was not the part, whereon the crown was placed; his extraordinary talents were ſuppoſed to lie elſewhere, and there it was his intention to have the marks of veneration, due to him, placed. But it was [c] the buſineſs of the ladies to perform this holy office.

We ſhall not enlarge any farther upon theſe crowns, which have been the ſubject of [d] ſeveral learned treatiſes. We had much rather do juſtice to the piety of the Roman Catholics, who have purified what the Pagan ſuperſtition had prophaned. [e] The images of the immortal Saints have not uſurped theſe crowns, like the wretched Deities of the Pagans: they have only aſſumed to themſelves what was always their right, and what the vicar of Jeſus Chriſt hath allotted them to the end of the world, by the canonization of ſuch whom thoſe holy images repreſent.

To conclude, when the Heathens had the good fortune of being ſaved from a ſhipwreck or any other danger, or of recovering from a deſperate fit of ſickneſs, [f] they ſet up a picture in the temple of a Deity, whom they had applied to in their extremity, and who, they believed had delivered them from it. They likewiſe hung up the garments, which they wore during the time of danger, in the temples. To this day, pictures are conſecrated to the Saints in ſome part of their churches, and are monuments of the miracles wrought by them; and theſe offerings are ſometimes made even in gold and ſilver, &c. repreſenting thoſe parts of the human body, upon which it is ſuppoſed that theſe Saints have performed ſome miraculous operation. This article we touch but ſlightly, believing it ſufficient; neither ſhall we particularly enquire into ſome private devotions of Chriſtian invention. We ſhall therefore only hint at the [g] efficacy of Ave-Maria's; the devotion and virtue of chaplets, beads bleſſed by the Pope, and indulgences; the merit of the roſary, ſcapulary and Agnus Dei's; [h] and the miraculous power belonging to the Saints of the church. All theſe things are looked upon [i] as eſſential parts of religious worſhip; and we refer the readers to the folio treatiſes of Bollandus, Papebroke, Ribadeneyra, and all thoſe who have wrote the Lives of the Saints; of Molanus, who wrote the Hiſtory of Holy Images; of the author of a book intituled, Sacrarum Ceremoniarum Eccleſiæ Romanæ Libri III. and of an infinite number of other learned men, whoſe labours are of great uſe and conſolation to devout perſons.

We hope this ſketch will be ſufficient in a Diſſertation intended as an introduction to the Religious ceremonies of all the nations of the world. It was abſolutely neceſſary the reader ſhould have ſome idea of an infinite number of different ſorts of devotion, which have been practiſed in all ages, conſecrated in all religions, and in ſhort, conſidered as the only refuge of devout perſons, who find in themſelves neither the courage nor virtue neceſſary to ſimplicity in the worſhip of the ſupreme Being.

It is a hard taſk for thoſe who are raw and unacquainted with the world, to act naturally, and live amongſt men, in a plain and eaſy manner. With all their ceremonies, they find it a difficult matter to perſuade the world to look upon them as perſons of an agreable converſation. Such people we beg leave to compare to thoſe who adhere to all religious cuſtoms, as the eſſential part of religion. It is a pain to them to addreſs themſelves to God without formality, and to pray without ceremony: and if it ſhould be their misfortune not to get over this outward oſtentation, it might probably be a difficult matter to conſider them as perſons of a ſolid piety; with this reflexion we ſhall conclude.

[c] See the foregoing page. Honeſta Matrona pudenda virilia coronabat, ſpectante multitudine. See St. Auſtin de Civitate Dei.

[d] Vide Paſchalius de Coronis, and other learned authors.

[e] The firſt ſaints of Chriſtianity are commonly crowned with rays, which repreſent the glory they enjoy in infinite light, and the brightneſs of their knowledge, which places them near the ſupreme Being. St. Dominic, St. Francis, and all the ſaints, whom the piety of the modern Chriſtians has placed in the ſame rank as the twelve Apoſtles, and the Fathers of the Church, bear likewiſe theſe glorious tokens, which their virtue gained them.

[f] Horat. ----- me tabula Sacer,
Votiva paries indicat uvida
Suſpendiſſe potenti
Veſtimenta maris Deo.

There are an infinite number of paſſages to this purpoſe.

[g] According to Father Sepp, in his account of Paraguay, even the ſerpents themſelves are kept in awe by the vertue of Ave Marias.

[h] There hath been ſomething mentioned hereof in this Diſſertation.

[i] This is true, yet with ſome reſtrictions.

An EXPLANATION of ſeveral ancient MONUMENTS, referred to in the Diſſertation upon religious worſhip, and deſcribed in this plate.

I.

THE FIRST FIGURE in the plate repreſents a temple of Pomona in a wood, or more properly an orchard. Pomona was a nymph and afterwards became the wife of Vertumnus, who, amongſt the Latins, was looked upon as the God of Autumn. It was likewiſe their opinion, that he was concerned in all contracts relating to buying and ſelling, and that he determined or altered the minds of men in civil affairs. Vertumnus made his addreſſes to Pomona in ſeveral forms; yet none of them could make any impreſſion on the nymph, till he aſſumed that of a young man. He ſhould have done ſo at firſt, which would have ſpared him a deal of trouble and courtſhip.

Pomona, as wife of Vertumnus, was acknowledged as a Goddeſs. She preſided over gardens, or rather, it may be ſaid, that her juriſdiction extended only over ſome particular fruits, which were offered up to her in ſacrifice. She was repreſented young, in the ſame manner as Hebe, and with her head crowned with flowers. Her prieſt, amongſt the Romans, was called Flamen Pomonalis, and his dignity was proportionable to the power of the Goddeſs; for he was ranked amongſt the moſt inferior prieſts, known by the name of Flamen.

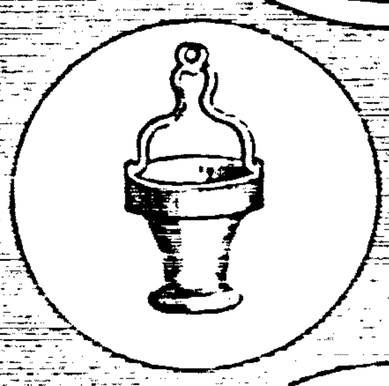
II.

The different kind of inſtruments uſed in ASPERSIONS, and are repreſented in the medals placed next the temple of Pomona, were uſed in luſtrations. It would be going too far out of our way, barely to mention a part of what relates to ſo curious a ſubject, which Lomeierus has learnedly treated in a large volume in quarto. Perſons of all kinds were not indifferently admitted to perform this religious office. For as luſtration was a ceremony practiſed, in ſome meaſure, as an atonement for the ſins of the people, of a family, or of ſome particular perſon, in order to redeem his ſoul from divine vengeance, and deliver him from calamities, &c. it was neceſſary, that whoever performed the luſtration, ſhould bear ſuch a character, with reſpect to his birth, age, profeſſion and behaviour, as became that function. [k] Prieſts, Conſuls, Virgins and young boys, were often employed in this ceremony. And families who had an hereditary right to any degree of prieſthood, were likewiſe preferred whenever a luſtration was required. This ceremony was obſerved, when a perſon was admitted to any religious myſtery; and before he could approach the Gods, or aſſiſt at any ſacrifice; it was alſo practiſed after ominous dreams, and funeral ſervices, in order to cleanſe from ſome impurities of body, and chiefly from thoſe, which were generally thought to attend the private converſations of matrimony.

Luſtrations were performed either by the means of water, fire, or air. And they always uſed a water that was naturally conſecrated, as rivers and ſprings, which were eſteemed ſuch, becauſe the Gods, Nymphs and Genii, choſe them for their abode. When theſe waters were not to be had, it was uſual to conſecrate common water; [l] and the cuſtom was, to keep large veſſels filled with water at the doors of the temples of the Gods, wherein burning firebrands, taken from the altar in time of ſacrifice, had been quenched. The people uſed to beſprinkle themſelves with this water; but commonly the prieſts of the Deities were the miniſters of this holy aſperſion.

Luſtrations by air, were performed by a fan with which they fanned or diſperſed the air for the purification of ſouls. Oſcillation, or moving the body, by ſwinging to and fro in the air, was alſo a kind of purification.



Luſtration,

[k] Vide Lomeierus in his treatiſe de Luſtrationibus, cap. 13.

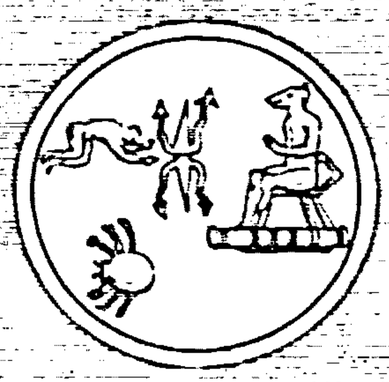
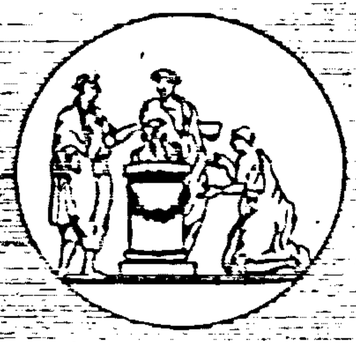
Lomeierus de Luſtrationibus, cap. 17.

Plate





Plate

Plate

Plate

Luſtration, or purification by fire, was very frequently uſed amongſt the ancient Pagans. In order to perform this, the force of fire, or the ſmoke only, was uſed. It is probable, that tryals by fire ordeal, and hot irons, which were very much in vogue in the church about the eighth century, took their riſe from this way of luſtration by fire. The luſtration performed by ſmoke was made with perfumes. On this occaſion, they uſed ſulphur, roſin, incenſe, odoriferous herbs, laurel, &c. At nuptial luſtrations they employed both fire and water; and the ſame was often practiſed at funerals. Honey was ſometimes uſed inſtead of water; and for the expiation of murder, they often mixed blood with the water. They alſo made uſe of eggs, becauſe they were of opinion, that an abſtract of the four elements was contained in them. In ſhort, it would be to no purpoſe to enlarge upon luſtrations performed with human blood, or with fruits, or upon others which were made with [m] dogs, cats, and other animals; their lives were ſaved, but they continued loaded with the ſins of the people. Lomeierus, in his treatiſe, gives us an account of ſeveral other luſtrations for men, cities, armies, fields, fruits, and animals. To which curious work we ſhall refer the reader.

The aſperſions performed with branches of laurel, olive, or roſemary, with a ſprig of hyſſop, or any other inſtrument made for that purpoſe, may all be looked upon as luſtrations.

After theſe ceremonies of luſtration and aſperſion, the people eſteemed themſelves new men, and reckoned themſelves in the number of the bleſſed. All expiatory ceremonies ended with an ilicet, which is not very different from the uſual benedictions of our clergy, when they diſmiſs the people. Ilicet may be interpreted by, depart in peace, or pax vobis.

III.

THE SACRIFICE OF HERCULES, repreſented in one of theſe medals, obliges us to ſay ſomething relating to that ceremony. This Deity condeſcended himſelf to teach two illuſtrious families the manner wherein he would be ſerved. Theſe two families, who held the firſt rank amongſt the Aborigines, a people of Italy, bore the name of Potitians and Pinarians. It was the cuſtom, when they ſacrificed to Hercules, to offer up a young bullock which had never bore yoke. The Potitians had the pre-eminence over the Pinarians, becauſe the latter came too late one day, when they had been ſolemnly invited to the ſacrifice. When a ſacrifice was offered up to him at the altar called Ara Maxima, [n] the whole aſſembly was obliged to remain bare-headed, in order to ſhew the greater reſpect to Hercules; for as this Deity was repreſented with his head covered, it would have been a moſt indecent action in a man to take the liberty of covering himſelf in his preſence, or after his example.

The Romans uſed to repair to the Ara Maxima, in order to confirm, by oath, their promiſes, and contracts.

IV.

PIETY, who preſides over ſacrifices, and generally over all religious worſhip, was of neceſſity to be veiled, ſince covering the head, is only in order to fix the eye on the object of devotion, and to prevent all diſtractions of mind. The manner in which Piety is here veiled before an altar, is almoſt the ſame as that of the Roman ladies, when they paid their worſhip to the Gods. The Emperor Severus is likewiſe veiled in that medal, where he is repreſented holding an olive branch.

It was neceſſary, that they who ſacrificed to Public Faith, who is here repreſented in a [o] medal holding the horn of plenty in her hand, with a crown of laurel on her head, ſhould be covered with a white veil. This veil was an emblem of that candor and purity, the inſeparable attendants of faith; as the horn of plenty is the emblem of proſperity, which is generally the conſequence of this virtue.

It

[m] Id. Ibid. cap. 23.

[n] Vide Serv. in Virg. Æneid. Lib. III.

[o] Apud Roſin. in Antiquit.

V.

It was alſo the cuſtom ſometimes to make uſe of the Phrygian cap, here repreſented in the laſt of the four medals, that are under the temple of Pomona. [p] Nevertheleſs, we are not ſure that this cap was always made after the ſame manner. It is believed, that it covered a part of the cheeks, and was tied under the chin.

VI.

Anubis, before whom a man appears proſtrate, was an Egyptian Deity. He was generally drawn under the form, or with the head of a dog, and his very name ſeems to inſinuate what he was; for Anubis, according to ſome learned men, ſignifies one that barks, and is originally a Hebrew word. Hanubé, in Hebrew, is a participle to which is joined the aſpirate H. This Egyptian Deity, and Mercury, are thought to be the ſame: by the figure of a dog, was repreſented the ſagacity of that Deity, for no animal has ſo much of it as a Dog; which makes it a very appoſite emblem. The God of robbers, merchants, and publick miniſters had need of a perfect ſagacity, for a proper diſcharge of their adminiſtration.

Anubis in ſome medals, is repreſented holding a Caduceus in his hand.

The four other medals, which follow that of Anubis, repreſent the different poſtures of ſuppliants.

AN

[p] Vide Soler. de Pileo.

AN HISTORICAL

DISSERTATION

CONCERNING THE

CEREMONIES and CUSTOMS

Which are obſerved at this time amongſt the JEWS.

Tranſlated from the Italian of LEO OF MODENA, a Rabbi of Venice.

By Monſieur DE SIMONVILLE.

PREFACE.

AN Edition of the firſt part of this Work, compoſed by Leo of Modena, a Rabbi of Venice, was ſome time ſince publiſhed at the requeſt of ſome Chriſtians, who were deſirous of informing themſelves in the Cuſtoms and Ceremonies of the Jews of our time. Signor Gaſſarelli had that edition printed at Paris in the year 1637, and ſent it to the Author, who finding a great number of errors in it, corrected them, and reſolved to give the Public an edition more correct than the former; which he accordingly did the following year at Venice. This laſt edition is the ground-work of this tranſlation; or to ſpeak more properly, it is made up out of both the editions: there is indeed a conſiderable difference between the two impreſſions; for the Author ſtruck many things out of the firſt, nay, ſometimes whole chapters, and added others, which had never appeared before. And indeed, the ſecond impreſſion is what we have almoſt every where followed, as the more exact and correct; and the firſt we have only had recourſe to, for the Tranſlation of thoſe paſſages of Scripture, quoted in this ſecond edition according to the Vulgate; it being very abſurd to make a Rabbi ſubmit to the deciſion of the Council of Trent.

Buxtorf was the firſt who gave Chriſtians any light into the Cuſtoms and Ceremonies of the modern Jews; that Treatiſe of his, which he intitled, The Synagogue of the Jews, was printed in the German, which was his mother-tongue, in the year 1603, and met with ſo kind a reception, even from the Learned, that it was immediately tranſlated into Latin, and publiſhed the very next year. Buxtorf's ſon, not being well ſatisfied with the Latin verſion of his Father's work, made a new one, wherein he made great alterations, and ſent it to the preſs in the year 1641; and about twenty years after, reprinted it conſiderably enlarged. He inſerted therein part of the work of Leo of Modena, and we may ſee, that in order to avoid that confuſion, which before appeared throughout his whole work, by including too many particulars under one head, he has endeavoured to follow Leo's method. But had he abridged his book, inſtead of enlarging it, he had much more obliged the Public. This was the caſe of our Rabbi, who touched upon nothing but matters on all ſides approved, without deviating from his ſubject, by digreſſions or diſputes, and much leſs by trifling particularities; equally avoiding to eſtabliſh any Doctrines whatſoever, or to entertain the Public with Allegories and Abſurdities.

Therefore, whatever is of any uſe, or value, in Buxtorf's large volume, will be found in this ſmall one, wherein there is nothing ſuperfluous, the Author never wandring from his ſubject, or ſaying more than is expreſly neceſſary for making it intelligible. And indeed, a clear head to digeſt matters, is generally allowed the diſtinguiſhing character of the Italians, as the ſtrength of other nations is ſaid to lie chiefly in their back to bear the weight weight of them *. Yet, however ſmall that Work may be, it contains a great many things which Buxtorf has not touched upon.

As our Rabbi's only aim was to be intelligible, he was content with ſpeaking in a plain, ſuccinct manner; a ſwelling ſtile being unneceſſary in a narration. And in order to go beyond him in perſpicuity, we have often broke one of his periods into two or three, tho' in other places we have lengthened ſome of them, to give a greater light to his ſentiments. His ſtile is ſometimes ſo careleſs, that, were a man unacquainted with the ſubject which he treats, he would hardly underſtand him. This obliged me to reduce ſeveral of his periods into their natural order, by taking the thought of the Author, and dropping his expreſſion; for he ſpeaks of his own religion in the ſtile of an Italian.

The Chriſtian Religion taking its riſe from Judaiſm, I make no doubt but the reading of this ſmall Treatiſe will be of great uſe towards the underſtanding of the New Teſtament, by reaſon of its conformity and connexion with the Old. They who compoſed the Books of the New Teſtament being Jews, it is impoſſible to explain it any other way, than by recurring to Judaiſm; and indeed, part of our Ceremonies have been taken from thence. Our Doctrines are almoſt the ſame, and as to Morality, the Commandments are common to us both. Even Purgatory, which the Proteſtants will not admit, is explained at the end of this Work, together with the belief of Heaven, Hell, the Reſurrection, and the day of Judgment.

The Chriſtian Religion has likewiſe this in common with Judaiſm, that each of them is founded upon the Holy Scriptures, the Traditions of their Fathers, upon the Cuſtoms and received Inſtitutions, which, in our Religion, we call, Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline. Beſides, as our Doctors often expreſs themſelves, this is of Apoſtolical Tradition; ſo likewiſe do the Rabbis often ſay, halaca le Moſce mi Sinaï: this explanation was delivered to Moſes upon mount Sinai. Indeed, under the word tradition, they often give us ſtrange chimeras; but this is not ſo much the fault of tradition, as of thoſe who are the depoſitaries of it.

As to the prayers of the Jews, they are very pious, and are moſt of them formed upon one model; tho' compoſed at different times, and in different places. They are hardly any thing more than a ſeries of paſſages out of the Scriptures, containing the praiſes of God; and it is very probable, that Eſdras was the author of a great part of that Formulary, and that the Doctors who ſucceeded him, only made ſome additions to it. In the infancy of the Church, our Fathers uſed to ſing the praiſes of God, to repeat the Pſalms, and read the Holy Scriptures at their Aſſemblies; that is, thoſe paſſages of the Law and the Prophets which were proper for each day, as it is ſtill the cuſtom amongſt the modern Jews. The Church afterwards introduced the reading of the Goſpel in the room of the Law of Moſes; tho', at the ſame time, ſhe has always retained ſome paſſages of the Old Teſtament, and chiefly of the Pſalms, as appears from the beginning of the maſs, which is only an abridgment of the Pſalms; theſe perhaps at firſt were repeated thro', and are now ſhortned only for the ſake of convenience and diſpatch.

Beſides, it is plain, that the firſt Fathers of the Church paid the ſame reſpect to Saturday as to Sunday. And indeed we find, that the ancient Canons made them equal, by equally prohibiting faſts on either of thoſe two days. Celebrate (ſays the book of ancient Conſtitutions, that goes under the name of Clement) both Saturday and Sunday as Feſtivals; the one being conſecrated to the memory of the Creation, and the other to that of the Reſurrection. And indeed both theſe days were long held in great veneration, and among the primitive Chriſtians both Saturday and Sunday were days of aſſembling; nay, ſome footſteps of that Cuſtom ſtill appear on Eaſter-Eve, in our Churches, where ſeveral Chapters both of the Law and of the Prophets are read.

We cannot ſufficiently admire the modeſt and ſerious behaviour of the Jews, when they are going to their morning prayers; for it is not lawful for them to treat of any buſineſs, nor ſo much much as to make a viſit, or ſalute any one, till they have firſt diſcharged that duty towards God. This cuſtom is of very great antiquity amongſt the Jews, and may ſerve to explain thoſe words of Chriſt to his Diſciples, upon ſending them to preach the Goſpel. And ſalute no man by the way, Luke x. ver. 4.

* The Author's meaning here is, that whilſt the Italians excel in inventing, digeſting, and making every ſubject their own, ſo other nations only excel in ſtrength of memory; thereby crowding it with a number of particulars of very little uſe to them, for want of that happy genius which is the propriety of the Italians.

Upon carefully examining into the order of the Jewiſh prayers, and the rubric of them, we ſhall find, that they differ very little from ours. they have their prayers for morning, noon, and night; and tho' they do not uſe the terms of double, ſemidouble, or ſingle offices, they nevertheleſs have offices of different kinds, as well ordinary as extraordinary, in the ſame manner as we have; they likewiſe have their days of commemoration, as will be ſeen when we come to ſpeak of their feſtivals. In ſhort, as we have our ſervices after the manner of the Roman, Gallican, and other Churches, ſo have they theirs according to that of the Spaniſh, German, Italian, &c. ſynagogues.

The deſcription our Author gives of the Tephilin, which they uſed to wear in time of prayer, ſhews what the Phylacteries mentioned in the Goſpel were, and which moſt of our interpreters have explained aukwardly enough. Amongſt others, I know not what M. Amelote, one of the Fathers of the Oratory, in his French notes upon the verſion of the New Teſtament means, by ſaying, that the Tephilin and Taled were Jewiſh ornaments, which the maſter of the houſe uſed to put on in order to eat the Paſcal lamb in a more grand and ſolemn manner. For he is here led into an error by Genebrard, who to maintain this opinion of his, quotes Orah Haiim; tho', in the very place he quotes out of that book, there is no mention made of any holy ornaments, that were neceſſary to the celebration of the Paſſover; but only of a four cornered garment, which the Jews were obliged to wear at that time, but to avoid ridicule have now laid aſide, only wearing under their clothes, a ſquare cloth with four taſſels or ſtrings unravelled at the ends.

Upon this falſe notion, many have ſet up the uſe of conſecrated ornaments at the celebration of the holy myſteries; and ſome pretend ſtill to ſhew us the Chaſubles of ſeveral of the Apoſtles. But the wiſeſt and moſt learned writers believe nothing of it; and I am ſurpriſed that Cardinal Bona ſhould ſo paſſionately inveigh againſt Nicholas Alemannius, for inſiſting that the Apoſtles never had the uſe of conſecrated veſtments; and for treating every thing that has been ſaid on this ſubject as imaginary and ridiculous. The Cardinal grounds his aſſertion upon the writings of Baronius, de Monchi, Stapleton, du Sauſſay, and others; who are of opinion, that Jeſus Chriſt, at the laſt ſupper, wore a conſecrated garment ſuitable to that ceremony. Whereas Cardinal Bona ſays no more, than that it was the Apoſtles only, who celebrated the myſteries in ceremonial veſtments; but that as to Jeſus Chriſt, when he inſtituted this Sacrament, he had no other than his ordinary clothes on. Yet neither of theſe diſputants has any foundation for what he ſays, and Walafrid Strabo was much in the right when he ſaid, That in the primitive Church, they uſed to celebrate maſs in the clothes they generally wore; not for the reaſon which Joſeph le Vicomte gives us, viz. that in thoſe days the Church was not able to bear the expence of clothes that were rich and ſuitable to thoſe ceremonies: but becauſe the firſt Chriſtians, who for the greateſt part had been Jews, uſed to celebrate the myſteries at their aſſemblies, in the ſame clothes which they were uſed to wear in their ſynagogues. I am likewiſe of opinion, that the capes which our prieſts now uſe, were taken from the Jewiſh cloak, or the Roman gown, or perhaps from both. For it is probable, that both the Roman and the Jew, after having quitted their reſpective religions for Chriſtianity, ſtill retained their uſual dreſs. To which we may add, that maſs was anciently ſaid in capes, and that the Eaſtern prieſts, at this very time, chuſe to officiate in them rather than in our Chaſubles: but as they were found more cumberſome, they are now made ſhorter, and opened at the ſides, which is much more convenient, and leſs expenſive. In the ſame manner, the albe is taken from the Roman tunic, which being made ſhorter, and wider, is now become our ſurplice. In thoſe days then we ſee, there was no difference between the ceremonial veſtments, and the common dreſs, time alone having produced this difference; the laity having been perpetually changing their faſhions, tho' the clergy have always retained their ancient manner of dreſs. But as at the celebration of the myſteries of Religion, all people put on their beſt clothes; and the Church, by degrees, acquired immenſe riches, and built magnificent temples; ſo in proceſs of time it has happened, that rich and coſtly veſtments have been introduced.

The vaſt number of bleſſings and thankſgivings, which the Jews uſed at the beginning and end of all their actions, is alſo a great help to us, for the better underſtanding of ſeveral paſſages of St. Paul, wherein he ſpeaks of the praiſes and thankſgivings, which we ought continually to give unto God. [a] For, ſays he, if I by grace be a partaker, why am I evil ſpoken of, for that for which I give thanks? Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatſoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. I do not think, that thoſe benedictions and particular thankſgivings, which we find in the tenth chapter of the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, concerning the Euchariſt, are here ſpoken of; tho' they are perfectly well explained by the benedictions and thankſgivings, which the Jews obſerve at the celebration of their Paſſover. There are many other things of this nature, which cannot be well explained, but by the manners and cuſtoms of the Jews.

In the Jewiſh formulary, they have a prayer which they uſe in public for thoſe Princes, whoſe ſubjects they are; containing ſeveral articles, and at the end of every one, the people ſay Amen. In order to expreſs their zeal on this occaſion, they generally, during this prayer, embrace the book of the Law. It appears, nevertheleſs, that whatever they aſk of God in behalf of their Princes, is with a view only to that particular advantage, which is from thence to accrue to the Jewiſh nation. May the King of Kings through his mercy preſerve our Prince, may he incline him to do good to all the Iſraelites, and under his reign may Judah be preſerved, may Iſrael remain in ſafety, and may the Redeemer come in Sion. I know not whether we may not conclude from this prayer, that St. Paul, who was ſo well acquainted with the cuſtoms of the ſynagogue, followed this precedent, when he taught the primitive Chriſtians to pray unto God, for the Kings and Princes of the world; but be that as it will, we cannot diſapprove the great number of benedictions, which the Jews obſerve on ſo many different occaſions; ſince the Chriſtian Churches, both of the Eaſt and Weſt, have almoſt as many in their Prayer-books and Rituals. And indeed benedictions of all kinds are ever good and laudable, when performed in honour of God, and without ſuperſtition.

I ſay, without ſuperſtition, becauſe the Jews are charged with making a wrong uſe of the name of God and his angels in ſome of their benedictions, in hopes of perſuading them by a kind of magic, to be more familiar and favourable to them, upon an opinion, that the patriarchs had angels, who were as maſters and guardians to them. But our Rabbi is ſo far from holding any ſuch opinion, that, agreably to the Bible and the Talmud, he here condemns all magic. We may ſee too, by the fifth article of their belief, that they forbid the worſhip of angels, when they ſay, That a man ought neither to worſhip them, nor ſerve them as mediators, or interceſſors. The Jews, however, pay great honour and reſpect to the angels, and here we find by our Author, that formerly when they went to eaſe nature in any place where they might be expoſed to danger, they recommended themſelves to their guardian angels. And this invocation is yet to be ſeen in their books, expreſſed as follows: [b] May ye be honoured, ye venerable and bleſſed miniſters of God, preſerve me, preſerve me, help me, help me. There are, even at this time, devout Jews, who pray after that manner, grounded on this paſſage: [c] For he ſhall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways. In ſhort, the belief of guardian angels was an eſtabliſhed opinion in the ſynagogue in the time of our Lord; as it is now in the Church.

It muſt be allowed however, that there are ſome Jews, who prophane the name of God and his angels, and turn it to an ill purpoſe, in order to perform things out of

[a] 1 Cor. x. ℣. 30, 31. [b] Orah. Haiim. n. 3. [c] Pſal. xci. ℣. 11.

of the courſe of nature, diſguiſing this evil practice, under the pretence of its being authoriſed by the [d] Cabala; that the world may be induced to believe, that in this they only follow the tradition of their Fathers. And indeed under this notion of tradition, they impoſe upon the more ignorant amongſt themſelves, and even many Chriſtians, who ſuffer themſelves to be ſeduced by theſe cabaliſtical imaginations, upon which the whole magic art is grounded. But what is ſtill more ſurpriſing is, that Reuchlin, one of the moſt learned men of the laſt age, ſhould have amuſed himſelf with writing on ſo trifling a ſubject; the extravagances even of the Count de Gabalis, which lately appeared, were not diſagreably received: ſo true it is, that mankind has a natural propenſity to ſuperſtition. The Cabala, in my opinion, takes its riſe from the philoſophy of Pythagoras and Plato, which ſome of the Jews have jumbled together with Judaiſm, ſcattering throughout the whole an infinite number of ſtrange notions and idle dreams, the children of idleneſs and ſuperſtition; as appears by the books of Adam, Enoch, Salomon, and ſeveral others, to which neither our Author, nor any Jew, or Chriſtian of good ſenſe, give the leaſt credit.

The Jews are not only remarkably devout, but charitable too; and methinks, in their compaſſion to the poor, we may ſee a reſemblance of the charity of the primitive Chriſtians to their brethren: by ſo doing, the latter, at that time, only imitated what was then, and ſtill is practiſed in the ſynagogues; whereas, on the contrary, we have ſcarce retained the remembrance of it. I ſhall not here mention their diſcipline, which is perfectly regular, as will appear in the chapter concerning their excommunication and repentance; but ſhall juſt obſerve by the way, that the Jews endeavour not only to make atonement to God by an inward, but alſo by an outward contrition and repentance. And for this purpoſe, they have their penitential books, as they formerly had in the Church; and perhaps in imitation of them. Sure it is, that they inflict ſevere puniſhments on ſuch as are guilty of heinous crimes: but this is privately put in execution; ſuch things not being allowed by thoſe Princes, whoſe ſubjects they are. But indeed, as to all other things, the Jews muſt be owned to give much into external ceremonies; becauſe (ſay they) all external actions are deſigned for no other end than to regulate and direct the internal actions of the mind. So that by the waſhing of their hands, they intend the purifying their conſcience: as by an abſtinence from unclean meats, they propoſe the avoiding of crimes, and look upon all precepts of external behaviour, no farther than as they are to be applied to the internal. However, it is not my deſign hereby to approve the exceſſive ſtrictneſs of ſome ſuperſtitious Jews, as to riſe for ſix days together before the Sun, the better to praiſe God, or to lie in bed longer on the Sabbath, to ſhew the greater reſpect to that precept, that commands us to reſt on it; all which appear to me as ſo many vicious affectations. I am likewiſe for diſmiſſing thoſe anatomiſts, who are ſo ſcrupulous, that a man can neither eat a pigeon, nor a chicken without their approbation: as if the prick of a pin, or any other ſcarce diſtinguiſhable infirmity, or even the ſuſpicion of them, in an animal, were a ſufficient reaſon for abſtaining to eat of it.

We ſhall, as we go along, farther ſee the manner of general and particular confeſſions; how they aſk and obtain forgiveneſs of each other by a mutual reconciliation, in the ſame manner as it is preſcribed to us in the Goſpel. But one thing that deſerves our attention and obſervation amongſt the Jews is, that, leſt they ſhould have been guilty of any failure during the courſe of the whole year, they have a day conſecrated on purpoſe to atone for ſuch failure. I ſhall not mention their care in examining their conſcience in the time of ſickneſs, nor their zeal in changing their name, when under any apprehenſion of death. But I have obſerved, that in this point, as well as others, they act with a ſtrong ſuperſtition; when they think themſelves beyond hopes of recovery, they give themſelves the names of Haiim, life, Raphael, the cure of God, and others of the ſame kind; and if they eſcape, they, during the remainder of their lives, retain them, aſcribing their health to ſuch change of name.

Their

[d] Tradition.

Their preachers do not ſo much affect eloquence, as a profound knowledge in the Scriptures, and deciſions of their Rabbi's. They apply themſelves particularly to the ſtudy of a ſort of books, which they call, Sceelot Veteſcuvot, that is, queſtions and anſwers; which bear a great reſemblance to thoſe of our Caſuiſts. As every one amongſt them is at liberty to preach, we may eaſily imagine, how Chriſt and his Apoſtles came to preach in the ſynagogues; and how we ought to underſtand what is ſaid by St. Luke, That Jeſus Chriſt was found in the temple, ſitting in the midſt of the Doctors, both hearing them and asking them queſtions: not that he went thither with intent to ſet up for an Inſtructor of thoſe Doctors, but placed himſelf amongſt ſuch as were ſcholars, in order to be inſtructed himſelf, which is ſtill practiſed by the Jews; and for this reaſon their ſynagogues are commonly called ſchools. We might here add many other particulars; but we muſt remember, that this is a Preface only, and not a Book.

To my reader, I ſhall leave all ſuch reflections as may juſtly be applied to what our Author ſays concerning marriages, divorces, and degrees of relation; which give light into ſeveral paſſages of the New Teſtament. I ſhall ſay no more upon this ſubject myſelf, than that the Jews ſtrictly enjoin marriage to every one, without exception. Tho' indeed, Rabbi Moſes is of the ſame opinion with ſeveral others, that a man engaged in the ſtudy of the Law, may take a longer time than what is preſcribed to others, provided he live chaſtly during that time: but otherwiſe, he is of St. Paul's opinion, that it is better to marry than burn. The ſame thing is now practiſed by the Eaſtern Church; and the people themſelves, who are naturally jealous, require all prieſts either to marry, or become monks; the very Maronite [e] prieſts themſelves, tho' they acknowledge the biſhop of Rome, are obliged to marry, that is to ſay, before they are made prieſts. And this is the reaſon why their biſhops are unwilling to receive them into orders, before they are married, unleſs (as I ſaid before) they will retire into monaſteries.

As to the ſupplement concerning the modern Karaites and Samaritans hereto added, as theſe two ſects are little known in Europe, I was obliged to mention them, that our Author might not appear in any manner defective. The Rabbiniſt Jews, that is, ſuch as follow the doctrine and traditions of the Talmud, charge them with many errors, either out of malice or ignorance; in order therefore to diſcover the truth of this, I have been obliged to have recourſe to the Karaites and Samaritans themſelves. The Karaite whom I have produced is one of the greateſt learning and reputation of his ſect. His treatiſe, now preſerved in manuſcript in the library of the Fathers of the Oratory at Paris, was brought over from Conſtantinople, with a conſiderable number of other Jewiſh books, by M. de Sancy, on his return from his embaſſy. As to the Samaritans, I have taken what relates to them from two letters, which the ſynagogues of [f] Sichem and Egypt wrote to Joſeph Scaliger, concerning their ceremonies and cuſtoms. I was not able to come at the Original, but only a Tranſlation made by M. Morin, one of the Fathers of the Oratory, at the requeſt of M. de Peyreſe, which I found written in his own hand, as I was turning over the Samaritan Pentateuch, a manuſcript now in the ſame library.

By the way it muſt be obſerved, that Leo of Modena, in giving us the Hebrew words in our characters, has done a thing unuſual to his nation. At firſt I had ſome thoughts of keeping up to the orthography of our tongue, but afterwards reſolved to follow his, imagining my readers would be pleaſed to ſee in what manner the Italian Jews pronounce Hebrew. Nevertheleſs, I have ſomewhat deviated from it in this Preface, and in the Supplement, in order to come as near as I could to the French way of pronouncing Hebrew; tho' I am perſuaded very few people will take notice of it. At the ſame time it is pleaſant enough to ſee a Frenchman write Hebrew after the German manner; becauſe he has made uſe of Buxtorf's dictionary, or of ſome of the Hebrew grammars written by Germans. This different manner of writing the Hebrew words, proceeds from the different ways of pronouncing them: but were it agreed how they ſhould be pronounced, there would would ſtill remain a difficulty how to agree upon the way of writing them: becauſe the French, Germans, Spaniards, and Italians pronounce the ſame letters after a different manner: and are each of them obliged often to uſe ſeveral different characters to expreſs one ſingle Hebrew letter right. The authors of the Greek verſion of the Bible, who are commonly known under the name of the Septuagint, differ in this from St. Jerom; and all the ancient ways of writing Hebrew words in another tongue, entirely differs from the modern. This is what the critics ought to take notice of, when they print any old books wherein Hebrew words written in Greek or Latin characters are found, ſuch as the works of St. Jerom, St. Epiphanius, and ſome other of the Fathers.

[e] The Jeſuite Dandini in his account of the Maronites.

[f] Napoleuſe.

However, I cannot agree with our Author, who believes the Italians pronounce the Hebrew better than any other nation. The Spaniards, moſt of whom are now in the Levant, are not at all inferior to them in this point; and I rather am of opinion, that they excel them and all other people, not only as to pronunciation, but alſo as to the manner of writing. For their manuſcripts are incomparably more beautiful than thoſe of the Italians, Germans, or Levantines. And indeed, they have applied themſelves to the ſtudy of the grammar and language of Holy Writ, much more than any other nation. When they were driven out of Spain, they took refuge in the dominions of the Turk and ſettled chiefly at Conſtantinople, Salonica, and thereabouts; where, to this day, they are remarkable for the gravity which they obſerve in their ceremonies. It is true, they do not ſpeak pure Spaniſh: but corrupt as it is, they make uſe of a Spaniſh tranſlation of the Bible. Their ſynagogues in all parts are more neat, and have more of ornament and magnificence than thoſe of other people. They are very nice, in having the Pentateuch and the other books, which they uſe in their ſynagogues, fairly copied. This I obſerve by the way, in favour of thoſe who make collections of Hebrew manuſcripts. When I prefer the Spaniſh Jews to all others, I only ſpeak of thoſe who are generally known, not being able to ſay any thing of thoſe who live in the farthermoſt parts of Aſia, of whom we have no knowledge at all. But I am ſurpriſed, that ſo many Jeſuits and other Monks, as travel into thoſe countries, have not had the curioſity to give us ſome information concerning the Jews there, or to bring us ſome of their Bibles, or let us know in what manner their traditions differ from the common traditions and cuſtoms of other Jews.

I might here ſay ſomething as to our French Jews, who formerly exceeded all other Jews in riches, till they were baniſhed France; from whence we have the proverb, that he is as rich as a Jew. For it is certain, that in thoſe days they poſſeſſed the fineſt houſes and eſtates in the neighbourhood of Paris. The exorbitant uſuries which they were allowed to take, under pretence of its being beneficial to the public, had rendered them ſo powerful, that at laſt there was a neceſſity to deſtroy them. Yet they were not ſo much taken up with their trade, but that they likewiſe applied themſelves to the ſtudy of their laws and ceremonies. And as the Spaniſh Jews in thoſe days excelled in the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, ſo thoſe of France excelled in the knowledge of the Talmud. Paris, at that time, was the Athens of the Jews, and they repaired thither from all parts in order to be inſtructed. R. Solomon Iſaaki, the great interpreter of the Talmud, was a Frenchman; and I do not doubt but he publicly read leſſons upon it at Paris. He was born at Troyes in Champagne, and has left us very good commentaries upon the Bible, which the Jews commonly prefer to all others. I am ſenſible, many have affirmed, that this Rabbi was of Lunel in Languedoc, for this reaſon; that the name of Jarhi in Hebrew, which is the name he is generally known by, ſignifies of Lunel: but in my opinion they are miſtaken; becauſe the true name of this Jew is not Jarhi, as moſt of our writers call him, but Itſahaki, or the Son of Iſaac, as the Jews ſtile him. It is true, that R. Benjamin, in his travels, mentions one R. Solomon of Lunel, whom the Emperor Conſtantine pretends, is our celebrated R. Solomon; but he does not conſider, that he was dead before that time. This I obſerve occaſionally, in behalf of our French Jews, who have acquired a great reputation, for having excelled all others in the knowledge of the Talmud; and chiefly thoſe of Champagne, who made it their particular ſtudy. They are the authors of the beſt part of what we call Toſaphot, additions to, or explanations of the Talmud, as may be ſeen in the Treatiſe, entitled, Juhaſin or of Families, and in the writings of Tſemah David. Moſt of theſe Jews were of Rheims or of Troyes, and there publicly taught the Talmud to thoſe of their own nation.

I might likewiſe add, that though the manuſcript Spaniſh Bibles are preferred to all others, yet thoſe written by Jews of Languedoc, and of the frontiers of Spain, are not at all inferior to them. The city of Narbonne is the chief place in the world, where the Jews have moſtly applied themſelves to tranſcribe good copies of the Bible, and we ought in this ſenſe to take the meaning of theſe words of R. Benjamin at the beginning of his Travels. Narbonne is the miſtreſs of the Law, and from thence the Law hath iſſued, in order to diffuſe itſelf over all the parts of the world. It has great Doctors, who are Princes, whereof the chief is R. Kalonimos the ſon of Naſçi or moſt potent Prince, R. Theodore of bleſſed memory, who is of the family of David, and poſſeſſes inheritances and lands, which the Lords of that country have granted him. M. de Sancy, during his embaſſy at the Porte, made ſtrict enquiry after the beſt manuſcripts of the Bible, that could be found in the Levant. The moſt correct of all thoſe which he brought over with him, is a copy written for this Naſçi, or Prince Theodore, whom the Jew Benjamin has juſt now been mentioning; moſt of them are preſerved in the library of the Fathers of the Oratory at Paris. This manuſcript, as it appears at the end of it, was written in the year 967, which anſwers to our year 1207. I have alſo ſeen very fine manuſcripts of the Bible copied at Perpignan, which however are not to be compared to thoſe of Narbonne. That copy of the Bible, ſo famous amongſt the Jews, which bears the title of Hillel, and was the ſtandard by which they corrected their books, as an original, comes from the kingdom of Leon in Spain, and not from Lyons in France, as ſome writers have written. At the ſame time we muſt obſerve, that it is not of ſuch antiquity as the Jews pretend, as I could eaſily prove by the different leſſons of that manuſcript. To conclude, I am of opinion it would be a very difficult matter now a-days to find manuſcripts of the Bible of above 600 years old, and we ought to ſuſpect ſuch as quote any of a more ancient date. And were there any ſuch to be found, they are corrected according to the Maſſora; as I myſelf have ſeen many of them, that were not altogether of ſo old a date, and yet were reformed upon the corrections of the Maſſora. From the time that the Jews have preferred the Maſſora to antiquity, the ancient manuſcripts have not been ſo much valued, becauſe they have not been thought ſo very correct. I might here give the reader ſeveral reflections concerning theſe manuſcripts, in order to diſtinguiſh the good from the bad; but this would carry me too far, and I fear I have already gone beyond the limits of a preface to a ſmall book. I ſhall therefore only add, that this ſecond edition is more correct than the firſt, in which the perſon, who was deſired to reviſe the ſheets, had made ſeveral additions and alterations of his own, without the knowledge of the Author, who did not perceive it till a long time after, upon reading over the Work.

A N

AN HISTORICAL

DISSERTATION

CONCERNING THE

CEREMONIES and CUSTOMS

Which are at this time obſerved amongſt the JEWS.

PART I.

CHAP. I.

The origin of the Jewiſh Ceremonies and Cuſtoms; into how many parts they are divided, and in what they differ.

ALL ſuch cuſtoms as are at this day obſerved among the Jews, are not of equal authority, nor obſerved by all of them after the ſame manner; wherefore they are divided into three orders, whereof the firſt comprehends the precepts of the written law; that is to ſay, thoſe which are contained in the five books of Moſes. Theſe precepts conſiſt of 248 affirmatives, and 365 negatives, which in all make 613, and are called Mizvoth hatorah, which ſignifies, commandments of the law.

The ſecond order relates to the oral law, or that delivered by word of mouth; and this name is given to thoſe comments, that the Rabbi's and Doctors have in their time made upon the Pentateuch, and to an infinite number of conſtitutions and rules, which they call Mizvoth Rabanan, or commandments of the Doctors; and were collected into a large volume, called the Talmud, whereof we ſhall ſpeak particularly in the ſecond chapter of the ſecond part of this Diſſertation.

The third order comprehends thoſe things which cuſtom hath authorized in different times and places, or which have been newly introduced: and for this reaſon they call them Minhaghim, or Cuſtoms. Of theſe three orders then, the firſt and ſecond, which contain the written law by Moſes, and the oral law, handed down from their doctors by tradition, are generally received by all the Jews, though diſperſed throughout all the parts of the world, without any conſiderable difference among them in that reſpect, as appears by the Talmud. But as for the third, which relates to cuſtoms only, they differ very much from each other; becauſe that the Jews, diſperſed into different countries, have fallen into the names and manners of thoſe places; they therefore vary from each other in this third order only; and chiefly, the Eaſtern, German, and Italian nations. In the Eaſtern, I likewiſe include thoſe of the Morea, Greece, Barbary, and thoſe who are called [a] Spaniſh; and under the name of Germans, I include the Jews of Bohemia, Moravia, Poland, Muſcovy, and others. According to this order and diſtinction, therefore, I ſhall endeavour to ſhew, as far as poſſible, in this Diſſertation, what is founded as well upon their written law, as upon the precepts of their wiſe men, and upon bare cuſtoms: but I muſt beforehand acquaint the reader, that wherever he ſhall find any difference amongſt the Jews, it relates only to their cuſtoms, to which they will not, without great difficulty, believe that the name of precept can properly be given: tho' they hold the precepts of the firſt and ſecond order as eſſential.

CHAP. II.

Of their Houſes.

I. IF any Jew builds a houſe, he muſt leave a part of it unfiniſhed, agreable to the precepts of the Rabbi's on this ſubject; and this he muſt do in remembrance that Jeruſalem and the temple now lie deſolate, and he is to expreſs how much he is grieved for the ſame by theſe words of Pſalm cxxxvii. If I forget thee, O Jeruſalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. Or at leaſt, he that builds muſt leave a cubit ſquare of the wall free from lime, whereon he muſt write in great letters thoſe words of the Pſalm already mentioned, or theſe words, Zecher la Chorban, which ſignifies, a memorial of deſolation.

II. At the doors of houſes, chambers, and all frequented places, it is the cuſtom to fix up againſt the wall, at the right hand of the door going in, a kind of reed, or any other hollow pipe, with a parchment in it prepared on purpoſe, whereon are written, with great exactneſs, theſe words out of Deuteronomy: [b] Hear, O Iſrael, the Lord our God is one Lord, and ſo on as far as theſe other words, [c] and thou ſhalt write them upon the poſts of thy houſe, and on thy gates. Then leaving a ſmall blank ſpace on the parchment, theſe words are continued: And it ſhall come to paſs, if you ſhall hearken diligently unto my commandments, and ſo on to theſe words, and thou ſhalt write them upon the door poſts of thine houſe, and upon thy gates. This parchment is rolled up and thruſt into the reed, and at the end of it is written the name [d] Sciaddai. And every time that the Jews come in or go out, they touch this place out of devotion, then kiſs the finger that touched it; and this is what they call Mezuza. III. They

[a] The Spaniſh Jews being baniſhed the dominions of the King of Spain, took refuge for the greateſt part of them in the Levant, where they remain to this day.
[b] Deut. vi. ẏ. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9.
[c] Deut. xi. ẏ. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20.
[d] This is one of God's names.

III. They have neither figure, image, nor ſtatue, nor will they ſuffer any in their houſes, and much leſs in their ſynagogues, and other places conſecrated to devotion; conformable to the prohibition which ſaith, thou ſhalt not make unto thee any graven image: as may be read in the twentieth chapter of Exodus, and ſeveral other places. But in Italy there are many Jews, who take the liberty of having both portraits and hiſtory pieces in their houſes. Tho' they avoid having any Relievo's, eſpecially thoſe where the bodies are entire.

CHAP. III.

Of their Kitchen and Table-furniture.

I. THEIR kitchen furniture muſt be bought new, for ſhould they have been uſed by any but Jews, eſpecially if they are earthen, or have had any thing hot in them, they muſt be thrown away; becauſe there might have been in them ſome of the forbidden meats, which are in great number (as I ſhall ſhew in the ſixth chapter of the ſecond part) and the juices thereof might have penetrated into them. But if theſe pans are of metal, or ſtone, that is not porous as earthen ware is; after having paſſed them thro' the fire, or ſteeped them in boiling water, then they may be uſed.

II. When they have bought any of theſe new veſſels, either of glaſs, earth, or metal, they plunge them immediately into the ſea, a river, or a well, or into a great quantity of water, to expreſs an extraordinary cleanlineſs; according to the twenty third verſe of the thirty firſt chapter of Numbers.

III. They make uſe of different utenſils both for the kitchen and table, ſome of them ſerving only for milk, and ſuch food as is made of it, and others for meat; for, as will appear in the ſixth chapter of the ſecond part, for they cannot at the ſame time eat both meat and milk.

IV. They likewiſe have kitchen-furniture and diſhes appropriated to the ſervice of the paſſover, and which ought not to have touched any leavened bread, as I ſhall mention in the third chapter of the third part of this work.

CHAP. IV.

Of their Sleep and Dreams.

I. THE Rabbi's precept to the Jews is to place the bed they lie on with the head to the North, and the feet to the South; or contrarywiſe, for they do not approve of their being placed Eaſt and Weſt, in order to obſerve the reſpect due to Jeruſalem, and the temple, which were ſituated in this laſt manner: but very few Jews keep up to this.

II. When they lie down to ſleep, they, in their prayers, beg of God to be delivered from the dangers of the night, to grant them the enjoyment of a ſweet and undiſturbed repoſe, and in the morning to riſe alive and in good health. To theſe prayers they join the 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9, verſes of the vi. chapter of Deuteronomy, and the xci. Pſalm. Whoſo dwelleth in the ſecret place of the Moſt High, &c. and the cxxi, I will lift up mine eyes unto the mountains, &c. and the 5. verſe of the xxxi. Pſalm, Into thine hand I commit my ſpirit. To theſe, ſome of the Jews add other paſſages, each according to his cuſtom or inclination.

III. They have a great faith in dreams, becauſe of what is ſaid in the Scripture concerning Jacob, Joſeph, Pharaoh, Nebuchadnezzer, Daniel, and others; and of what is written in the xxxiii. chapter and 15. verſe of Job, In dreams and viſions of the night, &c. then he openeth the ears of men, &c.

IV. And indeed they give ſo great credit to dreams, that if a man ſhould dream of any thing diſagreable, or that makes him uneaſy, particularly if his dream has any relation to the [c] four kinds of dreams, which the Rabbi's have explained, it is their cuſtom to faſt all that day in all the forms of faſting, which I ſhall hereafter mention. So that a dream is the only thing that can oblige a man to faſt on the ſabbath, or on any other feſtival.

V. At night when the faſt is over, he who has had the dream, before he ſits down to eat, ſends for three of his friends, to whom he ſaith ſeven times: [f] may the dream be fortunate which I have dreamt; to which they anſwer at each time, may it be fortunate, God make it ſo. After this they add ſome paſſages of the prophets, and to the end, that he himſelf may have ſome good omen of his being in peace, they repeat to him theſe words of Eccleſiaſtes, [g] Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy, &c. then he, who has faſted, begins his meal.

CHAP V.

Of their Clothes.

I. THE Jews are forbidden to cloath themſelves in any ſtuffs that are woollen and linen mixt together: [h] thou ſhalt not wear a garment, ſaith [i] Deuteronomy, of divers ſorts; for which reaſon they do not even ſew a woollen garment with thread, nor a linen garment with wool.

II. It is likewiſe forbidden to both men and women to diſguiſe themſelves by wearing each other's apparel, [k] the woman ſhall not wear that which pertaineth unto man, neither ſhall a man put on a woman's garment. Beſides, all effeminate actions are forbidden to men, as painting the face, or making the hair fall off; the ſame prohibition likewiſe extends to the woman, not to practiſe any thing proper to man.

III. And this may be the reaſon, that men are forbidden to ſhave their beards from the temples down along their cheeks, and even any part of the beard; [l] neither ſhalt thou marr the corners of thy beard.

IV. As

[c] Theſe four kinds of dreams are, the ſeeing the book of the law on fire; the ſeeing the day of remiſſion at the hour of neila, that is to ſay, of the evening prayer; the ſeeing the beams of your houſe falling down, or your teeth out; ſome add, the ſeeing of your wife with another man.

[f] This ceremony concerning dreams, is related at length in the order of the Jewiſh prayers, according to the Ritual of the Italians of the Mantuan impreſſion.

[f] Chap. ix. ℣. 7. [g] Levit. x. ℣. 19. [h] Deut. xxii. ℣. 11. [k] Deut. xxii. ℣. 5. [l] Levit. xix. ℣. 27.

IV. As to dreſs; they do not willingly imitate other nations, unleſs it be to prevent their being turned into ridicule. It is not lawful for them to have a crown, or any diſtinguiſhed lock of hair upon the middle of their head, nor any thing reſembling it: but they chuſe in all countries to wear long dreſſes or gowns.

V. The women dreſs according to the manner of the places where they live, excepting only on the day of their nuptials, at which time they cover their own hair with a kind of peruke, or head-dreſs reſembling natural hair; yet ſo as to keep to the faſhion of the country externally: but ſtill, they take a great deal of pains to conceal their own hair.

VI. The men hold it indecent for their head to be uncovered, not thinking it reſpectful, and it is what they do not practiſe even in their ſynagogues. Yet as they ſee, that it is a civility paid to perſons of diſtinction amongſt Chriſtians, they behave in the ſame manner.

VII. Every garment they wear muſt have four corners, and to each corner a fringe hanging down, which they call Zizit. This fringe is commonly made of eight woollen threads twiſted for that purpoſe, with five knots on each of them, which takes up half the length of it. That part that has no knots on it being unravelled falls into a kind of fringe, [m] let them make themſelves fringes, (ſaith the law) [n] on the borders of their garments.

VIII. This precept concerns men only, and not women, for which reaſon there is not one of them that obſerves it.

IX. Even at this time, there is hardly any place where the men wear theſe four cornered garments, to avoid the deriſion of thoſe nations among whom they live. They are content barely to wear a piece of ſquare ſtuff with a fringe at the four corners under their clothes, which they call [o] Arban Canfoth, in remembrance of the commandments of God; becauſe it is ſaid in the ſame chapter of Numbers at the 40. verſe: That he may remember and do all my commandments, &c. But at the time of prayer in their ſynagogues, they cover themſelves with a ſquare woollen veil which has a fringe at each corner, and is called Taled, whereof I ſhall ſpeak in the eleventh chapter.

X. The men likewiſe ought always to wear on their forehead a Totafot, ſo named in the Scripture, and which the Jews call Teffilin, as it is written in Deuteronomy. [p] Thou ſhalt bind them for a ſign upon thine hand, and they ſhall be as frontlets between thine eyes. We ſhall give a deſcription of their property and figure in the eleventh chapter; but in order not to be laughed at by the people, for a thing which they hold for ſacred, and do not wear without great circumſpection, they only tie it on in time of prayer.

XI. Beſides they think it becoming to wear a girdle, or ſome other thing over their clothes to divide the upper part of the body from the lower.

[m] Numb. xv. 38. [n] Deut. xxii. ỳ. 12. [o] Four wings. [p] Chap. vi. ỳ. 8. c. xi. ỳ. 18.

CHAP.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Decency to be obſerved at eaſing themſelves.

I. THE Rabbi's have given many inſtructions concerning the place where they were to eaſe themſelves, and the manner of behaviour on that occaſion; which wholly regard health, decency, and modeſty; grounded upon what is ſaid in Deuteronomy. [q] Thou ſhalt have a place alſo without the camp, whither thou ſhalt go forth abroad, and thou ſhalt have a paddle upon thy weapon, &c. and it ſhall be when thou wilt eaſe thy ſelf abroad, &c.

II. They muſt remember and accuſtom themſelves when they riſe in a morning to eaſe themſelves, and then waſh, in order to go clean to their prayers.

III. Whenever they find a motion, they muſt not refrain it, becauſe it is rendring oneſelf abominable, in contradiction to what is ſaid in Leviticus. [r] Ye ſhall not make yourſelves abominable, &c.

IV. If, on theſe occaſions, they think any one ſees them, they ought to guard againſt it with all poſſible decency. [f] And becauſe at firſt they had no conveniencies for that purpoſe in their houſes, and were expoſed to the ſight of every one, they had many inſtructions for the preſerving decency. And as that action was looked upon as even dangerous, they had a kind of invocation to the guardian angels, to protect them particularly at that time: but it is now quite laid aſide.

V. After this they were to waſh their hands, and in a prayer return God thanks for vouchſafing, not only to form ſo wonderful a creature as man, but alſo to preſerve him, ſince the leaſt obſtacle in the courſe of thoſe excrements might prove fatal; this they obſerve as often as neceſſity requires it.

CHAP. VII.

Of their manner of waſhing their Hands and Face.

I. EVERY morning, as ſoon as they riſe, they waſh their hands and face, and take great care not to touch any meat, bread, book, or ſacred thing before.

II. As for the quality of the water and manner of uſing it, the Rabbi's, who have refined hereupon, have been very tedious in their niceties and circumſtances. They above all forbid the throwing the water which they have waſhed themſelves with, upon the ground; for they cannot walk over the place where it is ſpilt, it being an unclean thing in their notion.

III. As they wipe their hands and face, they repeat the benediction, which I ſhall mention in the ninth chapter.

CHAP.

[q] Chap. xxiii. ỿ. 13. [r] Chap. xi. ỿ. 44.
[f] They have ſtruck out of the ſecond edition what follows to Numb. v. as uſeleſs, there being now no occaſion for practiſing it.

CHAP. VIII.

Of their Purity.

IN Leviticus we find, that he was unclean who had touched a dead body, a leper, or any reptile, &c. and, as ſuch, was prohibited the entrance of the temple: but ſince the deſtruction of the temple, the Jews pretend, that all thoſe precepts, concerning unclean things, are aboliſhed. However, there is an ordinance in Eſdras which ſubſiſted ſome time after, purporting, that he was unclean who had ſhed his ſeed: and this is grounded upon what is mentioned in the fifteenth chapter and ſixteenth verſe of Leviticus: And if any man's ſeed of copulation go out from him, then he ſhall waſh all his fleſh in water, and be unclean until the even. But as this could not be obſerved, without much difficulty, becauſe of matrimonial converſation, they neglect it.

CHAP. IX.

Of their Bleſſings.

I. THE Rabbi's have perſuaded the Jews to repeat bleſſings and particular praiſes unto God, not only in their prayers, and at all times when they receive favours from him, but even on all accidental occaſions, and in all their actions, whether they eat or drink, or ſmell any odour; and, in ſhort, for every precept of the law, and of the [t] Rabbi's; which they extend to every thing new or extraordinary that they ſee, for they have different bleſſings for all ſorts of things; and as the number of them is very great, we cannot, at this time, give a particular account of them all. But they are to be found in a large treatiſe, compoſed by the Rabbi's, upon this ſubject.

II. In the morning, as ſoon as they are up, they ſay: Bleſſed be thou, O Lord our God, King of the world, who giveſt life unto the dead, who giveſt light unto the blind, who extendeſt the earth upon the waters; and many other ſayings of this kind. When they waſh their hands, in obedience to that precept, they ſay: Bleſſed be thou, O Lord our God, King of the world, who haſt ſanctified us by thy precepts, and who haſt commanded us to waſh our hands. When they apply to the ſtudy of the law: Bleſſed be &c. who haſt given us the law. If they would rejoice in eating bread: Bleſſed be thou, Lord &c. who bringeſt forth bread from out of the earth. When they drink: Bleſſed be thou, Lord &c. Creator of the fruit of the vine. Speaking of the fruits that grow upon the trees: Bleſſed &c. Creator of the fruits of the trees. And of the fruits of the earth: Bleſſed &c. Creator of the fruits of the earth. At ſmelling of perfumes: Bleſſed &c. who haſt created ſuch a thing odoriferous. At the ſight of high mountains, or a vaſt extent of ſea, they ſay: Bleſſed &c. Creator of all things from the beginning. When they ſee, eat, or put on any thing new, and even at the opening of ſolemn feaſts, they ſay: Bleſſed &c. who haſt made us to live, and ſupported us to this day. Upon any death among them: Bleſſed &c. Judge of all truth. In ſhort, in all things, before or after every action; and in ſome, both at the beginning and end, they repeat ſome bleſſing to God, believing, that it is a ſin of ingratitude to enjoy or make uſe of any thing, without [t] Beſides the precepts contained in the law, the Jews have other kind of commandments, which they call the precepts of Hacamim or wiſe men; who appointed theſe precepts each in their time, according to the different reaſons they had to ordain them for the worſhip of God.

firſt acknowledging by ſome words of praiſe, that they hold it from God, and that he is the Lord and Proprietor of all things.

III. They are under an obligation of ſaying, at leaſt, a hundred bleſſings every day; and as moſt of the Jews repeat them every morning in the ſynagogue with their prayers, they call thoſe bleſſings, repeated in the morning, Meath beracoth, which ſignifies, a hundred bleſſings.

CHAP. X.

Of their Synagogues or Schools.

I. THEY make their ſynagogues, which they call ſchools, either ſmall or large, below or above, in a houſe or in ſome place by themſelves, juſt as they have it in their power; becauſe they are not able to erect any lofty or magnificent building. The walls of theſe ſchools are white within, either wainſcoted or hung with tapeſtry; and round them are paſſages and ſentences exhorting them to be attentive at their prayers. There are likewiſe benches fixed all round to ſit on, and in ſome of theſe ſynagogues there are little cheſts, wherein they lock up their books, robes, and other things; in the middle, or againſt the walls, hang candleſticks, or lamps, to hold oil or wax-lights, in order to give light to the place. At the doors you may ſee boxes for charity, which is afterwards diſtributed to the poor.

II. In every ſynagogue, at the Eaſt end, is an ark, or cheſt, which they call [u] Aron in memory of the ark of the covenant, that was in the temple: and in this cheſt they lock up the five books of Moſes in manuſcript, written upon vellum, with ink made for that purpoſe, and in ſquare characters which they call Merubaad [w], copied with [x] extraordinary care and circumſpection from the original, written by Eſdras, whereof, it is ſaid, there is a copy at Grand Cairo; which Eſdras made from the hand-writing of Moſes, as is mentioned in the viii. chapter of the 2. book of Eſdras: this copy muſt be ſo exact that a vau, or a jod, the leaſt letter too much or too little in it, vitiates the whole copy, makes it uſeleſs and fit for nothing, but to be thrown away without reading. The copyiſt too muſt omit none of the many formalities required and commanded by the Rabbi's to be obſerved on this occaſion. This Pentateuch is not in the form of books now-a-days uſed; but in that of a volume or ſcroul of the ancients; that is, upon ſkins of vellum, not ſewed with thread; but with the ſinews of ſome clean animal. Theſe ſkins thus tacked together, end to end, and written upon, are rolled on two wooden ſticks at each end. The book, thus rolled up, is covered with a piece of linen or ſilk embroidered, which is generally ſome lady's maſter-piece; wherein they endeavour to ſhew their greateſt ſkill and perfection, which they conſecrate to this uſe, together with another ſilk cover to be put over it, in order to give it a greater luſtre. When they have a mind to be at the expence of it, they cover the two ends of the ſticks, which they call [y] Hezhaim, and are much longer than the vellum; they cover them (I ſay) with ornaments of wrought ſilver, which have pomegranates and ſmall bells hanging to them, that are alſo, for this reaſon, called [z] Rimonim, over which a crown is put, which either goes quite round it, or only half of one, which hangs down before. And this crown is called by them [a] Hatara, or Cheder tora.

All

[u] Ark. [w] Square. [x] The Jewiſh Doctors have invented a vaſt number of rules to be obſerved in writing a copy of the law for the uſe of any ſynagogue, but moſt of thoſe rules are trifling ſuperſtitions. Some of them indeed may contribute towards having a correct copy; as to that ancient copy, aſcribed to Eſdras, it is a mere fable. [y] Wood of life. [z] Pomegranates. [a] The crown of the law.

All which is performed according to the cuſtom of the country, or the humour of him to whom the book belongs. In this cheſt there are ſometimes above twenty of theſe books, which they call Sefertora, or the Book of the Law. The Jews read them on feſtival days, and at ſtated hours, as I ſhall obſerve in its proper place.

III. In the middle, or at the entrance of the ſynagogue, is a kind of a long altar of wood raiſed a little, upon which the book is unrolled when they go to read, and it is placed on this table or deſk, whilſt they are preaching.

IV. There is a place on one ſide of the ſynagogue, or gallery up ſtairs, incloſed with wooden lettices, where the women are placed in time of prayer. They, from thence, can ſee very plainly whatever is doing below, but are not ſeen by the men, nor do they aſſemble in the ſame place, which is in order to prevent any diſtractions that might diſturb the mind during prayers, and occaſion ſin.

V. Nevertheleſs the ſituation and particularities of thoſe galleries, where the women are, differ according to the countries and people where they live; yet, as to the diſpoſition of them, it is the ſame in all places.

VI. In all ſynagogues there is a man appointed to ſing the [b] prayers, who is called [c] Cazan, and another who keeps the keys of the ſynagogue, and takes care to have it clean and in good order, to light the lamps and tapers, and do whatever is neceſſary in time of prayer. This man is called [d] Sciamas, or Servant. They are both maintained at the expence of the public.

VII. There are in every city more or leſs of theſe ſynagogues or ſchools, according to the number or variety of Jews that dwell in them. For as the Levantines, Germans, and Italians differ in nothing ſo much as their prayers, every one of them is deſirous of having a place for that purpoſe, which ſhall be in common to none but thoſe of their own nation.

CHAP. XI.

Of their Prayers, of the Cloak or Long Robe, of the Forehead-pieces, and of the Pentateuch.

I. THE Jews go three times a day to pray in their ſynagogues. The firſt four hours after ſun-riſe are appointed for the morning prayer; and called [e] Sciacrid: The ſecond hour is afternoon or twelve a clock, and is called [f] Mincha; and the third at the cloſe of the evening, which they call [g] Haruid. But in many places, when it is no feſtival, the noon and evening prayers are ſaid at ſun-ſet, for convenience ſake.

II. They are not to eat, drink, or do any other thing, not ſo much as to ſtep aſide to ſalute any one, before they have been at morning prayers: beſides, they are obliged to waſh their hands before they enter the ſynagogue. III. In [b] The Jews pronounce their prayers in ſuch a manner as they may be ſaid to ſing them; for when they read the text of the Bible they properly ſing.

[c] The Cazan is with the Jews, what the reader is amongſt thoſe of the P. R. R. The word Cazan is to be met with in the works of St. Epiphanius.

[d] The Sciamas or miniſter, is almoſt the ſame as was formerly a deacon, and the Syrian Churches call their deacons by that name to this very day, tho' it is alſo generally applied to all ſuch as officiate at divine ſervice.

[e] Matins. [f] Nones. [g] Veſpers.

III. In the morning then, as ſoon as they enter the ſynagogue, they cover themſelves with the [b] Taled, which I have already mentioned, [l] and repeat the benediction, [k] Bleſſed be thou, &c. Some of the Jews cover their heads with the veil, and others bring it cloſe about their necks, in order to be the more attentive at prayer, and to refrain from looking round them.

IV. Next they put on the forehead-pieces, called [l m] Teffilin, of which I have already ſpoken, and whereof take the following deſcription. They take two pieces of parchment, whereon, with an ink made on purpoſe, they write theſe four paſſages in ſquare letters, which is performed with great exactneſs upon each piece, [n] Hear, O Iſrael, &c. The ſecond, And it ſhall be our righteouſneſs, if we obſerve to do all theſe commandments, &c. The third, Sanctify unto me all the firſt-born. The fourth, And it ſhall be when the Lord ſhall bring thee, &c. Theſe two pieces of parchment are rolled up together in the form of a ſmall piked roll, which they wrap up in a piece of black calf's-ſkin: then they fix it upon a ſquare thick piece of the ſame ſkin, leaving a ſlip of the ſame faſtened to it, which is of a finger's breadth, and about a cubit and a half long. One of theſe Teffilin they place on the bending of the left arm, and after having made a ſmall knot in the ſlip in form of a jod, they wind it round the arm in a ſpiral line, till the end of it reaches the end of the middle finger; which they call Teffila Scel Jad, that is to ſay, the Teffila of the hand. As for the other, they write the four paſſages juſt now mentioned upon four ſeparate pieces of vellum, which form a ſquare when tacked together, whereupon they write the letter Scin, then put a ſquare piece of hard calf-ſkin over it, of the thickneſs of the other, from which come two ſlips of the ſame length and breadth as the former. This ſquare piece they put on the middle of their forehead, and the ſlips going round their head, make a knot behind in the form of the letter daleth, and then hang down before upon the breaſt. This they call, Teffila Scel roſch, which is, the Teffila of the head. Theſe are the forehead-pieces, which are generally put on with the Taled in the morning only. Indeed ſome of the Jewiſh zealots wear them at their noon prayers too; but excepting the reader, there are very few amongſt them, who wear the Taled at thoſe prayers.

V. When ten are met together, and all of them thirteen years and a day old (for unleſs ſuch a number meet, thoſe prayers cannot be ſung ſolemnly) then the Cazan, or reader, goes up to the deſk, or altar, or ſtands before the cheſt, or ark, and begins to ſing prayers aloud, in which the reſt join with him, tho' in a much ſofter voice.

VI. The form of prayer is very various amongſt the Jewiſh nations. For, as I before obſerved, they differ in nothing ſo much as in this point. The Germans ſing in a louder tone than the reſt. The Eaſtern and Spaniſh Jews ſing almoſt in the ſame manner as the Turks; and the Italians gravely and leiſurely. Their prayers contain more or fewer words, according as their days are feſtivals or not. And in this very point alſo they differ amongſt themſelves.

VII. But theſe are the chief points wherein they agree. In the morning they ſing Pſalms, particularly the cxlv, which they ſay intirely, I will magnify thee, O God, and thoſe that follow, beginning with Alleluiah. Beſides this, they repeat a collection of praiſes to God, which they mix in all their prayers, and at all times, viz. [o] Cadis, which is to ſay, Holineſs;

[b] The word Talet, or Taled, as the Italian Jews pronounce it, ſignifies in Rabinic Hebrew, a cloak, or robe worn over other clothes.

[l] Numb. Chap. vii, viii, and ix.

[k] Num. Chap. x.

[l] Deut. vi. ℣. 4. 11. 13.

[m] Teffilin in the Chaldee, or Rabinic Hebrew, anſwers to the Latin word, precatoria, becauſe the Jews uſe it at the time of their prayers.

[n] Exod. xiii. ℣. 1. and the following verſes.

[o] This praiſe begins by theſe words, may thy name be exalted and ſanctified.

neſs; a hymn to the Creator of the light and the day, which they call [p] Jozer. That paſſage of Deuteronomy, Hear, O Iſrael, which ends with theſe words, And it ſhall be our righteouſneſs if we obſerve to do all theſe commandments, &c. which we have already mentioned, and this paſſage out of Numbers chap. xv. ver. 38. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and bid them, that they make them fringes, &c. Theſe three are called [q] Chiriat Sceman, adding to it [r] Veiaziu, &c. eighteen benedictions offered up unto God, which they call [s] Scemona Eſre, wherein, at the ſame time they are praiſing him, they beg thoſe things of him, which are moſt neceſſary for them, ſuch as bread, health, the uſe of reaſon, liberty, the forgiveneſs of ſins, &c. which are firſt ſaid in a low voice, and afterwards the Cazan ſings them aloud, beginning the cxlv. Pſalm over again, with ſome paſſages out of the prophets, and particularly that of the vi. chapter of Iſaiah, Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hoſts, &c. with the interpretation of the ſame words in the Chaldean tongue. All which being ſaid, they conclude with a leſſon and thankſgiving unto God, for having taught them how to ſerve him, begging of him, that he would cauſe the whole world to worſhip him after one manner. Which they call [t] Halenu le ſabeah. And this is the form of their morning prayer.

VIII. On Mondays and Thurſdays, to the prayers after the Scemona eſre, they add a kind of confeſſion, with penitential prayers; and if any one has any faſt or abſtinence to perform, he generally chuſes theſe two days of the week for that purpoſe, which they call days of juſtice; becauſe anciently the judges, in regard to crimes committed againſt the Deity, uſed to hold their ſittings on thoſe days, as well in great cities, as in country towns, and the neighbouring villages, whither the people repaired from all parts, as to a market.

IX. In the afternoon the prayers begin with the cxlv. Pſalm, the Cadis, the eighteen benedictions, or Scemona eſre, which are firſt ſaid in a low voice, then ſung aloud, and the Cadis being a ſecond time repeated, concludes the ſervice.

X. At night an hymn is repeated unto God, who bringeth on the night, who loveth Iſrael, and hath given his commandments to them; the three leſſons called Chiriad Sceman, a commemoration of their miraculous deliverance out of Egypt, with a prayer to God, that he would keep them in peace during that night. To theſe they add eighteen verſes out of the prophets, the eighteen benedictions Scemona eſre, the Halenu le ſabeah, and the Cadis in a low voice, and thus ends their evening prayer.

XI. Theſe are the moſt eſſential parts of which their prayers generally conſiſt. And tho', on particular days and ſolemn feaſts, they make ſuitable additions, as I ſhall mention in its proper place; yet theſe prayers are always the baſis and foundation of the reſt, both for the order and ſubſtance of them. So that, in this point, there is no conſiderable variety obſerved by the ſeveral nations of the Jews, who almoſt all agree as to their form of prayer.

XII. They have divided the whole Pentateuch into forty eight or fifty two readings, called Paraſciod, or Diviſions; and one of them is read every week in their ſynagogues: ſo that in the ſpace of a year, whether of twelve or thirteen months, as I ſhall ſhew by and by, they finiſh the reading of the whole book. On the Monday and Thurſday, after having ſaid their penitential prayers, they take the [u] Sefar Tora out of the cheſt before mentioned,

[p] This is the firſt word of the praiſe, which ſignifies Creator.
[q] The lecture of, Hear, O Iſrael.
[r] And conſtant, This is the beginning of a praiſe.
[s] Eighteen, becauſe it containeth ſo many thankſgivings.
[t] It is our duty to praiſe.
[u] The book of the law.

mentioned, and whilſt the verſe of the xxxiv. Pſalm, O praiſe the Lord with me, &c. and ſome others are repeating, they place it on the little altar or deſk, where being opened and unrolled, they deſire three perſons to read the beginning of the [x] Paraſcia, in the ſame place where they are. And every one repeats ſome words of it, which are preceded and followed with a benediction. After which the reader bleſſes them, and they all promiſe to beſtow ſomething, either on the poor, or towards the neceſſaries of the ſynagogue, or on the reader, or [y] Sciamas. Then the Sefer Tora is held up wide open, and the reader ſhewing the writing of the book, ſays to the congregation, [z] This is the law which Moſes ſet before, &c. Indeed the Levantins perform this ceremony before they begin to read. After which, the book is rolled up and covered, and then ſhut up in the cheſt.

XIII. This manner of reading the Pentateuch, and inviting more or leſs perſons to read it, is an order of Eſdras; which is obſerved on all faſts and feſtivals, as I ſhall obſerve in its proper place.

XIV. And as each man out of devotion is deſirous of having a ſhare in ſome particular ceremonies, ſuch as taking the book out of the cheſt, and putting it up again, or any other performed in time of prayer, that favour is generally granted to thoſe who offer moſt money, and the ſum, ſo collected, is diſtributed, as I ſaid before, to the poor, or employed in the uſes of the ſynagogue.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Prieſts and Levites, of the Preſents made them, and Tithes.

I. IN former times none were admitted as prieſts, or miniſters in the temple, but ſuch as were deſcended from Aaron, as we read in Exodus and other places. They alone offered up ſacrifices, made oblations, burnt incenſe, and in a word, performed all things neceſſary. And indeed, they not only were allowed a part of all the ſacrifices, which were offered, and are ſpecified in the ſame place; but likewiſe had the ſhoulder, breaſt, and jaws of all beaſts that were killed. They alſo had the firſt-born of every flock, and what was given in exchange for the firſt-born of women; the firſt fleeces of ſheep, and other things belonging to beaſts, the fiftieth part of the Glebe, and of fruits, a piece of dough out of every maſs of bread; together with all the other advantages ordained in Holy Writ.

II. The office of the Levites was at ſtated times to ſing in the temple. They were allowed the tenth part of the harveſt, which they went into the country to gather.

III. But theſe duties are now ceaſed, unleſs it be as to thoſe Jews, who live in the territories of Jeruſalem, and the ancient Judea. There are very few Jews at this time, that have any land or flocks of their own. So that tho' there are ſome of them, who pretend to be the ſons of prieſts and [a] Levites, and to have an undoubted tradition of the truth of their deſcent, notwithſtanding all their tranſmigrations, yet they have no pre-eminence,

[x] Section or chapter. [y] Servant. [z] Deut. iv. ℣. 44.

[a] Several of the Jews retain, to this day, the name of Cohanim or prieſt, tho' there be no temple, ſo that the word Coben, is now but a title of honour, and not of a real prieſt.

eminence, unleſs it be the receiving ſomething upon account of the firſt-born, and being generally preferred to all ſuch as are invited to read the Pentateuch [b] in their ſynagogues, as I have ſaid before; and their bleſſing the people on ſolemn feaſts, uſing theſe words out of the vi. chapter of Numbers, The Lord bleſs thee, and keep thee, &c.

IV. They take a ſpecial care not to touch any dead body, or to meet under any place, where there is one. The Jews pay them a ranſom for the firſt-born, as I ſhall obſerve in the 9. chapter of the 4. part of this Diſſertation.

V. The prieſts are not allowed to marry any woman that hath been divorced from a former huſband, nor a ſiſter-in-law, who hath had Caliza, as I ſhall explain it in the 4. Part, chap. vii.

VI. There are ſome ſmall circumſtances, wherein the Levites are inferior to the prieſts in dignity.

CHAP. XIII.

Of Agriculture and Cattle.

I. THE Jews are forbidden, in all places, to ſow two different ſorts of ſeed together, as wheat and barley, and ſo of all others; nor to ſow any thing with the ſeeds of grapes. [c] Thou ſhalt not ſow thy field with mingled ſeed, &c. Nor to graft any tree, as peach, apple, orange-trees, and the like; nor can they even keep any grafted trees on their ground, but they may eat the fruit of a grafted tree.

II. If any one plants a fruit tree, he muſt not eat of the fruit thereof, till three years after it has been planted. The fruit growing on that tree in the fourth year was formerly carried into the temple, [d] but at this time they gather it without much ceremony.

III. They are not to couple two animals of a different ſpecies, as the aſs and the bull, or any other, in order to bring forth mules, according to the prohibition, which ſaith: [e] Thou ſhalt not let thy cattle gender with a diverſe kind. They were likewiſe forbidden to let them work, draw the plough, or cart together. [f] Thou ſhalt not plough with an ox and an aſs together.

IV. When they gathered in their harveſt, they were obliged to leave a part of it ſtanding at one end of the field, and likewiſe to leave grapes on their vines.

V. Every ſeventh year was a year of reſt for the land, [g] and what it produced of itſelf, that year, was for the poor.

VI. The firſt-born male of a clean female, as of a cow, an ewe, or of any other animal, without ſpots, was forbidden to be eaten, or put to any uſe: for it was formerly the cuſtom to give it to the prieſt, or to redeem it of him. But this ordinance is not practiſed now-a-days, whether it be ſpotted or unſpotted. [h] The firſtling of an aſs, likewiſe, might be redeemed of the prieſt, by giving him a lamb in the ſtead of it.

VII. If

[b] Chap. xi. Sect. 12. [c] Lev. xix. [d] Lev. xix. ỳ. 23. [g] Lev. xix. ỳ. 19.
[f] Deut. chap. xxii. ỳ. 10. [e] Lev. chap. xxv. [h] Exod. xiii. ỳ. 13.

VII. If any one found a bird's neſt in the fields, whether there were young ones, or eggs, of ſuch as might be eaten, [l] he was obliged not to take the dam with the eggs, or young ones.

CHAP. XIV.

Of their Charity towards the Poor, and to Animals.

I. ALTHOUGH the Jews are more expoſed than any other nation to injuries and inſults, tho' there are very few rich men amongſt them, and thoſe who are ſo, have nothing in their poſſeſſion which may be called riches; nevertheleſs, that ſmall number of wealthy men ſupply the neceſſities of the poor, who are very numerous, and help them at all times and on all occaſions; ſo that we muſt allow the Jews are very compaſſionate to the poor.

II. In all conſiderable cities the poor go, on the eve of the Sabbath, and other feſtivals, to the houſes of thoſe who are rich and moſt eaſy in their fortunes; and every houſe gives according to their ability. Beſides, the [k] Parnaſſim, or Memunin, who are appointed for that purpoſe, take care to ſend money every week to them, but chiefly to thoſe poor who are aſhamed to beg, as alſo to widows and infirm people, that are not able to go from place to place.

III. There is likewiſe a fund raiſed for the poor, out of the money which is put into the box of the ſynagogue, and out of that which is collected by the prieſts, in the time of their worſhip; as I obſerved in the eleventh chapter.

IV. When there is occaſion for any extraordinary charity, either to one of the poor of the city, or to a ſtranger, ſuch as the marrying a young woman, redeeming a ſlave, or any thing of this nature, the inſpectors of the ſynagogue order the reader to go round the whole congregation, who ſtill, as he paſſes by them, names the perſons to whom he ſpeaks; ſaying, God bleſs N. who ſhall give ſuch or ſuch a ſum towards ſuch a charity. As this is generally done on the Sabbath, and the Jews do not touch any money on that day, each perſon obliges himſelf upon his word to give ſuch a ſum to the reader upon that account, and this promiſe is called [l] Nedava; which is diſcharged before the week is at an end. As ſoon as theſe charities are collected, they are diſtributed to ſuch poor as they were deſigned for.

V. There are alſo, in large cities, ſeveral ſocieties, who beſtow large charities, ſome take care to aſſiſt the ſick, others are employed in burying the dead; that ſociety which collects the ſmall alms called [m] Zedaca, are generally named Ghemilud Haſſadim; thoſe for the redemption of ſlaves Pidion Suevim; and thoſe who have the care of marrying the young women are called Haſſibetuloth. There are ſeveral other ſocieties, more or leſs conſiderable, according to the number of Jews that live in each city.

VI. If any poor perſon's urgent neceſſity requires more than thoſe, who live in the ſame city, are able to beſtow on him; he applies to the chief Rabbi's, who give him a [n] certificate

[k] Thoſe who are appointed to take care of their civil affairs.

[l] Deut. xxii. ỿ. 6.

[l] Liberality.

[m] Juſtice, the Jews ſtile their alms after this manner, conformable to the vi. chapter of St. Matthew, ỿ. 1. Ne juſtitiam veſtram faciatis coram hominibus.

[n] This ſort of letters was alſo long in uſe amongſt the Chriſtians.

ficate under their hand, to this purpoſe: that the bearer hereof N. is an honeſt and good man, and every one is deſired to aſſiſt him. With this certificate, in all places where there are Jews, whether it be a caſtle, farm, or any other place, the bearer of it is entertained and ſubſiſted for a day or two; and when he departs thence, he ſometimes has money given him. In every town he goes thro', he procures a freſh certificate, or cauſes the firſt to be ſubſcribed to, with which he goes to the ſynagogue in the name of the Parnaſſim or of the ſocieties, or of whatever perſons whoſe proper buſineſs it is to warrant him. And thus he receives the aſſiſtance and relief which he is in need of, in the manner before mentioned.

VII. • From all parts of the world where there are any Jews, they every year ſend alms to Jeruſalem, for the maintenance of the poor who live there, and pray for the welfare of the Jews in general. There is likewiſe money ſent into other parts of Judea, as to Joppa, Tiberias, and Hebron, the burying places of the patriarchs Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; and their wives.

VIII. Beſides theſe public alms, every man may diſtribute his charity in private, how, and when he pleaſes, and according to his ability.

IX. The Jews are likewiſe of opinion, that they do a good action when they give alms and aſſiſtance to the diſtreſſed of all kinds, tho' not Jews, nor of the ſame city: becauſe they look upon it as an act of charity done to mankind in general, which ought to extend indifferently to all perſons. And indeed the Rabbi's give a particular charge concerning this matter.

X. Out of a motive of the like compaſſion, they neither torment nor abuſe the beaſts, and are very careful how they put them to a cruel death; for they conſider them as God's creatures according to the words of the cxlv. Pſalm. ver. 9. And his mercy is over all his works.

• This is not in the firſt edition.

The END of the firſt Part.

AN HISTORICAL

DISSERTATION

CONCERNING THE

CEREMONIES and CUSTOMS

Which are at this time obſerved amongſt the JEWS.

PART II.

CHAP. I.

Of their Language, Pronunciation, way of Writing, and Preaching.

THERE are but few Jews who are able to make a complete diſcourſe in Hebrew, or the holy tongue, which they call [a] Laſchon Hacodeſch, wherein the four and twenty books of the Old Teſtament are written. They are not much better acquainted with the Chaldee, or [b] Targum: Yet they ſpoke thoſe languages when they were a nation. They are therefore acquainted only with the language of the country wherein they are born. So the Jews of Italy and Germany, talk Italian and German; and thoſe of the Eaſt and of Barbary, talk Turkiſh and Moreſco. Nay, they have ſo abſolutely made thoſe foreign languages their own, that ſeveral of the Jews who went from Germany into Poland, Hungary, and Ruſſia, have carried the German tongue along with them into thoſe countries, and tranſmitted it to their children. As for thoſe who who were driven out of Spain, and retired into the Eaſt, they have likewiſe carried the Spaniſh tongue thither. In Italy both languages are uſed, herein imitating their fore-fathers. The generality of them chooſe to live in thoſe countries, whoſe language they underſtand, and in converſation intermix many corrupt Hebrew words. But few of them are learned enough to be maſters of the Scripture; and there are hardly any, unleſs it be their Rabbi's, that can make a tolerable ſpeech in Hebrew.

[a] Holy tongue.

[b] They thus call the Chaldee paraphraſes, which is as much as to ſay, interpretation, or paraphraſe.

II. As for their way of pronouncing Hebrew, they differ ſo much among themſelves, that the Germans are hardly underſtood by the Italians and Levantins. But none of them pronounce more diſtinctly and more according to the rules of grammar, which they call [c] Dichduch, than the Italians.

III. If we examine the holy tongue in itſelf, we ſhall find that it lies in a narrow compaſs, and is very barren in words; for there being no other ancient writings extant, but the four and twenty books of the Old Teſtament, the Jews are forced to borrow all their words from thence. Indeed the Rabbi's have enlarged it enough to ſerve for public convenience, by adopting a great many words and expreſſions from the Chaldee, ſome few from the Greek, and ſome from the neighbouring languages. They have alſo coined many words for the names of things, and the ſame hath been done in every age by their writers, eſpecially in order to expreſs themſelves upon philoſophical ſubjects, and other ſciences, from whence they have borrowed their terms.

IV. This Hebrew of the Rabbi's is commonly made uſe of in their books, contracts, journals, public tranſactions, and the like occaſions; but as for their letters both of compliment or buſineſs, moſt of them are written in the language of the country where they live. Yet ſome of them write them in Hebrew letters. The Jews of the Morea are the only people who ſtill tranſact every thing in Hebrew.

V. Their ſermons are made in the language of the country where they reſide, the better to be underſtood by every body. Nevertheleſs, the quotations from Scripture, and from their Rabbi's, are in Hebrew, which the preacher afterwards explains in the vulgar tongue.

VI. As they readily allow any man to preach, he who would preach takes his opportunity, when the congregation is ſitting quietly in the ſynagogue. Then the preacher covering himſelf with his Taled, or ſometimes uncovered, leans againſt the deſk I have ſpoken of; [d] and begins with a verſe of the leſſon that has been read, called [e] Naſe, to which he ſubjoins a ſentence from thoſe learned men called Maamar. Then he enters into his exordium taken from ſome circumſtance relating to his text; afterwards he explains it, and for the confirmation of it, brings places out of the Scripture, and authorities from the Rabbi's; every one does it in his own ſtile, which is very different, according to the nation he is of.

VII. Their ſermons are preached upon the ſabbath-day, and upon great feſtivals, except when there is a funeral oration for the head of any conſiderable family (which is generally made upon common days) or for ſome other extraordinary occaſion.

[c] Subtilty, their grammar conſiſting only in trifles and ſubtle reflections.
[d] Part I. chap. viii. [e] The ſubject.

CHAP.

CHAP. II.

Of their Studies and Academies, of the riſe and contents of the Ghemara or Talmud.

I. THEY are of opinion that the beſt employment they can have is the ſtudy of the Holy Scripture, and the interpretations upon it, every one according to his ability; [f] and thou ſhalt talk of them when thou ſitteſt in thine houſe, and when thou walkeſt by the way, &c. Some of them apply themſelves to the Cabala, that is, the ſecret theology of Scripture. Others ſtudy philoſophy and the other ſciences, both natural and moral; but this they do only for the better underſtanding of the Scripture; otherwiſe, they look upon theſe ſtudies as pernicious, unleſs a man intends to take his degrees in phyſick: in ſuch a caſe he is allowed to do otherwiſe. The moſt common ſtudy amongſt them is [g] the Ghemara, otherwiſe called the Talmud, in thoſe places where they are allowed to have it; for where they have it not, they ſtudy the writings of their wiſe men, their paraphraſes, or the abridgment of the Talmud.

II. They have academies for that purpoſe called [h] Jeſhvod, where the Rabbi's and their diſciples meet in order to diſpute; but this they do without any method, and with a great deal of noiſe, that one would think the ſubjects they diſpute upon, were worth the while. They commonly meet there after morning prayers, except Fridays, the eves of holy days, Sabbath days, and holy days.

III. And becauſe all the precepts, ceremonies and cuſtoms of the Jews are founded upon the Talmud, and have their authority from it; it is proper to let the reader into its riſe, and to give him a regular account of what it contains.

IV. I obſerved in the firſt chapter of this work, that the Jews received the written law from Moſes, and the oral law, which is an expoſition of the former, with a collection of all their conſtitutions, from their Rabbi's. As long as the temple was ſtanding, the Jews could not write down any part of this ſecond law, which was called, for that reaſon, The oral Law; becauſe it was taught only by word of mouth and tradition.

V. But about one hundred and twenty [i] years after the deſtruction of the temple, Rabbi Juda, being then living, who for the ſanctity of his life, was called by the Jews, Rabenu Hacadoſh, or our holy Maſter; this Rabbi, I ſay, who was a man of a conſiderable fortune, and very great with the Emperor Antoninus Pius, obſerving that the diſperſion of the Jews made them forgetful of this oral law, writ down the opinions, conſtitutions, and traditions of all the Rabbi's, to his time; this he did in a compendium, which he called [k] Miſna. He divided his work into ſix parts, the firſt treats of huſbandry and ſeeds: the ſecond of holy days: the third of marriages and every thing appertaining to women: the fourth of law-ſuits, and of the differences which ariſe from damage or intereſt, and of all manner of civil affairs: the fifth of ſacrifices: and the ſixth of cleanneſs and uncleanneſs. But this book being very ſhort and obſcure, it occaſioned abundance of diſputes, which, as they increaſed every day, obliged two Rabbi's of Babylon, one of them called Ravena, [f] Deut. vi. 7.

[g] Perfection. It is a Supplement to the Miſna, which is the text, whereof the Ghemara is the gloſs or explanation.

[h] The meaning of this word is properly Seſſio, becauſe the ſcholars are ſitting.

[i] The learned do not agree among themſelves about the time when the Talmud was compiled.

[k] This is what the Fathers have called Deuteroſis, or as it were, a repetition of the law, which ſerves as a text to the Talmud.

Ravena, and the other Ravaſce, to collect all the expoſitions, diſputes, and additions, which had been compoſed upon the Miſna, down to their time, to which they added ſeveral hiſtories, ſentences, and remarkable ſayings, that were come to their knowledge, placing the Miſna as the text, and the reſt as an explanation, out of which they formed the book called [l] Talmud Babeli, or Ghemara, divided into ſixty parts, called [m] Maſſactoth. Some years before, one Rabbi Jocanan of Jeruſalem, had written a work of this kind, commonly called Talmud Geruſalmi, Talmud of Jeruſalem. But this being ſhort, and written in a harſh ſtile, the Babylonian was preferred, as being larger and clearer. Upon this laſt, Rabbi Solomon commonly called [n] Raſci made a comment, and an academy of Rabbi's added ſome diſputations called [o] Toſſafoth. Out of this Babylonian Talmud ſeveral things have been taken, and eſpecially out of the three treatiſes, of the number of thoſe ſix juſt now mentioned, becauſe the treatiſes of huſbandry, of ſacrifices, of cleanneſs or uncleanneſs, are now no longer in uſe.

VI. Since that time, ſome of the Popes have prohibited the Talmud, and others have allowed it; it is at preſent prohibited in Italy, eſpecially, where it is neither to be read nor ſeen.

CHAP. III.

Of the Creation of their Rabbi's, of their Authority, and of their Excommunications.

I. THE Rabbi's make no intereſt for their degree, but look upon it to be a ſhameful vanity to ſhew any deſire for it. And ſo they never examine them, but when they find a learned man fit to be a Rabbi, that is to ſay, a man who hath ſtudied the oral law more than any other ſcience; he is looked upon by the generality as a doctor, and is called Cacham, or wiſe man. At leaſt, this is the cuſtom in the Eaſt, but in Germany and Italy, they receive their title from the moſt ancient Rabbi's, who by word of mouth, or in a written form, call the candidate Chaver de Rau, a companion to his maſter, which title is given to young men, not ſo well acquainted with ſciences, as the old doctors; or ſometimes they call them Morenu, or Rau, Prceptor, or Maſter.

II. The Cacham Rau, or Morenu, paſſes judgment upon all manner of differences, determines what things are prohibited or lawful, and judges of all matters relating to religion; nay, he decides ſometimes of civil affairs. Theſe wiſe men, or maſters, perform the ceremonies of marrying and divorcing. They preach, when they are qualified for it, and are the heads of their academies. They have the uppermoſt places in their ſynagogues and aſſemblies. They puniſh ſuch as are diſobedient, and have the power of excommunicating them; and for this reaſon they are much reſpected.

III. When they excommunicate any perſon, they curſe him publicly, after which no Jew can talk with, or approach him within the length of a fathom, or ſix foot; he is forbidden the ſynagogue, and is obliged to ſit upon the ground barefooted, as if ſome of his relations were juſt dead, till he is abſolved by one or more of the Rabbi's, and bleſſed a-new.

IV. If

[l] Talmud of Babylon. [m] Treatiſes. [n] R. Solomon Jarchi, or rather as the Jews call him, Solomon Iſaaki. He was born at Troyes in Champain, not at Lunel in Languedoc, as ſome have thought. [o] Additions.

IV. If the excommunication be ſolemn and extraordinary, they meet in the ſynagogue, where lighting ſome black tapers, and blowing the horn, they thunder out curſes againſt the man who hath done, or ſhall do ſuch or ſuch a thing, to which the congregation anſwers, Amen.

CHAP. IV.

Of their Oaths and Vows.

I. THEY are forbidden to ſwear in vain, or to pronounce any of God's names without neceſſity, according to the injunction in the decalogue, and v. chapter of Deuteronomy. [p] They are forbidden alſo to lie, and to ſpeak falſe, according to Leviticus, chapter xix. verſe 12. Ye ſhall not ſwear by my name falſly.

II. Nor are vows much approved of, but when they make any, they are obliged to fulfil them. A huſband can give his wife a diſpenſation, even when ſhe is not willing to it, for any vow of abſtinence which ſhe hath made to herſelf; but this muſt be done within the ſpace of four and twenty hours after he comes to the knowledge of the vow. A father can alſo break the vows of his daughter, when ſhe is unmarried; as it is ſaid in the xxx. chapter of Numbers verſe 4.

III. Nay, they hold it from tradition, that a man or woman, who has taken an oath, or made a vow, provided it be of no prejudice to a third perſon, and they have a good reaſon to repent it; they hold it, I ſay, from tradition, that they may be diſpenſed with it, by a Rabbi of credit, or by three common men. A perſon therefore, who has a mind to be diſpenſed with his vow, may tell his reaſons to a Rabbi, or to three private men, who, if they approve of his reaſons, ſhall ſay, be thou unbound, &c. by which means the man is ſet at liberty.

CHAP. V.

Of their Trade and of their Uſury.

I. EVERY man is obliged, both by the law of Moſes, and the oral law, to keep his word, and not to cheat any one, whether Jew or ſtranger, and to obſerve with every body all the rules of commerce, preſcribed in ſeveral places of the Scripture, and eſpecially in the xix. chapter of Leviticus, from the 33. verſe to the end.

II. Some have both ſaid and written, that the Jews oblige themſelves every day to deceive Chriſtians, and look upon it as a laudable action; but this is a calumny, ſpread abroad merely to make them more odious. Far from this, ſeveral Rabbi's have written againſt it, and even our maſter Bachii hath compoſed a treatiſe in his book [q] Cad achema, letter Ghimel Ghezela, where he ſays, that it is a much greater crime to cheat a man who is not, than one who is a Jew; both becauſe the action is wicked in itſelf, and becauſe cauſe the ſcandal is the greater: for this reaſon, they call ſuch a practice Chillul aſcem, or prophaning the name of God, which is one of the ſins of the deepeſt die. Therefore, if any of them do cheat in their dealings, it is to be imputed only to the particular perſon who does it. Neither are any true Jews guilty of ſuch a practice, deceit not being allowed by the law, nor in any manner tolerated by the Rabbi's.

[p] Exod. xx.

[q] A buſhel of meal.

III. It is true indeed, that being reduced to a miſerable condition by their diſperſion, and not ſuffered any where almoſt to hold any land, and deprived of the ſure ways of trading or getting money, their ſoul may be debaſed, and have degenerated from the primitive ſincerity of the Iſraelites.

IV. For the ſame reaſon, they have allowed themſelves the liberty of turning uſurers, relying upon this paſſage. [t] Unto a ſtranger thou mayeſt lend upon uſury, but unto thy brother thou ſhalt not lend upon uſury. By this word ſtranger, the Jews ought not to underſtand any others but theſe ſeven nations, the Hittites, the Amorites, the Jebuſites, &c. whom God had ordered to be ſmitten with the edge of the ſword. But as the greateſt part of the Jews have no other way of getting a livelihood, they maintain it to be lawful for them to lend upon uſury to thoſe that are their [r] brethren only by nature.

V. [s] Thoſe paſſages therefore of the Rabbi's, allowing of extortion from ſtrangers, are to be underſtood only of theſe ſeven nations, their opinion being founded upon their being ſo often curſed in the Holy Scripture. But it can in no wiſe be underſtood of thoſe nations where the Jews are now tolerated, and where they are treated with lenity, both by the Princes and the people, eſpecially amongſt Chriſtians; ſince it would be a practice contrary not only to the written law, but even to the law of nature.

CHAP. VI.

Of their Contracts, Writings, Witneſſes, Judges, and Judgments.

I. ALL kinds of bargains, ſales, or agreements are accounted valid, when both parties have touched the clothes or the handkerchief of the witneſſes; which is a ſort of oath called [u] Kinian Suddar, that is to ſay, the purchaſe of the cloth.

II. Public notaries are of no conſideration amongſt them, unleſs the notary, as a writer, goes for a witneſs, which with two other men beſides, makes any ſort of writings authentic, whether it be a matter of trade, a will, a marriage, a divorce, or any other affair whatever.

III. In order to make ſuch a writing the more authentic for the future, and to be of uſe at all times and in all places, they get it authoriſed by three other perſons, who are appointed judges of the affair.

IV. In

[t] Deut. chap. xxiii. ℣. 20.

[r] They not being allowed to hold lands, or to inherit any eſtate in property, they think that they are allowed to get their livelyhood by other means, and that the reaſon againſt uſury, is of no force againſt them, as being founded upon the law of nature. The firſt edition ſays, being not uſed by many as brothers by nature.

[s] This is not in the firſt edition, but only in the copy printed at Venice, where it ſeems to have been added on purpoſe.

[u] This chapter was omitted in the firſt edition.

IV. In order likewiſe to have unexceptionable witneſſes, they muſt be examined before the guilty perſon or the adverſary.

V. The chief Rabbi's are generally judges of the differences which ariſe amongſt the Jews, let the diſputes be upon whatſoever matter, or elſe the parties agree to take ſome of their friends for arbitrators.

VI. The Rabbi's judge conformably to what is written in [x] Choſen Hamiſpath, or in the collection of caſes adjudged called [y] Sheeloth Veſchuod, taken for the greateſt part out of the xxi. chapter of Exodus; which begins thus: Now theſe are the judgments which thou ſhalt ſet before them, with what follows to the end of the xxiii. chapter, and from the beginning of the xxii. of Deuteronomy to the end of the xxv. To theſe the judges add their opinion, drawn from the reaſon of the thing, having ſtill an eye to the perſon, the caſe, and point of time.

VII. As for criminal matters, they depend entirely upon thoſe Princes to whom they are ſubjects, the authority of the Rabbi's reaching no farther than to excommunicate thoſe, who tranſgreſs againſt any of their ceremonies, as we have obſerved in the third chapter of this ſecond Part.

CHAP. VII.

Of Meats at all times prohibited, and of their manner of eating.

I. THEY are not allowed to eat the fleſh of any four-footed beaſt, that does not part the hoof and chew the cud, ſuch as the cow and the ſheep: but they never eat rabbet, hare nor ſwine's fleſh. Nor do they eat of any fiſh that hath not ſcales or fins, nor any bird of prey, or reptil, as is fully expreſſed in the xi. chapter of Leviticus.

II. For this reaſon, whatſoever they eat muſt be dreſſed by Jews, and in veſſels belonging to perſons of their own; leſt they ſhould be polluted by any prohibited meats, as I have already obſerved. [z] They even ſcruple to uſe another man's knife.

III. They do not eat the fat of beef, lamb, or kid, as is ordered at the end of the iii. chapter of Leviticus. Neither do they eat the ſinews of the thigh, it being forbidden at the end of the xxxii. chapter of Geneſis. Wherefore they with great care take out all the fat and ſinews, and in ſeveral places in Italy and Germany, many of them do not ſo much as eat the hind quarter, becauſe of the ſinew and fat, this requiring a great deal of care in the taking out, very few being capable of doing it in a proper manner.

IV. [a] They never eat the blood of a four-footed beaſt, nor of a bird, nor even an egg where there is the leaſt drop of blood. It is, perhaps, for this reaſon, that they are forbidden to eat of any terreſtrial beaſt, or of any bird, whoſe throat hath not been cut open, in order to let out the blood.

[x] The breaſt-plate of judgment. It is the title of part of an admirable book upon the Jewiſh law.
[y] Queſtions and anſwers. [z] Part I. chap. iii. [a] Levit. chap. xvii. ℣. 10, and others.

V. When any animal is to be killed, it is performed by ſome ſkilful perſon, becauſe of the circumſtances which muſt be obſerved on ſuch an occaſion. They muſt chooſe the moſt proper time, have a knife that cuts well, and that hath no notches, that the blood may immediately flow out, and not ſtop; they let it run upon the ground, or upon aſhes, with which they cover it immediately.

VI. They muſt not cut off any part of a living beaſt, nor eat it, whether dreſſed or raw.

VII. They are forbidden to kill a cow and her calf on the ſame day; neither can they kill an ewe or a goat, and their kids at the ſame time, when they know it.

VIII. [b] If any of thoſe beaſts or birds, which they are allowed to eat, ſhould die of themſelves, or be killed in another manner than that which I have already mentioned, they cannot taſte of it.

IX. So if they ſhould happen to find a thorn, or a needle in any bird, which has pricked them, or if they diſcover an impoſtume, or vitiated lungs in the four-footed beaſts, all which they ſearch carefully into, after the beaſts are dead; they do not eat of them, according to the prohibition at the end of the xxiii. of Exodus, and in other places.

X. If a living beaſt has had a bone broken in one of the limbs, pointed out by the Rabbi's, or ſhould have been wounded ſo as to be in danger of dying, then they cannot eat of it.

XI. For the better obſerving of the law before mentioned concerning the blood, they leave their meat for the ſpace of an hour in ſalt, before they put it into the kettle, in order that all the blood may come out. Otherwiſe, they can eat no meat, unleſs they roaſt it: and as the liver is full of blood, they broil it well upon coals, before they boil it.

XII. As to the fiſh which they eat, there is nothing to be obſerved, for they are not forbidden to eat their blood, nor ordered to throw them away, when they are dead or vitiated.

XIII. They cannot at the ſame meal eat both fleſh, and cheeſe, or milk, becauſe it is ſaid: [c] Thou ſhalt not ſeethe a kid in his mother's milk. This they underſtand of all kind of beaſts, and of any milk whatſoever. And ſo far are they from dreſſing their meat with any thing made of milk, that they do not ſo much as mix both in a meal, neither do they eat at the ſame hour fleſh, and cheeſe afterwards: becauſe they ſay, that there might remain ſome fleſh between the teeth, that would mix itſelf with the cheeſe. But if they eat cheeſe ſome time before, they may afterwards eat meat.

XIV. Hence it comes, that the veſſels which are uſed for meat, are never made uſe of for things compoſed of milk, every one having its peculiar mark to be diſtinguiſhed by; nay, they have different knives for theſe things. If, by chance, they dreſs one of theſe two eatables in veſſels appropriated to the other, they not only avoid taſting it, but likewiſe, if it be an earthen veſſel, cannot uſe it any more.

XV. They never eat any cheeſe, unleſs they have ſeen it in curds before, for fear there ſhould be ſome milk of a prohibited beaſt, or part of the ſkin mixed with curds, which might might be accounted both fleſh and cheeſe, as alſo for fear the milk ſhould have been warmed in a kettle already uſed in boiling ſome prohibited meat; they therefore ſet a mark on thoſe cheeſes whoſe curds they have ſeen made.

[b] Lev. xvii. ℣. 15.

[c] Exod. xxiii. ℣. 19. and in other places.

XVI. Their Rabbi's had formerly ordered, that they ſhould not eat both fleſh and fiſh at the ſame meal, under pretence that it was not wholſome; but this is not obſerved at preſent.

CHAP. VIII.

Of their Drink.

I. THERE are ſome, who, according to the ancient Rabbi's, think that the Jews are not allowed to drink any wine, made or taſted, by any other people but Jews. The Eaſtern and German Jews obſerve this rule. But the Italians do not regard it. They ſay, that thoſe Rabbi's who made this ordinance then lived amongſt idolaters, with whom they would not permit the Jews to hold any communication, which is not to be underſtood of thoſe nations with whom the Jews live at preſent, whom the ſame Rabbi's have declared not to be idolaters.

II. They have alſo many other ceremonies; as for example, at the beginning and at the end of their feaſts, weddings, and circumciſion, and on ſome other occaſions, they repeat ſome lines in praiſe of God over the glaſs before they drink it; every time they drink, they ſay a ſhort grace before and after. For they have this liquor in great veneration, becauſe it is ſaid, [d] that wine maketh glad the heart of man: and in another place, [e] that it cheereth God and man.

CHAP. IX.

Of their way of making their Bread.

I. WHEN their bread is kneaded, that is to ſay, when they have made a lump of dough of about the quantity of forty eggs, they take a little bit of it, of which they make a cake, which is inſtead of the firſt-fruits preſcribed in Numbers, chap. xv. ver. 20. Ye ſhall offer up a cake of the firſt of your dough, &c.

II. They were uſed formerly to give that cake to the prieſt, but now they throw it into the fire, where they leave it entirely to be conſumed.

III. This is one of the three precepts which are to be obſerved by the women, becauſe it is generally their buſineſs to make the bread.

[d] Pſalm civ. ℣. 15. [e] Judges ix. ℣. 13.

CHAP. X.

Of their way of eating at Table.

I. THEY are obliged to waſh their hands very clean before they ſit down to table: upon this the Rabbi's have been very ſcrupulous, as well as upon their way of waſhing their hands in the morning, [f] as I have already obſerved.

II. After they are ſeated they commonly repeat the xxiii. Pſalm, The Lord is my ſhepherd, &c. And then the maſter of the houſe takes a whole loaf, which having bleſſed, he breaks, and gives a bit of it, no bigger than an olive, to every one of his gueſts, after which they may eat as much as they have a mind to: but the firſt time every one drinks, [g] he is obliged to repeat the grace I have mentioned.

III. The Rabbi's have written a great deal upon the rules of eating with civility and decency, they forbid every one to tread upon bread, or to throw that, or any other eatable whatſoever upon the ground, that God's favours may have no contempt ſhewn them.

IV. When the meal is over, they waſh their hands, and take the knives from off the table; becauſe a table, in their opinion, repreſents an altar, upon which no iron ought to be laid; and many of them repeat the ſame Pſalm which the Levites were uſed to ſay in the temple, upon the ſame day of the week on which they happen to be aſſembled, as alſo the lxvii. Pſalm, God be merciful unto us. If there be three, or more that have eaten together, one of them taking a clean glaſs, fills it with wine, and lifting it up, ſays, Gentlemen, let us bleſs him whoſe good things we have eaten; to which the others anſwer: Bleſſed be he whoſe good things we have eaten, and who hath fed us in his goodneſs. Then the firſt goes on giving thanks to God, and praying unto him, that he would grant to every one the neceſſaries of life, as he gave unto their forefathers the land of promiſe; beſeeching him alſo that he would rebuild Jeruſalem. The maſter of the houſe afterwards bleſſes them, and prays for peace: he gives to every one of them a little wine out of his own glaſs, and drinks the remainder himſelf; then every thing is taken away.

[f] Part I. chap. vii. [g] Part I. chap. ix.

The END of the ſecond Part.

AN HISTORICAL

DISSERTATION

CONCERNING THE

CEREMONIES and CUSTOMS

Which are at this time obſerved amongſt the JEWS.

PART III.

CHAP. I.

Of the Sabbath-day.

I. THERE is no holy day amongſt all thoſe that are kept by the Jews, for which they have ſo great a veneration as for the Sabbath-day; becauſe it was ordained immediately after the creation of the world, and is mentioned in diverſe places and at ſeveral times in the Scripture, eſpecially in the Decalogue, which forbids the performance of the leaſt thing upon that day, and commands a general reſt to all.

II. The Rabbi's have reduced all thoſe things which God has prohibited to be done on the Sabbath-day to thirty nine heads, each of which have their circumſtances and dependences; viz. to plow, to ſow, to reap, to bottle, and to tie up the ſheaves, to threſh, to winnow, to ſift, to grind, to bolt, to knead, to bake, to ſhear, to waſh, to comb or card, to ſpin, to twiſt, to weave, to die, to tie, to untie, to ſew, to break into pieces, to faſten with wedges or pins, to build, to demoliſh, to knock with a hammer, to hunt, to fiſh, to kill, to flay, flay, to prepare or ſcrape the ſkin, to cut it in order for working, to write, to eraſe, to make lines for writing, to kindle, to put out, to carry any thing out of doors into the ſtreet.

Theſe are the general heads of prohibited things, which include ſeveral particulars; as filing, for example, falls under the article of grinding, becauſe they both break a body to pieces; to curdle milk falls under the head of building, for both theſe out of ſeveral diſtinct parts make but one. It is the ſame with the other heads, which are all expounded with great ſubtilty by the Rabbi's; nay, they mark even the time when, and the manner how.

III. They are not allowed upon this day either to kindle their fire, or put it out, conformably to what is ſaid in the xxxv. chapter of Exodus, verſe 3. Ye ſhall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the Sabbath-day. Inſomuch, that they dare not touch it, nor even the kindled wood, which they cannot ſtir up. Nor are they allowed to light or put out a lamp in cold countries, unleſs they have hot ſtoves: but they may employ ſome body that is not a Jew to kindle their fire, or elſe they diſpoſe it in ſuch a manner, that it lights of itſelf, if not, they ſit without a fire.

IV. For this very reaſon, they dreſs no meat upon this day, neither can they eat of any thing that has been dreſſed, or that is grown or gathered on the Sabbath-day.

V. They are forbidden alſo to carry any burden on the Sabbath-day, ſo that they wear no more clothes than what is neceſſary to cover them, or ſuch other things as are fixed to them; becauſe any thing elſe would be accounted a burthen or load. Their nicety reaches even to the dreſſes of their women, children, ſervants, and the loading of beaſts, as is mentioned in the Decalogue: [a] Thou ſhalt not do any work, thou, nor thy ſon, &c.

VI. They are not allowed on this day to talk of buſineſs, of the price of any thing, to conclude any bargain relating to buying or ſelling; nor to give, or receive, as Iſaiah ſays, chapter lviii. Thou ſhalt not turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, &c.

VII. Neither can they upon this day handle or touch any thing heavy, or any tools, nor can they take in their hands any of thoſe things which are forbidden to be uſed on the Sabbath-day.

VIII. They cannot walk above a mile out of any town, or [b] borough; that is to ſay, two thouſand cubits.

IX. Their Rabbi's, in order to prevent trading or working on that day, have, to theſe prohibitions, added ſeveral others, as not to handle any money, nor to ride on horſeback, or go in a boat, nor play upon any inſtrument, or to bathe.

X. The Rabbi's are very rigid, in diſtempers which require the ſurgeon's aſſiſtance; but with reſpect to phyſicians, whenever they are of opinion there is the leaſt danger, or when a woman is juſt brought to bed, every thing is allowed.

XI. Therefore, on the Friday they prepare whatever is neceſſary for the Sabbath, according to what Moſes ſays concerning manna, [c] And it came to paſs, that on the ſixth day, &c.

They

[a] Exod. xx. Deut. v.

[b] The Jews can walk as much as they pleaſe on the Sabbath-day, provided they do not go out of the ſuburbs of the town wherein they live. They always include the ſuburbs as a part of the town, and ſo when they have a mind to go out of town upon that day, they meaſure the diſtance they are allowed to walk from the end of the ſuburb.

[c] Exod. xvi. ℣. 22. and 26.

They are alſo of opinion, that it is a good action to be very expenſive on that day, in order to ſhew the greater regard to the feaſt, as Iſaiah ſays, chapter lviii. ver. 13. They even think that they honour the Sabbath by humbling themſelves in doing ſomething mean, and below their condition.

XII. They never undertake any work on the Friday, but what they can eaſily finiſh before the evening. About an hour before the ſetting of the Sun, they take ſuch victuals as is prepared for the next day, and lay it in a warm place; after which all manner of work ceaſes. In ſome towns, they have a man on purpoſe, to give notice half an hour before the beginning of the Sabbath, that every one may be free from work, juſt when it begins.

XIII. They ſuppoſe the Sabbath to begin half an hour before the ſetting of the Sun, and conſequently from that moment, all prohibitions are obſerved and take place. Thereupon, the women are obliged to light up a lamp in a room, which has commonly ſix lights, or four at leaſt, that burn the greateſt part of the night. They cover alſo a table with a clean napkin, and lay bread upon it, and then cover it with another long and narrow piece of linen. Which they do, ſay they, in remembrance of the manna, which fell after the ſame manner, having dew under and over it; but on the Sabbath-day none fell.

XIV. Some of them, in order to begin the Sabbath well, put on clean linen, waſh their hands and face, and then they go to the ſynagogue, where they repeat the xcii. Pſalm, It is a good thing to give thanks to the Lord, &c. with their common prayers, thereto adding, the commemoration of the Sabbath, with theſe words out of Geneſis: [d] Thus the heavens were finiſhed, &c. And God bleſſed the ſeventh day, &c.

XV. As ſoon as they come out of the ſynagogue, they go directly home, where their ſalutation to each other is neither good morrow nor good night, but a good Sabbath. Beſides this, fathers bleſs their children, and maſters their ſcholars; to which others will join places of the Scripture in praiſe of the Sabbath, ſome before meat, and ſome after, according to the cuſtom of the place where they live.

XVI. When the whole family is ſeated at table, the maſter of the houſe, holding a glaſs of wine, pronounces theſe words out of Geneſis: [e] Thus the heavens were finiſhed, &c. After which he returns God thanks for having ordained the keeping of the Sabbath, and bleſſes the wine in his hand, then drinks part of it himſelf, and gives a little of it to thoſe at table with him. After this, he repeats the xxiii. Pſalm, The Lord is my ſhepherd, &c. This being done he bleſſes the bread, and gives ſome to every one; then they all eat and divert themſelves that evening, and the next day. The meal being over, they waſh their hands, and obſerve the ceremonies which I have mentioned, concerning their way of eating. Some Jews, after they have eaten, repeat the civ. Pſalm, Bleſs the Lord, O my ſoul, &c.

XVII. They riſe later on the Sabbath, than on other days, and when they go to the ſynagogue, they ſay ſeveral Pſalms and prayers in praiſe of the Sabbath, which they mix with their common prayers. At this time they bring out the Pentateuch, and ſeven perſons read the whole ſection for the day: and afterwards ſome paſſages out of the prophets, relating to what had been read out of the law. This laſt leſſon is called [f] Aftara, and is generally read by a child, in order to uſe him to it. XVIII. Then [d] Gen. ii. [e] Gen. ii.

[f] That is to ſay leave, becauſe after this leſſon out of the prophets is read, they go home. The meaning of that word, is the ſame with our word maſs, which comes from the Latin miſſio, or miſſa.

XVIII. Then the man who holds the book in his hands, lifts it up, and a bleſſing is given to the whole audience.

XIX. They have another ſolemn bleſſing for the Prince, under whoſe government they live, wherein they pray unto God, that he would keep him in peace and gladneſs, that his deſigns may be ſucceſsful, that his dominions may be enlarged, and that he may love their nation, according to what is ſaid: [h] Seek the peace of the city, whither I have cauſed you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the Lord for it; for in the peace thereof ſhall ye have peace. After which they ſay another prayer called Muſſaf, that is to ſay, Addition. It contains the words uſed in the ſacrifice, that was performed in the temple on the Sabbath; and thus ends the ſervice.

XX. They have ſermons ſometimes in the forenoon, ſometimes in the afternoon, in their ſynagogues, or places appointed for their meeting, the text of which is taken from the Pentateuch out of the leſſons for the day. In theſe ſermons they recommend morality and reprove vice, [i] illuſtrating their opinions with ſayings from the Rabbi's, as I have already obſerved.

XXI. In the evening they return to the ſynagogue, and join the commemoration of the Sabbath along with their common prayers, and three perſons read the beginning of the ſection, for the week following, out of the Pentateuch.

XXII. They generally make three meals during the twenty four hours of the Sabbath; the firſt is on the Friday after evening-prayer, the two others on the next day in order to honour the holy day. During the whole time the cloth is never taken away.

XXIII. When it is dark enough to diſcover three middling ſtars, then the Sabbath is over, and they may again go to work, becauſe the evening-prayer, which they chooſe rather to defer than haſten, is begun by that time.

XXIV. To the common prayer for the evening, they join a commemoration of the Sabbath, which is diſtinguiſhed from the other days of the week, together with the xci. Pſalm, He that dwelleth in the ſecret place of the Moſt High, &c. To this they add ſeveral places of Scripture, together with bleſſings and good wiſhes.

XXV. [k] As they are of opinion alſo, that the ſouls of the damned, and of thoſe who are in Purgatory, do not ſuffer during the Sabbath-day, they make it laſt as long as poſſible by their hymns and prayers.

XXVI. In the evening, when every one of the family is come home, they light a taper or lamp with two wicks at leaſt. The maſter of the family takes ſome wine in a cup with ſweet ſmelling ſpices, and after repeating a few paſſages out of the prophets, as for example out of the cxvi. Pſalm, I will take the cup of ſalvation; and the end of the viii. chapter of Eſther, The Jews had light and gladneſs, &c. and ſuch like places, as ſo many wiſhes for the proſperity and ſucceſs of the week they are now entered upon; he bleſſes the wine and the ſpice, and ſmells to them in order to begin the week with pleaſure. He afterwards bleſſes the light of the fire, that has not as yet been made uſe of, and then caſts his eyes on his hands and nails, as remembring he is going to work. What we have related here, has many other meanings in the writings of the Rabbi's, but the whole is intended to ſignify, that the Sabbath is over, and is from that moment divided [h] Jerem. chap. xix. 7.

[i] Part II chap. i.

[k] This was omitted in the ſecond edition.

vided from the day of labour that follows, and thus they end. For this reaſon, the whole ceremony is called Habdala, or Diſtinction: at the ſame time, ſome throw wine upon the ground in token of mirth, others ſing Pſalms or paſſages of the Scripture, as a good omen of a happy week; after which every one falls to what his inclination prompts him.

XXVII. When they ſalute each other that night, they do not ſay I wiſh you a good night, but may God give you a good week.

CHAP. II.

Of the new Moon, of the Names of the Months, and of the intercalary Month.

I. THE courſe of the moon makes the Jewiſh month, and the new moon is the beginning of it.

II. In the time of the Sanhedrim, that is, the judges of Jeruſalem, they kept two men, on purpoſe to give them notice of the firſt appearance of the moon, and upon the report of thoſe men, they publicly declared, that from that day the month began, and thereby fixed their holy days with reſpect to the times preſcribed for them. But ſince the deſtruction of the temple, they do it by computation, and have a yearly calendar printed, which ſhews them the new and full moons, the four ſeaſons of the year, the holy days, and other things of this kind. They alſo ſet down, in their calendars, the holy days of the Chriſtians, in order to know upon what days they may trade with them.

III. The day of the new moon is alſo a holy day, both as it is ſo ordained in the book of Numbers, [1] and as there was an extraordinary ſacrifice offered up on that day. This holy day is ſometimes made up of two different days, that is to ſay, the end of one day with the beginning of the other. They are not prohibited work or trade upon this day, the women only abſtain from work, and they all fare a little better than uſual.

IV. They take notice of the firſt day of the month in their prayers, and on that day repeat from the cxiii. Pſalm, to the cxviii. They bring out the Pentateuch, and four perſons read it, to which they add, the prayer called Muſſaf [m]. They alſo, at the ſame time, read the ordinance for the ſacrifice, which was formerly offered up on this day.

V. On the eve of the Sabbath following the new moon, or ſome other evening after, as ſoon as they ſee the creſcent or half moon, the Jews meet all together, and pray unto God, ſtiling him the Creator of the planets, and the Reſtorer of the new moon. Then raiſing their hands up towards heaven, they beſeech God to deliver them from all manner of evil, and having commemorated King David, they ſalute one another, and ſo depart.

VI. Theſe are the names of their months, Tiſri, Haſſuan, Chiſleu, Tevet, Scevat, Adar, Niſan, Jiar, Sivan, Tamus, Au, Elul. Tiſri, the month by which they begin their reckoning, is the ſame with our September; but of this I ſhall ſpeak more at large, when I come to treat of the beginning of the year.

VII. To

[1] Numb. x. ẏ. 10. and xxviii. ẏ. 11.

[m] Addition, as we in our offices ſay, to commemorate a feſtival.

VII. To the end that the ſolar years may be equal with the lunar, they make each cycle or revolution to contain nineteen years; and of theſe nineteen years, ſeven contain thirteen months each, ſo that every ſecond or third year has thirteen months in it, and is called [n] Meubar. When this happens they reckon the month Adar twice, and place it betwixt February and March; ſo that they have Adar the firſt, and Adar the ſecond, which is called [o] Veadar.

CHAP. III.

Of the Paſſover.

I. THE 15. day of the month Niſan, which frequently anſwers to April, is the firſt day of the Paſſover, called [p] Peſach, and is the commemoration of the departure of the Jews out of Egypt, and laſts a whole week: but thoſe who live out of Jeruſalem and its territories, make it laſt eight days, according to the ancient cuſtom; when, by order of the Sanhedrim, the new moon was proclaimed without any computation, as I have already ſaid in the foregoing chapter. This feaſt is commanded in the xii. chapter of Exodus [q], and in many other places of the Scripture.

II. The two firſt and laſt days of the Paſſover are great holy days, during which no body is allowed either to work or tranſact any buſineſs; this they keep alſo as ſtrict as they do the Sabbath. But they may make a fire, dreſs their meat, and carry the things they want from one place to another. During the four other days, they are only forbidden to work, but are allowed to touch money, and thoſe days are diſtinguiſhed from the ordinary working days, by ſome particular things only.

III. During theſe eight days the Jews are forbidden to eat, or to have any leavened bread, or any leaven in their houſes, or even in their poſſeſſion; inſomuch, that they eat none but unleavened bread for eight days together, which bread is called [r] Azyma.

IV. The better to obſerve this precept, they ſearch the whole houſe over with the utmoſt care, in order to rid it of the leaſt thing that is fermented. They even look into all the corners of the houſe, into the trunks and cupboards. Then the houſe being ſcowred, they white-waſh and furniſh it with new table and kitchen furniture, or with ſuch as is appropriated to the ſervice of this day only. If they have been uſed at any other time, and are of metal, they are never uſed on this occaſion, till firſt heated in a forge and new-poliſhed, to the end, that during thoſe eight days, nothing which has touched leavened bread, may be made uſe of. From hence it comes, that on the vigil of the holy day, the head of the family ſearches the whole houſe, to ſee if there be no leavened bread in it. The next day, about eleven of the clock, they burn a bit of bread, which is to give notice, that the prohibition againſt leavened bread is then begun. This ceremony is accompanied with particular words, declaring, that the maſter of the family has no leaven in his poſſeſſion; that if it is not ſo, at leaſt he thinks ſo, and that he hath done his duty towards preventing it.

V. Immediately after, they prepare for the making of unleavened bread, which they call Mazzoth, and they make as much of it as may laſt during the eight days of the feſtival. They take care to uſe ſuch meal as has never been wet, or heated, for fear that it it may have fermented. They make flat heavy cakes of it, in ſeveral different forms; and leſt they ſhould riſe, they bake them immediately in an oven, keep them in a clean place, and eat them inſtead of bread during the holy days. Some of them are made with eggs and ſugar for nice taſtes, and for the ſick, but theſe are alſo without any leaven, and are called Mazza Aſcira, or rich cakes.

[n] Intercalated. [o] And Adar, or ſecond Adar. [p] Paſſage. [q] Exod. xii. ℣. 14. [r] Exod. xii. ℣. 15, 16, 17.

VI. The 14. of Niſan, which is the eve of the Paſſover, the firſt-born in every family generally faſts, in remembrance of the ſmiting of the firſt-born of Egypt by the Lord on the following night.

VII. In the evening they go to prayers, and at their coming home again ſit down to a table, prepared before by day-light, which table is ſet off with much pomp, and covered with the beſt things each family can afford. Inſtead of the ceremony formerly obſerved, as related in the xii. chapter of Exodus, viz. to eat the lamb with unleavened bread and bitter herbs, &c. they have in a diſh, or little baſket, ſome bits of lamb or kid, mixed with unleavened bread, and bitter herbs, ſuch as celery, ſuccory, and lettice; they have a ſauce to this in another ſmall diſh: all which is done in remembrance of the lime and bricks, which they were forced to make in Egypt. Then with glaſſes of wine in their hand they repeat the [r] Hagada, which contains the miſeries their fathers ſuffered in Egypt, and the wonders which God wrought for their deliverance out of it. Afterwards, they return God thanks for all thoſe favours, and repeat the cxiii. Pſalm, and the following, which are called [s] Hallel, and then go to ſupper. After which, they continue repeating and ſinging thoſe Pſalms, and other hymns proper for the day, and ſo retire to bed. The following night they do the ſame.

VIII. Their morning prayers for that time are the ſame which are uſed upon the other holy days, excepting only that they add the prayers particular to this feſtival, with the Pſalms beforementioned, from the cxiii. to the cxix. The Pentateuch being taken out, five men, one after another, read the xii. chapter of Exodus, and [u] the inſtitution of the ſacrifices of the Paſſover. They afterwards ſay the prayer called Muſſaf, then they out of the prophets read ſome paſſages that bear a relation to what has been read in the Pentateuch, that is to ſay, the leſſon we before called Aftara, in the ſame manner as on the Sabbath. After dinner they commemorate the holy day, and pray for their ſovereign after the ſame manner as is practiſed on the Sabbath.

IX. The ſame ceremonies are obſerved on the two laſt days, with this exception, that, on the two laſt evenings, they do not obſerve the ſame ceremonies at table, which they obſerved on the two firſt.

X. They conclude the feſtival with the ceremony called Habdala, as it is practiſed on the Sabbath-days, but they omit the ſpice; as ſoon as this is over they may eat leavened bread.

XI. They reckon forty nine days from the ſecond night of the Paſſover to the Feaſt of weeks, in which they offered an handful of barley ears, which was called Homer; from thence they have taken this way of ſpeaking, To count the Homer, [w] And ye ſhall count from the morrow, &c. Every night, after the bleſſing of the precept is over, they ſay, this day we reckon ſo many days from the Homer.

XII. The whole time from the day after the Paſſover to the 33. day following, all that time, I ſay, is ſpent in a ſort of mourning, they neither marry during that time, nor have have any new clothes made, neither do they cut their hair, or make any public rejoycings: becauſe it happened at that time, that is to ſay, from the day after the Paſſover until the 33. day after, that there was a great mortality amongſt the diſciples of Rabbi Hachiba, who was an eminent man amongſt them. And as, after the death of many thouſands, the ſickneſs ceaſed on the 33. day of the Homer, they call that day [x] Lag, which ſignifies 33. taking the letters for ſo many figures. This day is kept with great demonſtrations of joy, and as a ſort of holy day; when it is over, they throw off all ſigns of grief.

[r] The narration. [s] Theſe are Pſalms which begin with Alleluia. [u] Numb. xxviii.
[w] Levit. xxiii. ℣. 10. and 15.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Feſtival of Weeks, or Pentecoſt.

I. ON the 50. day of the Homer, which is the ſixth day of the month Sivan, is kept the feſtival Shavuoth, or of weeks, ſo called, becauſe it is kept at the end of the ſeven weeks, which they reckon from the Paſſover, after the manner we have already obſerved. This feſtival is alſo called, in Scripture, the day of the Firſt-fruits, [y] becauſe the firſt-fruits were on that day offered in the temple. It is likewiſe called the Feaſt of harveſt, becauſe about this time they began to cut their corn. It is alſo called by different names in different places of the Scripture. It is at this time kept for two days running.

II. Theſe two days are kept as the Paſſover holy days, that is to ſay, no work is done upon them, neither do they tranſact any buſineſs, no more than on the Sabbath, excepting that they may kindle their fire, dreſs their victuals, and carry the things they want from one place to another.

III. They hold it from tradition, that the law was given on mount Sinaï upon that very day: [z] therefore they adorn their ſynagogues, the places wherein they read, and their own houſes too with roſes, and other ſorts of flowers in great quantities, interwoven in the form of crowns and feſtoons.

IV. Their prayers are accommodated to the feaſt, and out of the Pentateuch they read the account of the ſacrifice made upon that day, together with the Aftara out of the prophets, and the bleſſing for their ſovereign; the ſermon in the afternoon is in praiſe of the law.

V. The ſecond day of the feaſt being over, the ceremony of the Habdala is performed in the evening, as we have obſerved at the end of the Paſſover, to ſhew that the feaſt is over.

[x] L. and G, in Hebrew, make 33.
[y] Deut. xvi. Exod. xxiii. Lev. xxiii. Numb. xxviii.
[z] Exod. xix.

CHAP V.

Of their New-year's-day, and of the Month Elul.

I. THE Talmudiſts differ concerning the time when the world began. Some of them inſiſt, that it was in the ſpring, that is to ſay, in the month Niſan, which anſwers to our March; others that it was in Autumn, that is, in the month Tiſri, which is our September. This laſt opinion has prevailed, inſomuch, that they begin their year from that time. And though it is ſaid in the Scripture, of the month Niſan, [a] This month ſhall be unto you the beginning of months: and tho' according to this way of reckoning, they ſay, the firſt, ſecond, third month, and ſo down to Adar, which is the twelfth and laſt month; yet they afterwards altered this way of reckoning, and began their year with the month Tiſri or September.

II. From thence came the feaſt Roſch Haſana, or New-year's-day, which is celebrated on the two firſt days of Tiſri, to which they refer what is ſaid in Leviticus, [b] In the ſeventh month, in the ſeventh day of the month, ſhall ye have a Sabbath, &c. During this feaſt, work and buſineſs are laid aſide, as on the two other feſtivals, which I have already mentioned.

III. They have it handed down by tradition among them, that on this day eſpecially, God judges the actions of the laſt year, and diſpoſes the events of the year enſuing: this day being, as it were, the very moment of the world's birth, they pretend that God upon this day carefully examins every thing that has happened in the foregoing year. For this reaſon, they begin their penance from the firſt day of the month Elul, which is juſt before this; in ſome places, they waſh themſelves before day-break, ſay their prayers, confeſs their ſins, and repeat penitential Pſalms. Many of them on this day begin their faſting, penance, and give alms without ceaſing, until the day of pardon, which I ſhall ſpeak to in the following chapter. This laſts forty days: on the beginning of the month Elul they blow the horn, for a reaſon hereafter mentioned.

IV. Theſe acts of devotion are generally obſerved, at leaſt on the week before the feaſt, and on the eve of it, when ſeveral waſh, and have thirty nine ſtripes given them by way of diſcipline, [c] according to what is ſaid: [d] Forty ſtripes he may give him, and not exceed, &c. This they call [e] Malcuth.

V. On the firſt night of the year, as they come back from the ſynagogue, they ſay one to the other, be thou written in a good year; to this the other anſwers, and thou alſo. This day they ſerve up honey with leavened bread at table, and all ſuch things as may preſage a fruitful and temperate year.

VI. Many of them, on the morning of theſe two feaſts, go clothed in white to the ſynagogue, as a mark of their repentance and purity. There are ſome amongſt the Germans, who, at that time, wear the clothes which they deſign for their burial; this they do by way of mortification. They have more prayers on this feaſt than on any other, becauſe of their wiſhes for a happy new-year, and of the forgiveneſs of ſins. The Pen-

[a] Exod. xii. [b] Chap. xxiii. ỳ. 24. [c] Deut. xxv.

[d] The Scripture preſcribes forty ſtripes, but the tradition in the Talmud no more than thirty nine. St. Paul in his 2d to the Corinthians, chap. xi. ỳ. 24. tells us, that this tradition was obſerved in his time.

[e] Stripes.

tateuch being taken out, five different perſons read the account of the ſacrifice, that uſed to be offered on this day: the Aſtara is repeated out of the prophets, and then the bleſſing for their Prince.

VII. They then blow the horn thirty times, ſometimes ſlow, ſometimes quick, according to what is ſaid in [f] Leviticus and in Numbers, It is a day of blowing of horns unto you, &c. They ſay, that this is done in order to put them in mind of God's judgments, and to terrify ſinners, and move them to repentance. To this they add the prayer called Muſſaf, with many other circumſtances proper for the day: and then they blow the horn in the ſame manner as before. When they are returned home, they eat, after which they ſpend the remainder of the day in hearing ſermons, and in other acts of devotion. Theſe two days are alike in all reſpects, and on the evening which concludes the feſtival, they perform the Habdala, already mentioned as to other holy days.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Chipur, or Day of Expiation.

I. AFTER theſe two holy days, they ſtill continue to riſe before day-light, to go to prayers and to do penance until the tenth of the ſame month Tiſri, which is the faſt of expiation, and is called [g] Jom Hachipur, ordained in Leviticus, chap. xxiii. On the tenth of this ſeventh month, there ſhall be a day of atonement, &c. and during that day all manner of work ceaſes, as on the Sabbath; and they faſt ſo ſtrictly, as neither to eat nor drink the leaſt thing.

II. They had formerly a certain ceremony on the eve of this feaſt, which conſiſted in ſtriking their head three times with a living cock, ſaying every time, let this be ſacrificed inſtead of me. This ceremony was called [h] Capara, but it is now left off in Italy and in the Eaſt, becauſe they have been ſenſible it was a piece of ſuperſtition, which had no manner of foundation.

III. They eat very heartily on this eve, becauſe they faſt the next day. Many of them waſh, and have thirty nine ſtripes given them, called Malcuth. Thoſe that are poſſeſſed of other people's goods, if they have any conſcience, make reſtitution at that time. They aſk pardon of thoſe whom they have offended, and forgive thoſe that have offended them. They give alms, and generally obſerve all the inſtances of a ſincere repentance.

IV. Two or three hours before ſun-ſet they go to evening prayers, after which they ſup, but make an end of it before the ſun ſets. At this time many of them put on new clothes, or thoſe funeral garments I have already ſpoken of; and thus clad, go to the ſynagogue bare-footed. The ſynagogue is on this night finely illuminated with lamps and candles. There every nation, in their own way, make prayers and confeſſions, in teſtimony of their repentance, which laſt at leaſt three hours, after which they go home to bed. Some ſpend the whole night in the ſynagogue, praying to God, repeating Pſalms, and ſleeping very little.

V. The next morning, by break of day, they all repair again to the ſynagogue dreſſed as the day before, and there ſtay till the evening in continual prayer, together with the repetition repetition of Pſalms, and confeſſions, and begging of God to forgive them their ſins. This prayer is divided into four parts. That for the morning is called Schabbrith: and that which is added [i] Muſſaf: the afternoon prayer is called Mincha, and the evening [k] Nehila. At the firſt and third the Pentateuch is taken out and read, in the forenoon at ſix of the clock, and in the afternoon at three. To this they add the leſſons out of the prophets, or the Aftara.

[f] Lev. chap. xxiii. ỳ. 24. Numb. xxix. ỳ. 1.

[g] Day of expiation.

[h] Expiation.

VI. After Muſſaf, an account of the ſacrifice is read, and the famous ceremony of the high-prieſt related, who was not allowed to enter into the holy place, but except on that day only, in order to burn perfumes, and caſt the lots upon each of the two goats, the one for the Lord, and the other for [l] Hazazel, as appears in Leviticus chapter xvi.

VII. As ſoon as it is dark enough to ſee the ſtars, they blow the ſame horn which was blown on the firſt day of the year, to give notice that the feaſt is over. They afterwards go out of the ſynagogue, and bowing wiſh one another a long life. They bleſs the new moon, as I obſerved in the third chapter, and being returned home, they ſay the Habdala, then break their faſt and ſit down to eat.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Feaſt of Tents or Tabernacles.

I. ON the fifteenth day of the ſame month Tiſri, is the feaſt of tents, tabernacles, or booths; which they call Succoth, in remembrance of their thus incamping at their departure out of Egypt. For this reaſon it is ſaid in Leviticus, chap. xxiii. ver. 42. Ye ſhall dwell in booths ſeven days, &c. Therefore every one makes a booth in an open place near his houſe, covers it with leaves, and adorns it round with tapeſtry hangings in the beſt manner he is able. The Rabbi's have been very exact as to the form and nature of theſe booths, as well as their height and breadth. They eat and drink in them, nay ſome even ſleep in them too: or at leaſt paſs all that time of the night and day, which they uſed to ſpend at home, in them, during the whole eight days continuance of the feſtival.

II. It laſts nine days, whereof ſeven are preſcribed by the law; and one is added by an ancient cuſtom, as in the Paſſover, which I have already obſerved in the third chapter of this third Part. There is alſo another day preſcribed for the ſolemn aſſembly, beſides the ſeven days. [m] On the eighth day ye ſhall have a ſolemn aſſembly, &c. The two firſt, and the two laſt days of this feaſt are ſolemn; but the other five are not ſo ſtrictly kept, as I have already mentioned in ſpeaking of the Paſſover.

III. There is nothing extraordinary obſerved in the prayers for theſe days, except what is added upon account of the feſtival. They repeat the Pſalms from the cxiii. to the cxix. which are called Hallel. The Pentateuch is taken out and read, the Aftara ſaid, and the bleſſing for their ſovereign repeated: then comes the prayer called Muſſaf, and the leſſon concerning the ſacrifice made upon this day, as it is written Numbers chap. xxix. ver. 13. on the firſt day thirteen bullocks, on the ſecond twelve, on the third eleven, and ſo on decreaſing

[i] This is like our lauds which have been added to our mattins.
[k] The cloſe. Becauſe that prayer cloſes that of the evening, like our complines, which are ſung after veſpers.
[l] This is the name of an hill whither the goat uſed to run, and the hill took its name from the goat, for Azazel is a compound word ſignifying a running goat.
[m] Numb. xxix. ỳ. 35.

decreaſing every day, which makes ſeventy in all, for the ſeven days; and on the eighth day one bullock only.

IV. They, on this day, contrive to ſecure a branch of palm-tree, three of myrtle, two of willow, and one [n] of the lemon whole and entire. And when the Pſalms Hallel are repeating in the ſynagogue, they hold all thoſe branches tied together in their right hand, excepting that of the lemon, which they hold in their left hand; and bringing all theſe branches near one another, they ſhake them towards the four parts of the world; according to what is ſaid in Leviticus, chap. xxiii. And ye ſhall take you on the firſt days the boughs of goodly trees, branches of palm-trees, &c. They likewiſe walk once every day round the little altar or deſk, which is in the ſynagogue, ſinging hymns, and holding in their hands thoſe boughs and branches with their fruit on: becauſe this ceremony was formerly performed round the altar in the temple.

V. On the ſeventh day of the feaſt, which they call [o] Oſaana Rabba, they throw away theſe boughs, and inſtead of them take willow branches and walk ſeven turns round, ſinging the xxix. Pſalm, Give unto the Lord, O ye children of the Mighty, or Princes, give unto the Lord glory and ſtrength, &c. This day is much more ſolemn than the others.

VI. The ninth [p] and laſt day is called Simcha tora, or a rejoicing for the law; becauſe on this day they have gone thro' all the leſſons of the Pentateuch, according to the diviſion made for every week, as mentioned in the ii. chapter of the firſt part.

VII. And as the year ends at this time, they chuſe two men out of each ſynagogue, who are named the Spouſes of the Law: the one, who is called [q] Chathan tora, reads the end, and the other named [r] Chathan Bereſcith, immediately begins it. They perform this with ſigns of chearfulneſs. The ſame is done in all their ſynagogues, and they ſpend the remainder of that day in mirth.

CHAP. VIII.

Of their Faſts, both ordained and voluntary.

I. ON the 17. of [s] Tamuz, which anſwers to our month of July, the Jews keep a faſt, in remembrance of thoſe calamities which formerly happened on the ſame day at Jeruſalem, and becauſe Moſes on this day broke the firſt tables of the law, on account of the golden calf.

II. All their ordinary faſts by commandment begin in the evening: and the Jews neither eat nor drink till the next day after ſun-ſet, when the ſtars begin to appear.

III. At morning ſervice, on faſt days, they add confeſſions to their prayers, and a recital of the melancholy accidents which happened on thoſe days. They bring out the Pentateuch, and read theſe words of the xxxii. chapter of Exodus, ver. 11. And Moſes beſought the Lord, &c. In the afternoon, at the prayer called Mincha, they repeat the ſame out

[n] The branch muſt have its fruit whole and perfect.
[o] To help wonderfully.
[p] This ninth day was inſtituted by the Rabbi's.
[q] Spouſe of the Law.
[r] Spouſe of Bereſcith, i. e. of the beginning of the law, becauſe the law begins with the word Bereſcith.
[s] They make Tamuz generally anſwer to our June. Which is to be obſerved in the following months.

ſame over again: and inſtead of the Aſtara, they recite what Iſaiah ſays in the lv. chap. ver. 6. Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, &c.

IV. Some of the Jews, from the 17. of Tamuz unto the 9. of Au, (which makes three weeks) abſtain from fleſh and wine: but this is voluntary; and they do it only becauſe all thoſe days were once unlucky to Iſrael.

V. The ninth day of Au, is a faſt called [r] Tiſha beau. This faſt is kept more ſtrictly than others. For it was on this day that Nebuchadnezzar burnt the temple, and on the ſame day, the Emperor Titus afterwards burnt it. This faſt begins on the eve, an hour before the ſetting of the ſun; at that time they leave off eating and drinking until the next day in the evening, when the ſtars begin to appear. They remain barefooted, or without leather ſhoes, neither may they waſh themſelves.

VI. In the evening when their common prayers are over, they ſeat themſelves on the ground, and read the lamentations of Jeremiah. They do the ſame the next day, with an addition of ſeveral other lamentations, remaining in ſadneſs all the day, without permiſſion to read in the law; but only Job, Jeremiah, and ſuch melancholy books.

VII. The Sabbath that comes after this is called Nechum, or Conſolation. For at the reading theſe words of [s] Iſaiah, for the Aſtara, Be ye comforted, be ye comforted, O my people, &c. they comfort themſelves with the hopes of the reſtoration of Jeruſalem, and of the temple.

VIII. On the third day of Tiſri, which is the firſt day after the feaſt of the new year, they faſt from one evening to the next, as uſual; becauſe on this day Gedaliah the ſon of Ahikam [u] was killed, an upright man, who was the only remaining ſupport of the remnant of Iſrael. As this day is deſtined to repentance, they take this occaſion to commemorate that righteous man; this faſt is for that reaſon called [w] Zom Gadalia.

IX. After this follows the faſt called Chipur, or of Expiation [x], which I have mentioned before at large, and is celebrated, as I have ſaid, on the 10. of Tiſri.

X. They alſo keep the 10. of Teved, which anſwers to our December, as a faſt, becauſe Nebuchadnezzar laid ſiege to, and afterwards took Jeruſalem on this day.

XI. The 13. of Adar, which is our month of March, is likewiſe kept as a faſt day; this they call Purim [y], and obſerve in remembrance of Eſther, who faſted in her misfortunes, as we read in her hiſtory.

XII. Theſe are the faſts of command. If there be any others, they are particular to each nation; as for inſtance, the Germans after the feaſts of the Paſſover, and of the tents, keep three ſeveral days as faſts, viz. the two Mondays following, and the Thurſday that comes between them: this they do, leſt the preceding feaſts having laſted eight days, they may during that time have offended God. For the ſame reaſon, they faſt on the laſt day of the year, and ſome of them on the eve of the firſt day of every month.

XIII. When any of them either out of mortification, or private devotion, have a mind to faſt above and beyond thoſe days already mentioned (unleſs it be on account of any dream, which circumſtance I have already ſpoken to) their method is, before the ſun ſet, to ſay, to morrow I will faſt. After this they neither eat nor drink till the ſame hour the next evening; to this promiſe they add a prayer to God, that their faſting may be accepted inſtead of a ſacrifice.

[r] The 9. of Auguſt, or rather of July, reckoning Tamuz for June.
[s] Chap. xl. [u] Jeremiah xli. [w] Faſt of Gadalia. [x] Part III. chap. vi.
[y] Lots or chances.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Feaſt of [a] Hanuca or Lights.

I. THEIR ancients ſages have preſcribed a feaſt of eight days, which begins on the 25. of Chiſleu, and anſwers to our December, in remembrance of the victory which the Maccabees gained over the Grecians. On the firſt day, they light one lamp, on the ſecond two, and ſo on till the eighth day, when they light eight lamps. This is founded on this occaſion. The enemies, (having entered the city and temple, and prophaned it) were driven out and defeated by Jonathan and his ſons. And as, at his return, there was not oil enough left to light the lamps of the great branch, he found juſt as much oil in a ſmall veſſel as would laſt one night only; but by a miracle it laſted eight; which obliged him, in remembrance thereof, to light as many lamps as we have mentioned. They alſo, during this feaſt, celebrate Judah's attempt upon Holofernes, tho' according to ſome, not executed at that time of the year.

II. During theſe eight days they may trade and work; for the only extraordinary thing in this feaſt, conſiſts in the lighting of the lamps, and the adding to their prayers a collect in commemoration of this victory, and every morning the cxiii. and ſubſequent Pſalms, called Hallel, together with the xxx. I will extol thee, O Lord, &c. There is alſo ſome little alteration in their eating.

III. This feaſt is called Hanuca, that is to ſay, exerciſe or revival, becauſe at that time the ſervice of the temple, which had been profaned, was revived.

CHAP. X.

Of the Purim [b].

I. ON the 14. of Adar, or the month of March, [c] is the feaſt of Purim celebrated, in remembrance of Eſther, who upon that day ſaved the people of Iſrael from entire deſtruction, by the conſpiracy of Haman, who was hanged with all his children. This feaſt was called Purim, becauſe we read in the ix. chapter of Eſther, Therefore they called thoſe days Purim, &c.

II. The feſtival laſts two days, but the firſt only is ſolemn. They faſt on the eve, after the manner I have obſerved: but during theſe two days they may trade and work. Yet they abſtain from both on the firſt day, tho' not obliged to it.

III. On the firſt night they repair to the ſynagogue, where, after their common prayers, they commemorate that happy deliverance; and read the whole book of Eſther, which is is written on vellum rolled up in the ſame manner as the Pentateuch. They alſo call it Megbilla, or Volume. During the reading of it, ſome of the Jews, at the name of Haman, clap their hands, as a ſign that they curſe him. The morning ſervice is obſerved after the ſame manner. They this day read out of the Pentateuch the xvii. chapter of Exodus, ver. 8. Then came Amalek, &c.

[a] Or Chanuccah, and is what we call dedication. [b] Lots or chances. [c] Or February.

IV. On this feaſt are large ſums given publicly to the poor, and all friends and relations ſend each other ſome kind of eatables. Scholars make preſents to their maſters; heads of families to their ſervants; and perſons of a higher rank, to thoſe who are inferior to them. In ſhort, the whole day is ſpent in mirth and jollity, according to what is ſaid in the ix. chapter of Eſther, That they ſhould make them days of feaſting and joy, and of ſending portions one to another, and gifts to the poor, &c.

V. On the ſecond day every one provides the moſt ſplendid entertainment he can afford, and they eat and drink more than uſual. After ſupper they viſit each other, and after a hearty reception, ſpend the day in play and diverſions.

VI. There is no new leſſon the ſecond day, nor is the feaſt ſo ſolemn; yet they behave with demonſtrations of joy.

VII. When the year has thirteen [d] months, and there are two [e] Adars, as I before obſerved, they call the fourteenth day of the firſt Adar, the little Purim. But none of the ceremonies of the feaſt are kept; and that day is only nominal.

[d] Part III. chap. ii.

[e] The laſt month of the year is reckoned twice in the intercalary year's.

The END of the third Part.

AN

AN HISTORICAL

DISSERTATION

CONCERNING THE

CEREMONIES and CUSTOMS

Which are at this time obſerved amongſt the JEWS.

PART IV.

CHAP. I.

Of unlawful Converſation with Women.

I. OF all the ſins that are committed with women, the greateſt, according to the Jews, is to lie with a married woman, were ſhe only betrothed. The next to that is, to have to do with one's own relations, in the degrees prohibited by the xviii. of Leviticus. For that reaſon, children that are born in ſuch a manner are called Mamzerim, or baſtards, [a] and are not to be admitted into any family, A baſtard ſhall not enter into the congregation of the Lord. The third is to have converſation with a woman, who is not a Jew; (this is founded upon Eſdras's prohibition) or with a proſtitute who is a Jew. So that neither reaſon, nor the law allow them to tolerate a common woman, as is ſaid in the 17. verſe of the ſame chapter, There ſhall be no whore of the daughters of Iſrael, &c.

II. It is likewiſe a ſin to have criminal converſation with any other woman whatſoever; and they are not to know any woman but their own wives; for to debauch a maid and not marry her, is committing fornication.

[a] Deut. xxiii.

III. They are forbidden to converſe with a woman during her courſes, Levit. xviii. Thou ſhalt not approach unto a woman to uncover her nakedneſs, as long as ſhe is put apart for her uncleanneſs. This equally relates to a man's wife as well as any other woman, as I ſhall ſhew hereafter.

CHAP. II.

Of Matrimony.

I. EVERY Jew is obliged to marry. The Rabbi's have fixed the time for it at eighteen years of age; a man who lives to twenty without marrying is accounted as actually living in ſin: this is founded on their being obliged to procreation, in obedience to God's command to our firſt parents, [b] Be fruitful, and multiply, and repleniſh the earth. But when they have a ſon and a daughter the precept is looked upon as fulfilled. On the other hand, as an unmarried man is liable to commit fornication, they think he ought to marry.

II. According to ſeveral paſſages of the Scripture, every man is allowed to have ſeveral wives: which is practiſed by the eaſtern Jews, tho' the Germans do not allow it, nor is it often practiſed in Italy; and then only, when after many years marriage they have had no child by their firſt wife.

III. They may marry their nieces, that is to ſay, their brother's or ſiſter's daughters, and for the ſame reaſon, they may marry their firſt couſins; but a nephew cannot marry his aunt. As for the other degrees prohibited, they may be ſeen in the xviii. chapter of Leviticus.

IV. Some ſcruple to marry a woman who has had ſeveral huſbands, or two only, ſtiling her a husband killer, but this is not forbidden, and is leſs to be underſtood of a man, who may have had two wives or more.

V. A widow or a woman divorced cannot marry again till ninety days after her huſband's death, that it may thereby be certainly known, whether the child belongs to her firſt huſband.

VI. When a man dies, and leaves a ſucking child, his widow cannot marry again till the child be two years old; the Rabbi's having fixed that time, the better to provide for the education of the orphan.

CHAP. III.

Of Betrothings and Marriages.

I. WHEN the Jews have agreed upon the conditions of a match, an inſtrument is ſigned by the bridegroom, and the relations of the bride; after which the bridegroom goes to ſee his bride, and takes her by the hand. In ſome countries the bridegroom gives her a ring at the ſame time, and then marries her. But this this is not the common practice in Italy nor Germany. They are often betrothed for six or twelve months, and sometimes two years, according to the convenience of the parties. or the agreement made between them. During which time the bridegroom visits his bride, and spends his time with her, but without making an ill use of it.

[b] Gen. i.

II. When the wedding-day is fixed, (which is generally on the new moon, and on a Wednesday or Friday, if it be a maid, and a Thursday if it be a widow) the first night the bride, if she be in a proper condition, first bathes, which we shall speak to in the next chapter. But if she be not, all commerce with her is forbidden till she can bathe; however, all the ceremonious part of marriage is performed.

III. Some say that the married couple ought to fast on the wedding-day, till the benediction be over.

IV. In order to celebrate this solemnity, the betrothed couple meet at the appointed hour, in a room under a canopy, with music, and in some places with children, singing round them and holding torches in their hands. All the people that are of their synagogue being come, they put a Taled on the heads of the young couple, which is a square veil, at the corners of which hang those tufts already described. After this, the Rabbi's of the place, the reader of the synagogue, or one of the nearest relations, takes a glass or any other vessel filled with wine, and after he hath blessed God, for having created man and woman, and ordained matrimony, &c. he gives some of this wine to the bridegroom and bride. Then the bridegroom putting a ring on his bride's finger, in the presence of two witnesses, who are generally Rabbi's, says, Thou art my wife according to the rites of Moses and Israel. After which the marriage writings are read, purporting the receipt of the portion, the obligation of the bridegroom to a jointure, and to maintain his wife, and live decently with her. For the performance of these several articles, he gives a duplicate to his wife's relations. Then they bring more wine in a new vessel, and after they have sung six more blessings, which make seven in all, the married couple drink a second time, and the remainder of the wine is thrown upon the ground as a token of mirth. The vessel being empty, it is given to the bridegroom, who, throwing it down with all his strength, breaks it to pieces; this they do, to the end that their rejoicings may give them an image of death, who, dashing us to pieces like glass, gives us a lesson of mortification to all vanity. In the mean while every one present cries out, Mazal tou, may it prove lucky, and then retire.

V. In the evening they give a supper to their relations and friends; in some places, whoever is invited presents the bride with a piece of plate, some before, some after the entertainment, then follow the seven blessings already mentioned, and which are before repeated at the celebration of the nuptials; and after this they rise from table.

VI. If the bride has bathed, she then is put to bed to her husband; and if she be a maid, the man comes out of bed, as soon as the ceremony is over, and can no more converse with her till after a stated time, (which I shall mention when I speak of married women) and she has bathed a second time.

VII. On the morning of the Sabbath after the wedding, the bridegroom and his bride go to the synagogue together. The bride is accompanied with the women that were at the wedding; and at the lessons of the Pentateuch, the husband is desired to read. Whereupon he promises to give handsomely to the poor, and his example therein is followed by all who come with him. When prayers are over, the men accompany the bridegroom, and the women the bride to their house, after which they separate after a world of mutual tual civilities. In ſome places, the bridegroom lives the firſt week at his wife's parents, where he entertains his friends.

VIII. This is what is generally practiſed in all marriages, tho' there are ſome little alterations obſerved, according to the different countries.

IX. When the wife dies without children, they are to obſerve the cuſtoms of the country they live in, which differ almoſt in every nation.

CHAP. IV.

How a Woman may obtain a Divorce, and in what manner a Man is puniſhed who abuſes a Maid.

I. WHEN a girl under ten years of age, [c] whether her father be living, or not, happens to become a widow, after marrying a man with the conſent of her mother or brothers, whom ſhe does not like; ſhe may have a divorce, till ſhe comes to be twelve years and one day old, which is the time when women are of age. It is ſufficient for her to ſay, that ſhe will not have ſuch a man; of this ſhe takes two witneſſes, who ſet down her refuſal in writing. After which ſhe may ſue out a divorce, and marry again with whom ſhe pleaſes.

II. A man who debauches a maid by force, or any other way, is obliged by the judge to marry her, if the father and the girl are willing to it; nor can he ever be divorced from her, according to what is ſaid in the xxii. chapter of Deuteronomy. Or otherwiſe, the diſgrace or offence muſt be repaired with a ſum of money.

CHAP V.

Of Women in the time of their Impurity, and of their Lyings in.

I. AS ſoon as a woman perceives that ſhe is unclean, ſhe is obliged to tell her huſband of it, who converſes no more with her, till the obſtacle be removed. He can neither give, nor receive any thing from her, nor eat out of the diſh, or drink out of the ſame glaſs with her.

II. When, at the end of five days at fartheſt, this obſtacle is removed (for if it were to laſt longer they muſt ſtill have patience) then the wife changes her linen, puts clean ſheets on her bed, and ſeven days after pares her nails, and makes them very clean. She then waſhes and combs herſelf, and goes to bathe. The bath muſt be of running or rain water, and not brought by a man; it muſt be at leaſt three cubits high, and one cubit broad, or elſe it is not good. When there is no bath the woman muſt go to a ſpring, a river, the ſea, or a well: there ſhe muſt bathe her ſelf ſtark naked, and all the parts of her body muſt touch the water; nay, if ſhe has a ring on her finger, that ſhould be ſo ſo cloſe to it as to prevent the water from coming to that part, her bathing would be ineffectual, and ſhe would be obliged to take off her ring and waſh herſelf again. Therefore, when a woman goes into the bath, there is another woman by, who obſerves whether ſhe be all over covered with water. After this, ſhe may converſe with her huſband, as long as ſhe remains clean.

[c] The Jews oftentimes marry their children very young, though the marriage be not conſummated till they are of a proper age; theſe are the matches here meant.

III. Whilſt a woman is in child-bed, ſhe muſt alſo be parted from her huſband. The ſeparation laſts ſeven weeks when it is a boy, and three months if it be a girl. In ſome places the term is ſhorter. A week before the time is over, the woman ſhifts her linen, goes to the bath after the manner I have mentioned; and when ſhe has obſerved the neceſſary formalities, ſhe may then go to her huſband again.

CHAP. VI.

Of Jealouſy and Divorces.

I. IT was the cuſtom formerly for a jealous huſband to carry his wife before a prieſt, who gave her a water to drink, with which ſhe burſted when guilty, but remained unhurt when innocent, as mentioned in the fifth chapter of Numbers; but now a jealous huſband only deſires his wife not to ſee the man who occaſions jealouſy. But, if after ſuch admonitions the woman behaves herſelf ill, and there are ſtrong ſuſpicions againſt her, or ſhe be found with her gallant, and they are both catched in the very act; then the huſband is obliged by the Rabbi's to divorce her, even tho' he were unwilling, and muſt be parted from her for ever. I ſhall by and by ſpeak of their manner of divorcing. But the woman may afterwards marry whom ſhe pleaſes, except the man who has been the cauſe of her divorce.

II. A huſband [d] may divorce his wife upon the leaſt diſlike, though her behaviour be irreproachable, Deut. xxiv. When a man hath taken a wife and married her, and it comes to paſs that ſhe finds no favour in his eyes, &c. Yet, they are not to divorce their wives, unleſs they have good grounds for jealouſy, or can charge them with ſome crime; for the Rabbi's have preſcribed many formalities which take up a great deal of time, in order to prevent men from making an ill uſe of this privilege of divorce; ſo that it often happens, that they change their minds and are reconciled, before the inſtruments of divorce can be obtained, and afterwards live very happily together.

III. The form of their divorces, which they call [e] Ghett, and which they give their wives, is written by a notary or proctor, in preſence of one or two learned Rabbi's. It muſt be written upon ruled vellum, and contain neither more nor leſs than twelve lines; it muſt be alſo written in ſquare letters, with a thouſand other trifling niceties, both as to the hand, the way of writing, and the names and ſurnames of the huſband and wife. Beſides, the notary, the Rabbi's, and the witneſſes muſt not be related, either to the huſband or wife, or to one another.

IV. This is the ſubſtance of the letter, or Ghett. Such a day, month, year, and place, &c. I A.B. do voluntarily divorce thee, and put thee away, and make thee free, thee C.D. who haſt heretofore been my wife; and I do hereby permit thee to marry whom thou pleaſeſt, &c.

[d] This cuſtom of divorcing wives has been long uſed in the Greek church.
[e] There is a treatiſe in the Talmud concerning divorces, entitled Ghittim.

V. The letter thus written, the Rabbi artfully examines the huſband, in order to know whether he does this voluntarily.

VI. They contrive it ſo as to have ten perſons preſent at the ſigning, beſides the two witneſſes who ſubſcribe the inſtrument, and the two others to the date.

VII. After this the Rabbi bids the woman open her hands, and hold them cloſe to one another in order to receive the inſtrument that it may not fall on the ground: then the huſband being a ſecond time examined, gives her the parchment, ſaying, here is thy divorce, I put thee from me, and I give thee the liberty of marrying whom thou pleaſeſt. The woman takes the inſtrument, and gives it to the Rabbi, who reads it a ſecond time, after which the woman is free. There are many other little circumſtances, I omit, for fear of being too tedious, which have been invented only to render divorces more difficult, as I have already obſerved.

VIII. When this is done, the Rabbi admoniſhes the woman not to marry before the expiration of three [f] months, leſt ſhe ſhould be with child. The man and the woman thus divorced can no longer live together, nor be alone in any place; but they may both marry again.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Ibum, and Caliza.

I. WHEN a man dies without iſſue by his wife, or by any other woman, then his widow is in the power of his brother, if he has one living, and this brother may marry her, or give her leave to marry another man, as it is ſaid in the xxv. of Deuteronomy, If brethren dwell together, and one of them die, and have no child, the wife of the dead ſhall not marry without unto a ſtranger: her husband's brother ſhall go in unto her, and take her to him to his wife. If the deceaſed leave ſeveral wives, his brother can diſpoſe of one of them only, but cannot marry the others; and where there are ſeveral brothers, the eldeſt has the right; tho' one of them alone may give leave to the widow to marry again.

II. The marrying ſuch a widow is called Ibum; for the meaning of that word is to marry a ſiſter-in-law; and the brother might marry her without any ceremonies, if he had a mind to it: but the Rabbi's have ordered that thoſe matches ſhould be in the uſual form; upon which all the deceaſed's goods belong to him; he receives ſo much as the very portion the woman had brought to her brother: in ſhort, ſhe is then looked upon as his own wife.

III. Formerly, they who married their brother's widow were more valued than thoſe that gave them their liberty: but being now become more covetous and voluptuous, they prefer beauty and wealth to their duty; ſo that few marry their brother's widow, eſpecially among the Germans and Italians, who chuſe rather to give the woman her liberty.

IV. This

[f] Ninety days.

IV. This kind of leave to marry is called Caliza, or the looſing of the ſhoe, according to the xxv. of Deuteronomy, Then ſhall his brother's wife come unto him in the preſence of the elders, and looſe his ſhoe from off his foot, and ſpit in his face. The ceremony is performed in this manner. Three Rabbi's, with two other witneſſes beſides, go out on the evening before, and pitch upon a proper place; and the next day, after morning prayers, the congregation attends the Rabbi's and witneſſes, who being come to the place, ſit down, and ſummon the widow and brother-in-law before them, who declare that they are come in order to be ſet at liberty. The chief Rabbi aſks the man ſeveral queſtions, and endeavours to perſuade him to marry the widow; but finding that he perſiſts in his refuſal, the man, after ſome other queſtions, puts on a large ſhoe fit for any foot, and the woman, conducted by one of the Rabbi's, repeats the 7. verſe of the forementioned chapter, My husband's brother refuſeth to raiſe up unto his brother a name in Iſrael, he will not perform the duty of my husband's brother; to which the brother anſwers what is ſaid in the next verſe, I like not to take her. Then the woman, ſtooping, unties and takes off the ſhoe, which ſhe throws on the ground, and ſpits upon the man, ſaying in Hebrew, with a little of the Rabbi's prompting: So ſhall it be done unto that man, that will not build up his brother's houſe, and his name ſhall be called in Iſrael, the houſe of him that hath his ſhoe looſed. Theſe words ſhe repeats three times, and at each time the aſſiſtants anſwer, his ſhoe is looſed. Immediately the Rabbi declares to her, that ſhe may marry again; and if ſhe requires an act of the ſame, the Rabbi's give her one. Upon examination of this matter, all the circumſtances here obſerved will appear to be taken from the xxv. of Deuteronomy.

V. But as in caſe of this Ibum, the woman can neither have her portion, nor marry again without ſuch a diſcharge, ſome men, in order to extort money from their ſiſters-in-law, plague them, and put off the ceremony as long as they can. For this reaſon, ſome fathers, when they marry their daughter to a man that has any brothers, ſtipulate that, in ſuch a caſe, the woman ſhall be ſet at liberty without relinquiſhing any of her pretenſions. Some will oblige the huſband, when he is dangerouſly ill, to grant his wife a divorce, that ſhe may not fall into the power of her brother-in-law.

CHAP. VIII.

Of Circumciſion.

I. WHEN a man has a ſon born, his friends congratulate him thereupon, ſaying, I give you joy. Some will write the following words upon bits of paper, which they place in each of the four corners of the room, where the mother lies, viz. Adam and Eve. [c] Lilit be gone, together with the names of three angels; this they do in order to preſerve the child from witchcraft; this is no obligation nor precept, but rather the effect of mere ſuperſtition.

II. The father is obliged to circumciſe his ſon on the eighth day, [b] according to what is ſaid, He that is eight days old ſhall be circumciſed among you, every man-child in your generations. The ſame is repeated in Leviticus chapter the xii. And in the eighth day, the fleſh of [c] Lilit, according to the Jewiſh fables, was Adam's firſt wife, who playing the termagant, and refuſing to ſubmit to Adam, left him, and flew up into the air by the means of a magical ſecret. She is taken for a nocturnal ſpectre, an enemy to women lying in, and to new born children; and is what the Latins call Striges Lamiæ.

[b] Gen. xvii.

of his foreskin ſhall be circumciſed. This cannot be done before the eight days are expired: but it may be put off, if the child be weak or infirm, till he be well again.

III. The night before the day of the circumciſion is called the watch, for the whole family ſits up to watch the child. On the evening the father's friends come and viſit him, and the women the mother; that evening is ſpent in mirth and rejoicings.

IV. They chuſe a godfather to ſtand for the child whilſt it is circumciſed, and a godmother to carry it from the houſe to the ſynagogue, and bring it home again. They generally take ſome relation of the father's or mother's for this office. As for the Mohel, or Circumciſer, they may chuſe whom they pleaſe; for whoever is able to perform that office, is allowed to do it. It is accounted a great praiſe amongſt the Jews to be a Circumciſer, and if the child's father is one of them, he himſelf may circumciſe his own child.

V. On the morning are provided, either in the ſynagogue, or in their own houſe (when the ceremony is to be performed there) two ſeats with ſilk cuſhions; one of which is deſigned for the godfather who holds the child, and the other for the prophet Elias, as ſome ſay, whom they believe to be inviſibly preſent at all their circumciſions; becauſe of his extraordinary ſtrictneſs in the obſervation of the law. A croud of people meet on theſe occaſions, and the circumciſer comes with a diſh in his hand, wherein are his inſtruments and other things neceſſary; ſuch as a raſor, aſtringent powders, linen, lint, and oil of roſes. Beſides theſe, ſome have a porringer full of ſand, wherein they put the foreſkin after it is cut off. They ſing hymns till the godmother comes, who brings the child in her arms, being accompanied by ſeveral women; but none of them go any farther than the door of the ſynagogue. There ſhe delivers the child to the godfather, and preſently the whole aſſemby cries aloud, Baruch aba, the father is welcome.

VI. The godfather ſitting down on his ſeat, lays the child on his knees; the man who is to circumciſe him unwraps the ſwadling clothes. Some uſe a pair of ſilver tongs to hold that part of the foreſkin which is to be cut off. Then the circumciſer taking his raſor, ſays, Bleſſed be thou, O Lord, who haſt ordained unto us circumciſion. At theſe words he cuts off the thick ſkin of the prepuce; and then with the nails of his thumbs tears off a thinner ſkin remaining. During this the father gives thanks unto God for this injunction, and the by-ſtanders wiſh him the happineſs of bringing up his child till he be old enough to marry. The man who circumciſes the child goes on with his buſineſs, and two or three times ſucks the blood that runs from it, and ſpits it out into a cup full of wine: afterwards he takes ſome dragon's blood, powder of coral, and other things which he lays on the circumciſed part to heal it, and binds up the whole with a bolſter dipped in oil of roſes.

VII. This being done, he takes a cup of wine, and having bleſſed it, he ſays another bleſſing for the child, at the ſame time giving him the name his father intends him, and pronouncing theſe words out of the xv. of Ezekiel, I ſaid unto thee, when thou waſt in thy blood, live, &c. he in the mean while wets his lips with that wine, into which he has ſpit the blood. After this they repeat the cxxviii. Pſalm intirely, Bleſſed is every one that feareth the Lord. This being performed the godfather returns the child to the godmother, in order to carry it home again, and put it into his mother's hands. And all the ſpectators at departing ſay to the father: May you too be preſent at his wedding.

VIII. The circumciſer afterwards ſends ſweetmeats, or any other preſent to the child's mother; the godfather and godmother, relations and friends do the ſame. When the father and mother are poor, they ſend them money, but no more than what they pleaſe.

IX. On

IX. On the ſame morning the father, according to his abilities, entertains the perſon that circumciſed his child, the godfather and godmother, his relations and friends. And at the end of the entertainment, they add bleſſings and prayers for the child, beſeeching God that he may live to a good old age, in the fear of the Lord.

X. The child is generally well in the ſpace of twenty four hours. For which reaſon, ſome Jews, on the third day, ſend ſweetmeats to the parents and friends of the child; that they may rejoice together at his recovery.

XI. There are no ceremonies for girls, excepting only that in the beginning of the month after the mother goes out, the daughter is carried to the ſynagogue; there the reader, ſaying a bleſſing for the child, gives her the name which her father has deſigned her. Amongſt the Germans, it is cuſtomary for the reader to go to their houſes, where taking the child out of the cradle, he bleſſes her and gives her a name. When a male child dies uncircumciſed before the eight days are over, ſome will circumciſe him with a reed before they bury him.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Redemption of the Firſt-born.

I. THE firſt child which a woman bears, if a boy, belongs to the prieſt, though his father then has, or has had children by another wife, [i] as I have already obſerved, according to the precept which ſays: [k] Sanctify unto me all the firſt-born. And afterwards: All the firſt-born of man amongſt thy children ſhalt thou redeem, &c.

II. This is what they do in obſervation of this precept. When the child is full thirty days old, they ſend for one of the ſons of Aaron, whom the father likes beſt. Several people being aſſembled in the houſe, the father brings a large ſum of gold and ſilver in a diſh or baſon, and the child to deliver into the hands of the prieſt, who ſays aloud to the mother: Madam, is this boy yours? To which ſhe anſwers, yes. Had you never another child before, continues the prieſt, either male or female, or did you never miſcarry? To this ſhe anſwers, no. Since it is ſo, adds the prieſt, this child being your firſt-born belongs to me. Then turning to the Father, he ſays unto him: If you are deſirous to have this child, you muſt redeem it. I brought this gold and ſilver for that purpoſe, replies the father. You have then a mind to redeem it? ſays the prieſt. Yes, I have a mind ſo to do, ſays the father. Well, ſays the prieſt aloud turning towards the aſſembly, this child being a firſt-born is mine, as it is ſaid in Numbers, chap. xviii. ver. 16. And thoſe that are to be redeemed from a month old, ſhalt thou redeem according to thine eſtimation, for the money of five ſhekels, &c. inſtead of which I content myſelf with this: and at theſe words, he takes two golden ducats, or thereabouts, as he pleaſes, and then returns the child to his parents. This is alſo a day of rejoicing.

III. When the father or mother are of the race of prieſts or Levites, then they do not redeem their ſons.

[i] Part I, chap. xii. [k] Exod. xiii.

CHAP. X.

Of their way of inſtructing their Children, and of their coming to age.

I. AS ſoon as a child can talk, they teach him to read, and afterwards to tranſlate the Bible into the language of the country wherein they live, without any principles of grammar, which they call Dichduch. But when the child is ten years old, or thereabouts, then he may learn the grammar, if he has a mind to it. Grammar is ſeldom made uſe of amongſt [l] the Jews; and the greateſt part of them talk, read and write by rote, eſpecially the Germans.

II. They then make their youth read ſome of their interpreters upon the Bible, as [m] Rabbi Salomon, and an abridgment of the ceremonies and cuſtoms of the Rabbi's, ſuch as [n] Rabenu Moſes and others. Theſe books are very hard to be underſtood, becauſe they are printed without points, or vowels; and are written in a ſtile quite different from that of the Bible, ſo that they are not to be learnt [o] but by rote.

III. Such of the youth as are ingenious, immediately after thoſe books read the Miſna, and Talmud, which they take to be the beſt foundation of their ſtudies. Some of them apply themſelves to other ſciences, as I have obſerved in the ſecond chapter of the ſecond part.

IV. When a youth is thirteen years and one day old, he is accounted a man, and is obliged to obſerve all the precepts of the law. Therefore, they are called Barmizva; tho' ſome others call them Minian, [p] from the word number. As to affairs in general, he is then of age, and can make contracts; for he no longer depends on guardians; and may do what he pleaſes, as well in regard to temporal as ſpiritual affairs. With reſpect to girls, they are accounted women as ſoon as they come to be twelve years and a half old.

CHAP. XI.

Of the reſpect due to relations and others.

I. CHILDREN, among the Jews, think themſelves ſtrictly obliged to honour their parents. Honour thy father and mother, ſays the Decalogue; this the Rabbi's have explained at length, as well in regard to the duties of children to their parents during their lives, as after their deaths.

II. They

[l] That is the reaſon why ſo few of the Jews are able to teach the old, or the Rabbinic Hebrew, for want of method.

[m] He was a Frenchman, and has written commentaries upon the Bible and Talmud. De Lira has taken a great many things from him.

[n] The famous Rabbi Maimonides has compoſed a judicious abridgment of the whole Talmud, in the Rabbinical Hebrew, in a pure and eaſy ſtile.

[o] Yet the Hebrew of the Rabbi's may be reduced to rule and grammar, but this is difficult.

[p] Minian, ſignifies number: And there is a book of R. Moſes, intituled, Minian hamitſvot, that is to ſay; the number of the precepts, which the Jews are obliged to obſerve.

II. They alſo ſhew how a father ought to behave to his ſon, eſpecially when he is grown up, ſo as to give him no opportunity of tranſgreſſing againſt the reverence he owes his father.

III. They beſides draw this conſequence from that commandment, that we ought to honour an elder brother and a mother-in-law. Nay, they think that there is more reverence due to the man who hath inſtructed us in our religion, than to him who hath given us life; for the latter only gives us being, but the former makes that life happy. They require alſo that a man ſhould both by word and actions honour learned and pious men, [q] the aged, and even ſuch as are not Jews: becauſe they are, according to the Rabbi's, as it were, ancient citizens of the world, who having ſeen more events, have alſo more experience: [r] With the ancient is wiſdom, and in length of days, underſtanding.

[q] Levit. chap. xix. [r] Job xii.

The END of the fourth Part.

AN

AN HISTORICAL

DISSERTATION

CONCERNING THE

CEREMONIES and CUSTOMS

Which are at this time obſerved amongſt the JEWS.

PART V.

CHAP. I.

Of the Heretical Jews: with a Supplement concerning the Caraïtes and Samaritans.

I. I Do not intend to ſpeak of the different hereſies, which broke out a little before the deſtruction of the ſecond temple: my deſign in this work being only to treat of thoſe things which are in uſe at preſent. Of all the hereſies which prevailed at that time, there is only one that has [a] been tranſmitted to our days. Thoſe who follow it, are accounted hereticks by the Jews, though they obſerve the law of Moſes, and are called Caraïm, a noun derived from Micra, ſignifying, the pure text of the Bible; becauſe they adhere to the Pentateuch only, [b] and obſerve it in its literal ſenſe, rejecting all the interpretation, paraphraſes, and conſtitutions of the Rabbi's.

[a] The author has forgot the Samaritans of our days. See the Supplement.
[b] This is not true, as you will ſee lower, and eſpecially in the Supplement, wherein I have corrected ſeveral things againſt the common opinion concerning the Caraite Jews.

II. As they will not recede from the letter of the Scripture, they muſt certainly be reformed Sadducees; the difference is that the old Sadducees denied the immortality of the ſoul, and conſequently paradiſe, hell, purgatory, the reſurrection of the dead, and ſome other things. But the preſent Caraïm, leſt they ſhould render themſelves odious to all religions which admit of theſe truths, have ſubmitted to, and even received ſome of the ancient traditions, in order to make themſelves more agreeable to the Jews, under whoſe name they go. Yet I do not queſtion, but that they take their riſe from the Sadducees, and that they were true Sadducees[c], before they had adopted this new belief of theirs.

III. There are ſome of them at Conſtantinople, Cairo, and other parts of the Levant, and even in Moſcovy, where they live after their own way, having their ſynagogues, and obſerving their own ceremonies and cuſtoms: ſtiling themſelves Jews, and inſiſting that they are the only true obſervers of the Moſaic law.

IV. They call the Jews that are not of their opinion Rabbanim, or followers of the Rabbi's. But theſe laſt hate the Caraïm mortally, and will neither make alliances nor converſe with them. They call them Manzerim, or baſtards, becauſe they keep none of the conſtitutions of the Rabbi's concerning marriages, divorces, or purifications of women. Nay, their hatred is ſuch, that if a Caraïte had a mind to turn Rabbiniſt, the other Jews would not admit him.

SUPPLEMENT.

Concerning the Caraïtes.

I. IT would be a hard taſk to determine exactly the time when Caraïſm began. Father Morin, who has treated of this queſtion, refers the origin of this ſect to the eighth century, preſently after the publication of the Talmud; and is of opinion, that this large work was publiſhed much later than moſt of the Jews believe, for in reality Caraïſm took its riſe from the publication of the Talmud: for it does not appear, that the word Caraïte was odious before that time, tho' it has been ſince. On the contrary, they called Caraï, a man who had a conſummate knowledge of the Scriptures. So that the origin of this ſect came from the learned Jews of that time, who oppoſed a thouſand idle conceits, which were publiſhed under the pompous name of traditions of Moſes; tho' the greateſt part of them had no other foundation, than the ambition of ſome of their doctors, who would have paſſed their private deciſions upon the people, as ſo many oracles pronounced on mount Sinaï. And as thoſe Jews, who would not admit theſe vain traditions, made uſe of the Scripture for the refuting of them, which they call Micra, they received from thence the name of Caraïm, as we have ſeen in our days ſome Proteſtants, who called themſelves Evangeliſts, becauſe they admitted of no other authority than that of the Goſpel, and rejected all traditions.

II. But thoſe Jews who declared themſelves for the Talmud, called the others Samaritans and Sadducees; not becauſe they were really ſuch, but becauſe they imitated them as to ſuch traditions, as they would not admit: notwithſtanding there have been Jews ſince that time, who have thought that a Caraïte was really a Samaritan and a Sadducee. They were the more confirmed in this error, becauſe they ſeldom applied themſelves to hiſtory hiſtory or chronology. The author of this work, who knew that the preſent Caraïtes were not of the ſame belief with the Samaritans, to reconcile this contradiction, has imagined a new ſect of Caraïtes; as if the ancient ſect had only been Samaritans and Sadducees, and the modern had changed opinion, or at leaſt, that they were grown more moderate. But this notion of our Rabbi is founded only upon his ignorance of the Jews; and the arguments which he brings in ſupport of it, are not ſufficient to maintain his opinion.

[c] This is not true. See the Supplement.

III. The critics of our days, who have ventured to treat of the Caraïtes upon the authority of the Jewiſh Writings, have been greatly miſtaken; becauſe the Rabbiniſts, who are their enemies, have falſly charged them in all reſpects. Father Morin's proceeding has been very different, he having made uſe of a commentary upon the Pentateuch written by a Caraïte author. As I have the ſame manuſcript in my poſſeſſion, I here purpoſe to ſhew wherein Caraïſm expreſly conſiſts, and what is the difference between the Caraïtes and Rabbiniſts. I ſhall begin with their opinion concerning the text of the Bible, becauſe our author herein confounds them with the Samaritans, who admit the Pentateuch only; and there are ſtill ſeveral learned men in our days, who think, that the Caraïtes differ much from the other Jews as to the text of the Bible: I cannot think where a certain Doctor of the Sorbonne, and Regius Profeſſor of the Hebrew tongue, found what he has lately written upon this ſubject, concerning the Caraïtes. He explains the word Caraïm or Caraïtes in theſe words: That is to ſay, thoſe who admit of conſonants only, and no points in their Bibles, becauſe they think the points have no other authority than tradition. A little after this he adds, That the Caraïtes have by degrees got the better among the Jews, eſpecially among the Talmudiſts and allegorical writers: and that by degrees the notion has obtained that thoſe books of the law which have no points in them, were profane. There is hardly one word of truth in the whole diſcourſe of this learned Profeſſor, as we ſhall ſee by the ſequel.

IV. The author of that Caraïte commentary before mentioned, calls himſelf Aaron ſon of Joſeph, and lived about the end of the thirteenth century. He admits of all the books of the Scripture contained in the canon of the Jews, and allows them to be twenty four in number, as the other Jews do. In order to diſtinguiſh them from human traditions, he ſometimes calls them Prophecies, thinking it inconſiſtent with the dignity of God, to rank his word and the writings of men in the ſame claſs; and herein blames the Rabbiniſts, who ſet the ſame value upon the fables of the Talmud, and the conceits of their anceſtors, as they do upon the ſacred books of the Scripture, and put them upon the ſame footing. He alſo ſhews that the Caraïtes do not reject all ſorts of traditions, but thoſe only that are falſe and ridiculous, ſome of which he mentions in the beginning of his work, where he makes very merry with them. He tells us what a ſtrange explanation theſe doctors give of the ſerpent mentioned in the beginning of Geneſis. For the Rabbiniſts and the Cabaliſts ſay, that he was as big as a camel, that Samael [d] ſat upon him; nay, that God himſelf got up upon him, and ſported upon his back. He in the ſame place relates ſome other allegorical and Cabaliſtical interpretations of theſe very doctors, which he refutes, and adds the following words: In theſe and other explanations of this kind, they rely only upon the authority of their fathers. Then breaking out againſt thoſe who abuſe the word of God after that manner: Curſed be the man, ſaith he, who is ſo impudent as to behave in this manner.

V. In order to ſhew, that they believe ſuch traditions as are rational and well-grounded, he diſtinguiſhes the traditions that are certain and conſtant, from thoſe which are falſe and dubious. And it appears, that his rules, for the authority of traditions, are the ſame as thoſe which the judicious Vincentius Lirinenſis has given us: ſo that he profeſſes not only to receive the Scripture, but alſo to adhere to reaſon and tradition, ſo far as it has been been certain and conſtant, but not to that of late or freſh invention. He ſubmits to the doctrine of the ancients, where it has ſuffered no variations, and where it agrees with authentic writings, approved by all the Jews. Upon this principle they acknowledge all the books of the Bible, as well as the Rabbiniſts, and what is more extraordinary, they receive them as they are now pointed: for they have no other copy but that of the Maſora. And if they ſometimes read in a different manner, they do it only as critics, in imitation of the Rabbi's Juda, Jona, Abeneſra, Kimchi, Abenmelec and other Rabbiniſt grammarians.

[d] The Devil.

VI. Our Caraïte, who is very exact in his enquiries into the literal ſenſe of the text, often quotes the various readings in order to pick out the beſt. And herein he imitates the Rabbiniſts, who do the ſame. He is attentive to the ſmalleſt things in grammar, to make his literal ſenſe good. It would be needleſs here to produce any inſtances thereof; becauſe he uſes this method throughout the whole work.

VII. Neither ſhall I endeavour to refute the opinion of thoſe, who believe that the Caraïtes have copies of the Bible, different from the Vulgar. For it is ſufficient to obſerve (as I have done) that they admit, not only the four and twenty books of the Scripture, as all other Jews do, but that they alſo make uſe of the Hebrew copies, juſt as they now ſtand with the points of the Maſſorets.

VIII. As for their divinity, it is in no circumſtance different from that of the other Jews, excepting only, that it is more pure and free from ſuperſtition. For they give no credit to the Cabaliſtic explanations, or allegories, which indeed are without foundation. Beſides, our Caraïte plainly ſhews his belief concerning the nature of the ſoul, and a future life, in his explanation of theſe words of Geneſis, Let us make man in our own image. The ſpirit of man, ſays he, takes its riſe and origin from things above, and his body from thoſe here below. For his ſoul, adds he, is of the nature of that of Angels. And preſently after: The world to come was made for the ſoul of man. This opinion is directly contrary to that of the Sadducees, and evidently ſhews, that all the errors imputed to the Caraïtes, are mere calumnies.

IX. As for the ceremonies and cuſtoms of the Caraïtes, a man might compoſe a long treatiſe upon them: but I hope it may ſuffice to ſay in general, that the Caraïtes reject all the conſtitutions of the Miſna and Talmud, which are not conformable to the Scripture, or may be drawn as a neceſſary and manifeſt conſequence of it. I ſhall only produce three inſtances of this. The firſt is concerning the commandment of Mezouzot, or parchments, which the Jews faſten to all the doors they paſs through. The ſecond, concerning the Tephilim, or Phylacteries, which are mentioned even in the New Teſtament. The third is, the prohibition of eating milk with fleſh. Though the two firſt ſeem to be very expreſs and poſitive in Deuteronomy, where you have theſe words; [c] Thou ſhalt bind them for a ſign upon thine hand, and they ſhall be as frontlets between thine eyes, and thou ſhalt write them upon the poſts of thy houſe, and on thy gates: our Caraïte, notwithſtanding, inſiſts, that this is a figurative way of ſpeaking; and that when God orders the Jews to write them upon the poſts, his deſign was, that both at coming in, and going out, they ſhould be always preſent in the mind. By theſe means the Caraïtes are diſcharged from the performance of an infinite number of ceremonies, or rather ſuperſtitions, which the Rabbiniſt Jews have invented concerning the Mezouzot and Tephilim. Hence is it alſo, that the Caraïtes turn the Rabbiniſt Jews into ridicule, when they ſee them ſaying their prayers, with theſe Tephilim on their forehead, as we have deſcribed them in the xi. chapter of the firſt part of this work; nay, they even call them aſſes with bridles. St. Jerom has not treated theſe Tephilim with the ſame freedom; for, in his expoſition on the words of of the Goſpel, wherein the Phylacteries are mentioned, he ſays: The Phariſees by a wrong interpretation of this paſſage wrote the Decalogue of Moſes on parchment, which they rolled up and tied on their foreheads; and made a ſort of crown round the head of them, that they might have them conſtantly before their eyes.

[c] Deut. vi. and xi.

X. The third example is taken from this negative commandment not to eat fleſh at the ſame meal they eat any compound of milk; founded on this paſſage of Exodus; Thou ſhalt not ſeeth a kid in his mother's milk. But our Caraïte gives no manner of credit to thoſe traditions which give this paſſage a ſenſe ſo diſtant from the literal ſenſe of it; and he is of opinion, that this place is to be explained by that, where it is ſaid of a bird's neſt: Thou ſhalt not take the mother with the young ones. And when the Rabbiniſt Jews are hard put to it upon this ſubject, as I have been myſelf, they anſwer, Ameru Hachamenu: This is the deciſion of our maſters or wiſemen, for they believe, that the explanation of their fathers is not at all inferior to the very text of the Bible; and that God himſelf delivered that interpretation to Moſes on mount Sinaï.

XI. I ſhall not detain my reader with any other inſtitutions which are numberleſs, becauſe the greateſt part of them are no more than expoſitions of the Rabbiniſts, which the Caraïtes do not admit. They do not read the text of the Bible with the ſame view as the Rabbi's, who on the leaſt occaſion are pleaſed with inventing new deciſions. The Caraïtes read the Scripture in a rational manner, and explain it from itſelf, that is, what follows by what goes before. In ſhort, they reject all ſuch things as have not Scripture, reaſon, and an eſtabliſhed tradition for their foundation.

XII. Yet, as the Caraïtes ſubmit to good ſenſe and reaſon, they readily agree with the Rabbiniſts in ſome points of diſcipline, tho' they ſee well enough that the Scripture ordains otherwiſe. For example, they follow their calendar and the computations of Rabbi Hillel; becauſe, as they muſt have ſome ſettled method therein, they prefer this to the reſt: juſt as ſome Proteſtants make uſe of the reformed calendar, though they do not approve of it in all points.

XIII. They not only conform to the Rabbiniſts in their manner of circumciſing, but even make uſe of them ſometimes for the circumciſing of their own children. Nevertheleſs, circumciſion is ordained in Scripture, tho' the manner of circumciſing be not particularized; for inſtance, the Jews and Turks, who both circumciſe their children, differ in their manner of performing it. The Turks after they have cut off the ſkin never meddle with it after, but the Jews with their thumb nails tear the edges of the ſkin remaining after circumciſion in ſeveral places; and I believe this is the reaſon why circumciſed Jews heal ſooner than Turks.

XIV. The Caraïtes make uſe alſo of the Taled, which our author has mentioned in the firſt part of his book. Yet their Taled is ſomewhat different from that of the Rabbiniſts: for it is cut in a particular manner, and the ſtrings hanging like tufts, are alſo different.

XV. I ſhall only add to what I have ſaid of the Caraïtes, that our Caraïte never writes the name of Jehovah, or the Tetragrammaton, with theſe common letters, jod, he, vau, he, but with theſe three only, jod, vau, jod. This makes me believe, that the ancient Caraïtes did not read Jehovah, as we have it in our modern copies, but Jave, which manner of reading Theodoret attributes to the Samaritans. Unleſs theſe three letters may be termed an abridgment of the name of Jehovah, as we ſee other Jews often write it with two or three jods.

XVI. As to our author's aſſertion, that the Rabbiniſts hate the Caraïtes ſo far even as to call them baſtards, and to refuſe making alliances with them, or admit them when they have a mind to turn Rabbiniſts, it is an argument of the great veneration which the Rabbiniſts have for the traditions of their fathers. Yet I have heard that in the Eaſt, when a Caraïte is willing to turn Rabbiniſt, and to have children that may be accounted Rabbiniſts, they make him marry a ſlave, and the children proceeding from ſuch marriage are not looked upon as manzerim, or baſtards, but as Rabbiniſt Jews.

SUPPLEMENT.

Concerning the Samaritans.

I. WE have ſome reaſon to be ſurpriſed that the author of this treatiſe ſays nothing of the Samaritans; ſince he promiſed to ſpeak of all ſuch Hereticks as are at this time among the Jews. It is indeed very long ſince this breach began between them; but as it has been irreparable and ſtill continues, he might have ſaid ſomething of them. I will not here mention the origin of the Samaritans; for it is particularly ſet forth in the Bible; and there is no doubt but ſuch as bear that name in ſeveral parts of the world, are of the ſame ſect. My deſign is only to ſpeak of theſe laſt, whoſe memory has been revived in our days, upon account of their Pentateuch, which has been printed in the famous Bibles of M. le Jai, and the Engliſh Polyglot.

II. The modern Samaritans live at Gaza, [f] Sichem, Damaſcus, Cairo, and other parts of the Eaſt, where they have prieſts, deſcended, as they ſay, from Aaron. Their temple, or rather chapel, ſtands on mount Garizim, where they offer their ſacrifices. Joſeph Scaliger, who was informed of it, writ letters to the Samaritans in Egypt, and to the high prieſt of the whole ſect, who lives at Sichem. They anſwered all the difficulties which he had propoſed to them in his letters; theſe anſwers were dated in the 998. year of Mahomet's Hegira, which anſwers to our 1590. but never came to Scaliger's hands.

III. In the firſt of theſe letters, which is written in the name of the aſſembly of Iſrael in Egypt, they declare that they every year celebrate the Paſſover the 14. of the firſt month, upon mount Garizim, and that their then high prieſt was called Eleazer, the ſon of Phineas, the ſon Aaron. They then proceed to the ſolution of thoſe difficulties which were propoſed by him, but as theſe difficulties are more clearly explained in the anſwer written in the name of the high prieſt Eleazer, and of the ſynagogue at Sichem, directed to the ſaid Scaliger, I ſhall only mention this laſt, which will ſufficiently ſhew what the Samaritans are. The contents whereof are as follow.

1. The Samaritans keep the Sabbath according to the ſtrictneſs preſcribed in Exodus: for not one of them ſtirs from the place where he happens to be that day, except to the ſynagogue, where they read the law, and ſing praiſes unto God. They do not go to bed to their wives that night, neither do they, or any for them, kindle any fire during that time; whereas the Jews violate the Sabbath as to theſe points: for they go out of town, light their fire, and converſe with their wives, nor do they waſh after they have been with them.

2. They look upon the Paſſover as their principal feaſt, which with them begins at ſunſet, by the ſacrifice preſcribed in Exodus for that purpoſe. But they offer no ſacrifices, but but upon mount Garizim, where they read the law, and pray to God; after which the high prieſt bleſſes the whole congregation.

[f] Naplouſe.

3. They alſo keep the feaſt of the harveſt for ſeven days; but do not agree with the Jews as to the day when it is to begin: for the Jews reckon from the next day after the ſolemnity of the Paſſover, whereas the Samaritans reckon their fifty days from the next day after the Sabbath, which falls in the week of the feſtival of unleavened bread; and the feaſt of the harveſt begins the next day after the ſeventh Sabbath following.

4. They keep the feaſt of expiation on the tenth of the ſeventh month, in which they ſpend the whole twenty four hours in praying, and ſinging, without eating any thing. For, excepting ſuch children as are at the feaſt, every body beſides faſts; but the Jews except thoſe that are under ſeven years of age.

5. On the 15. of the ſame month they keep the feaſt of tabernacles on the ſame mount Garizim.

6. They never defer the circumciſion longer than eight days, as it is ordered in Geneſis; whereas the Jews ſometimes put it off to a longer time.

7. They are obliged to waſh themſelves in the morning, after having converſed with their wives, or having fallen into any accidental pollution in the night-time; and all ſuch veſſels as can be polluted, become ſo by their touching them before they are waſhed.

8. They take away the fat of the ſacrifices, and give the prieſt the ſhoulders, jaws and belly.

9. They do not marry their own nieces as the Jews do, and have but one wife; whereas, it is lawful for the others to have ſeveral.

10. They believe in God, in Moſes, and in mount Garizim. And whereas the Jews (ſay they) put their truſt in others, we do nothing but what is expreſly commanded by God in the law; who therein made uſe of the miniſtry of Moſes. The Jews have abandoned what God has preſcribed in the law, to run after the inventions of their fathers and doctors.

11. This is the ſubſtance of the anſwer made by order of the high prieſt Eleazer, and written by his ſecretary Abzebuta, the ſon of Joſeph Harmacus, an inhabitant of Gaza. It is alſo obſerved, that this high prieſt had a ſon called Phineas, who exerciſed the ſame function in preſence of his father; that they conſtantly live in that holy place in the preſence of God, and that thoſe who have any difficulties to reſolve, come to them from all parts; ſo that they determine things according to the laws of juſtice and truth.

12. From Aaron, down to themſelves, they reckon 112 high prieſts, a liſt of whoſe names they keep; and inſiſt, that the Jews have no prieſts of the family of Phineas, and that they lie when they call the Samaritans, Cutheans; that they are deſcended from the tribe of Joſeph the Juſt, by Ephraim; that their Samaritan characters are thoſe which God made uſe of when he wrote the law, and that he communicated them to Moſes. To this the anſwer of the ſynagogue in Egypt adds, that the characters of the modern Jews, in their law, is a way of writing invented by Eſdras, and accurſed for ever.

IV. Several reflections might be made upon theſe two letters, but I leave them to the reader. I ſhall only obſerve, that the Samaritans are not infected with the errors of the Sadducees, and that in this reſpect the Jews bely them. What gave occaſion to this calumny is, that the Samaritans will not receive the vain traditions of the Jews, as I have already ſaid, in ſpeaking of the Caraïtes: and for this reaſon the Jews confound the Samaritans with the Sadducees and Caraïtes. For my part, I am of opinion, that we cannot now learn the purity of the Jewiſh law better than from theſe Samaritans of Sichem, who ſtill continue to offer ſacrifices according to the old inſtitution on mount Garizim, as Father Morin, and M. Peyreſc have obſerved. It would be well worth our curioſity to ſee the place where they ſacrifice, and to obſerve its form, ſtructure, order and proportion, and eſpecially the dimenſions and meaſures, both of the altar, and of the veſſels which they make uſe of in their ſacrifices: ſo would it alſo to ſee their high prieſt dreſſed in his ſacerdotal robes, eſpecially on Eaſter day, when he is attended by all his inferior miniſters. I wonder how it comes to paſs that none of our travellers have had this curioſity.

which

V. Part of what I have ſaid of the Samaritans, is confirmed by Benjamin the Jew in his travels. This Rabbi, who lived in the twelfth century, ſays, that in his time there were but a hundred Samaritans in the ſynagogue of Sichem, and two hundred in that of Egypt; about three hundred in the ſynagogue of Aſcalon, and between three and four hundred in that of Damaſcus. He obſerves alſo, that they have prieſts of the family of Aaron, whom they call Aaronites, and who never marry unleſs it be with women of their own family, to keep the ſacerdotal race pure and unmixed with others; that theſe prieſts offer ſacrifices on mount Garizim, where they have a ſtone altar, which the Iſraelites erected after their paſſage over Jordan. He farther adds, that theſe Samaritans are of the tribe of Ephraim, and that they are ſtill in poſſeſſion of Joſeph the ſon of Jacob's burying place; whom they ſtile their father. In ſhort, he ſays, that the Samaritans are very cautious of polluting themſelves by touching a dead body, or any place where they are buried; that they change their clothes when they are going to the ſynagogue, and waſh before they put them on.

VI. It is no new thing for the Samaritans to ſtile themſelves the deſcendants of the tribe of Ephraim, and the true ſons of Jacob, and to make it their boaſt, as may be obſerved, from theſe words of the woman of Samaria to our Lord: Art thou greater than our father Jacob? As to their ſepulchres, beſides what Benjamin ſays of the burial place of Joſeph, the Samaritans likewiſe ſhew thoſe of their prophets lying round their temple; amongſt others they have thoſe of Eleazer, and Ithamar the ſon of Aaron, and even that of his grandſon Phineas. They pretend alſo to have the tombs of Joſhuah and Caleb, and of two other men, whom they call Abinon and Joſeph, this laſt the ſon of Carath or Pa-rath. They likewiſe preſerve an inſcription in their temple written, as they ſay, by the hand of Phineas the ſon of Eleazer, grandſon of Aaron, in the 15. year from the going up of the Iſraelites into the Land of Promiſe.

VII. As thoſe calumnies, by the Jews uſually charged upon the Samaritans, are contradictory in themſelves, I ſhall not here detain my reader with a refutation of them: for they accuſe them not only of Sadduceiſm, but alſo of idolatry, and of worſhiping the image of a dove in their temple. They are no leſs unjuſt when they charge the Samaritan alphabet with wanting theſe three letters, he, heth, and gnain; and that likewiſe in the beginning of Geneſis, the Samaritans, inſtead of theſe words, God created, have written, Aſima created, but my own eyes can witneſs that in this alſo they are wronged; for we have at preſent an Hebrew Pentateuch in the Samaritan character, wherein thoſe three letters are to be met with, ſo that they have thoſe letters, and alſo the word Elohim God, as well as the Jews.

VIII. It muſt be owned that the Samaritans look upon the Pentateuch of Moſes, as the only authentic books of the whole Bible. They indeed have among them the hiſtory of Joſhua, and ſome few of the other hiſtories of the Old Teſtament, but they are different from ours: neither do they give any credit to them as divine books, and the rather as the Jewiſh canon, aſcertaining the number of the books of the Bible, is of a much later date than their ſchiſm, as well as the greateſt part of thoſe very books; which in their opinion were compoſed in favour of the poſterity of David, and to eſtabliſh it on the throne. For this reaſon they ſpeak of Eſdras as of an impoſtor, who (according to them) laid aſide the genuine primitive Hebrew letters for thoſe others, which the Jews ſtill make uſe of in the writing writing of the Bible. And indeed St. Jerom, and the moſt celebrated critics of our days, are perſuaded that the Samaritan letters were the firſt Hebrew characters, and that Eſdras, after the return from the captivity, made uſe of the Chaldee letters, in which our Bibles are now written. He fell into this expedient, perhaps the better to diſtinguiſh the Jews from the Samaritans, to the end that there might be nothing common between them. It is likewiſe poſſible, that the people had uſed themſelves to that way of writing during their captivity, having learnt the Chaldean language; my argument for this conjecture is, that in order to underſtand the Hebrew text, they, at that time, were forced to make a Chaldee paraphraſe of it.

IX. The only difference betwixt the Samaritan and the Jewiſh Pentateuchs is in the letters. The Samaritans, ſays St. Jerom, have the Pentateuch of Moſes written in as many letters as the Jews; they differ only in their characters and points. Inſtead of this word point, we read apex in St. Jerom's Latin, which is a ſmall fine ſtroke, with which the Jews adorn the top of ſome of their letters, placing it over them in the form of a crown. Theſe they uſe in the books read in the ſynagogues, and in their Mezouzot. Probably our Saviour meant thoſe ſmall ſtrokes, when he ſaid: Iota unum, [5] aut unus apex non peribit à lege. For the modern points, now in uſe, were not then uſed.

X. In ſhort, when, I ſay with St. Jerom, that the Samaritan Pentateuch differs from that of the Jews, in its characters only, I do not mean in a ſtrict ſenſe, but they are to be conſidered as two copies taken from the ſame original, which each nation has tranſcribed into its own characters: tho' indeed it was impoſſible but, in proceſs of time, ſome difference muſt happen in the various readings. St. Jerom points out ſome of them, as others had done before him. And it is by remarking all theſe circumſtances that the diſputes which have been, and ſtill continue to be upon this head, are to be reconciled. For were the Greeks, who acknowledge the Pope, to take a fancy to write the Latin Vulgate in Greek characters, and conſtantly have the ſame in common uſe, I doubt not but, in length of time, there would be ſome variation between thoſe two copies.

XI. The Samaritans have the Pentateuch not only in Samaritan characters, but likewiſe two tranſlations of it, one in Arabic, and the other in Syriac or Chaldee, which is what they call the Samaritan verſion, as if it were a peculiar language, tho' it is only a kind of Syriac or Chaldee, ſomewhat different from the common Syriac. Thoſe two verſions are alſo written in Samaritan characters, and placed with the text in three columns. M. De Peyreſc had a copy of theſe Tritapla, tho' a little imperfect. The Hebrew-Samaritan Pentateuch, and Samaritan verſion are printed in M. Le Jay's Bible, and in the Engliſh Polyglot, the characters of which were taken from that copy preſerved in the library of the fathers of the oratory at Paris near the Louvre. Yet theſe printed copies have not that grandeur and majeſty which the manuſcript has. There are ſeveral of theſe Samaritan copies ſtill to be found in private libraries. But no body ever made ſo curious a collection of them as M. De Peyreſc. For beſides theſe Tritapla, he had ſeveral fragments of the works of particular men written in a language pretty different from the common Syriac, which may be called Samaritan. In ſhort, if we may believe Poſtel, the Samaritans have grammars too of their language.

XII. As the Samaritans write the text of the Pentateuch without points or vowels, we cannot know whether their way of reading agrees with that of the Jews, which is now fixed by the Maſſoreths. It would nevertheleſs be very curious to hear a Samaritan read the Pentateuch, that we might ſee whether it was perfectly agreeable to the Jewiſh way of reading, which we follow in all regards, becauſe we have no other. It is to be hoped, that ſome traveller, ſkilful in the Hebrew tongue, will one day or other ſatisfy our curioſity in this particular. Nay, the whole church might reap great advantages from it. I do not think the mention of the Greek verſion of the Samaritan Pentateuch neceſſary here, becauſe every one that is the leaſt acquainted with the Greek fathers, muſt know wherein it conſiſts. However, we are not to confound the generality of the Samaritans with a particular ſect of them, whoſe leader's name is Doſitheus, or Douſis, as the Arabians call him. This Douſis (according to what we are informed by a Samaritan, who has given us the hiſtory of his own nation) in ſeveral places altered the text of the Pentateuch; for which he was reproved by the high prieſt. He notwithſtanding had ſome diſciples, who made uſe of his corrupted Pentateuch, as may be ſeen more at length in the notes of Abraham Echellenſis upon the book of Hebedjeſu. [h] Photius too, mentions a certain Doſitheus or Doſten, a famous falſifier of the ſacred writings, who was a Samaritan, and lived at the time of Simon Magus. This man was head of that ſect among the Samaritans called Doſtbenians.

[5] Matthew.

One of the moſt learned men of our age imagines that our Hebrew-Samaritan Pentateuchs claim this Doſitheus as their author [i]. But his opinion has not the leaſt foundation, for the Hebrew-Samaritan Pentateuch, which hath been lately printed, is the ſame with that read in all the ſynagogues of the Samaritans. Indeed I am not ignorant that ſome men of great learning, eſpecially in what relates to the eaſtern nations, are ſurpriſed to hear it advanced, that the modern Samaritans have a place on mount Garizim for offering of ſacrifices; becauſe, they ſay, that Pietro della Valle, who had been in perſon among the Samaritans of thoſe parts, does not ſay a word of it in his travels: and that their extreme poverty too, which they have been long reduced to, would not allow them to carry on their ſacrifices. But waving the neceſſity of inquiring into what Pietro della Valle has written concerning the Samaritans, or whether the French tranſlation of his travels be conformable to the Italian, or even whether he was at the pains of an exact information, in what related to them whilſt he was upon the ſpot, all arguments againſt facts which may be eaſily cleared are urged in vain. But this is certain, that in Scaliger's time the Samaritans at Naplouſe had prieſts, ſince they deſired him, in their letter to him, to ſend them ſome fine linen for the veſtments of their high prieſt: and ſeveral memoirs too, concerning the ſacrifices of the Samaritans, were found amongſt M. De Peyreſc's looſe papers, who had received his informations from travellers, whom he had deſired to viſit the Samaritans, in order to buy ſome of their books. The ſame Samaritans of Naplouſe have lately written to ſome doctors in England, whom they call their dear Samaritan brethren of England. In their letters they aſſert that they have a high prieſt, whom they pretend to be of the race of Phineas, and that their prieſts are of the race of Levi. And in their laſt letter, written in the year 1676, they acquaint them with the death of their high prieſt, and at the ſame time deſire them to aſſiſt them in their miſery, and to ſend their offerings to the holy mount Garizim, to ſupply them with veſtments for their prieſts. And laſtly, to ſend their gifts and alms to the ſepulchres of their fathers. Father Morin, who had alſo made inquiries into the Samaritans, has aſſured us, that they ſtill offer up ſacrifices on mount Garizim, and that the juriſdiction of their high prieſt, who reſides at Naplouſe, extends over all the Samaritans, to whom he every year, by his circular letters, notifies the Paſſover and the other ſolemn feſtivals.

[h] In his Bibliotheca.

[i] Uſſerius Armach.

CHAP.

CHAP. II.

Of their Divination and Witchcraft.

I.[k] THE Jews hold it as a very great ſin to give credit to any prediction whatſoever, whether by aſtrology, geomancy, chiromancy, or any other ſort of witchcraft or divination.

II. But they believe it to be a much greater ſin to apply to necromancy, magic, charms, theurgy, the calling down angels or devils, or conſulting the dead, in order to receive anſwers from them; and in a word, to do any of thoſe things which are mentioned in the xviii. chapter of Deuteronomy.

III. They are alſo forbidden to cut their ſkin, and to put ink, or other colours upon it, Leviticus, chap. xix. Ye ſhall not print any marks upon you.

IV. Beſides theſe, the Rabbi's have forbidden many other ſuperſtitions, which were uſed among the [l] Amorites, which they have ſtiled Darche ha-Emori.

CHAP. III.

Of their Proſelytes.

I.[m] WHEN a man has a mind to turn Jew, three Rabbi's, or other men of credit, are obliged to examine him artfully, to know what reaſon engaged him to it, and whether it be not for ſome worldly conſideration. For when they diſcover any ſuch thing, they diſmiſs him, telling him, that the law of Moſes is a very ſevere law, that its followers are at this time in a low and deſpicable condition, and that it is better for him to continue in the belief which he then profeſſes.

II. If notwithſtanding ſuch advice, the man perſiſts in his deſign, they circumciſe him; and, after he is healed, waſh his whole body in water, the three Rabbi's who have examined him being preſent. After which ceremony he is eſteemed as good a Jew as the reſt of them.

CHAP. IV.

Of their Injunctions upon Women.

I. EVERY thing that is forbidden men by negative precepts, is alſo forbidden women. But as for the affirmative precepts, the Rabbi's have determined that women are not obliged to obſerve thoſe which require a prefixed time for their execution, their opinion in this being grounded on the weakneſs and delicacy of the ſex, the [k] This chapter was omitted in the firſt edition.

[m] This chapter was left out in the ſecond edition.

[l] The ways of the Amorites.

the obedience which they owe to their huſbands, and the duty they are obliged to pay them.

II. Theſe three therefore are the only precepts recommended to them in particular; the firſt is, carefully to avoid their huſbands in the time of their monthly pollutions, and not to approach them again till they have bathed. The ſecond, when they have done kneading their bread, to make a cake, which formerly was offered to the high prieſt, and is now thrown into the fire. [n] And the laſt, to light the Friday night's lamp againſt the eve of the Sabbath, as I have already mentioned.

III. Yet there are ſome amongſt them who are more zealous than the men, who not only take care of the education of their children, but alſo reclaim their huſband's from vice, and bring them to a virtuous courſe of life.

CHAP V.

Of their Slaves.

AMONGST the ancient Jews there was a great diſtinction made betwixt their ſlaves, becauſe ſome of them were Hebrews, and ſome Canaanites: but at this time, except in the Eaſt and in Barbary, they purchaſe none. They, who have any, make uſe of them, keep or ſell them, according to the cuſtom of the place where they reſide; and in caſe their ſlaves have a mind to turn Jews, they circumciſe and waſh them, and then ſet them at liberty.

CHAP. VI.

Of their Confeſſion and Penance.

I. THEY practiſe no other confeſſion, but that which they make to God in their prayers. They generally have one ready made, according to the order of the alphabet, which they call [o] Viddui. Every letter denotes a capital ſin, ſuch as they often fall into: but thoſe who are men of capacity, enter into particulars, and obſerve the kinds and circumſtances of them.

II. It is their cuſtom to make this confeſſion on Mondays and Thurſdays, and on every faſt day. They make it alſo ſeveral times privately during the faſt of expiation, which I have deſcribed [p]. Moreover, when they are ſick, or in any imminent danger, they repeat their confeſſion every night before they go to bed, and every morning when they riſe.

III. The days appropriated to penance begin on the firſt of the month Elul, and continue till the day of expiation; but it is more generally obſerved from their new-years-day to that of expiation: as for him who finds his conſcience charged, all times are convenient. If he has not underſtanding enough of himſelf for this purpoſe, he takes the advice of a Rabbi; or if he has any inſight into the matter, he applies to treatiſes written upon upon penance, and there he finds what penance is moſt proper for his ſins, whether abſtinence, faſting, diſcipline, alms, prayers, or good works; in order to atone, as far as he is able, for the ſin committed.

[n] Part III. chap. i. [o] Confeſſion. [p] Part III. chap. vi.

CHAP. VII.

Of their Sickneſs and Death.

I. THEY eſteem it a good work to viſit the ſick, and to aſſiſt them under all their neceſſities.

II. When a man thinks himſelf in danger of death, he ſends for ten perſons, more or leſs, as he thinks fit, amongſt whom there muſt be a Rabbi; and in their preſence he repeats the general confeſſion, that I have juſt now ſpoken of, and then makes a prayer, wherein he prays to God for the recovery of his health, or, if it be his will, to put an end to his life; he then commends his ſoul to him, and begs that his death may be accounted an expiation for his ſins. In caſe he has any ſcruple of conſcience, or ſecret to reveal, he declares it to the Rabbi. After this he begs pardon of God, and of all thoſe whom he may have offended, and forgives alſo thoſe who have offended him, and his enemies too. If he has any children, or ſervants, he calls them to his bed-ſide and gives them his bleſſing; and if he has a father or a mother he receives it from them. When he has a mind to make his will, and to diſpoſe of his eſtate, he may do it juſt as he thinks proper.

III. Some Jews cauſe a public prayer to be made for them in the ſynagogue, and change their name, as a ſign of their change of life. At ſuch a time, they promiſe and give alms to the ſynagogues and to the poor.

IV. When the ſick perſon is like to die, or in great danger, they do not leave him alone, but ſit up with him day and night. For they think it a meritorious action to be preſent at the ſeparation of the ſoul from the body, eſpecially when it is a learned or good man: grounding their opinion on the xlix. Pſalm ver. 10. That he ſhould not ſee the grave, &c. The perſon who is preſent, when the ſick man expires, rends ſome part of his clothes, according to the ancient cuſtom.

V. Some of the Jews will have all the water in the houſe, or in the neighbourhood, thrown into the ſtreet at this time. This is looked upon as an ancient cuſtom, to ſhew that ſomebody is dead in that part of the town.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Dead, and of their Funerals.

I. WHEN a man is dead, they lay his body on the ground in a ſheet, covering his face, and ſetting a lighted taper by his head.

II. Immediately linen drawers are prepared, and ſomebody ſent for to ſew them, which the women generally do out of charity; the corpſe is then thoroughly waſhed with warm water, wherein camomile and dried roſes have been boiled. Which being done, a ſhirt and drawers are put on; over which ſome put a kind of rochet of fine linen, his Taled or ſquare cloak with the ſtrings that hang at the corner of it, and a white cap on his head. Being ſo dreſſed, they lay him in a coffin made on purpoſe, with a linen cloth under, and another over him. If the deceaſed is a man of note, in ſome parts they make the coffin with a picked top; and if a Rabbi, they place a number of books upon it. Then they cover it with black, [q] and carry it out of the houſe.

III. Then the aſſembly croud round it, and as the Jews look upon the following a corpſe, and the carrying it to the grave, as a very meritorious action, they all carry it by turns a little way till they come to the grave. In ſome places ſeveral perſons accompany the corpſe with burning tapers, and ſing in a plaintive tone. In others, this is not obſerved; the relations who are in mourning follow the corpſe weeping.

IV. Thus the dead are carried to the burial place, which is generally a field employed for that purpoſe, called Beth Hachaim, or houſe of the living, they looking upon the dead as living, becauſe of their ſouls. One of the company makes an oration in praiſe of the deceaſed, in caſe he deſerved it. They alſo repeat a prayer, which they call Ridduc addin, the juſtice of the judgment. It begins with theſe words of Deuteronomy, chap. xxxii. ver. 4. He is the rock, his work is perfect; for all his ways are judgment, &c.

V. A little bag of earth is laid under his head, the coffin is nailed up, and carried to a grave made on purpoſe, near the place where the family of the deceaſed are interred. In ſome countries, when the coffin is almoſt got to the grave, if it be a man, ten men turn ſeven times round it, ſaying a prayer for his ſoul, but in other parts this is not practiſed. The neareſt relation tears ſome little part of his clothes, then the corpſe is let down into the grave, and covered with earth, every one throwing in an handful upon the corpſe, till the grave is filled.

VI. [r] The Jews look upon it as ſinful, either in man or woman, to tear their fleſh, or their hair on this occaſion, either when they lament over the deceaſed, or at any time afterwards; as it is preſcribed in Deuteronomy, chap. xiv. Ye ſhall not cut yourſelves, &c.

VII. At their going away, every one tears up two or three handfuls of graſs, and throwing it behind him, repeats theſe words of the lxxii. Pſalm, ver. 6. They of the city ſhall flouriſh like graſs of the earth. This they do in token of the reſurrection; they waſh their hands, ſit down and riſe again nine times, repeating the xci. Pſalm, He that dwelleth in the ſecret place of the Moſt High. After which they return to their reſpective habitations. Theſe are the uſual ceremonies of the Jews at their burials; and if any of them differ, it is only in a few inconſiderable circumſtances.

[q] This cuſtom, as well as many others which our Rabbi takes notice of, are uſed in ſome particular places only. And the Jews obſerve even ſome of the cuſtoms of the places wherein they live.

[r] This is not in the firſt edition.

CHAP.

CHAP. IX.

Of their Mourning, Prayers, and Commemoration of the Dead.

I. THE neareſt relations of the deceaſed, whether they be father, mother, children, huſband, wife, brother, or ſiſter, when they are come home ſit down on the ground, and pull off their ſhoes; upon which bread, wine, and hard eggs are brought them, and then they begin to eat and drink, Prov. xxxi. 6. Give ſtrong drink unto him that is ready to periſh, and wine to thoſe that be of heavy heart, &c. He that ſays the uſual grace at meals, generally ſubjoins a word or two of conſolation. In the Eaſt, and in many other places, it is cuſtomary for relations and acquaintance, every night and morning, for ſeven days, to ſend proviſions for ſplendid entertainments to the neareſt relations of the deceaſed; and they themſelves likewiſe eat and condole with them.

II. As ſoon as the dead body is carried out of the houſe, his quilt is folded up double, blankets and ſhirts rolled up, and left upon the bed; then a lamp is lighted up at the bed's head, which burns for a week together.

III. The neareſt relations of the deceaſed continue in the houſe for a week, ſitting all that while on the ground, and eating in that poſture except on the Sabbath; when they go with their friends to the ſynagogue, and receive more viſits of conſolation from their acquaintance on that day, than on the others. During theſe ſeven days, they muſt do no manner of buſineſs. The huſband and his wife cannot lie together, and have at leaſt ten perſons to pray with them every night and morning. Some add to their prayers the xlix. Pſalm, Hear this all ye people, &c. and afterwards pray for the ſoul of the deceaſed.

IV. At to mourning, they follow the faſhion of the country where they live, there being no expreſs command relating to it.

V. The ſeven days being expired, they go to the ſynagogue, where many of them cauſe lamps to be lighted. They alſo have prayers ſaid, and promiſe alms for the ſoul of the departed. This they do again at the end of the month and year: and if the deceaſed be a Rabbi, or a man of diſtinction, they, on thoſe days, make an Eſped, that is, a funeral oration, or panegyric on him.

VI. It is cuſtomary for the ſon of the deceaſed to go to the ſynagogue every day, morning and evening, and there to read the prayer called Cadiſh[f], for the ſoul of his father or mother; this he does for eleven months together; ſome of them faſt every year on the day whereon either of them died.

VII. In ſome places they ſet a tomb-ſtone over the grave, whereon is engraven the name of the deceaſed, and a line or two in praiſe of him; together with the day, month, and year of his deceaſe.

[f] Holy.

CHAP.

CHAP. X.

Of Paradise, Hell, and Purgatory.

I. HAVING told the reader, that the Jews pray for the souls of the departed, I must give him their reason for it. They believe that there is a paradise, which they call [t] Gan heden, where the blessed enjoy the beatific vision. As for hell, which they call [u] Ghehinnam, they believe that the souls of the wicked are tormented there with fire and other punishments; that some of them are condemned to suffer those pains for ever, without any hopes of a release; and that others are to remain there only for a certain time. And this is what is called purgatory, which is not distinguished from hell, as to the place, but only as to the time.

II. [w] They are of opinion, that every Jew, who is not an heretic, and has not sinned against the precepts of the Rabbi's, never remains above a year in purgatory, and these, they think, make the greatest number. For they believe there are very few, who remain in hell for ever, because of their sins.

CHAP. XI.

Of the Metempsychosis, or Transmigration of Souls, and of the Resurrection, and last Judgment.

I. SOME Jews believe, with Pythagoras, that souls pass from one body to another; this they call [y] Ghilgal, and endeavour to confirm it by several passages of Scripture, most of them taken out of Ecclesiastes and Job. But this opinion is not general, neither is a man accounted a Heretic, whether he believes it or not.

II. They believe the resurrection of the dead; and it is one of the thirteen articles of their Belief, to be firmly persuaded, that all the dead shall rise again at the last day; and that God will then pronounce an universal judgment on mankind, both in body and soul, as it is written in Daniel. [z] And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt.

CHAP. XII.

Of the thirteen Articles of their Faith.

HAVING [a] now given an account of the ceremonies and customs at present in use amongst the Jews, nothing more remains than, in this last chapter, to give their thirteen articles of faith, which contain their whole belief, according to what Rabbi [t] Garden of pleasure.

[u] It is thus pronounced in the Chaldee; but in the Hebrew, Gehinnom. It is the valley of the children of Hinnom, so famous in the Bible; from thence came the word Gehenna.
[w] This was left out in the second edition.
[x] This is not in the second edition.
[y] Revolution. As if the souls were perpetually revolving from one body into another.
[z] Daniel xii. 2.
[a] This whole chapter was left out in the second edition.

Rabbi Moſes [b] the Egyptian has ſaid of it, in his explanation of the Miſna, in the treatiſe Sanedrin, chap. Helec. Which is received amongſt the Jews without any oppoſition or contradiction.

I. That there is a God, Creator of all things; the firſt principle of all Beings, able to exiſt without any other part of the univerſe; tho' without him nothing in the world can exiſt.

II. That God is one ſole and indiviſible Being, but of an unity different from all other unities.

III. That God is incorporeal, and that he has no corporeal quality whatſoever, either poſſible or imaginable.

IV. That God is from all eternity, and that all things exiſting, himſelf only excepted, had a beginning in time.

V. That God alone is to be ſerved and worſhiped, and that no other being is to be ſerved or worſhiped, either as mediator or interceſſor.

VI. That there has been, and may ſtill be prophets qualified to receive the inſpirations of God.

VII. That Moſes was a greater prophet than any other, and that the degree of prophecy which God honoured him with, was peculiar, and far above what he granted to the reſt of the prophets.

VIII. That the law which Moſes left them, was entirely dictated by God himſelf, and that it does not contain one ſyllable belonging to Moſes, and conſequently that the explanation of thoſe precepts handed down to them by tradition came wholly from the mouth of God, who delivered it to Moſes.

IX. That this law is immutable, [c] nor can any thing be either added to, or taken from it.

X. That God knows and directs all human actions.

XI. That God rewards ſuch as obſerve his law, and puniſhes them who tranſgreſs it; that the beſt and greateſt reward is the life to come, and the ſevereſt puniſhment the damnation of the ſoul.

XII. That a Meſſiah ſhall come, endowed with a far greater merit than all the Kings that have lived in the world before him; that tho' his coming be delayed, none ought therefore to doubt this coming, nor fix a time for it, much leſs pretend to gueſs at it from Scripture, ſince there never will be any King in Iſrael, but ſuch as ſhall be of the line of David and Solomon.

XIII. That God ſhall raiſe the dead, as we have ſaid in the foregoing chapter.

Theſe are the fundamental articles of the Jewiſh faith, and thus I conclude my diſcourſe upon their belief and practice.

[b] This is the ſame man who is called, Maimonides or Rambam; that is to ſay, Rabbi Moſes Ben Maimon, who was the moſt learned and leaſt ſuperſtitious of all the Jews.

[c] See the Supplement, where this pretended immutability of the law is treated of, which the Jews commonly oppoſe to the Chriſtians.

The END of the fourth Part.

SECOND

DISSERTATION

UPON THE

CEREMONIES of the JEWS,

Wherein thoſe CEREMONIES are compared with the DISCIPLINE of the CHURCH,

Which may ſerve as a SUPPLEMENT to the firſt
DISSERTATION.

By F. SIMON.

II. DISSERTATION

UPON THE

CEREMONIES of the JEWS.

CHAP. I.

The firſt Principle of Religion in which both Jews and Chriſtians agree.

An Enquiry into this Principle.

BOTH Jews and Chriſtians agree in this, that their reſpective religions are founded as well on the word of God as on tradition. Indeed we may ſay, that they both acknowledge but one principle of belief, which they call revelation, or the word of God revealed unto men. For whether this word be written or unwritten, it is ſtill the ſame, provided it be certain, that it comes from God. And it is for this reaſon, the Jews do not ſcruple placing their traditions in the ſame rank with the law of Moſes; nay they ſay, that the written law would be no more than a body without a ſoul, or a lamp without light, were it ſeparated from the Oral Law, or tradition. They are obliged, under pain of excommunication, to believe, that God dictated all that is contained in the Pentateuch, even to the leaſt ſyllables of it, to Moſes; and moreover, that he alſo delivered to Moſes, on mount Sinaï, the interpretation of that law; which interpretation, as they pretend, was preſerved amongſt them, without interruption, from the time of Moſes, till at laſt they were obliged to ſet it down in writing. [a] Moſes, with his own hand, writ ſeveral copies of the law before his death, and gave one to every tribe; and beſides thoſe copies, put one into the ark. He afterwards by word of mouth communicated the interpretation of the ſaid law to the Sanhedrim of his time. Joſhuah alſo, after the death of Moſes, taught that interpretation, which Moſes received immediately from God, to the elders in his days; and they, who ſucceeded him as chief of the Sanhedrim, did the ſame to others; ſo that were we to believe the Jews, their religion ſubſiſts down to our days in its primitive purity. But tho' their principle concerning traditions, conſidered in general, may be true, yet it is an eaſy matter to ſhew the falſity of it, by examining into particulars; not only the prophets, as well as our Saviour, having condemned ſeveral of their traditions; but alſo their own doctors agreed concerning the true ſucceſſors, who have preſerved thoſe traditions, and as we find different catalogues of them made by different authors. This alone is ſufficient to create a ſuſpicion, and make them leſs worthy credit.

[a] Ramban in his preface to the treatiſe Jad. Hazeka.

Yet no body can deny, but that this principle of tradition in general, muſt neceſſarily be admitted for the preſervation of a religion in its purity, as the author of the treatiſe intitled, [b] Cozri, has made appear by ſeveral convincing arguments; which evidently prove, that the various opinions of Philoſophers and Heretics concerning religion, proceed from the inconſtancy of their principles, they not being grounded on any conſtant tradition. As to thoſe Jewiſh traditions which our Lord rejected, his deſign was only the aboliſhing ſome falſe traditions, which the Jewiſh doctors had added to the old ones; and when this all-wiſe Teacher refers us to the written law, Scrutamini ſcripturas, we are not to imagine his intention was to refer us to the bare text of the Scripture; but to that text as explained by the doctors who had ſucceeded Moſes. [c] They ſit, ſays he, ſpeaking of thoſe doctors, in Moſes's ſeat; all therefore whatſoever they bid you obſerve, that obſerve and do; and this conformably to the words of the law. [d] If there ariſe a matter too hard for thee in judgment, thou ſhalt come unto the prieſts, the Levites, and unto the judge that ſhall be in thoſe days. And if we ſtrictly examine the teſtimonies, which the apoſtles have brought from the Old Teſtament in confirmation of their doctrine, we ſhall find that they quoted them in that ſenſe only, which was generally received in their time. St. Irenæus, Tertullian and the reſt of the earlieſt fathers of the church, had recourſe to that very tradition in their controverſies with Heretics, and to the ſucceſſion of Biſhops in the principal churches, and eſpecially to that of Rome, which they acknowledge to have been founded by the chief of the apoſtles St. Peter and St. Paul. And for this reaſon, we ſee ſeveral of thoſe who were preſent at the Council of Trent, made no ſcruple to put the old traditions upon an equality with the holy Scripture, and looked upon them as revelation. [e] Tanto le tradizioni quanto le ſcritture ſon parole di Dio e primi principii della fede, con accidental differenza trá loro, che quelle rimaneſſero ſcritte ancora ne' libri, e queſte ſolamente ne' cuori. This very way of expreſſion is entirely agreable to that of the Jews when they mention their traditions; and Tertullian formerly ſaid, that the church alone was the true and legitimate proprietor of the holy Scripture, Scriptura ſacra Eccleſiæ Catholicæ poſſeſſio eſt propria. In the ſame manner the Jews ſay, that the ſynagogue is the ſole miſtreſs of it, and that other nations have nothing but the letter, and not the ſpirit of it. But to ſay the truth, there is at preſent ſo great a number of traditions amongſt the Jews, that the whole life of Moſes could not have been long enough to have received them from God on mount Sinaï, where they ſuppoſe he received them in the ſpace of forty days which he paſſed on the mount. This is not ſo much the fault of tradition itſelf, as of thoſe who have been the depoſitaries of it, therefore we muſt not always look upon this grand maxim of the Jews as infallible, Halakah le Moſce mi Sinaï, It is a deciſion received by Moſes on mount Sinaï, no more than to this principle of our divines, This is an apoſtolical tradition; ſince it is certain, that neither the one nor the other are infallible; and that even in the firſt ages of Chriſtianity, there have been ſome learned men who have given the name of apoſtolical traditions to ſome opinions of their own both ſingular and hetorodox. Wherever the Jews can can prove, that a thing has been conſtantly received amongſt them, eſpecially from the time of Moſes, then there will be no room to queſtion the truth of that tradition. [f] Vincentius Lirinenſis has laid down the ſame rule in regard to the Catholics, to whom he propoſes the belief of thoſe things which have been believed in all places, at all times, and by the whole world: Id teneamus quod ubique, quod ſemper, quod ab omnibus creditum eſt. Wherefore the fathers of the Council of Trent, gave the name of infallible to ſuch traditions only, as we have received immediately from our Lord by the apoſtles, [g] or from the apoſtles themſelves to whom the Holy Ghoſt had revealed them, and which afterwards deſcended to us without interruption.

[b] Cozri. [c] Mat. xxiii. 2. [d] Deut. xvii. [e] Palavic. Hiſt. of the Council of Trent, chap xiv.

Now tho' the Jews ſhew an extraordinary zeal for ſuch traditions as they pretend to have received from their forefathers, and maintain them with ſo much obſtinacy as to think, they have a right to kill thoſe who oppoſe them, yet they never could agree amongſt themſelves as to the authors from whom they have received them; as it is eaſy to prove by comparing the books written upon this ſubject: as the commmentaries, for inſtance, made on the treatiſe intitled, [h] Pirke avoth, the chapters of the fathers. Iſaac Abrabanel has indeed done his utmoſt in order to juſtify this pretended uninterrupted tradition, but found it impoſſible to come at it. His diſpute was againſt Rabbi Moſes, who had written a treatiſe concerning thoſe who were to be joined together in the ſucceſſion. Neither R. Joſeph Hajon, R. David Ganz, the author of Jubaſin, or the book of deſcents, nor the reſt of thoſe Jews who have written on this queſtion, agree amongſt themſelves: ſo that in favour of their connection, moſt of them are forced to ſuppoſe that ſome of their doctors lived ſeveral centuries together; the better to ſodder together the broken links of the chain of their ſucceſſion. The Jews have had one advantage in this particular above other nations, even above the Greeks, I mean their impoſing upon the whole world without fear or ſhame. Their books are full of fictitious ſtories, and it is ſurpriſing that at preſent there ſhould be any Chriſtians capable of believing their dreams and idle conceits, eſpecially relating to their traditions. Yet they generally agree in this, that from Joſhua the ſucceſſor of Moſes, till R. Juda called the Saint, who firſt collected all their traditions, and committed them to writing, there was firſt a body of elders, who received the interpretation of the law from Joſhua; that to this body ſucceeded the prophets, the firſt of whom was Samuel, and to them ſucceeded the great aſſembly or ſynagogue held under Eſdras, and partly compoſed of prophets. [i] R. Moſes de Cotſi a learned Jew, for the continuation of this chain of tradition, and at the ſame time in order to ſhew that it remained uninterrupted, during the captivity of the Jews at Babylon, brings in ſome men of reputation of the tribes of Juda and Benjamin, who were carried captives to Babylon; nay, he goes ſo far as to aſſure us, that theſe illuſtrious perſons there founded the famous academy of Nahardea on the Euphrates; which academy as well as their traditions were afterwards preſerved, and the latter taught to thoſe who returned with Zerobabel and Eſdras from Babylon to Jeruſalem, where an academy was founded in imitation of that at Babylon, that at Nahardea, however, ſtill ſubſiſting, becauſe all the Jews did not return to Jeruſalem. In ſhort, theſe their traditions were continued down from Eſdras, who was the head of the aſſembly, which is commonly called the Great, till the time of this R. Juda whom we have mentioned, who collected them towards the end of the ſecond century, under the empire of Commodus, or, as ſome will have it, under Antoninus Pius. Now that the tradition of the Jews received no alteration during all that time, as they pretend, without producing any public records for it, I do not ſee why we ſhould believe them more in this, than in many other things.

[f] Vincent. Lir. adv. Hær. c. 3. [g] Concil. Trid. Seſſ. 4. [h] Abrav. in his preface on Nahalot Avoth.

[i] R. Moſes de Cotſi in his large treatiſe on the commandments of the law.

CHAP.

CHAP. II.

Of the Theology of the Jews, together with ſome reflections thereupon.

THE whole belief of the Jews is included in thirteen articles, which they call fundamental articles of their religion; in this they follow R. Moſes, ſon of Maimon, who diſpoſed theſe articles into order; the firſt of which is concerning the exiſtence of God. The ſecond, of his unity. The third, of his ſpirituality, and the great impoſſibility of his being corporeal. The fourth, relates to his eternity, a perfection peculiar to himſelf only. The fifth, to the worſhip and adoration due to him only. The ſixth, relates to prophecy, viz. that there have been prophets amongſt the Hebrews, and that there may be more. The ſeventh, regards the prophecy of Moſes in particular, which was peculiar to him; and above the degree of prophecy communicated to the reſt of the prophets. The eighth, ſpecifies that the law of Moſes does not come from him, but that God dictated the whole to him, as well as the explanation of that law. The ninth, that this law is unalterable, and that no perſon is allowed to add to, or take from it. The tenth, eſtabliſhes the providence of God, and the care he takes of his creatures. The eleventh, imports, that God will reward ſuch as obſerve the commandments of the law, and that he will puniſh ſuch as tranſgreſs it. The twelfth, that the Meſſiah is to come, and that though he delays his coming, yet ought it not to be doubted of, nor the fixed time of his coming determined. The thirteenth and laſt is, concerning the reſurrection of the dead. Theſe thirteen fundamental articles of the religion of the Jews, ſeparate and diſtinguiſh them from all other nations, as the only confidents of God, and his true children, to whom the inheritance was promiſed; and thus they look upon thoſe who deny theſe articles, as abominable and deſerving death. Wherefore the Jews would be much to be feared, were they inveſted with power; for though they outwardly confeſs, that the Chriſtians are not to be comprehended under their denomination of abominable, as believing the unity of God as well as the Jews; yet they rank Chriſtians in the ſame claſs with idolaters, becauſe of the myſtery of the Trinity, looking upon them as really multiplying the Godhead by multiplying the perſons of it. Altho' the Jews generally admit the opinion of Rabbi Moſes, concerning theſe thirteen principal articles of their religion, yet there are ſome doctors among them, who do not follow it in all points; amongſt others [k] R. Haſdai, R. Joſeph Albo, and Don Iſaac Abrabanel. Their doubts deſerve mentioning, as they may contribute to the clearing up of the Chriſtian religion. Firſt then, they ſay, that it is difficult enough to underſtand that article, which eſtabliſhes the worſhip of one only God; and at the ſame time forbids all recourſe to any other, either as a mediator or interceſſor; ſince the Jews addreſs themſelves to the angels, whom they pray to in their neceſſities.

In the ſecond place, the article concerning the immutability of the law ſeems contrary to the practice of God himſelf, ever ſince the beginning of the world, he having at firſt given peculiar commandments; and forbidden the eating of any fleſh. Yet he afterwards gave precepts of a different nature to Noah; he ſome time after ordered Abraham to be circumciſed; and laſtly, Moſes received ſeveral other commandments from God. Thus it ſeems unreaſonable to ſay, there ſhould be but one only law, and that in no wiſe ſubject to alteration. Neither can it be ſaid, that nothing can be added to, or taken from it; ſince it is certain, that Solomon and others ſtill added ſome things to it; but this prohibition affects only particular perſons, who can neither add any thing to the law, or diminiſh from it, upon their own private authority.

Thirdly,

[k] R. Haſdai in the treatiſe Or Adonai. R. Joſ. Albo in the treatiſe Ikkarim. R. Abrabanel in the treatiſe Roſamana.

Thirdly, the article concerning the coming of the Meſſiah does not ſeem to be fundamental, ſince R. Hillel was of opinion, that the Jews ought no longer to expect their Meſſiah, he being, according to his opinion, already come in Hezekiah's time. Notwithſtanding which, this doctor was not the leſs a member of the whole Jewiſh communion on that account.

In the fourth place, there ſhould ſeem to be many other things deſerving a place among the fundamental points of the Jewiſh belief; ſuch as the ſeveral attributes of God, which R. Moſes has not mentioned, where he ſpeaks of the fundamental articles of religion; and beſides theſe, the creation of the world, the free will of man, our belief of ſuch miracles as are contained in the law, the immortality of the ſoul, prayers, the uſefulneſs of penance, and many other points which the Jews are obliged to believe; from whence it appears, that they have many more articles of faith than R. Moſes hath ſummed up. Tho' indeed the ſame Rabbi does ſpeak of other articles in another place; yet it may be ſaid, that his intention was only to point out the principal and fundamental articles; and it is partly after this manner, that Abrabanel endeavoured to juſtify him.

But it will be proper to ſhew the various methods which the Jews have, at different times, made uſe of for explaining their divinity. Moſt of the ancient Jews have had recourſe to allegories and fables, with which they have ſo filled their books, that there is a kind of mythology amongſt them as well as amongſt the Heathens; and in my opinion, what has chiefly contributed to the ignorance of the ancient Jews, is their having ſome conſtitutions, which forbid them the reading of the philoſophers, and other prophane authors. Notwithſtanding which, ſome of them have applied to the Platonic philoſophy, in which they have blended their own idle conceits; and from hence has proceeded the greateſt part of their cabaliſtic learning. To this ſtudy of the Platonic philoſophy, we muſt likewiſe aſcribe ſeveral of thoſe ways of ſpeaking, to be found in their old allegorical books, which are not very different from thoſe which the Chriſtians make uſe of, to explain the myſtery of the Trinity.

But after the Arabians had ſpread abroad the philoſophy of Ariſtotle, and eſpecially his logic and metaphyſics, into ſeveral provinces, ſome of the Jews, who were not ſo ſcrupulous, applied themſelves to thoſe ſtudies; nay, they even tranſlated the books of this philoſopher out of Arabic into the Hebrew of the Rabbi's. From that time, the divinity of the Jews ſeems intirely altered, at leaſt their way of explaining it, which occaſioned great confuſion and diſorder amongſt them; and ſo much the rather, as they, who had applied themſelves to the reading of the old books, and the traditions of their fathers, were offended at ſeeing their divinity overrun with metaphyſics, and the art of reaſoning bear a greater ſway than their authority. R. Moſes having publiſhed his book, intitled, Morch Nevokim, was accuſed by ſome of their other doctors with having corrupted religion, by mixing too much philoſophy with it, as may be ſeen by the letters of the chief Rabbi's of thoſe times, and by thoſe of R. Moſes himſelf too. The Jews however have by degrees accuſtomed themſelves to theſe ſubtilties, and at laſt reliſhed the writings of that Rabbi. As for the other articles of the Jewiſh belief, it is certain, that they reverence angels as well as we, whoſe names and offices too they pretend to know. Yet the greateſt part of thoſe names were invented by their cabaliſtical divines, who gave them ſuch different names as moſt properly agreed with the effects they were thought to cauſe: therefore we ought to diſtinguiſh what they believe concerning angels, from what they do not. [1] Their belief is, that all things below are ſubject to the ſuperior powers, and that there is no kingdom, but what depends on ſome angel or other, the Hebrews only excepted, who depend immediately upon God, and have no need of a mediator. In this ſenſe, the fifth article of their belief is underſtood, as explained by R. Moſes, whereon he ſays, that no other power than God alone, no, not even as a mediator or an interceſſor, is to be ſerved or worſhiped.

[1] R. Abrabanel Roſamana.

We are not always to take what the Jewiſh doctors ſay, in their writings concerning angels, in the literal ſenſe, it being nothing but allegories and conceits forged at pleaſure by people, who made a wrong uſe of their leiſure hours, and of the fooliſh credulity of the ſimple vulgar; not to mention their introducing the names of them for the ſolving ſome difficulty or other, as the poets formerly brought in their Gods upon no better occaſions. Theſe were the inventors of the cabala, which is a chimerical art or ſcience, without the leaſt foundation: and therefore thoſe Jews, who apply themſelves to it, are for the greateſt part fanatics, and ſo poſſeſſed with their own fancies, as to think themſelves able to work miracles by the means of this art.

They divide their cabala into ſpeculative and practical. This laſt ſerves for the working of their pretended miracles, which they do, by pronouncing ſome of the names of God, and of angels, or ſome verſes of the Pſalms, adapted to their ſcience. The Jews, eſpecially thoſe of Poland, and of ſome other places in the North, are ſo ſuperſtitious this way, that if any of them happen to be condemned to death, he has recourſe to this practical cabala; but we do not ſee it has ſtood them in any ſtead, unleſs in the hiſtories which they have publiſhed concerning the wonders performed by it; nay, it happens ſometimes ſo unfortunately, that their judges, being ignorant of the vanity of that art, condemn them as conjurers. And indeed the fooliſh effects of magic, which we read of in the books of Agrippa, and in ſome other modern authors, who have been taken for great conjurers, are generally taken from the Jewiſh cabala, to which other fictions have been added, the better to impoſe upon the common people.

In order to give a fuller explanation of the Jewiſh belief upon the worſhip of angels, to whom they pretend no addreſſes ought to be made as mediators or interceſſors, we muſt obſerve, that this does not ſeem intirely to agree with their own writings; for we there find prayers directed to angels, begging their aſſiſtance. Joſhua bowed to an angel, and the Jews themſelves acknowledge the angel Michael as their head and patron. And they are ſo uſed to aſcribe every thing to their angels, eſpecially when they ſpeak after the cabaliſtical doctors, that they even aſcribe moſt of their actions to them. The ſect of the Sadducees alone denied the exiſtence of angels, as if all that is ſaid of them in the books of Moſes was a mere allegory: but our Saviour himſelf has condemned this ſect, and approved of the common belief of the Jews concerning the exiſtence of angels, which was afterwards confirmed by the apoſtles, and admitted by the whole church.

In ſhort, the Jews believe alſo that there is a hell, a purgatory, and a paradiſe: and though it be a hard matter to prove theſe three articles of their belief, by formal quotations from the law of Moſes, yet none dare deny them. It is of no great conſequence whether their purgatory be a different ſtate, and not a different place from that of hell, as the Chriſtians in the Eaſt diſtinguiſh it; it is ſufficient if they own that there is a paradiſe where the ſouls of the bleſſed are in glory, and a hell where the ſouls of the wicked are tormented with fire and other puniſhments; and that ſome are condemned to thoſe puniſhments for ever, and others for a certain time only. But I know not how the Rabbi's come by one opinion of theirs, that ſuch Jews as are not Heretics, or have not ſinned againſt ſome chief point of the law, remain no longer than one year in purgatory. For thus they not only expiate all ſlight faults in purgatory, but enormous crimes too, for which they are certainly detained a much longer time; this the Jews look upon as a ſpecial privilege granted to them alone, becauſe, they being the true children of God, (according to their opinion) it is for them chiefly, that God has made another world, out of which they exclude all other nations, except ſuch as believe the unity of a God, and ſome other fundamental articles mentioned in their writings: for we are not to imagine that the Jews abſolutely damn all other nations for not receiving their law; ſuch a general unity in religion throughout the world being reſerved for the time of the Meſſiah, in which they perfectly agree with us.

It would be to no purpoſe to make any reflections here upon the affinity there is between the belief of the Jews, and that of the Chriſtians, concerning moſt of the articles we have already ſpoken of: for undoubtedly the chriſtian religion took its origin from that of the Jews, which muſt be looked upon as its baſis and foundation: and to uſe the words of St. Auſtin, they are eſſentially but one religion. Wherefore our Lord aſſures us, that he did not come to aboliſh the religion of the Jews, but to give it its perfection; and what is ſtill more obſervable is, that he left nothing behind him in writing, for the eſtabliſhment of his new law, but what ſtill adds a greater perfection to the old one. The moſt learned amongſt the Jews themſelves agree with us in this, that the Meſſiah will add new and greater perfections to the law of Moſes.

CHAP. III.

Of the Morality of the Jews, compared with thoſe of the Chriſtians.

THE baſis and foundation of the Jewiſh morality is no other than that of the Decalogue, for which the Chriſtians are indebted to them. The love of God, in preference to that of all the creatures in the world, is no leſs preſcribed to them by their doctors, than it is to us, excepting only, that moſt of their reflections have ſomething that is peculiarly affected or rather ſuperſtitious in them, which is not to be attributed to any defect in their law, but entirely to their doctors.

In my opinion we do an injury to the Jews, when we ſay, they acknowledge no other righteouſneſs than what conſiſts in the ceremonies of their law, as if they thought, for example, that they had expiated their ſins, by waſhing their bodies. On the contrary, they firmly believe, that all external ceremonies were inſtituted only as ſo many motives to internal ſanctity. Their faſtings, and other external mortifications muſt be internal too, and come from the heart; and they are of opinion, that beſides outward and ceremonial penance, if I may thus expreſs myſelf, we ought alſo to have a true contrition and a ſincere repentance of our ſins, in order to ſatisfy God's juſtice. I need not bring any proofs, that this is the belief of the Jews, ſince moſt of their books of morality and repentance are full of theſe maxims. This I thought fit to obſerve, that they might not be reproached with ſo much freedom as they generally are, with being bigotted to the letter of the law, without minding the ſenſe. Far from this they inſiſt, that in order to attain to the ſenſe and ſpirit of the law, we are not abſolutely to reject the letter, which is as it were an admonition as to the internal meaning of the law itſelf.

But there is a great deal of probability, that the Jews have reformed their doctrine concerning the true ſpirit of the Moſaic law, by the help of thoſe excellent inſtructions, which they have drawn from the writings of the Chriſtians. When Jeſus Chriſt, ſpeaking of charity, ſays to his diſciples, that [m] he gives them a new commandment, he does nothing more than renew the old precept, which had been corrupted by the falſe interpretations of their doctors. The love of our enemies, for inſtance, is preſcribed in as ſtrong a manner by the law, as by the Goſpel; but there was a neceſſity, that our Lord ſhould renew that precept, becauſe it was not practiſed at that time among the Jews; and for this reaſon, he ſays to his diſciples: Mandatum novum do vobis, ut diligatis invicem. To ſhew them in a clearer manner how highly they think of neighbourly love, [n] their doctors affirm, that the world is eſtabliſhed on three foundations, viz. the law, prayer, and mercy. Nevertheleſs we may ſay, that they are much more addicted to the ceremonies monies of their law, than to the performance of good works; and this, becauſe they are overburdened with a vaſt number of precepts, which chiefly conſiſt in external acts.

[m] John xiii. 34.

[n] Treatiſe of Avoth, or of the fathers.

The miſerable condition which they have been reduced to for theſe many ages, is no trifling motive towards making them more wicked; eſpecially thoſe who live in Europe, unknown, and in an obſcure manner; ſome of whom believe, that it is enough for a Jew to keep his religion to himſelf, without being obliged to make external profeſſion of it. Upon this principle, many of them make no ſcruple to embrace the Chriſtian religion, whilſt at the ſame time they are Jews in their hearts. There are in Spain a great number of thoſe Chriſtians in appearance, and Jews at heart, whom the ſeverity of the Inquiſition in that country will never be able to deſtroy, becauſe there is no nation in the world ſo firmly perſuaded of their religion as the Jews. There are not ſo many of them in France, and they have good reaſons for it.

The uſury which they daily practiſe is alſo to be attributed to the miſerable condition they are in. For as they have not the ſame liberty as the Chriſtians have to purchaſe lands, and poſſeſs real eſtates, they are forced to improve their money in ſome other manner, in which they trade as the reſt of the world do in other merchandiſes. And this perhaps might not be blameable, if their law had not forbidden all kind of uſury: but they reſtrain this prohibition, and pretend, that it extends no farther than to their brethren only. Therefore they readily lend them money, not only without any hopes of profit, as Jeſus Chriſt has ordered in regard to his diſciples in the Goſpel; but they will not even receive any intereſt for it, under any pretence whatſoever, when offered them. This is inviolably obſerved even amongſt the Caraïtes; which ſhews, that they take the command of Moſes concerning uſury in the ſtricteſt ſenſe, at leaſt as to their brethren. For as to Chriſtians, they look upon them, as I have obſerved above, as idolaters who multiply the Deity, and for that reaſon, think they have a right to deſtroy them as much as is in their power. They on their ſide upbraid us with not ſtrictly obſerving the prohibition of Jeſus Chriſt's injunction to us not to practiſe uſury with our brethren, in any manner whatſoever; nay they pretend, that according to that prohibition, even contracts authoriſed by any government whatever are uſurious. Far from applying the law of uſury to thoſe only who are in want, and who have need of help, they ſay poſitively, that taking intereſt from the rich is no leſs an uſury than if it were from the poor.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Commandments, Ordinances, and Judgments of the Jews.

SAINT Peter the apoſtle was in the right to call the ceremonies obſerved amongſt the Jews under the Old Teſtament, a yoke, which neither themſelves, nor their fathers could ever bear; ° Jugum quod neque nos, neque patres noſtri portare potuimus: yet the modern Jews look upon them as a ſpecial bleſſing from God towards their nation, and a prerogative of their religion, above all the religions in the world. Tho' indeed they do not think themſelves obliged to obſerve them all, in order to eternal life, it being impoſſible for them to keep a great many of them, whilſt without a temple and without ſacrifices.

They divide the commandments or precepts of the law, into 613. capital commandments, which are ſubdivided into an infinite number leſs eſſential, deduced with infinite ſubtilty from them. Theſe ſix hundred and thirteen precepts are contained, according to ° Acts xv. 10.

to their opinion, in this Hebrew word Tora, which ſignifies law, and whoſe letters make up the number of 611, and in order to find out the two other remaining commandments, [p] they ſay, that God himſelf gave the two firſt relating to his unity, [q] and to the prohibition to worſhip any ſtatues or images. So that according to this opinion, by theſe words of Deuteronomy, [r] Moſes commanded us a law, is underſtood the 611 precepts only; but this is nothing more than a nicety of the cabala, which is called Gematric [s]. Wherefore the moſt learned of the Rabbi's believe, that the words of the law, wherein the unity of God is mentioned, do not expreſs a commandment peculiar and diſtinct from the others; but that they are, as it were, an introduction to the whole Decalogue [t]. Some other Jews, by the help of a ſubtilty like that of the cabala, pretend that theſe 613 commandments of the law are all comprehended in the words of the Decalogue, which according to them contain 613 letters. And becauſe the number of thoſe letters is in reality 620, ſome have alſo extended the number of their precepts to 620. But we ſhall not detain the reader with theſe ſubtilties, which take their riſe from the philoſophy of Pythagoras and Plato. Not but that theſe reflections on numbers are to be met with in the works of thoſe fathers of the church, who had applied themſelves to the Platonic philoſophy. But they do not lay ſo much ſtreſs on them as the Jewiſh doctors, who have made an art of it, which they call, as we have already obſerved, the gematric, or geometrical cabala.

They farther divide theſe 613 precepts, into 248 affirmative, and 365 negative commandments. The 248 affirmatives anſwer to ſo many members, ſay the Rabbi's, to be found in the body of man: and [u] becauſe the book of Eccleſiaſtes ſays, that to keep God's commandments is the whole duty of men: they add, that all the parts of a man are ſupported and kept up by theſe precepts, as if each limb anſwered to ſome one particular commandment. As for the 365 negative commandments, they make them anſwer the 365 days of the ſolar year, ſince we are not only obliged to accompliſh the law of God with all our limbs, (to ſpeak in the Jewiſh way of thinking) that is to ſay, with all our ſtrength, but likewiſe all the days of our life. Had theſe numbers been invented only to put us in mind of our obligation to love God with all our heart, the Jews could not be accuſed of ſuperſtition: and beſides, the fooliſh conceits of the ancient Heretics, which were grounded on a like principle, would not perhaps appear ſo ridiculous, as when they are literally underſtood. It was in this manner that Baſilides comprehended a vaſt number of ſecrets under the word Abraxas, a word forged on purpoſe to repreſent the number 365, according to the letters of the Greek alphabet, and at the ſame time to denote the 365 days of the year. By the ſame method might be explained ſeveral other myſterious fictions of the old Gnoſtics, who often agree with the Jewiſh doctors on this ſubject. But this would be digreſſing too far.

There is alſo another diviſion of the commandments of the law, according to the ſeveral names which Moſes uſed, whereby to expreſs theſe commandments. Theſe names are, Mitſvoth, Precepts; Hukim, Statutes or Ordinances; and Miſpatim, Judgments. They call Mitſvoth or Precepts, thoſe whereof the reaſon is clearly expreſſed in the text of the law itſelf: as for example, the reaſons for which the Jews are obliged to obſerve the Paſſover and keep the Sabbath, are clearly expreſſed in the Pentateuch. Their ſtatutes, on the contrary, or ordinances, called Hukim in Hebrew, do not at the ſame time contain the reaſon of them in the very words of the law. God was pleaſed that it ſhould lie concealed from the Jews. In ſhort, the judgments which Moſes calls Miſpatim, are precepts of the underſtanding, as the Jewiſh doctors expreſs themſelves, and ſuch as our own reaſon would lead us to, even tho' they were omitted in the law.

Beſides theſe commandments contained in the law of Moſes, the Jews acknowledge ſeveral others, which they call the Precepts of the Hacamim, that is to ſay, of their Wiſemen,

[p] R. Bechai upon the law.
[q] Eliezer Pirke.
[r] Deut. xxxiii. 4.
[s] Mecilta Raſci Albo. Abrab.
[t] R. Abraham Seba.
[u] Eccl. xii. 13.

Wiſemen, or Doctors, to whom they allow the ſame right of making new ordinances as Moſes had, according to times and occaſions. This right is founded on the words of God himſelf, who commands them to go to the elders of the Sanhedrim for a reſolution of ſuch difficulties as might ariſe from the law. Moſes was the firſt who made ſeveral ordinances of this kind in the conſiſtory of his time. Joſhua did the ſame after him, as well as they who ſucceeded him in that dignity. Wherefore the Jews think they are no leſs obliged to obey the conſtitutions of the Sanhedrim, than the commandments of the law, tho' the ordinances of the former are inferior to thoſe of Moſes: the reaſon they give for this is evident; for they pretend that thoſe ſenators were directed by the Spirit of God, and conſequently infallible in their determinations. Under this name of Wiſemen, they comprehend not only the elders of their Sanhedrim or conſiſtory; but alſo the prophets that have ariſen amongſt them at different times, and who doubtleſs had a right to ſit in their aſſemblies.

CHAP. V.

Of the great Conſiſtory or Sanhedrim of the Jews. Of the Place where it was held, ſome Light given to ſeveral Circumſtances on this Subject, with relation to what is obſerved amongſt Chriſtians.

THE great conſiſtory, or Sanhedrim of the Jews, takes its riſe from Moſes, as we have already obſerved. It was compoſed of LXXI elders, one of whom enjoyed the title of head or preſident; [x] and it is the ſame whom the Jews ſtill call Hannaſi, the Prince. Beſides this preſident, there was a ſecond or vice-preſident, to whom they give the title of Ab or father of the conſiſtory. As for the others, they were all equally called elders or ſenators. As to their way of placing themſelves, it was in the form of a ſemi-circle, in the middle of which ſat the Naſci or preſident of the aſſembly, and at his right-hand the vice preſident, and the others according to their rank on each ſide of the Naſci. Some add a third elder, who was called only Hacam, Wiſeman, who ſat on the left of the preſident: ſo that the Naſci's vicegerent, and this Hacam were like two aſſiſtant counſellors. It was proper to obſerve their way of ſitting, becauſe it was from theſe conſiſtories that it was tranſmitted to the ſynagogues, and afterwards to the churches or firſt meetings of the Chriſtians, as we ſhall ſee hereafter.

This great conſiſtory could not be held any where but at Jeruſalem, in a place called Liſcat Hagazit, the ſtone conclave, which was adjoining to the temple, or rather a part of it; juſt as our councils generally meet in churches. This Liſcat Hagazit was much the ſame with what was formerly called In Trullo at Conſtantinople. The Talmudiſts call it a Baſilica, and all cauſes of moment were finally determined in that place: this obſervation gives light to theſe words of St. Luke, [y] It cannot be that a prophet ſhould periſh out of Jeruſalem. When the caſe was ſuch, as it could not be poſitively determined by tradition, then each ſenator had a caſting, as well as a deliberative voice.

When the Jews returned from Babylon to Jeruſalem, the holding of one of theſe grand aſſemblies was neceſſary to ſettle and regulate the affairs of the ſtate. It was compoſed, as they imagine, of 120 of their leading men, over whom Eſdras, ſurnamed the Scribe, preſided as the Naſci or head. They ſay farther, that in this aſſembly were preſent ſent the prophets Haggai, Zachariah, Malachi and ſome other great men inſpired by God, as Daniel, Nehemiah, Mordecai, Zorobabel, Azariah, Miſhael and Ananiah. Tho' we are not to give credit to every minute circumſtance, that the Jews have given us concerning this aſſembly, yet we may conclude from them in general, that prophets and other eminent perſons were admitted to ſit there together with the elders as ſenators.

[x] Rambam in his treatiſe of the Sanhedrim.

[y] Luke xiii. 33.

There was nothing more auguſt in the commonwealth of the Hebrews, than this Sanhedrim, which had the power, as the Jews expreſs themſelves, of making ſuch la tora, a hedge to the law, becauſe it had an authority of explaining it, as it thought moſt proper according to times and occaſions. [z] In this ſenſe R. Moſes calls it, The foundation of the Oral Law, and the pillar of true doctrine. Wherefore thoſe who refuſed ſubmiſſion to it, were looked upon as rebels and excommunicated perſons. To this without doubt the Son of God alludes, when he pronounces this ſentence againſt thoſe who in time to come will not ſubmit to the determination of the church or of the congregation: [a] Sit tibi ſicut Ethnicus & Publicanus. And indeed, if we compare the diſcipline of the church in its meetings or councils, with that of the ſynagogue, we ſhall find but a ſmall difference betwixt the one and the other. In the firſt place, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt in eſtabliſhing his new law (he being the ſupreme Legiſlator, of which Moſes as it were the interpreter only, was the figure) was in his qualifications not at all inferior to Moſes; and as Moſes had left the ſame power to Joſhua, and to the elders of his time, concerning the interpretation of the law, Jeſus Chriſt alſo left St. Peter to ſucceed him, as the Naſci, or head of his church; and St. Paul calls ſome of the apoſtles pillars. Jacobus & Cephas, & Johannes qui videbantur eſſe columnæ. The Catholics attribute an infallibility to their councils, which infallibility they acknowledge to be in the church, in the ſame manner as the Jews were perſuaded of the infallibility of their great conſiſtory or Sanhedrim. * In this they have followed the apoſtles and elders, over whom St. Peter preſided as Naſci, or Prince, (holding this primacy in the church by a divine right) when they writ to their brethren of Antioch, Syria and Cilicia, what they had determined in their aſſembly: [b] Viſum eſt, ſay they, Spiritui ſancto & nobis; ſhewing by theſe words, that they were truly inſpired.

The biſhop of Rome, who is the true ſucceſſor of St. Peter, has alſo ſucceeded him in the quality of Naſci or head of the church. But we ought not to reſtrain the place of this infallibility or inſpiration to the city of Rome, as the Jews did to that of Jeruſalem. Neither is it true, that the council of the Pope alone and his clergy repreſent the ancient Sanhedrim. That Sanhedrim is repreſented by the whole church alone, of whom the ſucceſſor of St. Peter is the Hannaſci or Prince. In this ſenſe the ancient fathers, ſpeaking of the biſhop of Rome, always gave him the preference over the other biſhops, Prærogativam ſuffragii. Moreover, as the elders in the Jewiſh Sanhedrim had all of them a caſting vote; in like manner in our councils, the biſhops have alſo a definitive vote as well as the Pope, who is the Naſci or preſident. The reaſon why the conſiſtory of Rome has not the ſame authority under the new law, which the Sanhedrim of Jeruſalem had under the old law, is, that the religion which the Meſſiah was to give us was not to be confined to an inconſiderable corner of the earth, as the Jews themſelves agree with us in this particular. Neither can it be ſaid at preſent, [c] Notus in Italia Deus, as it was ſaid formerly, Notus in Judæa Deus. So that the Chriſtian religion not being fixed to any one determinate place, but on the contrary, being ſpread all over the world, In omnem terram exivit ſonus eorum; [d] the great aſſembly, which we call General Councils [e] cannot be compoſed but by calling together all the elders who have ſucceeded the apoſtles; that is to ſay, the biſhops over whom the Pope is Hannaſci or head, as ſucceſſor of St. Peter. Therefore the queſtion ſo generally propoſed in the ſchools, whether the councils are ſuperior

[z] Rambam.
[a] Mat. xviii. 17.
* The author ſpeaks here and in all other places as a Catholic, which is to be obſerved.
[b] Acts xv. 28.
[c] Pſalm lxxv. (or lxxvi.)
[d] Pſalm. xviii. (or xix.)
[e] Epiſtle to the Romans, chap. x. 18.

perior to the Popes, or the Popes to the councils, does not ſeem to have any foundation, and is intirely uſeleſs; ſince the councils, which repreſent the ancient Sanhedrim, are aſſemblies which ought to be compoſed of the preſident and elders, that is to ſay, of the Pope and biſhops; this queſtion was chiefly debated during the ſchiſm, and at ſuch a time we are to argue after a different manner.

The authority of the great conſiſtory, or Sanhedrim of the Jews, ſubſiſted as long as the republic; only that the Jewiſh doctors make ſome diſtinction as to inſpiration, during the courſe of time it ſo ſubſiſted. They generally believe that prophecy, or divine inſpiration, laſted till the fortieth year of the ſecond temple, to which ſucceeded another kind of inſpiration called by them Bathkol, the daughter voice, which is oftentimes mentioned in the Talmud. There ſeems to be an alluſion made to this voice in the New Teſtament, where it ſpeaks of ſome voices heard in the air, as coming from heaven. When all form of government ceaſed among the Jews, and they were diſperſed all over the earth, they obſerved no other rules, than ſuch as had been preſcribed by the preceding conſiſtories. Therefore they carefully collected all thoſe conſtitutions, as we ſhall ſhew more at large in the ſequel of this diſcourſe, when we come to ſpeak of their Talmud, which is much the ſame thing with them, as the collections of the canon law into one body with us. [f] Rabbi Moſes indeed obſerves, that even after the collection of the Talmud, there were other conſiſtories held. But thoſe meetings were provincial only, and ſo of no authority, but in the province where they were held; becauſe the great conſiſtory of Jeruſalem alone had power to oblige the whole nation of the Jews to the obſervation of its deciſions. A man may compare theſe conſiſtories held by the Jews in ſome provinces, with our provincial councils. But this ſhall ſuffice concerning the great conſiſtory of the Jews and their other aſſemblies. We ſhall hereafter ſee what was their diſcipline during the whole time of their captivity, and by what methods their religion has been kept up in the midſt of all their calamities.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Synagogues of the Jews, and of the Officers or Miniſters of thoſe Synagogues. The Origin of our Churches or firſt Aſſemblies. The firſt eſtabliſhment of our Biſhops and Prieſts.

BESIDES the temple, there was a great number of private ſynagogues in Jeruſalem, of which mention is made in the New Teſtament too, where we ſee the ſynagogue of the Alexandrians, and of ſome others, ſpoken of. [g] The doctors or Rabbi's taught the law in thoſe ſynagogues, which likewiſe ſerved for ſchools; this was practiſed in the time of Jeſus Chriſt and his Apoſtles, who there aſſembled with the reſt of the Jews, in order to hear the expoſition of the law, and the inſtructions of the Rabbi's. As this was the place for hearing trials, and giving judgment, the manner of ſitting, uſed in the great conſiſtory, was obſerved. And ſo in the firſt place there was a preſident, called in Greek, Archiſynagogos, the head of the ſynagogue, whom the Jews at this time call the head of a Kahal, that is to ſay, of a congregation. Thoſe who ſat on each ſide of this preſident in a ſemi-circle, as we have already obſerved, took all of them the title of Zekenim, elders, and lower down on different ſeats ſat their diſciples, who ſtudied the law.

Theſe

[f] Rambam preface to Jad. Hareca.

[g] Acts vi.

Theſe diſciples, who were called Talmide Hakamim, The diſciples of the Wiſemen, were divided into three different claſſes. Thoſe of the firſt claſs were choſen to ſupply the vacant places of the Hakamim or of the Wiſemen, thoſe of the ſecond were promoted to the firſt, and ſo thoſe of the third gradually to the ſecond. The people were ſeated in the area, which anſwered to the nave of our churches, ſo that the preſidents and elders of the ſynagogue turned their backs to the people, who were ſeated on mats or carpets in the area. When S. Paul ſays, that he was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, he means, that he had been the diſciple of that doctor, ſitting at his feet amongſt his other diſciples. The author of the commentaries upon the epiſtles of St. Paul, which ſome have aſcribed to St. Ambroſe, clearly and in a few words explains what we juſt now obſerved concerning the ſynagogues of the Jews. Hæc [h] traditio ſynagogæ eſt, ſays this author, ut ſedentes diſputent ſeniores dignitate in cathedris, ſequentes in ſubſelliis, noviſſimi in pavimento ſuper mattas.

Had our painters been well acquainted with the diſpoſition of the ſynagogues, they would not have repreſented Jeſus Chriſt ſitting in the middle of the doctors in a high pulpit above the reſt, as if he had been the head of a ſynagogue, though he was but twelve years of age; which is grounded on theſe words of St. Luke. [i] Invenerunt illum in templo ſedentem in medio doctorum, audientem illos & interrogantem eos. He ſat on one of the benches amongſt the other diſciples, and he had the liberty of propoſing his queſtions as a diſciple, ſince thoſe places were really ſchools, where they were at once inſtructed both in their law and traditions, which is obſerved to this day. For this reaſon, they diſtinguiſh two different ſorts of ſchools, one of which was called Beth-hammikra, the houſe or place of reading; becauſe the text of the law was there read; the other was called Beth-hamidras, the place of interpretation or enquiry: by which means the Jews pretend to have preſerved among them the two laws, which they ſay Moſes received on mount Sinai, which are the written law, that is to ſay, the five books of Moſes, and the Oral Law, which contains their traditions. But Jeſus Chriſt ſhews them, on ſeveral occaſions, that under the plauſible name of traditions, they had corrupted the law by their falſe explanations.

We are now come to the firſt churches or meetings of the Chriſtians, who in their beginnings could not hold any, except under the name of Jews, the Emperors not having granted them that privilege. Therefore all laws made concerning the Jews, either favourable or not, were equally applied to the Chriſtians, who were looked upon at that time as a peculiar ſect of the Jews, much like Phariſees or Sadducees. This gave the Apoſtles an opportunity of preaching their doctrine the more eaſily, without being condemned as broachers of new doctrines, inaſmuch as they took refuge under the Jews. St. Paul himſelf ſometimes behaved thus, publicly teſtifying that he was a Jew, and of the ſect of the Phariſees. [k] Ego Phariſæus ſum filius Phariſæorum. We ought not therefore to wonder, that the firſt Chriſtians, who moſt of them had been Jews, and generally as well as they aſſembled at the temple and in the ſynagogues, ſhould in their firſt aſſemblies obſerve the ſame diſcipline as the Jews practiſed. This will ſtill appear plainer by the parallel we ſhall draw between them.

As there was in every ſynagogue a preſident, or head appointed to preſide over the other elders; ſo in the aſſemblies of the Chriſtians there was a head, whom ſome of the fathers of the church have alſo called the Preſident, tho' he be generally called elder or biſhop in the books of the New Teſtament. They who held the firſt rank in the ſynagogues were generally called Zekenim, Elders, in imitation of the 70 elders whom Moſes had conſtituted to be the judges of the Sanhedrim. Even he who preſided over the reſt, took the name of elder, being only, as it were, dean of the reſt. In the firſt aſſemblies of the Chriſtians, they who held the firſt rank, took alſo the name of Presbyteri, Elders, or Prieſts. The preſident or biſhop, who was the head of thoſe elders, aſſumed likewiſe the dignity of an elder; for which reaſon the name of biſhop in the New Teſtament is ſometimes confounded with the name of prieſt or elder. And thus they who were ignorant of this origin of the word prieſt, have falſly imagined that at the riſe of Chriſtianity there was no difference between biſhops and prieſts.

[h] Ambroſ. Comm. in Ep. ad Cor. i. 14. [i] Luc. ii. 46. [k] Acts xxiii. 6.

For this very reaſon, the council of the firſt Chriſtian aſſemblies was called Presbyterium, or a council of elders. The biſhop preſided in it as the head and firſt elder, ſitting in the midſt of the other elders, in the manner we have already obſerved, in ſpeaking of the conſiſtories of the Jews. In cathedrâ ſeniorum laudent eum, ſays the royal prophet. The prieſts or elders, who ſat on each ſide of him, had each reſpectively their ſeat as judges, and for that reaſon are called by the fathers, Aſſeſſores Epiſcoporum. Nothing of any moment was put in execution, till it had been firſt debated in this aſſembly, where the biſhop made but one body with the other elders or prieſts; becauſe the juriſdiction now called Epiſcopal, did not depend on the biſhop alone, but on all the elders too over whom the biſhop was preſident. And this was practiſed at Rome likewiſe for ſeveral centuries.

It ſeems very probable, that the name of cathedral church is derived from this ancient manner of ſitting in the firſt churches or aſſemblies of the Chriſtians; which is the reaſon, the feaſts of the chair of St. Peter at Rome and Antioch are ſtill obſerved, they being the two cities where that holy Apoſtle preſided over a fixed and ſettled conſiſtory. But the reader will obſerve, that by the word cathedral church, I do not mean ſuch cathedral churches or temples as they are at preſent conſtituted. The word Eccleſia in its primary ſignification means no more than an aſſembly, and it is certain, that 'till Conſtantine's time the Chriſtians had not the liberty of building temples for their meetings. There can be nothing more ridiculous than what ſome writers, and amongſt others the Spaniards ſay, concerning the antiquity of their cathedral churches, which they pretend to have been built in the time of the Apoſtles, as if a cathedral church in thoſe days had been any thing elſe but the ſee of a biſhop attended by a certain number of elders. Yet if we are to believe the new breviary of the Carmelites, there was a church built on mount Carmel in honour of the holy Virgin by thoſe prophets that ſucceeded Elias, who viſited, and were viſited by the virgin. But this is wretched trifling.

This conformity of diſcipline between the church and the ſynagogue will ſtill farther appear, if we reflect on the ancient cuſtoms of the church. In former times, for inſtance, none but biſhops had the care and direction of ſchools, and it is not to be doubted, but that as the ſynagogues of the Jews were ſchools wherein the law was taught, or that there were ſchools built near the ſynagogues; ſo in the ſame manner the biſhop and elders, or prieſts, had the care of ſchools amongſt Chriſtians, as there have been at Alexandria from the earlieſt ages of Chriſtianity. Some remains of this cuſtom ſtill appear in moſt cathedrals, where there are offices to which the care of ſchools is annexed. At Paris, for inſtance, this duty lies upon the chantre, and on him who enjoys the office of chancellor at Rouen. The council of Trent had ſome deſign to reſtore the uſe of thoſe ſchools under the name of ſeminaries, which are quite different from thoſe which moſt of the biſhops in France are continually ſetting up in their dioceſes. The intention of the fathers of that council was not, that ſuch as were deſigned for the prieſthood ſhould only learn a few ceremonies relating to the adminiſtration of the ſacraments; but that thoſe ſeminaries ſhould be real ſchools, where young men might be educated almoſt from their infancy, in order to be ſerviceable to the church when they were grown up to years of maturity.

CHAP.

CHAP. VII.

A Continuation of that Conformity to be found between the Church and Synagogue. Some other Offices belonging to the Synagogue.

THE church farther held this in common with the ſynagogue, that in the beginning the Chriſtians acknowledged no other judges of their differences, but the tribunal of the biſhop and elders. Wherefore St. Paul forbids the faithful, whom he calls ſaints, (juſt as the Jews too called themſelves) to have recourſe to any other judges but the elders of the aſſembly, to whom he gives the name of Wiſemen, which is the ſame name that the Jews gave to their doctors. [1] Is it ſo that there is not a hacam or doctor amongſt you, ſays this holy apoſtle, no not one that ſhall be able to judge between his brethren? Sic non eſt inter vos ſapiens qui poſſit judicare inter fratrem ſuum? In my opinion they have miſtook St. Paul's meaning who have thus tranſlated his words into French. Is it ſo, that there is not a wiſeman amongſt you? For in this place the word wiſeman is a title of office, and ſignifies an Hacam of the aſſembly, that is to ſay, an elder or doctor.

The Chriſtian church has alſo viſibly imitated the ſynagogue in her manner of ordaining miniſters, by the impoſition of hands, which the Jews ſtill to this day call Semica. So that making a man a doctor, or impoſition of hands on him, are ſynonymous terms amongſt them. Moſes was the firſt author of this ceremony, for he laid his hands on Joſhuah, who was appointed to ſucceed him, as well as on the other elders of the Sanhedrim, who were immediately filled with the Holy Ghoſt. After the example of Moſes, the heads of all the conſiſtories, after Moſes and Joſhua, likewiſe practiſed this impoſition of hands on thoſe who were choſen elders of the Sanhedrim. However the Jewiſh doctors obſerve, that it was not abſolutely neceſſary to receive impoſition of hands from the Naſci, or Prince of the Sanhedrim; but that the elders who had once received that impoſition had a right to practiſe the ſame on others, and that they ought to be at leaſt three in number; in the ſame manner as it was eſtabliſhed in the beginning of the church, that there ſhould be at leaſt three biſhops preſent at a biſhop's ordination. Beſides impoſition of hands, they thought fit afterwards to ſubjoin ſome words to that ceremony, expreſſing the action that was performed; as for example, I lay my hands on thee, or receive thou the impoſition of hands; which is perfectly conformable to our manner of ordaining and of adminiſtring the other ſacraments.

There was alſo in the temple, and afterwards in the ſynagogues, a miniſter or officer, perfectly reſembling our deacons; he was called the Sciamas or miniſter of the temple, and even to this day the Syrians uſe this word Sciamas to ſignify their deacons and other inferior miniſters. The Jews commonly call him Hazan, becauſe his buſineſs is to inſpect every thing done in the ſynagogue, and eſpecially the reading of the law. Wherefore, in our church, the deacons are not only to provide for all things neceſſary in the aſſembly, but are alſo appointed to read the Goſpel; which is ſtill exactly obſerved amongſt us.

We do not find in the books of the New Teſtament, that the Apoſtles conſtituted any other miniſters beſides thoſe already mentioned, viz, biſhops, prieſts and deacons. But under this name of deacon are to be included all inferior miniſters, as indeed the word deacon in Greek ſignifies all ſorts of miniſters. The Syrian churches generally uſe but one word, to denote all ſuch miniſters as are inferior to deacons, the ſame is done alſo by the Jews, for their word Hazan ſometimes ſignifies the porter of the ſynagogue. The Levites performed that office in the temple; they took care to open and ſhut the doors, and ſung in the deſk whilſt the ſacrifices were offered.

This

[1] 1 Cor. vi. 5.

This very regulation too has been tranſmitted from the temple of Jeruſalem and ſynagogues to the church, where there are alſo porters and chantres; but it happened in proceſs of time, that thoſe whoſe proper buſineſs was ſolely the miniſtry of the Goſpel, were alſo obliged to ſing: and indeed ſinging is now the chief employment of the canons, who were formerly the biſhop's counſellors, and with him as elders, compoſed what was then called the Presbyterium.

CHAP. VIII.

Some Reflections on the Prayers of the Jews, and their Conformity with the Prayers of Chriſtians.

THE Jews have a great number of prayers, whereof they have made ſeveral collections; and though they have at all times been obliged to pray to God, yet, it is very probable that during all the time they had ſacrifices in the temple, they had not the ſame ſet forms of prayer, which they uſe at preſent in their ſynagogues. The prayers they now uſe, may be called a ſupplement to, or alternative for their ancient ſacrifices; for this reaſon their ſynagogues are by them called ſmall temples. And as two ſacrifices were daily offered in the temple of Jeruſalem, one in the morning, and the other in the evening, ſo they have morning and evening prayers in their ſynagogues, to anſwer to thoſe two ſacrifices. Beſides the daily ſacrifices, there was another ſacrifice offered up on holy days, for the ſolemnity of the feaſt; wherefore the modern Jews add a new prayer on feaſt days called Muſaph, that is to ſay addition. We ſhall farther obſerve, that they have not only morning and evening prayers, to repreſent the morning and evening ſacrifice; but likewiſe prayers for the night, which anſwers to thoſe that remained after the evening ſacrifice.

The Chriſtians, as well as the Jews, have fixed a time for prayers; and though they are bound to pray to God without ceaſing, ſine intermiſſione orate[m], as the Apoſtle expreſſes himſelf, yet they have ſet hours to pray together in common; and theſe public prayers have more efficacy, and are more acceptable to God. It is true, that Jeſus Chriſt chiefly preſcribed private prayers; but he did not thereby diſapprove public prayers, ſince he was often preſent at them amongſt the Jews; he blamed only the affectation of ſome Jewiſh doctors, who prayed in public, that they might be ſeen of men, ut videantur ab hominibus.

Yet it ſhould ſeem, that our Lord [n] intended to condemn thoſe long prayers the Jews made publicly in their ſynagogues, when he forbids his diſciples to uſe ſuch prayers as the Heathens did, who thought they ſhould be the ſooner heard for their much ſpeaking. He gives them the very form of their prayers, rejecting all the reſt which he thought little edifying. Sic ergo orabitis, pater noſter qui es in cælis. After this manner therefore pray ye; Our Father which art in heaven, &c. To this I anſwer, that it is not likely that Jeſus Chriſt intended wholly to condemn the prayers which the Jews commonly uſed in their ſynagogues, but only thoſe of ſome private Rabbi's, who were every day inventing new ones. No other prayers are, as I take it, condemned by Jeſus Chriſt but ſuch, and in order to bring his diſciples to an entire diſuſe of them, he gave them a ſet form for their private devotions, without forbidding them to aſſiſt at public prayers in the ſynagogues.

And this is the very fault of ſome Chriſtians; wherefore the councils were obliged to condemn ſome prayers, which had been introduced into the office of the church, and compoſed according to the various fancies of men. Neither are we to believe, that the uniformity of prayer now in the Latin church, has been conſtantly the ſame; for the Monks

[m] 1 Theſſ. v.

[n] Mat. vi. 7.

Monks and Friers are as much diſtinguiſhed from the reſt of the clergy by their offices, as by the rules of their reſpective orders, wherein they imitate the ancient Jewiſh Rabbi's, who compoſed private prayers for their diſciples, beſides the public authorized by the ſynagogues.

The Jews have alſo different ways of praying, which they expreſs by different words. [o] St. Paul ſeems to have alluded to theſe words in his firſt epiſtle to Timothy, wherein he exhorts them to offer up ſupplications, prayers, interceſſions, and thankſgivings for all men. He might have ſaid prayers only, if there had been no ſuch diſtinction at that time, as there is ſtill to this day in the Jewiſh books of prayer: for they call Bakaſot, petitions, requeſts, or ſupplications, which St. Paul expreſſes by the word Deeſis. They give the name of Tephillot, to what the ſame apoſtle calls Proſeuchas, vows, or prayers: and ſo on as to the reſt.

St. Auſtin, who had no opportunity of ſeeing the Jewiſh rituals, has endeavoured all he could to diſtinguiſh the difference between theſe various prayers, which are expreſſed in the Latin verſion of the New Teſtament by theſe words, obſecrationes, orationes, poſtulationes, gratiarum actiones. He explains them with relation to the prayers then uſed in the church, which are ſtill retained to this day. [p] We ſhall call prayers, ſays that holy doctor, ſuch as are uſed in the celebration of the ſacrament, before the offering on the altar is conſecrated, and ſuch as are uſed at the bleſſing and conſecration, orationes: but though theſe two ſorts of prayers are really diſtinct, and the conſecrations are called by the Jews bleſſings and thankſgivings, yet I think it would be more proper to explain thoſe different words by thoſe ſeveral ſorts of prayers, which were then uſed in the ſynagogues of the Jews: for St. Paul's meaning is, that Chriſtians ſhould, in their aſſemblies, pray for Princes, and for all ſorts of people in the ſame manner as the Jews then did in their ſynagogues.

I ſhall not here loſe time in the mention of ſome other prayers, common both to Jews and Chriſtians: ſuch, for inſtance, as they uſe before a journey by land, or voyage by ſea; there was no neceſſity for Chriſtians to follow the example of the Jews in ſuch prayers, the dangers which men are expoſed to ſufficiently admoniſhing them that they have occaſion for God's aſſiſtance. I ſhall only obſerve, that the Jews, as well as the Catholics, in their prayers rely on two things, viz. on the goodneſs and mercy of God, and on the righteouſneſs and integrity of their forefathers. For this reaſon, the Jews mention Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, and ſome others, as well patriarchs as prophets. Do this for us, ſay they to God, thro' the merits of all thoſe juſt and holy men, who have ariſen in every age amongſt the Iſraelites. Le maan zecout col hatſadikim ve habaſidim ſcchajou becol dor ncemanim al Iſraël.

Nor is it neceſſary to enlarge upon the diverſity we find among the Jews in their common-prayer-books. It is ſufficient to obſerve in general, that they have different uſages in relation to this point as well as we, and that ſuch cuſtoms are ſet down in the beginning of each Seder tephillot, order of prayers. The Spaniards, for example, add theſe words, ccminhag kahal kados ſepharad, according to the cuſtom or uſage of the Spaniſh aſſembly. The Italians have alſo theſe words, according to the cuſtom of the Italian aſſembly. The German, Poliſh and other nations obſerve the ſame method; under the denomination of Germans, the Poliſh Jews are comprehended, becauſe their cuſtoms are not at all different.

To the foregoing obſervations, I ſhall only add, that none, neither women, nor children, can be excuſed making their addreſſes to God; as we may pray at any time according to the obſervation of the Rabbi's, and as this nation is not confined to any ſet hour. St. Paul perhaps alluded to this reflection of the Rabbi's, when he exhorted the [q] Theſſalonians to pray to God without ceaſing; not that they were to ſpend whole days and nights in prayer, but becauſe we may pray at all times, and at all hours.

Their prayers generally begin with praiſing God, and ſo proceed to the imploring ſuch things as they ſtand in need of. They may alſo begin with petitions, and then praiſe God and bleſs his holy name. Jeſus Chriſt ſeems to have followed the former method in the prayer he has left us; for it begins with exalting the name of God. Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, &c. the petitions come afterwards, viz. Give us this day our daily bread, &c. Several other obſervations might be made concerning the prayers of the Jews; but my deſign is to mention the moſt eſſential only, and ſuch eſpecially as may illuſtrate the Chriſtian religion.

[o] 1 Timothy ii. 1. [p] St. Auſt. Ep. to Paulin. [q] 1 Theſſ. v. 17.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Benedictions uſed amongſt the Jews; and the affinity they bear to thoſe of the Chriſtian Religion.

THE Jewiſh precept of bleſſing God is not a mere injunction of their Rabbi's, but is contained in the law, wherein it is ſaid, [r] When thou haſt eaten and art full, then thou ſhalt bleſs the Lord thy God, for the good land which he hath given thee. [s] Neither can any one be diſpenſed from it, no more than from praying, becauſe we may bleſs God at all times. But as the Rabbi's are extremely ſubtil and nice in explaining the law, R. Moſes is of opinion, that the words of the law oblige them only to bleſs God after they have eaten, and made an end of their meal, becauſe of theſe words in the text, When thou haſt eaten and art full. Yet the generality of the Rabbi's preſcribe bleſſings both before and after eating, which precept they have extended to a great many other things.

The ſame cuſtom of bleſſing both eatables and drinkables was tranſmitted from the ſynagogues to the firſt meetings of the Chriſtians; Whether therefore ye eat or drink, ſays St. Paul, [t] whatſoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. Theſe bleſſings are alſo called thankſgivings or praiſes; and thus we are to underſtand thoſe other words of St. Paul in the ſame place; If I by grace be a partaker, why am I evil ſpoken of, for that for which I give thanks. Jeſus Chriſt himſelf alſo exactly obſerved theſe benedictions; this we find by his bleſſing the five loaves in the wilderneſs, [u] benedixit illis. The bleſſings which he pronounced on the bread and wine diſtinctly at his celebrating the laſt Paſſover with his Apoſtles, are related with the very ſame circumſtances as are to be found in the Jewiſh rituals. Wherefore I ſhall chiefly inſiſt on this, and at the ſame time ſhew in what reſpect Jeſus Chriſt followed the Jewiſh form, when he ſpoke theſe words over the bread he bleſſed. This is my body, &c.

We ſhall then obſerve, in the firſt place, that the perſon of the greateſt dignity amongſt the Jews always pronounces the Baraca, or bleſſing on the bread and wine; wherefore Jeſus Chriſt performed it himſelf, being with his diſciples as their maſter and doctor. St. Luke, who gives a more exact and particular account of this hiſtory, than either St. Matthew or St. Mark takes notice of two cups, over which our Lord pronounced this benediction, becauſe in reality the Jews, when they celebrate the Paſſover, begin with the bleſſing of a cup which they fill with wine; and this firſt bleſſing of the cup is called, by way of diſtinction, the bleſſing of the cup uſed in eating. They drink four cups during this feaſt, but only bleſs the firſt and the laſt; it is at leaſt the common cuſtom amongſt all the Jews, except the Germans, who repeat the benedictions over all the cups.

However it may be as to theſe different cuſtoms at preſent obſerved amongſt the Jews, it is likely that Jeſus Chriſt followed the practice of his own age, and that St. Luke related it after the ſame manner as it was tranſacted, whilſt the other Evangeliſts only mention it in general. I know it may be ſaid, that St. Luke has here uſed an expreſſion pretty common amongſt the Hebrews, who often repeat the ſame thing; or that by theſe

[r] Deut. viii 10.
[u] Luc. ix. 16.
[s] Rambam. Treatiſe of bleſſings.
[t] 1 Cor. x. 31.

theſe two different cups, he expreſly intended two different Paſſovers of our Saviour with his diſciples; as if he had in the firſt obſerved the ceremony of the Paſſover according to the ancient law, and from thence taken occaſion to inſtitute the Paſſover of the new law. But this has no manner of foundation from the text of the Goſpel, and it is more natural to ſay, that Jeſus Chriſt celebrated the Paſſover in the ſame manner as was uſed at that time amongſt the Jews, nay even to ſuch a nicety, that the three Evangeliſts call the wine which was in the cup, The fruit of the vine, conformably to what we ſtill read in the Jewiſh ritual: Bleſſed be thou O Lord our God, King of the world, for having created the fruit of the vine, bore peri hag gephen.

It is farther very probable, that Jeſus Chriſt having bleſſed and broken the bread according to the cuſtom of the Jews, imitated alſo the ſame Jews in theſe words, This is my body, juſt as they ſay in the Chaldee or Syriac, when they eat unleavened bread, Ha lahma ania di acalou abbatana be area Miſraim. This is the bread of affliction, which our fathers did eat in the land of Egypt. Yet ſome of them repeat theſe words in their mother tongue, and others ſay them in any language that is underſtood by all the by-ſtanders. But our divine Maſter ſignified to his diſciples, that it was no longer required of them, to eat the bread of affliction, which their fathers had eaten at their coming out of Egypt; but that being the Author of a new covenant, he gave them his own body and blood inſtead of that bread. Take ye, ſays he to them, and eat, what I give unto you is my body; and having bleſſed the wine in the cup, he offered them that hallowed wine, as the Jews commonly call it; that is, which was truly changed into his blood, and ſaid unto them, drink ye all, for this is my blood, the blood of the new covenant; alluding to thoſe words which Moſes pronounced for the confirmation of the covenant which God had made with the Iſraelites in the Old Teſtament; [w] Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you. Hic eſt ſanguis fœderis quod Dominus pepigit vobiſcum. As then the blood of the victims under the old covenant was really ſhed, ſo we ought not to doubt but the blood of Jeſus Chriſt, who was truly the Paſchal Lamb, was alſo ſhed for the confirmation of his new covenant with us. [x] Hic eſt ſanguis meus Novi Teſtamenti qui pro multis effunditur in remiſſionem peccatorum.

To conclude on this head, our Saviour ſeems to have alluded to the manner of ſpeaking before mentioned, when he tells us in the vi. chapter of St. John, that he is the bread of life; [y] I am, ſays he, the bread of life; he that cometh to me ſhall never hunger, and he that believeth on me ſhall never thirſt. This is not unlike thoſe other words that we find in the Hagada or Hiſtory, which the Jews repeat at the celebration of the Paſſover. This is the bread of affliction which our fathers did eat in Egypt, whoever is an hungry let him come and eat; thoſe that ſtand in need, let them come and celebrate the Paſſover; that is to ſay, let them eat the Paſchal Lamb in order to obtain life. [z] This is the bread which comes down from heaven, adds our Lord in the ſame place, that a man may eat thereof and not die. As what had happened under types and figures only in the Old Teſtament were verified in him, hæc omnia in figuris contingebant illis; he often took opportunities of inſtructing the Jews therein, by raiſing their minds to heaven by allegories, which, at the ſame time, were the true ſenſe of the Scripture at the time he ſpoke to them; as when he tells them, that their fathers who had eaten manna, were nevertheleſs dead, becauſe indeed the greateſt part of them died in the wilderneſs, and ſo did not enjoy the land of promiſe; and that he was the true heavenly bread, that contained in it everlaſting life, whereof the land of promiſe was the figure.

[w] Exod. xxiv. 8. [x] Mat. xxvi. 28. [y] John vi. 35. [z] Ver. 50.

CHAP.

CHAP. X.

Of the Jewiſh Feſtivals, and of their Conformity with thoſe of the Chriſtians.

AS the Chriſtian religion differs not from that of the Jews in the eſſential part of it, and as they both tend to the ſame end; ſo we ought not to wonder, that the Chriſtians keep moſt of the Jewiſh feaſts after their own manner. I ſay after their own manner, becauſe they have not retained what is merely ceremonial: as for example, there is a great deal of difference between the Paſſover of the Chriſtians and that of the Jews, the latter being only the figure of the other. This St. Paul inſinuates to the Corinthians, when he exhorts them to keep the Paſſover, [a] with the unleavened bread of ſincerity and truth. At the ſame time telling them, that they have no other Paſchal Lamb but Jeſus Chriſt. Paſcha noſtrum immolatus eſt Chriſtus. We beſides ſing the Hagada or hiſtory of that feaſt in our churches, and this in relation to the Hagada of the Jews. And as in their hiſtory of the Paſſover, they mention the difference between this night and the other nights of the year; ſo in the ſame manner the Chriſtians bleſs that night when Jeſus Chriſt triumphed over death, hæc nox eſt in qua deſtructis vinculis mortis Chriſtus ab inferis victor aſcendit. The Jews in their Hagada acknowledge, that they were Pharaoh's ſlaves in Egypt, from whence the Lord their God delivered them with a mighty hand; and the Chriſtians acknowledge the ſame, when they thank God for their redemption on this night from ſin and the tyranny of the Devil, of which Pharaoh was the type. Laſtly, the more expreſly to ſhew wherein conſiſts the Paſſover of the Chriſtians, they have added theſe words, alluding to the Paſſover of the Jews, hæc ſunt feſta paſchalia in quibus verus ille Agnus occiditur, cujus ſanguine poſtes fidelium conſecrantur.

The Chriſtians moreover keep the feaſt of the Pentecoſt, but after a different manner from the Jews. For on this day God gave the law to the Iſraelites on mount Sinaï, which was all on fire, becauſe of the lightning and thunder with which it was ſurrounded; and on the ſame day the Apoſtles alſo received the new law, being filled with the Holy Ghoſt, who deſcended on them with a great noiſe, as it is obſerved in the Acts [b]. Thus the Pentecoſt of the Chriſtians was chiefly inſtituted in order to keep holy that day on which the new law was engraved by the Holy Ghoſt on the hearts of the Apoſtles, juſt as the ancient law was delivered to Moſes upon that day engraved on tables of ſtone.

Beſides theſe two great feſtivals, which are equally kept both by Jews and Chriſtians, as has been already obſerved, Saturday was for a long while kept by the church (eſpecially the eaſtern church) as a day of meeting, as well as Sunday. For this reaſon, the old canons forbad all faſting on that day, becauſe mirth and chearfulneſs, and not grief and ſadneſs were deſigned to be the ſigns of feſtivals. Yet the Chriſtians never obliged themſelves to obſerve the ceremonies that were merely Jewiſh, in the keeping of the Sabbath, but rather ſhewed a regard to the cauſe of its inſtitution, viz. the creation of the world. And as this cauſe was independent of the ancient ceremonies of the law, they thought themſelves equally obliged with the Jews to have a regard for that day; as it is obſerved in the old book of conſtitutions attributed to St. Clement; Ye ſhall keep as holy days, both Saturday and Sunday, becauſe the firſt is conſecrated in memory of the creation, and the other in memory of the reſurrection.

There are ſtill ſome remains of that old ceremony in the Latin church, in the office for Saturday in Paſſion week, and for the eve of the Pentecoſt, which may be called the two ſolemn Saturdays of the Chriſtian religion, as the Jews called the Saturday of the Paſſover, Sabbath gadol, the great Saturday. In our churches the ſervice is the ſame on on thoſe two days as it was formerly on all other days of meeting. They read at that time ſomething out of the law and the prophets, according to what is ſtill obſerved in the ſynagogues. As for example, the leſſon for the Saturday in Paſſion week begins with theſe words of Geneſis, In principio creavit Deus cælum & terram; to ſhew that we on that day commemorate the creation. After which is read that place of Exodus, wherein the victory of the Iſraelites over Pharaoh's army, at their paſſing thro' the Red-ſea, is mentioned.

[a] 1 Cor. v. 8.

[b] Acts ii.

I omit the other paſſages of the Scripture, which are read in the office of that day, becauſe every body may have recourſe to it in the book itſelf. What chiefly deſerves to be taken notice of, is the application which the church makes of it, by appropriating that leſſon to her ſelf, as if every thing tranſacted under the Old Teſtament, were only a figure of the myſteries fulfilled under the New. As in the prayer added to the words of Geneſis, wherein the creation of man is mentioned, the church takes notice of the ſecond creation of man, that is to ſay, his redemption; theſe are the words of it, O God, who ſheweſt thy power in the creation of man, and who haſt ſhewed it ſtill more in redeeming him: Deus qui mirabiliter creaſti hominem, & mirabiliter redemiſti. In the other prayer which is added to the words of Exodus, wherein the paſſage thro' the Red-ſea is commemorated, the church likewiſe ſubjoins the truth to the figure as well as in the firſt prayer, beſeeching God, that as he delivered the Hebrews from their captivity in Egypt, ſo he would be pleaſed to ſave all nations by the waters of baptiſm.

The ſame things may eaſily be obſerved in the office for the Saturday before Whit-Sunday; for on that day we read the Law and the Prophets, as on the Saturday in Paſſion week; and becauſe the Jews received the law on that day, [c] we read that part of Exodus, wherein is mentioned the manner in which God gave his law on mount Sinaï. It is true, that in proceſs of time there has been conſiderable alterations in the office of the church, and that the ſame uniformity which we have at preſent was not at the beginning; yet it has ever been the cuſtom throughout the whole church to read leſſons out of the Law and Pſalms, and the Prophets too, or ſome other book of the Old Teſtament, according to the different feaſts; to which was afterwards added a leſſon out of the Goſpels, or the Epiſtles of St. Paul.

If there has been any variety, it was not conſiderable, and the cuſtoms of the ſynagogues differ as much, according to the different countries, as the manner of performing the offices of the church differ from each other. The church and the ſynagogue agree in one point, which is, that they have prayers for ordinary days, and other prayers for thoſe days which we now call Feriæ; and beſides theſe, they have alſo particular prayers appointed for feſtival days. It is true, the ſynagogue has this advantage over the church, that it is more ancient, and the firſt likewiſe to whom God communicated his holy word. St. Paul, ſpeaking of the Jews, ſays [d] Illis credita ſunt eloquia Dei. But this advantage is of no conſideration, inaſmuch as the ancient law expected its perfection from the Meſſiah; who was to renew it and take away all its imperfections. For inſtance, no man will ſay, that the firſt touches of a pencil upon a picture, are more perfect than the laſt that give the finiſhing ſtroke. It is the ſame thing as to the law, with reſpect to the Goſpel; the former is in reality but the firſt rough ſtrokes, and always ever continued in that ſtate, till at laſt Jeſus Chriſt came in order to complete that work, which till then remained imperfect. [e] Finis enim legis Chriſtus.

From whence we may eaſily diſcover why the Chriſtians have retained ſome of thoſe feaſts, which ſeemed to be appropriated to the religion of the Jews; and why to this very day they commemorate thoſe ancient feaſts in their office. If it be true, that Jeſus Chriſt did not come into the world to deſtroy the ancient law, [f] but to fulfil it, as he himſelf ſays, it was abſolutely neceſſary to preſerve ſo much of the law as was not merely ceremonial. And for this reaſon, we have retained the books of the Old Teſtament out of which which we, as well as the Jews, read leſſons: but as for their rituals, they could not be followed; becauſe the ceremonies of the law were no longer to ſubſiſt entire after the coming of the Meſſiah. And the church reſerved only that part of it, which might be adapted to the practice of the new law.

[c] Exod. xix. [d] Epiſt. to the Romans, chap. iii. [e] Rom. chap. x. ℣. 4. [f] Mat. chap. v. ℣. 17.

CHAP. XI.

The State of the Jews after the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and upon what they governed themſelves in matters of Religion. Of their Talmud, and the manner in which it was compoſed.

IT appears, that the religion of the Jews was no longer to ſubſiſt intire after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, the ſeat of the Sanhedrim or great conſiſtory, to whoſe deciſions all the Jews were obliged to ſubmit. Therefore the chief views to which the Rabbi's applied themſelves in their hiſtory, was to ſhew, that notwithſtanding the miſerable condition which their nation was reduced to, by ſo many baniſhments into different kingdoms, they nevertheleſs had not loſt their traditions, upon the ſuppoſition of certain famous ſchools or academies, where thoſe traditions have been always taught. Tho' they no longer had any infallible conſiſtories, yet they ſay, that they ever had a ſucceſſion of men who aſſumed the dignity of Naſci, or preſident of the Sanhedrim, and even to this day there are ſome perſons amongſt the Jews, who take that title to themſelves only as honorary.

The Talmud mentions two heads or chiefs of the tribe of Judah, whereof one was in Paleſtine, and the other in the territory of Babylon. The Jews go ſo far as to deduce the genealogies of theſe two chiefs, and ſeveral amongſt them pretend that the Meſſiah whom they expect, is to deſcend from one of theſe imaginary chiefs, who is that of Babylon.

As theſe chiefs governed all the Jews during their baniſhment, and there were ſeveral famous ſchools ſettled in thoſe places, thoſe ſame Jews, who could no longer conſult the oracle of the Sanhedrim, had recourſe from all parts to theſe two ſchools, which, according to their account, ſubſiſted till the year 1040. And tho' their deciſions were not of the ſame authority with the decrees of the great conſiſtory, they nevertheleſs were of great weight amongſt all the Jews, who were diſtinguiſhed into eaſtern and weſtern. Thoſe who followed the deciſions of the Babyloniſh ſchool were called eaſtern, and ſuch as ſubmitted to the Paleſtine ſchool, weſtern.

The Jews therefore, as near as poſſible, obſerved the ſame diſcipline after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, as they had done before. And as they were diſperſed into ſeveral countries, they choſe ſeveral heads to govern them in their exile, whom they for this reaſon ſtiled, Chiefs or Princes of the baniſhed. Theſe chiefs are mentioned in the laws of the Emperors, under the name of Patriarchs. They ſent commiſſioners called Selihim or Apoſtles, through the whole extent of their juriſdiction. They likewiſe had prieſts or elders with them, who were appointed to determine all diſputes that aroſe upon matters of religion. The Emperors tolerated theſe kind of tribunals amongſt the Jews, and even honoured their patriarchs and miniſters with many privileges; but as this Jewiſh government in the dominions of thoſe Princes might have been attended with fatal conſequences, it was thought convenient utterly to ſuppreſs it. They nevertheleſs have, to this day, in many parts of the world, ſeveral officers or civil judges. But they dare neither ſhew their authority, nor puniſh the rebellious, leſt it ſhould come to the knowledge of thoſe Princes whom they are forced to obey.

Thus

Thus indeed they may have preſerved at leaſt part of their diſcipline. But as it was impoſſible to preſerve that great number of traditions which they had amongſt them, they thought it neceſſary to put them into writing, tho' they were to be taught by word of mouth only. And becauſe it might have been made an objection, that it was incredible, that all thoſe traditions could have been preſerved for ſo many ages, and in the general deſtruction of their whole government, they have had the cunning to ſuppoſe a particular order of wiſemen or doctors, who taught thoſe traditions ſucceſſively in their ſeveral ages, down from Moſes to the perſon who firſt committed them to writing. Some of them likewiſe add, (and amongſt others Rabbi Moſes) that each preſident of the Sanhedrim kept private notes of thoſe traditions, which however he publiſhed only by word of mouth. They likewiſe who received them from the mouth of thoſe doctors reduced them into writing for their private obſervations.

Therefore Rabbi Judah, to whom the firſt collection of theſe traditions is generally aſcribed, only made a collection of them from different manuſcripts that were extant in his time, and which he ſought with great care and induſtry. This Rabbi, who was the Naſci or Prince of the Sanhedrim, lived in the ſecond century under the two Antonins: but the Jewiſh hiſtorians do not exactly agree as to the time when he completed this collection, which was generally received by all the Jews, and taught without diſtinction in the ſchools of Paleſtine and Babylon. This collection has ever ſince been a rule for the Jews in all matters concerning religion, and was publiſhed by the name of the Miſna, which is to ſay, repetition, or rather interpretation of the written law. The ſtile of it is clear enough, but very ſuccinct. And becauſe the preſidents of the conſiſtories had moſt of them given various deciſions upon one and the ſame ſubject, Rabbi Judah reports them all; which makes his work obſcure, as he does not always hint at the opinion to be followed. However ſome of the Jews have, in ſome meaſure, cleared up this obſcurity, by ſetting a particular mark to the names of thoſe doctors, whoſe deciſions have the force of a law. And beſides, there are editions of the Miſnajot, wherein the deciſions, which they are to be directed by, are carefully diſtinguiſhed.

The treatiſe called the Miſna, which we juſt now ſpoke of, and which now is the text of the Talmud, being written in ſo conciſe a ſtile, that it cannot anſwer all the difficulties which daily ariſe concerning the law; the Rabbi's who ſucceeded Rabbi Judah, added ſome ſmall notes or commentaries to it, whereof ſome were called Toſiphetot, additions, by way of ſupplement: the reſt bear the name of Barajetot, that is to ſay, gloſſes beſide the text. But theſe ſmall notes not being yet ſufficient to reſolve all the queſtions propoſed upon the law, it was thought neceſſary to compoſe a more copious explanation of the Miſna, which they call Gemara or Perfection; and this Gemara is properly what the Jews at this time call the Talmud.

As they had two famous ſchools, as has been already obſerved, and as the Miſna was taught in both of them, ſo likewiſe have they compoſed two ſorts of Talmuds. The firſt is that of Jeruſalem, whereof the author is ſuppoſed to be Rabbi Johanan, principal or Naſci of the ſchool which was in Paleſtine. The age wherein he lived is not exactly known, and the Jews themſelves are thereupon divided; for ſome of them are of opinion, that he was living towards the end of the third century; and others ſay, it was towards the end of the fourth. The ſecond Talmud is called the Talmud of Babylon, becauſe it was compoſed by Rabbi Aſſe, head of a ſchool in that country, at the beginning, or, as ſome ſay, about the middle of the ſixth century; others however carry it a century higher, and pretend it was written about the beginning of the fifth century. However juſt theſe various opinions of the Jewiſh writers may be, who indeed ſeem to ground them on the different times when the Talmud was compoſed, they all agree in this, that the Talmud of Babylon was written at leaſt a hundred years after that of Jeruſalem. Beſides, when they mention the Talmud, they generally mean that of Babylon, which is more full and copious than that of Jeruſalem, which they ſeldom uſe, becauſe it is too compendious and obſcure.

The

The Gemara or Talmud of Babylon, which is the rule whereby the Jews act in all their ceremonies and affairs, both civil and criminal, is written in the Chaldean tongue of thoſe days, which is hard to be underſtood, becauſe it deviates very much from the purity of the ancient Chaldean ſpoken at Babylon. Beſides this barbarous language, it is full of a vaſt number of uſeleſs queſtions and hiſtories, or rather of feigned ſtories, which the ignorant people believe to be true. But a man of the leaſt ſenſe may eaſily diſcover, that they are nothing more than allegories invented by men of no underſtanding, and only fit to expoſe the Jews to ridicule. There are even obvious falſities in this Talmud of theirs, chiefly as to hiſtory and chronology: but Jews of any capacity do not give credit to theſe kind of facts, till they have firſt enquired into the veracity of them. But it would be eſteemed a crime or a kind of apoſtacy, not to receive their deciſions or interpretations of the law, for which they have as great veneration as if they came immediately to them from the mouth of Moſes. Halácah le Moſce mi Sinaï, thus do they expreſs themſelves, This is a tradition which God delivered to Moſes from mount Sinaï: and under this ſpecious name of tradition, the Jews have received the idle notions of their doctors, as if God himſelf had revealed them. They are not allowed ſo much as to inquire into the truth of them, unleſs they intend to fall into the hereſy of the Caraïtes. If you aſk them the reaſon for all theſe gloſſes of their forefathers, which ſeem to deviate ſo much from the text of the law, the only anſwer they give you is this; Ameru hacamenu; that is to ſay, Our wiſemen or doctors have ſaid this.

CHAP. XII.

A Succeſſion of Jewiſh Doctors, who came after the Talmud. Reflection upon the Riſe of thoſe ridiculous Traditions contained in the Talmud. Of their local Practices and Cuſtoms.

THE whole body of Jewiſh tradition being contained in that collection called the Talmud, the Jewiſh doctors who came afterwards, were known by the name of Seboreans, that is to ſay, perſons who give their opinions, becauſe in reality their deciſions had not the force of a law with them. Rabbi Moſes, however, does not ſo much as mention theſe ſpeculative doctors in the preface to his abridgment of the Talmud; but immediately proceeds to thoſe who bear the title of Geonim, or excellent, becauſe they excelled all the reſt in their knowledge of the law. Theſe Geonim, who lived in the diſtrict of Babylon, compoſed ſeveral books for explaining the Gemara, and were conſulted by the other Jews from all parts: but the Arabians having invaded that country and deſtroyed the ſchools ſettled there, the Geonim retired into Europe, and chiefly into Spain, where Rabbi Iſaac Alfes, who lived towards the declenſion of theſe Geonim, made an excellent collection of the deciſions of the Gemara, without taking any notice of the uſeleſs diſputes and queſtions in it.

The Jewiſh doctors who ſucceeded Rabbi Iſaac Alfes, took upon them the title of Rabbanim, amongſt whom Rabbi Salomon Iſaaki of Troyes in Champagne was the moſt eſteemed for his knowledge of the Talmud. And indeed, the Jews prefer his commentaries upon that book to all others, and for this reaſon have given him the name of chief or head of the interpreters. This is the ſame Rabbi Solomon whom our Jews commonly call Jarhi, and who is the great author of Delira. It would be needleſs here to mention ſeveral other Rabbi's, who have made commentaries upon the Talmud, or abridged it.

They

They who would apply themſelves to this kind of ſtudy, ſhould, above all others, chuſe that excellent abridgment, which Rabbi Moſes, the ſon of Maimon, compoſed in a ſtile very pure and eaſy to be underſtood. To this author may be added another R. Moſes, commonly called Cotſi, from the name of the town where he was born, who has, in a particular treatiſe, explained every thing relating to the 613 precepts or commandments of the Jews. But we have ſaid enough concerning the Talmud, and thoſe Rabbi's who have given any explanation of it. It is now time to offer my reader a few reflections upon that ſubject.

We cannot deny but that the traditions now contained in the Talmud, at leaſt the beſt part of them, are very ancient; ſince the primitive fathers of the church have not only mentioned them in general under the name of Deuteroſes, which ſignifies the ſame as the Miſnajot; but likewiſe have quoted ſeveral of them in the ſame terms, in which they are at preſent to be met with in the books of the Jews. To be farther ſatisfied, we need only peruſe the writings of Origen, St. Epiphanius, and St. Jerom, but chiefly the laſt, who quotes a great number of them, particularly in his commentaries upon the prophets. It is probable, that the Jews invented moſt of thoſe traditions, when they had no fixed oracle to conſult, and that ſome time after their return from Babylon to Jeruſalem, their doctors were deſirous of gaining a reputation by their new expoſitions of the law.

Theſe new expoſitions were the cauſe of their dividing into ſeveral ſects, which afterwards took a pleaſure in differing, as much as poſſible, from each other, as it generally happens on ſuch occaſions. The Phariſees, who preſerved the law with the traditions of their fathers, ſwelled the number of them, in order the more ſtrenuouſly to oppoſe the opinions of the Sadducees, who, on the contrary, would not admit of any. Theſe two ſects could never keep up to any medium, which would have been to obſerve preciſely ſuch traditions as were neceſſary for the interpretation of the obſcure paſſages in the law, and for the maintenance of diſcipline and good order in their government. This was the reaſon that obliged Jeſus Chriſt, not only to reprove the Sadducees, who overturned the beſt part of the Jewiſh religion, by denying all tradition, but likewiſe the Phariſees, who had made the religion of their fathers ridiculous, by adding many ſubtilties, which very much deviated from the text of the law, to thoſe very traditions.

This, in my opinion, is the riſe of all thoſe fables and vain allegories, now contained in the books of the Talmud. The Phariſees becoming at laſt the predominant ſect amongſt the Jews, during the time they were diſperſed, the moſt conſiderable patriarchs and maſters of the ſchools ſpread this doctrine throughout all the countries where there were any Jews. It was but a very ſmall number of doctors who made a ſchiſm, and vigorouſly oppoſed this prodigious number of traditions; not being able to bear that ſo many whimſical notions ſhould ſtand upon the ſame foot with the text of the law. For which reaſon, they were called by the name of Caraïtes, that is to ſay, a ſet of men who hold the text of the Scripture, tho' at the ſame time they reject only thoſe traditions which, in their opinion, were ill grounded: and even now they read the books of the Talmud, to which they conform themſelves in moſt things that relate to diſcipline.

Altho' the Jews pretend, that had it not been for the misfortunes of the times, their traditions had never appeared in writing; yet notwithſtanding, they could not well have avoided it, where they had ſo great a number of them. Tho' indeed they were not ſo careful as to make a collection of their chief traditions, which are loſt, and amongſt others thoſe which concerned their ſacrifices. Nay they do not know the names of a great many animals, which they are forbidden by their law to eat, and yet, they at this preſent time affirm, that they have preſerved the law of Moſes in its full purity, with the very explanation of it, which he received from the mouth of God upon mount Sinaï.

But if we will, with the leaſt application, examin into the ſeveral collections of conſtitutions, which the Jews have at different times made, we ſhall find nothing extraordinary in them, nothing but what may be found in other religions, that all have their ceremonies, and in other books, wherein their diſcipline is contained: ſo that there is here no neceſſity to aſcribe them to God, as the author of them. We may therefore conclude, that theſe collections were made by the principals or heads of their famous ſchools, and afterwards diſperſed throughout their whole nation, for the convenience found in them. The doctors after this, in order to have them received with the greater authority, gave out, that the deciſions contained in thoſe books were delivered to Moſes with the text of the law; but they have derived ſo many extravagancies, and ridiculous ſubtilties from mount Sinai, that this circumſtance alone is ſufficient to prevent any credit, that might otherwiſe be given, to thoſe very things which in themſelves bear a probability of truth.

Beſides theſe conſtitutions contained in the Talmud, and to which all the Jews are obliged to ſubmit, they have particular cuſtoms, that vary according to the different countries they live in. Theſe local cuſtoms are called Minhagin, cuſtoms; and the better to retain them, they have written particular treatiſes of them. Theſe cuſtoms will appear even in their prayer books, wherein there is a difference, either as to the order, or to the things themſelves. The Rabbi's have likewiſe compoſed particular books bearing the title of Dinim, or judgments, which may be reduced to cuſtoms, becauſe the Jews differ alſo in them, and as thoſe Dinim only contain probable reaſons, why a ceremony may be performed in one manner preferably to another.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the Books for the Uſe of the Synagogues: and of the chief Study of the Jews.

WE have already obſerved, in ſpeaking of the prayers of the Jews, that they have books written in different manners, wherein all thoſe prayers are collected. Every nation, in this, follows its particular uſages, which nevertheleſs do not hinder them from agreeing in what relates to the body of prayers in general. Beſides theſe books of prayers, which they call Sedec Tephillot, or order of prayers, they have another book called Mahazor, which not only contains their office for the whole year, but alſo verſes or hymns ſung in their ſynagogues on particular Sabbath-days, and other holy-days; and theſe verſes are very difficult to underſtand, becauſe of their ſtile, which is conciſe and perplexed. I ſhall not here mention the Sefer Tora, or Book of the Law, whereof there are always ſeveral copies in every ſynagogue written in a manner wholly ſingular, and with a ſuperſtitious exactneſs. As for inſtance, ſhould the parchment whereon the law is to be written be prepared by a Chriſtian, or even by a Heretic Jew, or a Samaritan, it would be looked upon as profane, and could never be employed to this uſe. Therefore it is abſolutely neceſſary, that a profeſſed Jew prepare it, and this according to a certain meaſure, as well in regard to the height of the roll, as to the ſize of the page, and the diſtance of the lines from each other. They obſerve the ancient manner of writing their books upon long rolls, and I ſhould not find fault with their carefulneſs in marking the diviſions of the ſmall pages or columns in which the books deſigned for the uſe of the ſynagogues are written, were it not that they give ſuperſtitious reaſons for their acting in that manner: whereas we may plainly ſee, that all thoſe meaſures were only invented in order to make their volumes appear more beautiful and regular.

They are alſo very nice in their ink deſigned for the writing thoſe books. It muſt be made after a particular manner, the compoſition of which is deſcribed by the Rabbi's.

There muſt be nothing glittering, ſuch as gold or ſilver, on it, nor ſo much as green, or red, or the like. So that ſhould any one of the Sefer Tora's, or copies of the law appointed for the uſe of the ſynagogues, contain one ſingle letter that were of a different colour from that ink, which is compoſed by their direction, that Sefer Tora would be rejected as a profane book, and never could be uſed in any ſynagogue.

The ſame rules are obſerved in regard to ſome other ſmall volumes, which they alſo read in their ſynagogues upon ſtated days of the year. They have, for inſtance, the book of Eſther, which they call Megillah Eſther, the volume of Eſther, written upon a roll, with the ſame proportions as the book of the law: and what is moſt worthy of obſervation in theſe books, which are conſecrated to the uſe of the ſynagogues, is, that you only ſee the bare letters of the Hebrew alphabet, without any of thoſe points or vowels, which appear in the printed Hebrew Bibles, and fix the manner of reading them. It is probable, that in this they have retained the ancient manner of writing their books, before thoſe vowels or points were invented. There are none of thoſe accents ſeen in them, by which the Jews, at this time, are directed in the manner of reading the other Bibles, which are not appointed for the uſe of the ſynagogues; having no other accents in them but the very ſame, which at the ſame time ſerve to raiſe or lower the voice when they read, or more properly when they ſing the words of the law. Therefore, they are obliged to practiſe a long while, before they are able to read diſtinctly in the ſynagogues, where they admit of no books that are pointed or accented, like their other copies of the Scripture, whether printed or in manuſcript.

As to the chief ſtudy of the Jews, they think themſelves obliged, above all things, to apply themſelves to the ſtudy of the law and traditions contained in the Talmud. Their ſynagogues ſerve them for ſchools to this purpoſe, and it is very extraordinary to find any Jew but what can diſtinctly read the books of the law, and even has a part of it by heart; beſides having read ſome of the treatiſes of the Miſna, which is, as it were, the text of the Talmud: this is a maxim amongſt them, As ſoon as a child hath attained the age of five years old, he ought to be ſet to read the text of the law, and at the age of fourteen, to the Miſna.

Their method of inſtructing their children is very different from ours; for they are taught the Hebrew tongue, and even part of the Chaldee, but without any of the rules of grammar; which they never read: and therefore it is rare to find a Jew that can teach others what he knows of the Bible and Talmud, becauſe all the knowledge they have of them is grounded only upon a long practice.

As ſoon as they have attained to the age of thirteen, they are taught the commandments, which are exceeding numerous: and laſtly, if leiſure will permit them to ſtudy the Gemara, or the Talmud, they apply themſelves to thoſe ſtudies at the age of fifteen; but there are few Jews that have a perfect knowledge, or can give a good account of it; tho' it is publicly taught amongſt them, at leaſt in thoſe parts where they are at liberty to read it. Nothing in our ſchools can come up to the warmth of their diſputes, when they are diſcuſſing any point of the Talmud; for they have always reaſons pro and con, grounded upon the authority of their fathers, and on theſe occaſions they are ſo warm againſt one another, that, to hear them, one would think they had intirely loſt their reaſon. Gens ratione furens & mentem paſta chimeris.

As it is an extraordinary thing for the Jews to apply themſelves to the ſtudy of literature, nay as they have conſtitutions eſtabliſhed by their fathers, which forbid them to read the philoſophers, they ſeldom or ever cultivate their reaſoning faculty; and this makes them ſuch bigots to their religion, having imbibed, as it were with their milk, an infinite number of prejudices, from which it is almoſt impoſſible ever to reclaim them. And though the Talmud be a wretched jumble of inconſiſtent and improbable fictions; yet they pay as great a reſpect, and as ſuperſtitious a veneration to it, as if God himſelf had delivered it to their fathers, ſo great is the ſimplicity of the common Jews. For I do not ſpeak of thoſe who are learned, and yet are, as well as the reſt, obliged to look upon that book as the rule of their faith; otherwiſe they would be charged with hereſy and impiety. Loquuntur cum multis; ſed ſapiunt cum paucis.

CHAP. XIV.

Of the Books at this Day extant amongſt the Jews, and whether they may in any manner be uſeful to Chriſtians.

THERE has been already publiſhed ſeveral catalogues of the Jewiſh books under the title of the rabbinical library. I might here mention many more, which have not yet been taken notice of: but I ſhould think it would be of more ſervice to give ſome account of the uſe that may be made of them, than barely to run over a liſt of their names. I muſt own, that there is ſcarce any ſcience, whereon we may not find a treatiſe written in rabbinical Hebrew, tho' to ſay the truth, very few of them are correct; beſides that, as to what concerns arts and ſciences, the Jews have only copied from the books of the Arabians, which they have tranſlated in their manner. Therefore were my opinion to be taken, the writings of Jews are only to be conſulted in what relates to their religion; and that too with judgment, unleſs we have a mind to join with them in their extravagancies.

In order to make a rational inquiry into this affair, we muſt conſider the religion of the Jews in itſelf, according to its conformity with the Chriſtian religion. If we conſider it in this manner, it will plainly appear, that thoſe books which only treat of Judaiſm, can be of no great ſervice to Chriſtians. As for inſtance, what advantage would it be to us to know the manner in which the Jews ought to pitch their tents or tabernacles, in order to celebrate the feſtival that bears that name? It is ſufficient for us to know in what that feaſt conſiſts, and the cauſe of its inſtitution: which may eaſily be learnt from the text of the Bible, or the comments, ſuppoſing any thing wants explanation. It is the ſame with all the other feaſts of the Jews, which the Rabbi's have treated after a very extraordinary manner. And as the Miſna, and Gemara, for the moſt part, contain only theſe kind of ſubtilties, they can be of very little uſe to Chriſtians, unleſs it be in regard to ſome particular treatiſes, wherein are to be found ſome ceremonies and cuſtoms conformable to our own, and which may give us ſome light towards the explanation of particular paſſages of the New Teſtament. Nay, I ſhould be ſatisfied with the abridgment of the Talmud compoſed by Rabbi Moſes, without conſulting either the Miſna, or Talmud, which we may give up to the Jews, unleſs we read thoſe books in order to make the Jews ridiculous, and convince them how ſtrangely they are opinionated in favour of the traditions of their fathers. To this end we need only read the works of Rabbi Moſes, which are not entirely free from theſe idle dreams, tho' ſome have inſiſted, that he was the only man amongſt the Jews, that had not been guilty of writing extravagantly, Solus inter Judæos neſcit delirare R. Moïſes. Indeed his book is not ſo full of abſurdities as thoſe of other Rabbi's; but however it cannot be ſaid, that he is entirely free from them: otherwiſe he would not be a ſtaunch Jew. We may indeed find a great number of Scripture paſſages explained in the Talmud by the ancient Jewiſh doctors; but very few of them have given a literal interpretation. Each doctor takes delight in ſhewing the brightneſs of his genius by allegories and childiſh alluſions, not at all ſuited to the ſubject. If they at any time follow the literal ſenſe, they do it after a Jewiſh manner, and conformably to their ceremonies; ſo that thoſe books can be of uſe only to the Jews, for the interpretation of the Scriptures, or rather rivet them in thoſe religious prejudices, which they have imbibed.

They

They have other books which may be of great ſervice to Chriſtians, for the explanation of the Old Teſtament. Such as their commentaries upon the literal ſenſe of the Bible, which are but very few in number. For the major part of the Jewiſh writers, and chiefly the moſt ancient amongſt them, have choſen rather to ſtick to the allegorical ſenſe than to explain the text, ſo that thoſe famous commentaries which bear the title of Zohar, and for which the Jews have ſo great a veneration, as alſo the Medraſcim, with other allegorical comments, can be of no manner of uſe to any but Jews. The collection of the Rabbi's firſt inſerted in the great Bible of Venice, whereof there are ſeveral editions, and afterwards in the Bible of Bâle may be of great help towards the better underſtanding the literal ſenſe; to which we may add the commentaries of Don Iſaac Abrabanel, upon the greateſt part of the Scriptures. I might likewiſe here mention other Jewiſh authors, who have literally explained the text of the Old Teſtament; but this laſt interpreter contains them all.

As to their divinity, we ought, in my opinion, to read only the works of thoſe who have explained the chief articles of their religion; and were I to make a choice from amongſt a vaſt number of that kind of books, I ſhould prefer the Sepher ikkarim, or, Book of principles of Joſeph Albo a Spaniſh Jew, thereto adding a few other Rabbi's, who have examined into the principles of Rabbi Moſes upon this ſubject, and amongſt others Don Iſaac Abrabanel already mentioned, and Rabbi Haſdaj. We muſt above all things carefully conſider the reaſons which they give to prove; that as God himſelf is not ſubject to any change, ſo the law which he has once delivered, ought likewiſe to be free from any alteration: for they thereby pretend to ſhew, that the Chriſtians ought not entirely to have aboliſhed the ceremonies of the law of Moſes. But the objections which they lay down to themſelves in this matter, and which they cannot reſolve, is a plain indication of the falſity of their principle. Beſides theſe, it would be convenient to peruſe ſome other Rabbi's, who have written concerning the principles of the Jewiſh religion before Rabbi Moſes, and amongſt others, the treatiſe of Saadias Gaon, entituled Sepher emunoth, or, The Book of the Faith. For tho' that work was written at a time when the Jews were more ſtudious of the extavagancies of the Talmud, than of the explanation of their theology, and tho' this author is not very correct; we may however find (by comparing his opinion with that of Rabbi Moſes) that the theology of thoſe Geonim, or excellent men, did not entirely agree with that of the preſent Jews. Theſe Jewiſh divines write not only concerning their own doctrine, but beſides, they often undertake to refute the belief of the Chriſtians; and therefore their books may give us ſome light into thoſe matters of controverſy, which have been more learnedly handled, and more explicitly by Rabbi Lipman, in a work which he publiſhed under the title of Sepher nitſakon, that is, The Book of Victory.

I ſhall not take the trouble here to pick out the beſt books written by ſuch writers, who have made treatiſes of divinity according to the principles of the cabala, becauſe there is not one of them that has a grain of common ſenſe in them. And yet it is almoſt incredible how many Jews there are, (and particularly in the Levant) who apply themſelves to the ſpeculative cabala. What appears moſt reaſonable in this ſcience, is, the explanation of the attributes or properties of God, for inſtance, his unity and eternity: but at the ſame time, they ſay nothing that is good upon this ſubject, but what is taken from the philoſophy of Plato, to which they have added other refinements of their own, in order to ſuit the principles of that philoſophy to their law. There is a very ſmall book, entitled, Sepher Jetſira, or, The Book of the Creation, which they look upon as the groundwork of that divinity, by ſome of them thought to be compoſed by the patriarch Abraham, as if it contained that ancient patriarch's whole ſyſtem of divinity; tho' in reality there is nothing ſolid in it. But the Jews who, ſince then, have written upon this foundation, either by comments upon this ſmall work, or by entire treatiſes of cabaliſtic divinity, have wonderfully extolled the admirable ſecrets of that divine ſcience, even to a degree, that there have been many of the Chriſtians, and ſome at this very time, who give credit to all the pretended myſteries of the Jewiſh cabala. We may ſee a great number of this kind of writings in the catalogue of Jewiſh books, formerly belonging to Johannes Picus, Count of Mirandola, and I do not doubt but that the Jews, who were leſs deſirous to enrich the library of that young nobleman, than themſelves, palmed many ſuppoſititious treatiſes of the ſame kind upon him. However, he that has any time to throw away, and is willing to be informed in the principles of that ſcience, may conſult the works of Rabbi Moſes Cordovero, who has reduced them into an abridgment, under the title of Pardes Rimonim, that is, The Garden of Pomegranates. But if that abridgment does not ſeem ſufficient, and any one has a mind to go to the bottom of that ſcience, he may read the following books, viz. Meppetah Hakkabala, The Key of the Cabala, Sud Sudot, The Secret of Secrets, Sepher Babir, The illuſtrious Book, Sepher Happelia, The Book of Wonders. I ſhall ſay nothing of the practical cabala, which is full of falſities, tho' ſuch as profeſs that art aver boldly, that they have experienced the truth of it by many trials, taking a pleaſure in deceiving thoſe who are willing to believe them upon their words. To this practical cabala we ſhall refer all ſuch books as have been written by them concerning the influence of ſtars upon ſome particular figures, which have given riſe to their Taliſmans, the ſecret force of their characters, and many other things of this kind, which have no other foundation than the ſuperſtition of the cabaliſtical doctors, who apply themſelves to geomancy, palmeſtry and metopoſcopy.

The Jews have alſo a great number of books of philoſophy, having tranſlated into rabbinical Hebrew all the works of Ariſtotle, together with the commentaries of Averroes, and of ſeveral other Arabian authors upon that philoſopher. Some authors too are to be found among them, who have written books of logic, natural philoſophy and metaphyſics; but they have entirely followed the principles and method of Ariſtotle, or rather of the Arabian philoſophers, who have commented upon that author. And therefore their books of philoſophy can be of uſe to their nation only, unleſs it be that by their means we may recover ſome of the Arabian writers, whoſe works are become ſcarce, and which are eaſily to be met with amongſt the Jews, who have tranſlated them. The printed copies of Averroes himſelf were tranſlated from the rabbinical Hebrew, and not from the Arabic. They have beſides ſome works under the name of Ariſtotle, which we have not in Greek; but in all probability, theſe works were counterfeited by the Arabians, and afterwards tranſlated by the Rabbi's. The Jews of Italy have likewiſe tranſlated ſome books of that philoſopher from the Latin; but I am of opinion, that we need not conſult thoſe tranſlations, for a ſyſtem of Ariſtotle's Philoſophy, which we may read in Greek, or at leaſt in Latin, having tranſlations of his works that are far more correct than thoſe of the Rabbi's.

A complete library might be made of the Jewiſh authors, who have written upon mathematics, and medicine: but moſt of their works are only tranſlations at a good diſtance from the Arabian text. For example, as to the mathematics, they have tranſlated Ptolemy's Almageſt, with the abridgment of it from the Arabic. And beſides thoſe, we have the works of Alphraganus, with ſeveral other writings of that kind in rabbinic Hebrew. Yet we cannot ſay that they are mere tranſlators, they having alſo compoſed divers books of arithmetic, geometry, aſtronomy and aſtrology, in imitation of the Grecians and Arabians. Aben-Eſra, who is one of their moſt learned interpreters of the Scripture, has himſelf ſingly written upon all the branches of mathematics, together with a treatiſe upon the Aſtrolabe, which bears the title of Sepher Aſtrolab le Aben-Eſra. Rabbi Mardochai-ben Comtino upon the ſame ſubject, calls his book, Sepher tikkon celi hannechoſet, that is, A Treatiſe upon the compoſition of the brazen Inſtrument. This Rabbi has likewiſe written upon geometry and aſtronomy.

As the Jews have long followed the mathematician's method for the regulation of their calender, and do not now reckon the firſt day of the moon from the day of the Phaſis, when it begins to appear, they have been under a neceſſity of applying to aſtronomical tables, to regulate their feſtivals. For this we may ſee the treatiſe of Rabbi Iſaac ben Joſeph, entitled, Jeſud Olam, or, The Foundation of the World, and the aſtronomical tables of Emanuel ben Jacob baal haccenaphaim; whereto may be added the calender of the Hebrews, publiſhed by Munſter.

As for their books of phyſic, which are alſo very numerous amongſt the Jews, we ought only to look upon them, for the greateſt part, as tranſlations made from the Arabian authors, and even from ſome of our Chriſtian writers. They have, for inſtance, taken the works of Hippocrates and Galen from the Arabians: and beſides theſe, have tranſlated almoſt every phyſical book that has been written in Arabic into rabbinical Hebrew, tho' there are but very few to be met with in print, which makes them much ſcarcer in Arabic, than the rabbinical Hebrew tranſlations. They have alſo tranſlated into the ſame tongue the medicinal works of our phyſicians, whom they ſometimes mention, but particularly thoſe of Montpelier.

There have been Jews who have underſtood the Greek and Arabian tongues well enough to tranſlate the Aphoriſms of Hippocrates, with an explanation of Galen from Greek into Arabic: at leaſt ſuch a tranſlation is aſcribed to a particular Rabbi, called Hanan ben Iſaac, which was afterwards tranſlated by Rabbi Nathan from Arabic into rabbinical Hebrew, with additional notes. To conclude, I ſhall not here mention ſeveral treatiſes of chirurgery, which are alſo extant amongſt the Jews, as well as a great number of books, treating of medicinal herbs and plants; there being no probability that our phyſicians or chirurgeons will ever conſult them upon this ſubject.

CHAP. XV.

Judgment of ſome other books written in Rabbinical Hebrew.

NEITHER rhetoric nor poetry were ever in the leaſt cultivated by the Rabbi's, ſo that they have not many orators or poets amongſt them, the language called rabbinical Hebrew being very barren. Wherefore their preachers never ſtudy the art of ſpeaking: they generally apply themſelves to morality, which however they treat after a different manner from what we do, becauſe they therein comprehend that prodigious number of precepts, which they think themſelves bound to obſerve; from whence proceed thouſands of caſes, whereon they decide with all the ſubtilty imaginable. As they ſubmit entirely to the authority of their fathers, they conſult their Talmud upon all difficulties, and very often thoſe authors, who have written treatiſes, under the name of Sceelot vereſchuvot, that is, Queſtions and Anſwers, wherein they more readily find the ſolution of their caſes.

As to their poets; it is well known, that poetry is not of a long ſtanding amongſt the Jews, at leaſt in the preſent manner of it, and which they have ſome ages ſince reduced to an art in imitation of the Arabians. I have formerly peruſed an abridgment of all their philoſophy compoſed in that kind of verſe by Rabbi Abraham ben Meſullam. They have alſo ſeveral hymns in honour of ſome of their feſtivals, in their books of divine ſervice, called Mahazor, as we have already obſerved in another place. Moſt of the Jews themſelves prefix verſes to their Works; and what is more, ſome of them make whole orations in verſe. Not that they can be called poets tho' they write verſes. And yet at the ſame time, there never was a nation that dealt more in fables than the Jews, nor that was more fond of fictions in thoſe very days when they had not a poet amongſt them.

They have hiſtorians and chronologiſts too among them, tho' their number be ſmall and they very negligent, as to the affairs that particularly concern them. For which reaſon, they are much more ſo in their hiſtories of other nations, whoſe books they copy without without the leaſt judgment, nor are they more faithful in their tranſlations. How many fables, for inſtance, do we find in the book of Joſippus or Ben-Gorion, which yet was taken from the real Joſephus? Should any Jew undertake a hiſtory, that ſingle circumſtance would be ſufficient to make a man believe it full of groundleſs ſuppoſitions. When I mention the hiſtorical writings of Ben-Gorion, or of the falſe Joſephus, I do not mean the ſmall abridgment publiſhed by Munſter, nor even another edition ſtill fuller; which he has given us with the Latin verſion; but the edition of Conſtantinople, which the ſame Munſter did not publiſh complete, there being many things omitted in his edition, both at the beginning and end, and even throughout the whole work.

Their books of chronology, printed under the title of Seder olam Rabba, that is, Great Chronology, and Seder olam Zutta, an Abridgment of Chronology, contain but very few things, as well as their Sepher Hakkabala, or, Books of Traditions, which is one of their moſt ancient hiſtories. Rabbi Ghedalia, who compoſed a chronological hiſtory under the name of Scalſcelet hakkabala, or, The chain of Tradition, has filled it with a vaſt number of fables and fictions; the chief deſign of the Jews in their hiſtories being, in effect, no other than to prove the ſucceſſion of their doctors and ſchools, the more effectually to refute the doctrine of the Caraïte Jews, who refuſe to ſubmit to that vaſt number of their traditions, which ſeem ſo ill grounned. It was for this very reaſon, that R. David Ganz has written a complete body of chronology, which comes down to our time, tho' indeed, in the ſecond part of it, he chiefly enlarges upon the chronology of other nations. But beſides that the Jews in general have very little knowledge of our hiſtory, they are generally guilty of great miſtakes in their tranſlations of our authors; ſo that it is to no purpoſe to conſult their books for facts, which we may be better informed of elſewhere. The book which they call Jubaſin, that is to ſay concerning their deſcents, is nothing more than a collection from different authors; but there are very few good tracts in that collection, the Jews not having capacity enough to make a proper choice.

Their ſucceſs has been full as bad whenever they have undertaken the hiſtories of other nations, having only tranſlated their books, and made abridgments of them without the leaſt judgment, which plainly appears by the abridgment they have given us in Hebrew of the hiſtories of the Kings of France and Ottoman Emperors; tho' it gives but a very ſmall account of the latter. The title of this hiſtory, which is ſet forth in the following terms, Sepher dibre hajamim le malche Tſorphat u malche Beth Ottoman hatturg, does indeed, at firſt ſight, preſent us with an idea of ſome extraordinary undertaking; yet in reality the performance is very mean. But as moſt of the Jews travel much, and are maſters of ſeveral languages, they might write excellent hiſtories, would they give themſelves the trouble. One of the beſt Jewiſh authors that we have, in my opinion, is R. Azarias an Italian, who has not given us any particular hiſtory, but only quoted ſome hiſtorical tranſactions in a book which he publiſhed under the title of Meor-enaïm, that is to ſay, The Light of the Eyes. He often refers to Chriſtian authors, whom he ſeems to have a better knowledge of than any other Jew.

As to grammar, the Jews undoubtedly are more learned therein than in hiſtory, or than any other of the ſciences. And yet they neglected it for a long time, not having turned their thoughts that way till towards the ninth century, when the Arab grammarians flouriſhed, whoſe example they ſoon followed. Nay they excelled them in a little time, by the ſubtilties which they invented in this art. But to ſay the truth, moſt of the rules contained in the books of the modern Jewiſh grammarians are of very little or no uſe.

Their moſt celebrated grammarians are R. Juda, R. Jonas, R. Aben-Eſra, Moſes, and David Kimhi: the two firſt made uſe of the Arabic tongue, and their works were afterwards tranſlated into rabbinical Hebrew; but I believe never printed. The grammatical works compoſed by Aben-Eſra, a learned Spaniſh Jew, are in great eſteem; you may find them printed at Venice in a collection of ſeveral grammarians. Yet the grammar of R. David

R. David Kimbi has been moſt generally approved, becauſe he writes in a more plain and methodical manner than any of the other Jews. It is alſo for the ſame reaſon that his Hebrew dictionary is preferred to all others; and indeed, it is almoſt the only one that is made uſe of. But ſuch as are deſirous of acquiring a perfect knowledge of the Hebrew tongue, muſt read all the grammatical works of R. Elias Levita, which contain a great number of grave and uſeful reflections, that are even abſolutely neceſſary for the underſtanding of the holy Text.

I ſhall not here ſay any thing concerning the rabbinical Hebrew, the tongue in which the Jews have written for ſeveral ages; both becauſe there is no grammar of it, and likewiſe becauſe that tongue differs according to the different writers. It is true, that the grounds of the rabbinical Hebrew were taken from the Hebrew of the Bible, which every one has imitated as exactly as he could; but the Spaniards have intermixed Spaniſh words with it, as the French have French; and all other nations have done the ſame. Yet if a man perfectly underſtands the Hebrew of the Bible, he may eaſily apprehend the writings of the beſt Rabbi's, who have made literal comments upon the holy Scripture; for they have but a very ſmall number of particular expreſſions, which may be learned in a ſhort time by practice; and beſides there are many dictionaries, wherein may be found the explanation of foreign words in any language whatever. The Jews generally make uſe of a dictionary, which they call Aruc, abridged by the Conſtantinopolitan Jews under the title of Aruc hakketſer, that is to ſay, The little Aruc. And in this dictionary you may likewiſe find the words of the Talmud: but as it is written in rabbinical Hebrew, it will be of little uſe, unleſs to thoſe who have already acquired a pretty good knowledge of the Rabbi's; I ſhould therefore rather refer you to the dictionary of David de Pomis, an Italian Jew, printed at Venice in the year 1587. There is one convenience in this dictionary, which is, that it is in two columns, the firſt of which gives the Hebrew words of the Bible, with their ſignifications in Latin and Italian, and the other column, the rabbinic Hebrew words, to which he has given the name of Foreign Dictions, in order to diſtinguiſh them from thoſe that are purely Hebrew. And to this he has added an explanation, written firſt in rabbinical Hebrew, and afterwards in Latin and Italian; ſo that by the help of this dictionary, the language of the Rabbi's may be learnt with much more eaſe, than by the large Talmudic and Rabbinic dictionary of Buxtorfe, tho' this latter be much more bulky.

CHAP. XVI.

Of the uſefulneſs of the Hebrew Tongue, and whether it be neceſſary to a Divine, with ſome Reaſons for doubting it.

WERE we to believe St. Jerom and St. Auſtin, it is impoſſible to acquire a perfect knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, which contain the chief grounds of our religion, without being learned in the Greek and Hebrew tongue, to the end that the originals may be conſulted, whenever any difficulties ariſe. I ſpeak, ſays St. Auſtin, to thoſe who underſtand the Latin tongue [c]; who ought alſo to have a knowledge of the Greek and Hebrew, that in caſe of any doubts, they may be able to conſult the original writings, tranſlated into Latin. Latinæ quidem linguæ homines quos nunc inſtruendos ſuſcepimus, & duabus aliis ad Scripturarum cognitionem habent opus, Hebræâ ſcilicet & Græcâ, ut ad exemplaria præcedentia recurratur, ſi quam dubitationem attulerit Latinorum interpretum infinita varietas. When any civil affair is to be decided, a judge will not give judgment upon ſeeing the bear copies of deeds, but the original vouchers themſelves muſt be produced; it is not ſo in matters of religion, for the greateſt part of divines will not give themſelves the trouble to examine the original books, but are often content with ſuch tranſlations of them as are either obſcure or defective.

[c] St. Aug. Lib. II. of the Chriſt. Doct. chap. ii.

I muſt own, indeed, that it may be ſaid in favour of the age we live in, that it is needleſs to appeal to the originals, ſince the Council of Trent has declared the Latin verſion to be authentic; and beſides the great number of tranſlations made into different languages, from the very text of the Bible itſelf, may in ſome manner ſupply the place of originals. To which we may add, that there has been a prodigious number of men, eminent and learned in the oriental languages, who have explained whatever appeared difficult in the ſtile of the Scripture. This ſeems to me the moſt ſpecious circumſtance that can be alledged in behalf of thoſe divines who neglect the ſtudy of the Hebrew tongue, and are perſuaded, that if, on the one ſide, it be not wholly uſeleſs, at leaſt, on the other, that deficiency may be ſupplied by ſhorter and leſs troubleſome expedients.

But without our being under any neceſſity of giving the reaſons which induced the fathers of the Council of Trent to pronounce the ancient Latin verſion authentic; it is impoſſible for the Vulgate to have a greater authority now, than the Greek verſion of the Septuagint formerly had in the primitive ages of the church, it being held to be inſpired and prophetic to the time of St. Jerom, who was the firſt that began to doubt of it. Yet notwithſtanding this perſuaſion, the primitive fathers ever applied to the Greek tranſlations, from the original Hebrew, for the explanation of the Scripture. Had they been able to conſult the original themſelves, they would undoubtedly have done it; ſince they ſhewed ſo great a value for the immenſe labour of Origen, who had placed thoſe ancient Greek tranſlations in different columns with the verſion of the Septuagint in the middle. The commentaries of the Greek fathers upon the Old Teſtament cannot be read, but we ſhall often find the names of Aquila, Symmacus, Theodotion, with other ancient tranſlators, and the Samaritan interpreter too, who had alſo tranſlated the Pentateuch into Greek for the uſe of the Samaritans.

It may be ſaid, that we alſo have ſtill the ſame or even greater helps, for the explanation of thoſe difficulties which occur in the Vulgate, ſince we are not without good Latin tranſlations from the original. But this very thing makes the knowledge of the Hebrew tongue ſtill more neceſſary, in order to judge which of all thoſe verſions ought to be preferred, as has been judiciouſly obſerved by St. Auſtin in the words already quoted. Beſides, how many ambiguous and confuſed expreſſions are there, whereof we cannot well determine the ſenſe, but by conſulting the originals? Not but that all theſe various tranſlations give us a great light into thoſe difficulties; and tho' in St. Auſtin's time too there was a Latin verſion, then called ancient and Vulgate, he nevertheleſs approved of the other various verſions, which were almoſt innumerable. Latinorum interpretum, ſaith he, infinita varietas. But with all theſe helps he requires a knowledge of the Hebrew tongue, in order to conſult the originals. Ut ad exemplaria præcedentia recurratur, in the words of that pious and learned man. It is very difficult perfectly to underſtand the force and propriety of Hebrew words by tranſlations only, even ſuppoſing them to be faithfully and correctly done, every tongue having its peculiar proprieties, which for the moſt part cannot well be tranſlated into another language. Of this many inſtances might eaſily be produced, but that would be going too much out of our way; and beſides, I believe that every one may be already convinced of this truth by his own experience.

I ſhall only add, that this application to the ſtudy of the Hebrew tongue habituates the mind to a greater exactneſs and readineſs in the ſtile of the Scripture, as we ſhall eaſily find by comparing the commentaries of St. Jerom and the Old Teſtament, with thoſe of the other fathers, who lived before, or even after him. How many uſeleſs queſtions do we meet with in the writings of ſome divines, for want of being able to conſult the originals nals of the Scripture? Some of the moſt conſiderable amongſt them puzzle and confound themſelves extremely to know whether man is born with one ſingle original ſin, or with many, becauſe of theſe words in the Vulgate: In iniquitatibus conceptus ſum & in peccatis concepit me mater mea; but the Hebrew text, where it is, In iniquitate & in peccato, leaves no room for ſuch a queſtion.

Here we might produce ſome inſtances of the happy diſcoveries made in the Scripture chiefly in our age, through the knowledge of the Hebrew tongue; but it would be needleſs to enlarge any farther upon a ſubject, which has already been ſufficiently cleared up. Cardinal Cajetanus was ſo entirely perſuaded of the neceſſity of knowing the Hebrew tongue, for the better explanation of the books of the Old Teſtament, that not being at that time of a proper age for the applying himſelf to the ſtudy of it, he had recourſe to the aſſiſtance of thoſe who were moſt learned in that language, whether Jews or Chriſtians, in order to complete the commentaries which he has written upon thoſe books. Wherefore it would be beſt to make an early application to the ſtudy of the Hebrew tongue, and at an age wherein the memory is more capable of exerciſe than the judgment.

The ſix fathers of the ſociety, who, by the order of their General, compoſed a book which bears the title of Ratio atque Inſtitutio Studiorum, amongſt other things recommend to all thoſe who, for the future, ſhall dedicate themſelves to the ſtudy of the Holy Scriptures, carefully to examine the words of both the Hebrew and Greek texts, and uſe their utmoſt endeavours to reconcile them with the Latin verſion: [h] Hebræa quoque & Græca explicanda ſunt atque examinanda, cum vel à Latina Vulgata editione diſcrepare videntur ad eorum conciliationem quoad ejus fieri poterit. They at the ſame time complain how much the ſtudy of the Scripture was neglected by their ſociety; every one, ſay they, applying himſelf to ſchool divinity, as if a man could be truly a divine, without a perfect knowledge of the Holy Scriptures. And for this reaſon, they call thoſe kind of divines mutilos & mancos Theologos. Nor can they bear thoſe preachers, whoſe only ſtudy has been ſcholaſtic learning, becauſe they deliver nothing but their own thoughts to the people, or if they quote any paſſages of the Scripture, they never give them in their proper ſenſe. As this is the failing of moſt of our preachers now a-days, I thought it would not be amiſs here to repeat the very words of the book as they ſtand in the edition of Rome. Concionatores etiam ſcholaſticis tantum imbuti ſtudiis, non rarò in ſuis evaneſcunt cogitationibus: de ſcripturis verò, quas vix primoribus labris deguſtârunt, aut nihil afferunt in medium, aut parum ad rem, alienis gloſſis & fucatis argutiis Scripturam adulterantes.

CHAP. XVII.

An eaſy Method of learning the Hebrew Tongue in a ſhort Time.

I Venture to ſay, that no tongue can be acquired with more eaſe and in leſs time than the Hebrew; not only becauſe it contains but a very ſmall number of words, which are all comprehended in the books of the Old Teſtament; but alſo becauſe there are very few rules of grammar neceſſary for the learning of it. Wherefore, at firſt the plaineſt and moſt conciſe grammars ſhould be choſen; as for inſtance, the little abridgment of Schickardus, entitled, Horologium Schickardi, and the abridgment of the Hebrew grammar, by Buxtorfe. I propoſe theſe abridgments to thoſe who are beginners, becauſe every thing neceſſary is contained in them. On the other hand, as the Jews have refined too much upon grammar, one cannot have too ſhort an one, provided that every thing abſolutely ſolutely neceſſary be clearly and fully explained in them, ſo as to be free from all obſcurities, Brevis eſſe laboro, obſcurus fio.

[h] Ratio Stud. printed at Rome 1586.

In the firſt place, as to the manner of reading Hebrew, a man ſhould be under no concern as to the pronunciation of ſome particular letters, becauſe there is no certain rule eſtabliſhed for them amongſt the Jews, who pronounce the Hebrew tongue differently according to the different countries they live in. However, were I to chuſe any particular pronunciation I would prefer the Spaniſh to that of all the other Jews, becauſe it is more ſimple and comes nearer to the pronunciation of the ancients. But it is ſufficient for this obſervation to be made in general, and only for our better information therein, that a learner may follow that method, if he thinks proper, after he has acquired a perfect knowledge of the Hebrew. For a beginner ought at firſt to ſtick to the pronunciation of the grammarian, whom he has made choice of.

In the ſecond place, as it is the cuſtom amongſt the Jews to uſe particular points inſtead of vowels, which they diſtinguiſh into long and ſhort, we ſhould chiefly obſerve which are the long, and which the ſhort, and by that means he may avoid ſeveral of the grammar rules, which are both troubleſome and difficult. For inſtance, without being obliged to obſerve all that the grammarians have ſaid relating to the Dageſh, the Sheva and other trifles, it is ſufficient to know, that in the pronunciation of the Hebrew tongue, one ought never to dwell on the ſhort, but only on the long; and that thus the letter following the ſhort vowel muſt be doubled, and is therefore marked with a point called Dageſh: or if it follows a Sheva, you muſt not dwell on the Sheva. For this reaſon, the word Dibber is pronounced with a double B, becauſe as there is a ſhort vowel under the D, it conſequently attracts the other letter after it, that we may not dwell on a ſhort vowel. It is the ſame with reſpect to the Sheva, when it comes after a ſhort vowel; and that is the reaſon why the grammarians ſay, that it is not then pronounced, but only after a long vowel. But without dwelling longer upon all the trifling rules of grammar, which only load the memory and puzzle the underſtanding; it is ſufficient to know, that the pronunciation always repoſes on the long vowel, and never on the ſhort.

As to nouns, whether ſubſtantives or adjectives, they are not attended with any difficulties in the Hebrew tongue; but it is not the ſame as to the verbs, whereof there are a great number of conjugations. It may be ſufficient at firſt to learn them together and in the groſs, to the end that when you want to explain any book of the Old Teſtament, you may look for them under their reſpective conjugations. By which means you will learn them in a very ſhort time, and even without difficulty; and which is more, whilſt you are thus practiſing, you will make a conſiderable progreſs in the knowledge of the tongue.

It is incredible to think how advantageous it is to begin a tongue with the explanation of authors; which ought to be done as ſoon as a man has the leaſt tincture of grammar, or even as ſoon as he is able to read. For inſtance, to what purpoſe do we read a whole grammar from the beginning to the end, then learn exactly the genders, declenſions, and other things of the like nature? as is the preſent cuſtom in our Latin ſchools, where Deſpauterius is learnt for many years, generally without any knowledge of what we read, for want of applying the rules to practice: would it not be of more advantage to children, at firſt to give them the moſt general and conciſe rules of the grammar, and afterwards lead them into the explanation of authors? They would then at once learn the rules and the uſe of them too, which would be much more eaſily comprehended by them, than the bare rules without exerciſe. For in ſhort, after the loſs of a great deal of time, we muſt come to that at laſt, and of all thoſe rules, we only retain ſuch as we learned whilſt we were exerciſing ourſelves in the explanation of authors.

Therefore, whoever has a mind to apply himſelf to the ſtudy of the Hebrew tongue, ought to follow the method which I have juſt laid down to him; and as much as poſſible, avoid reading any Hebrew grammars, which are, for the moſt part, overloaded with an infinite number of rules. They may read them when they begin to be more advanced in the knowledge of that tongue. For then all thoſe rules will no longer perplex the mind: but firſt of all beginners ought to have this maxim perpetually before their eyes, Uſus multus, præceptiones paucæ, Much exerciſe, and few rules. And the better to acquire this practice by reading, all kind of books ought not to be indifferently read; but the hiſtorical books of the Bible ſhould be the firſt to begin with, becauſe they are leſs difficult than the others; and even of thoſe books, ſome are to be preferred to others.

Moſes, of all the Hebrews, was maſter of the greateſt perſpicuity of ſtile, which chiefly appears in the book of Geneſis; and what may be of great help to thoſe who begin to learn the Hebrew tongue, is, that in the firſt chapters of Geneſis, he often repeats the ſame words and expreſſions, by which means a man may retain them without difficulty. And tho' there are in theſe firſt chapters of Geneſis a great number of repetitions of this kind, yet there are alſo contained in them a vaſt quantity of words. After this, great progreſs will be made in the Hebrew tongue in a little time, as to whatever concerns the hiſtorical books of the Bible, the ſtile of them being extremely eaſy and ſimple. But it is quite another thing as to the other books, which are written either in a more conciſe or a more figurative ſtile; for which reaſon, it is beſt to obſerve ſome kind of order in reading them.

In my opinion, it would be better to read the Pſalms before Eccleſiaſtes, the Proverbs, or the Canticles. Theſe three laſt books are written in a very conciſe ſtile, and hard to be underſtood, but by ſupplying ſomething yourſelf in ſome places. And as the Pſalms may, in ſome meaſure, be ſaid to be a medium between hiſtory and thoſe books, the conciſe ſtile will thus by degrees grow familiar and eaſy. After theſe, the Prophets may be read, which however are rather more difficult in their explanation, upon account of the ſubjects they treat of, than in their expreſſions, which notwithſtanding are more figurative than any other part of the Bible, becauſe the Prophets were the Jewiſh orators: and therefore they frequently employ all thoſe figures peculiar to orators; this we ſee chiefly in Iſaiah, who, beyond diſpute, is the moſt eloquent of all the Prophets. Now for our laſt leſſon, we may reſerve the book of Job, whoſe expreſſions are full of the boldeſt and ſublimeſt figures, not to mention his way of ſpeaking by half words only, and ſentences. It might perhaps be here convenient to ſhew which of the verſions of the Bible are the beſt and moſt uſeful towards acquiring the knowledge of the Hebrew tongue; but as this would require too long a diſcuſſion, I ſhall adviſe my reader rather to chuſe a learned and judicious maſter, to direct him through all theſe paths and turnings, than to apply to thoſe books that cannot anſwer, and to which conſequently we cannot propoſe ſuch difficulties as may ariſe.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of the Liturgies and Maſſes of the whole body of Chriſtians throughout the World.

THOUGH we have already given an account of the riſe of ſome of the ceremonies obſerved by the Chriſtians, ſo far as they regard the Jews, and chiefly as to what relates to the prayers and offices of the church, yet ſtill we ſhall here give you an entire diſcourſe upon the Maſs; which the eaſtern Chriſtians call Liturgy, and which is the principal office of our religion; to the end that the different ceremonies practiſed in different churches, may be fully and completely known and underſtood. But notwithſtanding all thoſe different cuſtoms, yet they all agree in the ſubſtance of this office, fice, and takes it's birth from the Jewiſh ſynagogues, which the Apoſtles imitated in the firſt aſſemblies that were held by them.

The word Liturgy was taken from the New Teſtament, wherein it commonly ſignifies an office or public miniſtry; and in this ſenſe is applied to the miniſtry of the Goſpel, as well to preaching as to the adminiſtering of the ſacraments. [1] Wherefore St. Paul, in order to ſhew that God had appointed him for this holy miniſtry, ſpeaking to the Faithful at Rome ſays; that God had done him the grace to chooſe him for the Leitourgos or Miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt, to preach his Goſpel unto the nations. But the eaſtern church has confined this word to the particular office of the Maſs, which they call Liturgy.

This office of the Liturgy, conſidered in its riſe, muſt be allowed, like all other offices, to have been at firſt more plain and ſimple; to which, in proceſs of time, ſome additions were made, but ſtill without altering any thing eſſential in it. The Liturgy has ever, from the beginning, conſiſted of particular prayers attended with praiſes and thankſgivings, repeated over the bread and wine, in order to ſanctify them [and conſecrate them, by changing them into the body and blood of the Son of God, by vertue of the ſacramental words which the prieſt pronounces] in imitation of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt's action at the Paſſover, which he celebrated with his Apoſtles. They afterwards brake the bread and diſtributed it to thoſe who were preſent at the ceremony where the prieſt or elder preſided, after the ſame manner as the father of the family amongſt the Jews, or the moſt diſtinguiſhed perſon in the company bleſſes the bread, and afterwards the wine in the cup, and diſtributes them both to thoſe who are ſeated at table with him, after firſt taking a part of both.

There is no doubt but that our Lord, at the laſt Paſſover, as related by the Evangeliſts, followed the cuſtom which the Jews obſerved in thoſe days, at the celebration of the Paſſover. When he bleſſed or conſecrated the bread and wine, he uſed prayers, bleſſings and thankſgivings, after the ſame manner in which they performed the ceremony of the Paſchal Lamb, by them called the ſanctification or conſecration of the Paſſover. Wherefore our Lord commanded his Apoſtles to obſerve that ceremony for ever in remembrance of him, as the Jews did that of the Paſſover, in remembrance of what had paſſed when they came out of Egypt. And what creates a nearer reſemblance between theſe two ceremonies, is, that as the Paſſover of the Jews is a repreſentation of what paſſed at their departure out of Egypt, when their deliverance from the captivity they were then under was completed; in the ſame manner the office of the Liturgy amongſt Chriſtians, contains the principal myſteries of their religion, chiefly that of the death and reſurrection of our Lord, who has delivered them from the bondage of ſin. This is what may be obſerved in all the writings of the Greek authors, who have written upon the Liturgy.

Beſides theſe prayers, praiſes, bleſſings and thankſgivings, wherein the Liturgy properly conſiſts, the Epiſtle and Goſpel are read, which were formerly accompanied with paſſages of the Pſalms and Prophets, whereof there ſtill remain ſome inſtances in the Maſs, which having been ſince ſhortned, only ſome particular verſes of the Pſalms are repeated; whereas they were formerly ſung or recited from the beginning to the end. What is now called the Anthem, was formerly the whole Pſalm, which was ſung throughout, and whereof we now only repeat a verſe or two. The word Anthem is derived from the Greek word Antiphona, becauſe thoſe Pſalms were repeated alternately in the aſſemblies. It is for this reaſon too, that we find ſome particular verſes of the Prophets and other books of the Bible in the Maſs, which being abridged, at this time only contain a part of what was formerly longer. This appears plainly in the Anthem called Offertorium, and which generally contains but a verſe or two of a Pſalm: inſtead of which, in the primitive church, the whole Pſalms were ſung whilſt the people were making their offerings.

However

[1] Epiſt. to the Romans, ch. xv. ℣ 16.

However it is to be obſerved, that the reading of the books of the Old Teſtament, the Epiſtles and Goſpels, and the ſinging of Pſalms, are not peculiar to the office of the Maſs: for at all times, when the primitive Chriſtians met, thoſe books were read, as appears by the Epiſtles of St. Paul, and the works of the Holy Fathers. It is not therefore (as we have already hinted) to be doubted but this cuſtom came from the Jewiſh ſynagogues, where the law, and ſome paſſages of the Prophets were read with great attention. It is alſo very likely, that the cuſtom of reading the Epiſtle and Goſpel in the deſk takes its riſe from what is obſerved in thoſe ſynagogues, where the reader ſtands in a place raiſed ſomewhat above the reſt, in the form of a deſk.

In a word, the leaſt reflection on the ancient manner of performing the Liturgy, as we ſee it in the books of Juſtin Martyr, and other Fathers of the church, will ſhew us, that the greateſt part of it proceeds from the cuſtoms, obſerved by the Jews in the ſynagogues, and from them handed down to us by the Apoſtles in the firſt aſſemblies of the primitive Chriſtians. But time has produced ſome alterations, according to the difference of the place; yet not ſo, but that all the different Liturgies which are ſcattered throughout all the parts of the world, agree in ſubſtance and fundamentals with the primitive Liturgy. We come now to a detail and inquiry into the particulars of this diverſity of Maſſes or Liturgies.

We may in general divide them into eaſtern and weſtern. Under the name of eaſtern Liturgies, we ſhall include the Liturgies of the Greeks and Melchites, which are the origin and ſource of all the other eaſtern Liturgies; thoſe of the Chaldeans or Syrians, which is but one and the ſame name for the Neſtorians, the Jacobites, and Maronites; thoſe of the Cophti or the Chriſtians of Egypt, and thoſe of the Ethiopians; the Liturgies of the Armenians written in the old Armenian tongue; thoſe of the Iberians or Georgians; thoſe of the Mingrelians written in their own language; the Liturgies of the Albanians, the Sclavonians and Muſcovites, to which we may add the Circaſſians, and other Chriſtian inhabitants of Tartary. From whence we may eaſily judge how numerous thoſe Chriſtian nations are, who, to this very day, obſerve the eaſtern form in their Liturgies.

This difference of form between the eaſtern and weſtern Chriſtians, as to their Liturgy, conſiſts chiefly in a particular prayer, by the eaſterns called, the Invocation of the Holy Ghoſt; and wherein, according to them, in ſome meaſure conſiſts the conſecration of the bread and wine, and not in theſe words only, This is my body, and what follows. This Prayer or Invocation is expreſſed almoſt in the ſame terms in the Liturgies of all thoſe nations which I have juſt mentioned, whereas not one of the Latin Maſſes in uſe among the weſtern Chriſtians have it. Under the name of Latin Maſſes, we likewiſe comprehend thoſe churches which have formed their worſhip according to that of Rome; part of the Sclavonians for inſtance, inhabiting the borders of Dalmatia, have tranſlated the Roman office into the Sclavonian tongue, and reformed their Liturgy to it. The Greeks too, under the juriſdiction of the Latin biſhops, have likewiſe introduced ſome alterations into the ancient Greek Liturgy. We may ſay the ſame thing of the Liturgies of the Maronites, of part of the Neſtorians and Armenians, who have alſo reformed their Liturgies, to a nearer reſemblance with the Latin Maſs; but theſe alterations are eaſily diſcovered, if we will take the trouble to compare them with other Liturgies of thoſe very nations, and to ſeparate them from what belongs to the rites of the eaſtern church.

As to the firſt authors of the Liturgy, and the tongue wherein it was firſt compoſed, there have been many things ſaid upon this ſubject which do not bear the leaſt appearance of truth. It is very probable, that all the Liturgies we have, came firſt from the Greeks; for the expreſſions of them are Greek, and ſeem to have been tranſlated from the Greek. However we are not to imagine that the Apoſtles celebrated the Liturgy in the Greek tongue as it is now, full of expreſſions and terms not in uſe in the primitive times of the church. But from the obſervations which we have juſt made, that all the Liturgies ſeem to have been tranſlated from the Greek, we may infer this conſequence, that the Greek churches were the firſt who compoſed a body of Liturgies, upon which the other Chriſtian nations afterwards formed theirs. Nay it is very probable, that the Apoſtles, in their firſt aſſemblies, celebrated the Liturgy in Greek, as the Greek tongue was in thoſe days more univerſal than any language in the Empire, and as many underſtood it at Rome itſelf. Beſides that the Greek tongue was ſpoke in moſt of the firſt churches, that were founded by the Apoſtles; and this is the reaſon why they never writ to the faithful, even to thoſe that were at Rome, but in that tongue.

Greek

To this we may add, that in the firſt meetings of the Chriſtians, the New Teſtament was read in Greek, before every nation had made a tranſlation of it into their own tongue; and I doubt not in the leaſt, but that the Pſalms were alſo ſung or repeated in that very tongue, ſince at that time the Greek verſion of the Septuagint was read in moſt of the ſynagogues.

It is true, that the mother tongue of moſt of the Apoſtles was the Syriac, and that the Jews of Jeruſalem, and the other neighbouring countries in all probability, uſed to read the Hebrew Bible in their ſynagogues; but this at moſt, only proves that ſome of the primitive Chriſtians celebrated the Liturgy in the Chaldee or Syriac, and that the leſſons out of the Prophets, and the reading of the Pſalms was performed in Hebrew in their aſſemblies: which is nothing if compared with all the other parts of the world, where the Greek tongue was in uſe. Beſides there was not then a body of Liturgies written in Syriac or Hebrew, as has been reported by ſome authors. There is nothing more falſly grounded than what thoſe authors pretend to prove, that St. Peter and ſome of the other Apoſtles celebrated Maſs in Hebrew; for the Hebrew tongue had then been long out of uſe amongſt the Jews. Now St. Paul tells us, that in the firſt aſſemblies of the Chriſtians the Liturgy and other prayers were performed in a tongue underſtood by thoſe congregations; and this too is confirmed by Cardinal Bona, who tells us, that the Apoſtles read the prayers of the Liturgy in the language of the country where they happened to be.

Yet we ought not to conclude, from what that Cardinal ſays, that the Apoſtles were really the firſt authors of all the Liturgies, publiſhed in ſo many different languages throughout the univerſal church: for it is certain, that the Liturgies in the Chaldee or Syriac tongue, as thoſe for inſtance, of the Neſtorians, the Jacobites and Maronites, are not the ſame Liturgies which the Apoſtles might have uſed in that tongue, in the diſtrict of Jeruſalem; becauſe the Syriac of thoſe Liturgies is different from the Syriac which the Apoſtles ſpoke in their age and country: beſides, as it has been already obſerved, theſe Syriac Liturgies were tranſlated from the Greek. This alſo muſt be obſerved, in regard to all the other Liturgies.

Were it true, that the Apoſtles celebrated the Liturgy in the tongue of thoſe churches which they founded, we cannot infer from thence, that they are the real authors of all the Liturgies which at this time go under their names in the eaſtern churches. One need only caſt an eye upon thoſe Liturgies to be convinced, that they could not be in uſe till many ages after the Apoſtles. The Greeks have three very noted Liturgies, which bear the names of St. James, St. Baſil, and St. John Chryſoſtome: but the two laſt only are in ordinary uſe amongſt them. Were we to take the trouble of enquiring into the reaſons why they gave thoſe names to theſe three Liturgies, no others would be found but what are aſcribed to a very uncertain tradition, to which no credit is eaſily to be given; becauſe the moſt learned Greeks themſelves do not agree on this article. I know, that this opinion is grounded upon the authority of Proclus, who aſſures us that St. James was the firſt author of the Greek Liturgy, and that this Liturgy having received ſeveral additions by length of time, [k] St. John Chryſoſtome and St. Baſil thought fit to make an abridgment of it, from whence aroſe the names of the Liturgies of St. John Chryſoſtome and St. Baſil. But nothing of Proclus can be produced, wherein this is quoted; there is indeed a fragment ment wherein it is mentioned, but we are not even certain that this is really his[l]. The editor who cauſed ſome of the Greek and Latin works of this Proclus, archbiſhop of Conſtantinople, to be printed at Rome, ſpeaking of this fragment, only ſays, that the tranſcriber who copied the Greek Liturgies, made nothing more than an abſtract of ſome letters or treatiſes of Proclus, which he placed at the head of the Liturgies, in order to give them the greater authority, and that he quoted the words of Proclus as he thought proper, but not directly the text of them.

[k] Procl. Lib. de Trad. Div. Liturg.

Yet it ſeems but reaſonable, that this fragment of Proclus ſhould be conſidered as his, or at leaſt, that what is therein mentioned is not grounded on the ſingle teſtimony of a tranſcriber, who endeavoured to gain ſome credit to the Liturgies he was then publiſhing. For the Greek biſhops aſſembled in the ſixth Council, which is ſtiled in Trullo[m], aſcribe that Liturgy to St. James, which we have under his name; and the greateſt part of the Greek authors ſince his time are likewiſe of the ſame opinion, not only in regard to that Liturgy, but alſo to the other two which they believe in reality to be St. John Chryſoſtome's and St. Baſil's. To which I reply, that the Fathers of that Council followed the common notion in this point, which was grounded on nothing more than a popular tradition, without enquiring into the bottom of it.

This is ſo true, that Theodorus Balſamon, being deſired to give ſome information whether the Liturgies read in [n] the churches of Jeruſalem and Alexandria, under the names of St. James and St. Mark, were truly theirs, ſent this anſwer: That neither the Holy Scriptures nor any Council had attributed the Liturgy which bore the name of St. Mark, to him; that the 32. canon of the ſingle general Council in Trullo had attributed to St. James that Liturgy which went under his name: but that the 15. canon of the Apoſtles, and the 59. canon of the ſynod of Laodicea, in their catalogue of the books of the Holy Scriptures, compoſed by the Apoſtles, and appointed for the ſervice of the church, took no manner of notice of the Liturgies of either St. James or St. Mark. We might produce many more inſtances of this kind, to prove that neither St. James, nor any of the Apoſtles were the authors of thoſe Liturgies, which at this time go under their names. Euſebius and St. Jerom, who have given us pretty correct catalogues of the ancient eccleſiaſtical authors, certainly would not have omitted the Liturgies aſcribed to the Apoſtles, had any of them appeared in their time.

It ſeems ſtrange to me, that Leo Allatius and Cardinal Bona ſhould believe that the Liturgy, which goes under St. James's name, and is the foundation of all the others, was really compoſed by him, and has only been ſince enlarged. But their proofs, in ſupport of ſuch aſſertion, are not at all concluſive. Therefore it is more reaſonable to ſay, that neither St. James, St. Mark, St. Peter, nor, in ſhort, any other Apoſtles, are the authors of thoſe Liturgies ſaid to be theirs, their names having been made uſe of only to give a ſanction to the Liturgies by degrees introduced into the ſeveral churches; and which have no other authority than the cuſtom which has been conſtantly obſerved in all churches (from the very time of the Apoſtles) of compoſing prayers and thankſgivings in the manner above ſet forth.

As to the Liturgies aſcribed to St. John Chryſoſtome and St. Baſil, it cannot poſitively be ſaid, that they are the authors of them; becauſe the church of Conſtantinople, and the other Greek churches had their Liturgies long before. Theſe two fathers might poſſibly have made ſome little reformation in the ancient Liturgies; tho' we have not any certain proof for this. In ſhort, in the conſtitutions which go under the name of St. Clement, we meet with a very ancient form of Liturgy; but there is no probability that he was the author either of it, or of the conſtitutions.

After ſpeaking of the Greek Liturgies, it is almoſt needleſs to ſay any thing of thoſe of the other churches of the Levant, which have only tranſlated the Greek Liturgies into their own tongue, and publiſhed them under different names, in order to give them the more authority. We find a far greater number of Liturgies written in Chaldee and Syriac, than in Greek. The Jacobites themſelves have above forty, all different, and under different names. The Maronites, who publiſhed their * Miſſal at Rome in the year 1592, printed but twelve Liturgies in it, tho' they have a greater number, and moſt of them the ſame as the Jacobites uſe. This perhaps was not taken notice of, when that Miſſal was printed with ſome alterations; for the Liturgy of Barſuſanus, a famous Jacobite, was inſerted.

[l] Vincent. Ricard. [m] Can. 32. [n] Theod. Balſ. jur. Græc. Rom. Lib. V.

The Chaldeans, who have a Liturgy of St. James, written in their own tongue, and tranſlated from the Greek, generally believe that this Liturgy is the ſource and foundation of all the reſt, and that it was really written by St. James whoſe name it bears: yet as they give no reaſon for it, they are not to be believed. All they rely on is a popular tradition, without enquiring whether it be fact or no. The Miſſal of the Neſtorians, whereof I once had a copy, does not contain ſo great a number of Liturgies; but that which is the moſt remarkable of them, in this Miſſal, which the Neſtorians who live about Babylon generally uſe, is one that goes under the name of Neſtorius himſelf, and is much longer than any of the others. If it be true, that Neſtorius compoſed a particular Liturgy, he undoubtedly compoſed it in Greek. And indeed, this is the opinion of Ebed-Jeſu in his catalogue of eaſtern writings, wherein he obſerves, that the Liturgy of Neſtorius was tranſlated from the Greek into either the Chaldee or Syriac by Thomas and Maraba. The ſame Neſtorians have two other Liturgies in their Miſſal, one of which is aſcribed to the twelve Apoſtles, and different from that which bears the ſame title in the Miſſal of the Maronites. However, we muſt not believe that theſe two Liturgies were actually compoſed by the Apoſtles; but it is likely that they were ſo called, as being read on thoſe days which were conſecrated to the memory of the Apoſtles.

The Chriſtians of the Indies, who are commonly known by the name of the Chriſtians of St. Thomas, are alſo of the ſect of theſe Neſtorians. They acknowledge one only patriarch, to whom they give the title of patriarch of Babylon, whoſe juriſdiction extends as far as the Indies. Wherefore you will find the ſame Neſtorian Miſſal at Goa, Cochim, Angamala, and all over the Indies wherever there are any Chriſtians of St. Thomas. But we are to obſerve, that Alexis Meneſes, a Monk of the order of St. Auſtin, a famous miſſionary in thoſe countries, who was afterwards made archbiſhop of Goa, and aſſumed the dignity of primate of the Eaſt, cauſed ſome copies of it to be reformed, pretending that there were errors in their Liturgies. But after having carefully examined them, I found none in them, only that they give Neſtorius the title of Saint. In my opinion, there was no neceſſity for ſo great an alteration as he made in the Latin verſion of that Liturgy, which is aſcribed to the Apoſtles, and is printed ſeparate in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

° The author of the hiſtory of Alexis Meneſes has alſo inſerted that Maſs of the Neſtorians, with a preface at the beginning, amongſt Meneſes's works: and in order to ſhew the neceſſity there was of reforming that Liturgy, he aſſures us there were ſome things in it intirely contrary to the reality of the ſacrament of the Euchariſt, before it was reformed by a Neſtorian archbiſhop, who reſtored the form of the conſecration, wherein it was aſſerted, that the ſacrament of the Euchariſt contained the body of our Saviour only figuratively. And to the end that there might be no doubt for the future, that the real preſence and true body of Jeſus Chriſt was in that ſacrament; theſe following words, ſays he, were added; Hoc eſt in veritate corpus meum: hic eſt in veritate calix ſanguinis mei, qui pro vobis & pro multis effundetur in debitorum propitiationem & in peccatorum remiſſionem.

But I take upon me to affirm, that in the genuine manuſcript Miſſals of the Neſtorians, written even before Meneſes's voyage to the Indies, and which are at this day uſed by thoſe Neſtorians, called Schiſmatics, there is nothing like thoſe pretended errors. It often happens,

* A Maſs-book. of the Chriſtians of St. Thomas.

° Orient. Hiſt. concerning the progreſs of Alexis Meneſes in the reduction pens, that the miſſionaries give us a wrong idea of the eaſtern Chriſtians, they not having acquired a perfect knowledge of divinity, and therefore condemning whatever is not agreable to their opinion as heretical and erroneous. But this I propoſe to ſhew in a particular treatiſe by itſelf.

The Jacobites, as I have already hinted, have alſo a great number of Liturgies written in the ſame tongue as thoſe of the Neſtorians: yet it is very eaſy to diſtinguiſh the one from the other in the manuſcript copies; not only becauſe their characters are different, but likewiſe becauſe they make uſe of different expreſſions, eſpecially in ſpeaking of the bleſſed Virgin, whom the Neſtorians always call Mother of Chriſt, and never Mother of God, as the Jacobites and Maronites do. Beſides, theſe Jacobites are not very exact in quoting the true words of our Saviour, as they are written in the Goſpel. As for inſtance, in a manuſcript copy of one of their Liturgies, which they ſay is Matthew the paſtor's, we read that Jeſus Chriſt took leavened bread, wherein was hidden the myſtery of life. In the ſame Liturgy, inſtead of theſe words; This is my body, it is, This is my fleſh. In another Liturgy aſcribed to St. Peter, you read, This bread is my body, and not, This is my body. But theſe differences, and ſome others of the ſame nature, proceed, for the moſt part, from their making no difficulty to inſert the explanation they give to the words of our Lord, inſtead of the words themſelves.

There was alſo a Miſſal printed at Rome in the Chaldee or Syriac, containing twelve Liturgies, under the names of St. Xyſtus Pope of Rome, St. John Chryſoſtome, St. John the Evangeliſt, St. Peter the chief of the Apoſtles, St. Dennis, St. Cyril, Matthew the paſtor, John the patriarch, ſurnamed Suſan, St. Euſtathius, St. Maruta, Metropolitan of Tagrita, St. James the Apoſtle and brother to our Saviour, St. Mark the Evangeliſt, with a ſecond Liturgy of St. Peter the chief of the Apoſtles. The Maronites and Jacobites believe, that all theſe Liturgies were really written by thoſe to whom they are aſcribed, wherein they give evident proofs of their ignorance.

At the ſame time, there was likewiſe another book printed ſeparate at Rome in Chaldee or Syriac, for thoſe who officiate at Maſs, and anſwer the prieſt, or more properly who celebrate the Liturgy with him. For it is the cuſtom amongſt all the eaſtern Chriſtians, in this ceremony, to ſpeak almoſt as much as the prieſt who offers up the ſacrifice: and to the end that they might know what they ſaid, this book is, in Chaldee and Arabic, printed in two columns, whereof the one is Chaldee and the other Arabic. A part of the rubrics too of this Miſſal is alſo publiſhed in Arabic: which has not been obſerved in the Liturgies, unleſs in that attributed to St. Cyril, which is likewiſe publiſhed in Chaldee and Arabic; no doubt becauſe it was taken for granted, that the Chaldean prieſts, who celebrated the Liturgy in the Chaldee, muſt have a knowledge of that tongue, which is the ſame thing amongſt the Maronites as the Latin tongue with us. The Arabic is at this time their mother tongue, and there are a great many prieſts amongſt them, who can only read the Chaldee Liturgies, without underſtanding them.

However, if any one has the curioſity to have a Chaldee Miſſal, according to the uſe of the Maronites, perfectly exact, he muſt have recourſe to the manuſcript copies, and rather to thoſe uſed by the Jacobites than to thoſe of the Maronites: becauſe the miſſionaries who have from time to time been ſent to mount Libanus, have made ſome alterations in them. It was, in my opinion, needleſs to reform this Miſſal in the edition printed at Rome, becauſe that reformation chiefly falls on the prayer called the Invocation of the Holy Ghoſt. Now it is certain, that this very Prayer or Invocation may be ſeen in the Greek Liturgy; and that the very Greeks reſiding at Rome are allowed to make uſe of that Liturgy. I could ſay a great deal more concerning the Liturgies of the Maronites, had I not already wrote a particular treatiſe upon that ſubject.

The Ethiopian Liturgies are not to be ranked in the ſame claſs with thoſe called Chaldean or Syriac, tho' the Ethiopians call the old Ethiopian tongue, Chaldean or Ethiopian; thoſe Liturgies differing very much from each other, both in their contents, and in the tongue wherein in they are written. Francis Alvares, who had been preſent at the Maſs of the Ethiopians; and lived amongſt them, aſſures us, that their Liturgy is very ſhort; quite different from the Ethiopian Maſs printed in the library of the Fathers; this laſt Liturgy being pretty long: Wherefore it is probable the Ethiopians have two ſorts of Liturgies, ſome whereof are ſhorter, and ſome longer, and that on common days they make uſe of the ſhorteſt, and chiefly that aſcribed to Dioſcorus patriarch of Alexandria, and printed in London both in the Ethiopian and Latin tongue. [p] There have likewiſe been ſome Ethiopian Maſſes printed at Rome in the Ethiopian language, among which may be found that entitled, Canon univerſalis Æthiopum, together with two other. It is to be obſerved, that in the year following a Latin verſion of that Liturgy was alſo printed at the ſame place, and afterwards reprinted in the library of the Fathers.

But I know not upon what motive the author of the Latin tranſlation of that Liturgy has not followed the Ethiopian original with any tolerable exactneſs, from which he ſometimes deviates without any reaſon. However we may plainly ſee, that in the prayer, called the Invocation of the Holy Ghoſt, he endeavoured to make his tranſlation agreable to the clergy of Rome, and to the Latin divines, who believe the conſecration to be over the very moment that Invocation is begun. But the Ethiopians are of the ſame opinion as all the reſt of the eaſtern Chriſtians, that the conſecration is not entirely over, till the words of the Invocation are quite ended. And indeed the Ethiopians, who have printed the Ethiopian text of this Liturgy, have made no alteration in that part of it.

It is certain, that when the Ethiopians had thoſe Liturgies printed at Rome, they endeavoured as much as poſſible to paſs for orthodox, and to conform themſelves to the opinion of the church of Rome; in order (at leaſt in appearance) to unite their church to that of Rome, whoſe aſſiſtance they were in need of at that time, becauſe of the wars they were then engaged in. Therefore the Liturgies which they have printed ſhould be read with caution, and compared with ſome of the beſt manuſcripts, whereby they may be rectified.

Beſides theſe, they have other Liturgies under the names of St. John the Evangeliſt, St James, St. John Chryſoſtome, the bleſſed Apoſtles, St. Cyril, St. Gregory, and ſome whoſe authors are not mentioned. And thus the Ethiopians flatter themſelves with having very ancient Liturgies, as if they were really compoſed by thoſe perſons whoſe names they bear: but it may be obſerved, that the Ethiopian church has been long dependent on that of the Copti in Egypt, from whom ſhe has received the beſt part of her offices.

Theſe Copti have alſo particular Liturgies written in the Coptic language, which at this time are only uſed at divine ſervice, becauſe very few people underſtand it, the Arabic being more generally uſed. This Coptic, which Kircher the Jeſuit pretends to be a mother tongue, independent of all others, has received a vaſt many alterations from the Greek, whereof it ſtill retains all the characters, with a prodigious quantity of words intirely Greek. In the library of the Fathers, we meet with three of their Liturgies which are aſcribed to St. Baſil, St. Gregory, and St. Cyril, and were tranſlated by a Maronite of mount Libanus from an Arabic verſion. But whether it be that the tranſlator made uſe of bad copies of thoſe Liturgies, or that he had not a perfect knowledge of the Arabic, it is very certain that there are many faults in his Latin verſion. However we muſt obſerve, that as the Coptic is known but by very few people, the Copti commonly join an Arabic verſion to thoſe Liturgies written in Coptic, in order to underſtand them, tho' at the ſame time their Liturgy is read in Coptic.

Victorius Scialac a Maronite, and author of the Latin tranſlation of thoſe Coptic Liturgies, obſerves, that the lateſt Coptic Liturgies have been corrected by the Latins, ſince the union of the Coptic church with that of Rome in the time of Clement VIII. But this is very improbable, becauſe that union which they pretend happened under Pope Clement ment VIII, was not found to be real. What may be depended upon is, that by a peruſal of them, they will plainly appear to be taken from the Greek Liturgies.

[p] In 1548.

I am likewiſe of opinion, that amongſt the Liturgies of the eaſtern church, we may place thoſe in uſe amongſt the Armenians, becauſe they alſo read the Prayer called the Invocation of the Holy Ghoſt [q] at their celebration of Maſs. A copy of this Maſs has been printed at Rome in the Armenian tongue, together with a Latin tranſlation; but the cenſors at Rome have reformed it in ſome places without any occaſion. And for this reaſon, that abſtract of the Armenian Maſs, which is at the end of the firſt volume of the treatiſe, entitled, The Perpetuity of the Faith, is not conformable to that reformation, tho' the Armenian patriarch who ſent this abſtract was of the Latin communion, and even then reſided at Rome. Biſhop Uſcanus, who likewiſe gave an abſtract of the Armenian Liturgy to the author of The Perpetuity of the Faith, ſeems to pay a greater regard to the correction of the Roman cenſors; for after having publiſhed his abſtract conformable to that reformation, he is content with ſaying only, that there are others whoſe Liturgies follow a different reading, as if that diverſity proceeded from a difference of copies, and not from the Roman cenſors. Beſides theſe Armenian Liturgies written in the Armenian tongue, I remember formerly to have met with a large manuſcript, containing ſeveral Syriac Liturgies according to the uſe of the Jacobites, amongſt which was one written in the Syriac language according to the uſe of the Armenians. After having examined it, I found it was nothing more than an abridgment of the Greek Liturgy, aſcribed to St. James; which very well agrees with what ſome of the ancient hiſtorians have ſaid concerning a part of the Armenians, who formerly uſed the Syriac, as well as the Armenian language.

The Armenians, as appears from Galanus's hiſtory, make one of their patriarchs, named John, who lived ſome time after the Council of Calcedon, author of their Liturgy, and other prayers. But this ſhall ſuffice concerning the Liturgies that are in uſe in the eaſtern churches, my deſign being only to give a ſhort account of them. Yet before I conclude this diſcourſe, I ſhall add, that M. Brerewood, who has written a chapter expreſly upon thoſe Liturgies, in his treatiſe of different religions, has made ſeveral miſtakes; as, when he pretends, out of a compliment to the opinion of the Proteſtants, to ſay, that there are but three nations, where the Liturgy is celebrated in a tongue which is underſtood by the learned only, viz. the Greek, the Latin, and the Chaldean or Syriac tongue. But he did not conſider, that the Copti of Egypt celebrate their Liturgy in the old Coptic, which is ſcarce underſtood by any; that the Ethiopians alſo celebrate their Liturgy in the old Ethiopic, which is wholly different from the vulgar tongue. Beſides, the Armenian language, wherein the Liturgies of the Armenians are written, is not altogether the ſame with that which is ſpoken by the Armenians at this time. We proceed now to the Liturgies or Maſſes of the weſtern church.

CHAP. XIX.

Of the different Liturgies or Maſſes of the weſtern Church.

MOST of thoſe who have written upon the Maſs of the Latins are of opinion, that it was compoſed by St. Peter, and has received ſome few alterations only by length of time; but that prodigious variety of Maſſes which has perpetually appeared throughout the weſtern churches, and even in that of Italy, is a plain proof that St. Peter never left a particular form of Maſs to the church of Rome, no more than to that of Antioch, whereof alſo he was biſhop. How is it poſſible, that neither [q] In the year 1642.

Euſebius nor St. Jerom, who ſpeak of the Epiſtles of this Holy Apoſtle, ſhould have omitted taking notice of this Maſs of St. Peter, were it true, that he had been the author of it? Wherefore the opinion of thoſe, who make him the author of the Latin Maſs, is rather grounded on a very uncertain tradition, than on any rational ſuppoſition.

[r] The Popes long complained of the great variety of offices uſed in moſt of thoſe churches, which were obliged to the church of Rome for their belief. Italy, ſays Pope Innocent I, in one of his Epiſtles, Gaul, Spain, Afric, Sicily and the neighbouring iſlands, ought to conform themſelves to the church of Rome in their offices, ſince ſhe is the mother of them all; and all, continues he, ought in one manner to obſerve, what St. Peter eſtabliſhed in the church of Rome, and what has ever been practiſed therein, whereas on the contrary they act according to what is moſt agreable to them. But it does not appear that St. Gregory the Great, who notwithſtanding was one of the moſt zealous defenders of the Holy See, gave himſelf any great trouble to introduce an uniformity of offices into the church, which had received their faith from that of Rome. [s] In his letter to Auſtin, who was then in England for the propagation of the faith, he tells him, that he gave him the liberty of following the cuſtoms either of Rome, Gaul, or any other church; becauſe indeed variety of offices or ceremonies can be of no prejudice to the fundamentals of religion.

The uniformity we now ſee in the Latin Maſs and other offices did not always ſubſiſt. Charlemagne, in compliment to the Popes, uſed his utmoſt endeavours to bring the different offices of divers churches to a conformity with that of Rome. His ſucceſſors alſo left nothing unattempted in order to introduce the Roman office into all their dominions. But notwithſtanding all their endeavours, and all the intereſt which the Popes had made to bring it to paſs, it is almoſt incredible to think how ſtrenuouſly they were oppoſed by thoſe churches, which they were attempting to ſubject to the Roman cuſtoms; each nation produced its reaſons againſt it, as if the religion of their Fathers was to have been forſaken.

I do not here pretend to give an account of all the different Maſſes in uſe in ſeveral of the weſtern churches, becauſe we have ſcarce any thing but fragments left of moſt of them. I ſhall only ſhew, that the Roman Maſs in former times was celebrated in very few places beſides Rome, and that in Rome itſelf ſome alterations were made in it; the Maſs in uſe at this time, which we pretend to be according to the Roman Ritual, not being the ancient entire Roman Maſs, but only an abridgment.

To begin with Italy, the church of Milan had formerly a Maſs, and even an entire office different from that of Rome, part of which continues in uſe to this day. It is commonly called the Office, according to the Ambroſian rite, to diſtinguiſh it from the Roman. Some authors, who have written concerning this Ambroſian Maſs, have ſhewed us at the ſame time in what it differs from that of Rome. [t] Walafrid Strabo inſiſts, that St. Ambroſe was author of it, and that he diſpoſed it in ſuch a manner, that it might equally ſerve his church of Milan, and all the other churches of his dioceſe. But in all probability, even before the time of St. Ambroſe, the church of Milan had an office different from that of Rome, as well as the other churches of Italy, which conformed to the Roman rite, with much leſs difficulty than that of Milan, this laſt ſheltering itſelf under St. Ambroſe's authority.

Even at Rome there was a great variety of offices, as has been obſerved by Peter Abalard. Of all the churches in Rome, [u] ſaith this author, the church of Lateran only preſerved the ancient Roman office; all the other churches had their different offices. Radulf of Tongres likewiſe ſpeaking of the Roman office, [w] has obſerved, that there were two different kinds of offices at Rome, the one ſhort, and the other long; and that the latter, which was an abridgment of the other, was performed in the Pope's chapel, whereas the other was properly the Roman office. He afterwards adds, that the Pope's officers were were uſed to alter or abridge that office as they thought moſt convenient for the Pope and Cardinals; and that the Friers of the four leſſer orders choſe that office abridged, to conform themſelves to the Court of Rome. It is to be ſuppoſed, that by ſuch a way of proceeding, their deſign was to obſerve the rule left them by their patriarch, to follow the Roman order. In ſhort, the ſame author obſerves, that Pope Nicholas III. entirely aboliſhed that ancient Roman office, which was the true office of Rome, in order to give a ſanction to that of the Friers of the leſſer order. Wherefore new Miſſals and other office books were introduced in the room of the old ones, which are now called the Roman office; whereas, in my opinion, they ought rather to be ſtiled the office of the Franciſcans.

[r] Innocent I. [s] Greg. I. Ep. ad Aug. [t] Walafrid Strabo.
[u] Abal. in Epiſt. Apol. Adv. Bern. [w] Radulphus of Tongres.

The Gauls alſo have had their particular office, as appears by the Epiſtles of St. Jerom, and of ſeveral of the Popes; and it was chiefly in theſe parts, that Charlemagne and his ſucceſſors uſed all poſſible means to introduce the Roman office. Pope Adrian ſent what is commonly called the Sacramentarium of St. Gregory to that Emperor, who had deſired it, in order to introduce the Maſs and other offices according to the uſe of Rome, into his dominions. Pepin had likewiſe ſome time before endeavoured to carry on the ſame deſign. [x] The Abbot Hildwin gives us an account of the Maſs in uſe amongſt the French, before they conformed to the Roman rite, and aſcribes the origin of it to St. Dennis, whom he calls the Areopagite; but without being at the trouble of enquiring into the truth of this origin, it is certain, that in that part of Gaul, now known by the name of France, they had a particular form of Maſs, different from that of Rome: and the ſame Abbot, in a letter which he wrote to the Emperor Lewis, takes notice of ſome particular Miſſals, according to the uſe of the Gallican church, which were very ancient, and made uſe of before the Roman rite was introduced into that church.

[y] The Maſs which Matthias Flaccus Illyricus had printed at Strasbourg in the year 1557, was eſteemed by ſeveral to be the Maſs of the Gallican church: but Cardinal Bona has lately endeavoured to prove the contrary by many reaſons, and to ſhew, that this Maſs was very different, in every circumſtance, from what the ancient authors have aſcribed to the Maſs in uſe in the Gallican churches. He beſides is of opinion, that the Maſs formerly called Gallican was taken from the Maſs in uſe at Toledo, and all over Spain, and is nothing more than what we now call the Moſarabic Maſs. But his reaſons conſiſt of circumſtances which only prove, that both theſe Maſſes agreed in many points.

It is not to be doubted, but there was a particular Maſs appointed in Spain, for the uſe of thoſe churches which had any dependence on the Greeks, ſince that Maſs is extant to this day. And tho' Gregory VII. ſubſtituted the Roman Maſs in its room, yet it hath been impoſſible to aboliſh the celebration of it in ſome of the Spaniſh churches, and amongſt others in that of Toledo and Salamanca, where it is uſed at this very time. The Spaniards ſhewed an extrarodinary zeal for the preſervation of their ancient ceremonies, as well as extraordinary ſteadineſs againſt admitting the Roman office. The Arragonians were the firſt who received it under Pope Alexander II, who for that purpoſe ſent a Cardinal into Spain, with the dignity of Legate. [z] Sancius too, King of Arragon, after his acceſſion to the kingdom of Navarre, which he obtained by the management and aſſiſtance of Pope Gregory VII. obliged the churches of Navarre to receive the Maſs and other offices of the church of Rome, already eſtabliſhed in the kingdom of Arragon: as may be ſeen by thoſe letters which that Pope writ to Sancius, and to the other Spaniſh Kings.

Alphonſo King of Caſtile did not ſhew ſo ready a compliance to the earneſt ſollicitations of that Pope. The Caſtilians too refuſed to receive the Roman Maſs; and the King himſelf never would have agreed to it, had not his Queen, who was of France, where the Roman rite was admitted, prevailed on him by her importunities. The Spaniards are abundantly furniſhed with hiſtories and miracles in ſupport of their ancient Gothic Maſs: but as theſe hiſtories ſeemed to me ſomewhat fabulous, I thought it needleſs to quote them.

[x] Abbas Hilduinus.

[y] Flaccus Illyricus, Card. Bona, Lib. I. Rer. Lit. chap. xii.

[z] Pet. de Marca in Hiſt. Bearn.

them. Only it is to be obſerved, that this Maſs of the Spaniards is the very ſame printed in the library of the Fathers, under the title of Miſſa Moſarabum; and is ſo called from the Arabs, being once maſters of Spain. The Chriſtians of thoſe countries were at that time commonly called Moſarabes, that is to ſay, mixed with the Arabs.

It were to no purpoſe to enter into a long detail of that variety of Maſſes and other offices of the church, that have been eſtabliſhed in other countries beſides what I have mentioned. Even that part of the world now called England had its offices, and all its different ceremonies, long before St. Gregory ſent Auſtin to convert that people. For this Auſtin was not the firſt who preached the Goſpel to the Engliſh, whoſe country was then known by the name of Britain. Auſtin ſettled Chriſtianity but in one part of it; moſt of this iſland having been converted to the faith long before. Hoc in Eccleſiis tuis faciant, ſays St. Jerom in one of his Epiſtles, quod Romæ, ſive quod in Oriente, quod in Italia, quod in Creta, quod in Cypro, quod in Africa, quod in Illyrico, quod in Hiſpania, quod in Britannia. All the churches in general, who acknowledged the church of Rome as their mother, did not agree with her either in what concerned their Maſs, or their other offices; for even the biſhops of the great churches took the liberty to add to, or retrench from the office as they thought proper, nay often without the authority of any Council. The churches had not ſo great a regard to the ordinances of Charlemagne and his ſucceſſors, who had eſtabliſhed uniformity of office in their dominions, but from time to time they would make ſome alteration or other in it. The Monks and Friers chiefly, who generally ſet a greater value upon themſelves than other men, were alſo reſolved to be diſtinguiſhed by a particular office: which liberty was carried to ſuch a degree, that at laſt Pope Sixtus V. was obliged to create a congregation at Rome, called De 'riti, in order to enquire into theſe new offices which daily ſprung up and encreaſed, and to prevent their future multiplying. So that ever ſince that time they have been obliged to have the approbation of that congregation of rites, to give a ſanction to their new offices.

Notwithſtanding all theſe differences, which are of no great moment, we may ſay, that the ſubſtance of the Maſs has ever been the ſame in the weſtern church, and that the Latin Maſſes have ever had a nearer relation to each other, than to the Liturgies of the eaſtern churches, which have in all of them, as I obſerved before, the prayer called the Invocation of the Holy Ghoſt, which does not appear in the Latin Maſs; unleſs it may be ſaid to be contained in the following prayer: quam oblationem tu Deus, in omnibus quæſumus, benedictam, adſcriptam, ratam, rationabilem, acceptamque facere digneris, ut nobis corpus & ſanguis fiat dilectiſſimi filii tui Domini noſtri Jeſu Chriſti. This prayer, methinks, is the ſame with that which the eaſtern Chriſtians call the Invocation of the Holy Ghoſt. All the difference is, that in the Maſs of the eaſterns that prayer is ſaid ſome time after the prieſt has pronounced theſe words, This is my body, &c. but in the Latin Maſs before it; and this agrees much better with the general and received opinion of our ſchools, which is, that the conſecration chiefly conſiſts in the words juſt mentioned; whereas the eaſtern churches believe, that thoſe words are only quoted as the hiſtory of what paſſed when our Lord eat the laſt Paſſover with his Apoſtles. For which reaſon, they afterwards addreſs their prayer to the Holy Ghoſt, to beſeech him to change the bread and wine into the body and blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. (Tho' this has been explained by the Greek church at the Council of Florence, where they declared, that they believed the conſecration conſiſted in theſe words, This is my body.)

The END of the ſecond Diſſertation.

INDEX

INDEX.

Containing the Chapters of the first DISSERTATION.

PART I.

CHAP. I. THE origin of the Jewiſh Ceremonies and Cuſtoms; into how many parts they are divided, and in what they differ Page 35

CHAP. II. Of their Houſes 36

CHAP. III. Of their Kitchen and Table-furniture 37

CHAP. IV. Of their Sleep and Dreams ibid.

CHAP. V. Of their Clothes 38

CHAP. VI. Of the Decency to be obſerved at eaſing themſelves 40

CHAP. VII. Of their manner of waſhing their Hands and Face. ibid

CHAP. VIII. Of their Purity 41

CHAP. IX. Of their Bleſſings ibid.

CHAP. X. Of their Synagogues or Schools 42

CHAP. XI. Of their Prayers, of the Cloak or Long Robe, of the Forehead-pieces, and of the Pentateuch 43

CHAP. XII. Of the Prieſts and Levites, of the Preſents made them, and Tithes 46

CHAP. XIII. Of Agriculture and Cattle 47

CHAP. XIV. Of their Charity towards the Poor, and to Animals 48

PART II.

CHAP. I. OF their Language, Pronunciation, way of Writing, and Preaching Page 51

CHAP. II. Of their Studies and Academies, of the riſe and contents of the Gemara or Talmud 53

CHAP. III. Of the Creation of their Rabbi's, of their Authority, and of their Excommunications 54

CHAP. IV. Of their Oaths and Vows 55

CHAP. V. Of their Trade and of their Uſury ibid.

CHAP. VI. Of their Contracts, Writings, Witneſſes, Judges, and Judgments 56

CHAP. VII. Of Meats at all times prohibited, and of their manner of eating 57

CHAP. VIII. Of their Drink 59

CHAP. IX. Of their way of making their Bread ibid.

CHAP. X. Of their way of eating at Table 60

PART III.

CHAP. I. OF the Sabbath-day Page 62
CHAP. II. Of the new Moon, of the Names of the Months, and of the intercalary Month 65
CHAP. III. Of the Passover 66
CHAP. IV. Of the Festival of Weeks, or Pentecost 68
CHAP. V. Of their New-year's-day, and of the Month Elul 69
CHAP. VI. Of the Chipur, or Day of Expiation 70
CHAP. VII. Of the Feast of Tents or Tabernacles 71
CHAP. VIII. Of their Fasts, both ordained and voluntary 72
CHAP. IX. Of the Feast of Hanuca or Lights 74
CHAP. X. Of the Purim ibid.

PART IV.

CHAP. I. OF unlawful Conversation with Women Page 77
CHAP. II. Of Matrimony 78
CHAP. III. Of Betrothings and Marriages ibid.
CHAP. IV. How a Woman may obtain a Divorce, and in what manner a Man is punished who abuses a Maid 80
CHAP. V. Of Women in the time of their Impurity, and of their Lyings in ibid.
CHAP. VI. Of Jealousy and Divorces 81
CHAP. VII. Of the Ibum, and Caliza 82
CHAP. VIII. Of Circumcision 83
CHAP. IX. Of the Redemption of the First-born 85
CHAP. X. Of their way of instructing their Children, and of their coming to age 86
CHAP. XI. Of the respect due to Relations and others ibid.

PART V.

CHAP. I. OF the Heretical Jews: with a Supplement concerning the Caraïtes and Samaritans Page 89
SUPPLEMENT concerning the Caraïtes, wherein the Rise of that Sect, and the manner how they differ from the other Jews are treated 90
SUPPLEMENT concerning the Samaritans of our time, wherein is given an abstract of two Letters written to Scaliger, by two famous Synagogues of the Samaritans 94
CHAP. II. Of their Divination and Witchcraft 99
CHAP. III. Of their Proselytes ibid.
CHAP. IV. Of their Injunctions upon Women ibid.
CHAP. V. Of their Slaves 100
CHAP. VI. Of their Confession and Penance ibid.
CHAP. VII. Of their Sickness and Death 101
CHAP. VIII. Of the Dead, and of their Funerals ibid.
CHAP. IX. Of their Mourning, Prayers, and Commemoration of the Dead 103
CHAP. X. Of Paradise, Hell, and Purgatory 104
CHAP. XI. Of the Metempsychosis, or Transmigration of Souls, and of the Resurrection, and last Judgment. ibid.
CHAP. XII. Of the thirteen Articles of their Faith ibid.

INDEX.

Containing the Chapters of the ſecond DISSERTATION, which is inſtead of a Supplement to the Ceremonies of the Jews.

CHAP. I. PRinciples of Religion wherein the Chriſtians agree with the Jews. An Enquiry into thoſe Principles. Moſt of the Jewiſh Traditions not grounded on a ſure Bottom 109

CHAP. II. Of the Jewiſh Divinity. Reflections upon that Divinity, which hath received ſome alterations from their Philoſophy. Of the Jewiſh Cabala 112

CHAP. III. The Morality of the Jews compared with that of the Chriſtians. Of their Uſury 115

CHAP. IV. Of the Commandments, Ordinances, and Judgments of the Jews. The Authority of the Rabbi's in regard to them 116

CHAP. V. Of the great Conſiſtory or Sanhedrim of the Jews. Of the Place where it was held. An Explication of that matter, ſo far as relates to the Diſcipline obſerved in the Church. A compariſon between the Naſci or Prince of the Jews, and the Pope; as alſo between their great Conſiſtory and the general Councils of the Church 118

CHAP. VI. Of the Jewiſh Synagogues, and Officers or Miniſters of them. The Foundation of the Churches or firſt Aſſemblies of the Chriſtians. The Origin of their Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, with ſeveral Reflections on this Subject 120

CHAP. VII. A Continuation of the conformity which appears between the Church and Synagogue. Other Officers of the Synagogue. Of the Impoſition of Hands 123

CHAP. VIII. Reflections on the Prayers of the Jews. The conformity between their Prayers and thoſe of the Chriſtians 124

CHAP. IX. Of the Benedictions or Bleſſings in uſe amongſt the Jews; the conformity of them to the Benedictions of the Chriſtian Religion. In what reſpect Jeſus Chriſt obſerved the Jewiſh Rites in the laſt Paſſover 126

CHAP. X. The Jewiſh Feſtivals, and their conformity with thoſe of the Chriſtians. The reaſon why the Chriſtians have retained ſome of the Jewiſh Feſtivals in their Church 128

CHAP. XI. The State of the Jews after the total deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and how they were governed at that time in matters of Religion. Of the Talmud, and the manner in which it was compoſed by the Jewiſh Doctors. Two different Talmuds amongſt them. The Authority of thoſe Talmuds 130

CHAP. XII. Of the Jewiſh Doctors who came after the Talmud. Reflections on the Riſe of the ridiculous Traditions contained in the Talmud. Of their local Practiſes and Cuſtoms 132

CHAP. XIII. Of the Books for the Uſe of the Synagogues, and with what Caution the Jews write them. Of their chief Studies 134

CHAP.

CHAP. XIV. Of the Books at this Day extant amongſt the Jews, and whether they may in any manner be uſeful to the Chriſtians Page 136

CHAP. XV. The Author's judgment upon ſome other Books written in Rabbinical Hebrew; and to what Sciences the Jews principally apply themſelves. Their ignorance in Hiſtory and Chronology. Of the Tongue wherein they write 139

CHAP. XVI. An Enquiry whether the Hebrew Tongue be neceſſary to Divines. Reaſons which may be alledged in favour of thoſe Divines, who neglect the Study of that Tongue. An Anſwer to thoſe Allegations 141

CHAP. XVII. An eaſy Method to acquire the Knowledge of the Hebrew Tongue in a ſhort Time 143

CHAP. XVIII. Of the Liturgies or Maſſes which are celebrated throughout the whole World; but particularly of the different Liturgies that are in Uſe in the eaſtern Church. Some Conſiderations upon that Subject 145

CHAP. XIX. Of the different Maſſes which are in uſe in the weſtern Church. The Origin of the Maſs which is celebrated at this Time; and the Reaſon why it is ſo much abridged 153

THE

THE THIRD

DISSERTATION

UPON THE

CEREMONIES of the JEWS,

BEING A

SUPPLEMENT

To the two foregoing

DISSERTATIONS.

By * * * *

SUPPLEMENT

To the Two foregoing

DISSERTATIONS.

IT might almoſt be imagined that after what Rabbi Leo of Modena and Father Simon, (who has given us a ſupplement to the Rabbi's work) have ſaid upon the cuſtoms of the Jews, nothing more could be ſaid; but we may take the liberty of ſaying with the learned [a] author of the hiſtory of the Jews, that Leo of Modena has omitted ſeveral things of importance. He does not always enter into a detail of the ceremonies and cuſtoms of the Jewiſh church; and as for Father Simon, his deſign is chiefly to ſhew us the conformity between ſome of the rites of the Catholic church, and thoſe of the ſynagogue, without giving us any great light into Rabbi Leo's abridgment. It may therefore be neceſſary to make up the deficiency of thoſe two Diſſertations with the following remarks.

I. Idea of the Diſperſion of the JEWS.

ALL Chriſtian divines muſt be convinced that the diſperſion of the Jews, ever ſince the time of the deſtruction of their temple and city of Jeruſalem under Veſpaſian, is attended with ſuch particular marks of reprobation, that it is impoſſible not to diſcover the finger of God therein. This diſperſion is become a field fruitful in miracles, prodigies, and reflections. The Chriſtian and the Jew may both equally reap their harveſt in a field, where each of them diſcovers wonders, tho' each looks on them with a different eye. By the help of oratory, our Chriſtian preachers have, from time to time, found means to awaken, in the minds of their audience, an Idea of that reprobation into which the Jews are fallen. The reproaches daily caſt on that people, the contempt under which they live, the ſuppreſſion of ſuch ceremonies as are the moſt eſſential to their religion, the whole hierarchy of their church overthrown, their tribes and families confounded, and their ſacrifices aboliſhed; theſe, I ſay, are ſome of the tokens of that fatal reproba-tion. Yet on the other hand, in theſe very misfortunes the Jews find matter of glory and and triumph, and conſtantly maintain, that [b] their nation is the heart of the univerſe. The heart is the nobleſt part of man's body: yet, it is that which moſt ſuffers by the indiſpoſitions of that body, is conſumed by the paſſions, and afflicted with anguiſh: however no corruption can be formed in the heart, it being endued, as it were, with a genuine and inherent purity, and to the laſt, preſerving the power of throwing off all corrupt humours which deſtroy the other parts. That fine and delicate compoſition, whereof the heart is formed, indeed draws a number of diſtempers into it, which afterwards it expels by the vigour of its conſtitution. The Jews go on, and ſay with the [c] Prophet, "that God acknowledges no other people amongſt all the nations "on earth but themſelves, and that for this reaſon he puniſhes their iniquities." But theſe iniquities are tranſitory, becauſe God will not permit them to deſtroy the heart, as they formerly deſtroyed the Canaanites, &c. The Jews ſuffer by the corruptions of their neighbours, as the heart ſuffers by the indiſpoſitions of the liver, ſpleen, ſtomach, &c. This ſufficiently ſhews, they have a quite different notion of their diſgraces and misfortunes from the Chriſtians.

[a] M. Baſnage's Hiſt. of the Jews, Lib. I. chap. i.

We have no particular account of the diſperſion of the ten tribes whom Salmanazar carried away into Media: but however that may be, it is plain, that ſince that diſperſion the Jews have made a figure in ſeveral countries; and yet I am of opinion, that the world had no diſtinct knowledge of them till after the deſtruction of the kingdom of Judah. [d] Joſephus makes their number amount to infinite millions, even in the time of King Ahaſuerus. An author [e] named Eldad has given us the hiſtory of their diſperſion, and endeavoured to give a luſtre to it, by ſo many fables, that it does not in the leaſt fall ſhort of the mythology of the ancient Greeks. Benjamin of Tudela has alſo thrown the ſame embelliſhments into his ſubject, and gives a deſcription of a prodigious extent of land, of which his nation were the Lords proprietors, and of which no ſoul knows a ſyllable, but himſelf. Peritzol, another famous Jewiſh hiſtorian, has placed them in ſeveral parts of the world, where, as yet, they never have been found. For inſtance, he has imagined a community of Recabites in the deſert of Cabor; and beſtows on them a kingdom in the deſerts of Arabia. He has alſo peopled the borders of the river Ganges, the frontier places of Bengal, the Philippine iſlands, &c. with Jews. Laſtly, he has ſettled them an empire near a certain river called Sambatius or Sabbation, in the neighbourhood of Preſter-John's dominions, ſo ſituated according to the account of this author, that we might think it lay upon the river Thibet. Were it true, that there ever was a Jewiſh ſettlement in thoſe countries, we might in all probability believe, that they were the remainder of the ten tribes. Gulielmus de Rubruquis, who travelled into Tartary in the year 1246. tells us, that about two days journey beyond Derbent, on the road to great Tartary, [f] he found a prodigious number of Jews in a city called Samaron; and he mentions an incloſed country towards the Caſpian Sea, where the Jews were confined. [g] Carpin, who travelled at the ſame time, likewiſe gives us an account of ſome of the Jews of Tartary, whom he calls Brutaches or Baſtarques. Other hiſtorians ſpeak of the [h] Naphtalites and Danites ſettled in Great Tartary, and of certain Sadducees on the frontiers of Thibet.

It is likewiſe believed, that the Jews of the ten tribes were diſperſed into the kingdom of Cachemire, a province belonging to the Mogul: but tho' this opinion be ſupported by ſome proofs which may be ſeen in the account given us by [i] Bernier; nevertheleſs we cannot thence infer that the Jews were maſters or ſovereigns in that country. We are alſo informed, that there are Jews [k] in a province of China, who have preſerved part of the Holy Writings, with the rites of their religion, and ſeveral of their traditions: but in their worſhip there appears a great mixture of Chineſe idolatry, and amongſt the reſt, that veneration

[b] Vide Buxtorf. Lib. Coſri. Iſraëlitæ inter populos ſunt inſtar cordis ad reliqua membra. [c] Amos.
[d] Ant. Jud. Lib. II. cap. v. [e] V. Baſnage Hiſt. of the Jews, Lib. VII.
[f] Page 272, 273. Edit. of Paris 1634. [g] Ibid. p. 377. [h] Vide Schikkard. in Perſic.
[i] Voyages Tom. II. Page 316. Edit. of 1709.
[k] Vide F. Gozani's letter in the vii. collection of Edif. Letters of ſome miſſionaries.

veneration they pay to Confutius. [l] We ſhall not enlarge upon the ſovereignty of the Jews in ſome particular provinces of Ethiopia; were we to give credit to the accounts of thoſe countries, this nation is very numerous there; as we may ſee in the Hiſtory of Ethiopia, written by Ludolphus.

Some too pretend to find Jews in America; tho' their reaſons for it [m] are exceeding frivolous; however, not only the Jews, but likewiſe the Chriſtians themſelves have given into this notion. You may ſee what Mr. Baſnage [n] has ſaid upon this head. 'Tis true indeed, one of our modern travellers tells us, [o] That the Indians upon the coaſts of Peru near the river Plata; have a great many cuſtoms in common with the Jews, as well as the Calchaques, who live between Peru and Tucuman; that they have a kind of circumciſion, and never eat ſwine's fleſh. Other authors are of opinion, that there is a great affinity between the worſhip and cuſtoms of the Jews, and thoſe of the inhabitants of Lapland. Were conjectures to be allowed, why might we not as well believe that the Chriſtians, and particularly the Catholics, had tranſmitted part of their worſhip and cuſtoms to the Americans: but it will appear in the ſequel of this work, how poſſible it might be, by ſtraining conjectures, to maintain that the inhabitants of Mexico and Peru have borrowed a great deal from Chriſtianity. Sure it is, that all thoſe general extravagant ſuppoſitions, grounded only upon a bare ſimilitude of rites and cuſtoms, can never prove, that a nation at ſo vaſt a diſtance from Aſia ſhould be deſcended from the Jews; nor is it leſs difficult to prove, that a captive nation, hated, deſpiſed, and oppreſſed by their neighbours, ſhould ever have found means to eſtabliſh themſelves in Tartary, &c. and by degrees become ſo powerful as to ſet up a government capable of making head againſt ſuch neighbours. However; a people, who [p] formerly looked upon themſelves as ſuperior to all the people on earth, may be pardoned a few fabulous relations, and [q] extravagant oſtentation: ſo that being trained up to miracles and prodigies, they imagined Providence neither could nor ought ever to ſpeak or act but in their behalf. We ſhall enlarge no farther upon the diſperſion of the Jews, and ſhall therefore refer the reader to [r] Mr. Baſnage's hiſtory of them.

[l] Vide A curious account of the preſent ſtate of the Jews taken from an Italian author, in Mr. Baſnage's hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. IX. chap. 38. However there is room to believe, that the Jews did not leave Aſia, till long after the revolution of the kingdom of Iſrael; they firſt ſettled in Media, Chaldæa, Armenia, &c. After which they paſſed into Europe by the way of Georgia, the Black Sea, and Muſcovy; and ſo ſpread into Tartary, towards the northern parts of India, and as far as the borders of China. The revolution of the kingdom of Judah only completed what the other had begun. They thus ſettled amongſt foreign nations, preſerving their worſhip and cuſtoms, from which they often degenerated, and at laſt wholly loſt, in proportion to the diſtance in which they were placed from their riſe. Theſe alterations, 'tis true, affected the Jews very much at firſt; however we are not to imagine any impoſſibility in their forgetting the misfortunes and deſolation of Sion. There was but a ſmall number of pious refugees, who vowed never to baniſh from their minds the remembrance of their beloved Jeruſalem.

[m] The Americans are ſaid to compute their year by moons; that they offer up the firſt fruits to their idols; and that the greateſt part of the people of America, but chiefly the inhabitants of Mexico and Peru, have a tradition of the deluge among them; that thoſe of Mexico obſerve a grand Jubilee; that ſeveral of the American nations obſerved circumciſion, &c. But this alone is not ſufficient to prove, that the people of America are originally Jews. It is very uſual for men of different nations to obſerve the ſame cuſtoms, tho' at the ſame time they never communicated their thoughts to each other. The manner of calculating the year by moons is ſo plain and natural, that it is not at all ſurpriſing, that people, who had no other method of calculation, ſhould have choſen that way to judge of the courſe of time. As for circumciſion, their remembring the deluge, &c. Theſe, I ſay, might as well prove, that they were deſcended from the Egyptians, the people of Colchis, or the Aſſyrians, as the Jews.

[n] Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. VII. chap. iv.

[o] Coreat's Voyages to the Weſt Indies. Tom. I. p. 291. Edit. of the year 1722.

[p] An inſtance of this appears in the hiſtory of the King of Cozar. Vide Baſnage's hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. IX. chap. i. and Buxtorf. Lib. Coſri.

[q] The Jews, notwithſtanding their weakneſs, ſtill conſider themſelves as the only nation beloved of God, as plainly appears by the works of the modern Rabbi's. It is difficult, or indeed impoſſible to lay aſide that pride which ſo noble an origin as that of the Jewiſh religion, inſpires them with.

[r] This hiſtory contains a great many curious things collected by the author concerning the ancient and modern eſtabliſhments of the Jews.

II. Idea. Of the Perſecutions which the JEWS have ſuffered ſince the laſt Revolution of JERUSALEM, under the Emperor VESPASIAN.

RELIGION for the moſt part ſeverely feels the decay and revolutions of kingdoms; and a man muſt have a more than ordinary courage, ſincerely to profeſs a religion deſpiſed, and out of faſhion by the prevalence of human paſſions. The deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Babylonians proved a fatal blow to the Jewiſh religion; and tho' a conſiderable number of worthy men returned from that captivity, with them alſo returned a great many wicked wretches, who completed thoſe evils which the impiety of their anceſtors had begun; and mingled their own vices with thoſe of the colonies, that the King of Babylon had left in Judea, the natural and general conſequence of a mixture of different nations. The Vulgar imagine, that thoſe ancient captives were all Saints, whoſe ſole employment was to ſing Pſalms day and night to the honour and glory of God; but this is a miſtaken opinion.

The Jews, after their return from captivity, begun inſenſibly to forſake the purity of their morals and religious worſhip: when at the ſame time they grew more zealous for the obſervance of their rites and ceremonies. Might I venture to hazard a reflection, I could ſay, that for want of miracles and prophecies, which hindred them from taking that for religion, which was no more than the outſide and pomp of it, the Jews gave blindly into the idle traditions of their punctilious doctors, who raiſed themſelves upon the ruins of prophecy, and thought the ſurface and externals of the law neceſſary for ſupporting the ſplendor of a difficult and burthenſome diſcipline, which was no longer upheld by miracles. The whole form of the Jewiſh religion was thereupon entirely changed, and the Jews aſſumed the maſk of hypocriſy: but however incommodious the ceremonies and cuſtoms of men may appear, ſtill are they infinitely more eaſy than the reformation of the heart.

In the midſt of this corruption it was, that Paganiſm triumphed over the weakneſs and decay of the Jewiſh religion, by the formidable power of the Romans; and this [r] corruption ſeemed to ſpread over the Jewiſh church, in proportion as the time of its deſtruction grew near; and it was chiefly this very corruption which ripened them into that rebellion, that brought upon them the deſtruction of their ſtate. The Roman Emperors, under whoſe government the Jews were obliged to live, treated them with great ſeverity: but after the deſtruction of their capital city, they were treated with much leſs regard. Domitian loaded them with taxes, which he exacted with ſo much rigour, as to cauſe ſuch as were [s] ſuſpected of Judaiſm to be ſtripped ſtark naked, in order to know by ocular demonſtration, whether they were Jews or not; and even confounded them in the perſecution which the Chriſtians ſuffered under him. Their revolt under Adrian involved them ſtill in freſh calamities; and if we may credit [u] Juvenal, they were at that time reduced to ſuch extremities as to turn fortune-tellers for a livelyhood: not that we are to believe the whole nation took up with that deſpicable imployment. For beſides, that Juvenal had an averſion to the Jews, there is room to ſuppoſe, that none but the rabble followed that way of living. However, their diſtreſſes having made them diſaffected; they attempted a rebellion under the command of Barcochebas, who aſſumed the title of Meſſiah; but being ſucceſsful, the Emperor Adrian cauſed a great number of the rebels to be put to death, expoſed them to public ſale, and forbad them to ſettle in Judea.

Our

[r] Vide Joſephus. [s] Suet. in Domitiano, chap. xii. [u] Sat. 6.

Our deſign is to preſent the reader with a pretty complete idea of the miſery of the Jewiſh nation, through every age, ſince the birth of Jeſus Chriſt. The Rabbi's aſſure us, that the Emperor Antoninus Pius had a favourable opinion of Judaiſm, and likewiſe, that Severus and his ſucceſſors treated the Jews with a great deal of lenity; at leaſt we do not find, that they were very ſeverely uſed by thoſe Pagan Emperors. But as ſoon as the Chriſtians came to be maſters of the Roman Empire, they did not ſhew ſo much favour to a nation, looked upon as the ſworn enemy to Jeſus Chriſt; they called to mind that they had crucified the Meſſiah, and thought themſelves bound to revenge the wrongs which he had ſuffered at their hands. Conſtantine began by laws that were pretty mild, but Conſtantius treated them with more ſeverity; and publiſhed a decree which made it death for any Jew to marry a Chriſtian. The Emperor Theodoſius indulged them ſo far as to grant them the exerciſe of their religion, which condeſcenſion ſeemed ſo dangerous to St. Ambroſe, that he employed all his eloquence, to prevent the evils he apprehended from it. The feſtival of the Jews in commemoration of their deliverance by Queen Eſther, was ſuppreſſed in the beginning of the fifth century: the Chriſtians believing, that they inſulted Jeſus Chriſt under the form of Haman; and the ſuppreſſing that feaſt was countenanced by the clergy. It is a pleaſure to mortify the enemies of one's religion, when the approbation of the prieſts go along with it; and it is in ſuch a caſe, no great difficulty to look upon it as one of the duties of Chriſtianity. We go on to the time of Juſtinian. This Prince would not ſuffer them to eat the Paſcal Lamb, and beſides prohibited the exerciſe of their religion in Africa; to force and authority, the Prince's charity and goodneſs was ſuperadded, and he determined to labour [w] at converting them. They afterwards were treated either better or worſe, according to the temper of Juſtinian's ſucceſſors; but Heraclius having openly declared himſelf their enemy, perſecuted them on many occaſions, and uſed violence to bring them over to the Chriſtian religion. [x] He even cauſed them to be perſecuted in the dominions of the neighbouring Princes; for at his requeſt the King of Spain put a great number of them to death, out of this religious principle, which allows a man to deſtroy the body in order to ſave the ſoul; nor were they much better treated in Spain, by ſome other of the Viſigoth Kings. Chilperic and Dagobert too, both Kings of France, ſet all engines to work for the converſion of the Jews, and had many of them baptiſed; that is, plunged them in water to make Chriſtians of them in outward appearance; for the ſigns and ceremonies employed to engage a man in any religion do not impreſs it on his heart. Hiſtory tells us, that Leo the Iſaurian likewiſe was full as zealous in the converſion of the Jews, and endeavoured to make them Chriſtians.

In the Weſt, the reign of Charlemagne, and afterwards of Lewis the Debonair, were favourable enough to the Jews: tho' indeed, not at all to the good liking of Agobardus biſhop of Lions. For notwithſtanding his great wiſdom and moderation, he uſed his utmoſt endeavours to exaſperate his Sovereign againſt them by his writings [y], which were ſomewhat paſſionate. They were notwithſtanding ſtill tolerated under the reign of Charles the Bald, tho' at the ſame time, in order to make them more odious to the people, they were from time to time accuſed of abetting the enemies of the [z] government.

The

[w] A holy Hermit, whoſe name was Simon of Emeſa, at this time converted a Jewiſh glaſs-maker in the following manner. This man was endeavouring to make a glaſs, and every time he blew, inſtead of a glaſs he made croſſes. Hereupon the Saint told him, that he never would ſucceed in making glaſſes, till he had firſt ſigned himſelf with the ſign of the croſs; immediately the workman believed the Saint, and was converted to the Chriſtian religion.

[x] Vide The Hiſtory of the Jews by Baſnage.

[y] See extracts hereof in the Hiſtory of the Jews by Mr. Baſnage.

[z] We ſhall only produce one inſtance hereof. In the beginning of the thirteenth century, the archbiſhop of Toledo plundered the Jews of his dioceſs, and performed this fine expedition at the head of the rabble; he gave it out, that the Jews had deſigned to deliver up that city to the Moors. It was about this time too, that the armies of the Cruſados then aſſembled near Toledo, upon their expedition for the conqueſt of the Holy Land, thought themſelves obliged (in honour to Jeſus Chriſt) to deſtroy thoſe, who had formerly crucified him; and put to death many thouſands of the Spaniſh Jews, and ſacrificed them as ſo many offerings agreable to God, in order to bring down his bleſſings on them. On the other hand the zealous Jews aſcribed theſe misfortunes to ſome particular formalities, which had not been ſtrictly obſerved, in their manner of making their Teffilins. Vide the Miſnah, Tom. I. p. 9.

The Jews were likewiſe ſupported by the Mahometans, when that religion began to gain ground; which from its birth made a vaſt progreſs by the ſucceſs of its arms, and the diviſions of the Chriſtians, and ſeemed to ſhew a great regard for Judaiſm: yet the Caliphs and other Mahometan Princes did not think themſelves always bound to favour the Jews. Cader perſecuted them ſeverely in order to get their eſtates, which were very conſiderable, into his hands, and this perſecution continued for many years. And about the ſame time, the Caliph Hakim, who reigned in Egypt, and ſet himſelf up as head of the religion of the Druſes, likewiſe treated the Jews with the ſame ſeverity.

The zeal of ſome Jews, who were for converting the Mahometans in the kingdom of Granada, brought upon them a violent perſecution about the middle of the eleventh century; and the followers of the Cruſade publiſhed by the Chriſtians of Spain, about the end of that century, would fain have exterminated all that profeſſed the Jewiſh religion, had the King of Caſtile complied with the ſollicitations of the zealous Nicholas of Valencia: but in Germany, the warmth of theſe holy confederates fully repaired the loſs of ſo many victims, and deſtroyed ſeveral thouſands of thoſe unfortunate wretches, at Worms, Triers, Spire and Mentz. About fifty years after this pious expedition, a Hermit named Rodolphus ſounded the alarm againſt them, pretending charity required the total deſtruction of the enemies of the Chriſtian religion. This man undoubtedly had aſſumed a miſſion very different from that of Jeſus Chriſt, who had brought peace into the world, and reproved his Apoſtles, who were for having the Samaritans deſtroyed by fire from heaven. The perſecutions of thoſe cruſades were general, and all Europe felt the dire effects of them.

We think we have ſomewhere taken notice, that the perſecutions which the Jews have ſuffered under the Mahometans, have neither been ſo general nor ſo violent as thoſe under the Chriſtians. Schach Abas, who reigned in Perſia about the end of the ſixteenth century, perſecuted them, in order to compel them to embrace the Mahometan religion; and in the ſeventeenth century, one of the prime miniſters of Perſia renewed the perſecution againſt them: but we do not find, that the ſpirit of perſecution amongſt the eaſtern people, was continually renewed by the ſanctified madneſs of their Derviſes. One of the hotteſt perſecutions which the Jews ſuffered in the Eaſt, reduced a great number of them to turn. The famous [a] Maimonides endeavoured to give his brethren ſome conſolation, and foretold them a deliverance, which never came to paſs. And tho' predictions of this kind (which are as ill grounded as thoſe of aſtrologers) ſerve only to deceive the credulous people, yet methinks our Rabbi's enthuſiaſm was here excuſable, ſince he thereby endeavoured to prevent the apoſtaſy of the Jews. They were again perſecuted in the Eaſt, [b] towards the end of the thirteenth century, and were as cruelly treated by the Cruſades, in all places thro' which they paſſed. But as for Raimond of Pennaforta [c], he was more charitable, and endeavoured to bring the Spaniſh Jews over by force of argument.

They were likewiſe inhumanly perſecuted under the reign of Ferdinand the Catholic, who baniſhed them his dominions in the year 1492, and allowed them only four months to ſettle their affairs in order to depart from Spain; which time was afterwards reduced to the ſpace of one month at the requeſt of a [d] zealous eccleſiaſtic. Eight hundred thouſand Jews then left Spain, who carried away with them immenſe riches, and of this prodigious number of fugitives, many periſhed either by ſhipwreck, hunger, or other calamities, and very often by the cruelty of thoſe to whom they applied for refuge. The Genoeſe were reſolved not to loſe this opportunity of ſignalizing their zeal for the Chriſtian religion; and the buſineſs was to relieve the hunger of theſe poor fugitives, and at the ſame time ſave the ſoul by means of the extreme neceſſities of the body. The Genoeſe

[a] He lived in Egypt in the 12. century.
[b] Raimondus of Pennaforta, was general of the Dominicans in the year 1255. His legend tells us, that he embarked on his cloak, and returned to Barcelona, to avoid the corruption of the King of Aagon's court.
[c] Chiefly in the country of Chorazan.
[d] Turrecremata.

Jeſe therefore went out to meet the Jews with a croſs in one hand, and bread in the other, which they diſtributed only to thoſe who paid homage to the croſs; and this may be called a Maſter-piece in the way of converſion. The ſoul of man is in ſuch hard ſubjection to the indigencies of the body, that the former generally finds it a very difficult taſk to bear up whilſt the latter is ſuffering; but the worſt of it is, that the ſoul has its relapſes, when once the ſufferings of the body are over.

We muſt here by no means omit the famous troop of ſhepherds at the beginning of the 14. century. Theſe fanatics, who were headed by a Prieſt and a Monk, committed ſtrange diſorders in [f] France, during the reign of Philip the Long, and chiefly deſtroyed the Jews without mercy. They alſo treated them as cruelly in Spain: but at laſt the Kings of France and Spain were forced to uſe their utmoſt endeavours to deſtroy thoſe wretches, who carried deſolation before them wherever they went; and the plague itſelf was reſolved to have a ſhare in the deſtruction of that wretched generation; tho unluckily indeed it proved yet more fatal to the Jews. They were accuſed of having bewitched and poiſoned the waters; but being cleared of that accuſation, they were only condemned to embrace the Chriſtian religion, upon pain of being burnt alive; and thus many thouſand of the Jews, who refuſed to turn Chriſtians, were condemned to the flames.

There was alſo a ſect called the Flagellants or Scourgers, who towards the middle of the 14. century diſtinguiſhed themſelves in Germany. Theſe people, who were more charitable and devout than the other Chriſtians of their time, took upon them to ſcourge their naked bodies with rods pointed with iron, in order to relieve ſouls in purgatory, and atone for the tranſgreſſions of men. Before they began the performance of ſcourging, they with a loud voice read their commiſſion, contained in a letter which God had written to them, and delivered to them by an angel, with expreſs command to perform the penance abovementioned: and they extended their commiſſion over the Jews, and thought themſelves bound to deſtroy and burn them, in order to make their penance more meritorious in the eye of God.

In Italy Pope John XXIII. declared himſelf an enemy to the Jews, and perſecuted them ſeverely; and, as the Vicar of Jeſus Chriſt, the Lord of ſouls, and Supreme Governour of the world, decreed they ſhould be converted to the Chriſtian faith.. He alſo ſent letters into Spain, requiring them to labour at the converſion of the Jews; and accordingly the regency of that kingdom converted a prodigious number of them: but thoſe who would not enter into the way of ſalvation, were either burnt alive or compelled to fly the country. Two of the Popes, Pius V, and Sixtus V, baniſhed them out of the eccleſiaſtical dominions, except Rome and ſome other cities, and the reaſon alledged for permitting them to live at Rome, was the hopes they were in, that by converſing with the Chriſtians they might by degrees be converted, and that the continual preſence of the Pope would inſpire them with better notions. This was a ſtrong and ſolid way of reaſoning; but why ſhould not the common father of all Chriſtians grant the ſame favour to Heretics?

I muſt own, that the Jews often brought themſelves into trouble, either by their uſuries, or other exceſſes which were full as criminal; thoſe exceſſes cauſed their ruin in France, during the reign of Philip le Bel, under whoſe government they grew ſo powerful and numerous, that the Jewiſh authors pretend, there were more Jews baniſhed France, than ever went up out of Egypt in the time of Moſes; but baniſhment and the loſs of their eſtates were not the only misfortunes the Jews had to bear, for many of them were condemned to be burnt.

Let us now ſee, whether they were treated with more lenity in England than in other Chriſtian countries. Henry III. endeavoured to bring them over to the faith without uſing any violence: but that Prince's neceſſities made him caſt an eye upon the Jews; his firſt miniſter called upon them for large ſums of money, and upon their refuſal, they were accuſed of murder, that the King might have a lawful pretence to their eſtates, and ſo they were obliged at laſt to give up a third part of their wealth to enjoy the reſt in quiet; heavy taxes were often laid on them during this reign, till about the end of the 13. century, when they were entirely baniſhed. The hiſtory of England mentions the hardſhips they, from time to time, ſuffered at Lincoln, and in other cities in that kingdom.

[f] It is ſaid, that they firſt began their diſorders in Spain, and there took their riſe.

In ſhort, the fortune and condition of the Jews have had their viciſſitudes, according to the zeal of the people, who were ſtirred up by the clergy, or to the political views of Chriſtian Princes. But the reformation of Luther and Calvin muſt have been favourable to them, they having ever ſince eſtabliſhed themſelves very advantageouſly in ſeveral Proteſtant ſtates. Holland forced, as it were, through the neceſſity of trade, to open her arms to all manner of ſects, received them in a more generous manner than any of the other Proteſtants, and the Jews at this very time are ſettled at Amſterdam; where they inhabit the fineſt part of that famous city.

What we have ſaid, is ſufficient to give the world an idea of the perſecutions which the Jews have ſuffered under the Chriſtians, in order to revenge the death of the Meſſiah; which perſecutions were however often grounded on flagrant villanies laid to the charge of the Jews by the wickedneſs of ſome particular men, and which the ignorant people, out of a blind zeal, puniſhed with all the fury that enthuſiaſm and bigotry is capable of.

III. Crimes imputed to the JEWS.

1. ONE of the greateſt crimes which the Jews are accuſed of, is the crucifying of children, which has often been laid to their charge, and it has even been affirmed, that they renew this ceremony [g] yearly. Naucler tells us, that it was a cuſtom amongſt the Jews to meet privately on Thurſday in Paſſion-Week, in order to ſacrifice a child out of hatred to the Chriſtian religion; and other [h] hiſtories ſay, that they were uſed to receive the heart of the ſacrificed child at their communion. The murder of a young man whoſe name was Richard, and imputed to them, was the cauſe of their baniſhment from France in the reign of Philip Auguſtus. We know not from whence this crime came to be ſo frequently imputed to the Jews all over Chriſtendom, ſo continually charged upon them by the hiſtorians of paſt ages, as even to tire their readers with it. It is very poſſible, that ſome of the Jews might be wicked enough to commit ſo horrid a villany; and this perhaps may be foundation ſufficient to charge the whole nation with it over and over again, with an addition of the moſt odious circumſtances. However, this pretended immolation of infants was of no ſmall advantage to the church, who under that pretence ſeiſed upon all the effects of the Jews.

Father Daniel ſeems to give credit to this [i] accuſation, and ſays, That towards the time of Eaſter they maſſacred the children of the Chriſtians whom they ſtole away, and made an impious ſacrifice of them on the day of their communion, out of hatred to Jeſus Chriſt, &c. But F. Daniel ought to have given us a deſcription of the Jewiſh communion; for it is proper for an author to have a perfect idea of thoſe things which he relates, if he propoſes to convince his readers.

Soon after the murder of young Richard, whom we mentioned before, the Jews aſſembled on the borders of the river Seine, where they crucified [k] another young boy, after [g] Vide The quotations in Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. IX. chap. xii.

[h] Albericus trium Fontium.
[i] Vide The Hiſtory of France, 4. Dutch Edit. Tom. II. page 574.
[k] It is reported too, that the Jews crucified a child of eight years old at Lincoln in England in the year 1255. at Prague in the year 1305. And at Saragoſſa towards the year 1250. This laſt was a young choriſter named ter ſcourging and crowning him with thorns. Albericus trium Fontium, a credulous and inconſiderable author, has charged them more than once with this crime.

2. The Vulgar have alſo accuſed the Jews of [l] Witchcraft and Sorcery; and upon this accuſation crowds of them were maſſacred in England about the end of the 12. century; for having dared to appear at the King's coronation, in oppoſition to an expreſs order to the contrary: but they were puniſhed for their curioſity; for the people having a notion, that the Jews intended to bewitch the King, ſhewed their zeal and affection to his Majeſty at the expence of Jewiſh blood. The commiſſion of one ſingle crime of this kind was ſufficient to charge them with it ten times over.

3. The Jews are likewiſe accuſed of having often abuſed the hoſt in an impious and prophane manner: for towards the end of the 14. century, they took a fancy to pierce one of them with the point of a knife; and it was affirmed, that the bleſſed and adorable hoſt confounded them in a moſt terrible manner by the blood flying out of it, into the faces of thoſe execrable wretches, who never could waſh it off. Nay, it even went farther, according to the account of the legendary writers of thoſe times; for the Jews having attempted to bury it under ground, in order to conceal their crime, it eſcaped out of their hands, and was ſeen aſcending up towards heaven, by a young cow-keeper who was in the fields watching his cows. The Jews all fell on their knees to worſhip the bleeding hoſt, and continued in this poſture ſo long, that the boy ran to acquaint the biſhop of what had happened; and the people being come to the place, they ſaw the hoſt with the wound ſtill bleeding; whereupon the Jews were [m] puniſhed after the ſevereſt manner, that the moſt tranſported zeal could invent; and a church was immediately built upon the very ſpot where the hoſt was ſeen; which afterwards became famous for its miracles, and for the extraordinary favours which it granted to thoſe who came thither to pay their devotions.

Another hoſt, which [n] a Jew had caſt into a pot of boiling water, produced as great a miracle as that we have been mentioning. Immediately after he had thrown the hoſt into the boiling water, there appeared to him a moſt beautiful child, whom this wicked and unbelieving Jew endeavoured to deſtroy; but the child avoided the blow by flying from one ſide of the boiler to the other, which wondrous eſcape converted the children of this impious Jew, who was burnt alive upon the impeachment of his own family [o].

4. They have likewiſe been accuſed of ſcourging crucifixes, and profaning images and croſſes; and indeed, we do not pretend to juſtify them intirely upon all theſe heads of accuſation; but I may venture to ſay, that it has been more than once imagined, that it was for the intereſt of religion to impute crimes to them. As for inſtance, when an Italian Monk, who, having hidden a crucifix under a dunghil, accuſed the Jews of committing that ſacrilege, and by this means cauſed them to be maſſacred [p] without mercy; ought we not to think this done from a charitable motive? Several of the converted Jews had relapſed into Judaiſm, and he had a mind to prevent their apoſtacy.

5. [q] They named Dominic, who was famous for many miracles. This little Saint came into the world adorned with the marks of his glory and ſufferings: being born with a crown on his head, and croſſes on his ſhoulders.

Eduxit nitidam matris de ventre coronam.
Atque humeros crucibus rutilos oſtroque micantes.

[l] The Crucifixion of infants was, according to the authors of thoſe days, a neceſſary conſequence of the paſſion, imputed to the Jews, for all magic operations. Some people pretend, that they made uſe of the infant's heart and blood mixed with a conſecrated hoſt, in the performance of their inchantments. But not only Jews have been accuſed of conjuration and magic. It is well known by thoſe who are acquainted with ancient and modern hiſtory, that this ſtale imputation has been revived from time to time on other occaſions; and that the very Chriſtians themſelves have more than once accuſed each other with it.

[m] They were burnt in a ſlow fire, and live dogs were thrown in with them. Vide The Hiſtory of the Jews by Mr. Baſnage, Lib. IX. chap. xiii.

[n] At the beginning of the 14. century.

[o] One of theſe profaned hoſts performed a moſt extraordinary miracle. The fact was this. A ſervant maid who had been to receive the ſacrament at Eaſter, preſerved the hoſt and brought it to her maſter, who was a Jew. This man put it into a purſe with ſeven pieces of ſilver, which the profaned hoſt turned into ſeven other hoſts. Vide The writers of thoſe times.

[p] This ſtory is related upon the teſtimony of a Jew, by Mr. Baſnage, Lib. IX. chap. xix.

5. [q] They were likewiſe accuſed of having poiſoned the waters of ſeveral ſprings and rivers; and this cauſed a prodigious number of them to be maſſacred about the middle of the 14. century. It is reported, that the waters were in general poiſoned throughout Spain; it is pretended too, that the Jews, who undertook this with the aſſiſtance of the lepers of thoſe days, were bribed by the King of Granada, who was a Mahometan. The Jews were again accuſed of the ſame crime ſometime after, and were ſaid to have employed beggars to do it, who threw a compoſition of nails and fleſh of executed malefactors, &c. into the wells and fountains.

6. The Jews were indeed often guilty of treaſons and rebellions, whereof we have inſtances in hiſtory; and without going back to the firſt ages of the Chriſtian church, it is very ſure, that the Jews betrayed the Emperor Juſtinian in favour of Coſröes King of Perſia. The author of the Life of St. Theodardus ſays, that they invited over [r] Abderamis a Saracen Prince into Languedoc, by which means a vaſt number of Chriſtians were deſtroyed; but little regard is paid the author of that life, very incorrect, and written chiefly upon [s] hearſay: tho' they were afterwards much oftner accuſed of thoſe crimes; for ſome writers aſſure us, that they aſſiſted the Normans in ravaging Aquitain; nor was it for want of good will, if they did not often raiſe inſurrections under the command of thoſe impoſtors, who aſſumed the name and character which they refuſed to acknowledge in Jeſus Chriſt the Meſſiah of the Chriſtians.

We have here pointed out the chief articles of accuſation brought againſt the Jews, which we think ſufficient, without mentioning the uſuries, and other miſdemeanours laid to their charge in the ways of trade.

IV. Their IMPOSTORS and falſe MESSIAH'S.

THE ſubject is too extenſive to be purſued through all the ages of the church. Hakem is one of thoſe whom we ſhall here mention: he inſiſted upon the regard due not only to a man inſpired by God, as were the ancient Prophets, but alſo to one immediately united to him by the ſtrongeſt tye that could poſſibly be conceived. We are told, that in order to eſcape the cloſe purſuit of the Saracens, he threw himſelf into a large tub full of Aqua Fortis, in hopes that his body would be totally conſumed, and ſo to make the people entertain that opinion of him after his death, which he had endeavoured to inſtill into them during his life; but to the great misfortune of this impoſtor his hair was found [t] amongſt the Aqua Fortis; and it might be added, that his fat was found too in the ſame place, for Aqua Fortis cannot diſſolve it.

The famous Zedechias, a Jewiſh phyſician, uſed to divert the Court of Lewis the Debonnaire with ſwallowing carts loaded with hay, together with the horſes and driver, as ſome hiſtorians tell us; but in my opinion a man muſt have an uncommon faith, and an uncommon ſhare of it too, to believe it.

Another impoſtor appeared in Perſia in the year 1138, and cauſed an inſurrection among the Jews, who took him for the Meſſiah; but this impoſtor met with as little ſucceſs as that of an Arabian, who in the year 1167, pretended to be the fore-runner of the Meſſiah, and had a great number of followers; for they both were deſtroyed, being of

[q] Faſcic. Temp.

[r] Vide Catel Hiſtory of Languedoc, Lib. III. page 518.

[s] Partim fidelium narratione, Ibid. p. 523.

[t] Empedocles attempted to have almoſt the ſame thing believed, for he threw himſelf into the flames of mount Etna, to the end, that the people upon his diſappearing ſo on a ſudden might imagine he was become a God: but his ſhoes which either he had left behind him or had been thrown up by the force of the flames upon the ſide of the Volcano, ſoon diſcovered the extravagance of this impoſtor. Both theſe events bear a great affinity to each other, and in all probability are both invented ſtories; but that of Empedocles is of a very ancient date.

of no other advantage to the Jews, than that of leaving them to bear the punishment of their deceit.

Another Jewish impostor appeared in Moravia toward the end of the 12. century, and was followed by his own nation; this man boasted to have the art of vanishing out of sight whenever he pleased: but the Jews intimidated by the threats that were published against them upon his account, themselves delivered him up[t]. The impostor whose name was Eldavid, was put to death by his father-in-law, after having caused the Jews of Persia to rise in rebellion in the year 1199, or 1200.

The famous [u] Sabathai Tzevi was one of the most complete impostors that ever appeared amongst the Jews. He began to act his part in the year 1666, and chose a Jew whose name was Levi for his companion, who pretended to be the Prophet Elias. Part of the Jewish nation were taken in the snare, and flattered themselves with the hopes of seeing their laws and religion restored by the means of these impostors; but they met with a strong opposition from the Jews of Smyrna, who refused to acknowledge them, and even carried the affair so far as to condemn Tzevi to death. However, the false Messiah found means to elude the sentence, and taking advantage of the fear of some, and the weakness of others, had the assurance to take upon him the title of King of the Kings of Israel. After all this he was indiscreet enough to put himself into the power of his enemies; for after blotting the name of the Ottoman Emperor out of their prayer-books, and distributing the dignities of his new kingdom of Israel among his new subjects, he set out for Constantinople, where the Grand Signior had him seized; and some time after beheaded, tho' he had embraced the Mahometan religion. This man had some good qualities, he seemed humble and chaste; his discourses were pathetic, and he very much affected a plain manner of expressing himself.

From his ashes as it were sprung another false Messiah named Daniel, who in the year 1703, [x] asserted that Tzevi was not dead; that indeed he had concealed himself for a time; but that he would soon appear again, &c. This fanatic had found means to gain the reputation of an extraordinary man; for by uttering a few words, he contrived it so as to raise himself up into the air with such a force and rapidity, that one would have believed some supernatural power assisted him in the operation; and likewise by a slight known to such as are skilled in optics, caused a fiery globe to appear, which moved from place to place, and followed his motions, till at last it disappeared, after having remained some time upon his breast. We know not what fate afterwards attended this man; all that we are informed of concerning him, is, that he was only banished from Smyrna.

V. The Punishments inflicted on the JEWS; and the Badges they have been obliged to wear, as a Distinction from CHRISTIANS, &c. The Laws of Princes, and Decrees of the Church against them.

WE find no precedent either in ancient or modern history, whereby any religion or people have been distinguished in so odious a manner as Jews and Judaism. As to the visible marks of reprobation in these distinctions, that we leave to divines to discover; and shall pass on to those examples which history has transmitted to us.

[t] Vide Basnage's History of the Jews, Lib. IX. chap. xi.
[x] Vide Busnage's History of the Jews, Lib. IX. chap. 27.
[u] Vide Joh. Leusd de Pseudo-Messiis.

The Caliph [y] Giafar Sadek was the author of that famous law both againſt the Jews and Chriſtians, whereby the children of thoſe people, who ſhould become Muſulmen, were to be the ſole heirs to the eſtates of their family, which law was more prejudicial to them than the moſt violent perſecutions.

Abdalla, who ordered that the Chriſtians ſhould ſhave their faces and wear high crowned hats, did not ſhew more lenity to the Jews; for he cauſed them all equally to be marked in the hand. But the Chaliphs went farther, and in proceſs of time [z] obliged the Jews to wear a badge of yellow cloth upon their garments, in order to diſtinguiſh them from the Muſulmen.

[a] Motawakel made an order that the Jews ſhould be diſtinguiſhed from the Muſulmen, by wearing a leathern girdle. And he likewiſe deprived them of all employments, forbad them the uſe of horſes, and allowed them mules and aſſes only. All his laws which (as we are informed) are in force to this day, were made to expoſe the Jews to ſhame and ignominy; but there is ſomething ſtill more ignominious in the manner, wherein the Emperor Adrian treated them after the rebellion of the impoſtor Barchochebas: for he decreed that their ears ſhould be cut off. Ptolomy Philopator had long before made a law whereby all Jews were to have the figure of an ivy leaf marked on their body with a hot iron, which was the plant conſecrated to Bacchus; and this as a demonſtration of their having loſt their liberty; for the deſign of that Prince was to bring them over to his religion, by the fear of a puniſhment, ſo much the more ſhameful as ſlavery was the conſequence of it.

There is ſomething yet more remarkable in the manner of treating the Jews at Toulouſe in the 8. century: for it was the cuſtom there to buffet them three times a year at the door of one of the churches, appointed for that purpoſe by the biſhop; and it was the chief man amongſt them, who was thus treated in the name of their whole nation. The riſe of this cuſtom may be ſeen in [b] Catel, and in Mr. Baſnage's hiſtory. The inhabitants of Beziers were formerly uſed to purſue the Jews [c] with ſtones, from the eve of Palm-Sunday till the laſt day of Eaſter; [d] but at laſt they bought off this treatment, by a fine to be paid to the biſhop.

In the Eaſt, the Caliph [e] Hakim, ſaid to be the author of the ſect or religion of the Druſes, made a law that the Jews ſhould be obliged to wear a particular mark, whereby they might be known.

It

[y] He lived in the year 770.

[z] In Perſia the Jews actually wear a piece of ſtuff on their garments, as Thevenot tells us. It is, ſays he, a ſmall ſquare piece of ſtuff about two or three fingers broad, that is fixed on their Caba or garment, which they wear on their ſtomach, about two inches above their waſte; it is no matter what kind of ſtuff it is made of, provided the colour be different from that of the garment upon which it is fixed.

[a] This Chaliph lived in the year 846.

[b] This cuſtom was afterwards aboliſhed, and a fine ſet the Jews at eaſe. Violence in matters of religion, is more agreable to the taſte of the people, who always conſider whatever is done againſt the enemies of their belief as acts of real religion; but the tribute paid by the Jews, ſeemed more glorious, and proved of greater uſe to the church; the Jews, however, looked upon both the tribute and the buffeting as ſo many perſecutions. The deſign indeed was good, and every thing was performed in the name of the Lord; but the Jews might very well object againſt many of the proceedings of the Chriſtians, and on this occaſion deny, that they were influenced by the Spirit of God, becauſe their behaviour was a contradiction to the morality of the Goſpel. And indeed, they choſe an ill time to recriminate upon them with falſhoods and calumnies, whilſt the viſionary empty notions, and ridiculous employments of the Monks, were ſufficient matter for reproach. But above all things, they ought not to have forgot thoſe drawers, which the Nuns of Treves made after a certain manner, in order to inſpire the men with criminal deſires. I muſt own, the ſubject is too particular and too ludicrous not to mention it, when a man is obliged to enter into diſpute with an ill-natured and partial diſputant.

[c] They were not ſatisfied with purſuing them in this manner; but they likewiſe broke their windows and beat down the doors of their houſes, and often even ſtoned them in the ſtreets; and thus the people prepared themſelves for the communion at Eaſter. At laſt one of their biſhops could not ſuffer ſuch diſorders, and therefore redeemed the Jews from the tyranny of the people by a fine of about four marks of ſilver, which agreement between the biſhop and the people was concluded in the year 1160.

[d] Vide Catel's Hiſtory of Languedoc. Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. IX. chap. iii. The cuſtom of buffeting the chief of the Jews, which we mentioned, ſubſiſted for many centuries.

[e] This Chaliph reigned in the beginning of the 11. century.

It is thought, that in the 12. century a remarkable ceremony took its riſe, which the Jews are obliged to obſerve at the inſtallation of a new Pope. [f] They are to wait for the Pontif on the road to St. John de Lateran, and there on their knees preſent him with a copy of their law; at the receiving of which he thus addreſſes them, " I revere the law which " God gave to Moſes, but condemn the falſe ſenſe you give it, by in vain expecting the " Meſſiah, who has been long come, and whom the church believes to be Jeſus Chriſt " our Lord." And of the riſe of this cuſtom, take the following account. When Pope Innocent II. upon his retreat to France, made his entry into Paris, they went out to meet him with great ſolemnity, and in a very reſpectful manner preſented him with the holy books of their law, which the vicar of Jeſus Chriſt received from them.

It was decreed in one of the Councils [g], that the Jews ſhould wear a wheel upon their breaſt, to which ſome of the other Councils added capes, and ſleeves as long as the cape [h], but without plaits; and in the beginning of the 12. century, they were ordered to wear red hats at Toulouſe and all thereabouts. The uſe of the wheel was confirmed in the 14, to which was added the horn, as a badge for the female ſex of all ages among them; and Philip the Bold ordered them to wear a horn upon their hats, which proved a fatal diſtinction to them; for by thus diſtinguiſhing them from the Chriſtians, they were expoſed to the inſults of the populace. They were alſo forbidden bathing wherever the Chriſtians bathed. King John reſolved to have them diſtinguiſhed by their colours, and ordered them to wear red and white. [i] One of the Councils in the 14. century decreed the women, as well as the men, ſhould wear a red wheel. The hat with a horn on it was ordered for the badge of the men in ſeveral places, an order which was confirmed by the Council of Saltsbourg in 1420. The Council of Cologne in [k] 1442, preſcribed the wheel to be worn by Jews on all cloths made of yellow threads, and the women wore two blue ſtrings on their head. Two [l] Popes dreſſed up the heads of the men in a yellow hat, and of the women in a veil of the ſame colour, a faſhion which the men follow at Avignon; but at Venice the hat is red, and as it is very common to turn that into an ornament, which was originally a diſgrace, the Venetian Jews make their hats of the fineſt ſcarlet lined with black Taffeta. In the Eaſt, the high crowned hat, the turban, and violet coloured ſhoes are part of the Jewiſh dreſs at Conſtantinople, to the end, that the faithful followers of Mahomet and Ali may be known from all other unbelievers, as well circumciſed as uncircumciſed; they are beſides in the utmoſt contempt amongſt the Mahometans. Cardinal Borromeo, archbiſhop of Milan, canonized by the church, forbad the Jews to appear without their yellow hat and veil, to ſtir out of their houſes for three days before Eaſter, or to live near any church; and before his time, the Council of Baſil [m] had decreed moſt of the ſame things. At the cloſe of this article let us not omit the ill complexion of the Jews, their bad ſcents, and the blood with which their children come into the world. Theſe are viſible marks of the reprobation of this people, and of God's wrath againſt them, if we are to hearken to ſome of the Chriſtians. A Chriſtian poet * tells us, that their ill ſmell is taken away by the grace of baptiſm.

The reſidence of the Jews at Augsbourg, whilſt their affairs oblige them to ſtay there, is ſold them very dear, for they pay a German florin for every hour; nor are they allowed to ſtay longer than three at Trent. Formerly they might ſtay three whole days there, but this was intended as a chaſtiſement upon them, for their vigorous defence of Buda againſt the Emperor. And they are thus puniſhed for their fidelity to their Prince; for ought they not to have known, that there is none due to infidels?

We

[f] Cum Pontifex ad montem Jordanum pervenit, Judæi illi obviam veniunt, genuflexi legem Pontifici offerunt, linguâ Hebraicâ legem laudantes & hortantes Pontificem ut illam veneretur. Pontifex verò illis auditis reſpondet, ſanctam legem laudamus & veneramur, utpote quæ a Deo Moyſi tradita eſt; obſervationem verò vetam, & vanam interpretationem damnamus & improbamus, quia ſalvatorem, quem adhuc fruſtrà exſpectatis, Apoſtolica fides jampridem advenisſe docet, &c. V. Sacrar. Ceremon Eccleſ. Rom. Lib. I. fol. xvii. Edit. 1516 fol.

[g] That of Narbonne in 1227.

[h] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. IX. chap. xv.

[i] That of Ravenna in 1311.

[k] The Jews of Francfort were alſo obliged to wear it.

[l] Paul IV, and Pius V.

[m] In 1434.

* Avitus.

We ſhall not enter into a minute account of all the heavy taxes at different times laid upon them; [n] the unjuſt releaſe of debts which any Chriſtian had contracted with them, the permiſſion of withholding their wages from them, and of killing them with impunity; the injunction laid upon them to make no defence when attacked in their religion; [o] the rape of their children, &c. but it will not be amiſs to ſay one word of ſome of the ordinances of the church concerning them.

[p] One of the Councils enjoins them to keep their houſes ſhut up at the approach of the hoſt, and another to ſay nothing contemptuous of the Virgin Mary, the ſaints of the church, or of the Chriſtian religion; which two decrees muſt be highly approved for their wiſdom; for if it is never allowable to inſult or give offence to ſuch as are of a different religion from our own, certainly it is leſs ſo to ſuch as profeſs a religion which is not the prevailing. The ſame approbation ought to be given to thoſe decrees enjoining all Jews to reſpect the miniſters of the church, not to intermarry with Chriſtians, not to poſſeſs any Chriſtian ſlaves, nor to diſinherit their children for going over to Chriſtianity: but we are far from ſaying the ſame thing of thoſe regulations, which forbad a Chriſtian under any indiſpoſition to have recourſe to a Jewiſh phyſician, or to take a Jew as a witneſs, though acknowledged to be a man of ſtrict probity, and to have no other blemiſh than that of circumciſion; and of thoſe which releaſed a Chriſtian from any debt contracted with a Jew, provided the former made oath that it was an uſurious contract.

VI. Saints of the Jewiſh Church, ſince the ſecond Deſtruction of JERUSALEM; and ſeveral Miracles performed by them.

A Fruitful ſource of prodigies and miracles are to be found in the hiſtory of JOSEPH Ben Gorion, who may very juſtly be called the [q] Jacobus a Voragine of the Jews: but without going thither for them, we ſhall barely confine ourſelves to a few remarkable inſtances.

Maimonides is too noted an example to be omitted. The birth of this Jewiſh doctor in 1131, was owing to a reſolution of his father to break thro' that celibacy in which he had before determined to live. However Maimon, the father of Moſes Maimonides, would not venture upon any thing in ſo weighty an affair, without ſome particular expreſs revelation. He flattered himſelf, that an order from heaven might well diſcharge him from a vow raſhly entered into; and his hopes were not in vain: for he learnt in a dream, that he was from that time allowed to marry, and the daughter of a butcher was pointed out to him in his ſleep, who was the mother of Maimonides, and died in bringing him into the world. The father, who had taken a liking to matrimony, ſoon brought young Moſes home a mother-in-law of a very ill temper. He was beaten and ill uſed, whereupon making his eſcape to the top of the ſynagogue, he there fell aſleep, and from a dull heavy lad before, became at his waking a man of parts and wit. Nor was this the firſt miracle of the kind. Heſiod, a mean ſhepherd of Bœotia, had, eighteen hundred years before Maimonides's birth, dreamt that he was become a poet, and upon waking found himſelf really ſo. This Jew had afterwards a ſhare in the Sultan of Egypt's favour, which drew upon him the jealouſy of the Mahometan phyſicians. They forced him to drink poiſon, preſuming that Maimonides's ſkill muſt give way to the ſtrength of it. He ſwallowed it without receiving any harm, and on his ſide killed ten of thoſe phyſicians by forcing them to undergo the ſame trial.

He

[n] In 1391. in the reign of Wenceſlas.
[o] See the citations in Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. IX. chap. xv.
[p] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. IX. chap. xiv.
[q] Archbiſhop of Genoa, and author of the Golden Legend, he lived towards the end of the 13. century.

He was then accuſed of an attempt upon the Sultan's life, and thereupon ordered to have his veins opened; but he ſaved his life by a vein unknown to every body but himſelf, which none of our moſt ſkilful anatomiſts have ſince diſcovered. So long as this vein remains unopened, there can be no effuſion of blood. Whilſt Maimonides was going to the grave, a gang of thieves ſet upon the proceſſion, which took to their heels, and left the dead corps, which the thieves endeavoured to throw into the ſea; but the wretches little thinking they had to do with a ſaint, could not compaſs their deſign of carrying him away.

Rabbi [r] Juda the Pious was very near dying before he was born, [s] a hay cart having like to have cruſhed his mother, then with child of him, to pieces, who unfortunately happened to be between the cart and the wall; but God commanded the walls to give back, ſo that the big bellied woman had room to ſave herſelf in the hollow of it.

The Jews honour the memory of their ſaints and martyrs by a ſort of Diptics[t]. Amongſt theſe we meet with one Iſaac de Caſtro of Tartas, whom the Portugueſe burnt alive at * Lisbon, he ſuffering with great conſtancy. The Jews of that nation at Amſterdam look upon him as a ſaint. Of this number is reckoned one Sylva a phyſician, whom the Spaniards would have burnt too; but a violent tempeſt put out the fire. This miracle is one of thoſe of the moſt modern. The chains fell from the feet and hands of another going to be burnt in Portugal, and he had the good fortune to eſcape, or rather vaniſh, by the help of an inviſible power. Another named Lopez de Vera, who turned Jew, and afterwards called himſelf Juda the Believer, ſuffered burning with ſo great a conſtancy, and ſuch ſtrong aſſurances of his eternal ſalvation, that his judges were almoſt confounded at it. By theſe examples one may judge that the conſtancy of martyrs is not always the effect of divine aſſiſtance, and that ſtrong prejudices often inſpire men with a wonderful intrepidity. Wherefore it is no wonder to find martyrs of all religions. Shall we call it fanaticiſm, paſſion, obſtinacy, or hypocriſy, that beſtow on man a ſupernatural ſtrength, and make him forget all tenderneſs for himſelf? Be it what it will, we ſhall not determine any thing in the caſe, that we may not ſeem to reflect on or weaken that famous deciſion, that the cauſe, and not the ſuffering, makes the martyr: but ſure it is, that martyrs to morality are very rare, [u] whilſt thoſe to tenets regarded as the foundation of religions, are innumerable. However, let us ſee an inſtance or two more of the ſaints of the Jewiſh church, and of their miracles.

The uprightneſs of [w] Jochanan was very exemplary. He always took care not to be above four cubits diſtant from ſome houſe of prayer, when he was to make water. He celebrated all feſtival days with great devotion, and the better to ſolemnize the Sabbath, drank to exceſs. The irregularity of ſuch a devotion is eaſily ſeen.

When [x] Juda the Holy was interred, day was prolonged, and night kept back, till each man was returned home to light the lamp deſtined for the day of their Sabbath. The Daughter Voice pronounced all that had attended the funeral, ſaved, except one ſingle perſon who died of deſpair. This Daughter Voice was generally a good or bad omen, drawn from the firſt words ſpoken, by the firſt perſon that was heard, or met by the conſulter in his way; theſe were reſpected as an oracle of heaven, and there have been Jews whoſe fanaticiſm has riſen to ſuch a pitch as to prefer ſuch chance words to the prophecies of the Old Teſtament. It was in the ſame manner that the Heathens ſought their deſtiny in the verſes of Homer and Virgil, and that ſome ſuperſtitious Chriſtians formerly enquired the ſucceſs of their enterprizes in the bible, opened at a venture in two or three different places.

Eccleſiaſtical dignities and employments being naturally ſuperior to all other, it is not difficult to conceive how the perſuaſion obtained, that God diſtinguiſhes them by certain [r] He lived in the 12. century. [s] At Worms. [t] This is the cuſtom in ſeveral places. * In 1647.

[u] It were no difficulty both in ancient as well as modern hiſtory to meet with perſons, who have had very imperfect notions of their duty, and whoſe virtue has been very moderate; who yet on occaſion have been ſufficiently ſtored with blind faith and prejudices, to be able to ſuffer death with conſtancy.
[w] He lived in the time of the Emperor Veſpaſian. [x] He lived under Antoninus Pius.

particular marks of his favour. To be a prieſt or a doctor is ſufficient to be thought the depoſitary of the ſupreme Being, and what is ſtill more, to be perſuaded that one is ſo. Thence the miraculous operations aſcribed to thoſe religious functions. The Traditionaries were formerly among the Jews of the number of thoſe privileged perſons, being the conſervators of their traditions, and having the care of handing them down to lateſt poſterity. Theſe traditions conſiſt in an infinite number of holy trifles, and inconſiderable circumſtances, which yet are ſo neceſſary to the faithful Jew, that without them, it is impoſſible for the law of God given to Moſes to direct him in the path to heaven; it was but juſt, that the cares of ſo arduous an employment ſhould be ſweetened with many extraordinary prerogatives, and accordingly thoſe excellent guides enjoyed that of working miracles; they had an abſolute power over the Devil; they put a ſtop to and diſſolved magical operations; they foretold or foreſaw the death of the ſick; but we ſhall purpoſely omit the names and miracles of theſe Traditionaries, they being to be found in the Talmud.

VII. Sects of the JEWS.

THERE are two ſects which the Jews look upon as ſchiſmatics, heretics, and excommunicated, The Samaritans, and Caraïtes.

SAMARITANS.

WE ſhall make the following addition to what F. Simon has ſaid of them in the preceding Diſſertations.

If we may give any credit to the relation [y] of a Samaritan of Naplouſe, the ancient Sichem, "The Samaritans there conſiſt of five or ſix families, who have perpetuated themſelves in it, and notwithſtanding the miſeries and revolutions they have undergone, have ſtill the ſatisfaction of ſeeing the religion they profeſs never wholly ſtifled at Naplouſe. The Samaritan added, that he was in hopes that as long as mount Garizim ſtood, God would have adorers upon it; that indeed, by a juſt vengeance on the ſins of his people, he had permitted the deſtruction of the temple there, to which their forefathers went up to ſacrifice to the true God; but that the followers of his religion had never yet been deprived the pleaſure of often viſiting that mountain, there to ſend up their prayers and wiſhes for the re-eſtabliſhment of this holy temple, and to offer to God at leaſt a heart inviolably fixed in a religion, which he took to be the moſt ancient, as well as the moſt holy religion in the world." The author of the relation whence theſe words are taken, travelled in 1697, and 1698, and if the teſtimony of the Samaritan be true, it may be concluded, there is neither temple nor ſacrifice on mount Garizim. However, we doubt whether it be exact.

1. The Samaritans curſe Mahomet, which curſe is at the end of a chronicle they call the book of Joſhua, but Mahomet's name is written in Samaritan, that the Turks may have no knowledge of a curſe ſo offenſive to their religion.

2. They mortally hate the other Jews, which is returned upon them.

3. The name of [z] Jehovah we know is not to be pronounced by a Jew. Neither is it by the Samaritans, who uſe the word Sema inſtead of it.

4. They have a confuſed idea of the Meſſiah, but we are informed they make honourable mention of him, without running into abuſes againſt the Chriſtians.

5. In

[y] Travels to mount Sinai and Jeruſalem by Moriſon, printed in 1704.

[z] Formerly that Jew, who ſhould pronounce the word Jehovah, ran the riſque of his life, nor did the High Prieſt himſelf pronounce it but once a year in the temple at Jeruſalem.

5. In their computation of years, they follow the Mahometan Hegyra.

6. They deny the exiſtence of angels, and explain ſuch paſſages as mention them by the word Command or Virtue, [a] God ſent an angel: that is a Command. The angel of God did ſuch a thing, that is God's Virtue wrought, &c. Yet ſome of the learned inſiſt that the Samaritans really believe the exiſtence of them.

7. The High Prieſt is judge of the people, and all things are decided by his opinion, and at this tribunal. Their High Prieſts too pretend to be deſcended from Aaron.

8. They are more rigid obſervers of the Sabbath than the Jews.

9. They proſtrate themſelves on the earth in their adorations to God on mount Garizim, which they call The Houſe of God.

10. They ſacrifice their Paſchal Lamb on mount Garizim only, and it is dreſſed with bitter herbs, and eaten with leavened bread.

11. Their 7. month begins with the feaſt of Trumpets, and ten days after follows that of expiation. [b] Their faſt is more ſtrict than the Jewiſh.

12. Their feaſt of Tabernacles is on the 15. of the ſame month, when they ſet up tents, and divert themſelves for ſeven days, and on the eighth and laſt of the feſtival, a hymn is ſung to the praiſe of God.

13. They carefully examine whether the conjunction of the ſun and moon be at night, or in the day before noon; and if it falls out before ſix a clock, that day is the firſt of the month; but if at ſix, or a little after, the month does not begin till the next day. If the conjunction be lunar, the month is but of 29. days, and 30. if it be ſolar. If the new moon falls on the 11. of the month [c] Adar, a month is intercalated, and they reckon 13. to that year, and the month immediately following is the firſt of it. But if the month begins on 12. of Adar, or ſome few days after, it is the firſt month of the year, which then conſiſts of 12. months only.

14. On the third and fourth day they pour what they call the water of ſeparation on every thing that has been defiled by the touch of women; and this they do for ſeven days on a woman, who has any fluxion. She who has lain in of a ſon ſeparates for 40. days, and 80. of a daughter.

15. They believe a general judgment, which is to be a day of vengeance to the wicked, and of peace and reward to the good.

Moſt of theſe remarks are taken [d] from ſome letters written by the Samaritans about the year 1690.

CARAITES.

THERE are Caraïtes in the Eaſt, and in Poland and Lithuania too, whom the reſt of the Jews often purpoſely confound with the Sadducees; and endeavour to make them odious under the name of [e] Cutheans or Samaritans, Epicureans, &c. Theſe Caraïtes are much leſs ſuperſtitious than other Jews.

1. They reject the pretended [f] Oral Law delivered to Moſes on mount Sinai; and in this regard behave towards the Jews as the Calviniſts do towards the Chriſtians. This Oral Law of Moſes is a commode invention, contributing towards bearing up the yoke of ſo many trifling punctilio's, which their Doctors have introduced into the Jewiſh church, and which they have inſenſibly handed down and made to paſs as eſſential to religion.

2. The conſequence whereof is, that theirs is a more refined Judaiſm, adhering cloſely and even ſcrupulouſly to the text of the Scripture, upon pretence that [g] tranſlations, however

[a] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. II. chap. ii. [b] See above F. Simon. [c] It anſwers to February.
[d] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews; and Dr. Prideaux's Connexion. [e] Buxtorf. Synag. Jud. Lib. I. chap. i.
[f] Or Tradition. F. Simon ſoftens this article extremely, and pretends they reject only ſuch as are falſe, or doubtful. See Art. iv. and v.
[g] Yet they read the Scripture and their Liturgies in the language of the country where they reſide; at Conſtantinople ever juſt, ſtill always weaken the force of the original, They require a blind faith, and allow of no doubts upon the exiſtence of God, or the divinity of the law.

3. The Caraïtes inſiſt that the High Prieſt or ſome Prophet (that is ſome man of ſkill and experience, for it does not ſeem conſiſtent that prophecy ſhould be here concerned) had the care of appointing the feſtivals and years, during the continuance of the Jewiſh ſtate: whereas the reſt of the Jews make it the proper buſineſs of the Prince of the Sanhedrim. The latter inſiſting upon the neceſſity of aſtronomical calculations to regulate their years by, and the former upon the firſt appearance of the new moon, rejecting all calculation and intercalations as not of Moſes's inſtitution; all this may be ſeen more at length in Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. II. chap. xvi. It cannot be doubted, but that this conduct of the Caraïtes is owing to a ridiculous prejudice; for Moſes's character could poſſibly have no influence to hinder the bringing a cuſtom, of itſelf indifferent as to religion, to perfection. But many dangerous ſuperſtitions are to be aſcribed to this blind reſpect paid to ancient errors, and founders of cuſtoms without knowledge or examination of them.

4. The Caraïtes differ from the reſt of the Jews in ſome points of inceſt, and prohibited degrees of marriage.

5. It is their opinion, that God's attributes are God himſelf, and that as a cauſe he often produces different effects by one and the ſame operation; that he influences all human actions, and lends them his aſſiſtance, but ſo as it depends on themſelves to determine. Every thing is in the hand of God, except the fear of God. Health and ſickneſs, which they aſcribe to the ſoul, as diſpoſed to comprehend or not comprehend truth, is a notion of the Stoics.

6. They believe there are puniſhments and rewards after this life.

7. They expect the Meſſiah, but are againſt loſing any time in calculating his coming, believing it may be delayed upon account of their ſins, and of the ſlowneſs of Saturn's periodical revolution, which is [h] the ſtar of the Sabbath, and of the Jewiſh nation. It is a queſtion to be aſked them, what relation there is between the planet of Saturn and the Meſſiah, and how they are ſure that Saturn preſides over their Sabbath, or ſheds his influence over the Jewiſh nation?

8. They ſuffer no image, ſtatue, or other figure in their houſes, and are againſt all ſorts of traffic.

9. In praying they turn their face towards Jeruſalem. They compoſe themſelves in their meditations, and at that time endeavour to avoid all diſtraction; and pray in Hebrew, imagining that tongue really holy.

10. They are ſaid to practiſe morality much more ſtrictly than other Jews.

11. They pay an exceſſive veneration to their maſters, inſomuch that diſciples never ſit down without their permiſſion, and when they are going home, walk backwards with their face towards them. Theſe maſters are ſaid to be very charitable, and to teach ſuch as cannot pay them gratis [i].

The Caraïtes and Rabbiniſts (ſo are ſuch Jews called as oppoſe the Caraïtes) curſe each other heartily, and never make alliances by marriage, or any other way; and it is with great difficulty they admit any Caraïte to become their proſelyte; it is a common ſaying with them, that a Caraïte muſt firſt turn Mahometan, or Chriſtian, before he can be received as a Rabbiniſt Jew. Might not one ſay, they conſider this mutual hatred as an article of their faith? So ſtrictly do they obſerve it; and indeed in this point the Chriſtians do not fall ſhort of them.

ſtantinople in Greek, at Caffa in Turkiſh, in Perſia in Perſian; and in Arabic in all places, where the Arabic is the vulgar tongue. See Dr. Prideaux's Connexion, Tom. IV. p. 72. Amſterdam Edit. 1722. and Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. II. chap. xvi.

[h] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. II. chap. xvi.

[i] F. Simon has been exactly copied, in what relates to the Samaritans and Caraites, by Mr. Jovet in his Hiſtory of all Religions.

SADDUCEES.

ACcording to Mr. Baſnage [k] the Sadducees began to appear 240. years before Chriſt, tho' their riſe be of greater antiquity [l]. At firſt they diſtinguiſhed themſelves only by refuſing to acknowledge the authority of tradition. It is pretended too, that they preferred the books of Moſes to the reſt of the ſacred writings, looking upon the latter only as [m] compoſed by men venerable upon account of their ſanctity.

1. They ſeem to have denied that Providence had any influence over human actions. The truth is, they ſet up abſolute liberty.

2. They rejected the exiſtence of angels, the immateriality of the ſoul, and the reſurrection; imagining there was no other Spirit beſide God.

They believed there was no other felicity to be expected, but that of this preſent life: that the rewards and puniſhments God had ordained, related to this only; and that no other motive to ſerve God was to be regarded except that.

Principles ſo ſeducing and proper to lay conſcience aſleep, drew over ſeveral perſons of diſtinction to their party. However, their practical morality was not ſo looſe as might be believed, ſince they puniſhed crimes with great ſeverity; and the Jewiſh hiſtory repreſents them as auſtere in point of manners. Thus their ſpeculations can hardly be brought to agree with their practice.

This ſect ſubſiſted long after the deſtruction of the Jewiſh ſtate, and ſeems even to have been confounded with the Caraïtes and [n] Samaritans. Be that as it may, according to Mr. Baſnage, they are ſaid ſtill to continue in Afric; tho' he brings no voucher for it.

PHARISEES.

ALL modern Jews, except the Caraïtes and Samaritans, may come under the denomination of Phariſees; Judaiſm holding traditions as divine commands, and obſerving them many times more ſtrictly than the law given to Moſes. At preſent, ſays one writer, The Jewiſh religion is nothing more, [o] than an edifice built upon Phariſaical tradition, and in no manner upon the foundation of the Law and the Prophets. And indeed it is certain, that the Jews, who live amongſt us, carry the merit of their traditions, and the glory of the Talmud containing them, to a prodigious height; but it is too great an hyperbole to ſay, [p] It is become their Bible, becauſe the ſacred writings are in continual uſe among them, and all their leſſons, prayers, &c. are directly or indirectly taken out of the Bible; let us take the middle way. The modern Jews may paſs for Phariſees in their reſpect for Tradition, and in their ſtrict practice of the commands of their traditionary Doctors: but this ſtrictneſs does not make them Phariſees in their tenets, ſince they declare in their confeſſion of faith, that the law delivered to Moſes is unalterable, and that God is never to give them any other. Beſides there is a difference too in the practice of the modern Jews and the Phariſees; for generally they are far from affecting ſuch an extraordinary ſanctity, and there are few to be met with among them, who take the pains to put on the Phariſaical maſk.

Another difference between the preſent Jews and the Phariſees, is the reſurrection of the dead. The Phariſees [q] believed the Metempſychoſis, or tranſmigration of the ſoul from one body to another, and this is what they called reſurrection: [r] but denied this tranſmigration to men of the blackeſt guilt, and delivered over their ſouls to eternal ſufferings [k] Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. II. chap. xiv.

[l] See Dr Prideaux's Connexion, &c.
[m] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. II. chap. xiv.
[n] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. II. chap. xv.
[o] Dr. Prideaux in his Connexion. [p] Idem. [q] Joſephus. [r] Prideaux, Ibid.

for the ſins they had committed here: and that the ſouls of middling ſinners received their puniſhment in the bodies into which they tranſmigrated. But the modern Jews[r] believe the ſame reſurrection as the Chriſtians.

The Phariſees have been charged with ſetting up a ſort of fate or deſtiny, which made mankind neceſſary agents, but this notion has been ſoftned by others, it being a ſentiment which diſhonours the Deity, ſuppoſing the Phariſees by ſuch a fatality mean any thing elſe but God's Providence. They therefore ſay, the Phariſees believed, that from the beginning God had impreſſed a certain force upon all creatures, whereby they acted and moved, without any neceſſity for God continually to co-oporate with them. Some accuſe them with making ſecond cauſes depend on the [s] influence of the ſtars, and pretend that this is the ſort of fatality which the Phariſees maintained. But in whatever ſenſe this tenet be underſtood, it will be found to rob mankind of their liberty.

The ancient Phariſees practiſed ſeveral ſorts of penance, which would be now no way inferior to thoſe of the Monks of la Trape, and many other penitents. For inſtance, they deprived themſelves of ſleep, a thing of ſuch abſolute neceſſity to life: they ſtrewed pebbles, briars, and thorns in their beds; they faſted often and long; they whipped themſelves 'till the blood followed the ſtripes; they tore their fleſh; they affected walking with their eyes down, or ſhut, and without minding how they went, to the end they might beat their head againſt the wall. [u] They wore the law on their forehead, their ſleeves, and the borders of their clothes. They viſited the ſepulchres of the ſaints of Iſrael, and adorned them with monuments of their piety; but notwithſtanding all this, the Scripture deſcribes them as a more flagitious race than the Sadducees their adverſaries. And it is obſerved, that notwithſtanding thoſe auſterities to which the Phariſees ſeemed outwardly to devote themſelves, they were deep in the intrigues of the great men. To be plain they were great dablers in politics [w].

HALF-JEWS, SABBATITES or SABBATARIANS, ESSENES, HERODIANS, &c.

IT is pretended by ſome, that there appeared Half-Jews in Sileſia, and other places, at the time of Calvin's reformation, and that there are ſome to be met with in ſeveral countries. [x] The world has given them one Seidelius for their head. Theſe people maintain, that the Meſſiah does not relate to the Heathens, and that he was only deſigned for the Jews, they being the nation whom God really honoured with his alliance. Seidelius farther believed, that all religion conſiſted in the Decalogue. [y] He placed ſacrifices and ceremonies in the number of rites particular to the (Jewiſh) nation, which might indeed be of ſervice in the worſhip of God.

There are Sabbatarians in England, and elſewhere. They differ from the reſt of the Jews only in a much more ſtrict obſervance of the Sabbath [z].

As for the Eſſenes and Herodians, their ſects going no lower than the firſt ages of Chriſtianity, we ſhall refer the reader to the learned, who have treated of them.

In

[r] Some of them hold the Metempſychoſis.

[s] The modern Jews are ſtrongly prejudiced in favour of this influence. Nor are they ſingle; for many Chriſtians have endeavoured to eſtabliſh it; and indeed this doctrine muſt be allowed to be commode, for if it takes off the glory of acting well, ſo does it the ſhame too of doing ill.

[u] By their Totaphots, and Phylacteries.

[w] See what Joſephus ſays concerning Alexander Jannæus.

[x] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. IX. chap. xxxiv.

[y] Theſe are M. Baſnage's words.

[z] This we have ſaid upon the credit of ſome of the Jews, to which we will ſubjoin what a ſenſible and judicious writer relates in his Memoirs and Obſervations upon England, p. 367. Edit. 1698. "There is a parti"cular ſect---- of men known by the name of Sabbatarians (or ſeventh day men) they make profeſſion of "expecting the millenary reign ----- They are called Sabbatarians, becauſe they will not reſt on Sunday but "Saturday. They leave off work early on Friday night, and are rigid obſervers of their Sabbath. They ad-
"miniſter baptiſm to adult perſons only---- Moſt of them will neither eat pork, blood, nor any thing
"ſtrangled----Their morality is ſevere, and all their outward behaviour pious and Chriſtian like. Theſe
"Sabbatarians therefore, are nothing elſe but Chriſtians judaiſing in certain points.

In Holland the Jews make two ſeparate bodies, who are ſworn enemies to each other[a]. The Germans are divided from the Spaniſh and Portugueſe, by a few ceremonies and arbitrary cuſtoms. The difference conſiſts in the practice of them, and not at all in the œconomy of their religion; but is however a ſtrong obſtacle to their uniting. Theſe Germans go much beyond the reſt in their ſuperſtitions, but are withall extremely treacherous. The Portugueſe Jews will not admit them into their ſynagogue, nor intermarry with them. One ſingle family of Benjamite Jews has the privilege of a place in the Portugueſe ſynagogue at Amſterdam; becauſe they formerly received the fugitive Jews of Spain and Portugal with great charity, and by their interceſſion with the leading men of the republic contributed to their ſettlement there. The Italian Jews too are conſidered as Benjamites, but leſs deſpiſed than the German; and yet a Portugueſe would refuſe his daughter to an Italian.

CHINESE JEWS.

THESE may be looked upon as a particular ſect. F. Gozani makes the difference between them and other Jews, conſiſt in the following particulars.

1. Tho' they allow of neither ſtatue, nor image, yet they place the frame, whereon is written the Emperor's name, in Moſes's ſeat, which would be thought a prophanation by the Jews of Europe.

2. They have incenſe pots to honour the memory of the holy patriarchs, &c.

3. They mix a great number of fables and ridiculous tales, with the true facts recorded in Scripture, in which perhaps they would not be outdone by the Rabbi's and other European Jews. It would be worth knowing whether it is in the commentary or the text, that they mix thoſe fictions.

4. They honour Confutius, and appear among the Chineſe at the ſolemn ceremonies performed in honour of him.

5. In ſpring and autumn they pay funeral honours to their anceſtors, as the Chineſe do, and ſet meat before them; but they abſtain from ſwine's fleſh.

6. They do not ſeem to have the leaſt idea of the Meſſiah.

VIII. Confeſſion of Faith of the JEWS. Other Articles of their Belief, not generally received.

THE faithful Jew muſt not depart from this profeſſion of faith, including the thirteen following fundamentals of his religion[b].

1. I believe with a full and perfect aſſent, that God for ever bleſſed is the Creator and Preſerver of all creatures; that he created every thing, and will create every thing to the end of all ages.

2. I believe, &c. that God is one, and that there is nothing like unto his unity; that he has been, is and ſhall ever be the only God eternally bleſſed.

3. I believe, &c. that God is incorporeal, impalpable, and not to be comprehended as matter is: in a word, that nothing exiſting is like unto him.

4. I believe, &c. that God is the beginning and end of all things.

5. I believe, &c. that God alone is to be worſhipped, and that no other Being whatever is to be worſhipped with him.

6. I believe,

[a] Among the Portugueſe Jews they are called Benjamites, or of the tribe of Benjamin.
[b] Ex Buxtorfii Synag. Judaicâ, cap. iii.

6. I believe, &c. that all that the Prophets have ſaid is true.

7. I believe, &c. the truth of the prophecies of Moſes our maſter, ([c] on whom be peace) I believe him to be the father and chief of the wiſe men his contemporaries, and of all that have ſucceeded him down to our time.

8. I believe, &c. that God delivered the law unto Moſes [d] our maſter, ſuch as we now have it.

9. I believe, &c. that God will never alter this law, nor ever give any other.

10. I believe, &c. that God penetrates into all the thoughts of man, and knows all his works.

11. I believe, &c. that God will reward the good, and puniſh the bad.

12. I believe, &c. that the Meſſiah is to come, and will always conſtantly expect him till he comes.

13. I believe, &c. that God will raiſe the dead. I know not the time of ſuch reſurrection, but yet it will be when it ſhall ſo pleaſe God eternally bleſſed. May his name be glorified for ever and ever. AMEN.

Theſe articles are enlarged upon and explained in [e] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, and Buxtorf's Synagogue. To theſe may be joined what F. Simon ſays of it in the preceding Diſſertations.

Beſides theſe fundamental articles, there are others, which perhaps are not univerſally received, nor yet abſolutely rejected.

1. The Jews have a great veneration for the angels, but neither worſhip, nor apply to them as mediators or interceſſors, and yet addreſs themſelves to them on [f] certain occaſions. There are ſome Jews, who, according to Buxtorf, aſcribe great virtue to a prayer they call the 72. verſes. Theſe verſes repeated with fervour have the power of bringing down the angels, and obliging them to aſſiſt the ſuppliant. Roſs tells us, "that the Jews "believe there is a good and a bad angel before the ſynagogue, to obſerve who prays "with moſt zeal and attention. Theſe angels take care of the houſes of ſuch, wherein finding every thing clean and neat, they depart with joy." Thus the good man talks [g] in the tranſlation of his book by Thomas la Grue maſter of arts and phyſician. But he ſhould at leaſt have told us the name of the author who ſupplied him with ſo remarkable a circumſtance.

2. They pray to their ſaints, as a learned [h] German tells us. [i] The pilgrimage of the Jews to the tomb of the Prophet Ezekiel, and the miracles they place to the account of this Prophet ſeem to confirm it. Such fables would never be publiſhed among the Jews, ſays Mr. Bayle, did the Invocation of ſaints appear a thing forbidden them [k].

3. They allow a Purgatory, and it is to releaſe their relations out of it; that they for eleven months repeat the prayer called Cadiſh every day. See Buxtorf's Synagogue, and F. Simon's firſt Diſſertation.

4. The church [l] prays for the dead. The relations of the deceaſed meet, and [m] pray for his ſoul amongſt themſelves night and morning, during the ſpace of ſeven days. They likewiſe beſtow [n] alms and make offerings in favour of the deceaſed's ſoul.

5. Their

[c] Qui requieſcat in pace. V. Buxtorf. ibid. This is an Oriental complement, conſtantly paid to the name of Mahomet.
[d] Qui requieſcat in pace.
[e] Lib. IV. chap. i. Synag. Jud. cap. iii.
[f] See a prayer addreſſed to the angels in Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. viii. indeed it is not now in uſe.
[g] Amſt. Edit. 1672.
[h] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. IV. chap. x. art. 7.
[i] V. Bayle's Dictionary art. Ezekiel.
[k] This is not a tenet of religion with them. They have no prayer addreſſed to the holy patriarchs, but there is ſometimes this form in their prayers: By the merit of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob we beſeech thee to hear us. And they uſe it, the more, as they ſay, to humble themſelves before God, and not thinking themſelves worthy to be heard upon account of their own virtue, they have recourſe to that of Abraham, &c.
[l] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xxix. Tota Eccleſia ſingulis Sabbatis pro defunctis orat, maximè pro illis qui aliquid ad uſum pauperum vel ſynagogæ conſervationem legârunt. He inſerts the burial ſervice.
[m] The reaſon why they pray in company, is their believing God to be ever preſent in an aſſembly of ſeveral praying together. Theſe private aſſemblies are not to conſiſt of above ten at moſt. If they exceed that number, the heads of the ſynagogue have a power to forbid them, upon account of the prejudice they might cauſe to public aſſemblies.
[n] Theſe alms are beſtowed with great oſtentation and vanity. Some Jews have aſſured us, that the great profits ariſing to the ſynagogue by ſuch offerings is the ſole reaſon of its continuing in uſe among them.

5. Their traditions, the neceſſity of which they conſtantly admit, are a very full and abundant ſupplement to the law received from Moſes. Perhaps theſe traditions are tacitly expreſſed in the 7, 8, and 9. articles of their confeſſion of faith.

6. They are divided in opinion as to the Meſſiah. Some believe his coming delayed upon account of the ſins of their nation. Some of the Jewiſh doctors tell us, there will come two, one poor and miſerable, and the other powerful and glorious. The latter is to reſtore them to their former ſplendor, to deſtroy their enemies, and to reign for ever. In ſhort, ſome of their doctors have written that the Meſſiah has been long come, and that it was in vain to expect him.

7. They do not always agree in their notions of paradiſe, hell, and the reſurrection. Some flatter themſelves that paradiſe will be a place full of all manner of delights, in which they include all ſenſual pleaſures; where the converſation of women will be allowed and admitted as a fundamental article of real pleaſure. We are convinced they ſpeak as they would have it, and that an infinite number of people would beforehand taſte a great pleaſure in thinking they ſhould be raiſed from the dead, would but religion ſecure this article to them as fact.

CONTINUATION

OF THE THIRD

DISSERTATION

CONCERNING

The Ceremonies of the JEWS, &c.

Containing an Explanation of the religious Ceremonies of the modern JEWS.

CONTINUATION

OF THE THIRD

DISSERTATION

CONCERNING

The Ceremonies of the JEWS, &c.

Containing an Explanation of the religious Ceremonies of the modern JEWS.

[a] IN the ſecond part of this Diſſertation we propoſe, with as much care and exactneſs as poſſible, to ſhew the difference to be met with in the ſame ceremony amongſt the Jews of different rites; and theſe ceremonies we ſhall throw into three diſtinct claſſes, The firſt of which ſhall include ſuch as relate to eccleſiaſtical councils, places conſecrated to devotion, officers of religion, and certain helps deſigned for prayer; In the ſecond we ſhall treat of feſtivals and exerciſes of piety, both public and private; And the third ſhall be appropriated to ſuch ceremonies wherein religion neceſſarily intervenes.

THE ANCIENT SANHEDRIM.

WE muſt look for the riſe of this council in chap. xviii. of Exodus. Moſes aſſociated to himſelf 70 men to judge the people of Iſrael. This is the original of the great Sanhedrim, according to the opinion of many of the learned. However, others inſiſt it is of later date by ſeveral centuries, and muſt be looked for in the time of the celebrated Maccabees.

[a] This difference in ceremonies makes the difference in their rituals. And the different conjunctures, places, and people amongſt which the Jews have lived, are the occaſion of this difference. The German, Poliſh, Bohemian, Lithuanian, and Ruſſian Jews, follow the ſame ritual; but the Spaniſh and Portugueſe have another, which ſtill varies from that of the Levantin and Italian Jews. All theſe ſtill diſagree with thoſe of Jeruſalem, China, and ſome other parts of the world.

This council had once an almoſt uncontroulable and ſupreme authority; and infallibility in all its deciſions upon religious matters was aſcribed to it; but a point ſo tender and eſſential, which would have ſubjected the belief of all the faithful to 70 [b] perſons, is now conteſted. The power of judging ſovereigns is likewiſe attributed to it; but this point too is as much diſputed as the other. This council, beſides the a of interpreting the law, and cognizance of eccleſiaſtical cauſes, had the power of life and death. Gabinius governor of Syria aboliſhed all its privileges about 57 years before the birth of Chriſt.

The great Sanhedrim held its ſeſſions in the temple at Jeruſalem, and received appeals from the courts of juſtice of the other towns of Judea. Theſe inferior courts were called little Sanhedrims, and were compoſed of 23 perſons.

This is all that is neceſſary to be ſaid upon the ſubject of the grand Sanhedrim and inferior councils, they being both aboliſhed upon the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, without ever being able to re-eſtabliſh themſelves ſince that time; nor is any thing related of them in the hiſtory of our time, except that council the Jews held in Hungary in the laſt century. The ceremony and particulars of it, as related by Mr. Baſnage, Lib. IX. chap. xxxv. of his Hiſtory of the Jews, are as follow, and which he had from an Engliſhman, who pretended to have been preſent at it.

This council, held in the plains of Ageda, thirty leagues from Buda, was called to enquire into all matters relating to the Meſſiah, and after a ſerious examination, to determine whether he was come or not. Three hundred Rabbi's formed this venerable aſſembly, who encamped under tents, the largeſt of which was appointed for the hall, wherein the aſſembly was to meet, into which none were admitted who could not ſpeak Hebrew, and produce their pedigree. A preſident of the tribe of Levi was elected, who formed and propoſed all queſtions, ſeated at a table over againſt the eaſtern gate, and ſurrounded by all the doctors of the aſſembly ranged in a circle.

The firſt day paſſed in civilities; they kiſſed each other, and excluded all ſuch Jews as could not prove their deſcent. On the ſecond day the propoſition was drawn up in theſe terms; We are to enquire whether the Meſſiah be come, or whether we are ſtill to expect him? Some of the Rabbi's were inclined to think he was come; but it was carried in the negative, and concluded that the true cauſes of ſo fatal a delay was to be attributed to the impenitence and ſins of the people. The former were divided in their ſentiments, ſome of them finding the marks of the Meſſiah in Elias, and others in Jeſus Chriſt. One Rabbi inſiſted much upon the miracles wrought by the latter, but was ſharply rebuked. The fathers of the council next debated on the manner of the Meſſiah's coming, and decided that he would appear as a conqueror; that he would make no alteration in religion, and would be born of a virgin.

The council had now laſted ſix days, when ſix eccleſiaſtics from Rome preſented themſelves before the aſſembly; and after endeavouring to prove to the Jews that the Meſſiah was come, entred into a pompous deſcription of the magnificence of the ceremonies of the church, the dignity of its worſhip, the riches and authority of the viſible head of the church, the vicar of the Meſſiah. But things ſo contrary to the ſpirit of Judaiſm were unanimouſly exploded, and a ſort of curſe was pronounced againſt their God-man, the interceſſion of ſaints, the worſhip of images, and the adoration of the virgin.

It is with pleaſure we have related the hiſtory and ceremony of this council; but the authority of the Engliſh author is not of weight ſufficient to gain credit to it upon his bare word. For is it probable, that ſo ſolemn an aſſembly as this ſhould be allowed by any Prince? Or that the Jews could have the boldneſs to launch out into invectives againſt Jeſus Chriſt, &c. in the preſence of ſo many eccleſiaſtics come from Rome? That ſuch an aſſembly ſhould have made no noiſe in the world? And that we muſt rely on the integrity of a ſingle man, upon ſo important an article?

After

[b] 72 is the general opinion.

After the extinction of the Sanhedrim, particular tribunals for the decision of cases of conscience, and of disputes were set up in its room by the Jews. Those tribunals, afterwards called Houses of Judgment, were a very imperfect image of the Sanhedrim: yet they still subsist, but with an authority much more confined than formerly. Those whom they call Parnasim make up these inferior tribunals, who are laymen elected by plurality of voices, and [c] have the care of collecting the money for alms and offerings, and distributing it to the poor: they are the regents of the synagogue, provide all necessaries for the church, determine some sort of differences, and even in disputes upon religion. In short, they thunder out excommunication against rebels and apostates; but this is very rare.

THE SYNAGOGUE.

SYnagogues were settled at their return from the captivity. For their origin we must go up as high as the dispersion of the Jews, which made them necessary; for some of the people residing at so great a distance from Jerusalem, they found it impossible for them to go up to the temple of the capital, in order to pay their devotions in an exact manner; and therefore it was requisite to settle assemblies or synagogues in such places, where the Prince allowed them liberty of conscience. However, these first synagogues are not to be taken as temples; the law was explained, but no sacrifices offered in it; and they were obliged, as far as it was in their power, to go directly to Jerusalem to worship, which was the grand river of salvation into which the small streams were obliged sooner or later to carry their tribute. When there were men of a more than common piety in any town, the faithful met and paid their devotions at their houses. These were the assemblies which were really synagogues, tho' they did not bear that name. The rich sometimes took a director for their conscience; and the Levite mentioned in chap. xviii. ver. 19. of Judges, can be taken for no other.

At first the Jews built their synagogues without the city, and surrounded them with trees; but now they chuse some high ground in such cities as allow the exercise of Judaism. The building must be higher than the common houses; for, say they, The House of our God must be lofty. The inward part of it is very exactly described by Leo of Modena in his first Dissertation, chap. x. The doors of the synagogue must be so disposed, that the entrance may look towards the place of prayers: that is, if they pray towards the East, the door must stand West; and this is the custom, that they may bow towards [d] the ark at entring the synagogue.

The seats are let for money, which is a revenue set apart for the maintenance of the synagogue; but there must be no seats between the desk and the ark, because whoever should sit there, would turn his back upon the ark as he faces the preacher. Such a situation must needs reflect dishonour on the ark, and be matter of great scandal and offence to the faithful Jew.

The Jews must religiously observe the respect due to the synagogue, and forbear talking of business there [e], or even to think of any worldly interests. They must avoid sleeping too, and throwing their eyes about; but must continue in a modest posture, and not suffer themselves to run into any impurity. We shall farther enlarge upon the duties of a true Jew, when we come to the ceremonies to be observed at prayer.

The Jews call the synagogue, Beth Hakkeneseh, that is, The House of meeting.

Father Gozzani a Jesuit has given an exact and fine description of the Jewish synagogue at China, and this is what he says of it.

Their synagogue stands East, for the same reason that those of our Jews stand West; all of them equally looking towards Jerusalem, which is to the East of Europe, and the West

[c] Vide first Dissertation upon the ceremonies of the Jews, chap. xiv.
[d] The Hechal, where the books of the law are locked up. This Hechal is an imperfect representation of the place, where the Ark of the ancient Jews rested.
[e] And yet it is usual with them to talk of business in the midst of their prayers.

Weſt of China. It is divided into three parts, or naves, in which it reſembles our European churches. The firſt and holieſt in ſome meaſure anſwers to the Hechal of our Jews, and ſtill better to the Holy of Holies of the Old Teſtament: and there are kept the books of Moſes's law. The head of the ſynagogue, who anſwers to the ancient High Prieſt, has alone the privilege of going into that ſacred place. F. Gozzani there ſaw 12 tabernacles made like arks for the 12 tribes of the Jews, and a 13 for Moſes, placed upon tables, each with ſmall curtains round it. Every one of thoſe tabernacles had in it five books of the Pentateuch, which they call Kim, written upon parchments and faſtned to rolls. The other part of this Chineſe ſynagogue, where, according to F. Gozzani's relation, is ſeen a chair raiſed above the reſt of the ſynagogue, anſwers pretty exactly to that part of our ſynagogues, where the law is read on the Sabbath, and other ſolemn days. This chair is appointed for the ſame uſe amongſt them as the Theba. But it is very much otherwiſe as to the hall which F. Gozzani ſaw at his going out of the ſynagogue, and which makes the third nave; it very little reſembling the place where the people aſſemble in the European ſynagogues, but is much more like the Veſtibulum or portico of the ancient temple. There F. Gozzani ſaw a great number of incenſe pots deſigned for perfumes, with which they doubtleſs honour the memory of their great men.

This deſcription is taken from the VII. Collection of edifying and curious letters of certain miſſionaries.

THE DEDICATION or CONSECRATION of the SYNAGOGUE.

WE are here to deſcribe a particular ceremony, which muſt not be confounded with the feſtival called Chanuccah, which we ſhall ſpeak to when we come to the Jewiſh feſtivals.

[f] And this deſcription ſhall be that of the dedication of the Synagogue of the Portugueſe Jews at Amſterdam. This ſynagogue, which is the fineſt in the world, was dedicated with all imaginable ſolemnity the 10 of the month Menahem, in the year 5435, which anſwers to the 2. Auguſt 1675. The moſt conſiderable men amongſt the Jews there, carried the law richly adorned, in proceſſion, and diſtinguiſhed the entry of their ſacred books into the ſynagogue, by devotion and extraordinary alms. This piety of theirs was accompanied by a fine concert, and ſeveral pathetic ſermons on the ſolemnity of a day to be ranked among the happieſt which their nation ever ſaw ſince the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. This feſtival laſted eight days, and its anniverſary is celebrated on the 10. of Auguſt every year.

This ſynagogue ſtands Eaſt of the city; it is 150 foot long, and 100 wide, beſides the court and outward walls; and its height is 70 foot to the dome. Two galleries for the women run to the right and left the whole length of the ſynagogue, and five rows of lamps give light to it on the Sabbath. The Hechal, and Theba or deſk, are of a rare and precious wood called Xacharanda, that comes from the Indies. [g] Four of the beſt quality of the Jewiſh nation laid the four corner ſtones in the foundation of the ſynagogue.

[h] They have made a collection of the ſermons preached on this occaſion, the texts of which were choſen according as they thought moſt ſuitable to the dignity of the ſubject, and exaggerations were not at all ſpared. The Rabbi's gave full play to their imaginations, and found miracles in this conſecration. One Jew found the building of the ſynagogue, and the very name of William of Naſſaw Prince of Orange, then Captain General of the ſeven United Provinces, in Iſaiah [i]. This diſcovery was original.

ACADEMIES

[f] See the plate.

[g] Jeronimo Nunés d'Acoſta, Antony Alvarez, Manuel de Pinto, & David de Pinto.

[h] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. IX. chap. xxxvi.

[i] It is to be obſerved, that women are in Hebrew called Naſſim. It is ſaid in Iſaiah, that ſeven women ſhall take unto them a husband, ſaying we will eat our bread, &c. Seven women (Naſſim) are in alluſion to Naſſaw; and the bread thoſe women were to eat was the Duke of Villa-hermoſa. Never was any thing better hit off.

B. Picart delineavit.

A. l'Hechal ou on garde les livres de la Loy.
B. Theba ou Pupitre ou le Hazan et Hacham lisent la Loy.
C. Le 2 Galeries pour les femmes.

LA DEDICACE DE LA SINAG

S PORTUGAIS, A AMSTERIDAM.

La dédicace de la Synagogue et l'entrée des livres de la Loy se celebra pendant 8. jours le 10e du mois de Menahem 5433. qui se raporte au mois d'Aout. 1673. on en fait la commemoration tous les Ans.

ACADEMIES AND SCHOOLS.

THE Jews call their academies Bath Hammidraſch, Houſes of Interpretation, the law with its gloſſes and Rabbinic commentaries being taught in them. This inſtitution of academies and ſchools amongſt them is of long ſtanding, in which the Prophets preſided; but we are not to ſuppoſe, that the gift of propheſy was acquired [k] there by human arts: but our opinion is, that the law was explained, virtue taught, and the myſteries of religion unfolded in them. Perhaps too muſic and poetry, two parts formerly eſſential to religious worſhip, were there taught.

The ſchools are generally in the neighbourhood of the ſynagogue, where all the trifling niceties of the Talmud are explained, and hot diſputes upon matters of very little uſe held. Eating and drinking is allowed in the ſchools, tho' not in the ſynagogue [l]; the deſire or neceſſity of application being ſuppoſed to require a longer ſtay in them; and yet among the Jews they are reckoned more honourable than the ſynagogues.

According to the Rabbi's, they are to go to ſchool [m] with joy and diligence, after being firſt waſhed, and fortified with the Zizith [n] and prayer. They muſt run into it with eagerneſs, but go out of it with regret; it being the place where they learn how to ſerve God, and all the time they are ſtrangers to that knowledge being ſo much time loſt. We muſt not omit that holy trembling, which whoever enters the ſchool or ſynagogue ought to be ſeized with, nor the iron fixed at the door of the German ſynagogues to ſcrape the dirt off their ſhoes; for, ſay they, according to Moſes, the ground whereon they tread is holy. One may plainly enough perceive, by theſe ſtrained applications and outſide fopperies, affected even to impertinence, that after travelling much ground in this road to arrive at the eſſence of religion, a man is farther from it than if he had remained in perfect ignorance.

JEWISH RABBI'S AND DOCTORS.

THEIR Rabbi's are at the ſame time their teachers and preachers. The name of Rabbi is very ancient, the words Rabbi, and Rabboni [o], which is equivalent to it, being to be found in the Holy Scriptures. The Phariſees formerly arrogated this title to themſelves, pretending to be the ſole maſters and doctors of the people: and carried this pretenſion of theirs to ſuch a pitch of inſolence, as to make the law ſubject to their deciſions, for which Chriſt very ſharply rebuked them.

It is very plain that titles are due to ſuch only as deſerve them, and that, according to the inſtitution of them, the wiſe, the learned, and all other great men may aſſume them. Now a-days theſe titles are ſunk very low in the world, and the names of Rabbi, Doctor, Maſter, &c. have very little or no credit. To aſſume them is almoſt a ſign of ignorance.

The Jewiſh doctors not ſatisfied with the name of Rabbi, however glorious it ought to have appeared to them, afterwards endeavoured to gain others; and in the Eaſt, gave themſelves that of Mir, Mor, and Maran, all three ſignifying Lord. In Spain they aſſumed the title of Sage, or Wiſeman; but this is ſaid to be inferior [p] to that of Rabbi. In ſhort, the heads of the academies entitled themſelves the refuge, the aſylum, [q] the bed of the law.

" [k] They learnt, ſays the Diſcourſe on freethinking, p. 225. to play upon inſtruments of muſic, and to drink,
" two qualifications, which they eſteemed very conducive towards obtaining the prophetic Spirit:" that is, according to Dodwell in the ſame treatiſe, a holy enthuſiaſm.

[l] Buxtorf. Synag. Jud. cap. x.

[m] See below

[n] See Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. x.

[o] Or rather the ſame, for Rabbi is the contract of Rabbenu, our maſter.

[p] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. III. chap. xxx.

[q] Marbitzi Tora, that is, he that puts the law to reſt.

law. These titles are no ways below the abilities of these doctors, who think themselves infallible in their decisions. But besides the privilege of preaching and teaching, the Rabbi's have that of binding and loosing, that is, of deciding whether a thing be forbidden or allowed. They create new doctors, and confer ordination by imposition of hands, but they limit the power of these doctors according to their good pleasure. One is confined to the explanation of the law, or of such questions only as relate to it, another to the judging of disputes arising upon those questions. With these shining privileges, the respect due to the function of doctor is not always paid them, and they have more than once been exposed to the derision of their own people. However, they easily sit down with comfort under the contempt of the world, imagining, that under the sanction of so sacred an employment, the gate of paradise must always be open to them, were they the greatest sinners in the world. And it is thus, that they who are at the head of religion easily flatter themselves, that heaven is at all times their own, and cannot conceive, that after labouring, by their instructions, at the salvation of such a number of people, it can be possible for God to exclude them themselves. And yet, methinks, the example of Moses, who was shut out of the land of Canaan, after conducting the Israelites to the very borders of it, is no very favourable circumstance to the Rabbi's.

ELECTION of the RABBI'S, and the PRIVILEGES annexed to their OFFICE.

WE just now observed, that the Rabbi's lay their hands upon such as they receive into the orders of the Jewish church. The rise of this ceremony is to be found in the xxxiv. chapter of Deuteronomy. Moses, at his death, laid his hands upon Joshua his successor, and gave him his benediction. The ministers of the Reformed likewise lay their hands on the Candidates, whom they receive into the ministry. When the Jewish doctors have the power of binding and loosing given them [t], the five books of Moses with a key are put into their hands: doubtless supposing they would not venture to open those mysteries with arrogance, but at the opening them would banish all human prejudice and passion.

According to [r] Buxtorf, the Rabbi's are now elected without much ceremony. He that is to install the new Rabbi proclaims aloud to all the assembly, either on the Sabbath or some other solemn day, that such an one, for his learning and piety, deserves a place amongst the Rabbi's, exhorts the people to acknowledge and respect him as such, and denounces excommunication against such as shall not observe to do so. He then gives the candidate a certificate of his merit and capacity, and the ceremony often concludes with an entertainment given by the new doctor to the Rabbi's, and the rest of his friends. According to the author before cited, the young Rabbi need not be afraid of sinking under the weight of a rigorous examination. A little reading in the Talmud, together with some subtilty in disputing, and an assiduous application to the schools, qualifies a man for the dignity of a Rabbi.

The Chazan is to call the Rabbi elect aloud, and invite him by the name of Rabbi such an one, son of such an one, to approach the sacred books of the law: to which invitation our young doctor is not immediately to yield, but must first excuse himself upon his incapacity, and the weight of the burthen. After these preliminary compliments, he is to approach the law, with solemn pace, his head being covered with the Taled.

The Mozeni (a name signifying Instructor) is above the Rabbi's, and as it were President of them. This dignity, formerly unknown to the Jews, was invented in Germany about the 15. century.

The

[t] Basnage's History of the Jews, Lib. VI. chap. v.

[r] Synag. Jud. chap. xlvi.

Dessin'd from Nature by B. Picart.

C. Du Bosc. Sculp.

The TALED or white veil which they wear on their heads in the Synagogue during the Divine Service. At each of the 4 Corners hangs the SISITH or Tassle with 5 knots.

B. Both Sides of the Arm represented with the TEFFILA on.

TEFFILA SCEL JAD or the hand TEFFILA represented at large with the knot in form of ד

C. TOTAFOT alias TEFFILA SCEL ROSC or the TEFFILA for the Head.

E. A Knot in form of ד behind the Head.

A Jew covered with the TALED having TEFFELIN on his Head and Arm.

A TALED, ou Voile blanc qu'ils mettent sur leur tête à la Synagogue pendant la priere, aux 4 coins duquel pend le SISITH, ou cordon à 5 nœuds.

BB. Le bras gauche vû en dehors, et en dedans avec la TEFFILA.

C. TEFFILA SCEL JAD, ou la TEFFILA de la main, en grand, le nœud en forme de ד

DD. TOTAFOT, ou TEFFILA SCEL ROSC, ou la TEFFILA de la tête.

EE. Nœud en forme de ד derriere la tête.

F. Juif couvert du TALED & ayant les TEFFILIN à la tête & au bras.

The duty of the Rabbi's is to preach up juſtice, virtue, and purity; to reſolve doubts and difficulties, to excommunicate ill livers, and ſuch as do not obſerve the Sabbath, and days of penance, to marry and divorce; to explain the law, &c. ſo that the function of a Rabbi is difficult to diſcharge, tho' of very little profit. There are few Rabbi's except him who at Cologn and Francfort is called the firſt or grand Rabbi, who make any advantage of his dignity, nor can the other Rabbi's create any new ones without his leave.

The privileges annexed to this office are to be free from taxes and contributions. If the Rabbi have any goods, he has a right to ſell them firſt and before others, that the time he paſſes in trading, may not be a hindrance to his ſtudies; in any law ſuit too, he is the firſt to be diſpatched, and is allowed to ſit upon the bench with the judges, &c. Some of thoſe privileges are aboliſhed, the Jews having now no ſovereign authority.

The CHAZAN, the SCIAMUS, the SACRIFICATOR, the COHEN, or PRIEST.

LEO OF MODENA has already mentioned the two former; and the two latter are at preſent ſuſpended or ſuppreſſed, there being now neither temple, victims, nor ſacrifices. So that we have nothing to add to what Leo of Modena has ſaid concerning them. The name of Cohen is little elſe but a title of honour.

The TALED or VEIL; the ZIZITH or TASSELS; the TEFFILIN or FOREHEAD-PIECES; and ſome other CUSTOMS relating to PRAYER.

THE [t] Taled is a white ſquare veil with ſtrings and taſſels. The Jews cover their head with it during their prayers at the ſynagogue, or twiſt it round their neck. When Moſes came down from mount Sinai to the camp of the Iſraelites, after having had the honour of converſing with God face to face, the glory of the divine Majeſty ſhone out upon the face of the Legiſlator, and the eyes of the people were dazled with it [u]. Whereupon Moſes was forced to cover his face with a veil, and this, ſay the Jewiſh doctors, was the firſt riſe of the Taled. It has been an opinion likewiſe, that the Taled was invented to prevent diſtractions during prayer; and indeed the devout cover themſelves all over with them. But however that may be, the Jews formerly wore a ſquare dreſs, to each corner of which hung a taſſel, which ſerved to diſtinguiſh the wearer for a Jew. In proceſs of time the dreſs grew out of vogue, to which the ſynagogue veil ſucceeded; yet the ſquare habit was not quite left off, but converted into a ſingle ſquare piece of ſtuff, of which Leo of Modena has given a deſcription. The faithful Jew muſt never be without it about him, as being a preſervation againſt temptation and ſin. The ſtrings and taſſels that belong to this piece of ſtuff are called Zizith. Each ſtring of the Zizith has five knots in it, upon account of the 5 books of Moſes. In the putting it on, care muſt be taken that it hang before and behind, for the real Jew ſhould be fortified and ſurrounded with the precepts of the law, as with a rampart. We ſhall omit the reſt of the allegories [w]. In the morning, when putting it on, they muſt ſay, Bleſſed be God, who hath ſanctified us by his law, and ordained us to wear the Zizith. This benediction is to be ſaid with the eye upon it, and concluded before it is quite upon the body. Some kiſs it in ſaying the benediction.

The Zizith includes the 613 precepts of the law [x]. This the Jewiſh ſages have taken the pains to calculate, and from thence ariſes that abſolute neceſſity they are under of being being always covered with it, and making it a part of their devotion; for the Jew that is exact on this article, at the same time observes the 613 precepts, the consequence whereof is evident. We must refer to [y] Buxtorf, who gives proofs of the virtue of the Zizith taken from the writings of the Rabbi's.

[t] V. the plate. [u] Exod. chap. xxxiv. ẏ. 30. and fol. [w] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. ix. the Portugueſe Jews obſerve not theſe practices ſo ſcrupulouſly as the German. [x] V. Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. ix.

Leo of Modena has given an exact description of the Tessilin or forehead-pieces, which the Grecians called Phylacteries. They are sacred among the Jews, who go up as high as Moses, for the institution of them, by virtue of what he says to the people; Ye shall bind these words for signs upon your hands. They shall be unto you as frontlets between your eyes, and ye shall write them on the posts of your gates.

The Tessilin for the arm is put on first, and then that for the head, but on the contrary, in taking them off that of the head first comes off, and then that of the arm. The ink used in writing the passages sewed up in them, must be black and extremely pure, and the letters separate and very distinct, and the passages written with the right hand, and without any rasure. In short, were there to be any defect in them, the prayer of him who should make use of them would be ineffectual, and God would not hear him. These Tessilin are generally used in a morning as soon as they are up, the mind being more free and disengaged; and in a better condition to pray without distraction: but if by mischance the Tessilin should fall off the arm or forehead, the Jew to whom such a misfortune should happen, as well as the bystanders (if they be Jews) must fast the whole day. When they are easing nature, they must put the Tessilin at least at four cubits distance from them, or, if they can find no better expedient, must wear them in a double purse, and lay them in their bosom over the heart. They must take care too, not to have them about them at a funeral.

Their women are not allowed the Tessilin, they being subject to certain infirmities; besides the doctors say, it is sufficient for them to say Amen to the prayers of their husbands. Jews of a piety above the common standard have sometimes carried the devotion of the Tessilin even into the bridal-bed; a wise and ingenious contrivance to sanctify an action, where sanctity seems very hardly practicable; and where too, the most solid piety runs the risk of falling into strange distractions.

Leo of Modena has already described the Mezuza [z]. The synagogue has none [a], it being a place appointed for public prayer, and no ordinary dwelling-place. The parchment of the Mezuza, whereon the passage is written, must be rolled from the end of the line to the beginning, that the passage may be read as the parchment is unrolled; and when it is putting into the pipe, God must be blessed, who hath ordained his people the Mezuza. It is from time to time visited to see if it do not spoil; and when they go to another lodging, the custom is to leave it in the house they leave; for did they not [b] the Devil would infallibly get into it. But this is a compliment they do not pay to the Christian, who takes the house after him; no, they carry the Mezuza away with them.

The BENEDICTIONS and PRAYERS of the JEWS.

THE Jews have an infinite number of benedictions extending to all sensible things; for they are neither to undertake nor touch any thing whatever without lifting up their hearts to God, and blessing him. This is in itself a very laudable practice, and it is easily agreed, that the first of all devotions is that which suffers man to do nothing without blessing the supreme Being at the same time; and yet nothing more easily becomes a mechanic [c] devotion. The hundred benedictions of the Jews, for instance, are said with great distraction and hurry, like that of a scholar hastening to the end of his task. And how comes this? Why because every thing reduced into system in the practice

[y] Id. Ibid.
[z] Vide first Dissertation, chap. ii. paragraph 2.
[a] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xxxi.
[b] This is a superstition of the German Jews.
[c] Vide Leo of Modena's first Dissertation, chap. ix.

Arbanaunsol.

A

B B Sumik. B B

C

D

F

Matsot.

E

Simurim.

G

K Mezuza

H

Lulab.

I

Sophar.

B Picart delin.

A. Vêtement que les juifs portoient autrefois, et qu'ils portent maintenant sous leurs habits ordinaires pour ne point choquer les manieres des païs ou ils vivent.

B. Les Cordons qui sont aux 4. coins.

C. Un desdits Cordons representé plus grand à 3. nœuds qui signifient le nom de Dieu.

D. Lampe Sabathique. E. Pain sans levain avec lequel ils font la Pâque.

F. Pain ordinaire sans levain qui se mange pendant la fête.

G. Rameau de Palme, de Saule, et de Myrthe, joints ensemble qu'ils tiennent à la main gauche, et le Citron H. dans la droite qu'ils approchent l'un contre l'autre, et les agitent vers les 4. vents.

I. Corne de Bellier avec laquelle on sonne aux jour de l'An et aux autres fêtes.

K. Baton, ou Canne creuse attaché aux chambranles de toutes les portes, au côté droit, dans lequel est renfermé un parchemin où est écrit les passages du Deuter. chap. 6. vers. 4. &c. et chap. 11. vers. 13. &c.

practice of religion depends upon an order prescribed by the church, and afterwards voluntarily imposed upon oneself. However it may be, one insensibly accustoms oneself to the system, and devotion becomes a task which must be done. The mischief is, that men look upon this systematical piety as an equivalent for their disorders, and strongly persuade themselves that it will appease the wrath of God. Hence proceeds the zeal of your professed devotees for forms, as well as that exactness of great numbers of wicked people in appearing at places set apart for devotion.

We just now said, that the benedictions of the Jews extend to all sensible things; and we shall add, that they sometimes have a strong tincture of pride in them, and that many of these benedictions descend to the smallest trifles, which would tire the reader; but we shall give him an instance of the former. Among the Jews, the men bless God [d] for being born of the male sex, which is injurious to God, who has comprehended both sexes equally under his covenant.

The first thing they are to do when they wake, is to bless and praise God, and to undertake nothing considerable till they have said their prayers. This too was a Heathen precept, which [e] Virgil has not omitted in one of his Eclogues. They are to go to the synagogue early in the morning with eagerness, and in a body, according to Psal. lv. ver. 15. God enters the synagogue as soon as ever the door is open, and is in the midst of the assembly provided there be ten persons [f]; at going in they say a few verses out of the Psalms, bow towards the Hechal, then say in a low voice, one verse out of chap. xxiv. of Numbers; and lastly, together with the rest of the assembly [g], repeat the prayers, which the Chazan or Chanter sings.

The reading of the [h] Scheman is performed in the manner Leo of Modena relates it. After this, [i] the whole assembly must rise, and pray to themselves standing. The Chazan generally begins. Then each man out of respect goes three steps back, and the Chazan begins to chant the eighteen [k] benedictions, which, according to them, are of great efficacy, and no other prayer can be named with them [l]. They must be repeated standing with the feet equally joined, like those of the angels, of whom Ezekiel says chap. i. ver. 7. that their feet were streight. After these benedictions they bow their head to the ground, then raise it a little, and say their private prayers sitting or standing. A longer detail of the different prayers used by the Jews would be tiresome and useless, and may be seen in Buxtorf's Synagogue.

As to the posture during prayer, they are, as much as possible, to remain standing, and that without leaning, with their head covered, and body girt with a belt, to separate the heart from the lower parts which are obscene; and the face and hands are to be carefully washed before they go to the synagogue. Nor are they to touch any thing dirty at their prayers, and the mind must have been prepared at least an hour for their prayers, before they repeat them.

The suppliant must turn towards Jerusalem, with his feet joined, his hands on his heart, and his eyes on the ground. He must, as much as possible, avoid gaping, spitting, blowing his nose, or [m] breaking wind backwards. At home they may pray aloud, to edify the servants; but at the synagogue it is sufficient the prayers be said softly, provided the suppliant observes to move his lips; for it is necessary the congregation be convinced that he prays; two circumstances may be added to prove the necessity

[d] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. x.

[e] Ab jove principium, Musæ, Jovis omnia plena.

[f] Some of the German Jews do more.

[g] There has been for some years a hot dispute between the Jews of Amsterdam upon this question: whether, at their coming into the synagogue, they are privately to begin the prayers, which the congregation are repeating after the Chazan, or whether they are to go on with the congregation in the prayer then repeating.

[h] For this vide the first Dissertation of Leo of Modena, chap. xi.

[i] Basnage's History of the Jews, Lib. VI. chap. xviii.

[k] The Jews ascribe them to Esdras.

[l] Buxtorf. Syn Jud. cap. x.

[m] If by mischance such a thing should happen, the prayer must be broken off, till the noxious vapours be dispersed; and when the devotee is much pressed by them, he must be so prudent as to go and discharge them at least four paces from the place where he is praying. When he has done he must offer this prayer to God, and say devoutly, Lord, thou hast made openings to our body, which it is impossible to keep shut, &c. This form of prayer may be seen in Buxtorf's Synagogue, chap. x.

ceſſity of this maxim. 1. A Jew who ſees another praying may ſay Amen, and thereby contribute to make the prayer agreable to God. The piety of the faithful muſt ſtrike the people, and manifeſt itſelf to the view of the public. Theſe Phariſaical maxims are much to the taſte of the modern Jews.

We ſhall omit ſome minute cricumſtances concerning the manner of praying, which may be ſeen in Buxtorf's Syn. chap. x.

As to the prayers of the Jews againſt Chriſt and Chriſtians, and Apoſtates from Judaiſm, there are ſome examples to be met with in Buxtorf's Synagogue; but were there no better proofs, it would be eaſy to reject the accuſation; they being forced applications owing to the hatred of ſome devotees. If it be true, that the Jews curſe Chriſt and Chriſtians, one may imagine it is done exceeding myſteriouſly [n].

In going out of the ſynagogue, they muſt avoid turning their back upon the Hechal, which contains the ſacred books of the law, but go out ſlowly, according to what is ſaid in Job, chap. xiv. ver. 16. Thou haſt counted my ſteps. Now God counts the ſteps of thoſe who go out of the ſynagogue, and rewards them. They are alſo to avoid turning their eyes upon objects that may raiſe luſtful deſires, nor muſt they paſs the gate of the ſynagogue without repeating an ejaculatory prayer to themſelves.

The ALMS of the JEWS, their VOWS, CONFESSION, PENANCE, FASTS, and ABSTINENCES.

LEO OF MODENA has treated of the alms of the Jews pretty exactly, and we agree with him, that they are [o] extremely charitable; and we ſhall only add one obſervation to what he ſays of their alms, which is, that they are not [p] to receive any charity of Chriſtians in public, nor of other ſtrangers, nor even of Chriſtian Princes. However, they receive them underhand, eſpecially if what their own people give be not ſufficient for the maintenance of the poor.

Of all things relating to religion, not one is ſo capable of leading piety aſtray as vows. A devout and zealous eccleſiaſtic ſhall ſuffer whole families to be robbed of their bread, under pretence of enriching a pariſh; without giving himſelf any concern about the injuſtice of ſuch as devote their eſtates to the church. Convents flow in wealth, which the devotion of Monks have no occaſion for, whilſt the children of ſuch as have devoted their patrimony to convents are begging alms. The jeſt is, that they conſecrate to God ſuch only as are uſeleſs to the world; and yet a maiden in the flower of her age, in high health, who probably might be tempted to have an inclination for her neighbour, is often forced to take the veil, becauſe ſhe has been devoted to God, whom ſhe does not love, and whom probably ſhe will have no thoughts of loving, at leaſt till ſhe begins to decline. The ſame thing happens to a vaſt number of young people, who are forced to make a vow of continence whilſt very young, tho' they may have excellent talents for propagation; which they are either obliged to bury, or employ irregularly. Love and hatred are the occaſion of very many raſh vows. In ſhort, vows generally create great abuſes in religion. We ſhall add nothing to what Leo of Modena has ſaid upon thoſe of the Jews.

The Jewiſh forms of confeſſion vary according to the country: beſides which they have their great and their little confeſſion, and both to be repeated ſtanding.

After

[n] All that Roſſe has ſaid in his treatiſe concerning the Religions of the World, of the manner wherein the Jews pray, is very confuſed and incorrect.

[o] Of this we have a very freſh Inſtance in the manner wherein they aſſiſted their brethren of Avignon, during the plague in 1721. The Engliſh and Dutch Jews remitted conſiderable ſums, and aſſiſted them with all things neceſſary to life and health.

[p] This is what Buxtorf ſays, Syn. Jud. cap. xliv. But M. Baſnage on the contrary, ſays in his Hiſtory of the Jews, chap. xix. that they are to receive thoſe alms publicly.

After confeſſion ſome of the zealots ſcourge themſelves; this is called [q] Malkut, but is neither general nor preſcribed. This ceremony is performed thus. Two of theſe devotees perform it by turns upon each other, and the patient lies along upon the ground with his face North and his back South, and never Eaſt and Weſt, becauſe it is the reſidence of God.

The penitent receives 39 ſtrokes with a bull's pizzle, confeſſes himſelf during the flagellation, and ſmites his breaſt. The operator performs his office repeating the 38. ver. of the lxxviii. Pſalm, and takes care to give a ſtroke at every word he pronounces [r]. The thirteen words of the verſe repeated three times make the number of 39 ſtrokes. The patient then riſes, and pays him who has diſciplined him exactly in the ſame coin. This cuſtom is founded upon a paſſage of Deuteronomy, chap. xxv. ver. 2. and mentions 40 ſtripes; but the reader may conſult [s] Buxtorf, for the way in which the Rabbi's explain the reaſon of fixing them at 39.

[t] Buxtorf too will furniſh him with the particular circumſtances of ſeveral private faſts, which the Jews voluntarily obſerve. On the eve of the faſt, he who has made a vow to faſt in private, offers to God his blood, and the fat of his body as a ſacrifice, which this voluntary penance is to bring down. The Rabbi's, the doctors of the law, and all perſons deſigned for teaching, are not obliged to theſe private faſts, repeated abſtinences exhauſting the body of its ſtrength; but they are to obſerve thoſe faſts which the church ordains. They are prohibited faſting on all feſtivals, on the Sabbath, and the day of the new moon.

The ABLUTIONS of the JEWS, and the care they are to take of the PURITY of their BODY.

THE Jews do the ſame thing upon a principle of religion, which phyſicians recommend by way of health. As ſoon as they are up, they eaſe themſelves; and as it was at ſuch time that the ancient Jews thought they ſtood moſt in need of the protection of their guardian angel, [u] when they ſat longer than uſual, they very civilly begged him not to be impatient, &c. After the diſcharge of nature, they are to avoid touching themſelves with their right hand, this hand being appropriated to writing the law, and handling the Phylacteries or Teffilin. In this condition, they are not to think of God, or pronounce his name. He who goes to rid himſelf of his load muſt turn to the North or South, and never to the Eaſt or Weſt, it being God's reſidence. All Jews do not think upon the particulars of this practice with the ſame exactneſs.

Immediately after they waſh, and the baſon is taken into the right hand, and by that given to the left, which is the other's ſervant. When the right is clean, it waſhes the left. They waſh up to the wriſt, and hold their fingers ſo that the water they have uſed may not ſoil them. There are other trifles to be obſerved, but we ſhall leave them to the enquiries of the curious, who will find them in Buxtorf's [w] Synagogue, and Baſnage's [x] Hiſtory of the Jews.

Such as affect devotion muſt have a larger doſe of patience than the reſt of mankind, for their punctilious regularity is never without ſome ſcruple; and the Jews (the German eſpecially) are largely furniſhed with them. For according to them, the water they have waſhed with muſt not be ſpilt, nor muſt they walk over it; nor ſcratch themſelves before the ablution, &c. They add, that the omiſſion of any of theſe circumſtances is terrible accidents. The face muſt be waſhed with the ſame care, and the particulars of liable to this ablution is in nothing ſhort of the former.

ECCLE-

[q] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xxv.
[r] They are exactly 13. in the Hebrew text.
[s] Syn. Jud. cap. xxv.
[t] Ibid. cap. xxx.
[u] Ibid. cap. viii.
[w] Syn. Jud. cap. viii.
[x] Chap. xix.

ECCLESIASTICAL PAINS and EXCOMMUNICATION.

IT is the buſineſs of the Parnaſſim privately to cenſure ſuch as live not according to the law; and if the criminal ſtands out againſt ſuch cenſure, they are at liberty to make it public, which is done in a full ſynagogue on the Sabbath. The man who has converſed with a woman who is impure, muſt undergo the ſcourge, and faſt forty days. A bare kiſs of a woman in ſuch a condition, or even a touch only, expoſes the huſband to a forty days faſt, nor can he drink wine, nor eat any thing hot but on the Sabbath only.

The civil puniſhment for murther is baniſhment for three years; the eccleſiaſtical, ſcourging in the ſynagogue during the term of baniſhment, and crying out during the ſcourging, I am a murtherer. This perſon is to drink no wine, nor eat meat all the time of the penance, to let his beard grow, to wear dirty linen, and torn clothes; to go with his head bare, or at leaſt covered but once a month, and have the hand that committed the murther in a chain hung round the neck. There are ſome who wear a ſort of iron doubled over their naked fleſh, and others that lie at the gate of the ſynagogue, and expoſe themſelves to be trampled upon by ſuch as go thither to their devotions. A blow, theft, bearing falſe-witneſs, &c. are puniſhed with a penance proportionable to the crime. But the adulterer is puniſhed the moſt ſeverely. He is to be put into cold water for ſeveral days ſucceſſively in the depth of winter, and if the waters be frozen, he is go up to the chin in the ice, which is broke on purpoſe, and to remain ſo long till an egg is boiled hard. If the crime be committed in ſummer, he is to be expoſed naked to bees or ants. Theſe pains are repeated in proportion to the enormity of the crime; but if there be a complication of crimes, as, if the adulterer has returned often to it, &c. the penance continues for whole years.

[y] Buxtorf, from whom we have taken theſe particulars, does not tell us, whether theſe penalties ſtill remain in full force; there is no doubt but they are inflicted, at leaſt in part, if the caſe requires them. The inſtance of [z] Acoſta ſhews, that canonical penalties, tho' not ſo common as formerly, yet are not abſolutely forgotten.

Excommunication was undoubtedly eſtabliſhed by the Jewiſh Sanhedrim under the government of the Maccabees. And is a conſequence of the cognizance of crimes, and puniſhment of the guilty, which that tribunal aſcribed to itſelf. There is reaſon to believe, that excommunication is very different from that which is often mentioned under the old law, by the name of Diminution or Retrenchment. When the reign of Tradition began to be ſet up, the Jewiſh clergy neglected no means of crying up the authority of the church, and drawing a ſupreme reſpect to the deciſions of its doctors. This laſt circumſtance, perhaps, as much contributed to the birth of excommunication as the firſt. Excommunication appears to the eye of the devotee with the terror of hell flames, which make a much ſtronger impreſſion upon conſciences weakened by fear and ſuperſtition, than the ſword of juſtice.

The Jews have their greater and leſſer excommunication. The leſſer is, as they ſay, but of thirty days; but they may be freed from it at the very inſtant it is thundered out againſt them, of which an example is to be found in the Hiſtory [a] of the Jews. If a man is wanting in reſpect to God, he is excommunicated and abſolved almoſt at the ſame time. Failure in reſpect to a doctor of the ſynagogue likewiſe brings upon them excommunication. In ſhort, notorious and crying ſins, prophanation, atheiſm, debauchery, ſchiſm, and apoſtacy have the ſame puniſhment.

According

[y] Syn. Jud. cap. xlvii.
[a] Baſnage, Lib. VI. chap. xxi.
[z] Bayle's Dictionary article Acoſta.

According to the Rabbi's, excommunication is ſo quick and piercing, that it penetrates into the body of the excommunicated perſon at 248 limbs; nor muſt any one come near him by the length of ſix foot. He is refuſed all human aſſiſtance, and that even by thoſe who belong to him; for if there be a corps in his houſe, or a child to be circumciſed, none muſt help him. Theſe are the ſurpriſing effects of bitterneſs of zeal[b]! The death of him is not lamented, a ſtone is ſet over his grave, to ſhew he deſerved ſtoning; and his relations are forbid going into mourning: no, on the contrary, they are to bleſs God for taking him out of the world, and the day of his death is a day of feaſting and jubilee, and muſt be ſpent in entertainments and diverſions; and by dreſſing themſelves in the moſt ſplendid manner. They are to ſignalize their extreme joy at ſeeing the church delivered from ſo wicked a member. A conduct ſo violent, and ſo contrary to humanity, is authorized by a ſentence ſtill more cruel and inhuman, which fully juſtifies this truth, that it is better to fall into the hands of God than of man; "N. N. is[c] excommunicated, "anathematiſed, curſed to execration, and exterminated by the book of the law, by the "precepts therein contained, by the curſe of Joſhua againſt Jericho, by that of Eliſha "againſt the children who derided him, by that with which he curſed Gehazi, &c." He is beſides curſed by heaven and earth, all the powers of darkneſs are let looſe againſt him, he is devoted to the maledictions of the angels; God is beſought that nothing good may ariſe from him, that his deſtruction may be ſpeedy, that all creatures may be his enemies, that a whirlwind may daſh him to pieces, that a fever and all other human infirmities may ſeize him, that his death may be unexpected and violent, that he may die in deſpair, and after all, that he may go into darkneſs. This ſentence is publiſhed with all imaginable ſolemnity, and repeated three times in threeſcore days; after which he is loaded with freſh curſes, if it be poſſible to find any more grievous; but if he be an apoſtate, they have a right to carry him off and kill him.

Excommunication may alſo fall upon beaſts. One of the Jewiſh Sages, but not yet arrived at that degree of patience which ſhews a man to be truly wiſe, excommunicated a dog, who had the inſolence to gnaw one of his ſhoes; and the excommunication gnawed the dog's tail with all the violence of material real fire.

M. Bayle's dictionary will furniſh us with almoſt ſpeaking proofs of the evils that man is expoſed to, who falls under this thunder. Acoſta, abovementioned, found by woful experience, that canonical puniſhments are ſometimes accompanied with a fuller deſtruction, a more complete deſolation, than thoſe of the ſecular arm. It was nothing but incivility and rudeneſs from his brethren; the very children were encouraged to inſult him in the open ſtreet, and throw ſtones at his houſe; they ran after him with hootings, and loaded him with curſes; he was ſpit upon, and the little boys were exhorted to do the ſame; his relations fled from him as from one infected with the plague; and not a ſoul would go near him in his ſickneſs. Let us admire the virtue of the excommunication thundered out againſt Acoſta; ſo long as the impiety of this excommunicated Jew ſubſiſted, one of his brothers was thereby authorized to detain the unhappy man's effects. So that all theſe calamities conſtrained him to reconcile himſelf to the church, or at leaſt to feign it.

The conditions on which he obtained his abſolution were loaded with a penance inſupportable to a man of honour. "He was obliged to mount the pulpit before a very "numerous aſſembly, and read aloud a paper wherein he confeſſed he had deſerved a "thouſand deaths. Being come down, he was ordered to retire to a corner of the ſyna-"gogue where he undreſſed to the waiſt, and pulled off his ſhoes and ſtockings. The "porter then tyed his hands to a pillar, and the Chanter gave him the thirty nine ſtripes; "upon which the preacher came up to him, made him ſit down on the ground, and "declared him abſolved from the excommunication, and paradiſe was no longer ſhut to "him

[b] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xxix.

[c] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. VI. chap. xxi.

" him as before. Acoſta then put on his clothes, laid himſelf on the ground at the door " of the ſynagogue, and they who went out, walked over him." This was the ceremony of the abſolution of this Jew, in Mr. Bayle's own words.

The SOLEMNITY of the SABBATH.

THE Sabbath is of divine inſtitution, and to prophane it, is ſapping one of the foundations of the Jewiſh religion. Nor are the Jews content with thoſe advantages which God has promiſed to ſuch as ſhall exactly obſerve the devotion of this day, but their doctors have encreaſed them conſiderably. The Sabbath prayer, ſaid on Friday evening, gives a holy day to the ſouls in purgatory, which laſts all Saturday, and during thoſe 24 hours they haſten to draw water to refreſh themſelves; and for this reaſon the ſages have forbid drawing to the laſt drop of water of a reſervoir, that the ſouls may not want it. The day of the Sabbath the damned are permitted to change their poſture. This day is begun [d] ſooner than the others, on purpoſe to diminiſh the pains of purgatory. We deſignedly omit many other advantages, which both the living and dead acquire by the obſervation of the Sabbath.

The Sabbath begins on Friday evening, half an hour before ſunſet, and the moſt miſerable Jew muſt then have his lamp lighted, tho' he were to beg oil to ſupply it. It is the women's buſineſs to light them; Eve, by ſeducing man to ſin, having extinguiſhed the light of the world; that is, not to talk in allegory, cauſed the death of man. She, who lights them, ſtretches out both her hands towards the luminary, after it begins to burn, and repeats a benediction appropriated to this ceremony [e]. The faithful Jew muſt always with his own hands do ſome work which may contribute to the glory of the Sabbath, tho' he had a regiment of ſervants at his heels. On Friday they pare their nails for the ſake of the Sabbath, and this is the ceremony obſerved in the operation. They begin with the left hand, and cut the little finger firſt, and then ſkip to the middle finger, then on to the Index, after that to the third, and ſo laſt to the thumb. In the right hand, they begin with the ſecond or middle finger, from that to the little finger, &c. Nor muſt they throw the parings on the ground, or trample on them; but hide them under ground, or burn them. At their Friday's ſupper, which is the beginning of their Sabbath, the father of the family, or maſter of the houſe, conſecrates and bleſſes the bread and wine; and begins with the wine, during which he looks ſtedfaſtly on the Sabbath lamp. The ſtedfaſt attention is a ſort of remedy, which ſerves to repair the diminution of ſight ſuffered during the whole week before, which is a lucky diſcovery owing to ſome of their ſages. At the conſecration of the bread, the father of the family holds it up on high, between his hands, whilſt he pronounces the name of God. Two loaves are ſet upon the table in memory of the double portion of manna, which they gathered on Fridays. They are ordered to enjoy themſelves on this day, but above all, not to forget the poor and afflicted, nor conjugal duty. Nay it is of great importance to acquit themſelves well [f] on the night of the Sabbath; and ſuch conſiderable advantages ariſe from it, that he that ſhould refuſe to pay the marriage tribute to his wife on this day, would almoſt paſs for a madman. And we ſhall point them out. Their ſages have declared, that the work of marriage, warmly and zealouſly performed on the Sabbath, is a great honour to God, and as ſuch rewarded; for it ſhews a deſire to pleaſe God by enjoying themſelves always. They who have the good fortune to ſee this labour of the Sabbath crowned with any fruit may aſſure themſelves, that what they bring into the world is a choſen member of the Jewiſh faith, a child of grace, an accompliſhed diſciple of the wiſemen, and who will infallibly become one himſelf; but [g] the mind and heart muſt be lifted up to God, and remain ſo all the while this conjugal homage is mutually doing.

The

[d] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xv. [e] Id. cap. xv. [f] Id. ibid.
[g] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xv.

A. Les PRETRES descendans d'ARON donnant la BENEDICTION au PEUPLE.

B. Maniere d'EXPOSER la LOY au PEUPLE avant que de commancer à la LIRE.

The prayers and benedictions of the Sabbath are more numerous that those of the week. It must be agreed, that they would in general be good and edifying, did not a Pharisaical pride mix with them; for the Jews thank God, that separating them from the rest of the world, he has reserved and chosen their nation singly from all others. Their prayers never omit this distinction; and however humble they may pretend to appear in the eyes of God, they look upon themselves as much superior to the rest of mankind [h]. They may omit wearing their Phylacteries on the Sabbath.

[i] The grand ceremony of the Sabbath is the exaltation, or shewing of the law to the people; and this the Chazan performs, at the same time saying to the congregation, Behold the law which Moses set before the children of Israel, the law of the eternal is perfect, &c. Having thus shewed it, he lays it upon the desk, and calls out [k] seven of the congregation to read the section or lesson for the day. The Cohen begins, a Levite follows, and the seculars come after [l]. An eighth person reads some passages out of the Prophets, and this is called Haphtara; and any but women are admitted to read. After all this, the Chazan lifts up the book of the law, and blesses the people; after which it is put up, and the prayers are repeated.

There is a sermon on the Sabbath, and all other solemn days, which is in the vulgar tongue, but all passages out of the Bible, or doctors of the law, are quoted in Hebrew, and these sermons are often crammed with impertinent citations. Fable and obscure ideas, much noise and agitation to express a piece of nonsense very difficult to guess at, is sometimes all the merit of the preacher and his sermon. This is to be attributed to the wrong method of study, which the Rabbi's have chosen.

On the Sabbath [m], they have a sort of commemoration of the dead, and sometimes too a prayer for them; after which many offerings and charities are bestowed. Some Jews of understanding and credit have assured us, that this custom is purely political, and has been introduced only to turn to advantage the vanity of wealthy and considerable men, who affect to be lavish on these occasions; and this is a snare into which the superstitious afterwards fall.

After evening prayer the benediction is again said, and the Jews unanimously return thanks to God. Whatever religious ceremonies are afterwards performed, are only to separate the Sabbath from the following week, and are called Habdalla. Though Leo of Modena has [n] described this Habdalla, we shall describe it once more after Buxtorf, who gives it according to the manner of the German Jews. The master of the house performs this ceremony, standing in the presence of his family and domestics at home. A lamp or flambeau is lighted, and he has by him a box of perfumes, and the most exquisite are never too good for the Habdalla. He takes a glass of wine or beer in his right hand, and says aloud, God is my Saviour, I will not be afraid, &c. Salvation cometh from God; I will take the cup of salvation, &c. After that he blesses the wine, and at the beginning of the benediction pours a drop or two upon the ground. The benediction over, he takes the glass in his left hand and the perfumes in his right, blesses and smells to them, and makes the company do the same; then takes the glass into his right hand again, goes up to the flambeau, by it examines the nails of his left hand attentively; he then clenches that hand, and opens it again immediately a second time, examines the nails of that hand very near the light, and pronounces a third benediction, in which he blesses God the Creator of light. He goes thro' the same ceremony with the right hand, and concludes with taking the glass into the same hand, and blessing God, who hath separated what is holy from what is prophane, light from darkness, the Jews from other nations, and the Sabbath from the other days of the week. At repeating this benediction, he pours out a little wine, swallows a few drops, and then presents the glass to the company.

The

[h] Id. cap. xvi.

[i] Basnage's History of the Jews, Lib. VI. chap. i.

[k] On festivals, more or fewer persons are called; and the number depends upon the solemnity of the day. The first day of the moon, four are called, on the day of expiation, six.

[l] Leo of Modena above.

[m] Buxtorf Syn. Jud. cap. xvi.

[n] Leo of Modena above.

The Jews ground the reaſon of this ceremony upon God's dividing the light from the darkneſs, and what he hath ordained in the 10. ver. of x. chap. of Leviticus, to ſeparate that which is holy, from that which is prophane. In ſhort, this ceremony repreſents the diſtinction God has made between them and other nations, who are prophane in regard to them. The perfumes at the concluſion of the Sabbath, and whilſt the Habdalla is performing, ſerve to correct the ill ſcent of hell, whoſe gate is then open to receive in the damned ſouls[o]. This is the opinion of the German Jews, but ſome very learned Jews ſay with more reaſon, that light and perfumes are emblems of the law of God given to the Jews, and of that holineſs [p], which we are never to loſe ſight of in the courſe of our labours. As to the nails, they are conſidered as an image of fruitfulneſs, as they grow very faſt; or as the emblem of ſtrength. There are ſeveral other reaſons given for this examination of the nails, which are more frivolous than the two former. The pouring out of the wine repreſents the plenty expected from our labours. Some Jews rub their eyes with it, and look upon it as an excellent remedy for ſtrengthening the ſight; and others make uſe of it as the catholics do holy water, ſprinkling their houſe, beds, cradles, young children, and every thing elſe that may be expoſed to the inſults of Satan.

THE NEW MOON.

THIS feſtival exempts women from all labour; but men are allowed to work at their vocation as uſual[q]. The Jews pretend the new moon is in a particular manner the feſtival of women, as a memorial of their liberality in giving their jewels to contribute to the magnificence of divine ſervice. This action, ſo glorious to a ſex, who place all their pride and happineſs in dreſs and appearance, and to whom nothing is ſo dear, was performed on the new moon of the month of March.

Some Jewiſh zealots faſt on the eve of this feſtival, and beg of God, that the new moon may be propitious to them.

Some days after this, the Jews, being met by night on a terraſs or open court, in ſome meaſure conſecrate this planet by praiſing God, who hath been pleaſed to renew the moon, and who will, in the ſame manner, renew the Jews his elect, &c. The prayer ends with a benediction addreſſed to God, thro' the moon, his creature [r]. Three leaps, which are to be looked upon as the tranſports of a ſacred joy, accompany this benediction; immediately after which, they ſay to the moon, may it be as impoſſible to my enemies to hurt me, as it is for thee to touch me. Theſe words are ſucceeded by imprecations againſt their enemies. However, this ceremony is not equally in uſe with all of them. As to eclipſes, ſome of the ſuperſtitious imagine them ill omens, but they have pretty well got rid of this folly; at leaſt ſuch as live among Chriſtians.

The PENANCE of the Month ELUL.

THIS month anſwers to our Auguſt, which the devotees paſs in penance and mortification; they examine their whole paſt conduct, and from that time take a firm reſolution to lead a better life for the future [s]. All this month the Italian Jews riſe before day, to pray, and confeſs to God, and to perform other acts of repentance; but the German Jews do this only four days before the new year. As ſoon as Elul is come in, a horn is ſounded night and morning in the ſynagogue, for which two reaſons are given. [t] Moſes went the ſecond time, very early in the morning on the firſt day of Elul, to the top of mount Sinai, to receive the new tables of the law from God's hands, [o] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xvi.

[p] An Odor is often taken in the Scripture for holineſs. It is commonly ſaid of a man who has led a good life, that he died in the Odor of ſanctity.
[q] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xxii.
[r] Ibid. cap. xxxii.
[s] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xxiii.
[t] Vide Exodus, chap. xix. and xxxiv.

Le SON du COR au PREMIER JOUR de L'AN.

Dessiné d'après nature et gravé par B Picart 1725

Le CHIPUR ou le JOUR du PARDON tel qu'il se celebre chez les JUIFS ALLEMANDS.

hands, and did not come down till the 10. of Tisri, the day of celebrating the feast of Expiation; and they say, he ordered them to sound a horn in the camp of the Israelites, whilst he was going up into the mountain, to the end, that they might no longer say, we know not what is become of this Moses, &c. 2. The sound of the horn revives in the sinner's mind the fear of God's judgments, and inclines him to repentance [a]. It is farther believed, that the sound of the horn stuns the Devil, and makes him forget that the new year begins so soon; which puts him out of a capacity of rising in judgment against them. However the sounding the horn is discontinued on the eve of the new year, nor do they celebrate the feast of the moon of Tisri, which is the first month of the year, or at least not till after the day of Expiation.

The penances of the month Elul consist in plunging themselves into cold water, confession, beating their breast whilst in the water with great blows of their fist, and disciplining themselves [w]. Such as have a real concern for the Circumcision of the heart, and of an entire regeneration, accompany the austerities of their penance with alms. On the eve of the new year they say all their prayers [x] fasting. The penitents persuade themselves, that God compounds with them, and forgives them at least a good part of their sins; for they are not of the same opinion as the Calvinists, that with all their repentance they are unprofitable Servants, but on the contrary, imagine, that their acts of contrition are exceeding meritorious.

The FEAST of the NEW YEAR.

ON new year's-day the horn is sounded, to advertise the Jews, that they are to hearken with attention and humility to the judgments of God, and thank him for his favours and support during the year that is just ended. This festival lasts two days, and the synagogue is to pray with a loud voice, and in humbler posture than usual. In Germany the Jews send their children to the Grand Rabbi to receive his benediction, and when they sit down to table the master of the house takes a bit of bread, and dips it in honey, saying, May this year be sweet and fruitful, and all the guests do the same. They seldom omit serving up a [z] sheep's head at this entertainment, and if the Rabbi's are to be believed, who are excellent judges on such occasions, they will observe on this day to eat fennel, garlick, and some other things of the same kind.

We have already mentioned the sounding of the horn, which is performed standing in the place where the law is read, the whole congregation remaining in the same posture. This is made of a ram's horn, being a monument of Isaac's ram. It is crooked, as representing the posture of a man humbling himself. The time for blowing this horn is from sun rise to sun set.

The ancient Jews discharged their sins upon a he-goat, who afterwards was sent into the desert; but the [a] modern Jews, instead of a goat, now do it upon the fish. They go after dinner to the brink of a pond, and there shake their clothes over it with all their might. They take this practice from a passage of the Prophet [b] Micah.

[w] The Malkut.

[x] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xxiii. This devotion does not hinder the German Jews from eating; so Buxtorf says, chap. xxiii. of his synagogue.

[y] See the figure of the horn in the cut.

[z] This mystical head represents that of the ram, sacrificed instead of Isaac. Genesis chap. xxvii. Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. chap. xxiv.

[a] The Germans. Vide Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xxiv.

[b] Chap. vii. ℣. 19. He will have compassion on us; he will subdue our iniquities, and cast all our sins into the depths of the sea.

The EVE of the CHIPUR, or day of EXPIATION.

THE ten firſt days of the year are ſet apart for repentance, and returning to God by a ſincere converſion. According to the Jews, the ſupreme Being, during the nine firſt days, examines the actions of men, and on the tenth pronounces ſentence. They faſt, pray often, afflict themſelves, and ſhew viſible marks of an extraordinary piety, to the end that on the day of the Chipur, they may be ſet down in the book of life, and blotted out of the book of death, wherein they might find their names without repentance.

The Jews have long practiſed the Capara, which was a ceremony performed on the eve of the Feaſt of Expiation. [c] The men choſe a cock, the women a hen, and big bellied women both. The father of the family, or maſter of the houſe holding the cock in his hand, repeated ſome paſſages out of the Pſalms, and the book of Job; after which they ſtruck their head three times with the cock, at each blow ſaying; This cock ſhall ſtand in my place, he ſhall expiate my ſins, he ſhall ſuffer death, but I will enjoy life. This ceremony thrice repeated, as repreſenting the expiation of his own ſins, thoſe of his family, and thoſe of his ſervants, was imitated from the [d] practice of the ancient High Prieſt. After the three blows given, he twiſted the cock's neck, and ſtrangled him, to ſhew the ſinner, he had deſerved to loſe his life; he cut his throat, to ſhew he ought to have had his blood ſpilt; he threw him with violence againſt the pavement, to ſhew he had deſerved ſtoning; and at laſt roaſted him, that the ſinner might thereby take the hint, do himſelf juſtice, and learn, he deſerved to be roaſted in fire everlaſting. The animal's entrails were thrown on the top of the houſe, for which remarkable cuſtom two reaſons were aſſigned. 1. They believe, that ſin proceeds from the heart and other entrails, ſo that a thing ſo deteſtable was to be left to the birds of the air; and it was for this reaſon, that the Egyptians formerly threw the entrails of the dead into the Nile. 2. It is poſſible, they endeavoured to imitate their anceſtors, under the ancient law of ſending a he-goat into the deſart loaded with the iniquities of the people. This cock was to be white, as moſt proper to be charged with ſins; for they ſuppoſed a cock of any other colour had his load already. After the cock was killed, they went to prayers in ſepulchres, and gave away the value of the cock, thus ſacrificed, in money to the poor. Formerly they left them the cock; but the poor afterwards reflecting on the quality of the fleſh thus covered with iniquities, refuſed it [e].

They likewiſe prepare themſelves for the day of Expiation by ablutions, order tapers or candles for that day, and every one carries his own to the ſynagogue [f]. In Germany every man has one, but not the women; in other places the women have them too. Zealots carry two, one to light the body, and the other the ſoul. They generally reconcile themſelves with all their enemies, and even ſeek them in order to make their peace, and aſk pardon of them, if they are the aggreſſors; and if the reconciliation is refuſed, they proteſt againſt ſuch refuſal before three witneſſes, and return three times to the charge; after which the penitent's conſcience is diſcharged from all rancour, and indeed ſuch a proceeding is very proper to procure peace and union. However great the offence may be, they have not always the courage to refuſe a reconciliation ſo importunately demanded; but may it not be inſincere, and may they not think they have a good right to diſcredit it, under pretence of patching it up again on the tenth day of another year? Be that as it will, two things contribute to make this method very uſeful; the effect it has on the conſciences of men of probity, and reparation to which it obliges the pride of others [g].

The

[c] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. XXV.
[d] Leviticus, chap. xvi. ℣. 17.
[e] This ceremony is very rarely practiſed.
[f] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. XXV.
[g] Roſſe, Author of the Religions of the World, in his deſcription of the ceremonies performed on the Eve of the Chipur, is, as uſual, very confuſed and careleſs.

The FEAST of EXPIATION, or the CHIPUR.

THIS is the feſtival ſpoken of in the book of Leviticus, chapters xvi. and xxiii. ver. 17. When the feſtival begins, they meet in the ſynagogue, where every man lights his candle, and ſings out the prayers and anthems in a loud, but mournful tone. We ought to do the Jews that juſtice which is due to them; they obſerve every thing that may be called the outſide of repentance with extreme care, and as imitation is prevailing on ſuch occaſions, the ſpectator himſelf can hardly forbear feeling a ſharp remorſe for his own ſins, at the ſight of ſo many external [h] ſigns of contrition at once appearing in a Jew, who is going to complete his repentance, and ſolemnly condemn himſelf before God, by a long enumeration of his ſins. This confeſſion is diſpoſed alphabetically, each ſin has its letter, and thus riſes more eaſily to the ſinner's memory.

The women too light up candles at home, and preſage good or bad luck, according as the light burns.

The Jews explain the affliction of the ſoul, ſpoken of in the xxiii. chap. of Leviticus, by a total privation of every thing that can recreate the body, or agreeably amuſe the mind; but children under eleven years of age; women with child, or newly delivered, or that ſuckle; ſick perſons, and old men; all theſe are excepted.

On the firſt evening of the feſtival, people of an irregular and ſcandalous life are admitted amongſt the congregation, and even invited; they being among the faithful, as Galbanum [i] among perfumes; and two Rabbi's who ſtand, one on the right and the other on the left of the Chanter, perform this ſolemn invitation, declaring to the congregation, that they allow them to pray with the wicked. After which the Chanter goes and opens the Hechal, and ſings a pretty long prayer, which the congregation ſay to themſelves; and which annuls all raſh vows, oaths, and reſolutions of the foregoing year, provided they were made freely and voluntarily.

Some penitents paſs the night, and ſometimes all the next day ſtanding, without ſhifting place, perpetually in prayer and meditation; but ſuch as paſs the night at home, muſt be again by break of day at the ſynagogue; and go on with their repentance. At the cloſe of the day, the Rabbi ſtretches out his hands towards the people, and gives them the benediction [k] of Moſes, which the people receive with great humility, covering their face with their hand, believing that God is behind the Rabbi; and that therefore man ought not to have the boldneſs to look at him. It was thus that the hand of God covered the face of Moſes whilſt that holy Legiſlator [l] humbled himſelf before God for the ſins of the Iſraelites; which is very probably the real origin of this cuſtom.

After the benediction the Chazan goes up into the pulpit, and ſounds the horn, and the new moon is kept, as ſoon as the ſolemnity of the Expiation is over. Some Jews prepare their tents for the Feaſt of Tabernacles immediately after the Expiation.

That Jew, who has perfectly performed the taſk of repentance, which the ſynagogue enjoins on account of the Chipur, may without fear treat common devotees with contempt, ſince God's own word aſſures him, that [m] from thenceforth he may eat his bread with joy, and that God accepts his good works. This is pure Phariſaiſm, but ſome are to be excepted, whoſe devotion is more nice, and who are for repenting ſo effectually, that the divine mercy might never be expoſed to any return to it in 24 hours.

The

[h] Theſe ſigns are dirty ragged clothes, mourning, or ſhrouds; a contrite and dejected air; a long beard; eyes caſt down, which penance has made languid, and diſpoſed to weeping; an holy eagerneſs determining the penitent to preſs thro' the croud of devotees, and be firſt in the ſynagogue; and ſo total a diſtraction, as to rob him of the uſe of his ſenſes, whilſt he is going over the alphabet of his ſins. In ſhort, an exact diet that exhauſts the animal ſpirits, leaving him but juſt enough to ſupport the body, during the meditation of the ſoul.

[i] Vide Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. 26.

[k] Numbers, chap. vi.

[l] Exodus, chap. xxxiii.

[m] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xxvi.

III. DISSERTATION

The FESTIVAL of the PASSOVER.

THE Jews obſerve this feſtival with great punctuality. The grain neceſſary for the unleavened bread is prepared at leaſt thirty days before, and the precaution taken in the choice and preſervation of it is altogether extraordinary. [n] For inſtance, it is never carried to be ground upon a horſe's back that has no ſaddle on, for fear of heating it; and the ſack, that has held this grain from one Paſſover to another, muſt be unſewed, waſhed, and ſewed again. The examinations of the leaven are innumerable, and the ſcruples, it gives to Jews of the leaſt delicacy in religion, are in no ſmall number [o]. The ſun itſelf is not bright enough to give light into thoſe creeks and corners of the houſe, where unluckily any crumbs of leavened bread may be ſlipt in; not content with the ſun's light they take [p] a candle, and if the maſter of the family has the leaſt ſuſpicion that his ſight is weak, he makes no difficulty of taking his ſpectacles, the better to look into the cracks and interſtices of the walls. But he is ſtill diſſatisfied with ſo ſtrict a ſearch; for after ferretting every where, by night, by day, by the ſun, by candle light, and with ſpectacles, he beſeeches God that he would pleaſe to make up the defects of his ſearch: That all leavened bread in the houſe, as well what he has found, as what he has not, may become like the duſt of the earth, and be reduced to nothing.

This Sabbath preceding the Paſſover [q] is called the Grand Sabbath; and there is then a ſermon upon the Paſchal Lamb. Two days at leaſt before the Paſſover all their utenſils are cleaned, and even very often bought new. Nor are the Jews leſs ſcrupulous as to the compoſition of their unleavened bread, than in their ſearch for the leavened bread, and in the preparation of the grain. The water for the paſte of their unleavened bread is examined and preſerved with all imaginable care; nor would it be amiſs for him who draws it [r], at the ſame time, to lift up his heart to God, and if he ſaid a prayer half aloud, the water would only be better for it; and the maſter of the houſe, or father of the family would do well, ſome way, to have a hand in making the unleavened bread; if he cannot, or muſt not ſet his hand to the paſte, at leaſt to ſtand by during ſo pious an operation; to give [s] free courſe to ſuch ſmall bits of paſte as fall off from the great lump, and full liberty to the cats and mice to eat them, ſtill as they roll down upon the ground; and to encourage the labourers at it by pious exhortations.

She who makes the paſte takes a lump, and makes a cake of, and burns it, which cake was, under the old law, the right of the prieſt. Care muſt be taken, not to make the paſte in any place expoſed to the ſun, and to knead without intermiſſion, leſt it ſhould ferment. This unleavened bread is made flat, generally round, and is very inſipid and full of eyes; but wealthy people, and ſuch as cannot bear with any thing miſerable, mix eggs and ſugar with this bread of affliction and tears.

All the leaven found in the narrow ſearch that has been made, and the veſſel too whereinto it was put, are both burnt. This is founded upon a paſſage in Exodus [t].

The table at which they ſit to eat their Paſſover, is covered and adorned by their women; and the maſter of the family with his children and ſervants ſit down to it. On this table are unleavened loaves, and a plate covered in which are three myſterious cakes, one for the High Prieſt, one for the Levites, and a third for the people, the ſhoulder-bone of a lamb, or at leaſt a part of one [u]. The ſhoulder, when ſerved up whole at this ceremony, has a hard egg with it, to which is added a meat repreſenting the bricks their anceſtors were formerly forced to make in Egypt, and is a compoſition of apples, almonds, [n] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. VI. chap. ix.

[o] The German Jews obſerve theſe things with much more care than the reſt of them.
[p] It muſt be wax.
[q] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xvii.
[r] Id. Ibid.
[s] The father on this occaſion ſays, let all the bits of paſte, broken off the maſs, be free; but all Jews are not ſo ſcrupulous as to the compoſition of their unleavened bread.
[t] Exodus, chap. xii. ℣. 12.
[u] The Portugueſe Jews have this bone on the table during the whole eight days of the Paſſover.

THE SEARCH for the LEAVEN &c.

A. The Mistress of the family puts Leavened Bread in various places, to the end that her Husband in his search may find it.

L' EXAMEN du LEVAIN &c.

A. La Maitresse de la maison, qui met du PAIN LEVÉ en divers endroits, afin que son Mari qui en fait la recherche en trouve.

THE PASSOVER of the PORTUGUESE JEWS.

1. A Dish containing a Shoulder bone of Lamb, and a hard Egg. 2. A Dish of bitter Herbs. 3. A Dish consisting of Figs, Apples, Almonds, Mus &c. hashed & broiled all together, representing the manner of their making Bricks in Egypt. 4. Sauce for the bitter Herbs. 5. Half. Leavened cake, which the Master of each family breaks in pieces & Distributes amongst the Guests. AB. On this occasion all of Jewish descents are included. 6. A napkin which covered the cake. 7. A basket containing y Mutzot or Paschal bread.

Le REPAS de PAQUES chez les JUIFS PORTUGAIS

1. Le Plat, où est un Os d'Epaule d'Agneau, avec un Oeuf dur. 2. Plat aux sont les Herbes amères. 3. Plat de Figues, Pommes, Amandes, Canelle &c. hachées et cuites ensemble, representant la matière dont ils faisoient les Briques en Egypte. 4. Plat avec la Sauce pour tremper les Herbes ameres. 5. Moitié des Gateaux Levées, dont le Pere de Famille rompt des morceaux, qu'il distribue à tous ceux qui sont à table. AB. tous les Domestiques Juifs sont à la même Table, avec lui. 6. Serviette, sous laquelle le Gateau a été caché. 7. Panier où sont les Matsot, ou Pain de Paques.

Drawn after the Life by B. Picart.

C. Du Bosc Fecit et Ex.

almonds, nuts, figs, &c. dreſſed in wine and ſeaſoned with cinnamon broke into pieces, to repreſent the ſtraw that was uſed in their brick making. Another plate holds lettuce, chervil, creſſes, wild ſuccory and parſley, which are the bitter herbs, to which they add a vinegar cruet by them.

[w] They are to ſit down to table with the air of people in haſte. After the conſecration of their Paſſover, a glaſs of wine is ſerved round to every one in company, and even to infants in the cradle: and they waſh their hands either before or after the conſecration. The maſter of the houſe muſt ſit at table in an eaſy chair, with his left elbow on the table, the gueſts being in the ſame poſture; this is an air of liberty they give themſelves, to ſhew that which their forefathers recovered by their departure out of Egypt. The glaſs being drank off, each man dips a few of the bitter herbs in vinegar, whilſt the maſter at the ſame time repeats a prayer agreable to the circumſtances of the ceremony. He then breaks the Levites cake in two, hides one of the pieces under his plate, to ſhew the manner in which the Iſraelites eſcaped, in haſtily hiding their unleavened bread, takes the other, and holding it up over the ſhoulder of the lamb, beſpeaks the family, who are likewiſe to lay their hands upon the ſame piece, in theſe words; behold the bread of miſery and oppreſſion, which our forefathers did eat in Egypt; let him that is hungry draw near and eat. This is the ſacrifice of the Paſchal Lamb, &c. The ſhoulder of the lamb is then again ſet upon the table, and wine again filled out, but the plate or baſket wherein the cakes were is ſet aſide [x]. This ſhoulder, ſay they, repreſents the powerful arm of the Lord, who delivered them from the oppreſſion of the Egyptians.

After this ceremony the father of the family orders an hymn to be ſung, conſiſting of a pious recital of the miraculous deliverance of their anceſtors, which is begun by a young child, whoſe buſineſs it is [y], likewiſe to put the queſtions concerning the ceremonies of the Paſſover, which the father explains the particulars of, giving a reaſon for each reſpective myſtery. When they come to that part of the hymn, where the ten plagues of Egypt are mentioned, they ſpurt a little of the wine out of the glaſs with their finger, thereby ſignifying their wiſhes that thoſe plagues may be removed far from them; at the ſame time raiſing their voices, which they had before lowered, they drink off the wine, and go on with the hymn. The maſter of the houſe waſhes his hands a ſecond time, there being reaſon to believe, they may be ſoiled ſince his ſitting down to table; takes one of the cakes, and after conſecrating breaks it, and preſents a piece to each of the gueſts; but leaves the others untouched, becauſe in this night of tears and ſadneſs they are to be content with a morſel of bread. This bread and the bitter herbs are to be eaten with the paſte already mentioned, after which they come directly to the [z] lamb. The meal being almoſt over, the maſter of the houſe takes half the cake which he had hid under his plate, eats a bit, and breaks off ſmall pieces for the reſt of the family [a]. This is the laſt thing they are to eat, but they drink a third or fourth glaſs of wine. At the fourth, the maſter taking the glaſs, begs of God to pour out his wrath over thoſe nations, who acknowledge him not. [b] Theſe four times they drink are ſo many myſteries. The Rabbi's have been careful in multiplying ties ſo proper to keep the vulgar in awe and admiration.

Many differences are formed amongſt the Jews between the ancient way of celebrating the Paſſover, and the modern [c]. 1. Formerly the lamb was eaten roaſted whole; but ſince their ſacrifices have ceaſed, which could not be offered any where but at Jeruſalem, they roaſt one part and boil another, or even cut it in pieces, which is enough to prevent its being ſacrificed. 2. The want of ſacrificing, obliges them now to ſuppreſs ſeveral

[w] This is particularly obſerved by the German Jews.

[x] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xviii.

[y] In imitation of what is written, Exod. chap. xii. ℣. 26. and other places. When your children ſhall ſay unto you, what mean you by this ſervice?

[z] That is, where it is ſerved up to the Paſſover meal.

[a] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xviii.

[b] Hereby are typified four benefits conferred by God on the Jews, and which are contained in the vi. chap. 6, and 7, ℣. Exod. Vide Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xviii.

[c] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. VI. chap. ix.

veral hymns relating to the Paſchal Lamb. 3. The diſperſion of the Jews likewiſe obliges them to beſeech God for the re-eſtabliſhment of Jeruſalem, of the Temple, and its ſacrifices, and to deliver them now, as he formerly did their forefathers from the tyranny of the Egyptians. 4. The modern Jews end their meal with the unleavened bread, whereas they formerly ended it with the lamb. 5. At eating the lamb they now omit girding their loins, taking a ſtaff in their hands, pulling off their ſhoes, all which was practiſed under the ancient law; but however, they take care to preſerve that humility and attention which are due to this religious ceremony. They hold their head down during the whole time of their eating, and ſuch Jews as are eminent for their piety, carry nothing to their mouth, without contemplating on the myſtery with veneration.

The FESTIVAL of PENTECOST.

THE Jews call the 50 days, reckoned between the Paſſover and the Pentecoſt, Homer days. The reaſon of this name of Homer is found in the xxiii. chap. 10. and following verſes of Leviticus.

At the Pentecoſt the ſacrifice of the day is read by five perſons; together with the hiſtory of Ruth, becauſe it frequently mentions the harveſt. They at this time regale with all ſorts of delicacies made of milk, which they look upon as the ſymbol of the law, upon account of its ſweetneſs and whiteneſs; and as the Jews value themſelves upon having, as far as is poſſible, the moſt expreſs and ſenſible images of every remarkable circumſtance that happened at the birth of their religion, they never omit at this time to ſerve up to table a pretty thick cake, which they call the Cake of Sinai, which is to put them in mind of mount Sinai, whereon God gave them the law.

This is what is moſt remarkable in this feſtival beſides what Leo of Modena has already ſaid upon it. It was formerly called the feaſt of the Harveſt, becauſe the firſt of their grain and fruit was then offered, which was the end of this ſolemnity: but this cannot be in Europe, harveſt falling much later than Whitſuntide. But it might bear this name in the land of Canaan, Arabia, and the neighbourhood of the Red Sea. Some inſtitutions, and even religious ones, at their riſe depended on times, places, and other circumſtances; and all of this ſort ſhould by degrees be aboliſhed, tho', on the contrary, mankind religiouſly adhere to them, even at a time when they are grown wholly uſeleſs. It plainly appears, that their uſeleſsneſs makes them ridiculous; and yet they will be continued to the dregs of time.

At the Pentecoſt the German Jews adorn their candleſticks, lamps, and the Pulpit of the Hechal with flowers and odoriferous herbs. The Portugueſe did ſo formerly, and the Italian Jews ſtill do ſo.

The FEAST of TENTS or TABERNACLES.

THIS feſtival is the image of the journey and ſufferings of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs of the Red Sea, and of the uninterrupted cares of Providence, which preſerved them for forty years, in frightful and barren plains, without houſes, always expoſed to the injuries of the air, but without their being ever incommoded by them.

The Jews paſs the time of this feſtival under tents ſet up either before or behind their houſes, either in the court-yard, or the garden [d]. The tent muſt be no more than twenty cubits, nor leſs than ten ſpans high, and muſt, as far as they are able, be built in an agreable airy place, free from all ill ſmells. The rich adorn them with tapeſtry, over which they hang boughs of trees loaden with fruit: ſometimes oranges, limons, &c. ſome-

[d] See the cut.

the PROCESSION of PALMES of the PORTUGUESE JEWS

PROCESSION des PALMES chez les JUIFS PORTUGAIS

JEWISH ENTERTAINMENT during the FEAST of TABERNACLES.

REPAS des JUIFS pendant la FÊTE des TENTES.

B. Picart delineavit.

C. Du Bosc. Fecit.

ſometimes only boughs of barren trees, ſuch as gourds, or even no more than willow. The tents are hung with leaves on the outſide to the top, but not covered with them: nor muſt the leaves be ſuffered to die. In ſhort, they muſt neither be ſet up under any houſe nor tree.

During this feſtival, they appear at the ſynagogue with one [e] branch of palm-tree, three of myrtle, and two of willow all tied together, which they carry in their right hand, and in their left hand a branch of limon-tree with its fruit. Theſe they bring ſo near as to touch each other, and as they turn them round ſhake them firſt towards the Eaſt, then to the South, afterwards towards the Weſt; and laſtly, towards the North. There is a myſtery contained under each of theſe branches. The palm, bearing an inſipid fruit, is the emblem of the hopycrite; the myrtle, which tho' barren, has a moſt agreable ſmell, is that of ſuch as perform good works without the law: the willow is the ſymbol of the wicked, and the limon of the juſt. They go in proceſſion round the deſk with theſe branches in their hands, which was formerly performed round the altar at Jeruſalem.

The ſeventh day is a grand day. They then lay aſide all but the willow bough, and [f] go ſeven times round the deſk. The prayers are repeated faſter than uſual, for which they give this reaſon, [g] that during their journey in the deſart, they were obliged to be quick in every thing, even in divine ſervice. Seven copies of the law are taken out of the Hechal, the deſk ſet out with flowers; and becauſe this and the ſucceeding day, which is the eighth day of the feſtival, are days of rejoycing for the ſynagogue, they abandon themſelves to ſuch exceſs of joy, as ſurprizes thoſe who do not penetrate into the myſterious part of the Jewiſh ceremonies. They move and toſs themſelves too and fro with great agitation, repeating their prayers with much noiſe and haſte, and ſtrike the benches with their willow branches. The mind of man, always forward to make a diſadvantageous judgment of that which ſhocks him, and the myſtery of which he is ignorant of, can ſcarce refrain giving ſentence againſt religious acts where gravity is wanting. The coolneſs of piety agrees but ill with ſuch devout ſallies, and people little uſed to figure and myſtery, are indiſcreet enough to aſk thoſe who are pleaſed to ſerve God in that manner, whether it be allowable to jumble the worſhip of God with ceremonies that expoſe religion to the raillery and diverſion of wits and ſcoffers. The ſeven turns round the deſk are performed, as they ſay, in memory of Joſhua's proceſſion round the walls of Jericho.

This feſtival begins at home with the bleſſings ſucceeded by a ſupper, and they divert themſelves at table in the beſt manner they are able. Private devotion muſt ſucceed the public; and the father of the family does not begin the conſecration of the feſtival, till after he has been at prayers in the ſynagogue till night. During the whole feſtival, they ought to lodge in their tents, but in the manner they are built, devotion could not be able to bear out againſt the weather, eſpecially in cold countries.

They leave their tents at the end of the eighth day towards night.

The FESTIVAL of the LAW.

THIS feſtival is on the ninth day from that of Tabernacles [h], is inſtituted by their Rabbi's, and celebrated on the 23. of September. The Jews rejoice at this time, becauſe God has been ſo good as to allow them once more to read and meditate on the law. It is well known, that the ſacred books of Moſes are divided into [i] 52. ſections or [e] See the figure of theſe branches in the cut.

[f] This is performed by the Parnaſſim, and the reſt of their clergy; and this is the manner of the Jews of the Spaniſh Rite.
[g] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. VI. chap. xvii.
[h] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xxvii.
[i] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. VI. chap. xxix. called xxxiv.

or leſſons, and that one is read every Sabbath; thus the laſt ſection falls upon the ninth day from the feaſt of Tabernacles, or the Sunday next to it.

The night on which the 9. day commences, after a few prayers, all the [k] books of the law are brought out of the ark, and carried in proceſſion round the deſk, at the head of which proceſſion the Chanter walks. The ſame ceremony is performed the next morning, and all thoſe books are carried back into the Hechal, except three[l]. Out of the firſt is read the end of the law, out of the ſecond the beginning, and out of the third, what concerns offerings in the xxix. chapter of Numbers. This is what Buxtorf ſays, but in general they only read the beginning and the concluſion of the law out of two different books. The two perſons appointed to read them, are called Spouſes of the Law. This is done in the midſt of the people's acclamations, and the Rabbi's pretend it is [m] an excellent preſervative againſt the calumnies of the Devil.

On the day whereon this ceremony is performed, all eccleſiaſtical officers are appointed, and chiefly ſuch as relate to their law; which are ſold to the beſt bidder, and the money ariſing from ſuch ſale is appropriated to the maintenance of the poor, and the repairs of the ſynagogue. Buxtorf, to whom we are obliged for the particulars, ſuch as he had actually ſeen them in the German ſynagogues, tells us what the offices are.

1. That of lighting the ſynagogue lamps.

2. That of diſtributing the wine, for the conſecration of the Sabbath and all other ſolemn days, to ſuch poor as are not able to buy themſelves.

3. That of rolling and unrolling the books of the law.

4. That of lifting up the books of the law, and preſenting it in this manner to the congregation.

5. That of touching the wood and ſtrings, uſed in rolling up, and faſtening the volume of the law. This wood is called the Wood of Life, and the young folks gladly purchaſe this office, flattering themſelves that by the touch of this wood, their life will be prolonged, their health preſerved, and themſelves made wiſe and prudent.

6. That of reading ſomething out of the law on ſolemn days.

7. That of officiating in the room of ſuch as acquit themſelves ill in any of the above functions.

The Sabbath ſucceeding this feſtival is called the Sabbath [n] in the beginning.

The FEAST of LIGHTS, in HEBREW, CHANUCCAH or DEDICATION.

LEO OF MODENA [o] has let us into the original of this feſtival. They not only light up lamps in the ſynagogue, in the order he obſerves [p], but at home too; and regularity of worſhip has preſcribed the light ſhall be on the left of him who comes into the houſe. The Mezuza is on the right, as is above obſerved; ſo that they walk between two [q] commandments. Their women light their lamps.

The commemoration of the Dedication of the Tabernacle is likewiſe celebrated on this feſtival, and the vii. chapter of Numbers read.

There are particular prayers for this feſtival, and among the reſt one in praiſe of God, who hath ordained the lighting up of lamps on ſolemn days. This feſtival laſts eight days, becauſe in the time of the Maccabees, thoſe famous champions and deliverers of the Jewiſh nation, the circumciſion, which is to be performed on the eighth day, was ſuſpended, or ſuppreſſed by the enemies of Judaiſm.

The

[k] The repreſentation of one of theſe books of the law may be ſeen in the cut, wherein are the inſtruments for circumciſion.

[l] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xxvii.

[m] Ibid.

[n] Sabbath Bereſhith, on account of this laſt word, which is the beginning of Geneſis.

[o] I. Diſſertation, Part III. chap. ix.

[p] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xxviii.

[q] Lighting up of lamps is one, the Mezuza is another.

THE JEWISH SINAGOGUE AT AMSTERDAM.

SIMCHA TORA or Rejoicing for the LAW.

A. Cadan Beresoid B. Cadan Sora. being the Spouses of the Law, and Represent the Kings of Israel, who on the last day of the Feast of Tabernacles were obliged to open and close the Lessons of the Law. Cadan Sora reads first, and then Cadan Beresoid. CC. two Parnassins

SIMCHA TORA ou JOYE pour la LOY.

A. Le Cadan Beresoid B. Le Cadan Sora: ces Epoux de la Loy, representant les Rois d'Israel qui devoient obligez de commencer, et de finir la Lecture de la Loy. le dernier jour de la fête des Cabanes. Le Cadan Sora est celui qui la finit. le Cadan Beresoid, est celui qui la recommence. CC Deux Parnassins.

The SPOUSES of the LAW conducted home.

A. the same day that Cadan Sora makes an end of reading y Law he is convey'd home in the evening by Cadan Beresoid on his right hand, a parassin on his left. follow'd by other parassins, friends and Relations, and guarded by Officers, and in Return when Cadan Beresoid Reads the Law, Cadan Sora waits on him in y same order: giving him the middle place in his turn.

MANIERE de conduire les EPOUX de la LOY chez eux.

A. Le Cadan Sora, le jour qu'il finit la lecture de la Loy, il est reconduit le soir, par le cadan Beresoid, que est a sa droite, et un Parnassin a sa gauche, suivi des autres Parnassins, de Parens, et Amis, escorté de quelques Sergens. Et le jour que le Cadan Beresoid commence la Loy, le Cadan Sora le reconduit a son tour, dans le même ordre, avec cette diference que le Cadan Beresoid occupe allors la place du milieu

The FEAST of the PURIM.

THE word Purim, from whence this feſtival takes its name, is Perſian, ſignifying Lots. It is the plural of Pur, and the two days ſet apart for this ſolemnity are ſo called by the Jews, becauſe Haman their enemy had [s] caſt lots to deſtroy them on one of thoſe two days.

The faſt kept on the eve of this feſtival is of the inſtitution of the Rabbi's; but probably the feſtival was appointed by one [r] of the Prophets, who lived near the time of Haman. However that may be, the Purim is, in a manner, the Jewiſh Carnaval, and celebrated at the time of the Chriſtian; only the Jews have their ſorrow and repentance before it. The faſt ſhould laſt three days, and the devout of them obſerve it ſtrictly, but it is in general reduced by them to one day of mortification. " In the morning the poor have " given them wherewith to enable them to make merry at night, and often diſhes from " the tables of the rich, that they may enjoy themſelves the better; the half ſhekel " formerly paid to the temple, is collected and diſtributed to ſuch as go in pilgrimage to " Jeruſalem, in order to avoid the pain of a long journey at the reſurrection, and to be " nearer the valley of Jehoſaphat.

" At night they go to the ſynagogue, to hear the book of Eſther read, which the Cha- " zan afterwards explains to the congregation. The reader may ſit at this leſſon, where- " as at reading the law he muſt ſtand. After unfolding the volume, he ſays three prayers " in thanks to God, in that they are called to have a ſhare in this ceremony, in that they " are delivered (from the hand of Haman) and in that they are ſuffered to live to this " feſtival. He then reads the hiſtory of Haman and Eſther, (during which) he in five " places raiſes his voice in a manner enough to frighten the women and children, and " this to awaken ſuch as may ſleep, or (rather) to ſhew his joy. He is obliged to read " the names of Haman's ten children without ſtopping to take breath, and the name of " that perſecutor is pronounced in the ſynagogue with a prodigious noiſe ------ In ſome " places the name of Haman is graved on a ſtone (or on wood) and the moment it is read, " they ſtrike (that whereon the name is engraved) hard againſt another, crying out, let " the name of the villain periſh and be blotted out. They conclude (theſe acts of piety) with " curſes on Haman, and his wife, and bleſſings on Mordechai and Eſther, and with praiſes " to God for preſerving his people. They (then) go out of the ſynagogue in order to ſit " down at table, and return the (next) morning, to hear the book of Eſther again read " ------ After which begins ſo great and general a debauch, that this feſtival was " (formerly) confounded with the Bacchanalia of the Heathens." This is the deſcription of that feſtival, taken word for word [t] from M. Baſnage, except a few expreſſions corrected.

Joviality is ſo cloſely connected with the Purim, that there is not a ſtanch Jew, but what gives a looſe to mirth and good humour. One would think a good deal of pains were required almoſt in one and the ſame moment to paſs from the moſt rigorous penance to the moſt extravagant tranſports of joy, and at once to make a leap from the one to the other. But nothing is more common. Theſe extremes meet, and the two different characters men appear under on theſe occaſions will juſtify our comparing them to a very ſupple plate of ſteel, which bends eaſily, and in a moment as eaſily recovers its former figure.

There are particular prayers and benedictions for this day, as well as for all the other ſolemn feſtivals of the Jews.

The names of the ſons of Haman are written in a very ſingular manner in the [u] Magillah, ranged like ſo many bodies [w] hanging on a gibbet.

[s] Eſther, chap. ix. [r] Haggai, or Malachi, according to Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. VI. chap. xvii.
[t] Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. VI. chap. xvii. [u] This name the Jews give to the book of Eſther.
[w] Vide Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. xxix.

The FASTS appointed by the SYNAGOGUE.

LEO OF MODENA has treated [x] of all the faſts of command. That of the 17. of Thamuz, anſwering to June, has ſeveral cauſes. The tables of the law broken in pieces, the Idolatry of the golden calf, the ceaſing of the daily ſacrifice, the temple prophaned by the idolatry of Manaſſes, are all at that time part of the ſubjects of their affliction.

Their faſt upon account of the deſtruction of their two temples is extremely remarkable. The meal before it muſt be managed with great ſobriety and modeſty, and one ſingle kind of meat compoſes the ſervice of ſuch, who ſincerely bewail the bruiſes of Jeruſalem. Such will neglect every thing that is able to flatter their taſte or their vanity, and will eat little and drink ſtill leſs. The Germans at this time [y] eat nothing but herbs and eggs, therein fancying they ſee the image of mourning and ſadneſs; and they formerly eat nothing but bread ſteeped in water, firſt adding a little ſalt to it. This ſorrowful meal was eaten on the ground before the hearth, clothed in ſackcloth, ſometimes covered with aſhes; but always weeping and groaning. A cruſe of water ſtood by to quench the penitent's thirſt, and repair his ſtrength worn out with affliction. His ſilence was uninterrupted unleſs by ſobs, his Feet bare, and to crown his affliction his bread was frequently mixed with aſhes and gravel.

[z] The night of this faſt was to be ſpent with all poſſible inconvenience. The bed was to be hard and ill made, the bolſter very low, and ſheets very rough and coarſe; and ſome choſe a ſtone for their pillow. The next day they are not to read the law, becauſe that rejoices the heart: nor do they ſalute each other. The day ſucceeding that of the faſt is a day of ſadneſs too, on which they abſtain from meat and wine; and tho' it is not quite ſo ſolemn as the firſt, yet has it ſtrong and viſible ſigns of ſorrow and affliction. On the eve of this day they enter the ſynagogue without ſhoes, ſit down on the ground, and read the Lamentations of Jeremiah, by the light of a lamp much dimmer than uſual; and at each verſe beginning with any Hebrew word equivalent to how, they raiſe their voice in a very moving tone. To conclude, they who commemorate the deſtruction of the temple with the greateſt devotion, carefully practiſe at their houſes every thing capable of inſpiring them with grief.

Leo of Modena has treated of the other faſts of the ſynagogue; but beſides them, ſome are obſerved which are not generally received. The calendar which we have annexed to theſe explanations, will give the names of theſe faſts and of ſome other feſtivals.

The DEVOTION of MONDAY and THURSDAY.

BUXTORF furniſhes us with a [a] deſcription of this devotion. One of Eſdras's ten precepts to the Jews of the Captivity, according to the Talmud, was every Monday and Thurſday to read publickly in the ſynagogue ſomething out of the law, in a certain manner, and with all the devotion due to the majeſty of the ſubject; and another of thoſe precepts appoints Monday and Thurſday for the trial of all cauſes. Moſes, add they, went on a Thurſday up to Mount Sinai the ſecond time, and returned the Monday following with the ſame tables of the law; and the Phariſee [b] in the Goſpel doubtleſs choſe theſe two days to faſt twice a week on. In ſhort, there are particular prayers for Mondays and Thurſdays.

Some

[x] Vide I Diſſertation, Par. III. chap. viii. [y] Id. cap. xxi. [z] Id. Ibid.
[a] Syn. Jud. cap. xiv. [b] Luke chap. xviii. ℣. 10.

Some remarkable ceremonies go along with their expoſing and reading the law, of which Buxtorf will help us to the deſcription, agreeable to what he had ſeen practiſed in the German ſynagogues. There are two ſticks faſtened to the volume of the law whereby they take hold of it, that the book itſelf may not be touched, which might often be polluted by unclean hands; and thoſe ſticks are called the wood of life. Leo of Modena has given us an exact account of the ſcrupulous care of the Jews in the choice of the vellum on which the law is to be written, of the ink, the character, the method of writing, of the ark wherein it is locked up, &c. wherefore we ſhall be ſilent on all theſe heads. The book of the law is wrapped round with a ſort of band or broad ribband, embroidered with needle-work. Each child brings his own to the ſynagogue. On this band is generally embroidered the name of the child and his parents, his age, and birth day. The child's father gives it to him, who has the care of the wood of life, and he gives it to him who rolls and unrolls the law. This perſon covers the book with theſe ribbands in ſuch a manner, that the letters embroidered thereon ſhall turn towards the law, and even touch it if poſſible; beſides which, the law has a very neat ſilk covering, to which a ſilver plate is fixed by a ſmall chain of the ſame metal. This plate, which is hollow, encloſes ſeveral leſſer, whereon are graved the names of the feſtivals and other ſolemn days, which require the reading of the law. On the great plate are theſe words, the crown of the law, or theſe, the holineſs of the Lord.

When the Chazan takes this ſacred book out of the ark, the congregation ſay, let God ariſe, and his enemies ſhall be ſcattered; and the moment he ſhuts the ark a benediction is repeated. When he takes the book into his hands he pronounces a benediction ſuitable to the action, and the congregation anſwer by another. When he carries the law to the deſk, the devout that are near enough come forward in order to kiſs it; the reſt endeavour at leaſt to touch it with their hands.

The law is laid upon a ſilk carpet ſpread upon the deſk, after which the Segben unties the ribbands, opens the book, and orders the Chazan to appoint the perſons for reading it.

When the leſſons are over, he, whoſe buſineſs it is to lift up the law, takes, opens, lifts it as high as he can, and thus opened and raiſed, turns it towards the four winds; upon which the congregation ſay; behold the law which Moſes gave to the children of Iſrael.

After this ceremony, they who have purchaſed the privileges of rolling up the law, and touching the ſticks of life, draw near in order to perform their office: the whole congregation likewiſe come forward in order to kiſs, or at leaſt to touch the ſacred wood. Two fingers have the honour of touching it, which muſt immediately be laid upon the eyes, that touch having given them a vertue to ſtrengthen the ſight, and cure ſore eyes. This wood too confirms health, recovers the ſick, and facilitates the labour of women who look upon it. As to the women they are excluded from all religious ceremonies, and remain ſhut up in their galleries without being capable of having any ſhare in them; they are content to look at a diſtance, and to enjoy their zeal by pious glances caſt thro' their lattices, and by coming as forward as they can upon the edges of thoſe lattices where they ſtand in the ſynagogue.

Benedictions likewiſe accompany the law when it is to be carried back into the Hechal, whilſt it is carrying, and laſtly, whilſt it is replacing in it; after which they make an end of their prayers, and go out of the ſynagogue; in the inſtant of going out, they lift up their heart to God.

JEWISH CALENDAR for the Year 1722.

BElieving this calendar of the hiſtory of the Jews of [c] M. Baſnage would be agreeable to the reader, we have given it him, fitted for the year 1722.

[d] EXECUTE THE JUDGMENT OF PEACE AND TRUTH IN YOUR GATES.

Year [c] 483 [f] From the creation of the world.
1722 Of the Chriſtian æra.
3887 From the DELUGE.
3535 From the birth of our father ABRAHAM,
on whom be peace.
3245 From the going down into EGYPT.
3115 From the birth of MOSES our maſter,
on whom be peace.
3035 From the DEPARTURE out of Egypt, and the publication of the LAW.
2995 From the entrance into the land of CANAAN.
2555 From the building of the TEMPLE.
2279 From the CAPTIVITY of the TEN TRIBES.
2145 From the DESTRUCTION of the FIRST TEMPLE.
2075 From the building of the SECOND TEMPLE.
2030 From the CESSATION of PROPHECY.
1655 From the RUIN of the SECOND TEMPLE.
1582 From the COMPOSING of the MISCHNA.
1244 From that of the Babyloniſh TALMUD.
1232 From the birth of MAHOMET.
1128 From the beginning of the FAITH of the ISHMAELITES, i. e. of MAHOMETANISM.
327 From the BANISHMENT out of FRANCE.
231 From the BANISHMENT out of SPAIN.
223 From the BANISHMENT out of PORTUGAL.

Let us beſeech God, that he would rebuild his temple and altars. The Saviour ſhall come in Sion, and plenty of good things to the houſe of Iſrael. AMEN. May it be God's will.

1. It muſt be obſerved, that the Jewiſh year is of 354 days, and that every three years a month is intercalated, which makes a year of 13. months.

2. Their civil year begins in Tiſri or September; their eccleſiaſtical, in Niſan or March.

3. M. Baſnage thought proper to inſert the feſtivals, which are aboliſhed, in his calendar, whom we have followed. And it is this.

I. Month Civil.	VII. Eccleſiaſtical.
Days.	Month of Tiſri, September.

1. New-year's-day. The Feaſt of Trumpets, Levit. ch. xxiii. ver. 24. Numb. ch. xxix. ver. 17.

They ſound the trumpet for many reaſons. 1. Becauſe Iſaac being laid upon the altar, a ram, which ſtuck by the horns in a thicket was offered in his room. 2. Becauſe Moſes, being returned to Mount Sinai to beg of God freſh tables of the law, commanded trumpets to be ſounded through the whole camp, to prevent the people from relapſing into idolatry. The trumpet, they ſay, is to be ſounded

[c] Lib. VI. chap. xxix. [d] Zachar. chap. viii. ver. 16. [e] The Jews cut off the thouſands in this calculation; thus the year 483. is 5483. [f] We omit the Epochas of leſs note.

Days. ſounded every day from the 1. to the 28. of Auguſt, night and morning after their prayers, in memory of this action of Moſes. 3. Laſtly, The people are thereby admoniſhed to prepare for the day of judgment, which is the firſt day of the year, becauſe at that time God judges all the Iſraelites.

They have a thouſand ſcruples both as to the trumpets they uſe, and the manner wherein they are to uſe them. It muſt be the horn of a ram; that of a cow or a calf is unlawful. It muſt be rather crooked than ſtraight; and tho' it were ſtolen, yet however they would uſe it, becauſe the command to ſound the trumpet, and the prohibition to ſteal, are two different precepts. But ſhould the horn have been uſed in any idolatrous act, it muſt be thrown away. It muſt be adorned neither with gold nor any other ornament of value. Should there be any crack acroſs it, it is ſtill good; but the leaſt crack length-ways makes it unfit for uſe. They are to make as great a noiſe as poſſible, and even the women are allowed to blow it.

They riſe early on new-years-day, go to the ſynagogue, and ſay their prayers, and then the books are taken out of the cheſt. Five Prieſts, a Levite, and three Iſraelites are appointed to read the law on this day, one of whom reads a leſſon out of the prophets, which is the firſt and ſecond chapter of Samuel to the 10. verſe. Then he who is to ſound the trumpet riſes, and taking the horn pronounces theſe words.

Bleſſed be thou, Lord God, King of the world, who haſt ſanctified us by thy laws, commanding us to liſten to the ſound of the trumpet. Bleſſed be thou, my God, who haſt cauſed us to live, who haſt ſtrengthened us, and made us to attain to this day.

Whereupon he ſounds the horn, of doing which their are three different ways, which muſt be ſtrictly obſerved by ſounding three times each way. Theſe are called Tiſchrath, Taſchiath, and Tarath.

When that is over, this prayer is ſaid; Remember the covenant of Abraham, and the ſacrifice of Iſaac. The form uſed by the Spaniſh Jews is ſomething different; for they begin with theſe words; Bleſſed are the people who know what joy is: after which they remind God of the covenants he made with their forefathers. They begin to blow the horn, and ſay a prayer compoſed by R. Amnon: Give ſtrength to holineſs; after which they begin to blow again, and ſay the prayers, called the trumpet prayers, becauſe the word שופרות Shopparoth, is often repeated in them, and after they are over, conclude with ſounding the horn again.

III. A faſt day for the murther of Gedaliah, governor of Judea, and of the Jews left there after Nebuchadnezzar's conqueſt of it. Many of thoſe Jews were killed by Iſhmael's treachery, Kings Lib. II. chap. xxv. verſe 25. On the ſame day there was a feſtival appointed in the time of the Aſmoneans to celebrate the memory of a miracle wrought by God in time of perſecution. They pleaded in writing, and the debtors were obliged to ſet the name of God to their notes: Such a day, ſuch a year of John the high prieſt, and ſervant of the living God. Thereupon their wiſe men ordered them to pay their debts the next day, and cancel their notes; which was accordingly done; but they were ſurpriſed to ſee that the name of God was effaced. They thought that the notes were void, and that a feſtival ought to be appointed in memory of the miracle, Selden's Calendar.

V. Faſt day for the death of 20. Iſraelites, and that of Hakkiba, Joſeph's ſon, who had been taken priſoner.

VII. Faſt day, for the ſin of the golden calf, and God's command to deſtroy the people in the deſart by ſword and famine.

X. Day of propitiation. We have already explained the manner wherein it is celebrated.

Days.

XV. Feaſt of Tabernacles. This has been ſpoken to above.

XX. Octave of the Feaſt of Tabernacles.

XXIII. Day of rejoycing for the law. שמחת תורה. Hereby is underſtood thoſe benedictions with which Moſes bleſſed the people before he died; wherefore the two laſt chapters of Deuteronomy, and firſt of Joſhua are then read, together with the book of Eccleſiaſtes.

II. Month Marcheſvan, of XXIX Days; XV. October.

Days.

VII. Faſt, for the calamity that befel Zedekiah and his children, who were maſſacred in preſence of their father, and he himſelf had his eyes put out by Nebuchadnezzar's order.

XX. Faſt, for expiating the ſins commited during the Feaſt of Tabernacles. This faſt begins again the XXII. and XXVI. of the ſame month.

XXIII. A great feſtival inſtituted in the time of the Aſmoneans, when the altar prophaned by the Gentiles was pulled down, and the ſtones hidden, till a prophet ſhould decide what was to be done with them. Hereupon a new altar was built, the court and polluted places were purified, and ſacrifices offered with great joy and ſolemnity. Selden's Calendar.

XXV. Day of rejoicing, in memory of the Jews, upon their return from the captivity of Babylon, retaking ſeveral places from the Cutheans, which they had ſeiſed upon in their abſence. Selden.

XXVII. Day of rejoicing, in memory of the victory of R. Johanan, ſon of Zachai, in his diſpute againſt thoſe Heretics, who were for eating of that which was offered to God, inſtead of letting it be conſumed upon the altar, Levit. chap. xxiii. verſe 15.

III. Month Ciſleu; November, even XXX. Days.

Days.

III. Day of joy, for the Aſmoneans removing out of the court the ſtatues and images which the Gentiles had ſet up there during the perſecution. This day was conſecrated as a ſolemn feſtival. Selden.

VII. Faſt, for Jehoiakim's burning the prophecies of Jeremiah which Baruch had copied: but there is a difference as to the time of this faſt; which ſome obſerve the III. and others the XXVIII. of this month.

On the ſame day, is commemorated the death of Herod the Great, ſon of Antipater, he being an enemy to their wiſemen, and a diſturber of their diſcipline. The Rabbi's have determined that there is joy in heaven at the wicked's leaving the world: and here they apply ſeveral paſſages of the Scripture, and the example of Adonijah whom Solomon put to death, 1 Book of Kings, chap. ii. verſe 25. Selden.

XXI. The day of Mount Garizim. The Rabbi's ſay, that the Samaritans ſent ambaſſadors to Alexander upon his arrival in Judea, to aſk leave to deſtroy the temple of Jeruſalem; and the better to attain their end at firſt obtained that of purchaſing part of mount Moriah. But Simeon the Juſt, High Prieſt, going out to meet that Prince, the majeſtic air of the High Prieſt aſtoniſhed Alexander the Great, who aſked the ſubject of their deputation. Simeon anſwered, that it was to hinder the Samaritans from deſtroying their temple. They are in your hands to do with them as you ſhall think fit, ſaid Alexander; and in an inſtant the Jews ſeized upon the Samaritan deputies, bored their heels, tied them to horſes tails, and dragged them over briars and ſtones as far as mount Garizim, which they Days. plowed up, and ſowed with tares as the Samaritans intended to do by mount Moriah: and this day is appointed a feſtival in memory of that triumph.

XXIV. The Feaſt of Dedication: when the altar, prophaned by Antiochus, was purified. This is a very ſolemn feſtival, and continues eight days, 1 Book of Maccab. chap. iv. verſe 52. 59. 2 Maccab. chap. ii. verſe 16. It is likewiſe called The Feaſt of Lights.

To this day ſome have added the Feaſt of Judith, upon account of the addition made to her hiſtory in the Vulgate: The feſtival for this victory is by the Hebrews placed amongſt their ſolemn days; and is celebrated by the Jews ever ſince. Sigonius and Torniel inſerted it in the calendars of the Jewiſh feſtivals. But the words of the Vulgate are not in the Greek, ſo that it is an addition foiſted into the text by ſome impoſtor, zealous of the honour for Judith, or rather for the truth of her hiſtory. Her feſtival is not in the Calendars made by the Jews themſelves, nor even in Selden's, tho' much fuller than any of the others. Sigonius made his out of his own head.

IV. Month, Teveth. December, odd XXIX. days.

Days.

VI. Faſt, upon account of the tranſlation of the LXX. made in the reign of Ptolemy. The Jews imagine their law prophaned by this verſion, tho' done by Jews; and inſiſt that God to ſhew his diſpleaſure at it, ſpread a terrible darkneſs over the earth for three days. But the Helleniſt Jews, and they of the diſperſion held this tranſlation in great eſteem; it being abſolutely neceſſary to them, as well as to the fathers of the Chriſtian Church; they not underſtanding Hebrew

IX. Faſt, for which they know no reaſon.

X. Faſt, upon account of the ſiege of Jeruſalem by the Babylonians.

XXVIII. Feſtival of the reformation of the Sanhedrin: of which this, according to the Jews, is the riſe. Alexander Jannæus extremely favoured the Sadducees, and brought ſo great a number of them into the council, that hardly one, except the preſident Simeon, the ſon of Sharath, was orthodox; and theſe Sadducees were ſo ignorant, that they could not back their opinions with any proofs from the law. This put the preſident upon making an order, whereby none ſhould have a place in the council, but ſuch as could give a reaſon for his opinion, and ground it upon the law. The next day he propoſed a difficult queſtion, which a young prieſt offered to decide; but being incapable of doing it, he required a day's time to conſider and ſtudy it. He deliberated upon it; but being aſhamed of his inability to anſwer it, did not dare to appear amongſt them. Simeon, Prince of the council, made advantage of the opportunity to fill up the vacancy with an orthodox member; the number of LXXI. being never to be leſſened. By this contrivance he turned all the Sadducees one after another out of the council. And this feſtival was appointed in memory of this expulſion as ſoon as completed. Selden's Calendar.

V. Month Scebath; January, even XXX. Days.

Days.

II. Feſtival in memory of the death of Alexander Jannæus, who was an enemy to the Iſraelites, that is the Phariſees. One day when he was ſick, he arreſted LXX of them, in order to have them impriſoned, and, in caſe he ſhould die, ordered the jaylor to cut all their throats. The King died; but the Queen took his ring, and ſent it to the jaylor, ordering him to be told that the King had had a dream, which obliged him to ſet the Iſraelites at liberty; and that his ring was the mark and ſeal of his pleaſure. The wiſemen were thereupon ſet at

Days. at liberty, and the King's death publiſhed, which the Queen had concealed till her deſign was executed. For this a feſtival was appointed. Selden's Calendar.

VIII. Faſt, for the death of thoſe juſt Iſraelites, who lived in the days of Joſhua, Judges chap. ii. verſe 10.

XXII. Day of rejoicing, becauſe Niskalenus, who ordered images to be ſet in the temple, died at the interceſſion of the Jews; who then began to break to pieces the images he had cauſed to be ſet up. Therefore it was likewiſe reſolved that a feſtival ſhould be appointed in memory of this deliverance. Selden's Calendar.

As it is hard to gueſs who this Niskalenus was, and as the Jeruſalem Talmud tells us, that Simeon the juſt heard the Bathcol, or daughter voice, which, iſſuing out of the holy of holies, ſaid; Galychus is dead, and his decrees have now no force: Selden concludes that this event happened in the time of Simeon the Juſt; and that Galychus and Niskalenus were the ſame perſon: but it is more probable that it was Caligula, who would have had his ſtatue ſet up in the temple, and that the deliverance they celebrated, was a deliverance, from his brutality.

XXIII. Faſt, upon account of the aſſemblies and battles of the Iſraelites againſt the tribe of Benjamin, to revenge the violence offered to the concubine of a Levite, Judges chap. xx.

XXIX. Feſtival, for Antiochus's death. Selden's Calendar.

VI. Month Adar; February, odd XXIX. Days.

Days.

VII. Faſt, for Moſes's death.

VIII. Faſt, for the ſchiſm between Hillel and Shammai, and the diviſion of their ſchools.

VIII. Day of trumpets, for rain.

And IX. As the Holy Land was very mountainous, and the drought often cauſed a dearth, rain was earneſtly prayed for; and two ſucceſſive days were kept upon this account, one for the preſent year, that is to pray for it for their preſent uſes, and the other for the next year. For they provided againſt the future, and before-hand prayed to God for the following year. Selden's Calendar.

XII. The feaſt of Tyrinus, or Turianus, who having cauſed Lollianus and Papus two brethren, and proſelytes to Judaiſm to be arreſted at Laodicea, would have forced them to offend againſt the law. The crime they were to have been obliged to commit is clearly expreſſed; they being ordered to receive the water, to be poured upon them for waſhing, from a veſſel conſecrated to idols and whereon people ſtood to look at the images of the Gods; but they refuſed, and ſuffered martyrdom; and theſe two days are ſet apart as a feſtival in honour of them. In the Extravagancies, Semacoth, added to the Babylonian Talmud, Tyrinus is affirmed to be Trajan, and he is there called by his name טרגיאנום Trajanus. In the Ghemara of the Jeruſalem Talmud this feſtival is likewiſe fixed on the 12. of this month. But R. Jacob Bar Acha ſays, that the feſtival of Tyrinus, or the day whereon Lollianus and Papus were martyred, had been dropped and laid aſide. Selden's Calendar.

XIII. The faſt of Eſther, and at the ſame time the death of Nicanor, who was killed by an Aſmonean, is commemorated, 1 Book of Maccab. chap. vii. verſe 43. This faſt is taken notice of in the Babyloniſh Talmud. Selden's Calendar.

XIV. The feaſt of Lots, Purim; or the deliverance of the Jews by Eſther.

And XV. We have already treated fully of this feſtival.

XVII. The flight of the wiſemen. Alexander Jannæus, a favourer of the Sadducees, and enemy to the Phariſees, had reſolved to maſſacre the latter; but they fled into Syria (or the Eaſt) and went and dwelt at Koſtikus; the inhabitants, who were idolaters, intended Days. intended to kill them; wherefore they again fled in the night, and this feſtival is obſerved on the day of their flight. Selden's Calendar.

XX. For rain God ſent in a great drought. This appears to have happened in the reign of Jannæus, whilſt Simeon the ſon of Sharach was Prince of the Sanhedrim, who appointed this feſtival, becauſe God never ſends rain but for the merits of Iſrael; wherefore it is written, God ſhall open his treaſure for thee. For thee, that is, upon account of thy merit.

XXVIII. A feaſt day, becauſe when the Grecian Princes had forbidden the Jews to circumciſe their children, or obſerve the Sabbath, and at the ſame time commanded them to worſhip their idols; the Jews aſtoniſhed, addreſſed themſelves to a woman whom the Romans frequently conſulted, and ſaid to her, Are we not of the ſame father, and children of the ſame mother? Wherefore then oppreſſeſt thou us with ſuch rigorous Edicts? Upon which they obtained their requeſt, and therefore appointed a feſtival for this deliverance. Selden's Calendar.

VII. Month Niſan; March XXX. Days.

In this Month begins the Eccleſiaſtical Year; wherefore the ſacred Writers always call it the First: and on the XIV. of the Moon of Niſan the Paſſover is celebrated.

Days.

I. Faſt, upon account of Nadab and Abihu, ſons of Aaron, who were devoured by fire from heaven, for having put ſtrange fire into their cenſors. It is wonderful that the Jews faſt ſo long in remembrance of thoſe whom God miraculouſly puniſhed for a public prophanation. But it is ſtill more ſurpriſing, that they ſhould be ſo ignorant in their own hiſtory, as to place this faſt on the 1. of Niſan, when ſacred hiſtory tells us it happened on the 8. of the month.

X. Faſt day, for the death of Mary, Moſes's ſiſter, and becauſe there was no water in the deſart of Iſin, where ſhe died, which made the people murmur againſt their Legiſlator, Numb. chap. xx. verſe 1. and following.

XIV. Feaſt of the Paſſover, which laſts ſeven days.

XV. The Feaſt of Azyma or unleavened bread, with which begins their grand feſtival, or feſtival by way of excellence; for they were not then allowed to act as on the former day.

XVI. The Feaſt of the Firſt Fruits, offered unto God; as grain, &c.

XXI. The ſeventh day of Azyma, and the laſt of the Paſſover.

XXVI. Faſt, for Joſhuah's death.

VIII. Month Jiar; April, XXIX. Days.

Days.

X. Faſt, to repent for the ſins committed in celebrating the Paſſover, as alſo for the death of Eli, the High Prieſt, and the taking of the ark under his government, 1 Sam. chap. iv. verſe 11.

XVII. Faſt, as the former.

XXIII. Faſt, for the death of Samuel.

IX. Month Sivan; May XXX. Days.

Days.

VI. The Feaſt of Pentecoſt, called שבועות, The Feaſt of the Seven Weeks.

XII. The ſecond day of Pentecoſt is a feſtival too.

XXIII. Faſt day, becauſe Jeroboam having ſeparated the Ten Tribes, forbad the carrying of the Firſt Fruits up to Jeruſalem.

XXV. Faſt, for the murther of Rabban Simeon, ſon of Gamaliel.

Days.

XXVII. Faſt, becauſe on this day Chanina, the ſon of Thradion, was burnt together with the book of the law.

X. Month Thammuz; June XXX. Days.

Days.

XVII. The moſt ſolemn faſt of all: for Moſes broke the tables of the law, the perpetual ſacrifice ceaſed, and Jeruſalem was taken on this day.

XI. Month Ab; July XXX. Days.

Days.

I. Faſt, for Aaron's death.

IX. Faſt day, God having then ſworn that the Iſraelites ſhould never enter into the land of Canaan, but die in the deſart.

XVIII. Faſt, for that in the reign of Ahaz, the lamp of the weſtern branch of the golden candleſtic went out.

XII. Month Elul; Auguſt XXIX. Days.

This month they by waſhing, purification and prayer, prepare themſelves for their new-year's-day.

Their MANNER of receiving PROSELYTES.

WE ſhall not enter into a particular account of the different orders of proſelytes, or of the figure they made in the ancient Jewiſh church, this article having been already largely treated on by ſeveral of the learned; [g] Mr. Baſnage having given us an extract of what they have ſaid thereon in his hiſtory of the Jews, chap. vi. and vii. of the 6. book.

This was the ceremonial of a proſelyte's admiſſion. After declaring his deſign, [h] he was to make profeſſion of the Jewiſh religion, and take upon him the obſervation of all its rites [i]. Three perſons inſtructed him in the law, examined him carefully, and admitted him by circumciſion, baptiſm and ſacrifice.

The proſelyte then was circumciſed, unleſs he happened to be born among ſuch people as obſerved the practice of it, ſuch as the Ethiopians, the natives of Colchis, the Idumeans, &c. for then they only drew a few drops of blood from the part that was to ſuffer circumciſion, and ſuch blood was called, The Blood of the Covenant. Three witneſſes were to be preſent at the ceremony, to make it the more authentic, and when the wound was healed, the proſelyte was baptiſed. This cuſtom, however ancient, or from whenceſoever it might take its riſe, certainly ſignified that the proſelyte was pardoned as to his paſt conduct, and was under a neceſſity of living better for the future. The three witneſſes were to be preſent at his baptiſm as well as circumciſion: but when a woman was baptiſed, they were to retire, turning their back towards her as ſhe came out of the water. The water was to touch all the parts of the body, without which the baptiſm was irregular. A ſacrifice completed the new convert's admiſſion into Judaiſm, after which he [g] What Dr. Prideaux ſays hereon, Part II. Lib. V. of his Connexion, &c. is ſufficient to ſatisfy the reader's curioſity.

[h] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. VI. chap. vii.

[i] The Jews had two ſorts of Proſelytes. Thoſe called Proſelytes of the Gate were under no other obligation than that of quitting idolatry, and following the religion of nature, as laid down in the vii. precepts of Noah. But thoſe called Proſelytes of Juſtice were bound to obſerve the law of Moſes, and were initiated by circumciſion, baptiſm and ſacrifices, and partook of all the privileges of the natural Jews; Prideaux's Connection, Part II. Lib. V.

a dish cover'd with Sand where they lay the prepuce:

a little dish containing the plaisters.

a Phial of astringent powders—

a plaister

the Circumcision knife.

a Bandage to bind down the plaisters.

a Small Silver Rod over which they draw the prepuce.

a Basson to hold the prepuce.

A. a Small Chest in which are Contain'd the names of all the Members of ye Sinagogue. they draw from thence by lot the Names of Seven Persons Appointed to Carry & read ye Law. this Chest is divided into 4 parts. ye first marked 1. contains ye names of ye Levites. 2 is for ye names of ye Levites as they have done reading. 3 ye names of all ye other members of ye Sinagogue. 4 a place for putting in the names of ye latter who have read before B. SEPHER TORA or the Roll of ye Law open. C ye Roll of ye Law closed up & bound round wth a large Ribbon. D ye Roll of ye Law with its ornaments. E PIMONIM a Silver ornament

A. Petit Coffre où sont les noms de tous les Membres de la Synagogue l'on tire au sort les noms de sept personnes destinés à porter et lire la loi. Ce petit Coffre est divisé en quatre parties. la premiere marquée 1 contient les noms des Levites. 2. est pour mettre les noms des Levites à mesure qu'ils 3. les noms de tous les autres Membres de la Synagogue. 4. place pour les noms de ceux d'entre ces derniers qui ont déjà lû B. SEPHER TORA, ou de la Loi ouvert. C Le Rouleau de la Loi fermé & entouré d'un ruban fort la Rouleau de la Loi avec ses ornements. E PIMONIM Ornement d'argent he was declared and reputed a Jew; he renounced his temporal intereſt, and even changed his name; he was a new man, a new creature.

This is a ceremony rarely ſeen now-a-days; for policy does not allow the Jews to widen the narrow bounds of Judaiſm by converſions; and it may be ſaid in their praiſe, that they avoid troubling the conſciences of men, by ſcruples which generally are the effects of controverſy. A quiet life, and flouriſhing trade are now the ſole objects of their ambition.

CIRCUMCISION.

WOULD decency allow us to go to the bottom of this ceremony, it might be evinced as well by citations from the ancients, as by reaſons [k] drawn from phyſic, and the nature of the part whereon circumciſion is performed, that this operation was looked upon as conducive and neceſſary to cleanlineſs and health. And in ſome of the ſouthern countries, even [l] the women are obliged to undergo a ſort of circumciſion, to rid themſelves of certain inconveniences.

The ceremony of circumciſion, by God's will, is become the ſign of the alliance which he made with the Jews, and is an image of that purity of heart, without which the worſhip paid to the ſupreme Being cannot be kept up. But before we enter into a deſcription of this ceremony, let us ſee what paſſes from the moment of a woman's labour to the moment of the circumciſion. During the labour, eſpecially if there be any danger [m], a Rabbi is ſent for, to repeat the pſalms and a prayer for the lying in woman: and the joy is extraordinary in caſe of a boy, but very moderate for a girl. In the firſt caſe, the father is congratulated, vows are made, and the new comer's health is drank, and from that moment preparations are made for introducing him [n] eight days after into Judaiſm, by the way of circumciſion. But on the night before the circumciſion their joy is doubled, and viſits are made to the lying in woman, who begins to be in a condition to bear the gaiety and noiſe of company. All the gueſts muſt be of age, that is, full thirteen years old. On the day of the ceremony the Circumciſer is ſent for, and no women are to have any hand in the affair, they not wearing the livery of Judaiſm; the utmoſt they are allowed [k] It is certain that circumciſion owes its birth to the warmer climates. The people of the North never thought of it, the coldneſs of the climate making it unneceſſary; and the ſharpneſs of the humours of the body much leſs dangerous, and not corrupting ſo eaſily. The Mahometans have borrowed it from the Jews, or retained it as a national cuſtom, and ſince made it the teſt and ſeal of their religion. The ceremonial of it is at ſome times and places extremely odd and whimſical, as will appear by the following inſtance.

The inhabitants of Macaſſar cauſe the perſon, to be received by circumciſion into the number of faithful Muſſulmans, to ſit down upon the head of a buffalo or wild ox; and whereas the Turks circumciſe at the age of 12. or 13. years, in memory of Iſmael, whom they acknowledge as their patriarch, theſe begin it ſooner, viz. at 7. or 8. Before the child is ſeated upon this ſacred head, he is bathed for ſome time; after which the prieſt brings the head, ſets it upon a mat, covers it with a piece of white linen, and places the child upon it, who ſits gravely between the two horns, with his two hands croſs upon his breaſt, whilſt the Prieſt makes a diſcourſe extremely Muſſulman, wherein the Macaſſarian eloquence is not at all ſpared, and the child encouraged patiently to bear the pain of this religious operation. He has laid before him the great and innumerable bleſſings and pleaſures which are both here and hereafter to be the reward of his ſubmiſſion to the law of the Muſſulmans; but at the ſame time that theſe eternal felicities are expoſed to his view, the infallible conſequences of holy circumciſion, if he appears unwilling to undergo it, he has denounced againſt him, the intolerable evils he will be loaded with both in this and the other world, and which are the infallible conſequences of his diſobedience. All this pomp of eloquence is ſeldom within the child's capacity. But this being over, ſomething more ſenſible than theſe promiſes are neceſſary. Therefore after this exhortation, the prieſt ſtains the child's forehead with the blood of the head whereon he ſits, and makes him pronounce the confeſſion of the Mahometan faith. Then three of the prieſts come forward; and one takes the left hand, and the two others the feet. A skilful operator advances, holding in his hand two ſticks very thin and ſmooth, with which he draws the skin, part of which is to be cut off with a very ſharp knife which he holds in his right hand. The prepuce is put into a baſon, and at the ſame time buried at the foot of the ſtairs of the houſes. This is taken from M. Gervaiſe's deſcription of the kingdom of Macaſſar; but we have here abridged it, referring for a more particular account of it, to the Religious Ceremonies of the Eaſt-Indies. We muſt not omit obſerving, that this ceremony is very beneficial to the prieſts and phyſicians of Macaſſar, and that prieſts of all religions are the ſame.

[l] In ſome parts of Afric, where, if we may believe Leo Africanus, there are men whoſe trade it is to circumciſe the women, whoſe cry is, who will be cut?

The inhabitants of Macaſſar likewiſe circumciſe their girls.

[m] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. iv.

[n] The reaſon for chuſing the eighth day is explained ſeveral ways. Vide Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. VI. chap viii.

lowed is to cut off the prepuce, in caſe of wanting a man to perform it; and even in ſuch caſe there muſt be the ſtrongeſt proof of their capacity and experience.

To the performance of this ceremony, the moſt ſkilful and expert are appointed. Nor is the office of circumciſer fixed[o]: yet a long ſharp thumb-nail is the mark whereby he, who actually is in poſſeſſion of that place, may be known.

This ceremony, and the inſtruments proper to it, are repreſented in the two cuts ſubjoined to this deſcription of it. A piece of glaſs, a ſtone knife, or a raſor may be indifferently made uſe of in the operation, but the modern Jews generally uſe a raſor. The child to be circumciſed muſt be fomented in a warm bath; and care is taken to have him neatly dreſſed in ſwaddling clothes and his clouts clean; [p] for ſhould he by chance dirty them, he muſt be cleaned before he can be circumciſed. The godfather holds him on his knees, ſeated on a ſtool with an empty one near him, [q] which is the place of honour appointed for the Prophet Elias. A preparatory hymn is [r] ſung whilſt the implements for the ceremony arrive. One carries a candleſtic with twelve tapers in it repreſenting the twelve tribes of Iſrael; two more hold each of them a cup full of red wine; a fourth generally carries the raſor, and a fifth the diſh of ſand, [s] into which the circumciſer throws the prepuce, which together with the ſand is left to the Devil, to the end, that the curſe againſt the ſerpent conceived in theſe terms, Duſt ſhalt thou eat, &c. may be fulfilled. Others ſay, with ſome appearance of reaſon, that the part thrown into the ſand is an allegorical repreſentation of the numerous poſterity promiſed the Jews, whereof it is ſaid, that it ſhould be as the ſand of the ſea: laſtly comes one with a baſon wherein is the oil, lint, &c. among the German Jews it is commonly ſome friend of the family who carries the diſh. They continue ſinging till the godmother comes, who goes no farther than the door of the room where the circumciſion is performed. After this, the ceremony is completed in the manner deſcribed in this figure. Leo of Modena has given ſo exact an account of it, as to leave us nothing farther to add thereupon.

As ſoon as the wound is waſhed and bound up, the father returns thanks to God, and begs him to bleſs the child, in which the company joins: the circumciſer too prays for the young Jew, after waſhing his hands, and taking wine, &c. in the form deſcribed [t] by Leo of Modena. The circumciſion of a ſick child is put off till it is grown well: and yet none can be eſteemed a Jew without circumciſion, as none can be a true Chriſtian without baptiſm. If the child dies without circumciſion, ſuch Jews as are ſcrupulous take off the prepuce before it be buried, and give it a name, that the parents may claim him at the reſurrection.

In ſome places all the company, except the godfather, ſtands during the whole ceremony.

There is ſome difference in the benediction given to baſtards newly circumciſed, who are thought not to deſerve thoſe given to legitimate children.

Some children come into the world circumciſed. On theſe a ſlight inciſion is made, in order to draw at leaſt a few drops of blood from the part.

It is with this ceremony, as with all others: They inſenſibly gain an abſolute power, which degenerates almoſt into tyranny, and at length ſtep into the place of virtue and religion, and are eſteemed as ſuch.

[o] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. cap. iv. [p] Id. Ibid. [q] Some one expreſly cries out, this is Elias's ſeat.
[r] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. VI. chap. vii.
[s] In ſome parts of Germany the Jews hide the prepuce, and ſand wherein it is put, under the Almemar of their ſynagogue (ſo they call the desk) but before they proceed to that, the circumciſer ſucks the wound three times; and as often ſpits it into the ſand. Among the Portugueſe Jews, the Mohel or circumciſer carefully preſerves all the prepuces of ſuch as he has circumciſed in his lifetime: and when he dies, they are put into his coffin, and buried with him.
[t] Diſſertation upon the ceremonies of the Jews, Part IV. chap. viii.

Women's

A. Le Pere de l'Enfant.
B. La Mere dans une autre chambre avec la Marraine car les femmes Juives n'assistent pas a cette Ceremonie.
Mr. celles qui en sont ici sont des Chretiennes.

La CIRCONCISION des JUIFS PORTUGAIS

C. Le Parrain tenant l'Enfant sur ses genoux, pendant l'operation
D. Un Siege vuide pour le Prophete Elie.
E. Le Mohel, ou celui qui fait la fonction de Circoncire
F. Le Rabin, ou Parent ou un Ami, tenant la Coupe.

B Picart del.
A. Un Sacerdotte, ou descendant de la Famille d'Aron, emportant l'Enfant.
B. Le Pere offrant de l'argent, pour le Racheter.

Le RACHAT, du PREMIER NÉ.

C. La Mere de l'Enfant D La Sage Femme.
E. La Nourrice, Les autres sont des Parens, et Amis invitez a cette Ceremonie.

Women's BATHING for their PURIFICATION.

LEO OF MODENA has ſpoken [u] of the purification of Women; we ſhall therefore only give a few inſtances of the caution and ſcruples they are to uſe, that the bath that is to purify them may not be uſeleſs [w]. The water muſt abſolutely cover their whole body, and it is better ſtill if it penetrates into it. They are to take care every now and then to open their mouths, extend their arms, open their fingers, to raiſe and fall their two breaſts, that nothing unclean about them may eſcape: and ſhould any accident happen to them in bathing, they are not to be touched by one whoſe hands are not waſhed. The woman who bathes is to have another with her as an evidence of the regularity of her bathing. This ablution is accompanied by ſuitable benedictions. It is obſervable that the Germans in ſome things differ from the Portugueſe.

The REDEMPTION of the FIRST BORN.

THE firſt born were formerly conſecrated to God; and they belonged to the ſupreme Being, who had the goodneſs to ſpare the Jews, when he deſtroyed the firſt born of the Egyptians. Leo of Modena [x] has deſcribed this ceremony, whereof the reader has here a cut. We ſhall only add one particular circumſtance taken from Buxtorf [y].

Whenever the father of the firſt born dies before the thirtieth day, the time appointed for his redemption, the mother is not obliged to do it: but hangs a ſmall piece of ſilver about his neck, whereon ſome words are engraved, ſignifying that he is not redeemed, but belongs to the prieſt: however, when he arrives at age, he muſt redeem himſelf.

The EDUCATION of CHILDREN.

THE [z] children of Jews muſt not go bareheaded. They muſt uſe themſelves from their infancy to wear the girdle that divides the heart from the lower parts. The heart is not to take notice of what paſſes below it: and the child is beſides oblig'd in his prayer for the morning to ſay, Bleſſed be God who hath girded Iſrael with ſtrength. If he ſhould unluckily forget his girdle, this is a prayer loſt. It is thus that the moſt indifferent cuſtoms degenerate into religion.

The Jews inſtruct their children betimes in the ſtudy of the law, and of the whole Scripture. They are taught to pronounce the name of God with reverence, to honour their parents and ſuperiors, and religiouſly to obſerve the precepts of the ſynagogue.

[a] At thirteen years and a day old the child is reputed of age, and from that time begins to ſin upon his own account; for before it was upon his father's. He is declared of age in the preſence of ten Jews, and the father gives them a particular account of the care he has taken of the child, and concludes by a declaration, that he waſhes his hands from [u] Diſſertation on the Ceremonies ------ Part IV. Chap. v.

[w] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. Chap. v.
[x] Diſſertation on the Jewiſh Ceremonies, Part IV. Chap. ix.
[y] Syn. Jud. Cap. vi. The father gives 7. fl. 10. pence at leaſt, which amounts to the 5. ſhekels of the old law.
[z] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. Cap. vii.
[a] Idem Ibid. They who are for making diſcoveries on thoſe lands, that Venette has ſo learnedly deſcribed in his Tableau del' Amour, may make very uſeful ones by the help of the Miſhna. There one may find at what age a child is bound by any vow, or by marriage; the ſigns of being arrived at age; what proofs we are to look for on the body of him or her ſo at age; by what height, &c.

from all iniquity which the youth may be guilty of. The witneſſes ratify this declaration, after which the father ſays a prayer.

At eighteen they muſt marry ſuch as are of age, nor are they allowed to go beyond twenty without it. They, whoſe early inclinations are too forward that way, are married ſooner. Tho' this precaution is very juſt, yet it is not always ſucceſsful.

The ESPOUSALS of the JEWS.

THE laws of Chriſtians now-a-days oblige the Jew to marry but one only lawful wife, but in the Eaſt, where Mahometaniſm countenances polygamy, he may have ſeveral, and lie abroad without puniſhment, or fearing the reproach of carrying his tribute elſewhere. It is true indeed, that in our climates the huſband does not always pay his tribute to her who has the right to demand it, but at leaſt religion does not countenance the fraud. Polygamy opens a door to great inconveniences, it is not eaſy to imagine how the families of the Jews kept out diſcord: indeed it could not be prevented, but by reducing their women to a very great ſubjection, not to ſay a kind of ſlavery. But be that as it will, it is moſt certain that in thoſe countries where polygamy reigns, the women have very little to ſay.

The promiſe of marriage is made in preſence of witneſſes, and the intended huſband ſays to his intended wife, Be thou my ſpouſe, and at the ſame time puts a ring on her finger; but this is not every where obſerved. Sometimes months, and even whole years paſs away, before they come to a concluſion, and in the mean while they viſit, they court, they ogle, and make vows. Theſe are little toyings which muſt vaſtly tire their patience who know no more of matrimony than the theory. But however high a ſoldier's courage may beat, he muſt not attack the enemy's lines till his general commands him. The day which the Rabbi's have appointed, are Wedneſdays and Fridays for maids, and Thurſdays for widows. This is as Leo of Modena ſays, and this day, if poſſible, muſt be in the firſt quarter of the moon.

During the eſpouſals, the bride's portion is ſettled, and the day fixed for conducting her home. [b] A writing is drawn up, whereby the bridegroom promiſes to give her a ſum of money by way of jointure, and to this engages all his effects, to his very cloak; but this cannot be demanded till after the huſband's death. This kind of portion is the ſame for all maidens, as well rich as poor; and the Rabbi's have fixed it at about fifty crowns; which they have done, as they ſay, to facilitate the marriage of poor maidens. This does not hinder every thing which may deſcend to her by inheritance from her father from falling into her huſband's hands. What the huſband ſettles on her being not to be paid till after his death, is to be looked on only as the acknowledgment of a jointure aſſigned to the widow.

When the parties have regulated the portion and the jointure, and given their conſent to the marriage articles, a ſhort bleſſing is ſaid, and the young people on both ſides break pots or pitchers, which, ſays Buxtorf [c], is a token of plenty and proſperity; but we can find nothing in it, but what may as well preſage diſcord and miſery. We ſhall chuſe to ſay, that the company's joy breaks out in honour of the bride and bridegroom. Irregularity and diſorder are then allowable, and give a grace to nuptial ceremonies.

[d] The eight days preceding the marriage are grand days: they laugh, ſing, dance, give a looſe to pleaſure, and caſt away care. It is at ſuch a time as difficult not to meet with perfect enjoyments, as it is eaſy at another to find ſubjects for melancholy. The intended huſband and wife ſtay at home during theſe eight days; ſo Buxtorf ſays.

On the evening before the wedding day the bride bathes with all that regularity before ſpecified in the article of purification; and the women accompany her to the bath.

[c] The

[b] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. VI. Chap. xxii. [c] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. Cap. xxxix. [d] Id. Ibid.

A. le Marié cassant le verre.
B. la Mariée voilée.
CC. les 2 personnes servent de Marraines a la Mariée.

CEREMONIE NUPTIALE des JUIFS PORTUGAIS.

DD. les 2 personnes servent de Parrains au Marié
E. le Rabin. F. les Chantres.
G. Celui qui crie les Sommes que les Assistans promet

A. le Marié donnant l'Anneau a la Mariée, tous deux sous le Dais
B.B. les 2 Marraines de la Mariée
C.C. les 2 Parrains du Marié

CEREMONIE NUPTIALE des JUIFS ALLEMANDS

D. le Rabin, * le derriere de la Sinagogue
E. le Chantre tenant la Bouteille pour faire Boire les Epoux
F. deux garcons avec des Batons cernez qui marchent devant les

[e] The bridegroom ſends the bride a wedding girdle, and ſhe ſends him another; but the bride's has gold in it, and the bridegroom's only ſilver. We dare not give the unlearned reader an explanation of this myſtery of the gold and ſilver in the two girdles, but have given it him below in Buxtorf's Latin[f].

The WEDDINGS of the JEWS.

THE plate relating to the explanation of this ceremony contains two figures, one of them repreſenting a wedding of German Jews, and the other the ſame ceremony among the Portugueſe. We ſhall add a few particulars, to Leo of Modena's deſcription of a Jewiſh wedding and of what paſſes after it. The glaſs broken by the bridegroom, who throws it on the ground, and the aſhes in ſome countries, thrown on the new married couple, according to ſome, repreſent the ruin of Jeruſalem: but it is thought, and with greater foundation, that theſe two actions repreſent the frailty of life, and the little ſolidity there is in riches.

On the wedding day the bride and bridegroom dreſs in all the magnificence they are able, and the bride is conducted in pomp to the houſe deſigned for celebrating the nuptials, by ſuch maids and married women as are her friends: but this is not a general cuſtom. Two old women are to ſtand, as it were, for her godmothers, and her friends are not to leave her, but are to comb, and dreſs her, curl her hair, and put her on her veil: for modeſty muſt not allow her to look her intended huſband in the face; herein imitating the chaſte Rebecca, who, not being able to bear Iſaac's looks, covered her face. At Venice they make the bride a ſort of curls or favourites, which they call Benetes, in imitation [g] of thoſe with which God himſelf adorned Eve's head, when he married her to Adam. We here talk after the Rabbi's.

The bride thus adorned and veiled [h] goes and ſits down between her two godmothers, under a canopy ſupported by four young boys, or elſe by four pillars. The nuptial throne is generally in ſome garden or court, there the nuptial bleſſing is to be pronounced, and thither the bridegroom comes conducted by his bridemen and friends, and the bride too conducted by her friends. All the company cry out, Bleſſed be he that cometh, and afterwards the young people ſing Epithalamiums all the while, holding flambeaux in their hands. The bride goes three times round the bridegroom, and he [i] twice round his bride; which turns of the bride are grounded upon what [k] Jeremiah ſays; that a woman ſhall compaſs a man. The company throw ſome grains of corn at them (this ſeems to be in Germany) and at the ſame time ſay to them, increaſe and multiply.

In the figures repreſenting the marriage of the German Jews, the bride is at the bridegroom's right hand, according to what the Pſalmiſt ſays; [l] Upon thy right hand did ſtand the Queen, and they are both covered with the ſame veil, to ſignify that conjugal ſociety, which was repreſented among the ancient Mexicans by the two ends of the bride and bridegroom's robe tied together in a knot. But this ceremony is not abſolutely the ſame in all countries; for Buxtorf tells us, that the Rabbi pulls the bridegroom's Taled over the bride's head, in imitation of Boaz, who [m] threw the skirts of his robe over Ruth. This ceremony might likewiſe repreſent the ſtrict conjunction of marriage, conjugal modeſty, &c. after this the Rabbi preſents wine to the new married couple, and ſays the marriage benediction; and the bridegroom having drank, puts the ring on the bride's finger, and ſays, Thou art my ſpouſe, &c. then wine is brought a ſecond time, of which they both drink a little, throwing the reſt on the ground. It is to be obſerved, that where it is a maid, [e] Id. Ibid. [f] Mihi cauſam quærenti reſpondit Judæus argento ſemen virile, ut pote album, innui, auro verò ſemen muliebre, &c. [g] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. Cap. xxxix.

[h] Id. Ibid. and Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. VI. Chap. xxii.
[i] Baſnage ſays twice, Buxtorf once. [k] Chap. xxxi. ℣. 22. [l] Pſalm xlv.
[m] Ruth, Chap. iii. ℣. 9. according to the Geneva tranſlation.

maid, the glaſs is narrow, but where a widow, wide, which myſtery the reader will explain to himſelf, and for the reſt of the ceremony we ſhall refer to Leo of Modena.

Poultry of ſome kind is ſerved up at the wedding entertainment, which is ſanctified by ſeven Benedictions. The firſt meat preſented to the bride is a hen together with an egg, after which the gueſts fall upon the reſt of it. The hen is very ſignificant, as preſaging to the Bride her future fruitfulneſs, and that her delivery ſhall be eaſy as that of a hen of her egg. The entertainment is ſucceeded by diverſions generally to be met with at weddings. The bridemen wait on the bridegroom to his chamber, and this is the laſt act, or cataſtrophe of the play.

After the new married woman has paſſed from the condition of a maid to that of a wife, her huſband leaves her, and comes near her no more till after a certain number of days.

We ſhall not venture into the inſide of the new family, nor deſcend to any particulars of all the ſeveral duties. The Jews have doctors to inſtruct them exactly on this article. It is the huſband's buſineſs to diſcharge his duty, and as to the women, their firſt care will be to bring forth choſen veſſels for the Jewiſh faith.

DIVORCE.

AFTER marriage we place divorce: and the later would often follow cloſe upon the heels of the former in life, did not the laws of civil ſociety prevent it, without which conſtraint few perhaps would have religion or honour enough, patiently, and to the end of their days to bear the diſguſts and defects they meet with in each other after a few months co-habitation.

Adultery and fornication are the firſt and grand cauſes of divorce, and almoſt the ſole legitimate ones. Theſe crimes were formerly puniſhed with a much greater ſeverity than now-a-days, tho' notwithſtanding, they very frequently eſcaped the law, inſtances of which are to be met with throughout ancient hiſtory. In Swiſſerland adultery in either ſex is ſtill capital; and indeed huſbands have in the general a ſufficient latitude to revenge the affronts of the marriage bed themſelves: but why then has not the wife the ſame liberty againſt a libertine huſband, who outrages her by his debauchery? And if the huſband be permitted in Italy to raiſe [n] entrenchments to ſecure his wife's honour, why has ſhe not the ſame privilege?

We ſhall in the ſequel of this work, in treating of civil cuſtoms, give a deſcription of the pains and puniſhments inflicted on adulterers, &c. Nor will this be the leaſt agreeable part of it.

The Jews are now deprived of the ſtanding miracle of the bitter waters; ſad loſs! to the jealous and revengeful, who would with all their ſoul ſee her, who diſhonoured the brow of her huſband, burſt with them; and to their great grief, their wives are no longer expoſed to that fatal ſwelling, which thoſe waters cauſed, and may make love in full ſecurity; for the ignominy of divorce is much too ſlight a puniſhment for a wife of an amorous conſtitution. It is pretended, that as ſoon as the miracle of the bitter waters ceaſed (which poſſibly happened about the time of the captivity) divorces grew much into faſhion, there being no method of diſcovering the coquetry of the Jewiſh ladies, who diſengaged from the effects of a miracle, which was often fatal to them, perhaps gave a looſe to gallantry, and forced their huſbands to have recourſe to a ſeparation. But by degrees divorces grew too frequent and licentious, a bare ſuſpicion cauſed them, and the women in their turn took upon them [o] to part with their huſbands.

In proceſs of time, the Jews being obliged to live under the laws of Chriſtian Princes could not repudiate their wives ſo eaſily; ſtronger reaſons were required, and the Rabbi's themſelves multiplied difficulties in order to bring divorces to be leſs practicable.

We

[n] The girdle of chaſtity.

[o] Joſeph. Antiq. Lib. XV. Chap. ix.

We ſhould not here add any thing to what Leo of Modena has ſaid upon this head, were it not neceſſary to deſcribe this ceremony as performed by the German Jews. [p] It is done at the gate of the ſynagogue, at the entrance of which the preſiding Rabbi places himſelf, with his face towards the Eaſt. Beſides the parties concerned, there are two other Rabbi's, a notary and two witneſſes, the elder of whom ſtands on the preſiding Rabbi's right hand, and the other on his left; and the notary, the huſband and wife face the preſident; the two other Rabbi's making, as it were, the two wings. The preſident aſks the huſband if his intention be real in breaking, &c. and after the huſband has anſwered all the queſtion, the preſident and witneſſes read the bill of divorce, and the names of the two latter at the bottom of it: and the Rabbi addreſſing himſelf to the clerk, aſks him if he writ the bill, and upon vellum given him by the huſband, with his ink and pen, &c. after which he ſpeaks to the two witneſſes, puts the ſame queſtions to them, and aſks them very particularly whether they ſigned, and how. Then the wife is interrogated, and ſhe is ordered to receive the bill of divorce, with her hands open, and the palms of them joined at the wriſt, and if ſhe have any rings on, ſhe muſt pull them off. The Rabbi folds up the bill, gives it to the huſband, and bids him keep it till he orders him to put it into his wife's hands, and exhorts the witneſſes to be attentive to what paſſes, and at the ſame time dictates to the huſband the compliment he is to make to her, who in a few moments will ceaſe to belong to him, which he repeats word for word. This compliment conſiſts in letting her know in few words, that he will have nothing more to do with her; and as the leſs ſaid on ſuch occaſions is the better for both parties, the Jewiſh doctors have been ſo prudent as to cut off every thing uſeleſs in it. The huſband at concluding this compliment gives the writing to his wife, who immediately by the preſidents order cloſes her hands, and hides it either in her pocket, or ſome where under her clothes, which the next moment the preſident calls for, and reads a ſecond time, and a ſecond time interrogates the notary and witneſſes. Nor is this circumſpection of his blameable, for perhaps he endeavours to give them time to repent. But remorſe is very rare on theſe occaſions, and after going ſo far it is not in order to retract. If no oppoſition be made upon this interrogation, the Rabbi pronounces ſentence, cuts the bill into the form of a croſs, and forbids the women thus divorced to marry in leſs than three months: but ſometimes he keeps it by him without cutting it.

The woman's face muſt be covered till the moment the preſident addreſſes himſelf to her.

The TAKING OFF the SHOE.

THIS ceremony with all its circumſtances are deſcribed by Leo of Modena. We ſhall only add [q] ſome of the queſtions of the Rabbi, who performs the ceremony, that the reader may ſee on what they turn. He aſks the parties, whether it is three months ſince the huſband's death, whether the widow was the deceaſed's wife, and whether ſhe be full twelve years of age. (This laſt queſtion to be ſure is never aſked but where the woman is very young, it being ridiculous to put it to a widow of forty.) Whether the deceaſed, and he to whom the widow has a right to make claim were brothers, and children of one father, and laſtly whether the widow be faſting. As ſoon as the brother-in-law has refuſed to marry her, the ceremony goes on, and the ſhoe of ceremony is put on his right foot, the man generally leaning againſt the wall. Then the woman by the Rabbi's order comes forward, takes off her brother-in-law's ſhoe with her right hand, holds it up to the view of the ſpectators, then throws it againſt the ground with indignation; and laſtly, ſpits directly at the feet of her brother, who has not the jeſt on his ſide; for the ſpectators begin to hoot at him, and nothing is heard but one ſhout after another to his ſhame.

[p] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. Cap. xl.

[q] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. Cap. xli.

[r] The Talmud puts the queſtion, how a woman, who wants her right hand, can perform this ceremony? And it is reſolved, that ſhe may take off the ſhoe with her teeth.

The JEW on a VOYAGE.

WE are now to conſider the Jew travelling. [s] At whatever diſtance he may be from the place whence he ſets out, he is to ſay a prayer turning that way, and repeat ſome paſſages from Scripture relating to travelling, in which, ſuperſtition has very often a great ſhare. There is a form of prayer on purpoſe to draw down the aſſiſtance of the angels. May the angel Michael, ſay they, be on my right, may Nemuel go before me, Shaatſiel behind, and the majeſty of God reſt on my head, &c.

They have a form of prayer for ſuch as travel by Sea.

The JEW SICK or DYING.

WE are here ſpeaking of a journey of greater importance infinitely than thoſe on this earth, I mean that of eternity. One who is dangerouſly ill, ought, in the beginning of his diſtemper, to conſider, that the hour of death is approaching; and yet to look on the diſſolution of his being with ſteadineſs, a good degree of courage is neceſſary: for it is as it were annihilation to ſuch as are engroſſed by the pleaſures of life.

The Jew who finds himſelf dangerouſly ill makes an humble confeſſion of his ſins before ten witneſſes, which extends to all his ſins, diſſimulation being of little import in ſuch a condition. [t] The form of this confeſſion is diſpoſed into alphabetical order, doubtleſs to eaſe the memory of the ignorant and ſuperſtious: for a man of ſenſe addreſſes himſelf to God in a manner different from the vulgar, and if he ſins againſt a greater light, he repents with more knowledge. The ſick are prayed for in the ſynagogue as well as in the churches of Chriſtians; and the man changes his name as well to cheat the Devil, as to ſhew he bids adieu to his old ſins; makes vows, gives alms, piouſly conſiders his condition, as well to prolong his life by devoutly returning to God, as to prevail with the divine mercy, and obtain ſalvation in the world to come.

[u] At Venice the Rabbi, who viſits the ſick, reads the xxx. xxviii. and xci. Pſalms, to which he adds a pretty long prayer to implore the divine mercy for the ſick perſon, and in general for all who are afflicted, and then pronounces the abſolution.

When the ſick perſon is under the agony of death, and that fatal moment, which is to divide the ſoul from the body, draws nigh, ſome take their leave of him with a kiſs; but this is not to be looked upon either as a duty, or conſequence of Judaiſm: it being a very ancient cuſtom, and depending at leaſt as much upon a tenderneſs for the agoniſing perſon, as upon cuſtom. The Heathens received the laſt [w] breath of ſuch as were dear to them.

At the moment the dying perſon is giving up the ghoſt, they are to rend ſome part of their clothes, which is a relic of the ancient cuſtom obſerved among the primitive Jews. This rent is generally made [x] on the right ſide of the fore part of the clothes, and muſt be [r] Id. Ibid. in Buxtorf's Syn. Cap. xlix.

[s] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. Cap. xliii.
[t] Of theſe there are two forms
[u] Id. Ibid.
[w] Virg. Æneid. Lib. IV.
Et ſi quis ſuper halitus erret, ore legam. Stat. - Hærentemque animam non triſtis in ora mariti tranſtulit.
[x] From top to bottom, whereas that of the ancient Prieſts was formerly from bottom to top. In Holland the Jews make it on the top near the buttons, and at the expiration of ſeven or eight days have it ſewed up again. In ſome parts of Germany the Jewiſh women who loſe their husbands are to tear their head-dreſs. It is ſaid, that if the widow intends to marry again, ſhe is only to pretend to do it, for if ſhe actually tears them, it is a certain ſign that ſhe intends to remain a widow.

be about half a quarter of a yard long: but when it is for a father or mother, all the clothes on the right ſide muſt be rent, whereas when it is an ordinary mourning, only the left ſide of the outward garment is torn. We omit ſuch particulars as are to be found in Leo of Modena.

FUNERAL CEREMONIES of the JEWS.

THE eyes and mouth of the deceaſed being cloſed, he is wrapped up in a ſheet, his face covered, [y] his thumb doubled cloſe to the palm of his hand, and tied with the ſtrings of his Taled, for he goes to the other world with his veil. The thumb thus doubled forms the figure of Shaddai, one of the names of God: this is the motive which the Jews give for a cuſtom, which ſaves the body from the clutches of the Devil. This ſingle part excepted, the deceaſed has his hand open, as a proof that he relinquiſhes all the goods of this world. The body is to be throughly waſhed, by this ablution to ſhew that the deceaſed purified himſelf by a ſincere repentance from the pollutions of this life; and put himſelf into a condition to receive a better from God. Buxtorf ſays, [z] that they burn wine with an egg in it, and with them anoint the head of the corps: this ſome do at home, and others at the houſe of the living. (It is thus that the Hebrew juſtly ſtiles the church yard.) He adds, that after this ablution all the apertures of the body are ſtopped up.

The Jewiſh zealots are buried in the clothes they wore on the day of Chipur. However, the body dreſſed in clean white linen is put into a coffin, with earth, which they call holy, and a ſtone under the head, or a bag of earth, according to Leo of Modena.

They, who during the lifetime of the deceaſed neglected to be reconciled with him, [a] are to touch his great toe and aſk pardon of him, that the deceaſed may not accuſe them at God's tribunal. The corpſe is laid on its back.

Buxtorf, who gives us this ceremony according to the practice of the German Jews, ſays, that when the coffin is carried out of the houſe, a brick, or broken pot is [a] thrown after it; as much as to ſay, that by ſending the body out, they at the ſame time drive away all ſorrow.

At the grave a benediction, or rather a kind of harrangue is made for the deceaſed; [b] Bleſſed be God, ſay they, who faſhioned thee, &c. O ye deceaſed, he knoweth, in which number ye are, and ſhall one day reſtore ye to life, &c. after the benediction, and panegyric upon the deceaſed, in caſe he was worthy of one, the prayer called the Juſtice of the judgment is ſaid.

The coffin being nailed down, the relations and friends of the deceaſed, to the number of ten choſen perſons of the moſt conſiderable among them, go ſeven times round the coffin, all the while offering up their prayers to God for the ſoul of the departed. This is the practice in Holland, where the cut, repreſenting this ceremony, was taken from the life. When the coffin is let down into the earth, all poſſible care muſt be taken, not to place it too [c] near any other coffin, and as ſoon as it is in the grave, every one covers it with earth, either with a ſpade, or barely with their hand, as repreſented in the figure.

There is hardly any mourning for ſuch as deſtroy themſelves, or die excommunicated. Far from regretting the loſs of them, [d] they ſet a ſtone over the coffin, to ſhew they deſerved to be ſtoned to death.

For the reſt we refer the reader to Leo of Modena.

[y] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. Cap. xlix. [z] Id. Ibid. [a] Teſta. [b] Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. VI. Chap. xxvii. [c] The coffins muſt not only not touch one another, but there ought to be particular graves for each corpſe. [d] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. Cap. xxix.

The MOURNING of the JEWS.

THE food of Jews in mourning may be rightly called The bread of affliction. At meals during the depth of their mourning every word and action ſerves to revive their ſadneſs of heart. They eat on the ground barefooted. Conſolations are inceſſantly beſtowed on them, but ſuch which might poſſibly be called bitter, the impertinent and frequent repetition of them only contributing to augment their ſorrows. The three firſt days muſt be ſpent in perpetual ſighs and tears; at leaſt they muſt pretend to do ſo, tho' the heart were to have no ſhare in it. The ſeven ſucceeding days they ſtill lament, but their grief begins to ſettle a little: yet ten ſeveral perſons come night and morning to pray with and comfort the afflicted, to praiſe the deceaſed, and pour out their grief for the loſs of him, and pray for his ſoul. Laſtly, At the expiration of ſeven days the mourner goes to the ſynagogue to prayers, and has lamps lighted, [e] and diſtributes alms for the deceaſed: but yet he can neither ſhave, bathe, nor perfume, under thirty days. Greaſy naſty clothes, an affected ſlovenlineſs as to the nails, beard, and hair are the viſible and loathſom ſigns of this thirty days mourning, and paint out the Jew as a man juſt come from the grave. After all this, their mourning is regulated according to the cuſtom of the country where they live; but one material circumſtance in this mourning is the Cadiſh, or prayer which the ſon is to ſay every day for eleven months to eaſe his father's ſoul, which during that time ſuffers in [f] purgatory.

Muretus in his Funeral Ceremonies of all Nations has given a tollerable account of thoſe of the Jews. As to Roſſe, he is hardly worth naming on this ſubject, he is ſo confuſed and inexact. This author has nothing in him to pleaſe a diſcerning reader, and the ignorant tranſlator of him has completely diſfigured the original.

The COMMEMORATION of the DEAD.

THE remembrance of death, and the reſpect due to the faithful who are departed, have given riſe to this ceremony. The ſight of tombs, ſkeletons, and funeral preparations, tell us how very little remains of man. From thence proceeds that veneration for them mingled with a ſort of fear and devotion, in a manner engraving the virtues of the dead in the hearts of the living, and ſtriving to keep up the memory of thoſe, who have long been conſumed by the worms, through all generations.

The Jewiſh devotees from time to time go and pray at the tombs of their relations and friends. Such as have a real reſpect for their deceaſed parents celebrate the anniverſary of their deaths by a yearly faſt.

CUSTOMS in LIFE wherein RELIGION has a SHARE.

WE ſhall touch upon thoſe cuſtoms no farther than as they have a dependence on religion, that we may avoid confounding what is civil, from what is purely religious: tho' Judaiſm unites them in a ſtricter manner [g] than any other religion; this may be aſcribed to their ſtrict adherence to tradition, which has conſecrated a vaſt number of indifferent things, and to the ſtile of the people of God choſen from among [e] The Jews in Holland place ſix candleſtics on the rail of the Hechal, three on one ſide, and three on the other in honour of the dead.

[f] The Talmud calls it Gehenna.

[g] This is an Error. The Mahometans grounding all their civil as well as eccleſiaſtical policy on one baſis, the Alcoran.

The ACAFOTH, or the Seven turns round the Coffin.

Les ACAFOTH ou les sept tours autour du CERCUEIL.

B. Picart delinavit

C Du Bois Ex.

The Assistants throws mould upon the CORPS.

Les ASSISTANTS jettent de la terre sur le CORPS.

among all other nations, which they have aſſumed. And this has obliged them to diſtinguiſh themſelves from the reſt of the world by particular uſages, which they have melted down into their religion.

They are to let no day paſs without reading a portion of the law at home, nor muſt any affair be undertaken till they have firſt prayed to God to bleſs it, and to remove all wicked thoughts far from them. It is well known how carefully the Jews avoid eating of any thing which the law has declared impure: and yet ſome of their zealots carry their ſcruples ſtill farther, and believe, that in order not to defile what they eat, nature muſt make a regular diſcharge once a day. Waſhing the hands is likewiſe a thing of the utmoſt importance. [h] One Rabbi has given his opinion, that there is no difference between eating bread without waſhing the hands, and converſing with a proſtitute.

[i] The German Jew ſets bread and ſalt upon the table, and the loaf whole, if poſſible, which he cuts without ſeparating it, takes it up with both hands, ſets it down again upon the table and bleſſes it, to which the gueſts anſwer Amen; he then rubs it with ſalt, and during the time of eating it, is as ſilent as a Carthuſian, after which he diſtributes the bread thus conſecrated to all who are at table. If he drinks wine, he bleſſes it in the ſame manner as the bread, takes it into his right hand, lifts it up, and pronounces the benediction over it; and all other drink is conſecrated in the ſame manner, provided it be not plain water. The maſter of the houſe concludes the ceremony with the xxiii. Pſalm, after which they fall too in good earneſt.

The ſalt is a type of that of the ancient ſacrifices: ſo far religion. Meat is inſipid without ſalt, which is proved from a paſſage in Job chap. vi. ver. 6. This is civil policy confirmed by religion. The ceremony of cutting the loaf without ſeparating it has the ſame foundation; and a paſſage from Pſalm x. ver. iii. is a voucher for its ſolidity. The father of the family holds the bread in both his hands in remembrance of the [k] ten precepts concerning corn: and every finger is to repreſent one of them.

Modeſty at table is much recommended: nor is temperance and ſobriety leſs. [l] Bread muſt be kept in a very clean place, and preſerved with care. They muſt talk little and with diſcretion at table, becauſe, according to the Rabbi's, the prophet Elias, and every gueſt's guardian angel are preſent at all meals, the latter of whom retires, and gives place to a wicked angel, whenever he hears any thing improper ſaid. Nor is it a principle of cleanlineſs alone, that tells them they are not to throw down bones of fleſh or fiſh upon the ground, but of fear leſt they ſhould hurt any of thoſe inviſible Beings. The ſame knife muſt not cut meat, and what is made of milk. Every think to be eaten or drank, every thing that ſtrikes the ſenſes in any manner muſt be bleſſed. At riſing from table ſomething is always left for the poor; but the knives muſt be taken away before returning thanks, becauſe it is written: Thou ſhalt ſet no iron on the altar. Now a table repreſents the altar, at begging a bleſſing, or returning thanks. After this they waſh their hands.

A glaſs of wine began the meal, and ought to conclude it, before returning thanks, a glaſs full of mere wine is prepared, and taken into the right hand, and then a benediction ſaid.

At night they are to ſay their prayers with exactneſs, and firſt be reconciled with their enemies; or at leaſt uſe all their endeavours ſo to do. When they undreſs to go to bed, the left ſhoe muſt come off before the right, decency muſt be ſcrupulouſly obſerved, and they muſt ſpeak no more after ſaying an ejaculatory prayer: and if they cannot ſleep, they muſt entertain and nouriſh their ſoul with holy pious thoughts. Married people who lie together are to do what they pleaſe; [m] but however let them lift up their hearts to God, and pray for virtuous children. The head or bolſter of the bed muſt ſtand South, and

[h] Buxtorf. ex Talmud.

[i] If we are to believe the Talmud, an angel condeſcends to perform the office of guarding the bread. Vide Buxtorf. Cap. xii.

[l] Id. Ibid. Cap. xii.

[k] Id. Ibid.

[m] Syn. Jud. Cap. xiii.

and the feet North, but never East or West. This ſituation muſt be obſerved out of reſpect to the temple and city of Jeruſalem.

We ſhall ſay nothing of dreams, nor of conjugal duty: a particular detail on ſo ludicrous a ſubject might prove offenſive to the reader, tho' diverted at the ſame time.

There is ſomething remarkable as to the ſtuffs the Jews wear; for inſtance, they are forbidden to wear a mixture of woollen and linen in the ſame ſtuff. Their women are likewiſe forbidden to diſguiſe themſelves like men, as the men are to dreſs like women. A Jew muſt avoid every thing that may make a man appear effeminate: jewels, pomatums; paint, patches, Spaniſh white; all this muſt be baniſhed far from the toilet of the Jew, who pretends to the leaſt modeſty, and left to the ladies and the fops, together with the glaſs, and all the childiſh affected airs it teaches. The faithful Jew is to learn to be upon his guard, he is to ſhew a great ſoul, and patiently ſuffer the fine black hair he had at 25. to turn white at 45. He is not to know the uſe of nippers, or ſuch compoſitions as ſerve to diſcolour the beard, to take out wrinkles, to fill up holes in the face, or to faſten in falſe teeth. This is the duty of a devout Jew: but we do not ſay, that all of them inviolably perform it.

One word as to the beard, which has its laws and rules. The German Jews wear their beard from the extremity of one jaw to the other in form of a ſtring or cord, which is divided into two equal parts by a tuft which falls very agreably from the chin upon the breaſt.

As to the kitchen, they are to obſerve not to make uſe of any utenſils, that have been in the ſervice of Chriſtians, or other infidels. They throw boiling water or a hot iron into any tin or ſtone veſſel, to correct the ill uſe that Chriſtians might have made of it; and if it be to be uſed for any milk food, it is marked to diſtinguiſh it from ſuch as are uſed for meat, which likewiſe have their mark too. The knife for cutting meat is diſtinguiſhed from that which is to cut fiſh, or any think made of milk. When a knife has been put to a wrong uſe, the Germam Jews paſs it thro' the fire, or put it into ſcalding water.

We omit an infinite number of trifling punctilio's concerning their ſalt-ſellers, frying-pans, &c. the ſcrupulous manner of locking up in particular cupboards, and ſeparately waſhing ſuch utenſils as have been uſed for milk, and ſuch as have ſerved for meat: the care that muſt be taken not to cook meat and milk near each other, the choice of eggs, their refuſing of milk, butter, or cheeſe belonging to Chriſtians, &c. The exact obſervation of theſe rules makes a particular ſtudy by itſelf, and takes up a good part of the life of the German Jews.

When the dough for bread is kneading, a piece muſt be cut off, and thrown into the fire: this was formerly the prieſt's right, by vertue of Moſes's command [n]. If this be not done whilſt it is dough, it muſt be done when it is become bread: and if they buy or bake their bread at a Chriſtian's, they give it a private mark, or have it kneaded before their eyes. Something too might be ſaid as to their wine, and all ſorts of drink: but we refer to Buxtorf [o]. It ſhall ſuffice to ſay, that the Jews ſtrain every thing they drink with great care, [p] for ſhould any thing, that has life, die in the liquor, it is capable to pollute him that drinks of it, ſhould he ſwallow it, or even perceive any thing dead in the drink: but if he does not know it, it is an involuntary ſin; and he is not to be blamed.

In general, the laws of drinking are now-a-days very ill obſerved, from the great communication of the Jews with Chriſtians.

They obſerve the diſtinction of clean and unclean animals as formerly. The German [q] Jews have a ritual or form for their butchers, and if, notwithſtanding that, any caſe ſhould happen which might perplex the butcher, he conſults a Rabbi. The ſcience of a butcher depends on this ritual, which he is to ſtudy diligently, and be preſent at the killing of beaſts for many years, in order to learn how to kill them, and judge of their defects:

[n] Numb. Chap. xv. ỳ. 20, and 21.
[o] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. Cap. xxxv.
[p] This deciſion is taken from a Rabbi's own mouth.
[q] Buxtorf. Syn. Jud. Cap. xxxvi.

fects: after which he may be raiſed to the office of butcher, and the Rabbi will give him proper powers. Theſe formalities are neceſſary in a religion, where the butcher's buſineſs may create caſes of conſcience, and ſcruples capable of employing a Rabbi's whole attention. Their way of killing beaſts is this.

They tie the animal's four feet together, and then cut his throat. Immediately after they examine whether the point of the knife be not blunted, or the blade bent; for theſe two accidents might have prevented the effect of the ſtroke, and frightened the beaſt, and the blood being ſtopped thro' fear, might be congealed in the heart, and the animal thereby become unclean. After this, they take out the entrails, beginning over againſt the heart, and the noble parts are examined to ſee if there be no defect in them, ſuch as a ſchirrus, any calloſity, or excreſcence; or if there be no congealed blood, &c. and earth is thrown over the blood, as preſcribed in Leviticus, chap. xvii. ver. 13. The beaſt being killed, and his blood let out with all imaginable care, his nerves, veins, and arteries are taken out; as for the fat which they take off likewiſe, it may be uſed, after having cleared it from the blood with ſalt water. The thigh is forbidden the Jews upon account of [r] Jacob's wreſtling with the angel: but if we may credit [s] Buxtorf, this prohibition is eluded by the Jews of the Italian rite.

Agriculture has its particular rules and obſervations, but we ſhall add nothing to what Leo of Modena has already ſaid upon it.

All the firſt-born of clean animals belong to God; but as they are not now in a condition to offer them up to him in ſacrifice, they are allowed to kill and eat them, as ſoon as the leaſt defect is perceived in them. To ſave the trouble of keeping them long, they procure to ſome defect to be made in them [t].

The OATH and FORM of ABJURATION of a JEW, converted to the RELIGION of the GREEK CHRISTIANS.

1. AS to the oath, the Jew is ſworn upon the books of Moſes, and of the Old Teſtament. It is but juſt to attack a man's conſcience by what is the chief object of reſpect in religion, or by what contains his rule of faith.

2. The Greek Chriſtians uſe great precautions to bind the Jew, who has deſerted Judaiſm. This is an extract of the form of their abjuration, as M. Baſnage has given it [u]. The convert is to declare before the Prieſt, that his converſion is ſo voluntary, that neither hope nor fear have any ſhare in it; that neither poverty, nor the deſire of riches or honours, nor any other worldly motive have ſwayed him to it. He is likewiſe obliged to declare, that he has been guilty of no crime which engages him to change his religion, in order to eſcape condign puniſhment. He makes a ſolemn renunciation of the whole Jewiſh worſhip, naming all the particular cuſtoms of his religion; and curſes the hereſies and ſects, which are the branches of Judaiſm, the ſcribes, the doctors of the ſynagogue, and the Meſſiah whom the Jews expect. Thereupon the proſelyte repeats a very ample confeſſion of faith according to the belief of the Greek church, to which he adds, that he does it ſincerely, that he renounces Judaiſm with his whole heart, and that he will never have any thing to do with thoſe whom he has left. He concludes with devoting himſelf to all the curſes of the law, in caſe he ſhould happen to relapſe into the errors of the ſynagogue.

Whatever precaution may be taken to prevent relapſes, yet they are very frequently ſeen. The moſt horrid maledictions have nothing terrifying in them, when once a man is perſuaded they are denounced by a religion which God diſapproves. We may call upon the conſciences of Chriſtians to prove this fact. Is the Catholic ſcared at the Proteſtant's curſes; or does the Proteſtant turn pale when the Vatican lances out its excommunication-thunder againſt hereſy?

RELIGIOUS

[r] Geneſis, xxxii. [s] Syn. Jud. Cap. xxxvi. [t] Id. Cap. xxxviii.
[u] Hiſtory of the Jews, Lib. IX. Cap. xxix.

RELIGIOUS

CEREMONIES and CUSTOMS

OF

All the NATIONS of the WORLD,

REPRESENTED IN FIGURES

DRAWN

By BERNARD PICARD.

WITH

An Hiſtorical EXPLANATION and curious DISSERTATIONS.

PART II. of VOL. I.

Containing the Ceremonies of the Catholic Church, &c.

ADVERTISEMENT.

IN this ſecond part of the firſt volume of Religious Ceremonies, &c. We ſhall give a deſcription of the ceremonies practiſed by the Roman Catholic church, which are generally [a] all pageantry and myſtery. There are none for which [b] Myſtagogues will not ſhew a reaſon and neceſſity, out of books which he believes [c] of equal authority with the Apoſtolic writings; and yet they are not equally practiſed in all Catholic countries. There are ſome ceremonies, for inſtance, practiſed only in Italy, and which are unknown or neglected in France and other places. We have collected them all with as much exactneſs as poſſible. Yet, notwithſtanding our care, ſhould we have omitted any of them, we entreat the reader to conſider that theſe ceremonies are almoſt innumerable, that the Prieſts themſelves not being able to retain in their memories the whole ſyſtem of Chriſtian myſteries, are forced to have recourſe to books in order to behave according to the preſcribed forms; and in fine, that the circumſtances which attend the Roman Catholic ceremonies create no ſmall difficulty in the deſcription of them.

Having confeſſed ceremonies to be myſterious, we muſt neceſſarily repreſent them to Chriſtians as acts externally religious. We ſhall deſcribe them with all the reſpect due to their character, and take care how we prophane things become ſacred and venerable by conſecration; and which have for many ages kept our vulgar ſtedfaſt in their religion. Beſides, we ought to pay them the ſame deference that we owe to parents, who are very aged; whoſe infirmities we bear with, becauſe of the weight of years under which they are ſinking. All the difference to be found in this caſe is, that the antiquity of our ceremonies ſupports itſelf with a great deal of vigour, and will hold out many ages: they have inherited a ſtrong conſtitution from their parents; and far from being ſatisfied with this ſtrength of conſtitution, have in their very infancy [d] exhauſted them of all the ſubſtance that nouriſhed and fed them.

Yet let us frankly own that [e] ceremonies are neceſſary to the vulgar, and that without them, religion would have the appearance of a dry lean corpſe. The notion is mean, but what ſublimer thoughts have the vulgar upon this article? Religion is a ſtately building wherein are employed, very common materials, and in themſelves, infinitely below the excellence of ſuch a building: but at the ſame time, ſome materials are uſed which are noble, and infinitely above the reach of an ordinary genius; theſe are wrought with art, and the work ſo exquiſitely fine, that

[a] By their pageantry a great number of Indians were brought over to Chriſtianity, when firſt the Portugueſe ſettled in the Eaſt-Indies. Thoſe Infidels were delighted to find images and other repreſentations in the Chriſtian church, attended with the appearances of a worſhip which ſeemed not altogether new or ſtrange to them; they gave the names of Brama, Ram, and Wixnou, to ſeveral of our ſaints.

[b] We call them Myſtagogues, who have given us a deſcription of, and a key to the ceremonies.

[c] Caſalius and other Myſtagogues often quote the conſtitutions, which are come down to us under the name of St. Clement, and other authors whoſe authority is ſuſpected amongſt the learned: However, it is true, that in general the Roman Catholic ceremonies are very ancient; and their antiquity is the beſt proof we can give in favour of them.

[d] We cannot deny, but that Chriſtianity is adorned with the ſpoils of Judaiſm and Paganiſm. Our beſt authors are of that opinion. Du Choul, among others, at the end of his treatiſe concerning the religion of the old Romans, ingenuouſly owns the conformity there is between the ceremonies of the Chriſtians, and thoſe of the Romans and Egyptians. Caſalius ſays the ſame in his treatiſe upon Egyptian, Roman, and Chriſtian ceremonies.

[e] The common people have neither time, convenience, nor knowledge requiſite to make any judgment of their belief. Religion is in ſome meaſure given them by their parents with their Birth, and in ſuch a ſituation they muſt have ſomething that may affect their ſenſes, and draw their attention by its ſplendour. This is the conſequence of thoſe ceremonies which the Roman Catholic church has preſerved: From thence we conclude too, that the vulgar having received their religion as a free gift, and which in the ſame manner they beſtow upon their children; they may very well be diſpenſed with from comprehending, or fixing their thoughts upon it. They may love God without knowing him, and pray without underſtanding what they ſay to him; the external practice will ſave them, &c.

that great skill is required to diſcern it. Men of taſte will ſtick to theſe, whilſt the ignorant people are taken up with the others. Happy thoſe, who raiſe their minds to what is moſt ſublime and myſterious in religion, leaving the material part to thoſe vulgar and ſelfiſh ſouls! but very ſmall is the number of the former. Some men cannot, and others will not reſolve to throw off their ſenſual notions.

Of all the parts that compoſe this great work, this will be the moſt expoſed to the charge of compilation; which in the republic of letters, is almoſt as ſcandalous as that of theft. We ingenuouſly confeſs the charge, having often quoted long paſſages taken out of authors, without any art or diſguiſe. They were to our purpoſe, and as neceſſity required it, we made uſe of them. The reader muſt conſider, that with regard to religious ceremonies, it is of the greateſt importance to give the deſcription of them, as they lie in their original and unſuſpected authors; and far from aſcribing any merit to ourſelves upon this ſcore, we even relinquiſh that of being the authors of ſuch reflections as go along with theſe deſcriptions. Some people value themſelves for a happy turn, or a fine and uncommon reflection borrowed from others. An obſcure and almoſt forgotten author is plundered whilſt the pilferer is welcome, and no man will take the trouble to ſue him for reſtitution; but how ſhall this piece of injuſtice be prevented, ſince in our days, ſome of the moſt celebrated [f] authors are plundered in the face of the whole republic of letters? We omit the petty larceny criminals, that ſteal a thought from one, and a thought from another ſlily; and in the cleaneſt manner they can. In ſhort, moſt books now-a-days may be compared to turned-clothes; [g] a dextrous tailor can make them up again ſo artfully, that men of the beſt skill will miſtake them for new.

[f] The Abbé de Bellegarde is guilty of this crime in his Art of knowing men, which he took from a book, intituled, The Fallacy of the human Virtues: The firſt volumes of a certain hiſtory of Lewis the XIV^th^, are vamped out of the Memoirs of the Cardinal de Retz and Mr. Joly; the Hiſtory of the Revolutions of Sweeden, by the Abbé de Vertot, has been under contribution to that of Charles XII. King of Sweeden, &c.

[g] The Engliſh very ingeniouſly, give the name of ſecond-hand authors to thoſe writers, who make bold with other men's works: but we have ſome men, who are authors at a third and fourth hand.

DIS-

DISSERTATION

UPON THE

CHRISTIAN RELIGION

According to the Principles of the Roman CATHOLICS.

I. A general Notion of Chriſtianity.

IT is very natural for men to cry up the virtues and merit of that party in which they are engaged, tho' this does not always proceed from a principle of knowledge: but frequently from cuſtom and prejudice. It would be needleſs to enlarge upon this topick, and I think it ſufficient to ſay, that nothing is more common than this way of proceeding in matters of religion; nay, we are even indulgent to thoſe who act in this manner; and ſelf love makes us excuſe them, tho' they contend for the intereſt of their religion under the banner of prejudice: for this is what we ourſelves require from Atheiſts and Libertines; and from all ſuch as may accuſe us of being partial in any reſpect relating to the Chriſtian religion. If they cannot be induced to excuſe us on account of the excellence of its morality, and the miracles attending its riſe; we deſire them to be ſomewhat favourable to us for their own ſakes.

If we conſider the Chriſtian religion in reſpect to its tenets, it muſt be acknowledged to be very obſcure and difficult to be underſtood, and that its myſteries are not within the reach of human reaſon. The obſcurity of it is, no doubt, owing in ſome meaſure to the ſubtilties introduced by ſeveral philoſophers, converted to chriſtianity in the firſt ages of the church. Theſe philoſophers becoming doctors of the church, endeavoured to explain the myſteries of chriſtianity by arguments borrowed from the Platonic and other Pagan ſyſtems of philoſophy. Their ſucceſſors likewiſe (by their manner of explaining them) added new obſcurities to thoſe which they found before; and the paſſions of men inſenſibly mixing with theſe ſyſtems, it is the fault of neither, if the Chriſtian religion is not by this means become an impenetrable myſtery. To this certainly is owing the riſe of thoſe many ſects and hereſies, which are ſprung up in the Chriſtian religion, every one of which arrogates to itſelf primitive purity in opinion; the marks of divine inſpiration; a right of ſuperiority, and a true knowledge of the way to heaven; and there is not one which (indirectly at leaſt) can forbear damning all the reſt.

The excellency of its morality proves the Chriſtian religion to be of divine original. It conſiſts not in idle ſpeculations of philoſophy, nor a continued affectation of certain particulars; but in a conſtant ſteady practice of duties which looks for no recompence from men; ſeeks neither their admiration, nor to dazzle their eyes: And this practice being founded on the commands of God, propoſes the conduct which he obſerved whilſt upon earth as a pattern for imitation: If they who believe not in Jeſus Chriſt, would but carefully compare his laws with thoſe of the greateſt Lawgivers of antiquity, and his life to that of the moſt excellent philoſophers, we are of opinion, that far from looking upon him as a notorious impoſtor, they would at leaſt conſider him as a divine perſon, who all along acted by a ſupernatural power; but we are perſuaded that thoſe enemies of the Chriſtian Religion, who are diſtinguiſhed by the name of Libertines, and value themſelves upon it, are acted by the ſame ſpirit as thoſe who endeavour to eſtabliſh anarchy in government, and overturn its laws. Some of them are for acknowledging no power, and look upon good and bad Princes equally as tyrants; and others would have no more regard to Lycurgus and Solon, than to Chriſt and Moſes, did the precepts of theſe Pagan lawgivers ſeem as formidable to them, as thoſe of the founders of the Jewiſh and Chriſtian religion.

[a] In reſpect to practice, the Chriſtian religion conſiſts in the moſt perfect imitation that can poſſibly be conceived of the infinite perfections of the ſupreme Being. It is from hence that we muſt derive ſolid virtue, the power which it gives us over our paſſions, and the ſatisfaction which we receive from obſerving to the utmoſt of our capacity, the laws which God hath preſcribed to mankind; whilſt the wicked are endeavouring to overthrow them, and by their irregular and diſſolute conduct to confound the diſtinctions of good and evil. We believe, and that with reaſon, that God is pleaſed with ſeeing us imitate his perfections, and obſerve his laws. This principle naturally leads us to the belief of rewards and puniſhments: and as theſe are very imperfectly diſpenſed in this world; for men often forſake and even oppreſs virtue, at the ſame time that vice is rewarded, we muſt neceſſarily have recourſe to the ſentence of an eternal Being. Reaſon itſelf would inform us, that whatever is contrary to the infinite perfections of the ſupreme Being, or tends to overthrow the eternal laws of juſtice, deſerves a puniſhment proportionable to the crime, were not reaſon corrupted by our paſſions and bad examples. From thence it follows, that natural light being no longer ſufficient, there was a neceſſity for its being aſſiſted by revelation, which teaches us that the good will hereafter be rewarded in proportion to the excellence of their virtues; and the wicked receive ſuch puniſhments as the heinouſneſs of their crimes deſerves. This revelation we find in the Chriſtian religion; to perſuade us of this truth, there are all theſe concurring circumſtances, viz. its original, the life of its author, the weakneſs and ignorance of thoſe who propagated it by ſuch means as they were not capable of inventing, and the teſtimony which even its enemies themſelves were forced to give to it. There is nothing enjoined in its moral precepts, which is not agreeable to the perfections of the divine nature, and which does not tend to promote the happineſs of mankind: all its precepts agree with our notions of natural religion, pure and uncorrupted; its laws have no other view but the preſervation of mankind, and to bring mankind over; no other motives are made uſe of, but ſuch as are becoming the wiſdom of God. We muſt confeſs, that this morality is attended with ſome extraordinary tenets, which cannot be comprehended by the light of nature; therefore in order to diſcover them, let us be allowed at leaſt to approach them with the eye of our weak reaſon, and conſider them in that primitive ſimplicity, which preſerved them from the load of controverſies under which they have ſince groaned. If after this precaution, there ſtill remain ſome difficulties, we are at a loſs to know why they are not removed: in the mean time it is ſufficient, that that a ſerious inquiry will demonſtrate to us, that the characters of Chriſtianity have a perfect conformity with the attributes of the divine majeſty; that the moral part never gives way to men's paſſions; that it has no other deſign, but the preſervation and happineſs of mankind; that there is no example, that comes up to that of Jeſus Chriſt and his apoſtles; and that none of thoſe who have oppoſed the Chriſtian religion, ever invented any thing, either in ſpeculation, or practice, but what was very much inferior to it.

[a] See a Treatiſe on natural Religion, which makes the ſecond Volume of one intituled, The Exiſtence and Attributes of God, by Dr. Clarke.

II. Idea of the Chriſtian Religion according to the Principles of the Roman Catholics.

HAVING given a general notion of Chriſtianity, it will not be improper to enter into particulars. We will therefore begin with the Roman Catholic religion, which the Proteſtants have forſaken for many reaſons that require too tedious an examination; neither is it our preſent buſineſs to enquire how authentic it is: but however that may be, order and method oblige us to conſider that religion as the eldeſt daughter of Chriſtianity without perplexing ourſelves with the pretenſions of the other ſects. Nay there is one reaſon to be alledged in favour of the Roman Catholics, which is, that their religion is in ſome reſpects monarchical, and ſubject, if we may ſo ſay, to the authority of one perſon; and likewiſe holds, that a ſeparation of what nature ſoever, by deſtroying the unity of the church, excludes a Chriſtian from ſalvation. It ſhould likewiſe ſeem, that according to the notion of the Roman Catholics, the church is like a body politic; in both which unity is neceſſary; and [b] if there be any abuſes, we are to bear them patiently, and beſeech God for thoſe who are fallen into them; but avoid falling into them ourſelves.

The Roman Catholics believe all the fundamental articles of the Chriſtian religion. They worſhip one only God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. They acknowledge, that they are to put their truſt [c] in God only, through his Son incarnate, crucified and riſen from the dead for us. They receive the reſt of the articles of the Apoſtles Creed with the ſame certainty. The Proteſtant communions do not differ with them concerning the fundamentals of this belief: but they pretend, that there are a conſiderable number of additions, whereof, according to the latter, ſome are contrary to the Apoſtles Creed, and that they very much weaken the chief articles. They moreover pretend, that they with too much indulgence tolerate an infinite number of cuſtoms, which deviate from the Spirit of Chriſtianity. The Catholics reply to this, that it is neceſſary to be able to determine how far theſe practices are evil, and to prove beyond diſpute, that thoſe pretended additions which are complained of, are in reality additions; and beſides, contrary to the articles of the creed. Opinions have been ſo conſiderably multiplied by controverſy, that it is almoſt impoſſible to decide any thing relating to theſe additions: [d] and as for theſe cuſtoms in general, they ſay, that they are no articles of faith; and [e] even change according to the genius of people.

We will not enter into any diſputes about this ſubject: but only propound the belief of the Roman Catholicks in its greateſt purity. M. Boſſuet, has laid it before us in his Expoſition of the Catholic Church, ſtrengthened by the moſt authentic approbations; and conformable to the Decrees of the Council of Trent.

I. "To

[b] There is nothing, ſay the acts of the general aſſembly of the clergy of France in the year 1682. in our belief, that can offend a reaſonable mind, unleſs the abuſes of ſome particular people which we condemn, or certain errors which are falſly imputed to us, or the interpretations of ſome doctors, which are neither received nor authoriſed by the church are taken for our belief.

[c] Boſſuet. Expoſ. of the Cath. Doctr. p. 3. Bruſſels Edit. 1698.

[d] They make many other replies, which we cannot well quote without entring into a controverſy; and this ſubject hath produced on both ſides an infinite number of volumes; which in general contain nothing of Chriſtianity in them, but the bare name.

[e] As for example there are a great many cuſtoms in uſe at Rome, which are not at all obſerved in France.

I. " To begin, ſays he, with the worſhip which is due to God, the Catholic church " teaches, That it chiefly conſiſts in believing, that he is the Creator and Lord of all " things; that we ought to adhere to him with all the powers of our ſoul through faith, " hope and charity, as being the only object that can make us happy by the communi- " cation of infinite good, which is himſelf.

" This internal worſhip which we render unto God in ſpirit and truth, is attended " with its external marks, whereof ſacrifice is the chief; which can be offered to God " alone, inaſmuch as ſacrifice was inſtituted in order to make a public, and ſolemn ac- " knowledgment of the ſovereignty of God, and of our abſolute dependence upon him.

" The ſame church teaches, that all religious worſhip ought to terminate in God, as " its neceſſary end; and that if the honour, which is paid to the bleſſed virgin and the " ſaints, may be ſtiled religious; it is becauſe it neceſſarily relates to God.

II. " When the church tells us, that it is beneficial to pray to ſaints, it teaches us to " pray to them with the ſame ſpirit of charity, and according to that order of brotherly " ſociety, which induces us to require the aſſiſtance of our brethren living upon earth; " [f] and the catechiſm of the Council of Trent concludes from this doctrine, that if the " quality of mediator which the Holy Scriptures aſcribe to Jeſus Chriſt [g], received any " injury from the interceſſion of the ſaints which dwell with God; it would receive no " leſs a prejudice from the interceſſion of the faithful, who live here with us.

" This catechiſm thoroughly informs us in the great difference there is between the " manner of imploring the help of God, and that of imploring the help of ſaints: [h] For " we therein find, that we pray to God either to beſtow on us good, or to deliver us from evil; " but as the ſaints are more pleaſing to him than we are, we beg of them to become advocates, " and to procure for us thoſe things which we want. This is the reaſon we uſe two forms of " prayer very different from each other, ſince when we ſpeak to God; we properly ſay, " HAVE MERCY ON US. HEAR US. But when we ſpeak to the ſaints, we only ſay, " PRAY FOR US: whereby we are to underſtand, that in whatever terms we conceive " thoſe prayers which we direct to the ſaints, the intention of the church and of the " faithful, [i] always reduces them to that form; as this catechiſm afterwards confirms " to us.

" [k] But we ſhould do well to conſider the words of the Council itſelf, which intend- " ing to direct the biſhops in what manner they ought to ſpeak of the invocation of ſaints, " obliges them to teach, That the ſaints who dwell with Jeſus Chriſt, offer up their prayers " unto God for mankind; that it is good and profitable to invoke them in an humble manner; " and to implore their aid and aſſiſtance, in order to obtain from God, his favours, through " his Son our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who alone is our Saviour and Redeemer. The ſame Council " afterwards condemns thoſe who teach a contrary doctrine. To invoke the ſaints, ac- " cording to the notion of that Council, is to deſire their prayers to procure us the fa- " vours of God through Jeſus Chriſt. And 'tis moſt certain, that whatever we obtain " by the interceſſion of the ſaints, is through Jeſus Chriſt and in his name; the ſaints " themſelves praying through Jeſus Chriſt alone, and their requeſts being granted only " in his name.

" The ſame Council clearly and in few words, explains the intention of the church, " when it offers up unto God the holy ſacrifice in honour and memorial of the ſaints. " This honour which we pay them in the action of ſacrifice, conſiſts in naming them as " faithful ſervants of God; the prayers which we direct to him, in returning thanks to " him for the victories they have gained, and in humbly praying, that he will be moved " in favour of us thro' their interceſſions. [l] St. Auguſtin himſelf ſays, that we ought not

" to

[f] Cat. Rom. Part III.
[g] Tit. de cultu & Invoc. Sanct.
[h] Part IV. Tit. Quis orandus ſit.
[i] Ibid.
[k] Seſſ. 25. dec. de Invoc. &c.
[l] De Civit. c. xxvii.

" to believe that ſacrifice was offered up to the bleſſed martyrs, although, according to " the cuſtom practiſed in thoſe times by the univerſal church, they uſed to offer up " that ſacrifice over the ſaints bodies, and to their memory; that is to ſay, near the " places where their precious relics were depoſited. [m] The ſame father adds, that it " was uſual to commemorate the martyrs at the communion table, at the time of cele- " brating the ſacrifice, not in order to pray for them as they do for the other dead, but " rather that they ſhould pray for us. [n] The Council of Trent uſes almoſt the ſame " words with St. Auguſtin, in order to ſhew the faithful, that the church does not offer up " ſacrifice to the ſaints, but unto God only, who has crowned them; that the Prieſt likewiſe does " not addreſs himſelf to St. Peter or St. Paul, to ſay unto them, I OFFER UP UNTO YOU " THIS SACRIFICE; but giving thanks unto God for their victories, he deſires their aſ- " ſiſtance, that thoſe whom we commemorate upon earth may vouchſafe to pray for us in hea- " ven. It is in this manner, that we honour the ſaints in order to obtain God's graces " thro' their interceſſion; and the principal grace which we are in hopes to obtain, is " that of imitating them, to which we are highly encouraged by their admirable exam- " ples, and by the honour which we pay in the preſence of God, unto their bleſſed me- " mory.

" No Catholic (excepting the ignorant vulgar, or ſuch as are very glad to have them " continue in ſuperſtition) ever thought, that the ſaints by their own knowledge were " acquainted with our wants, or even with the wiſhes and deſires upon account of which " we ſecretly pray unto them. The church ſays no more than that ſuch prayers are " very profitable to thoſe that uſe them, whether the ſaints have notice of them by the " miniſtry and correſpondence of the angels, who (according to the teſtimony of the " Scriptures) are acquainted with what is tranſacted among us, being appointed by the " decree of God as miniſtring ſpirits to concur with us in the work of our ſalvation: or " whether God himſelf makes our thoughts known to them by a particular revelation; " or in ſhort, whether he diſcovers the ſecret to them in his infinite Being wherein all " truth is comprehended. So that the church has come to no particular deciſion as to " the different ways which God is pleaſed to make uſe of for this purpoſe.

" Yet whatever they may be, it is moſt certain, that the church attributes not any " of the divine perfections to creatures as idolaters were uſed to do, ſince ſhe does not " allow of acknowledging any degree of excellency in the greateſt ſaints, but what pro- " ceeds from God; nor any conſideration in his ſight, but thro' their virtues; nor any " virtue, but what is a Gift of his grace; nor any knowledge of human things, but that " which he communicates to them; nor any power to aſſiſt us, but thro' their prayers; " nor in ſhort, any happineſs, but by a ſubmiſſion and entire conformity to the divine " will.

" Upon an enquiry into our internal notions of ſaints, you will not find we place " them above the condition of creatures, and from thence you ought to judge of the " nature of that honour which we pay unto them outwardly; external worſhip being " appointed to expreſs the internal ſentiments of our ſoul.

" But as this honour which the church pays to the ſaints, appears chiefly before their " images and holy relics, it will be proper to explain what the church believes relating " to this ſubject.

III. " As to images, the Council of Trent expreſly forbids [o] that we ſhould believe there " is any divinity or vertue in them, that may induce us to worſhip them; that we are not " to ask any favour of them, nor put our confidence in them; and requires all the honour to " be paid to the originals which they repreſent.

[m] Tract. 84. in Joan. Serm. 17. de Verb. Apoſt.
[n] Concil. Trident. Seſſ. 22. c. iii.
[o] Concil. Trident. Seſſ. 25. dec. de Inv. &c.

" All theſe expreſſions of the council are ſo many ſigns which ſerve to diſtinguiſh us " from idolaters, and far from believing as they do, that there is any thing of a divi- " nity exiſting in images, we do not allow them even to have any vertue; but that of " reviving in us the remembrance of their originals.

" On this foundation is that honour which is paid to images; who for inſtance, can " deny, but that the image of Jeſus Chriſt crucified, when we fix our eyes on it, renews " in us a more lively remembrance of [p] him who loved us ſo as to ſuffer death for our ſakes? " So long as that image, which is before us, continues the remembrance of ſo ineſtimable " a bleſſing in our mind, we are puſhed on to ſhew how far our acknowledgement reaches, " by ſome outward tokens of gratitude; and by humbling ourſelves before the image, we " ſignify how high our devotion to its divine original riſes. Therefore to ſpeak with " preciſion, and in the ſtyle of the church, when we pay honour to the image of an " Apoſtle, or a martyr; our intention is not ſo much to honour the image, as to ho- " nour the Apoſtle or the martyr in preſence of the image. Theſe are the words of the " Roman pontifical [q]; and the Council of Trent likewiſe expreſſes itſelf in the ſame " manner.

" In ſhort, it may be underſtood in what ſenſe the church honours images, by the " honour which it pays to the croſs and to the book of the Goſpel. All men know that " before the croſs the church adores him, [r] who bore our tranſgreſſions on the wood of the croſs; " and that if the members of the church bow before the book of the Goſpel, if they " ſtand up out of reſpect when it is carried before them, and then kiſs it with reverence; " all ſuch marks of honour doth terminate in that eternal truth, which is therein laid " before us.

" The honour paid to relics, according to the cuſtom of the primitive ages of the " church, muſt be underſtood in the ſame manner; for we look upon the bodies of the " ſaints, as victims offered up to God by martyrdom or penance, without our any ways " diminiſhing from that honour, which we owe to God himſelf, &c.

" Nothing can be more unfair than to accuſe the church of making all piety conſiſt " in the devotion paid to the ſaints; ſince, as we have already obſerved, the Council of " Trent only tells the faithful that this cuſtom is [s] good and profitable, without ſaying " any thing more. Wherefore it is the intention of the church, to condemn thoſe who " reject this practice either out of contempt or error, and they ought to be condemned; " becauſe the church is not to ſuffer wholſome cuſtoms to be neglected and deſpiſed, nor " a doctrine authorized by antiquity, to be condemned by new teachers.

IV. " [t] As to what concerns juſtification, we believe, that our ſins are freely forgiven " us by the divine mercy for the ſake of Jeſus Chriſt, [u] that we are ſaid to be freely juſtified; " becauſe none of thoſe things which precede our juſtification, whether it be faith or good works, " can merit that favour.

" We believe, that our ſins are not only covered, but intirely blotted out too by the " blood of Jeſus Chriſt, and by the grace of regeneration, which far from darkening or " leſſening the notion we ought to have of the merits of that blood; on the contrary " ſtrengthens and improves it.

" Thus the righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt is not only imputed, but actually communi- " cated to his faithful ſervants by the operation of the Holy Ghoſt; ſo that they are " not only reputed, but even made righteous by his grace.

" If the righteouſneſs which is in us, were righteouſneſs in the eyes of men only, " it would not be the work of the Holy Ghoſt: it is therefore a righteouſneſs even be- " fore God, ſince it is God himſelf that creates it in us by repleniſhing our hearts with " charity.

" Our

[p] Galat. ii. [q] V. Pont. Rom. de bened. Imag. Seſſ. 25. dec. de Inv. &c. [r] 1 Pet. ii.
[s] Seſſ. 25. dec. de Inv. &c. [t] Concil. Trident. Seſſ. 6. c. ix. [u] Ibid. c. ii.

" Our righteouſneſs however is not perfect, becauſe of our ſtruggle with concupiſcence;
" for which reaſon the continual ſighs of a ſoul repenting its ſins is the moſt neceſſary
" duty of Chriſtian righteouſneſs; and this obliges us to confeſs that our righteouſneſs
" in this life, conſiſts rather in the remiſſion of our ſins, than in the perfection of our " virtues.

V. " As to merit by works the Catholic church teaches, that life everlaſting is to be pro-
" poſed to the children of God, both as a grace which is mercifully promiſed them by the means
" of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and as a reward which is faithfully granted for their good works
" and merits, in vertue of that promiſe. Theſe are the very expreſſions of the Council of " Trent. But leſt the pride of mankind ſhould flatter itſelf with the notion of a preſump-
" tuous merit, [w] the ſame council ſays, That the whole worth and value of Chriſtian
" works, proceed from a ſanctifying grace, which is freely beſtowed on us in the name
" of Jeſus Chriſt; and is an effect of the continual influcence of this divine head upon " his members.

" And indeed we may plainly ſee by the precepts, exhortations, promiſes, threats
" and reproofs of the Goſpel; that we muſt work out our ſalvation by the motions of " our will, with the grace of God aſſiſting us: but we are to lay it down as a firſt prin" ciple, that free will can do nothing towards our everlaſting happineſs; farther than as " it is actuated and raiſed by the Holy Ghoſt, &c.

" We declare openly, that we cannot be agreeable to God, but in and thro' JESUS " CHRIST, nor do apprehend how any other worth can be imputed to us. We ſo en" tirely place all the hopes of our ſalvation in him alone, that we daily direct theſe
" words to God in the ſacrifice: Vouchſafe, O God, to grant unto us ſinners, thy ſervants,
" who hope in the multitude of thy mercies, ſome ſhare and ſociety with thy bleſſed Apoſtles and
" martyrs, into the number of whom we beſeech thee to receive us, not having regard to our
" merit; but forgiving us thro' thy grace in the name of JESUS CHRIST our Lord.

" The Roman Catholics unanimouſly teach that Jeſus Chriſt alone, together both God
" and man, was able by the infinite dignity of his perſon to offer up unto God a ſuffi-
" cient ſatisfaction for our ſins; but having made more than a ſufficient, it was in his " power to apply that infinite ſatisfaction to us two different ways: either by granting
" us an entire abolition, without the reſerve of any puniſhment; or by commuting a " greater for a leſſer, that is to ſay, an eternal into a temporal. As the firſt is the moſt
" perfect and conformable to his goodneſs, he begins with that in the ſacrament of bap-
" tiſm: and we believe, that he uſes the ſecond in the remiſſion he grants to thoſe,
" who after baptiſm, relapſe into ſin, he being in ſome manner forced ſo to do; thro'
" the ingratitude of thoſe who have abuſed his firſt favours. Wherefore they are to ſuffer
" ſome temporal, tho' exempted from eternal puniſhment.

" But we are not thence to conclude, that Jeſus Chriſt has not made an entire ſatiſ-
" faction for us: but, on the contrary, that as he has acquired an abſolute right over us
" by the infinite price which he gave for our ſalvation, ſo he grants us his pardon upon
" ſuch conditions, under ſuch laws, and with ſuch reſtrictions as he thinks fit.

" We ſhould become injurious and ungrateful towards our Saviour, were we ſo dar" ing as to conteſt infinite merit with him, upon pretence that having forgiven us the " ſin of Adam, he has not at the ſame time freed us from all the conſequences thereof;
" leaving us ſtill ſubject to death, and to ſo many other temporal and ſpiritual infirmities
" which ſin has been the cauſe of. It is ſufficient for Jeſus Chriſt once to have paid that " price, whereby we ſhall one day be intirely delivered from all thoſe evils under which " we now groan: it is our duty with humility and thankfulneſs to receive every part of " his favour, conſidering the ſteps whereby he is pleaſed to forward our deliverance,
" according to the order which his wiſdom has appointed for our good, and for a more " clear manifeſtation of his goodneſs and juſtice.

" For

[w] Ibid.

" For the like reaſon we ought not to think it ſtrange, that he who has ſhewn him-
" ſelf ſo liberal to us in baptiſm, ſhould become more reſerved with us after we have " violated the ſacred promiſes we had made; it is juſt, and even advantageous for us,
" that God, in remitting the ſin, together with the eternal puniſhment, which we had
" deſerved, ſhould lay us under ſome temporal puniſhment only, in order to confine us
" within the bounds of our duty; leſt it might happen, that by too eaſily throwing off
" the bonds of juſtice, we ſhould give ourſelves up to a raſh confidence, and make an " ill uſe of that pardon which we had ſo freely obtained.

" It is then in order to ſatisfy that obligation, that we are liable to certain painful " works, to be performed by us with a ſpirit of repentance and humility; and it is the " neceſſity of theſe ſatisfactory works, which obliged the primitive church to inflict thoſe
" puniſhments, called canonical, upon penitents.

" Therefore when the church impoſes thoſe painful and laborious taſks upon ſinners,
" and they undergo them with humility, this is called Satisfaction; and when the church
" ſhews any regard either to the fervency of the penitents, or to other good works which " it preſcribes them, and remits any thing of the puniſhment due to them, that is " called Indulgence.

" [x] The Council of Trent does not propoſe that we ſhould believe any other thing con" cerning indulgences; but that the power of granting them was given to the church by
" Jeſus Chriſt, and that the practice of them is wholeſome; which cuſtom, that council adds,
" ought ſtill to be retained, but yet with moderation, leſt eccleſiaſtical diſcipline be weakened by
" too great a relaxation: which ſhews that the manner of granting indulgences has a " relation to diſcipline.

" They who depart this life in grace and charity, and yet ſtill liable to thoſe
" puniſhments, which divine juſtice has reſerved for them, will ſuffer them in the other " world; and this is what obliged the whole Chriſtian church in the earlieſt ages to offer
" up prayers, alms and ſacrifices for the faithful departed in peace, and in the commu" nion of the church; with a firm confidence of their being relieved by thoſe means.
" [y] This is what the Council of Trent propoſes we ſhould believe concerning ſouls detain" ed in purgatory, without determining either as to the nature of their pains, as well as " many other things of the ſame kind; in regard to which that holy council requires much " circumſpection; blaming thoſe who ſay things which are uncertain and ſuſpicious.

" The ſacraments of the New Teſtament are not only ſacred ſigns of grace, or ſeals that " confirm it to us: but inſtruments of the Holy Ghoſt, which ſerve to apply, and con" fer it on us by vertue of the words pronounced, and the action outwardly performed
" in our behalf, provided we do not, by our evil diſpoſition, prevent the effects of it.

" When God annexes ſo high a favour to outward ſigns, which in their nature have " no proportion to ſuch admirable effects, he plainly ſhews us that, beſides all that " we can do inwardly thro' our good diſpoſitions, there muſt ſtill intervene a ſpecial ope" ration of the Holy Ghoſt to ſanctify us; and a particular application of the merits of " our Saviour, repreſented to us by the ſacraments. Therefore this doctrine cannot be " rejected without offering an indignity to the merit of JESUS CHRIST; and to the " work of the divine power in our regeneration.

" We acknowledge ſeven ſigns or ſacred ceremonies inſtituted by Jeſus Chriſt as the " ordinary means, whereby the new man is ſanctified and made perfect. Their divine
" inſtitution appears from the Holy Scriptures, either by the expreſs words of Jeſus
" Chriſt, who inſtituted them, or by grace, which, according to the ſame Scriptures, is " annexed to them, and neceſſarily denotes an order from God.

" [z] As young children cannot ſupply the defects of baptiſm, by acts of faith, hope " and charity, or by any vow to receive that ſacrament, it is our belief, that if they do " not actually receive it, they in nowiſe partake of the grace of redemption; and ſo dy-
" ing in Adam, they have no ſhare at all in Jeſus Chriſt. " [a] Impoſition

[x] Contin. Seſſ. 25. dec. de Indulg.

[y] Seſſ. 25. de Purg.

[z] Baptiſm.

" [a] Impoſition of hands practiſed by the bleſſed Apoſtles, in order to confirm the faith" ful againſt perſecutions, having its principal effect in the internal deſcent of the Holy
" Ghoſt; and in the infuſion of his gifts, ought not to be rejected by our adverſaries
" upon pretence that the Holy Ghoſt does not now deſcend viſibly upon us. And in" deed all Chriſtian churches have religiouſly preſerved that practice down from the " Apoſtles, uſing alſo the holy chriſm to ſhew the vertue of that ſacrament by a more ex-
" preſs repreſentation of the unction of the Holy Ghoſt.

" [b] We believe that Jeſus Chriſt has ordained that ſuch as have ſubmitted themſelves " to the authority of the church by baptiſm, and have afterwards violated the laws of " the Goſpel ſhall come and ſubmit themſelves to the judgment of that ſame church
" in the tribunal of penance, [c] where ſhe exerciſes the power which is given unto her of " remitting and forgiving ſins.

" The terms of the commiſſion given to the miniſters of the church, to abſolve ſins,
" are ſo general that it would be a raſhneſs to reduce it only to public ſins; and as when
" at the time of their pronouncing abſolution in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, they only keep " up to the expreſs terms of that commiſſion, ſo the ſentence is looked upon as given by
" Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, in whoſe name they are conſtituted judges. He is the inviſible
" pontiff, who inwardly abſolves the penitent, whilſt the Prieſt performs this external " office.

" This ſentence being ſo neceſſary a reſtraint upon licenciouſneſs; ſo plentiful a ſpring of
" wiſe counſels; and ſo ſenſible a conſolation to thoſe who are grieved for their ſins,
" when their abſolution is not only declared to them in general terms as is practiſed by
" the miniſters, but they are alſo effectually abſolved by the authority of Jeſus Chriſt,
" after a particular examination and knowledge of the matter: we cannot believe, that
" our adverſaries can look on ſo many advantages, without regretting the loſs of them,
" and being in ſome manner aſhamed of a reformation which has laid aſide ſo pious and
" wholeſome a cuſtom.

" [d] The Holy Ghoſt having (according to the teſtimony of St. James) annexed an ex-
" preſs promiſe of remiſſion of ſins, and relief of the ſick to extreme unction; there can " be nothing wanting to make this holy ceremony, a real ſacrament. [e] Only we are to " obſerve, that according to the doctrine of the Council of Trent, the ſick perſon receives " more relief in ſoul than in body; and as ſpiritual good is ever the principal object of " the new law, it is that likewiſe which we muſt expect, in caſe we are properly pre" pared for it: whereas relief in ſickneſs, is only granted unto us with reſpect to our exter" nal ſalvation, according to the ſecret intentions of divine Providence, and the different " degrees of preparation and faith to be found in the faithful.

" [f] When we conſider, that Jeſus Chriſt has given a new turn to matrimony, [g] by re" ducing that holy ſociety to the conſtant and indiſſoluble union of two perſons only;
" and when we ſee this inſeparable union is a ſign of his eternal union with his church,
" we ſhall find no difficulty in comprehending that the marriage of the faithful is at" tended with the Holy Ghoſt and the grace of God; and we ſhould praiſe the divine good-
" neſs, for having thus conſecrated the very principles of our birth.

" [h] Impoſition of hands received by the miniſters of holy things, being attended with
" ſo immediate a vertue from the Holy Ghoſt, [i] and with ſo entire an infuſion of grace,
" it ought to be placed among the number of ſacraments.

" [k] The real preſence of the body and blood of Jeſus Chriſt in the ſacrament of the " Euchariſt, is firmly eſtabliſhed by the words of the inſtitution, which we underſtand
" literally; and one might as well aſk a traveller why he follows the high road, as aſk
" us why we ſtick to the proper and literal ſenſe. We do not find any thing in the

[a] Confirmation, Acts viii. 15. 17. [b] Penance and ſacramental confeſſion. [c] Mat. xvlii. 18. John xx. 23.
[d] Extreme unction, Jam. v. 14. [e] Seſſ. 14. c. 2. de Sac. extr. unct. [f] Matrimony.
[g] Mat. xix. 5. Eph. v. 32. [h] Order. [i] 1 Tim. iv. 2 Tim. i. [k] The Euchariſt.

" words, which Jeſus Chriſt uſes in the inſtitution of this myſtery, that obliges us to " take them in a figurative ſenſe; and we are of opinion, that this reaſon is ſufficient " to determine us to the proper ſenſe. But we are yet more ſtrictly bound to it, when " we conſider the intention of the Son of God in this myſtery, which I ſhall explain " in the cleareſt manner poſſible, and upon ſuch principles as I believe cannot be diſal- " lowed of.

" [l] I ſay then, that theſe words of our Saviour, Take, eat, this is my body given for you, " ſhew us that the ancient Jews were not only united in ſpirit at the immolation of the " victims that were ſacrificed for them; but that they alſo uſed to eat of the fleſh that was " ſacrificed, which was a ſign to them of the ſhare they had in that oblation. Therefore " Jeſus Chriſt having offered himſelf a victim for us, it was his will that, we ſhould " really eat the fleſh of that offering, that the actual communication of that adorable " fleſh, might be a perpetual teſtimony to every one of us in particular, that he had aſ- " ſumed his body for our ſakes; and had made a ſacrifice of it for ourſelves.

" [m] God had forbidden the Jews to eat of the ſin offering, thereby to ſhew them that " there was no real atonement made for crimes neither under the law, nor by the blood " of animals; and all the people were in a manner, under an interdict by that prohibi- " tion, ſo that they could not have any actual ſhare in the remiſſion of ſins. Now by " a contrary reaſon, it was neceſſary that the body of our Saviour, which was a true " ſacrifice offered up for ſins, ſhould be eaten by the faithful, to ſhew them, that there- " by the remiſſion of ſins was under the New Teſtament fulfilled.

" [n] God likewiſe forbad the Jewiſh nation to eat any blood; and one of the reaſons " for that prohibition was, that blood was given for the expiation of our ſouls; but on the " contrary, our Saviour bids us drink his blood, becauſe [o] it is ſhed for the remiſſion of " ſins.

" Thus the eating of the fleſh and blood of the Son of God is as real at the holy ta- " ble, as grace, atonement of ſins, and participation of the ſacrifice of Jeſus Chriſt, is " actual and effectual under the new covenant.

" And yet, as he was willing to prove our faith in this myſtery, and at the ſame time " free us from the horror of eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood, under their proper " ſpecies, it was convenient to give them to us, cloathed under a ſpecies of another na- " ture; and if theſe conſiderations obliged him to let us eat the fleſh of our offering in " another manner than the Jews did, yet he was not therefore neceſſitated to take any " thing away from the reality and ſubſtance of it.

" It appears then, that in order to fulfil the ancient types, and put us into actual poſ- " ſeſſion of the ſacrifice that was offered up for our ſins, it was Jeſus Chriſt's deſign " truly to give us his body and blood; which is moſt evident------ We can never agree " to receive thoſe words only in a figurative ſenſe, ſince the Son of God, who was ſo " careful in explaining to his Apoſtles thoſe things, which he taught them under pa- " rables and figures, not having ſaid any thing to explain this matter, it is evident, that " he left theſe words in their natural ſignification. It is no more difficult for the Son of " God to cauſe his body to be in the Euchariſt, by ſaying, This is my body, than to free " a woman from her diſeaſe by ſaying, [p] Woman, thou art freed from thine infirmity: or " to ſave a young man's life, by ſaying to his father, [q] Thy Son liveth; or in ſhort, to " remit the ſins of the man who was ſick of the palſy, by ſaying to him, [r] Thy ſins are " forgiven thee.

" Therefore, as it is not our buſineſs to be concerned how Jeſus Chriſt will perform " what he ſays, we ſtick to his expreſs words: for he who does what he pleaſes, can " by words bring what he ſays to paſs; nay, it was eaſier for the Son of God to force " the laws of nature to verify his words, than for us to reconcile our ſenſe to violent in- " terpretations, which overthrow all the laws of ſpeech.

" Theſe

[l] Mat. xvi. Luke xxii. [m] Levit. vi. 30. [n] Levit. xvii. 11. [o] Mat. xxvii 28.
[p] Luke xiii. 12. [q] John. iv. 50. [r] Mat. ix. 2.

" Theſe laws of ſpeech teach us, that ſuch a ſign as is a natural repreſentation of what " it ſtands for, often aſſumes the name of the thing it repreſents; becauſe it is, as it were, " natural to it to raiſe the idea of it in the mind. The ſame thing happens likewiſe, " tho' with ſome particular reſtrictions in ſigns of inſtitution, when once they are re- " ceived, and we are uſed to them: but at the eſtabliſhing any ſign, which of itſelf hath " no affinity with the thing itſelf, as for inſtance, for a piece of bread to ſignify the body " of a man, to have a name given it without any explanation, and before any one has " agreed upon it, as did Jeſus Chriſt in his holy ſupper; this is a thing unheard of, and " whereof we find no inſtance in all the Holy Scriptures; not to ſay in all the books " that were ever wrote.

" Having laid down the opinions of the church concerning theſe words, This is my " body, we muſt ſay, what her thoughts are of thoſe words which Jeſus Chriſt added " to them, [r] This do in remembrance of me. It is plain, that it was the intention of the " Son of God to oblige us by thoſe words to remember the death, which he ſuffered for " our ſalvation; and St. Paul concludes from theſe ſame words, that we preach the death " of the Lord in that myſtery: wherefore we muſt not perſuade ourſelves, that this re- " membrance of the death of our Lord excludes the real preſence of his body: on the " contrary, if we conſider what we have juſt explained, it may eaſily be underſtood, " that this commemoration is grounded upon the real preſence. For in the ſame man- " ner as the Jews, at eating their peace-offerings, remembered that they had been ſacri- " ficed for them, ſo likewiſe, when we eat the fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt our offering, we " ought to remember that he died for us. It is therefore the ſame fleſh, eaten by the " faithful, which not only revives in us the memory of his being offered up for us: " but even confirms us in the truth thereof; and far from being able to ſay, that this ſo- " lemn commemoration, which Jeſus Chriſt commands us to make, excludes the real " preſence of his fleſh, we on the contrary find, that this tender remembrance of " him which he requires of us at the Holy table as being ſacrificed for us, is grounded " upon that ſame fleſh being really taken there; ſince in truth we cannot poſſibly forget " that he gave his body as an offering for us, when we ſee that he ſtill gives us daily " the ſame offering to eat.

X. " As it was not convenient, [t] that our ſenſes ſhould perceive any thing in this myſtery " of faith, ſo neither was it that any thing ſhould be changed in reſpect to them in the " bread and wine of the Euchariſt. For which reaſon, as we perceive the ſame ſpecies, " and feel the ſame effects as before in that ſacrament, we muſt not be ſurpriſed, if ſome- " times, and in ſome particular ſenſe it ſhould go under the ſame denomination. Yet " Faith, attentive to his word, who does whatſoever is agreeable to him both in heaven " and earth, on this occaſion acknowledges no other ſubſtance than that which is meant " by thoſe very words, that is to ſay, the very body and blood of Jeſus Chriſt, into which " the bread and wine are changed; and this is what we call Tranſubſtantiation.

" However, the reality internally contained in the Euchariſt hinders it not from being a " ſign, as to what appears outwardly to our ſenſes; tho', indeed, a ſign of ſuch a nature, that " far from excluding the reality it neceſſarily carries it along with it, ſince, in effect, " theſe words, This is my body, pronounced over the ſpecies which Jeſus Chriſt has cho- " ſen, is a certain ſign to us, that he is preſent: and tho' theſe things appear ſtill the " ſame to our ſenſes, yet our ſoul forms a different judgment of them, from what it " would do, had not a ſuperior authority intervened. Therefore, whereas ſome certain " kinds and a certain continuation of natural impreſſions which are formed in our bodies, " are uſed to repreſent to us the ſubſtance of bread and wine, now inſtead thereof the " authority of him, in whom we believe, ſo orders it that thoſe very ſpecies begin to " appear

[r] Luke xxii. 19. 1 Cor. ii. 24. 2 Cor. v. 24.
[t] Of Tranſubſtantiation, of adoration, and in what ſenſe the Euchariſt is a ſign.

" appear to us as another ſubſtance. For we are attentive to hear him who ſays, that " what we take, and what we eat is his body; and ſuch is the force of theſe words, that " they will not admit us to take theſe outward appearances for the ſubſtance of bread, " but for that of the body of Jeſus Chriſt preſent: ſo that the preſence of ſo adorable an " object, being confirmed to us by this ſign, we make no difficulty to pay our adorations " to it.

" I ſhall not enlarge upon the article of adoration, becauſe all thoſe who believe that " Jeſus Chriſt is preſent in the Euchariſt, muſt of courſe pay their adoration to it.

" And indeed, being once convinced that theſe all-powerful words of the Son of God, " perform whatever they intend in pronouncing them, we believe with reaſon, that they " had their effect at the Lord's ſupper the moment they were ſpoken; and by a neceſ- " ſary conſequence, we acknowledge the real preſence of the body before the manduca- " tion.

" Theſe things being ſuppoſed, the ſacrifice which we acknowledge in the Euchariſt " will not admit of any particular difficulty.

" We have obſerved two actions in that myſtery, really diſtinct, tho' relative to each " other. The one is the conſecration, whereby the bread and wine are changed into " the body and blood; and the other is the eating, by which we partake of the ſame.

" In the conſecration, the body and blood are myſtically ſeparated, becauſe that Je- " ſus Chriſt ſaid diſtinctly, This is is my body, this is my blood; which includes a lively and " effectual image of the violent death which he ſuffered.

" Thus the Son of God is ſet on the holy table, by vertue of thoſe words, clothed in " the ſigns repreſenting his death, which is wrought by the conſecration; and this reli- " gious action carries with it an acknowledgment of the divine Sovereignty, inaſmuch " as Jeſus Chriſt preſent in ſome ſort, renews and perpetuates the memory of his obe- " dience even to his dying upon the Croſs; ſo that nothing more can be wanting to make " him a real offering.

" It is not to be doubted, but this action being diſtinct from the manducation, muſt " in itſelf be agreeable to God, and induce him to look down upon us with a more " propitious eye; becauſe it ſets before him the voluntary death, which his well-beloved " Son ſuffered for our ſins; or rather that very Son, under the ſigns of that death, by " which he was appeaſed.

" All Chriſtians muſt confeſs, that the bare preſence of Jeſus Chriſt is a moſt power- " ful way of interceſſion before Almighty God, for mankind in general; [a] according to " what is ſaid by the Apoſtle, that Jeſus Chriſt appears before the face of God in behalf of " us. Wherefore we believe, that Jeſus Chriſt preſent on the holy table under thoſe ſigns " of death, intercedes for us, and continually ſets before God his father, that death which " he ſuffered for his church.

" In this ſenſe it is, that we ſay, that Jeſus Chriſt offers himſelf up for us to God in " the Euchariſt; and in this manner, we believe, that by this oblation, God becomes " more propitious to us; which is the reaſon we call it propitiatory.

" When we conſider, that which Jeſus Chriſt performs in this myſtery, and that thro' " faith, we ſee him actually preſent upon the holy table under thoſe ſigns of death; we " unite ourſelves to him in that condition; we preſent him to God as our only offering, " and our only propitiator thro' his blood, proteſting that we have nothing to offer up unto " God but Jeſus Chriſt and the infinite merit of his death. We conſecrate all our prayers " thro' that divine offering, and when we offer up Jeſus Chriſt to God, we are at the " ſame time taught to offer ourſelves up to the divine majeſty, in him, and thro' him, " as living offerings.

" Such is the ſacrifice of Chriſtians, very different from what was practiſed under the " law: a ſpiritual ſacrifice worthy of the new covenant, where the offering that is pre-

" ſent

[a] Heb. ix. 24.

" ſent is only ſeen thro' faith; where the ſword is the word which myſtically ſeparates
" the body from the blood; where conſequently this blood is ſhed in myſtery only, and
" where death hath no ſhare but by way of repreſentation; and yet a true and real ſa-
" crifice, inaſmuch as Jeſus Chriſt is truly contained therein, and offered up unto God
" under that figure of death: but at the ſame time a ſacrifice of commemoration, which
" far from taking us off from the ſacrifice of the croſs, as ſome people urge againſt us,
" rather unites us to it by all its circumſtances, ſince it not only relates entirely to it,
" but in reality can neither be nor ſubſiſt without that relation, from which it receives all " its vertue.

" This is the expreſs doctrine of the Catholic church in the Council of Trent, [w] which " teaches that this ſacrifice was only inſtituted in order to repreſent that which was once
" fulfilled on the croſs; to perpetuate the remembrance of it for ever; and to apply unto us the " wholeſome vertue of it for the remiſſion of thoſe ſins which we daily commit. So that " far from thinking, that any thing is deficient in the ſacrifice of the croſs, the church
" on the contrary, believes it to be ſo perfect, and ſo entirely ſatisfactory, that every thing
" afterwards performed, is only ordained to celebrate the memory of it, and to apply the " vertue of it to us.

" Thereby the ſame church acknowledges, that all the merit of the redemption of " mankind is fixed, and owing to the death of the Son of God: and from all that has " been ſaid, we muſt have underſtood, that when in the celebration of the divine myſte-
" ries, we tell God that we offer up unto thee this holy offering, we do not pretend by that
" oblation to make or preſent unto God a new payment of the price of our ſalvation;
" but to employ the merits of Jeſus Chriſt preſent with him, and the infinite price which
" he once paid for us on the croſs.

XI. " Jeſus Chriſt [x] being really preſent in that ſacrament, the grace and bleſſing is not " annexed to the ſpecies, that appear to our ſenſes, but to the very ſubſtance of his fleſh,
" which is both vivified and endued with a vivifying power; by reaſon of the Divinity
" united to it. Wherefore they who believe in the reality, ought not to make any diffi" culty to receive the communion only under one ſpecies, ſince they therein receive all that " is eſſential to that ſacrament, in ſo much the more ample a manner, and certain, as
" the ſeparation of the body and blood not being real, (as we have already ſaid) they " fully and individually receive him who alone is able to ſatisfy us.

" Upon this ſolid foundation it is, that the church, interpreting the precept of the com" munion, has declared, that we may receive the ſanctification conferred by that ſacra-
" ment under one ſpecies only; and that if the church has confined the faithful to that " only ſpecies, it was not out of any contempt for the other; but on the contrary, in " order to prevent the irreverent actions, which the confuſion and neglect of people had
" occaſioned in theſe latter times; reſerving to itſelf the re-eſtabliſhment of the commu" nion under both ſpecies, according as it ſhould prove to be more convenient for peace " and unity.

XII. " Jeſus Chriſt having eſtabliſhed [y] his church by preaching, the unwritten word
" was the firſt rule of Chriſtianity; and when the Scriptures of the New Teſtament were " added to it, that word nevertheleſs did not loſe any thing of its authority; which is
" the reaſon we with the ſame veneration receive all that has been taught by the Apoſtles,
" either written, or by word of mouth, [z] as St. Paul himſelf expreſly declared; and a
" certain proof of any doctrine coming from the Apoſtles, is when it is received by all
" the churches of Chriſt, tho' no account can be given of its beginning. Nor can we " refuſe to receive every thing eſtabliſhed in this manner, with a ſubmiſſion due to the " divine authority.

XIII. " The

[w] Seſſ. 22. c. 1.
[x] The communion under both ſpecies.
[y] The word written, and unwritten.
[z] Theſſ. ii. 24.

XIII. " The church being by Almighty God [a] appointed the guardian of the Scrip" tures and tradition, it is from her we receive the canonical writings.

" Being thus inſeparably united, as we are, to the authority of the church by the means
" of the Scriptures, which we receive from her; from her alſo we receive tradition, and " by the means of that tradition, we are taught the true ſenſe of the Scriptures. It is " for this reaſon, that the church profeſſes to teach nothing of herſelf, nor to invent any
" new doctrine; ſhe only follows and declares divine revelation by the inward direction " of the Holy Ghoſt, given unto her for her inſtructor.

" The diſſention which aroſe concerning the ceremonies of the law in the time of " the Apoſtles makes it appear, that the Holy Ghoſt makes the church his interpreter;
" and their acts have, by the manner of deciding that diſpute, taught all ages to come
" the authority by which all diſputes of that kind are to be ended. Thus as long as " there ſhall ariſe any diſſentions, which may cauſe a diviſion among the faithful, the " church ſhall interpoſe its authority; and its elders being aſſembled, ſhall ſay after the " Apoſtles, [b] it ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt, and to us: and when the church hath once
" ſpoken, its children ſhall be taught not to make a new enquiry into the articles it hath
" reſolved, but humbly to ſubmit to its deciſions. In ſo doing, we ſhall follow the exam" ple of St. Paul and Silas, who delivered that firſt decree of the Apoſtles to the faithful,
" and who far from ſuffering them to re-examine what they had decided, [c] went from
" town to town, charging them to keep the ordinances of the Apoſtles.

" It is in this manner, that the children of God ſubmit to the judgment of the church,
" aſſured of hearing the oracles of the Holy Ghoſt from its mouth; and it is on account
" of this belief, that in the creed after we have repeated, I believe in the Holy Ghoſt, we " immediately after add, the holy Catholic church. Whereby we oblige ourſelves to ac" knowledge an infallible and everlaſting truth in the univerſal church, ſince that ſame
" church, in which we believe at all times, would ceaſe being a church, ſhould it ceaſe
" teaching that truth which God was pleaſed to reveal. Therefore, whoſoever ſuſpects
" the church of making an ill uſe of its authority, in order to eſtabliſh the ſpirit of un-
" truth, has no faith in him, by whom the church is governed.

" This ſupreme authority of the church is ſo neceſſary for the regulation of the dif" ferences ariſing in matters of faith, and ſenſe of the Scriptures, that the Proteſtants
" themſelves after having exploded it as an inſupportable tyranny, were at laſt obliged to
" ſet it up among themſelves.

" When thoſe who call themſelves independents declared openly, that every Chriſtian " ought to follow the light of his own conſcience, without ſubmitting his judgment to
" the authority of any eccleſiaſtical body or aſſembly, and upon this foundation, refuſed
" to ſubmit to ſynods; that of Charenton held in the year 1644, cenſured that doctrine
" for the ſame reaſons and inconveniencies; which cauſed us to reject it. That Synod
" in the firſt place, ſays, that the error of the independents conſiſts in their teaching,
" that every church ought to be governed by its own laws, without depending on any perſon
" whatſoever in eccleſiaſtical matters, and without any obligation of acknowledging the autho- " rity of convocations or ſynods for their government and conduct. After which the ſame ſy-
" nod concludes, that this ſect is as prejudicial to the ſtate, as to the church; that it opens a
" door to all irregularities and extravagances; that it obſtructs all the means of rectifying them,
" and that if it once took footing, there might proceed from it, as many religions [d] as there are
" pariſhes and private meetings. We ſee by theſe laſt words, that the deſign which this
" ſynod had in eſtabliſhing dependency was chiefly in matters of faith; ſince the greateſt in" convenience it mentions Chriſtians are like to fall into from independency, was, that it
" might

[a] The authority of the church. [b] Acts xv. 28. [c] Acts x. 4.
[d] This inconvenience predominates in thoſe countries, where a too great liberty of opinions is tolerated, and where it is even allowed to publiſh them: on the other-hand, they who either out of policy or fear, hold their tongue and pretend to conform, are hypocrites.

" might occaſion as many religions as pariſhes. It is therefore neceſſary, according to the " doctrine of this ſynod, that every church, and with much more reaſon, every private " perſon, ſhould in matters of faith depend on a ſuperior authority, reſiding in a number " of perſons; to which authority the faithful ought to ſubmit their judgment. For the " independents do not refuſe to ſubmit themſelves to the word of God according as they " think they are to underſtand it; nor to receive the deciſions of ſynods, when after ha- " ving examined them, they find them reaſonable. But what they refuſe doing, is to " ſubmit their opinions to that of any convocation, &c.

XIV. " [e] The Son of God having decreed that his church ſhould be only one, and " firmly built upon unity, has eſtabliſhed and inſtituted the primacy of St. Peter in order " to maintain and cement it: for which reaſon we acknowledge that very primacy in the " ſucceſſors of that Prince of the Apoſtles, to whom, for that very reaſon, we owe the " ſame ſubmiſſion and obedience, which the holy Councils and Fathers have ever re- " commended to the faithful.

This is the expoſition of the doctrine of thoſe Chriſtians, who are known by the name of Catholics, with the addition of Roman from Proteſtant communions. This doctrine as here ſet forth, appears ſimple, eaſy to be underſtood and ſtripped of all its difficulties. All ſuch as profeſs the belief of this doctrine, are truly united to the body of the church. To her the good Chriſtian is to ſubmit: reaſon at all times fond of enquiring wherein conſiſts the object of the believer's faith, as to Chriſtianity, is a moſt dangerous rock to ſplit upon; a Chriſtian who is any ways doubtful muſt conſult his curate, and the explanation of the latter muſt agree with the deciſions of the grand paſtor. An humble ſheep thus tamely bows to the crook. The grand paſtor is the Pope, whoſe infallibility in matters of doctrine and deciſion, (according to the opinions of ſome people) ſecures everlaſting ſalvation to thoſe who will adhere to and ſtick by him; as for the Gallican church it rejects that infallibility, and ſets a council above the Pope; is it not natural to believe, that the whole body of the church may ſupremely decide in matters of doctrine[f]? Let the Pope be at the head of that body, and let him, jointly with that body, form a complete ſyſtem of doctrine and welcome: for then we may, without difficulty believe, that the deciſions of ſuch an auguſt aſſembly will be agreeable to the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt: but that the Pope alone ſhould be the ſupreme judge, this the church cannot allow him, unleſs it be in ſuch things [g] as are agreeable to the precepts of Jeſus Chriſt. When the Pope deviates from the true ſenſe of the Scriptures, we cannot poſſibly look upon him as the vicar of Chriſt; the church has a right to diveſt him of the authority which it had entruſted him with, in the name of the Saviour of the world, in which caſe the Pope is no longer to be obeyed; but a believer muſt ſubmit to the [h] chair of St. Peter, till ſuch time as a legal Pope is in poſſeſſion of it.

[e] The authority of the holy ſee and of epiſcopacy.

[f] An objection may be ſtarted againſt this principle. The council we may ſay, repreſents the church of Chriſt, and its deciſions conſequently are thoſe of the church; but the council decides by a majority of votes: Wherefore, if the majority of votes ſhould declare in favour of an error; where will an appeal lie? For diſobedience to the deciſions of the church is ſchiſmatical; a ſubmiſſion to them is heretical.

[g] This is what determined that part of the clergy of the Gallican church, which oppoſed the conſtitution of Clement IX. to appeal to a council.

[h] They who oppoſed the conſtitution pretend that we ought to diſtinguiſh between the Pope and that chair. The Proteſtants are merry upon this diſtinction, and ask what that chair is? They propoſe this queſtion too, whether a ſubject who is diſobedient to his Prince, becauſe he commands him to do thoſe things which are contrary to the good of the ſtate, can clear himſelf of the crime of high treaſon, by ſaying, that tho' he diſobeys the King, yet he ſubmits to his throne, that is, the lawful, juſt and reaſonable authority of the monarch; but this authority is a creature of reaſon during the vacancy of the throne.

Some

Some Opinions embraced by the Janseniſts.

WHAT we have juſt now ſaid obliges us to mention ſomething of thoſe, who are called Janſeniſts. This party owes its birth to Janſenius, a doctor in divinity of the univerſity of Lovain, and biſhop of Ipres. The looſe doctrine of ſome [i] of the Jeſuits concerning grace and predeſtination, got ſo great a footing in the divinity ſchools, that in the year 1640. [k] two univerſities thought themſelves obliged to condemn it: That doctrine was in a judicial way brought before the holy See, and yet, notwithſtanding ſuch accuſation, it made a conſiderable progreſs. Janſenius was reſolved to defend and maintain the faith of the church, and the grace of Jeſus Chriſt. He oppoſed St. Auguſtin to thoſe new doctrines, and wrote a [l] treatiſe upon grace wherein the whoſe doctrine of that great father is diſplayed. This treatiſe was attacked by the Jeſuits, who accuſed Janſenius of maintaining five dangerous and calviniſtical hereſies: [m] which are the following.

1. That Jeſus Chriſt prayed, and died only for thoſe that are ſaved.

2. That man can neither reſiſt, nor reject grace, even tho' it were his intention and endeavour ſo to do; and therefore is by an abſolute neceſſity conſtrained to do good, when he has grace, or to do evil when he has it not.

3. That in good works we do not co-operate with grace, and that we have no ſhare in the merit of them.

4. That ever ſince the fall of Adam, we have never had any liberty of indifference to incline us (in caſe we will) either to the one or the other.

5. The ſins that we commit, are neither free nor voluntary; except in their cauſe, which is the ſin of Adam. He alone was free, all other ſins are committed by force and neceſſity, the weight of concupiſcence over-powering the will.

The St. Auſtin, from which theſe propoſitions were pretended to be drawn, produced [n] ſeveral treatiſes relating to the ſubject of grace; but this ſcholaſtic debate not concluding to the ſatisfaction of the Moliniſts, theſe immediately applied to the Pope, in order to over-throw this new St. Auſtin, which accordingly was at laſt condemned in form by a bull [o] of Pope Urban VIII. The Janſeniſts pretend, that this bull was compoſed by [p] a man entirely devoted to the Jeſuits. Nevertheleſs, the differences occaſioned by the doctrine of Janſenius had like to have created great diſorders in the low countries; becauſe the divines (who were animated, as they ſaid, with a zeal which the pretended orthodoxy inſpired them with) took care to magnify [q] objects in an extraordinary manner.

Janſenius under the fictitious name of Patrick, had ſome years before wrote a book called [r] the French Mars, againſt the miniſtry of Cardinal Richelieu: but that ſtateſman revenged himſelf by encouraging all ſorts of writing, and preaching againſt the doctrine of Janſenius, which began to gain ground in France. Thoſe preachers and doctors, who were devoted

[i] Father Molina, and father Leonard Celſus.

[k] The univerſities of Lovain and Doway.

[l] Anguſtinus. See the hiſtory of Janſeniſm, Tom. I. p. 4. Edition of 1700. that book was wrote before the year 1636. as appears by the privilege granted in 1635. but not publiſhed till the year 1640. and then dedicated to the Cardinal infant.

[m] Taken from the Hiſtory of Janſeniſm, Tom. I. p. 20. Edit. 1700.

[n] During the years 1641, 1642, and 1643.

[o] This bull was granted the 6. of March 1642. and publicly fixed up at Rome on the 19. of June 1643. The Janſeniſts gave out, that the bull was ſpurious, or at leaſt were willing that it ſhould be looked upon as ſuſpicious by reaſon of many variations, which were obſerved in the copies of that bull; and becauſe it openly condemned the doctrine of St. Auſtin. This bull met with no better a reception in France; for it was even refuted by ſome ſmart obſervations, which at that time gave as much uneaſineſs to the court of Rome, as the remarks made in our time upon the conſtitution Unigenitus.

[p] Vide Hiſtory of Janſeniſm, Tom. I. p. 48. Ed. of 1700.

[q] They exclaimed loudly againſt hereſy which was upon the point of being introduced there. They repreſented to his holineſs, that there was an end of the Catholic religion, and that Manicheiſm and Calviniſm would ſoon get the upper-hand. Vide Hiſtory of Janſeniſm, Tom. I. p. 61.

[r] Patricii Armachani Mars Gallicus: He compoſed it in Latin, after which it was tranſlated into French.

ted to the Cardinal, were ſeconded by the Jeſuits, and all of them together [r] proved powerful enemies to that doctrine.

After the death of Urban VIII. the affair of Janſeniſm was again revived in a manner, which at firſt appeared ſomewhat favourable to the party: but the Moliniſts by their intrigues ſo contrived it, that the deciſions were ſtill given againſt Janſenius. It would be needleſs to enter into the diſcuſſion of all that paſſed upon this account, and of an infinite number of Polemic writings, which were produced by the opinions of both parties concerning grace. The Archduke Leopold, in the year 1648, uſed his utmoſt endeavours to have Janſeniſm condemned in the Low-countries: and the Moliniſts were of opinion, that the ſpeedieſt way of deſtroying that party would be [s] to exclude the Janſeniſts from all dignities, employments and offices. The expedient ſeemed very well fitted to tempt the ambition of ſuch as could never reſolve to believe any truths that were prejudicial to their intereſt, however excellent they might be in other reſpects. This reſolution was attended [u] with a formulary, or profeſſion of faith, which was to be ſworn to by thoſe who were admitted to any employments. This oath, and the footing upon which Janſenius, and the bull relating to him, were then treated in Spain, may be ſeen in the hiſtory of Janſeniſm, already cited in the notes. What occaſioned ſome mirth in theſe diſputes, which, notwithſtanding the importance of the ſubject, and the gravity of the divines, drew both parties at laſt into a kind of ridicule, was the titles which each party gave to their writings. The names of Buckler or Shield, and others of the ſame kind, did not ſeem ſtrongly enough to expreſs the drift of theſe kind of writings. One doctor (whoſe name was Fromond) aſſumed the name of [w] Vincent the Mild, in order to adminiſter an Antidote againſt the opinions of the Moliniſts. Another publiſhed the [x] Torch of St. Auſtin. Father Veron a Jeſuit compoſed a gag for the Janſeniſts. Some divines of his order had a mind [y] to put out St. Auſtin's Torch: but Fromond thought himſelf under an obligation to find [z] Snuffers for the Torch. But we ſhall have done with theſe writings, and the authors of them, to come to the letter ſubſcribed by 68. biſhops of France, in order to obtain of Pope Innocent X. an enquiry into, and [a] condemnation of the 5. famous propoſitions which follow, upon which, ſay they, it is moſt dangerous to diſpute.

I.

Some of God's commandments are impoſſible to be kept by the righteous, even tho' they are willing to obſerve them, and uſe their beſt endeavours to fulfil them according to their then preſent ſtrength. They likewiſe want the grace of God which renders them poſſible.

II.

A man doth never reſiſt inward grace in the ſtate of fallen nature.

[r] Iſaac Habert a Paris divine preached in the Metropolitan church, and the orthodoxy of his zeal made him reckon 40. hereſies in the doctrine of Janſenius. But ſome time after, this doctor's zeal flagging, thoſe hereſies were reduced to 12. and at laſt ſtood at five, which are capital.

[s] This plan is now-a-days purſued in order to oblige the Janſeniſts to receive the conſtitution Unigenitus.

[u] The worſt of this, as well as of all oaths in general that compel a ſubſcription, is, that they always make hypocrites.

[w] Vincentii Lenis Theriaca.

[x] Lucerna Auguſtiniana.

[y] Reſponſio ſeniorum Facultatis Duacenæ adverſus Lucernam, &c.

[z] Emunctorium Lucernæ.

[a] If we may believe the author of the Hiſtory of Janſeniſm, that cenſure was made in a moſt irregular manner. Cardinal Barbarini being over-perſuaded by the urgent requeſts of the Jeſuits, committed the affair of Janſenius to his council of conſcience; whereof three Jeſuits compoſed a good part. The queſtion was put whether the biſhop of Ipres's Auſtin ſhould be condemned or not, and the number of thoſe who voted in behalf of that book had the majority by one vote from them who were for condemning it: but the enemies of Janſenius ordered it ſo, that Albizzi the aſſeſſor, who vigorouſly oppoſed that biſhop, and did not uſe to ſit in that council, was admitted into it on purpoſe to join his vote to the Moliniſt cabal. Yet the votes were ſtill equal: but Cardinal Barbarini, who was not to have any vote in his own council of conſcience, voted notwithſtanding againſt Janſenius; by which means the number of thoſe who decided for the cenſure, exceeded by one vote thoſe which were againſt it. Hiſtory of Janſeniſm.

III.

To merit or not merit, in the ſtate of fallen nature, it is not neceſſary that a man ſhould have a liberty free from neceſſity. 'Tis ſufficient that he hath a liberty free from reſtraint.

IV.

The Semi-Pelagians admitted the neceſſity of an inward preventing grace for every action, even for the beginning of faith; and they were Heretics, inaſmuch as they would have it, that grace was ſuch, that the will of a man could either reſiſt or obey it.

V.

It is a Semi-Pelagian opinion to ſay, that Jeſus Chriſt died or ſhed his blood for all mankind without exception.

The Janſeniſts pretended, that the Moliniſts purſued the cenſure of theſe articles only to make it fall upon St. Auguſtin, and on the doctrine of effective grace: but however that be, the letter ſigned in the name of the clergy of France, was, in the year 1650, ſent to Pope Innocent X. and that letter occaſioned a new paper war, whereof we ſhall give no particulars. In the ſame year 1650. Pope Urban VIII.'s bull againſt Janſeniſm was publiſhed in Poland.

[b] At the ſame time, the other Catholic powers were ſollicited to write to, and unanimouſly deſire the Pope to grant them the condemnation of the 5. propoſitions; which were aſcribed to Janſenius.

Pope Urban VIII.'s bull had been publiſhed in the Roman Catholic Low-countries; which publication was not agreeable to the Court of Rome, by reaſon of a clauſe therein inſerted, viz. with a ſalvo to the rights and privileges of that country. [c] In the year 1652. the Pope appointed a congregation for examining into the matter relating to grace. This congregation, which perhaps might have judged in favour of the Janſeniſts, was not [d] favourable to them in the end, tho' on the other ſide Innocent X. was [e] no friend to the Jeſuits: but the intereſt which his Holineſs had in cenſuring Janſeniſm, and the pretended propoſitions of Janſenius, was upon no other [f] motive, than barely to eſtabliſh his own authority and infallibility. At laſt, Janſenius was branded by a bull of the Pope's, iſſued the 31. of May 1653. His Holineſs, after having ſeriouſly implored the aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt, as the bull expreſſes it, in favour of his grace condemned the 5. propoſitions without giving any explanatory declaration in what ſenſe his Holineſs condemned them. This bull was poſted up and publiſhed at Rome, and received in France on the 9. of June enſuing; tho' it did not paſs [g] there without examination and remarks by the Janſeniſts. But at laſt it was received, nor was the behaviour of thoſe who [h] cauſed it to be received altogether regular. After its publication at Paris, the pulpits were filled with the violent alarms of ſeveral curates againſt the hereſy of the Janſeniſts: and, without entring into the truth or falſity of the cenſured propoſitions, we may ſay, that the zeal of thoſe eccleſiaſtics was ſomewhat ſcandalous. The reſult of which was, that diſorders [i] and animoſities

[b] By the Jeſuits. Vide Hiſtory of Janſeniſm already cited. [c] Ibid. Tom. II.

[d] Cardinal Spada preſident of that aſſembly was an enemy to the diſciples of St. Auſtin as the Hiſtory of Janſeniſm tells us, Tom. II. Edit. of Holland 1700. and in this Quality of preſident he ſucceeded Cardinal Roma, who was no enemy to them.

[e] The Jeſuits, ſays the Hiſtory of Janſeniſm, which we quote, were ſo convinced of the Pope's indifference to them, that fearing he would pronounce judgment to their diſadvantage, they were thinking on ſome means not to ſubmit to his cenſure, without prejudice to the infallibility of the Holy See, by inſiſting it was very true, that the Pope was infallible in his deciſions; but that it was no article of faith, that Innocent X. was a legal Pope.

[f] It is upon this very principle that Pope Innocent XIII. with ſo much vigour ſupports the intereſt of the conſtitution Unigenitus. [g] Vide Hiſtory of Janſeniſm, Tom. II. p. 154. [h] Ibid. page 155, & 156.

[i] In the year 1655. the Anti-Janſeniſts cauſed the ſtone, upon which was graved an inſcription in praiſe of Janſenius, to be taken off his tomb. In 1672. another ſtone was put in the place of the former, with an Epitaph much leſs capable of being expoſed to the inſults of the Moliniſts; but the ſame zeal ſome time after took that away too.

animoſities encreaſed. The year [k] 1656. produced the famous provincial letters of Paſchal under the name of Louis de Montalte, and was near proving fatal to Port Royal, that was always looked upon as the bulwark of Janſeniſm. In the mean while the terrible threats, the intent of which was to declare incapable of all employments, and even to deprive of their livings, all ſuch as would not receive the bull, made ſome of the combatants [l] flinch. The ſame year Pope Alexander VII. iſſued out another bull, whereby he expreſly declared, that the 5. propoſitions [m] were Janſenius's, and that they were condemned in the ſenſe of that biſhop. At the end of the year 1659. a certain [n] ſet of Fanatics roſe againſt the Janſeniſts, under the name of The brothers of the ſodality of the bleſſed ſacrament. One father Eudes, preaching before the Queen Mother in 1660, conjured her by the Holy Euchariſt to exterminate the Janſeniſts by fire and ſword; and the Court of France in 1661. vigorouſly preſſed the ſigning of the formulary, and raiſed an inexhauſtible fund of diſtinctions, which they endeavoured to employ on all ſides, to try by what means they might compaſs that deſign. And indeed it was a real ſtruggle between the fleſh and the ſpirit. The two Port Royals were rigorouſly perſecuted in order to make them ſign; and the archbiſhop of Paris [o] laid aſide all his gravity on that occaſion. The anger of this prelate fell upon the ladies of that community, becauſe they would not ſpeak contrary to their thoughts, nor believe that 5. propoſitions were to be found in a Latin book, which thoſe poor creatures had never read nor were able to underſtand. In 1665. Pope Alexander VII. thundered out another bull againſt Janſeniſm, and, in order to deſtroy them intirely, reſolved to make them ſubſcribe to a form of his own compoſition, which was generally ſigned: [p] purely and ſimply by ſome, and by others with a diſtinction of right and fact.

At laſt in 1668. Pope Clement IX. made a peace between both parties, [q] which gave much ſatisfaction to that part of France, which had a true ſpirit of Chriſtianity: tho' the ſequel proved it to be only a ſuſpenſion of arms; which plainly ſhews, that it is much eaſier to reconcile ſecular Princes, than churchmen. This war, eſpecially, was renewed from the time that Clement XI. publiſhed his bull [r] in the year 1713. againſt the 101. propoſitions extracted from the New Teſtament by F. Queſnel. That bull, according to the Janſeniſts, utterly deſtroys all Chriſtian morality: at leaſt we may be aſſured, that it was very unfit to maintain it in its purity.

[k] The ſame year a penſioner of Port Royal, being afflicted with a Fiſtula Lacrymalis, was cured by the holy thorn; and this miracle, which made ſome noiſe, did not fail of being refuted by the Moliniſt party.

[l] The archbiſhop of Sens challenged the biſhop of Toulouſe (de Marca) to ſhew him the 5. propoſitions in Janſenius's Auſtin, but de Marca not being able to defend himſelf by that means, replied, that there was no room to doubt of it, after the Pope had declared it. The archbiſhop of Sens would not yield to that, but when the biſhop of Toulouſe, and the other deputies of the aſſembly of the clergy declared, that whoſoever did not ſubmit to the bull, ſhould be deprived of their livings; the archbiſhop, overcome by ſo convincing an argument, ſubmitted without a moment's heſitation.

[m] It is ſaid, that the enemies of Janſenius cauſed the 5. propoſitions to be printed upon a ſheet, and having inſerted it into one of the books of St. Auſtin, they preſented it to the Pope; which cheat convinced and determined his Holineſs. Vide Hiſtory of Janſeniſm, Tom. II.

[n] Theſe people were likewiſe called Hermits of Caen, it is aſſerted in the Hiſtory of Janſeniſm, Tom. II. p. 448. that they aſſociated themſelves with other viſionaries under the conduct of father Bagot a Jeſuit. They gave out that their ſmell was ſo nice that they could diſtinguiſh a Janſeniſt by the very ſcent. So exquiſite a ſenſation ought to have rendered uſeleſs the ſigning of formularies, or at leaſt have taught them to know thoſe that ſigned bona fide, from thoſe who only ſubmitted out of weakneſs in order to comply with the time. The Sieur de Bernieres was ſuperior of the Fanatics of Caen; and they reſolved to give out, that in that city all the curates, excepting two, were Janſeniſts. This publication was preceded by an extraordinary communion: after which they ran about the ſtreets half naked, declaring what we have already mentioned. Some time after, a young woman aſſembled ſome other Fanatics with ſeven prieſts, who, after having turned their caſſocs made themſelves girdles of the barks of trees, and daubed their faces over with dirt, walked round the town of Seez, crying out and praying for the converſion of the Janſeniſts.

[o] After having armed himſelf with excommunication againſt the nuns of Port Royal he treated them with cruel and abuſive expreſſions. Vide Hiſtory of Janſeniſm, Edit. of 1700.

[p] And this was tranſacted with ſo much ignorance by ſome of them, that there were ſeen mandates, wherein Janſeniſm was called the hereſy of Cornelius Janſenius, ſurnamed Auguſtinus. Vide the Hiſtory of Janſeniſm, Tom. III. p. 204. Ed. of Holland.

[q] Clement IX.'s peace.

[r] Called the conſtitution Unigenitus, it was dated Sept. 8. 1713.

QUIETISM.

THE Quietists are looked upon as a sect truly pernicious to the Christian church. Their spiritual notions tend to debase the majesty of religion, and the nature of the Holy Ghost, and to render the elevation of the heart to God a [r] mere mechanical practice. Mystic notions have appeared [s] in several ages of the church. The Montanists, [t] the Gnostics, &c. without doubt followed these mystical notions. We may judge [w] of the extraordinary doctrine of the Quietists by the particularity, oddness, and extravagance of their language.

[x] The Quietists hold a principle, [y] which is, that when once we have given ourselves to God, that act subsists for ever, without any necessity of repeating or renewing it. What we are to do is never to take from God what we have given him, by acting contrary to his divine will; and that unless this should happen, the essence and continuance of our resignation to God, and of its conformity to his will, last for ever. The slight faults which we commit without a serious reflection, do not destroy the essential point of conformity; even our most distracting occupations do not interrupt the act of continual love: [z] nay, should it happen that a man should think no more of God, there would [r] The first principle of the Quietists is, that the soul must desist from making any reflections; and make use of the will by an internal recollection and contemplation, which they call acquired. The body, if possible, must remain in a perfect tranquillity, whilst the soul, in this manner, enjoys these spiritual gifts.

[s] The first rise of mystical notions is to be found in the song of songs, not but we acknowledge it for Divine: all that we would insinuate is, that in different times pretenders to regeneration have misapplied and abused its notions and allegories. 'Tis from thence, they have drawn the espousals and marriage of the soul with Jesus Christ, the chaste consummation of that marriage, and the marriage portion of the soul espoused to the Word. From the first ages of Christianity we find mystical notions and expressions in the fathers, which perhaps they borrowed from Plato and other heathen philosophers. Bayle in his Critical Dictionary, under the article of Plotinus, calls the Quietists Plagiaries of the Platonics. "The end, says he, to which Plotinus directed "his thoughts, was to unite himself to the great God. He attained to it by an unspeakable efficacy; and this is the "unitive method of our Quietists." The followers of Fohu in China teach a kind of Quietism, which requires those who pursue real felicity to abandon themselves intirely to meditation, and make no use of their understanding. Bayle's remarks upon this subject, under the articles of Spinoza and of Taulerus may be had recourse to. Arnold has collected a great many mystical notions in his History of mystical Theology, in order to justify in his way the antiquity and sublimity of that divinity. Tho' he gives himself the trouble of going thro' every age in order to shew the progress it has made down to our time, yet it is certain, that it was never truly reduced into a system, till since the writings of John de la Croix (John à Cruce); but after him those mystical notions overspread religion with some violence to the time of Molinos, a Spanish priest, condemned at Rome in the year 1687. in the pontificate of Innocent XI. We may see in Arnold's Latin treatise just mentioned, the encouragers of that mystical theology, with a catalogue of their works.

[t] The Gnostics had notions like those of the mystics, for they considered the soul of man as the intimate substance of God; and the jargon of these mystycal people convinces us, that it is one of their chief errors. The penances, austerities, propheteises, and the Paraclet, or Holy Ghost of the Montanists comes very near the notions of the Quietists; but there is a greater affinity between them and the sect of the Beggards, which appeared in the 14. century; we shall speak more at large of them in another note.

[w] We shall first give a specimen of it, drawn from the instruction concerning the different conditions of prayer by Mr. Bossuet, who took it from the writings of John Rusbrok. "The contemplative soul seeth "God by a light which is the divine essence ... and even the soul is that divine light .... The soul ceaseth "to be in the existence which in its own nature properly belonged to it. It is changed, transformed, absorbed "in the divine Being, and floweth into the ideal Being; which it had from all eternity in the divine Being. "It is so entirely lost in that abyss, that no creature can find it. We doubt very much whether the most "profound commentator could be able to penetrate into such substantial darkness.

[x] Part of what we have here said concerning Quietism is taken from the instruction upon conditions of prayer by Mr. Bossuet; but the Quietists do not absolutely allow of all that that prelate lays to their charge.

[y] Instruction upon the condition of prayer, p. 21. Ed. of Paris in a passage taken from Malaval, and F. John Falconi. Molinos endeavours to confirm this by instances. "Would it not be an extravagance, saith he, "for a man who is in the King's presence to say to him from time to time, Sir, I believe that your Majesty "is here? It would be the same thing, supposing the soul that seeth God with the eyes of a pure faith, should "take a fancy to say, Lord I believe that thou art present, &c. When any person is set out on a journey to "Rome, every step he takes forwards his journey, without the necessity of saying, every time he sets one foot "before the other, I am going to Rome." Molinos in his Spiritual Guide, Lib. I. chap. XV.

[z] Instruction upon the conditions of prayer, &c. p. 43. this notion appeared horrible to the enemies of Molinos, the Christian who hath no distinct view of Jesus Christ cannot fail losing sight of his humanity: but perhaps it may not be proper to insist too strongly upon that argument. The mystics probably did not consider the consequences that might be drawn from thence against the distinction of the persons in the Trinity. The author of an English letter to be found in a collection of pieces concerning Quietism, printed at Amsterdam in 1688. pretends to justify Quietism in that article; he alledges, that the Roman Catholics fancied there was much more harm in it than there really is, because they fall into another extremity, which, says he, is the believing that Jesus Christ is adorable, omnipotent, and omniscient from his humanity considered in the abstract. He pretends likewise, that Molinos and his followers were for opposing the torrent of superstitions, would be no neceſſity to renew the gift of himſelf, which has always ſubſiſted, (in the ſame manner as a marriage continues to ſubſiſt between a huſband and his wife, who are at a diſtance from each other, and have not correſponded together in writing for a long time: that marriage, I ſay, ſubſiſts unleſs adultery or ſome other falſhood ſhould produce the diſſolution of it.) We muſt allow, that this principle of quietude and contemplation (which is attended, as they ſay, with a perfect reſignation to God) may introduce a corruption of morals. From thence likewiſe will follow the abolition of thoſe acts of faith declared in the Apoſtles Creed, and of the requeſts contained in the Lord's Prayer, &c. to all which the Quietiſts are not bound, by reaſon that, according to what we have repeated after them, nothing is required for thoſe who live in a ſtate of contemplation, but one only perpetual and univerſal act. It is an act of faith to think on Jeſus Chriſt, and we muſt certainly think on him when we recite the Creed, or in reading the Goſpels; but all this is of no uſe to the Quietiſts. " A ſoul not " having thought on any ſtate of Jeſus Chriſt, for the ſpace of twenty years, findeth, that " all the vertue of him ſubſiſteth inwardly by condition; tho' the ſoul in all its ways hath " no diſtinct view of Chriſt." Such is the ſublimity of that contemplative ſtate: and it would be proper to examine in what manner Mr. Boſſuet refutes that ſuppreſſion of the acts of faith, in the inſtruction upon the conditions of prayer.

To go on with a recital of thoſe ſubtilties, wherein the Quietiſts ſoar, as we may ſay, above the clouds; they believe themſelves bound to annihilate all their deſires, when once the ſoul is confounded, loſt and annihilated in the divine Eſſence. " [a] The ſoul muſt " be dead to its deſires ... having a will as if it had none, comprehending as if it com- " prehended not, and thinking as if it had no thought, nay without having any incli- " nation towards the nothingneſs of this world, &c. which is the effect of the knowledge " it has of the contemptible ſtate it is in. It conſiders itſelf in an impoſſibility of me- " riting any thing, and acknowledges itſelf even unworthy of poſſeſſing virtue." Some myſtics throw in this exception, unleſs that thoſe requeſts and deſires proceeded from an inſpiration by God, and the Holy Ghoſt put us upon ſuch motions as may induce us to deſire thro' the divine will, if we were to make no requeſts to God, but what he himſelf was to inſpire us with, and which the Holy Ghoſt were to put us upon, 'tis true, that by ſuch means we might retrench an infinite number of uſeleſs prayers; but under that pretence we ſhould fall into another extreme; for we ſhould either ceaſe aſking any thing of God, till we had received a particular inſpiration; whence it would follow that we often ſhould remain in a perfect ſtate of inaction: or elſe we might believe, that we had a right to attribute to the inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt thoſe irregular motions, which the fleſh may raiſe in the moſt perfect [b] contemplation. This reſignation and confuſion (if we may ſo ſtile it) and annihilation in God is carried ſo far, that an [c] entire indifference whether we are in grace or not, agreable to God, or hated by him, or whether we have or have not any love for him, may be inferred from them. This is the refined ſenſe they give to that part of the Lord's Prayer, Thy will be done.

The doctrine of the Quietiſts excludes all reflection, and thereon [d] Molinos is expreſs; according to them the act of reflecting is as it were a conſequence of the ſtate of imperfection:

perſtitions, which that opinion had introduced: he aſcribes to it the origin of crucifixes, the adoration of the croſs, and of the Euchariſt, &c. There ſeems to be ſome partiality in this opinion; yet be that as it will, it appears to us, that chap. xvi. of the firſt book of The ſpiritual Guide acknowledges the humanity of Chriſt: but the author requires we ſhould entertain a much more noble idea of that humanity, than is generally entertained of it; and conſequently it is plain, that he enervates one part of the worſhip; not the religious, but ſuperſtitious part.

[a] Molinos's Spiritual Guide, p. 194. & 196. Edit. of Holland, 1688.

[b] Vide The inſtruction concerning the different conditions of prayer by Mr. Boſſuet, for the refutation of their apology for that doctrine, wherein they pretend not to exclude requeſts acknowledged, and deſires perceived by our ſenſes. Nonſenſe full of abuſe and fanaticiſm in whatever ſenſe it be taken.

[c] Mr. Boſſuet infers this conſequence againſt the Quietiſts, and yet it does not appear, that this is ſo expreſly found in chap. xix. xx. and xxi. of the third book of Molinos's Spiritual Guide, wherein he treats of the true and perfect annihilation.

" [d] The underſtanding, ſaith he, takes leave of all reflection and reaſoning: God cauſes the ſoul to ad- " vance but a man is much more imperfect, when he has (as we may ſay) got rid of his will, and is become a machine to be wound up according to the fancy of a providence, which annihilates the liberty of human actions without leaving us any power to act, in any reſpect, of ourſelves. If we draw thoſe conſequences which we naturally may from theſe principles, we ſhall find, that this is the very notion which Quietiſm affords us of God.

From the principles of Quietiſm then it follows that thoſe actions, which are performed without reflection, muſt prove infinitely pleaſing to God; ſince ſuch actions as are unperceived, or perceived confuſedly, are the moſt perfect; but how is it poſſible by ſuch acts to be loſt and annihilated in God, ſince God is the ſupreme Reaſon? Can we be agreable to him in acting without reflection? and if in conſequence of that reaſon which God has given to man, ſuch virtuous actions as are produced by that reaſon be, on the contrary, the acts which come neareſt to God's infinite wiſdom, how can we love virtue without reflection? The reader may conſult the [e] works of Mr. Boſſuet already quoted, for a refutation of thoſe principles, as well as of what the myſtics call the Vice of multiplicity, that is to ſay, a daily renewing of the acts of faith, hope, and charity. It is plain, that thoſe acts would become errors in piety, if we were obliged to ſet aſide our will, ceaſe from thinking on our actions, and exclude even thoſe requeſts which we can, and ought to make to God for obtaining his favours.

[f] The paſſive prayer of the myſtics known by the name of Quietiſts, requires no meditation; (this is an eſtabliſhed principle, almoſt needleſs to be repeated) it is nothing but a mere paſſive contemplation, which may be performed at all times without taking us off from any thing; for the way of ſeeking after God is ſo eaſy and natural, (and let us ſay, ſo involuntary, and according to them ſo imperceptible) that the very air we breathe cannot be more, nor our reſpiration more uninterrupted. If our erring brothers were taught [g] ſimply to believe, and to pray, inſtead of ſo many diſputes, they might, by degrees, be brought back to God. 'Tis after this manner, that one of the Myſtics expreſſes himſelf according to Mr. Boſſuet's quotation, and conſequently it is of no purpoſe to employ either controverſy or other arguments for the converſion of Heretics.

The ſoul [h] that conceives a true love for God, finds itſelf inſtantly tortured with the fire of temptations, and never believes with ſo much certainty, as when it is thus tormented and afflicted. The doubts and fears it is in, whether it believes or believes not, whether it has conſented or refuſed its conſent, are the effects of the delicacy of its love, &c. This love (according to the Quietiſts) requires, that we ſhould forſake [i] our neighbour, till ſuch time as God takes the faithful (Quietiſt) out of the ſtate (of quietude) wherein he is. "Leave that care to him, ſaith Molinos, and remain quite inſenſible to all things, "and entirely reſigned to his will. You are not idle upon this account." Divine love refines the ſoul, whilſt God is preparing [k] a paſſive diſpoſition in it, by trying it by the fire of tribulation and inward torments, &c. a man at that time feels a paſſive dryneſs, darkneſs, anguiſh, contradiction, internal deſpondings, &c. a man's heart is then ſo oppreſſed, and ſo full of bitterneſs, that he is not able to raiſe it up to God; nor to perform

"vance by means of the obſcure knowledge of a ſimple faith, &c. Guide Introd. Sect. 1. N. 2. The ſoul "being once deprived of the capacity of reaſoning, cannot with all its efforts make ſo much as one only re"flection," Ibid. Lib. I. chap. 2. N. 6. From this doctrine may be drawn pernicious conſequences; may we not ſay, that it helps to palliate thoſe unruly tranſports, which very frequently we are not maſters of in the contemplative ſtate of the body? Is the pretended ſuſpenſion of our ſenſes, whilſt we plunge in the myſtical road, and are loſt in God, any thing more than a mere illuſion? Follow thoſe principles ſtep by ſtep, and you will diſcover that the prayer of the ſoul is nothing but vain-glorious nonſenſe. In vain they tell us, that abſence of reaſon is one of the greateſt bleſſings could befall the ſoul; and that it is a proof, that God conducts it by faith and ſilence, &c. Molinos's Spiritual Guide, p. 18. Edit. of Holland.

[e] Book 5. and 6.

[f] The paſſive, or prayer of peace and quietude, is likewiſe called that of mere preſence, mere regard, and mere reſignation in God, according to the expreſſions of St. Francis of Sales in his Treatiſe on the love of God; to bear and ſuffer the oppoſitions which are made againſt our own motions or inclinations, is, in devout terms, called the impreſſions received from God, and wherein man hath no part. See Boſſuet's Inſtruction, &c. Book vii.

[g] It is true, that in the infancy of Chriſtianity that method was practiſed. The operations of the Apoſtles were all ſupernatural; the Holy Ghoſt by his immediate influence acted upon thoſe whom he intended to convert.

[h] Molinos's Spiritual Guide, Introd. chap. x.

[i] Ibid. Lib. II. chap. iii.

[k] Molinos's Guide, &c. Lib. III. chap. iv.

form any one act of faith, hope, or love. Yet it is the love of God that creates all this diſorder, tho', according to the Quietiſts, it acts in this manner only to appropriate to itſelf the heart of the Myſtic. Molinos calls this ſtate which we have deſcribed, the firſt ſpiritual martyrdom. [l] The other ſpiritual martyrdom, which is more uſeful and meritorious, is only deſigned for thoſe, who are already advanced towards perfection and ſublime contemplation. This conſiſts in the fire of divine love, wherewith the ſoul is inflamed and conſumed by amorous torments: ſometimes the abſence of its lover diſtracts it; at other times it ſinks under the ſweet, but heavy weight of the divine preſence. That is what they call ſighing, ſuffering, and dying with love. The conſequence of this to the ſoul, is a conception equally myſterious and ſpiritual [m] of internal happineſs, externally produced by an infuſed contemplation. This is the deſcription Molinos gives us of the ſtate, by which God imperceptibly raiſes the ſoul to perfect peace, by an intimate penetration of his light. We believe this ſufficient to give the reader an idea of the [n] love of God, according to the principles of the Quietiſts, but [o] the conformity there is between their opinions and that of the [p] Beguards will appear in the notes.

We muſt now ſay ſomething of the perſon of Molinos, and of the progreſs his opinion made at firſt. This prieſt, born a Spaniard, and of a conſiderable family, was of an auſtere, melancholy diſpoſition. It is reported, that he had always deſpiſed the [q] external practices

[l] Id. Ib. Lib. III. chap. vi. [m] This internal happineſs is deſcribed by Molinos, ibid. Lib. III. chap. xiii. and xvi.

[n] A book of conſiderable length, and of a very ſingular character might be made, were all the extraordinary terms, which the myſtics uſe to expreſs their love of God, and all the effects thereof to be collected; the loweſt of their ideas are, that this love illuminates, inflames, and conſumes. The moſt gallant poets do not expreſs their ſelves more forcibly than theſe contemplative ſouls, who continually talk the language of the moſt paſſionate lovers.

[o] Theſe Beguards, whom the Council of Vienna condemned under Pope Clement V. believed, 1. That a man may in this life acquire ſo high a degree of perfection, as to become incapable of ſinning, and for grace to be of no uſe to him. Molinos, almoſt in the ſame ſenſe tells us, that the celeſtial indifference which ſucceeds the ſuppreſſion of requeſts, reinſtates us in the happy innocence which our firſt parents loſt; that by prayer the ſoul returns to its primitive purity, and that the ſpirit of concupiſcence is deſtroyed, &c. Molinos ſays ſomething very like this in his third book, chap. ii. N. 7. of his Spiritual Guide. Yet he ſeems ſoon after to contradict himſelf, by adding, that illuminated ſouls are not the leſs convinced of their miſery and failings, &c. On the other hand, one of Molinos's propoſitions which was condemned by the bull of Innocent XI. is this; that a ſoul that has attained to myſtical death can have no other will but that of God, becauſe God has taken its will from it. In all this appears great contradiction. 2. The Beguards were of opinion; that a man ought neither to faſt nor pray in the ſtate of perfection. The conſequence is neceſſary, if a man be perfect, why ſhould he humble himſelf before God? That intimate communication with God, in the midſt of that tranquillity which is deſcribed by the Quietiſts, neceſſarily condemns a ſpirit of mortification. 3. The Beguards pretended to exempt themſelves both from human and eccleſiaſtical laws; it appears likewiſe, that Quietiſm ſets up a kind of independency; it is a hard matter to prove a good ſubject with the principles of the Quietiſts. 4. As to ſupreme happineſs even in this life, the principles of the one and the other plainly eſtabliſh it. One need only read the ſeveral accounts which Molinos gives of ſupreme Happineſs of inward peace, and of what he calls internal ſolitude, &c. 5. The Beguards hold, that one ought not to riſe up at the elevation of the body of Jeſus Chriſt, nor pay any honour to it, pretending that the ſtate of contemplation did not permit them to think on the myſtery of the ſacrament of the Euchariſt; nor of the ſufferings of the humanity of Jeſus Chriſt. The ſuppreſſion of acts of faith has at leaſt a tincture of this doctrine, and Mr. Boſſuet's ſecond book of his Inſtruction may be hereon conſulted. 6. The Beguards ſay, that imperfect man only ought to practiſe the actions of vertue, but the perfect ſoul is exempted from them. This propoſition comes the neareſt that is poſſible to a ſuppreſſion of all acts; the 31. of the propoſitions that were condemned by Innocent XI. concludes that the virtues ought to be baniſhed. To give the reader a complete information of the great likeneſs between the Quietiſts, who were followers of Molinos and the Beguards, we muſt cite him ſome paſſages, which expreſs the characters of the latter; and theſe paſſages we have taken from a German author quoted by Mr. Boſſuet. " They do not act, ſays Taulerus; but as the inſtrument waits for the workman, ſo likewiſe " do theſe men wait the divine operation: doing nothing at all, and pretending that their operation would be a " hindrance to the work of God. Thus fixed to a vain tranquillity, they practiſe none of the virtues in this " peaceful ſtate, they neither praiſe God, nor pray to him, (becauſe they look upon the praiſes which are given to God, and the prayers that are offered up to him, as intereſted acts; Molinos, according to the 19. of the condemned propoſitions, ſaid that he who loves God according to the inſinuations of reaſon, or the conception of the underſtanding, loves not God; and that a ſoul which cannot ſuppreſs the deſire of loving God, ſhews that it loves after its own way: which is indulging its own choice.) In ſhort, the authors who were contemporary with the Beguards, found in them the annihilation and paſſiveneſs of the modern Quietiſts; their ceſſation of deſires, acts of grace and virtue.

[p] Together with the fanatical opinions aſcribed to the Beguards and Quietiſts, the world has likewiſe given them both moſt abominable characters. We muſt agree that a ſuppreſſion of actions of virtue leads one naturally to it. Let a man become never ſo ſpiritual, he always is under a dependence upon theſe objects that ſurround him, and conſequently cannot ſupport himſelf by mere contemplation. There muſt always have been ſome groſs ſouls amongſt thoſe contemplative people, who ſunk under the weight of their ſenſes, and became guilty of thoſe obſcene and brutal actions, which are attributed to them. Theſe ſpiritual meanings of the Myſtics carried to ſuch a height muſt ſoon or late ever bring them under ſome ſhameful dilemma's. It is, however, proper here to diſtinguiſh ſpeculation from practice: becauſe they who eſtabliſh principles, do not always foreſee conſequences that may be inferred from them, nor the weak places that may introduce corruption of morals.

[q] Abſtract of an Engliſh letter in the collection of pieces concerning Quietiſm, printed in the year 1688.

practices of the church, and all popular devotions. In the year 1675. he published [r] the Spiritual Guide, with the approbation of five divines. There are some fine passages in that treatise: but take it altogether, it mostly consists of pompous nonsense and crude indigested notions, as may be seen by the passages which we have already cited. The French translation is not exact, the approbations of the five divines would make one believe, that they had not perused the book, or that they either did not understand it, or had given it a very slight [s] examination. The Spiritual Guide gained its author a great reputation, who was incouraged by many [t] persons of great distinction in the church; amongst whom were some French who pretended to make use of him in order to reunite the Roman Catholics and the Protestants. Pope Innocent XI. gave him considerable instances of his protection; and from that time the Molinist devotion throve among the Romans. Several devout persons of both sexes laid aside the rosary and beads, mental prayer predominated, and the Jesuit's confession chairs were not so much frequented as usual; this was (as it is said) the chief cause of Molinos's misfortunes. They wrote against his new heresy, and F. Segneri was the person who signalized himself most on that subject. He attacked him vigorously upon this proposition, whoso possesseth God possesseth likewise Jesus Christ. [u] He pretended, that it might incline the faithful to forget the humanity of our Saviour. The inquisition at last took notice of these disputes, but Molinos at that time triumphed over his enemies. Tho' soon after they charged him again with fresh accusations, and made inquiries whether Molinos was not of a Jewish or Morisco race. Nevertheless, Quietism propagated so fast, that Mr. Burnet in his Journey thro' Italy, computes to the number of twenty thousand Quietists in Naples. This spiritual propagation brought Molinos into new troubles, and if we may believe the author of the letter which we mentioned, that affair was treated of as a political matter. They gave the most Christian King to understand, that Molinos being a Spaniard, he would draw all those of his opinion into the interest of the King his Master; and by that means all the Quietists would prove so many sworn enemies to France. This (we are informed) was the pretence made use of to stir up the King of France's zeal, who gave orders to Cardinal d'Etrees his ambassador at Rome to prosecute Molinos and his disciples. [w] They began by impeaching him with holding and carrying on criminal correspondences. They after this represented to his Holiness, that it was not becoming the common father of all Christians to harbour heresy in the Vatican, whilst the eldest son of the church was labouring to destroy it. In short, Molinos was imprisoned in 1685. and some time after several clergymen and secular persons were likewise confined upon suspicion of giving themselves up to contemplation and mental prayer. It is certain, that had this sect been tolerated any time, we should have seen some fatal revolution in the practices of the church, especially if Innocent XI. whom [x] they made pass for the abettor of Quietism, had dared openly to declare himself its protector. After these first proceedings, orders were given for a circular [y] letter to be sent to all the prelates of Italy and of Christendom, in order to acquaint them, that in many parts of their dioceses there were societies of Quietists formed, who taught [r] Ibid. [s] The first approbation imports, that this book was intelligible in the most obscure matters; and that the author does not deviate from the Holy Scriptures, &c. The second and third say much the same thing. The fourth enters farther into particulars, and is likewise more judicious; the author of it was a Jesuit, who did not approve of the book farther than he could judge of it, by the continual elevation wherein Molinos keeps up the mind. But even with this reserve, the approbation displeased the society, and it is said, that the author of it was no more heard of; the fifth approbation is full of nonsense worthy of the Capuchin that gave it.

[t] See the abstract of the letter cited above in the collection, &c.

[u] See before note [e], this proposition is not to be found in express terms in the Spiritual Guide. But Malaval saith expressly, that Jesus Christ is greater by his divinity than by his humanity, that whosoever continually thinks on God; likewise continually thinks on Jesus Christ. Altho' this author often does not understand himself; yet these words seem capable of a reasonable explanation.

[w] See the letter already quoted. [x] See the letter wherein it is said, that the Inquisition took the liberty to examine the Pope upon this subject; but this is wholly without proof.

[y] This letter was written by Cardinal Cibo on Feb. 18. 1687. it contained 19. articles or propositions, which were charged upon the Quietists, among the rest the 4. destroys the humanity of Jesus Christ, the 5. acts of penance, the 7. and 13. abolish the images. The 9. the sacrifice of the Mass, and the 10. the invocation of Saints. The letter does not mention from what author these heretical propositions are taken.

taught abominable errors. Thoſe prelates were at the ſame time exhorted to uſe their beſt endeavours to diſperſe ſuch meetings, to chuſe proper directors, and to act in ſuch a manner as the ancient cuſtoms might be exactly followed: but as the voice of the church is not formidable enough to the children of the age, unleſs ſupported by civil puniſhments, thoſe prelates were wiſely ordered to proſecute the Quietiſts before temporal judges. It was high time to come to this extremity, for mental prayer had already got the better of the roſary, as we ſaid before, and ſeveral devout perſons ſhewed their neglect for images, and no longer counted even their prayers. At laſt Molinos was condemned, and eſcaped the flames upon no other terms than a public confeſſion, tho' perhaps not a ſincere one, of his crimes: but he was [x] confined to a priſon where he remained to the day of his death [y]. The reader will [z] in the notes find part of the ceremonial of his abjuration, as we have taken it from a letter inſerted in the Collection of pieces concerning Quietiſm; and printed in the year 1688.

It is remarkable, that the inſtrument of Molinos's condemnation, and the bull of Innocent XI. charge him with hurrying the faithful into [a] ſhameful infamies, without letting us into any one of them.

[x] In 1687. he was then 60. years old according to the Dutch Ed. of Morery. [y] He died in 1692.

" [z] Some ſhort time before this ſolemnity, the Pope granted a plenary indulgence to all thoſe who ſhould " be there preſent, and the proclamation that was made of it, together with the deſire every one had to ſee " the concluſion of an affair which had held the public in ſuſpenſe for above two years, occaſioned ſuch a " vaſt concourſe of people in the place, where Molinos was to make his abjuration, that a man muſt have " paid very dear, or have had a good deal of intereſt to get a good place. He was very neatly dreſſed in " new ſacerdotal clothes, and made ſo handſome an appearance, that his very enemies ſaid he had all that was " capable of charming the fair ſex; he came out of the priſon, they put him into an open chariot, with a Do- " minican Fryar placed by him, and when he was arrived at La Minerva, they left him ſome time in a gallery. " He turned his eyes on every ſide with great freedom of mind, bowing to ſuch as ſaluted him, and during " all that time, was only heard to ſay theſe words. You ſee, Gentlemen, a man who has been defamed, but is very " ſorry for it; infamato mà pentito. From thence they carried him to dinner, where he was entertained in a " magnificent manner, after which they took him back to the church, as it were in triumph, born upon the " ſhoulders of ſome of the Sbirrbi, who were in an open chariot. When he was brought to the place ap- " pointed for him, he made a very low bow, and was not obſerved to ſhew either fear or confuſion in his " countenance; his hands were tied together, holding in them a wax light, and while two Monks dreſt in " long robes were reading his accuſation aloud, ſome people were placed near at hand, who at the reading of " ſome particular articles, cried out aloud burn him, burn him; and the mob repeated the ſame; for care had " been taken ſo to incenſe them againſt this unfortunate man, that had not the Sbirrbi and guards oppoſed " their inſolence, he had fallen a victim to their fury as he was carrying back to priſon. As ſoon as he was come " to the cell where he was to be confined for the reſt of his life, he entered it with a great deal of tranquillity, " calling it his cloſet; then taking leave of the Fryar who had accompanied him, Father, ſaid he, farewell, " we ſhall ſee one another again at the day of judgment, and then it will appear on whoſe ſide the truth is; whe- " ther on yours, or mine.

[a] Mr. Palafox archbiſhop of Seville's letter likewiſe ſpeaks of The abominable exceſſes of the perfidious Molinos. Vide the pieces immediately following the inſtruction relating to the different conditions of prayer by Mr. Boſſuet.

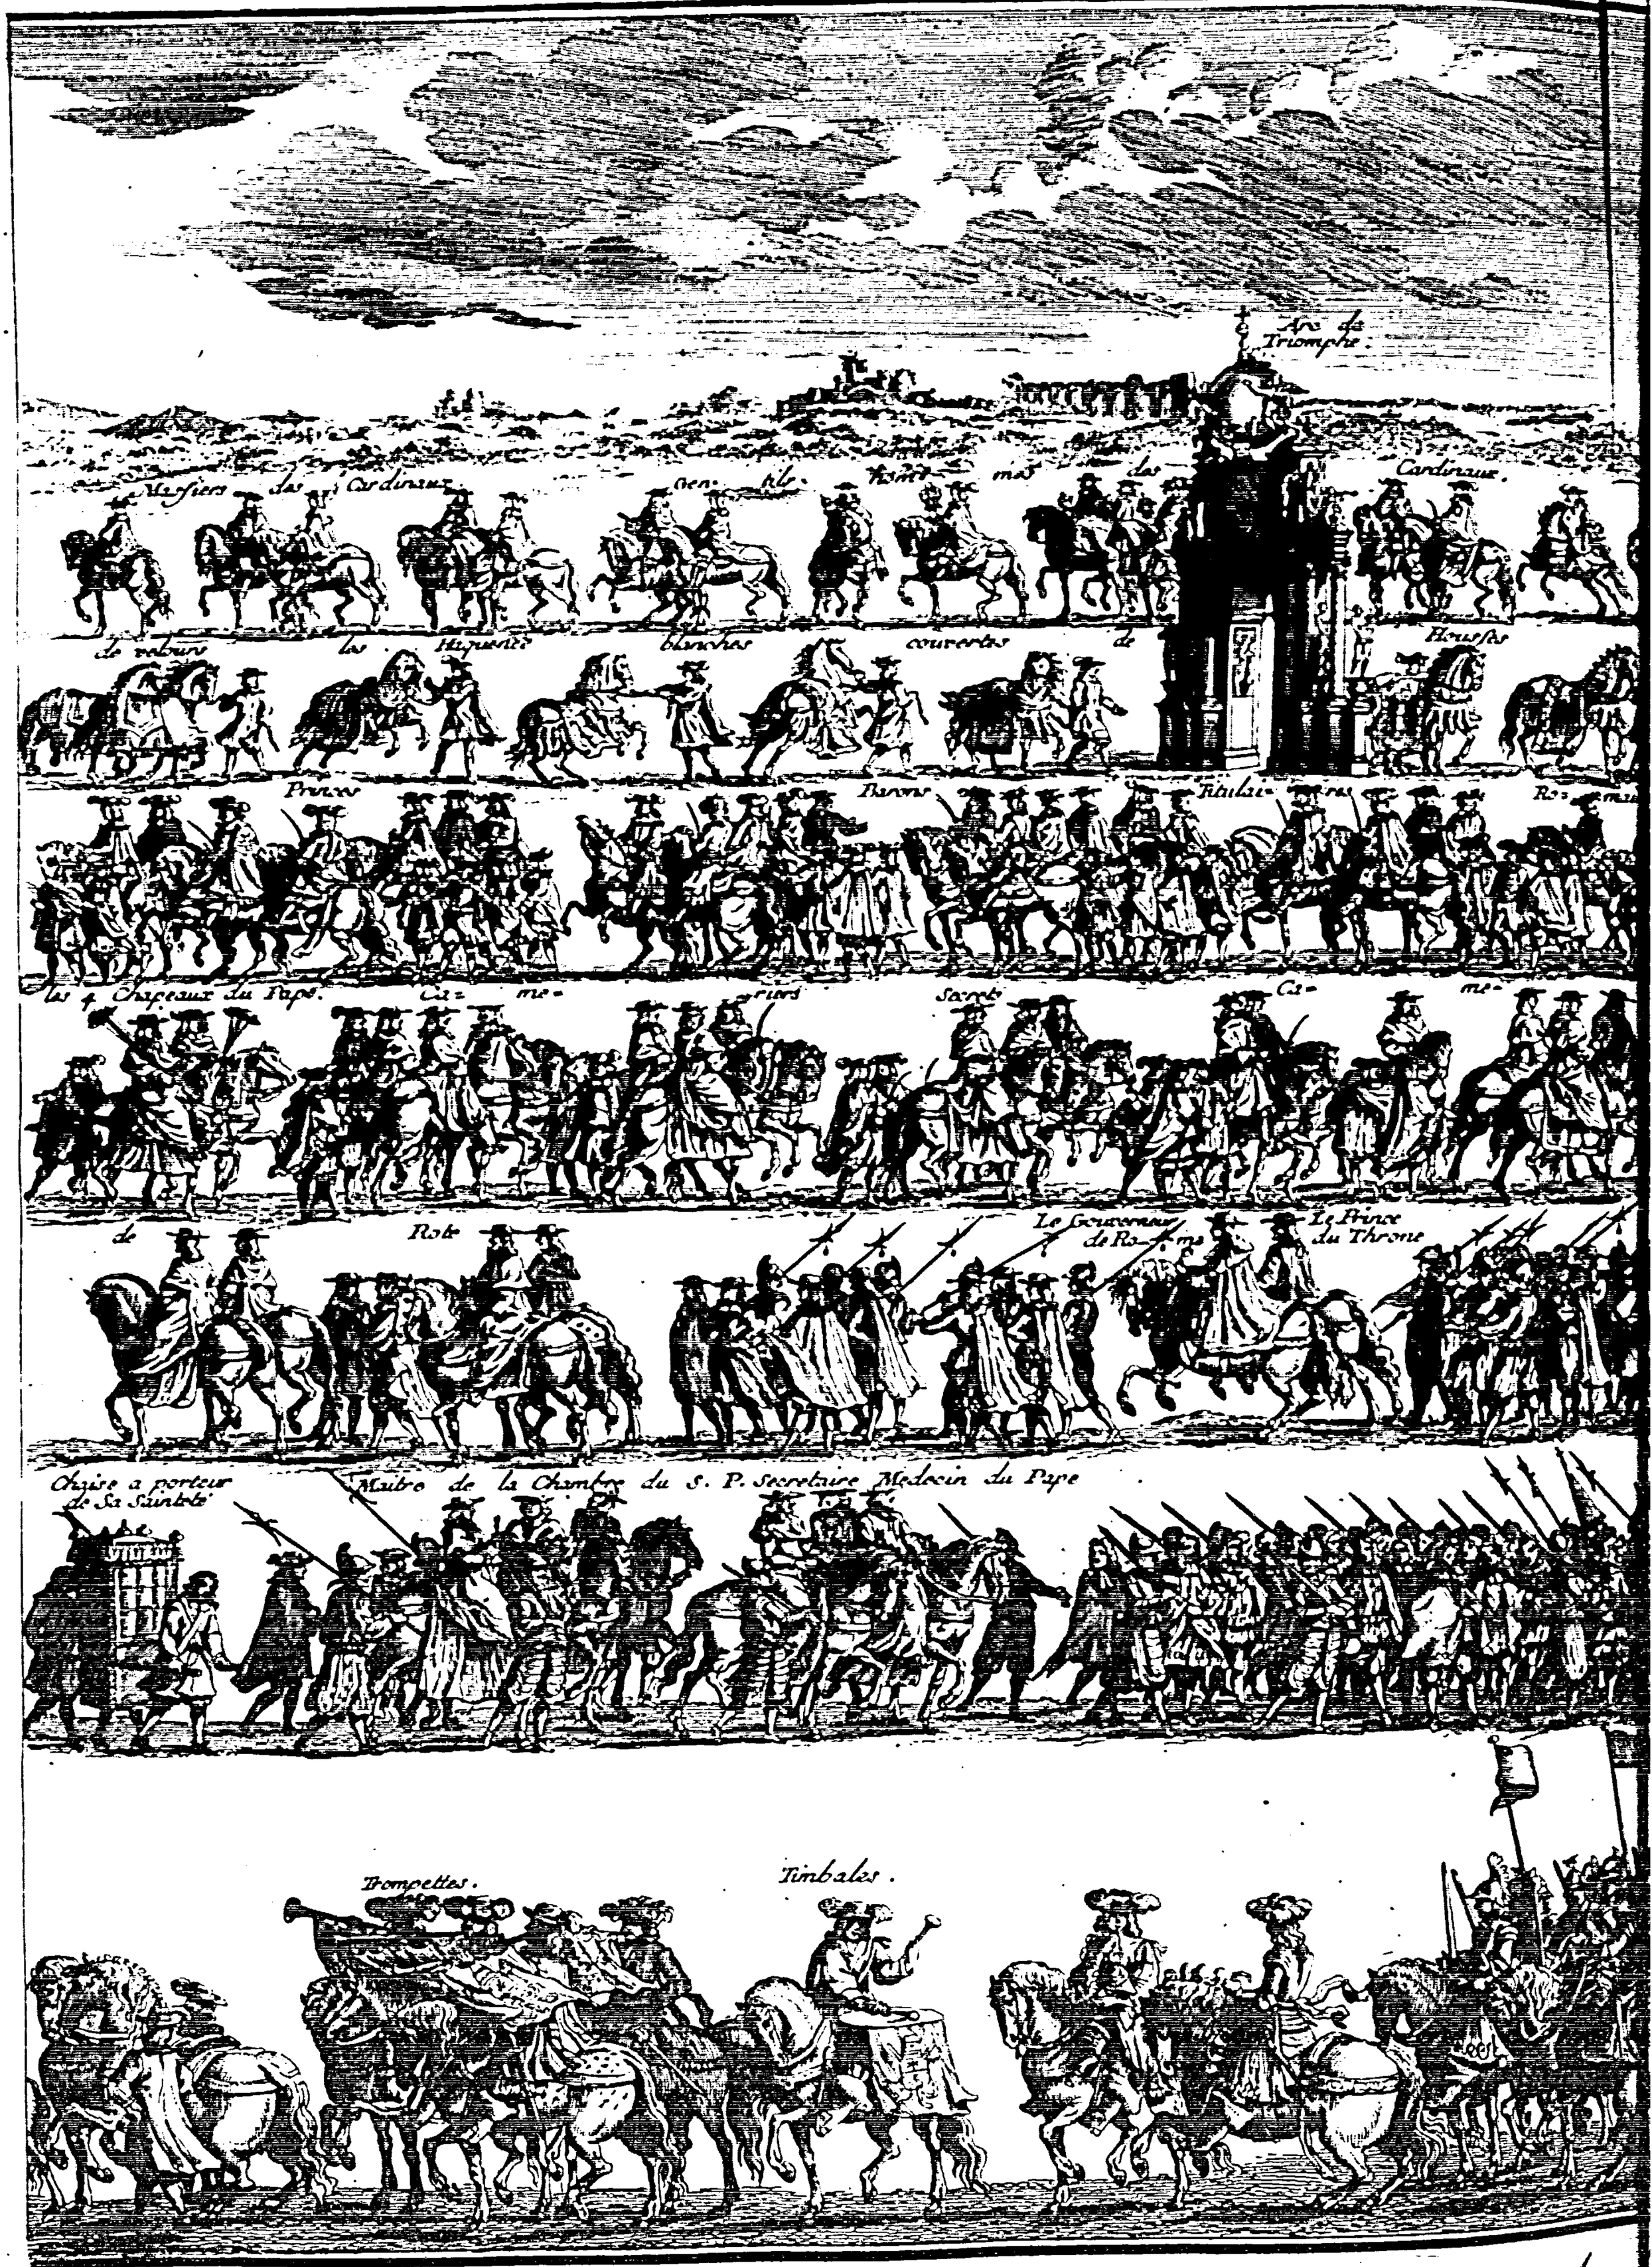
CONTINUATION



OF THE

DISSERTATION

UPON THE

Ceremonies of the Roman Catholics;

Containing a DESCRIPTION of their CEREMONIES.

D. Picart. del.

qui est la Capitale de toutes celles qui relevent de

Porte manteaux et pallefrois de sa Saintété le Jardinier Barbier et Boulanger de Escuyers en bordure d'or et d'argent.

Trompettes Timbaliers

Huissiers de la Chambre

Maistres de Ceremonies

Le Sous diacre portant la Croix

Le Pape precedé des Conservateurs Romains au millieu des Maistres d'Estrades Pages Massiers, Coureurs &.

Compagnie de Cuirassiers.

CONTINUATION

OF THE

DISSERTATION

UPON THE

Ceremonies of the Roman Catholics;

Containing a DESCRIPTION of their CEREMONIES:

AUTHORITY of the CHURCH; HEAD of the UNIVERSAL CHURCH.

THE church [a] is one visible, holy and catholic or universal church; and is the work of God who hath established it upon an immoveable foundation; having given unto it the power of opening the gates of heaven to the faithful, and shutting them to Heretics and unbelievers. It likewise has the power of remitting sins, and pronouncing excommunications against those who are disobedient, &c. The church is either triumphant or militant. [b] The triumphant church is the illustrious society of the blessed spirits, and of all the saints, who having triumphed over the world, the flesh, and the devil, securely enjoy eternal happiness. The church militant is the congregation of all the faithful upon earth, who are continually bound during their lives, to resist the world, the flesh, and the devil. Jesus Christ immediately governs that part of the church which is triumphant in heaven, but for the church militant, as it required a visible governour, he has appointed one in his place, who is by true Catholics looked upon [c] as the sole and sovereign depositary of the faith, and everlasting director of the belief of the faithful. This is the person whose authority has been maintained in the kingdoms that have preserved the catholic faith, and who governs them by an infinite number of men whom he constantly keeps in pay. This is the person also, who is commissioned to distribute [d] spiritual arms to all the faithful in the world, and to promote some of them to the highest [e] dignities in heaven at a certain time after their admission into the church triumphant, and to bestow on others [f] such briefs as will one day intitle them to it. You must not here here make an objection, that he breaks in upon the prerogative of Jesus Christ; since on the contrary, the faithful cannot enter into heaven, but thro' the sole recommendation of the visible governor. The church has given him the power which it had received from Jesus Christ, to open and shut the gates of heaven. He is the person who remits sins, and who by his dispensations has the privilege of making lawful what was unlawful; he draws out of his treasury those indulgences, which he makes use of to bring back those who were dead in their sins to a spiritual life. It is in his power whenever he thinks it convenient, by the means of [g] taxes to re-establish those who had been degraded for their crimes, In a word, he it is, who pronounces anathema's and excommunications against Heretics, rebels, and transgressors: but shews favour to those who pay due respect to his paternal authority, and like a tender parent bears with all the infirmities of the flesh, upon condition that they express an unlimited love for him.

[a] Catech. of the Council of Trent. [b] Ibid. [c] Chiefly by the Transmontanes, and some others.
[d] Indulgences, Agnus Dei's, and beads, &c. [e] The canonisations of saints.
[f] Beatification.

The SUPREMACY of the POPE.

THIS visible head is called Pope. And the Catholics are divided concerning him. Some of them make him inferior to a general council, which we shall presently come to. But be that as it will, he takes place of all Christian Princes, as vicar of Jesus Christ upon earth. In former times, the Emperor went to Rome in order to receive the imperial diadem from the Pope's hands, and there engaged himself [h] by the Trinity, by the wood of the cross, and by the relics of the saints, to raise the church and its head to the utmost of his power. Before he sat his foot in Rome he took an oath, the form of which the ceremonial of the Roman church has preserved and handed down to us. At length, after the church and its head had perfectly secured their own rights, he was permitted to enter the city, where the clergy went out to meet him in their habits of ceremony, and gave him the cross to kiss. The Pope received him sitting on a throne erected before the first portico of the basilica of the Apostles. [i] There his Imperial Majesty kneeling down uncovered himself as soon as ever he perceived Jesus Christ's vicar, and then drew nearer, but still with one knee on the ground. Lastly, He devoutly kissed his Holiness's feet, [k] by way of respect to the Saviour of the world. But before his Imperial Majesty could be crowned, he took a new oath, wherein nothing that might establish the prerogatives and security of the Pope, and of the domains of the church was omitted. The coronation was succeeded by a solemn procession, wherein the Emperor at first appeared with the crown on his head, the sceptre in one hand, and a globe in the other, but at going out of the basilica, he put all those marks of honour into the hands of one of his officers, in order to go hold the Pope's [l] stirrup, whilst he alighted off his horse: nay, he even took the bridle, and for some time led the horse of the servant of the servants of Jesus Christ, [m] and the servant of the servants of Jesus Christ out of humility, [g] The excess and roguery of those taxes is not now what it was in former times; and we cannot, in this present age, accuse the court of Rome of that sordid avarice which occasioned a French Poet to write the following verses.

Lubin venant ici de Bresse
Fut prié par frere Zenon
D'en apporter grace en son nom,
Pour avoir sanglé son anesse.
Lubin le fit, & de retour,
Eh bien, dit l'autre, en mon amour
As tu fait quelque tripotage?
Oüi, dit Lubin, & sans gloser
Pour peu de Jules davantage,
Ox t'ent permis de l'epouser.

[h] Sacrar. Ceremon. Lib. I. Sanctam Romanam Ecclesiam, & sanctitatem suam Rectorem ipsius exultabo secundùm meum posse ad vitam, &c.

[i] In this place the august functions of the Popes are performed.

[k] Pedes in reverentiâ Salvatoris devotè osculatus. Vide Sacr. Cerem. Lib. I.

[l] Stapham tenet, quoad Pontifex equum ascenderit, &c. Ibid.

[m] Pontifex, dum imperator humilitatis officia vult exhibere, debet aliquantulùm modestè recusare, Ibid.

mility, pretended not to be able to allow ſo extraordinary a ſubmiſſion; and at laſt his Holineſs did not reſolve to receive the honour his Imperial Majeſty did him, till after many mutual compliments, and purely for the ſake of [n] Jeſus Chriſt. We muſt refer to the notes for ſeveral particulars of the Emperor's duty to the Pope, [o] after juſt pointing out ſome ſingular circumſtances which ſhew the Holy Father to be infinitely ſuperior to all Kings, as Vice-God, and Regent of the univerſe. Under this title he has divided the new world between Spain and Portugal, he has a right to make uſe of St. Paul's ſword to give apoſtolical chaſtiſement to ſuch as ſlight his deciſions as to the faith of Chriſtians: [p] he ought to put the golden crown on the head of his Imperial Majeſty, who is the firſt Prince of the Chriſtian world: [q] he never riſes off his pontifical throne, nor uncovers himſelf for any one whoſoever; nor does he ever vouchſafe the honour of a ſalutation with the leaſt inclination of his head. Indeed as to his Imperial Majeſty, he does him the favour of riſing a little to him when he is admitted to the kiſs of peace, after homaged one to the Pope's feet. However, the Pope ſometimes ſalutes ſuch Princes as have the honour of an audience of him, with a ſlight inclination of his head; but at ſuch time his Holineſs [r] is not in his pontifical robes, and tho' he condeſcends to be civil, [s] he is not obliged to it. Nor muſt we omit that the nuncio's and legates of the Pope take place of the ambaſſadors of all crowned heads.

COUNCILS.

A Council [t] is an aſſembly repreſenting the whole body of the univerſal church. The name of council too is given to provincial and national aſſemblies of the clergy, which however, then only repreſent a part of the church. A council is compoſed of eccleſiaſtical deputies from the ſovereign ſtates of Chriſtendom repreſenting their ſeveral nations, and likewiſe [u] of other prelates, doctors, &c. of particular churches, all met together in a free place, where they may, without conſtraint, apply themſelves to the reformation of manners, and of doctrine; the regulation and eſtabliſhment of church diſcipline, &c. and this aſſembly has a power of cenſuring biſhops, cardinals, and even the Pope himſelf; and likewiſe of depoſing any of them, when the good of religion requires it. In ſhort this aſſembly, which [w] by its ſuperiority can check the unjuſt enterpriſes

[n] Cum aliquibus bonis verbis, honorem non in ſuam perſonam, ſed illius cujus locum tenet recipiendo, &c. Ibid.

[o] It is to be obſerved, that after the Emperor had taken the oath to the Pope, he was clothed in the ameſs and ſurplice. The canons of St. Peter did him the honour to receive him as a brother, and to conſider him as a ſubject of the Pope, to whom all dignities belonging to the hierarchy of the church are ſubject. The Emperor was to help to carry the Pope, whenever it pleaſed his Holineſs to be carried on his ſervants ſhoulders, to pour out water to waſh his hands before he ſat down to table, give him his firſt plate, &c. Vide The Roman Ceremonial.

[p] Imperator tribus coronis ornari oportet; argenteâ Aquiſgrani, ferreâ Modentiæ in Lombardiâ, & aureâ Romæ, Ibid. John I. ſent ambaſſador to the Emperor Juſtin by Theodoric King of the Goths in Italy, is the firſt who gave the Imperial ornaments to any Emperor, which he did to Juſtin. The Pope's ſucceſſors have inſiſted on this privilege with a high hand.

[q] Ibid. Lib. III. c. ii.

[r] Cum non ſint in Pontificalibus; Ibid.

[s] Non ex officio, ſed ex laudabili humanitate, Ibid.

[t] An œcumenical or univerſal council is here meant.

[u] There muſt be a diſtinction made between the fathers of the council, and the divines, ambaſſadors, &c. for inſtance, in January 1546. there were 43. fathers, and beſides them, 20. divines at Trent: afterwards about 60. fathers; and in the third ſeſſion above 200. theſe fathers were, properly ſpeaking, the council. It is not our buſineſs to enquire whether it may be denied the title of œcumenical in ſome of its ſeſſions, and whether it was a free one or not &c. The Council of Conſtance was in the ſame manner an œcumenical Council, ſince, according to M. Lenfant's preface to his hiſtory, "there muſt have been at it 30. Cardinals, four patriarchs, 20. archbiſhops, about 150. biſhops, above 100. abbots, 14. auditors of the Rota, above 150. other "prelates, as well generals of ſome order as priors, ſent from ſeveral parts, and above 200. doctors." It appears to us, that a Council in ſome manner claims the title of œcumenical, when all Chriſtian Princes are invited to ſend their deputies, unanimouſly to examine into doctrine and manners, with a promiſe that there ſhould be no violence uſed in ſuch examination.

[w] The Tramontanes, more faithful ſervants of the Pope than the reſt of Chriſtians, imagine that a Council has no other authority than what the Pope pleaſes to allow: and pretend that his Holineſs alone has the right of calling one; and take great pains to perſuade us, that the Pope's determination is as valid as an œcumenical Council. Caſalius a Roman prelate, and conſequently zealous for the authority of the Pope, in his Latin treatiſe Of the ceremonies of the ancient Chriſtians endeavours to prove, that the Emperors never had any right to call a Council without the Pope's authority. He is full of the ſubtilties of an Italian, attempting thereby to confute the impious Calvin, who maintained the contrary. Vide the following note.

prises of Popes, subjects them to the church in matters of faith, and declares them Schismatics and Heretics whenever they swerve from it, has more than once been very fatal to them. The Councils of Pisa, of Constance, and Bale, are instances of this.

As to the ceremonies used for calling a council, as there has been none since that of Trent, we shall describe them just as we have them from Father Paul in his history of that council, who tells us, there was not less contest nor less difficulty in settling the rank and precedency of the bishops, &c. than if an affair merely civil [x] had been the occasion of their meeting: that the fathers of the council insisted upon having the hall, where they were to meet, hung with tapestry, without which it was to be feared that the council might be thought an assembly of mechanics and handycrafts. Pope Paul III. issued his bull for calling it, and likewise another for opening it; both which bulls were read and registered in [y] the first session. On the day of opening it, the legates and bishops clothed in their pontifical habits, together with their divines, the clergy (of Trent) and all the people went in procession to the cathedral, where the first legate sung the mass of the Holy Ghost. Then the legates, in his Holiness's name, made a discourse, wherein, after hinting at the occasion of assembling the council, they exhorted the fathers to lay aside all passion and prejudice; to judge with equity; to think of nothing but God's glory, and the church's happiness; (qualities which seem easy of acquisition when taught in theory only, but in reality exceeding difficult in the practice) after this discourse they knelt down, prayed to themselves, and the president afterwards repeated the prayer beginning with [z] Adsumus Domine, Sancte Spiritus. The litanies were sung, the deacon read the Gospel, si peccaverit frater tuus; and the Veni Creator being likewise sung, the fathers seated themselves according to their respective ranks. The president read the decree aloud, asking them if it was their pleasure, that the general and holy Council (of Trent) should begin to the glory of God, &c. to which the fathers, each in his turn, answered placet, the legates first, then the bishops, and the rest of the fathers, of which the notaries drew up a public act. Lastly, Te Deum was sung, and the legates returned home after the first session, the cross being carried before, and they waited on by the fathers, who had laid aside their pontifical robes: and the ceremonies were almost the same at the other sessions. They who would be fully instructed in the orders of the Court of Rome concerning the disposition of the place and seats for a general council may consult the particulars of the [a] Roman Ceremonial. We shall only observe, that the hall of the assembly must be neatly adorned, and if the Pope be present, his throne must be fixed at the upper end, and care must be taken to have two seats on the right and left of the throne, for the deacons assistants. In case the Emperor in person appears at the Council, he is to be placed [b] next the Pope, and at his right hand, but so as to acknowledge the [x] In the first ages of the church, they met without any ceremony, the Holy Ghost alone presiding in their assemblies, and Christian charity being considered before any worldly prospect; but interest and punctilio afterwards crept in. He who was the most artful or the most considerable man, either from the quality of his city or church, endeavoured to direct the assembly, propose matters, and take the opinions. When the church grew to be settled, and religion found herself backed by temporal power, difficulties in doctrine and discipline broke in upon the public quiet, from the ambition of the clergy; and this obliged Princes and magistrates to interest themselves in the assemblies, and they in their own right, and as political sovereigns, began to convoke them, appear at them, settle a form for them, propose and give sentences in them upon such differences as arose; yet so as to leave the principal controversy, which occasioned their being called, to their determination: all which appears by the records of several councils. At that time, there were neither preliminaries nor ceremonies; but they immediately fell to business. Vide Father Paul's Hist. Counc. of Trent. Lib. II.

[y] Before the first session begins, the Roman Ceremonial, Lib. I. fol. 61. Edit. 1516. orders a fast of three days. If the Pope appears in person at the Council, he and the Fathers of the Council, together with the clergy of the city in their pontifical robes are to go in procession to the hall of the assembly. The Pope or some other prelate at the opening of the session, sings the mass of the Holy Ghost: after which the Cardinals, and the Fathers of the Council, one after another, clothed in their robes of ceremony, salute the Pope. High mass is seldom sung at the other sessions. His Holiness generally hears a private mass, and afterwards goes to the Council in his red chasuble, and with the rich mitre on his head: where before the altar he makes a discourse to the assembly, and then goes to his throne; the Cardinals then put on his sandals, and quam dilecta, a verse of one of the Psalms, is repeated.

[z] This the Pope says when present. By this beautiful and devout prayer, immediate aid is asked of the Holy Ghost; that he would please to guide and conduct the Council, to inspire the Fathers with equitable judgments, to banish the spirit of confusion and discord far from them, and not to suffer them through ignorance to fall into error, or be corrupted by bribes, or be surprised by grandeur of appearance.

[a] Lib. I. fol. 59. Edit. 1516.

[b] Then the two deacons leave their places, and seat themselves over against his Holiness.

the Pope's ſuperiority; his ſeat, for inſtance, being to reach no higher than [c] where the biſhop of biſhops ſets his feet; and even this honour is reſerved ſolely for his Imperial Majeſty, for the ſeats of Kings differ very little from thoſe of Cardinals. In this hall there muſt be an [d] altar for maſs, and upon the table of it the relics of ſome ſaint. It is at this altar that the bleſſing of the Holy Ghoſt is prayed for upon this religious aſſembly.

The Roman ceremonial gives us the rank and order of ſuch who have a vote in a Council.

1. The Pope as head of the Chriſtian church.
2. The college of Cardinals.
3. Patriarchs.
4. Primates.
5. Archbiſhops.
6. Biſhops.
7. Abbots.
8. Generals the religious orders. All theſe, as we have already ſaid, are properly ſpeaking a Council: the doctors, divines, &c. appearing there only to inſtruct or guide the Fathers by their knowledge and counſels.

Provincial Synod.

EVERY biſhop ought to hold a yearly ſynod [e] in his particular dioceſs; and every three years each metropolitan a provincial one; and this is what the ancients called a provincial Council. This ſynod repreſents the church of the province, and the archbiſhop preſides in it as metropolitan and head of the clergy of his province, who alone has authority to call it: and this he does by circular letters directed to his ſuffragan biſhops, and to all ſuch as have a right of appearing at it. The mandamus for calling it is fixed up at the porch of the cathedral, [f] one or two months before they meet, but the three laſt Sundays the curates of the ſeveral pariſhes are to exhort the faithful to devotion, faſting and penance, to the end, that God may ſhed his bleſſing upon the aſſembly, and fill them with his holy Spirit. The clergy themſelves during this time are to endeavour to lead a new life, lay aſide ambition, conquer their paſſions, abſtain from evil works, and clothe themſelves with humility, an ornament not very common among them. And this is the order of the aſſembly. The metropolitan ſeat is raiſed under a canopy near the altar. The biſhops ſit in a circle over againſt him; the abbots and other clergy behind the biſhops. Thus the whole aſſembly forms a double ſemi-circle.

[g] On the day before holding the ſynod, the bells of the cathedral, and of the reſt of the pariſhes are rung, from the firſt veſpers till the moment the archbiſhop enters the church where the ſynod is held. On the day of the ſynod, all the clergy meet early at the archbiſhops, and put on their proper robes. Thoſe of the archbiſhop are the amict, the albe, the girdle, the ſtole, and the archiepiſcopal mitre; thoſe of the biſhop, the rocket, the amict, the chaſuble, and the epiſcopal mitre; of the abbot, the chaſuble and plain mitre; of the canon, the chaſuble, the planet, and dalmetica; and all theſe ornaments muſt be red. After this, the venerable aſſembly goes in proceſſion to the church, praying all the way to God, &c. ſinging his praiſes, the bells ringing, and organs playing all the time. Being entered the church, they are ſhewn the precious relics of ſome ſaints, which they ſtand and look on with reſpect. Then the maſs of the Holy Ghoſt is ſung; after which the archbiſhop lays aſide part of his pontifical ornaments, takes the chaſuble, kneels down before the altar, and ſings an anthem, which his clergy repeat after him, kneeling.

[c] Locus ubi ſedet Imperator non ſit altior loco ubi tenet pedes Pontifex.
[d] Altare cum cruce, & ſacra euchariſtia, ſive reliquiis ſanctorum.
[e] Piſcara Praxis Cerem. Lib. I. Sect. 10. cap. 39. [f] Cerem. Epiſc. Lib. I. [g] Cerem. Epiſc. Ibid.

But however fervent their devotion may appear, it never ſuffers them to loſe ſight of their eagerneſs to maintain their rank: and in the midſt of this ceremonious piety, every one inviolably ſticks to his privileges, nor dares the abbot mix among the biſhops. To theſe ſynods ſome learned divines ought to be called; not that they have any vote in them, but ſerve as counſellors to give their opinions, and are the prompters of the ſynod.

[h] At the end of each ſeſſion, the metropolitan having the croſs before him bleſſes the aſſembly; and at the concluſion of the laſt, the decrees of the ſynod are ſolemnly confirmed; and one of the deacons ſays, recedamus in pace, Let us depart in peace. The metropolitan admits his ſuffragans to the kiſs of peace, and they kiſs each other, at leaſt with a ſeeming heartineſs: I ſay ſeeming, becauſe eccleſiaſtic peace is a very nice and tender affair, which the ſmalleſt ſuſpicion of hereſy diſſolves for ever.

SPIRITUAL JURISDICTION of the POPE.

WE will endeavour to make an abſtraction of the Pope, as head of the church and biſhop, from the ſame Pope as a temporal Prince. After giving an idea of the ceremonies of the conclave and the intrigues of the Cardinals, to raiſe a proper object to the pontificate (wherein it is evident the Holy Ghoſt is ſilent) we will ſpeak of the ceremony of his adoration, his coronation, taking poſſeſſion, &c. and ſhall thence proceed to the ceremonies which Chriſt's vicar himſelf obſerves, and cauſes to be practiſed as firſt Prince of the church. The reſt we ſhall rank under civil ceremonies. He whom the ſacred college raiſes to the papal dignity, as ſucceſſor of St. Peter, poſſeſſes [i] the higheſt degree of power and fortune, to which induſtry can carry a man in the eccleſiaſtic ſtate.

1. The Pope gives his bulls for anointing and inſtalling of all archbiſhops and biſhops in Chriſtendom, which amount to 627. if we may believe a writer who pretends to have been in the ſervice of the ſovereign Pontif, without reckoning thoſe called archbiſhops and biſhops, in partibus infidelium. "Under theſe archbiſhoprics and biſhoprics "are 17200. pariſhes, 9500. monaſteries of men, 2400. monaſteries of women, 3700. "abbies of men, 1000. abbies of maidens." From whence he draws this conſequence, that reckoning but 8. or 9. perſons in each community, monaſtery and abbey, the Pope has at leaſt three hundred thouſand eccleſiaſtics or perſons conſecrated to his ſervice, and devoted to his intereſt, who altogether certainly make the ſovereign Pontif [k] very formidable.

2. The Cardinals, who, being 70. in number, at this time compoſe the eccleſiaſtical ſenate, [l] were formerly nothing more than deacons, to whom was entruſted the care of diſtributing alms to the poor of the ſeveral quarters of Rome. Wherefore they were called Diaconi Regionarii, and as they held aſſemblies of thoſe poor in certain churches of their ſeveral diſtricts, they took the name and title of thoſe churches. They began to be called Cardinals during the pontificate of S. Sylveſter. In the ſequel this office grew much more conſiderable, and by ſmall degrees arrived at that height we now ſee it: ſo that it has been long the reward of ſuch who have ſerved the church and his Holineſs well. Even Princes themſelves do not think it any diminution of their honour to become members of the college of Cardinals. The holy father often beſtows this dignity on the ſubjects of Kings, as a mark of his paternal affection; but it belongs only to ſome of his ſpiritual children to nominate to this honour. This way of proceeding conſiderably advances the ſovereign Pontif's power, and greatly augments the revenues of St. Peter.

3. The

[g] Piſcara Praxis Cerem. Lib. I. Sect. 11. cap. xxxix.
[i] Tableau de le Cour de Rome.
[k] Roma caput mundi quicquid non poſſidet armis
Religione tenet.----------S. Proſper.
[l] This is taken from Memoirs of the Court of Rome by Nodot, and from ſome other writers.
[i] Thus father Maimbourg expreſſes himſelf.

Ego	Cardinalis
O	O
Eligo in Summum Pontificem E. D. meum D. Cardinalem
O	O

Nomen.

Signa.

The printed Side of a Scrutiny Bill | Figure representant le côté imprimé d'un Billet pour le Scrutin

The Reverse of a Bill of Scrutiny and Accession adorned with flourishes | Figure Representant le Revers d'un Billet pour le Scrutin, & pour l'accession couvert de Fleurons.

The Structure and workmanship of the Cardinals Cells or apartments | La Structure et la charpente des Cellules des Cardinaux

3. The ſpiritual ſovereignty with which the Pope is inveſted authoriſes the raiſing of ſubſidies, the collecting of briefs, the ſettling [m] of tythes; and his privilege of canoniſing ſaints, of impoſing and ſhortning penances, of granting indulgences, and buying off ſins, his diſtribution of agnus's, &c. diſpenſations, pilgrimages; in ſhort, all the works of piety of Princes, are ſo many methods contributing to enrich the vicar of Jeſus Chriſt, and to keep the faithful within the bounds of their duty [n].

PRELIMINARIES to the ENTRANCE of the CARDINALS into the CONCLAVE for the ELECTION of a POPE; ſeveral WAYS of ELECTING; and the INTRIGUES carried on for his ELECTION.

DURING the vacancy of the ſee, and the holding of the conclave, four Cardinals of different orders ſhare the adminiſtration of affairs between them; who are the dean, or firſt Cardinal biſhop, the firſt Cardinal prieſt, the firſt Cardinal deacon, and the Cardinal Camerlengo or chamberlain. The three former have the care of the adminiſtration of juſtice, and of all affairs relating to the government. The Cardinal Camerlengo, after [o] breaking or erafing the ſeals uſed for the bulls and other diſpatches of the deceaſed Pope, [p] cauſes mony to be coined in his name with the device of the vacant ſee.

Policy makes uſe of all her artifices, and ſets all her ſprings in motion, when a Pope is to be elected, nor is the death of this chief and head of the church waited for, to begin the caballing and intrigues proper for raiſing him, whom they eſteem a fit perſon for the pontifical

[m] The Annates.

[n] Thoſe Annates, works of piety, &c. are proofs of that filial obedience which Princes owe to the holy father, and of that ſuperiority which he has a right to aſſume to himſelf over them. His Holineſs as ſucceſſor of Jeſus Chriſt, diſpoſes of thoſe tributes for the occaſions of the church militant, and to keep up ſplendor and magnificence in the devotion of the faithful. It is from hence he draws the funds deſtined to recruit his ſpiritual troops. Without them, whence could he have wherewith to ſupport the rank of an infinite number of generals and officers, who make war upon the powers of hell, and themſelves lead the armies of the church againſt the enemy with undaunted bravery? How would he be able to reward an infinite number of ſtratagems in war, which the hope of gain has invented? If Chriſt's vicar was poor, as doubtleſs St. Peter was, if after his maſter's example, he refuſed temporal honours, and revenues; yet let it be frankly and honeſtly confeſſed, with what air the clergy would look on the Chriſtian religion, and its eternal felicities: only take away from thoſe who ſerve in the armies of the church, all worldly hopes, honours, pay, the privilege of making downright war, of living at diſcretion, of exacting contributions; leave the prelates nothing but the comfort of the Holy Ghoſt, and you will ſee the edifice of religion fall to ruin. But now, having juſtified the Pope's right to the ſovereignty he has acquired in the church, it will here be proper at one view to lay before the reader the twelve arcana or methods which ſerve to defend this right, and which are as it were the twelve pillars of that ſovereignty: and Cardinal Pallavicini's new Goſpel will let us into theſe twelve methods.

1. The Annates already mentioned, ſhew the Pope to be the ſole patriarch: that he has a right to receive them from all the churches of Chriſtendom inſtead of tythes due from the biſhops, &c. the holy father receives theſe Annates, only upon account of the temporal which is annexed to ſpiritual grace.

2. And 3. The penſions, benefices and commendams, whoſe temporal advantages call great numbers of Chriſtians to ſerve God's church.

4, 5. Plurality of benefices, and an abſolute power of diſpoſing of them.

6, 7. The calling greater cauſes before himſelf, and reſervation of caſes.

8. Frequent jubilees and indulgencies.

9. Diſpenſations granted for money, already ſpoken of.

10. The exemption of chapters: a method which creates an infinite diſparity between the biſhops and the Pope, and ſubjects the chapter immediately to its rightful ſovereign.

11. The privileges and immunities of Monks, which Cardinal Pallavicini ingeniouſly compares to the full powers which the Roman generals received from their republic, when they were making war in provinces at a great diſtance from the ſenate.

12. The inquiſition.

[o] In the preſence of three Cardinals he breaks the ſeal of the church called the Fiſherman's Ring; and the vice-chancellor defaces the ſeal of the chancery, in the preſence of the chief officers belonging to that court. The impreſſion of the Fiſherman's Ring is St. Peter holding a line with a bait to it in the water, and is uſed for thoſe briefs that are ſealed with red wax. The ſeal for bulls bears the figure of St. Peter and St. Paul with a croſs on one ſide, and a buſt with the name of the reigning Pope on the other; upon a Pope's death the buſt and name of him are defaced without hurting the reſt of the ſeal, this laſt is only uſed for bulls which are ſealed with lead.

[p] This money bears two keys in the form of a St. Andrew's croſs under the gonfalon or flag of the church, with this motto, Sede vacante.

pontifical throne: and tho' the college unanimously call upon the Holy Ghost for his assistance in the choice of the vicar of Jesus Christ, yet they employ all human means to prevent him from having any thing to do in the [q] election. That invocation may be reckoned [q] It seems probable that in the first ages of the church, the Roman clergy elected the Pope, and some go so far as to say the people had a share in it too. In the sequel Odoacer King of the Eruli, ordered there should be no election without his consent. Theodoric King of the Goths in Italy made the same pretensions: but the law which Odoacer had made hereupon was abolished in 502. by the intrigues of Pope Symmachus; which however, did not hinder Theodoric from naming Felix IV. for Pope in the year 526. The succeeding Princes followed the example of their predecessors, reserving to themselves the right of confirming the new elected Pope, who could not take possession of the pontificate till he had the Prince's consent. The Emperors of the East having raised their authority in Italy, for some time retained the right of approving and confirming the clergy's choice; but the Popes shook off this yoke by the generosity of Lewis the Debonaire, Lothaire I. and Lewis II. who granted them freedom of election. The tenth century saw several Popes elected, and deposed at the fancy of the Roman Nobility and Italian Princes; which obliged the Emperors again to concern themselves in those elections, and this right was disputed for a whole century between the Emperors and the Popes. At last the Cardinals had the power of election given up to them, without the senate, the people, or the Emperor having any share in them; and since the election of Pope Celestin. II. who came to the pontificate in 1143. independent of the Roman people or the Emperor's ministers, they have kept possession of this right. Honorius III. elected Pope in 1216. made an order that the election should be made in a conclave. Gregory X. who held the see in 1271. in a general council held at Lions settled the form, laws, and proceedings of election, such as they now are; but before his time we are told that Innocent III. had ordered all elections to be made three different ways; by scrutiny, by compromise, and by inspiration.

We will briefly explain those several ways of chusing a Pope, by a few remarks borrowed from the History of Conclaves; the relations of the Chevalier Coyraro; the idea of the conclave, a small book printed in 1676. from Casalius in his treatise De Christianorum ritibus: and from another treatise entitled Tableau de la Cour de Rome. This is the election by scrutiny, the only one that has been used for a long while, and the formality which appears the most essential for making the election of a Pope canonical. And yet the scrutiny is but mere ceremony, since the several factions of the Cardinals must before unite in the choice of the person. This coalition is brought about by the finest and most delicate strokes of policy, and generally comes on after their eminencies have found out the disposition of the sacred college by several scrutinies. Then, if the votes for any of the candidates are pretty near the number required, it is very common for the other factions to fall off and go along with the torrent, and by this means contribute to the Pope's election, fearing to draw on them his hatred by an useless and unseasonable resistance. These are the intrigues, which the people attribute to the influence of the Holy Ghost.

The scrutiny then consists in collecting and examining the votes, which are by printed billets which the Cardinals put into a calice standing upon the altar of the chapel, where they are met to name the Pope. These billets are prepared by the masters of the ceremonies, who put them into two golden basons placed at each end of a long table, standing at one end of the great altar, each of which billets is a palm long, and half a palm broad, and are divided by parallel lines into eight equal parts, taking up the whole length of each billet, as well on the inside, as on the outside; which is the reverse when the billet is rolled up. On the first space to be rolled inward, these two words Ego Cardinalis are at a small distance from each other to leave room for the proper name. The second is a blank, whereon the Cardinal writes his surname and titles. The third has two O's at each end, which are for the Cardinal's seal, which he generally has made on purpose: for on this occasion he never uses his coat of arms. The fourth is filled up with Eligo, &c. as in the cut. The fifth is for the surname and titles of the papable Cardinal. The sixth is as the third. The seventh remains a blank, and the eighth is filled up with a motto, which the Cardinal, whose name the billet bears, chuses out of the Scripture. The backside too of each billet is divided likewise into eight equal parts, almost all of them filled up with flourishes, that the writing on the other side may not appear through; of which likewise we have given a representation. Before the scrutiny, little balls which have the names of all the Cardinals on them, are put into a bag, in order to draw three scrutineers, three Overseers of the sick, and three revisors.

The Cardinals use all imaginable art to disguise their hand. They themselves write what we have just now mentioned on the scrutiny billets; or if they have not skill enough to disguise their hand, they make use of an unknown hand, that it may not be known whom they vote for. These billets are wrapt up with all possible address: that it may be a secret to whom they belong; after which they hide them in their hands, and go and take their places: and then the scrutiny thus begins. Every Cardinal takes the billet written and folded up between the thumb and forefinger of his right hand, and holding it up to the view of the other members of the sacred college, carries it to the high-altar, and kneeling down upon the first step says a prayer softly, then goes up to the altar, and takes the oath aloud; after which he puts his billet upon the patten that covers the calice, and from thence slides it into the calice, and goes back to his place. This office the overseers of the sick perform for such Cardinals as are indisposed, in the following manner. They present the scrutiny billets to such Cardinals, with a box in the shape of an urn, which has a very small hole in it, at which the sick man puts in his billet, nor is it possible to get the billet out again, but by opening the box; this box they carry to the chapel, open it before all the Cardinals present, and then put the billets into the calice in the manner already described.

Before the scrutiny begins, the sexton, who is always an Augustin Monk, says the Mass of the Holy Ghost. The scrutineers stand by the great altar, to mix and open the billets in the calice, and to see that the scrutiny goes on in due form. The last scrutineer takes the billets one after another, and shewing them to the Cardinals, puts them into another calice. If he find more or less billets than there are Cardinals, he burns all he finds in the two calices, and each Cardinal makes a new one till the scrutiny comes right. When the billets are equal to the number of Cardinals, the scrutiny is published thus. The heads of the three orders of Cardinals go up to the great altar, take the calice wherein the billets are, carry it to the table before mentioned, and then retire, and the three scrutineers come and seat themselves at the table with their faces towards the Cardinals. The first scrutineer turns the calice upside down upon the table, opens the billet in the place where the vote is written, and looks upon the Cardinal's name therein voted for: and still as he opens them, he puts them into the hands of the second scrutineer, who looks upon the name, and gives it to the third, who reads the name aloud. However, the Cardinals mark each name upon a sheet of paper, on which the names of all the Cardinals are printed. Those who are named likewise set down the votes given them, to see if they have a sufficient number to be chosen. This number must be at least two thirds.

MASSE of the HOLY GHOST | La MESSE du SAINT ESPRIT | The CARDINALS entring the CONCLAVE | L'ENTREE des CARDINAUX au CONCLAVE.

The CARDINALS SCRUTINY for the ELECTION of a POPE. | La SCRUTIN des CARDINAUX pour L'ELECTION d'un PAPE. | First general CONGREGATION of the CARDINALS. | Premiere CONGREGATION generale des CARDINAUX.

B. Picart del. C. Du Bosc Fecit et Ex.

INSPECTION into the PROVISIONS. | L'EXAMEN des VIVRES. | The MANNER of Carrying PROVISIONS into ye CONCLAVE | MANIERE dont on porte les VIVRES au CONCLAVE.

reckoned among thoſe ceremonies which ſtrike the vulgar by their appearance [r]. The Cardinals are to enter the conclave ten days after the Pope's deceaſe; but before that, they hear the maſs of the Holy Ghoſt in the Gregorian chapel, and [s] a biſhop makes a Latin diſcourſe exhorting them to chuſe a perſon worthy of filling the chair of the Prince of the Apoſtles. After this, their eminencies go in proceſſion to the conclave, marching two by two according to their rank, accompanied by the Swiſs guards, and crowds of people, whilſt the muſic ſing Veni Creator. Being arrived at the place of the conclave, they take poſſeſſion of their cells by lot, after which they all go to the Paulin [t] chapel, where the bulls for electing a Pope are read, and the dean of the ſacred college exhorts the aſſembly to conform to them. This being over, the Cardinals are permitted to go home to dinner, on condition of returning to the conclave before three at night; and the maſter of the ceremonies lays before them, that they ought not to ſhut themſelves up, without they reſolve to remain there all the time it ſhall laſt, as the bulls preſcribe: and ſuch as once go out cannot go in again. The governour and marſhal of the conclave poſt their ſoldiers in the order we ſhall preſently deſcribe, and in ſuch places as they judge neceſſary for the ſecurity of the election. The ambaſſadors of Princes, and all who have any intereſt in the election of the future Pope, are allowed to remain in the conclave for the firſt 24. hours [u]; and it is then that, without any regard to the Holy Ghoſt, they make [w] cabals, and form negotiations, the myſteries of which it is a hard matter to dive into. When all they who are not to remain in the conclave are gone, the doors are ſhut, the conclave is mured up, and guards placed at all the avenues. The Cardinal dean, and Cardinal Camerlingo have the conclave viſited to ſee if it be well cloſed, and an act thereof is drawn up by an apoſtolical notary.

All theſe billets are filed by the laſt ſcrutineer, that none may be loſt, and the file is kept in ſight, till he has put it into a calice ſet apart for them. When the ſcrutiny is over, the billets are again counted, and three reviſors examine them; and when the election has been approved as canonical, they are burnt. But however, it is then allowed to unroll them quite, and a thouſand pieces of treachery and perfidiouſneſs appear. If the votes do not riſe to a due number, billets are kept in order to chuſe the Pope by way of acceſſus. We muſt inform the reader en paſſant, that there hardly ever is a ſcrutiny without this acceſſus, and that it is almoſt an unheard of thing, for the holy father to be choſen ſingly by the former. The acceſſus then is to correct the ſcrutiny. In this, they give their votes by other billets, whereon is written accedo Domino, &c. when they join their vote to another's; or accedo nemini, where they keep to their firſt vote. The acceſſus is performed in the ſame manner as the ſcrutiny; only they do not again take the oath. The ſcrutineers examine the billets of the acceſſus, as they had done thoſe of the ſcrutiny, and the Cardinals in the ſame manner ſet down the votes gained thereby to any of the candidates.

The uſe of the acceſſus is derived from the ancient way of debating in the Roman ſenate; when one ſenator was of another's opinion, he roſe up and went over to his collegue. This was called pedibus ire in ſententiam, and ſuch ſenators, pedarii. When they did not leave their place, they ſaid accedo ad ſententiam.

After the reviſors have very carefully examined the votes of the acceſſus, and find the election to be entirely canonical, they ſend for three apoſtolical notaries into the chapel where the election was made, who draw up a memorandum of the election, upon inſpecting the billets and other pieces which the ſcrutineers and reviſors lay before them. All the Cardinals who have aſſiſted at the conclave ſign and ſeal this record; after which the ſcrutineers burn all the billets of the ſcrutiny and acceſſus in preſence of all the Cardinals.

The Pope is choſen by compromiſe, when their eminencies not being able to agree in their choice, engage themſelves by compromiſe to refer themſelves for it to ſome Cardinals of probity, and to acknowledge him for Pope whom they ſhall name by vertue of the power to them given for that purpoſe. The election by way way of inſpiration is, in ſome meaſure, tumultuary. A number of Cardinals of different factions, who have reſolved to put every thing to the venture, begin to cry out, as by inſpiration, ſuch a one is Pope. They venture this way, when they think they are ſtrong enough to carry it. Adoration is not different from inſpiration, which is when two thirds of the conclave being agreed in the perſon, go in a body and adore and acknowledge him as head of the church. The election by way of compromiſe is very rare, as it is likewiſe by inſpiration and adoration. The ſcrutiny and acceſſus is the common way which they generally keep to.

As ſoon as the Pope is choſen, it is the cuſtom for his domeſtics and the populace to plunder his cell in the conclave, and the palace he lived in.

[r] This is taken from the diſcourſe before the Hiſtory of Conclaves.

[s] So called becauſe Gregory XIII. dedicated it to St. Gregory of Nazianza, and had the body of that Saint there depoſited.

[t] So called from its being founded by Paul III.

[u] Till three at night. When it ſtrikes three, a maſter of the ceremonies rings a bell, after which every body retires, except ſuch as are to ſtay in the conclave, which is then mured up. Taken from Lunadoro.

[w] Scarce is a Pope choſen, when the Cardinals begin to think on a ſucceſſor for him, and projects, and parties are formed during his life-time, and he who has any thoughts of being elected muſt diſguiſe his ſentiments from the time he enters into orders, till he is made a Cardinal. They who would be informed what a papable ſubject is, and what is to be done to be ſo eſteemed, the management of the non-papable Cardinals, and the cabals of public miniſters, ſhould read the idea of the conclave printed in 1676. Corraro's Account of the Court of Rome, and the Hiſtory of the Conclaves; or if he had rather; a picture of the Court of Rome by Aimon, who has copied the preceding writers verbatim.

There remain in the conclave none but the Cardinals, and two conclaviſts for each, an eccleſiaſtic and a ſoldier. Cardinals that are Princes, or old or infirm, are ſometimes allowed three. The reſt appointed for the ſervice of the conclave are the ſexton, the under-ſexton, a ſecretary, an under-ſecretary, a confeſſor who is a Jeſuit, two Phyſicians, a chirurgeon, two barbers, an apothecary, and their apprentices, five maſters of the ceremonies, a bricklayer, a carpenter, ſixteen porters, or valets de chambre for hard work.

[x] Tho' the office of conclaviſt be [y] inconvenient and uneaſy, yet is it very much ſought after on account of its privileges. A conclaviſt may aſſign the penſions he has out of benefices to a certain ſum, which ſum is fixed by the privilege which the Pope elect grants to him who aſſigns. This office likewiſe gives a man the right of a citizen in any town he ſhall chuſe in the eccleſiaſtical ſtate: beſides which, the holy father, after his election, diſtributes a ſum of money to each conclaviſt. But theſe are but ſmall advantages in compariſon of the other privileges which this office procures: for it gives an opportunity and means of knowing every thing that paſſes in the conclave, and of managing the tempers of the Cardinals by all the ſubtilties of Italian complaiſance and cunning. A conclaviſt is ſometimes the ſecret agent of the ambaſſadors of crowned heads. However, all the officers of the conclave take an oath not to reveal any of the ſecrets of it.

The ORDER OBSERVED at ROME during the CONCLAVE.

[a] TO prevent the diſorders which might happen from an interregnum, the governor iſſues out orders to all perſons, except the guards, to carry no arms either in the day or night time, and all tranſgreſſors are rigorouſly puniſhed. Three Cardinals, whom they call the chief of the orders of the ſacred college, are choſen, as has been already obſerved, to take care of the city, and the governor is obliged to give an account of every thing to them. Theſe three Cardinals have the adminiſtration of juſtice, and of the treaſury, and in a word every thing relating to affairs of ſtate.

The clergy of Rome, both ſecular and regular, muſt every day go in proceſſion to St. Peter's, to implore the aſſiſtance of God in the election of his vicar, and go round the Vatican ſinging the [b] Veni Creator.

When the conclave is ſhut up, the under-maſter of the ceremonies goes three times an hour thro' the whole conclave, and rings a little bell at ſix in the morning, and two in the afternoon, to call the Cardinals ad [a] capellam Domini: and at the laſt ringing, each Cardinal comes out of his cell followed by his conclaviſts, one of which carries his ſtandiſh into chapel where the ſcrutiny is to be, and the other carries his cope and cap which his eminence puts on at the entrance of the chapel. This cope is nothing like what they wear at other ceremonies. It is a ſort of crimſon cloak with a long train; in all other reſpects made like a Monk's cloak, and is faſtened with a claſp.

[c] To ſatisfy the reader's curioſity we ſhall deſcribe this chapel. At the upper end of the chapel is the laſt judgment by Michael Angelo (tho' Nodot places it in the Paulin chapel) The floor, and benches on each ſide of it for the Cardinals, are covered with green cloth. The dean of the Cardinals ſeat is on the right hand coming in, and the firſt deacon

[x] Taken from the idea of the conclave in 1676.

[y] The author of the idea, &c. thus expreſſes thoſe inconveniencies --- "He muſt be ſhut up in a little "corner of his maſter's cell, and do every thing relating to his perſon. He muſt twice every day fetch his "victuals and drink, which that Cardinal's officers give him in from without, thro' a tower that is in com-"mon to all his quarter ---- He is to ſerve his maſter at table, to keep every thing very clean, and laſtly to "ſerve himſelf; not to mention the other inconveniences of a very ſevere confinement, where no light is "received but at windows half mured up ---- and where the air, when it is hot, may at length pull down the "ſtrongeſt conſtitutions.

[z] Hiſtory of Conclaves, and Lunadoro.

[a] This is the hymn of the Holy Ghoſt.

[b] This is the chapel of the ſcrutiny, which is that of Sixtus IV. The ſcrutiny is taken twice every day. Vide Lunadoro, the Hiſtory of Conclaves, or their copyiſt, Aimon's Tableau de la Cour de Rome.

[c] Hiſtory of Conclaves.

deacon over againſt him on the left. We have already hinted that there is a long table before the altar, and that on this table are two diſhes or baſons filled with printed billets for the ſcrutiny and acceſſus. On the middle of this table are placed two calices for the billets, a bag in which the laſt of the Cardinal deacons puts the balls deſigned for ballotting for the ſcrutineers, overſeers of the ſick, and the reviſors, and the table for taking the oath, before the Cardinals put the billets into the calice.

DESCRIPTION of the CONCLAVE.

SOME authors who have written of the conclave, have ſtiled it a little republic: and it will appear ſuch in regard to the ſeeming equality of all the Cardinals ſhut up in it, who are maintained at the expence of the apoſtolic chamber. The conclave is fixed to no particular place, and hiſtory furniſhes us with inſtances [d] of its being held in ſeveral different places. The eccleſiaſtical conſtitutions allow the Cardinals to chuſe the place for the conclave; but yet it is always held in St. Peter's palace in the Vatican, upon account of the ſpaciouſneſs of the buildings, the convenience of its open ſquare, and its galleries, which are able to hold the great number of ſervants who go and come twice a-day for the ſervice of the Cardinals. The largeneſs of the piazza which is before the palace, and the proximity of the church of St. Peter where the ceremonies are performed, are ſtill other motives for determining to the choice of the Vatican for holding the conclave.

The conclave is a range of pretty ſmall [e] cells, made of wainſcot at the expence of the apoſtolic chamber; where the Cardinals are ſhut up whilſt they are buſied in the election of a Pope. Every cell has a part divided off for the conclaviſts; and is numbered, and drawn for by lot as already mentioned. They are all ranged in one line along the galleries and hall of the Vatican, but with a ſmall ſpace between them. Such Cardinals as are creatures of the deceaſed Pope have them hung with a violet coloured ſtuff, and the reſt with green ſerge: the ſeats, table, and bed are likewiſe covered with the ſame, and each cell has the arms of the ſeveral Cardinals over it. Between the cells and the windows runs a long corridor, to let in upon the conclave the light received at the windows; and this light is received in at the cells by little glaſs windows placed towards the corridor. The plan of theſe cells may be ſeen in the cut [f].

The Swiſs, who guard the door of the Vatican without, keep centry day and night before it, and board up [g] the doors of the gallery which open into St. Peter's ſquare, and guard is kept before it. In the ſquare is a body of troops under the command of the general of the church, who for the moſt part is continued by the college of Cardinals. He has an apartment in the Vatican, next to the prelate who is governor of the conclave. Near the caſtle of St. Angelo there is another corps de garde, the ſoldiers of which are raiſed by the [h] mareſchal of the church; who beſides places centinels round the conclave, and chiefly at the gate where are the [i] ſeven towers, thro' which their eminencies receive their proviſions.

Neither

[d] That for Clement V. was held at Perouſe. Vide Hiſtory of Conclaves.
[e] They are but ten foot ſquare.
[f] See the third and fourth figure in the cut.
[g] Taken from Lunadoro.
[h] This charge belongs to the family of the Savelli, by an indulto from the Popes, upon account of its great antiquity. Whilſt the ſee is vacant the mareſchal muſt be night and day at the chief gate of the conclave.
[i] It muſt be obſerved too, that there is a great gate of the conclave, which is never opened but to let out the Cardinals or their conclaviſts, when they fall ſick in the conclave. This gate and the towers have two locks, one within, and another without. The outſide keys of the towers are kept by a prelate nominated governor of the conclave, and the inſide keys by the maſters of the ceremonies. The outſide keys of the principal gate are in the hands of Prince Savelli; and thoſe of the inſide are kept by the Cardinal Camerlengo, who likewiſe keeps thoſe of the little wicket, opened only for the audiences which the Cardinals, heads of the ſeveral orders, give. There are alſo outſide keys to this wicket kept by P. Savelli. In ſhort, as if all theſe inſide and outſide keys were not enough, a ſtrong chain is hung acroſs the inſide of the principal gate, the key of which is in the poſſeſſion of the chief maſter of the ceremonies.

Neither the Cardinals, nor any of the persons shut up in the conclave are spoken to, but at the hours allowed of, and then aloud, and in Italian or Latin.

MANNER of carrying PROVISIONS to the CARDINALS whilst in the CONCLAVE.

BEFORE any provisions designed for the conclave are suffered to go in, the prelates who guard the towers are carefully to examine it, and that under pretence of furnishing their eminencies with necessaries, no letters be delivered to them either from the ministers of foreign Princes, or other persons who have any interest in the election of the Pontif.

" [k] Every day about noon, and towards the evening, the officers of every Cardinal " come into the square of St. Peter's in the coaches belonging to them, and alighting " go and demand their master's dinner of the steward of the conclave; or go and fetch " it, if he has his own kitchen, and then carry it to the [l] tower in this order. First " the two staff-bearers of the Cardinal, each with his wooden mace of violet co- " lour with his eminency's arms. The gentlemen follow two and two barcheaded. Af- " ter them comes the [m] Maître d'hotel with a napkin on his shoulder, with the butler " and carver. The staff-bearers who follow them carry the victuals and drink of the " Cardinal with a lever, at which hangs a large kettle, in which are several pots, plates, " dishes, &c. ----- others carry great baskets in which are bottles of wine, bread, " fruit, &c. When they come to the tower, they name their Cardinal aloud, that his " Valet de Chambre, who waits within the conclave, may come forward and have provi- " sions taken in by porters, who carry it to the Cardinal's cell. All these provisions are " carefully and nicely examined by the prelate who with one of the conservators of the " Roman people is upon the watch to prevent any letter or note from getting in; nay, they " have a power of opening the meat for fear of some deceit. All the bottles and flaggons " must be of glass or chrystal, without any covering, that what they contain may be " seen: but this examination is not carried to the rigour; because all the precautions they " could use, would not hinder the Cardinals from finding inventions for carrying on in- " trigues, and knowing what passes without. There are some, who by the means of a " composition, can hide several lines written on the skin of a fowl, without the exami- " ners being able to perceive any thing of it; and very often, all the eatables served " up to their eminencies tables are designed as so many symbols and hieroglyphics.

" As soon as the provisions are entred, one of the Pope's running footmen, who stands " by in his violet coloured robe, holding his silver mace in his hand, shuts the door of the " towers. And the assistant prelate observes whether all be fast, and seals the lock with " his coat of arms. The masters of the ceremonies do the same thing within. As to the " prelates who assist at this function, they are deputed by the college: and are an audi- " tor of the rota, or clerk of the chamber, a prothonotary, a referendary, &c. all de- " pending on the governor of the conclave.

[k] Taken from the Tableau de la Iour de Rome, who borrowed it from Lunadoro.

[l] They are called Ruote in the Italian. And it is through them that the Cardinals and conclavists talk with people without. Their eminencies through them give audience to ambassadors, and all that are to receive any orders from the sacred college, as the governors of Rome, and of the Borgo of St. Peter, &c. who never go into the conclave after it is closed up. There is no difference between an audience of the Pope, and of the Cardinals. Three genuflexions are made to them, and the reason is, that the Pope is among them, though he be not yet chosen. It is therefore but reasonable to pay this august assembly the same homage as is due to the Pope himself: since he is actually incognito in the conclave. Vide Discourse on the Conclave prefixed to the History of Conclaves.

[m] In Italian Scalco.

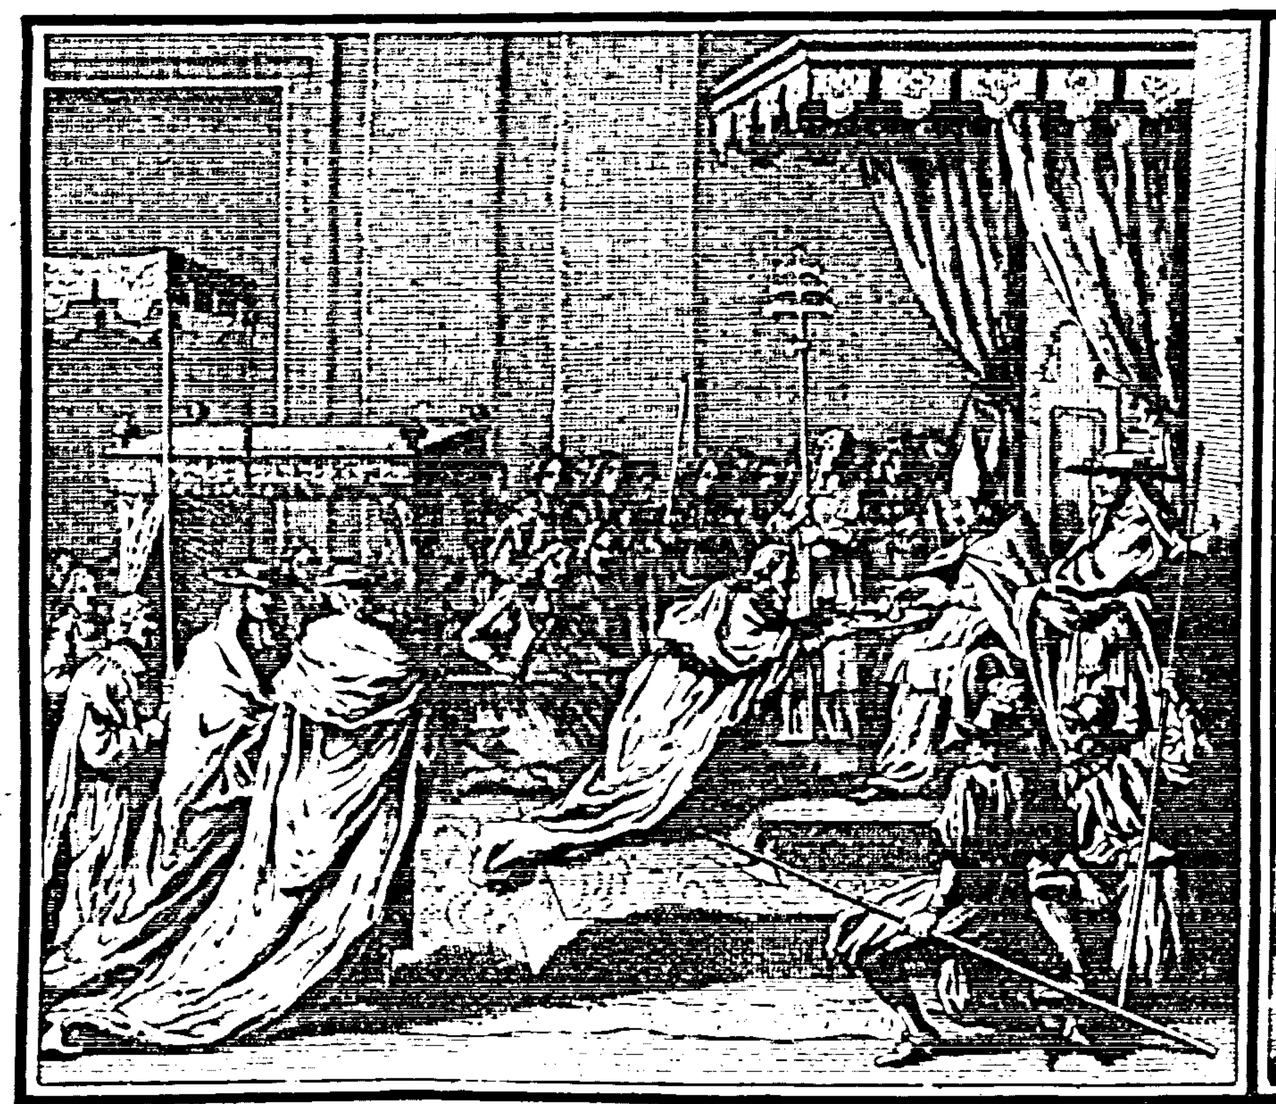
P.d.s.

The ADORATION of the POPE Sitting on the high ALTER of S.t Peters.

L'ADORATION du PAPE sur le grand AUTEL de S.t PIERRE.

The ADORATION of the POPE in the Chipple.

L'ADORATION du PAPE dans la CHAPELLE.



The POPES CORONATION.

Le COURONNEMENT du PAPE.

Wards of flax burnt before the POPE.

Les ÈTOUPES brulées devant le PAPE.

B. Picart. del.

The KEYS presented to the POPE in the porch of S.t John of Latern.

Les CLEFS presentée au PAPE sous le vestibule de S.t Jean de Latran

C. Du. Bosc. exc.

The JEWS presenting the PENTATEUCH to the POPE in y.e COLLISEUM

Les JUIFS presentant le PENTATEUQUE au PAPE dans le Colisée.

The ADORATION of the POPE after his ELECTION.

" [a] AS ſoon as the Pope is choſen, the Cardinals, who are chiefs of their reſpective " orders, aſk his conſent, and the [o] name he is reſolved to take in this change of " condition. (The [p] fiſherman's ring is immediately given him.) The maſters of " the ceremonies draw up informations of his declaration, and give a duplicate of it to the " college. The two firſt Cardinal-deacons take the new Pope behind the altar, where " aſſiſted by the maſters of the ceremonies, and the ſexton (who is always of the order " of the Auguſtin Monks) they take off his [q] Cardinal's habit, to put on the papal, which " is a caſſoc of white taffeta, a rochet of linen, the camail of red ſattin, and a cap of the " ſame, with ſhoes of red cloth embroidered with gold, and a golden croſs on the upper " part. The Pope thus dreſſed is carried in his chair before the altar of the chapel where " he is elected, and there the Cardinal-dean, and after him the reſt of the Cardinals [r] adore
" his Holineſs on their knees, kiſs his foot, and then his hand (the right one; and the " holy Father [s] takes them up) and gives them the kiſs of peace on the right cheek [t].
" After this the firſt Cardinal-deacon, preceded by the maſter of the ceremonies carrying " the croſs, and by a choir of muſicians who ſing the anthem, Ecce ſacerdos magnus, &c.
" behold the High Prieſt ſo agreeable to God, and juſt, goes to [u] the great pew of St.
" Peter, where the maſter maſon has the door opened, that the Cardinal may paſs into " the balcony to inform the people of the Pope's election, crying as loud as he can, An-
" nuntio vobis gaudium magnum, habemus Papam, &c. Tidings of great joy I bring unto you,
" we have a Pope, &c. Then one of the large culverins of St. Peter's is fired without ball,
" to adverтiſe the governor of the caſtle of St. Angelo to make a diſcharge of all his artil" lery: all the bells of the city are heard at the ſame time, and the air reſounds with
" noiſe of drums, trumpets, and cymbals.

During the noiſe of the artillery, the ſound of the bells, and the muſic of voices and inſtruments, the Romans inceſſantly break out into vows and acclamations for the new Pope.

" [w] The ſame day two hours before night, the Pope, with his cope and mitre on, is car" ried and ſet upon the altar of Sixtus's chapel, where the Cardinals in their violet copes
" come and adore the new Pontif a ſecond time, who is ſeated upon the relics of the " holy ſtone. (This adoration is performed as the former, the muſic all the while ſing-
" ing motets agreeable to the occaſion.) In the mean while the conclave is unmured, and
" the Cardinals, with the muſic before them, go down into the middle of St. Peter's
" church. The Pope follows, carried in his pontifical ſeat under a red canopy adorned " with a gold fringe. His ſtaff-bearers place him upon the great altar of St. Peter,
" where the Cardinals adore him a third time, and after them the [x] foreign ambaſſadors;
" in the preſence of multitudes of people, with which this vaſt church is crouded to the " very end of its porch. Te Deum is ſung, and the Cardinal-dean, being on the epiſtle
" ſide, reads the verſes and prayers appointed in the Roman ceremonial, after which the " Pope is ſet down on the foot of the altar. A Cardinal-dean takes off his mi-
" tre, and he ſolemnly bleſſes the people. His pontifical ornaments are then taken off,

[a] Taken from the Tableau de la Cour de Rome; the author of which generally borrows all he ſays word for word from an Italian treatiſe entitled, Relazione della Corte di Roma, e de' Riti da oſſevarſi in eſſa, &c.

[o] Sergius III. or IV. before called Os porci, Swine's face, is the firſt Pope, who took upon him to change his name upon his exaltation to the Pontificate; which his ſucceſſors have followed. Vide Fuſcic. Tempor. Others are of opinion that the Popes did not change their names till after the time of John XII. who was before named Octavian, and was reigning Pope in 956. long after Sergius II. and many years before Sergius IV.

[p] This particular is taken from a book entitled, Sacrar. Cerem. Eccleſiæ Romanæ Lib. III. L. 1. The Tableau, &c. of which this is an extract, does not mention it.

[q] Theſe clothes are given to the clerks of the ceremonies. Vide Cerem. Eccl. Rom.

[r] Genuflexi. Relaz. della Corte di Roma.

[s] Da ſua S. è fatto levar in piedi, Ibid.

[t] On each cheek, noll' una e nell' altera guancia, Ibid.

[u] La loggia della Benedizione, Ibid.

[w] Tableau de la Cour de Rome, he takes it from the beforementioned treatiſe.

[x] Prælati nobiles. Cerem. Eccl. Rom. Lib. I.

" and twelve chairmen in long ſcarlet coats, reaching to the ground, place him in his " chair, and [y] carry him on their ſhoulders into his apartment."

As to the cuſtom of kiſſing the Pope's feet, it is certainly very ancient. Baronius pretends to find an inſtance of it [z] in the year 204. and it appears that afterwards the Emperor Juſtin I. Pepin King of France, Frederic Barbaroſſa, &c. all kiſſed the holy Father's feet. However, the time when this cuſtom grew conſtant is not exactly known. This is what is alledged, to ſhew that this ceremony is wholly referred to Jeſus Chriſt alone, tho' it be vulgarly conſidered as an inſtance of the veneration of Chriſtians for his vicar. 1. It muſt be obſerved, that his Holineſs's ſlipper has on it a croſs, which is the emblem of CHRIST crucified. To prevent any ſuperſtitious abuſe, which a blind reſpect may but too often lead people into, [a] the ſucceſſors of St. Peter enlightned by the Holy Ghoſt, have ordered that their ſandals ſhall have this croſs on the upper leathers: ſo that it is not the Pope's feet that are kiſſed, but the croſs of JESUS CHRIST crucified; and this is a manifeſt proof, that his Holineſs is [b] ſervant of the ſervants of JESUS CHRIST. 2. Tho' the croſs itſelf were not on the upper leather, the excellence of his dignity might juſtify this homage; and 3. the ſanctity of the ſovereign Pontif would ſtill be a farther juſtification of it. His feet ought to be kiſſed in the ſame manner as [c] the croſs and other holy images are kiſſed.

The adoration is relative to God. It is not to the Pope, but to JESUS CHRIST, whom two women, (Mary and Magdalen) fell down and [d] worſhipped. Yet we are of opinion, without offending againſt the dignity of the holy Father, or the reſpect due to the holy ſee, that part of the honours paid to the Pope take their riſe from thoſe paid to [e] the ancient Roman Emperors, whether as ſovereign Pontifs, that is, heads of the religion of the Romans, or as ſovereigns of the ſtate; but we muſt at the ſame time add, that theſe honours are now eſteemed reaſonable, juſt and neceſſary; and Pope Innocent III. uſed to ſay, that [f] the church being the ſpouſe of CHRIST's vicar, brought him in marriage a full power over all temporalties as well as ſpiritualties. That the mitre is the ſign of the latter, as the crown is of the former, and that they both hold out to all Chriſtians, that he is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords.

The POPE'S CORONATION.

SINCE the Pope is head of the univerſal church, ſupreme arbiter of its rights, the ſpiritual Father of the Monarchs of the earth, &c. it is but reaſonable, that the external marks of his dignity ſhould be equal to the majeſty of his rank, and the ſublimity of his functions. He wears the [g] keys in token of his power of opening the gates

[y] Stephen II. elected Pope was the firſt who was ever carried on men's ſhoulders after his election. The great men of old Rome were carried by their ſlaves in a ſort of litter (Lectica). It ſeems probable, that the cuſtom of carrying the Pope on men's ſhoulders was introduced by degrees after the fall of paganiſm at Rome. As for Stephen II. it appears, from the character given of him by Platina, that his merit contributed very much to the honour that was done him of being carried on men's ſhoulders.

[z] Pedrigna ad Caium Papam ſe contulit, ad pedeſque procidens eos ex more exoſculata eſt.

[a] Divino ſpirante lumine appoſuerunt Crucem ſupra eorum Sandalia, &c. Caſalius de Chriſt. ritibus.

[b] Unde proteſtantur ſummi Pontifices eſſe ſe ſervos ſervorum ejus quem ipſi repræſentant per Crucem. Ibid.

[c] Caſalius, Ibid.

[d] S. Mat. chap. xxviii.

[e] Exempla ſunt tum de Caio Caligulâ, Nerone, Othone, Trajano, Adriano & Diocleſiano, qui alios ad oſcula genuum, & pedum admiſerunt; præſertim ultimus, Joh. Steph. de oſculo Romani Pontificis, cap. viii. compares the rights of his Holineſs's Pontificate with thoſe of the ſovereign Pontifs of pagan Rome, and to that end look into Dionyſ. Halic. for the deſcription of the latter.

[f] Eccleſia Sponſa, ſaid he, non nupſit vacua, ſed dotem mihi tribuit abſque pretio pretioſam, ſpiritualia plenitudinem & latitudinem temporalium. In ſignum ſpiritualium contulit mihi mitram, in ſignum temporalium dedit mihi coronam: Mitram pro ſacerdotio, coronam pro regno: illius me conſtituens vicarium, qui habes in veſtimento & femore ſuo ſcriptum, Rex Regum, & Dominus Dominantium.

[g] St. Peter has two keys at his girdle. One of paradiſe, repreſenting his power of abſolving; the other of hell, ſhewing his power of excommunicating ſinners: and he has a third given him, thereby ſignifying his univerſal knowledge, and his infallibility the neceſſary conſequence of it. Theſe three keys too repreſent the Pope's power as Vice-God, as ſuperior to all the Kings of the earth, and laſtly his right of depoſing thoſe Kings. Vide Caſalius de ritibus, &c.

gates of heaven to the faithful, and the triple [h] crown as a leſſon to the Chriſtian world, that he is High Prieſt, Emperor, and King.

The preparations [i] for his coronation do not fall ſhort of thoſe for the moſt auguſt Princes of the univerſe. If he be only a deacon, after his election the Cardinal-dean gives him the orders of prieſt and biſhop in Sixtus's chapel. On the day of his coronation he goes to that chapel in [k] his Cardinals dreſs, ſupported by two prelates, who [l] are the gentleman of his bed-chamber and cup-bearer. The pages of the chamber and of honour, and the chaplains to the Pope, who walk with his Holineſs, have the [m] pages, called Extra muros, and the ſquires of the deceaſed Pope before them. The ambaſſadors, the general of the church, the Princes of the throne, the governor of Rome, the captains of the light horſe, of the Swiſs, and the anſpaſſades appear all at this ceremony, as well as the Cardinals clothed in red, that is, in their caſſoc, rochet, what the Romans call their Mozzette, and their red calotte on their head. The proceſſion being arrived at Sixtus's chapel, ſuch of the Cardinals as make a part of the proceſſion, put on their red copes at entring into it. Two Cardinal-deacons give the Pope his pontifical ornaments; and this is the ceremony. [n] The firſt maſter of the ceremonies ties on the Falda of taffeta over the rochet, and put the red ſatin Berrette on his head. The holy Father then goes into chapel. The Cardinals that are there riſe up, and make him a very low bow, as ſoon as he appears in ſight, and his Holineſs receives the ſubmiſſion of his ſpiritual children like a father. Their eminencies gentlemen are on their knees, and the holy Father ſtanding with his back leaning againſt the altar. Then one of the Cardinal-deacons takes off his red Beretta, and the other puts on one of white taffeta: they likewiſe take off his red Mozzette, and put him on the amict, the albe, the girdle, the ſtole and red chaſuble embroidered with gold. The firſt Cardinal-deacon puts him on the precious mitre, whilſt the firſt maſter of the ceremonies ſings the Extra aloud: after which an apoſtolic ſub-deacon takes the croſs which is to be carried before the Pope; and the Cardinals take off their Beretta, in honour of the ſacred wood.

The croſs is carried in the following order. The Pope's gentlemen two by two go before it, followed by the courtiers of the new ſucceſſor of St. Peter in their robes of ceremony. The pages Extra muros go next, and after them the conſiſtorial advocates, the gentlemen of the privy chamber, the referendary prelates, the biſhops, the archbiſhops and patriarchs, the Pope's chaplains who carry the Triregne and the mitre, &c. The croſs is born after the chaplains, followed by the Cardinal-deacons two and two, and in the ſame order the Cardinals, prieſts and biſhops, who come after. Their eminencies are followed by the conſervators of the Roman people, the Caporions, &c. His Holineſs is carried to church in a chair in the midſt of this holy proceſſion, ſurrounded by his guards, and infinite multitudes of people, who if the expreſſion may be allowed, greedily devour his Holineſs's benedictions, in order by the help of them to force the gates of heaven. The Knights of St. Peter and St. Paul ſupport the canopy, under which his Holineſs is carried; and the proceſſion deſcends in the following order to St. Peter's church.

[o] Under

[h] The Triregne, as the Italians call it, would be of very early date, were it true, that it took its riſe from Clovis the firſt Chriſtian King, who ſent it to Pope Hormiſdas, as a token of his holding his kingdom from God, and not from his ſword. That King's preſent was ſent to St. Peter himſelf, and to him only, and the crown was accordingly hung up before the altar where the bones of the holy Apoſtle reſt. The uſe of the Triregne then did not begin till the coronation of Hormiſdas's ſucceſſor. Vide Bonani Hierarch. cap. lxvi. Pope Urban V. was the firſt who wore the three crowns. Before him, the Pontifs wore but one.

[i] The firſt coronation mentioned in the hiſtory of the Popes, was that of Damaſus II. in 1048. Before Marcus II. created Pope in 336. none are repreſented with the crown, in the figures prefixed to the Lives of the Popes by Ciacconius. During the ſufferings of the church under the Heathen Empire, the Popes only wore the crown of martyrdom. We ſhall have occaſion to be more particular on the papal crown, when we come to the different kinds of dreſſes. We ſhall only obſerve here, that according to ſome authors the Popes wore a cloſe Tiara with a crown upon it till Boniface VIII. who added a ſecond. Formerly the Pope was crowned before the baſilica of St. Peter.

[k] The white caſſoc, the rochet, the ſhort mantle or cope of red ſatin, and the red cowl. Lunadoro Relaz. della Corte di Roma.

[l] Dreſſed in a red cope with a cowl lined with red taffeta.

[m] They have no cowl, but a red robe, Ibid.

[n] Taken from Lunadoro.

" [o] Under the portico of St. Peter near the holy gate, the Pope finds a throne where " he ſits down under a canopy. Round the throne are benches for the Cardinals railed " in. The canons, and all ſuch as enjoy any benefice in St. Peter's with the Cardinal " their arch-prieſt at the head of them, come and kiſs the Pontif's feet: after which he " is carried and ſeated on the foot of the high-altar, followed by an infinite number of " people ſhouting; he there kneels down and prays bareheaded before the holy ſacrament; " and is immediately carried to the Gregorian [p] chapel. There he places himſelf on a " throne, ſurrounded by the foreign ambaſſadors, the Princes of the throne, and other " perſons of diſtinction; and the Cardinals in their red copes, the prelates, &c. pay " homage to him, the former kiſſing his hand, and the reſt his knee;" after which the holy Father gives the people his bleſſing, who thank him by cries of joy and extraordinary acclamations.

This ceremony being over, the Cardinals, biſhops and other prelates put on their white robes, the canons of St. Peter ſinging the anthem in the choir. The Pope waſhes his hands four times. The firſt time, the water is preſented to him by the firſt conſervator of the Roman People; the ſecond at maſs, by the general of the church: the turn of the moſt Chriſtian King's ambaſſador comes next; and laſt of all that of his Imperial Majeſty's. If they are preſent at this ſolemnity of the coronation, they are indiſpenſibly bound to this religious duty.

We ſhall avoid entering into circumſtances of too minute and trifling a nature, in particulars which might tire the reader: ſo that in a word, we ſhall inform him, [q] that his Holineſs undreſſes to put on other robes, the colour of which is a type of his purity and innocence. He muſt now be conſidered as diveſted of the ſinful man, in order to become a new creature. The Acolytes preſent theſe new robes to the Cardinal-deacon, who clothes him in a white garment, who, in the phraſe of the ſcripture, is to preſide in the temple of the Lord. He therefore puts him on his caſſoc, amict, albe, girdle, dalmatica, ſtole, gloves and mitre embroidered with gold, and ſet with jewels. The proceſſion then begins, during which the firſt maſter of the ceremonies in one hand carries a lighted wax candle, and in the other a baſon, in which the glories of this world are repreſented to his Holineſs, under the figure of caſtles and palaces made of flax, to which the maſter of the ceremonies thrice ſets fire, each time ſaying to the holy Father, [r] Behold, holy Father, how the glory of this world paſſes away.

" [s] The whole proceſſion being arrived at the foot of the high-altar, whereon ſtand " ſeven large ſilver gilt candleſtics with large lighted tapers in them, (like thoſe ſeven " candleſtics carried by ſeven Acolytes before the croſs) the Pope makes a ſhort prayer " over the deſk, and then getting up, begins the Introibo of the maſs, having on his " right the Cardinal dean, as aſſiſtant biſhop in his cope; and on his left the Cardinal-deacon of the Goſpel, and behind him two Cardinal-deacons aſſiſtants.

" After he has made the ſolemn confeſſion, the dean of the Rota, who holds the Pope's " mitre, gives it to the two Cardinal-deacons aſſiſtants, who ſet it upon his head. He " then goes and ſits down [t] on his throne, before which the three firſt Cardinal-prieſts " ſay each a prayer for his coronation. After which his Holineſs comes down from his " throne, (or chair according to Lunadoro) his mitre is taken off, and the firſt Cardinal-deacon aſſiſted by the ſecond puts him on the Pallium," ſaying to him, [u] Receive the Pallium,

[o] Taken from the Tableau de la Cour de Rome.

[p] Lunadoro ſays thus.

[q] Lunadoro.

[r] Pater ſancte, ſic tranſit gloria mundi. It is the ſecond maſter of the ceremonies, who on this occaſion preſents the fire to the firſt. The ceremony of burning the flax is performed between the Gregorian chapel, and that of the Apoſtles. Vide Lunadoro. This ceremony ſeems to owe its birth to what was practiſed at the coronation of the Greek Emperors: for in the midſt of all the pomp and ſplendor of the coronation, on one hand, they were preſented with a vaſe filled with aſhes and dead men's bones, and on the other with flax, to which fire was ſet; by this double emblem to remind them of their mortality, and of the fate of all worldly honours.

[s] Tableau de la Cour de Rome.

[t] Or chair wherein he was brought. Nella ſedia geſtatoria, nella quale era ſtato portato. Thus ſays Lunadoro.

[u] The Latin is a little paraphraſed. The form runs thus. Accipe pallium ſanctam plenitudinem pontificalis officii, ad honorem, omnipotentis Dei, & glorioſiſſimæ Virginis Mariæ ejus matris, & Beatorum Apoſtolorum Petri & Pauli, & Sanctæ Romanæ Eccleſiæ.

Pallium, which is to repreſent unto you the duties and perfection of the pontifical office: may you diſcharge it to the honour of God Almighty, of his moſt holy mother the bleſſed virgin Mary, of the bleſſed Apoſtles St. Peter and St. Paul; of the holy Roman church.

The Cardinal-deacon of the Goſpel puts three diamond buttons to the three croſſes of the Pallium, his Holineſs goes up to the altar with the Pallium [w] on his ſhoulders, but without the mitre, kiſſes the Goſpels, puts incenſe into the thurible, and incenſes the altar. After this incenſing, the mitre is again ſet upon the holy Father's head, and the firſt Cardinal-deacon himſelf incenſes him three times; and the ceremony concludes with a kiſs which that Cardinal gives him on the left cheek and on the ſtomach, which the other two Cardinals likewiſe perform.

After this the Pope returns to his throne, where all the Cardinals come and adore him after taking off their mitres. All the clergy too come and adore him, each according to his rank, and all in their robes of ceremony. The patriarchs, archbiſhops, and biſhops kiſs his foot and knee; the abbots and penitentiaries of St. Peter only his knee.

Then the Pope riſes, lays aſide his mitre, ſings or reads the introite and the Kyrie, &c. ſings aloud the gloria in excelſis, and, as ſoon as the prayer of the maſs is ſaid, immediately reſumes his place. Then the firſt Cardinal-deacon goes down into the [x] confeſſion of St. Peter, [y] followed by the apoſtolical ſub-deacons, the auditors of the rota, the conſiſtorial advocates, &c. walking in two ranks, with their white chaſubles, and the violet coloured ameſs over that. The Cardinal-deacon in a low voice ſings [z] the exaudi Chriſte, to which the clergy who follow him anſwer, [a] Domino noſtro a Deo decreto ſummo Pontifici & Papæ, &c. The Exaudi and the reſt are repeated three times, as well as the Salvator Mundi, which the ſame Cardinal then ſubjoins, and to which the clergy anſwer, [b] tu illum adjuva. Then come the Litanies of the ſaints. The Latin epiſtle follows the Litanies, and the Greek follows the Latin; the one ſung by the Greek ſub-deacon, and the other by the Latin. The muſic in the choir ſing the gradual, a Cardinal-deacon ſings the Goſpel in Latin, another the ſame in Greek, and the maſs concludes with ceremonies, which we ſhall hereafter enter into particulars of; but we muſt not omit that, as ſoon as maſs is over, his Holineſs goes into [c] his chair again without pulling off the robes he has worn during the celebration of it. Then the Cardinal-archprieſt of St. Peter, accompanied by two canons, preſents his Holineſs with a white damaſk purſe, wherein are 25. Julio's old money. The chapter and canons of St. Peter make him a preſent of theſe 25. Julio's, as an [d] acknowledgment that he has [e] ſung maſs well. This money his Holineſs gives to the Cardinal-deacons who ſing the two Goſpels, and they to their trainbearers.

To conclude, the Pope is carried to the benediction-pew, attended by his Cardinals, and prelates. The Canopy under which he is carried, is ſupported by the conſervators and caparions: two of the Pope's grooms in red liveries carry each a fan of peacock's feathers on each ſide the chair. The Cardinals and prelates continue ſtanding, all the while the two firſt Cardinal-deacons, in quality of aſſiſtants, help his Holineſs to mount the throne, ſet up by the Cardinals the day before in the middle of the pew. As ſoon as the Pope is ſeated, the choir ſing the anthem [f], Corona aurea ſuper caput, &c. with the reſponſes; after which the dean ſays the coronation [g] prayer. The ſecond Cardinal-deacon takes off the Pope's mitre, and the firſt puts the [h] Triregne on his head, ſaying,

[w] Col Pallio indoſſo
[x] This is a place under the altar where the relics of martyrs lie.
[y] Lunadoro
[z] Hear, O Chriſt.
[a] Our Lord the Pope, Sovereign Pontif ordained by God.
[b] Saviour of the world help him.
[c] Setta geſtatoria. Lunadoro.
[d] This in church-latin is called Presbyterium.
[e] Pro benè cantatâ Miſſâ.
[f] A crown of gold ſhall be on his head, &c.
[g] God is therein beſought "to grant that the Pope may govern the church with edification; as the father "of Kings, and director of the faithful, over whom God has appointed him," &c.
[h] This conic cap adorned with three crowns glittering with jewels is ineſtimable. That which Pope Paul II. conſecrated, tho' loaded with jewels, was not to be compared with the triregne of Clement VIII. valued, as they ſaying, [i] Receive this tiara adorned with three crowns, and when you wear it forget not that you are the father of Princes and Kings; the Arbiter of the univerſe; and on earth the Vicar of JESUS CHRIST our Saviour, &c. Nor does he ever forget this exhortation. The Pope then thrice bleſſes the people: and two Cardinals publiſh a plenary indulgence in Latin and Italian. After this his Holineſs retires to his apartment in the Vatican, and, in his way through Sixtus's chapel, the Cardinal-deacons take off his pontifical ornaments. The firſt Cardinal-prieſt makes him the compliment ad multos annos, in the name of the ſacred college; that is, wiſhes him a pontificate of many years. All this while the artillery of the caſtle of St. Angelo thunders out a tripple diſcharge which is heard all over the city. The houſes are illuminated, all the public places blaze with bone-fires, and the ſky is ſet on fire by an infinite number of rockets. Nothing is talked of but balls, entertainments, and concerts: and every man thinks himſelf obliged to be expenſive to celebrate the acceſſion of the new Pontif according to his inclination. They may gratify themſelves with an infinite variety of pleaſures, ſince ſuch are to be had, which agree with the higheſt degree of virtue, as well as thoſe which are allied to the loweſt of vice; but however, Rome at this time breathes nothing but mirth, and if theſe times of rejoicing repreſent the holy impetuoſity of a zeal truly apoſtolical, Rome may then be ſaid to be holineſs itſelf.

[k] The ENTERTAINMENT formerly given by the POPE on his CORONATION day.

OF the magnificence of this entertainment we ſhall give the reader ſome idea. [l] At the upper end of the hall where his Holineſs gave it, was a theatre built pretty high, [m] in the midſt of which was a table, at which his Holineſs took the upper-hand on a throne ſplendidly adorned, and under a canopy [n] anſwerable to the magnificence of the throne, and dignity of the holy Father. Upon the [o] beaufet placed on the left-hand, was a vaſt number of veſſels of gold and ſilver. In this ſame hall on the right, [p] but much lower than the theatre already mentioned, a table was ſet out for the Cardinals, Biſhops, and Prieſts, and lower [q] ſtill for the other prelates of the church. At the lower end of the hall, there was a very large neat [r] beaufet ſet out, to which was an aſcent by ſeveral ſteps; and another table for the ambaſſadors, and nobility of the Court of Rome, &c. We omit ſeveral other particulars. The Emperor, when at the Pope's Court, had his table to himſelf upon the ſame theatre as the Popes ſtood, and at his right-hand. His ſeat was much leſs ſuperb than that of his Holineſs, and as to Kings, they ſat at the Cardinal's table, after the firſt Cardinal-biſhop. The laity of the they ſay, at 500,000. pieces of gold. As to Paul II. he is the firſt Pontif who thought of adorning his triregne with jewels; but this ſucceſſor of St. Peter was ſo paſſionately fond of them, that he bought up the fineſt he could procure, to ſet them in his cap. The triregne of Martin V. had five pounds and a half weight of pearls on it, and beſides weighed fifteen pounds of gold. That of Paul V. was ſtill of greater value. Nor is there any thing unreaſonable in this, ſays Father Bonani, who has given us theſe particulars in his Hierarch. Eccl. ſince the Pope governs the kingdom of Chriſt in the quality of his viceroy; now this kingdom is infinitely ſuperior to all the empires of the univerſe. The High Prieſt of the Jews wore on his head and breaſt the riches which were to repreſent the majeſty of the ſupreme God. The Pope repreſents that of the Saviour of the world, and nothing better expreſſes it than riches. The prieſts of the Heathen Deities alſo wore crowns of precious ſtones; it would therefore be very unjuſt, to refuſe one of the ſame kind to him who is the High Prieſt of the Chriſtian religion. But we muſt not omit that the two ſtrings of the pontifical tiara, repreſent the two different manners of interpreting the Scripture, one according to the myſtical ſenſe, and the other according to the literal.

[i] Accipe Tiaram tribus coronis ornatam, & ſcias te eſſe patrem Principum & Regum, Rectorem orbis, in terrâ Vicarium Salvatoris noſtri Jeſu Chriſti, &c.

[k] Taken from the Roman Ceremonial.

[l] In Capite Aulæ erit ſuggeſtus ad quem triplici gradu aſcenditur, Cerem. Eccl. Rom. fol. XVIII. Ed. of 1516.

[m] In medio quadratus Thalamus ſurget Palmi altitudine, ſuper quo menſa parabitur Pontificis, Ibid.

[n] Cum panno aureo ſuper Caput, Ibid. [o] The beaufet. [p] Infra ſuggeſtum, Ibid.

[q] Here the ceremonial only mentions prelates, pro aliis prælatis. The Cardinal-deacons have their table over againſt the other Cardinals, both raiſed but one ſtep.

[r] In fine Aulæ parabitur magna credentia cum pluribus gradibus ad magnificentiam, &c. Ibid.

St Jean de Latran.

Scala Santa

Clergé de St Jean de Latran

Avant

Cameriers d'honneur d'épée et d'Eolise.

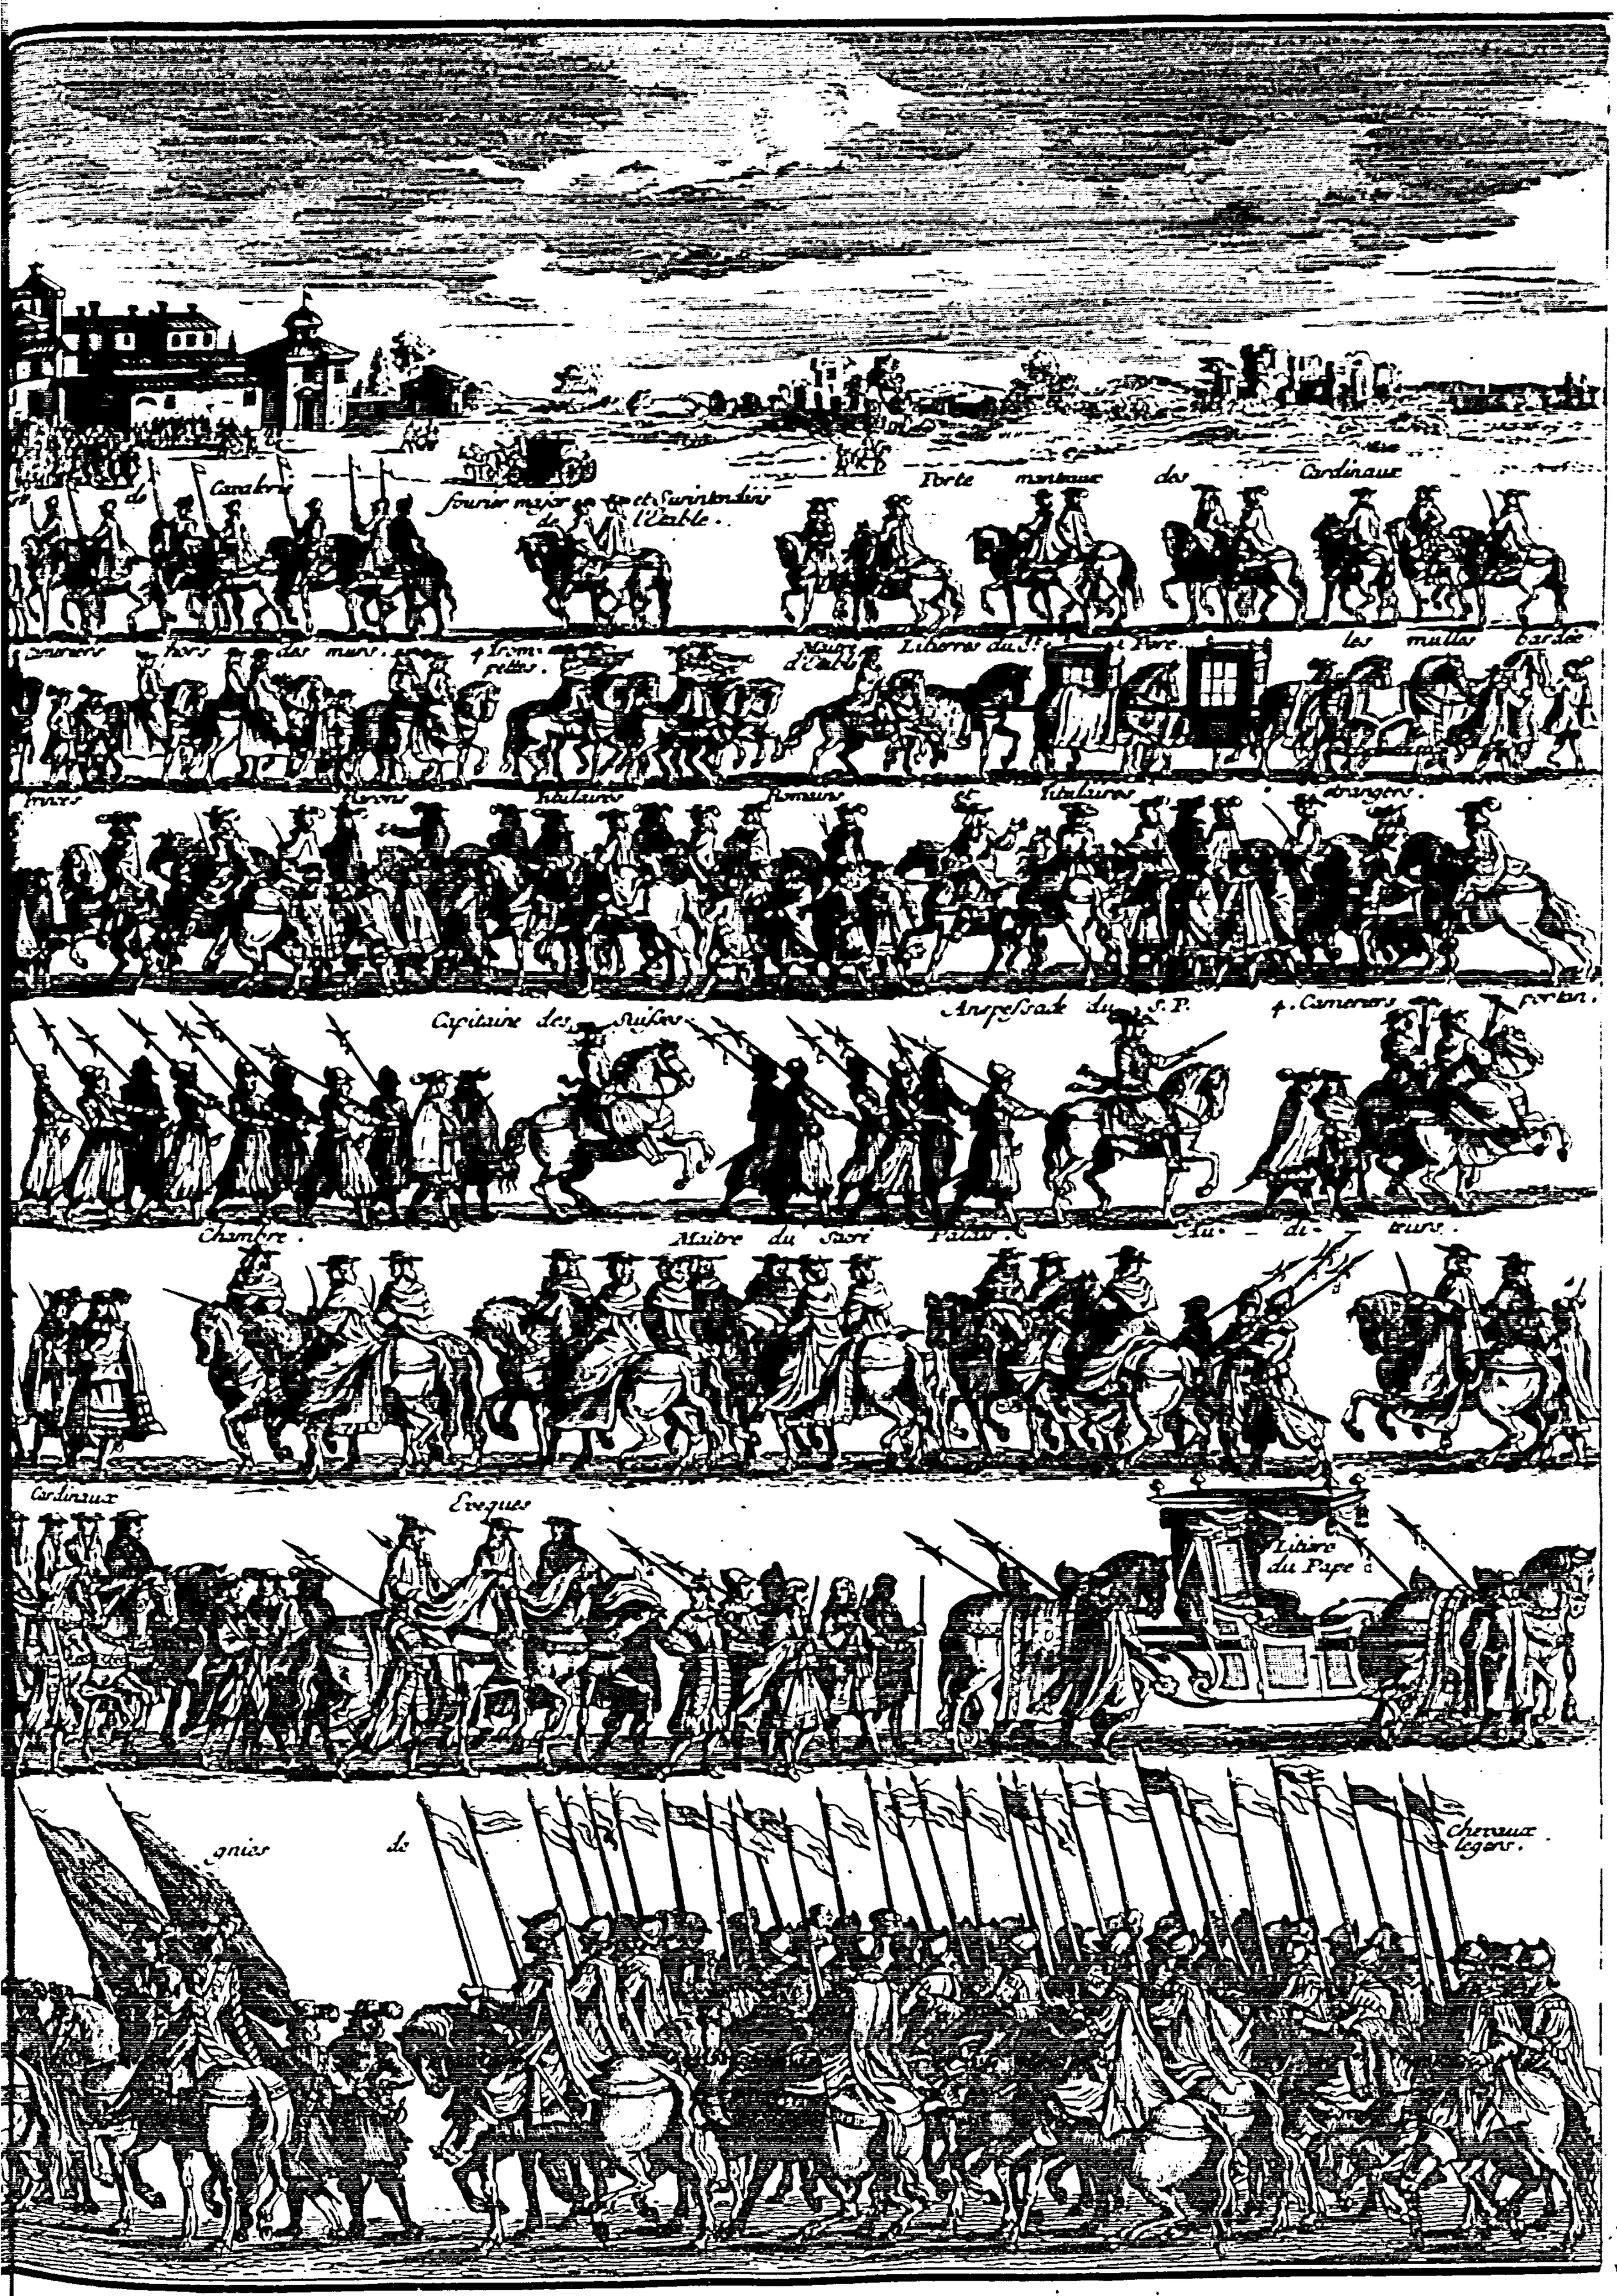
Chapelains du commun et Sartie de la famille du Pape

Abreviateurs du grand Parquet.

Clercs de la

Patriarches, Archeveques, Evques Protonotaires Apostoliques, Auditeurs de la Chambre Thresoriers &c. ques non assistans. Referendaires.

Cardinaux Diacres. Cardinaux Prestres.



Deux Libires de Sa Saintelé

6 Trompettes.

Deux

Compe:

Le PAPE va en CEREMONIE prendre POSSESION

Du PONTIFICAT dans l'Eglise de St JEAN de LATRAN

the higheſt rank, though [r] Princes or children to Kings, ſtill muſt ſerve Chriſt's vicar at table. The vicar came in dreſſed in all his pontifical ornaments, between two Cardinal-deacons, followed by his ſacred college, &c. all in their robes of ceremony. Before his Holineſs ſat down to table he waſhed his hands in ſtate. His Imperial Majeſty preſented him the baſon, the firſt Cardinal-biſhop poured him out water; [s] two Cardinal-deacons gave him the napkin. The other Cardinals, the prieſts, the nobility, &c. were on their knees bareheaded during this ceremony. As for the Emperor, he waſhed his hands with much leſs ſtate. Then the firſt Cardinal waſhed, and after him the King of the Romans, if he was there; and though all the crowned heads in Chriſtendom had been preſent, [t] they would have had no other privilege on this occaſion, than that of being mixed and confounded with the ſacred college; provided always that his eminence was to go before his Majeſty. The Emperor ſerved at table in the quality of carver, and gave the holy Father his firſt plate, and even went for that plate out of the hall. We omit ſome other particulars.

The Pope's taking Possession.

AS ſoon as the Pope has been crowned, he is to take poſſeſſion of his ſovereignty at the church of St. John de Lateran, his cathedral, and [w] capital of all the churches which hold under the Pope's juriſdiction throughout all Chriſtendom. This ceremony is performed ſome days after the coronation in the moſt ſolemn and pompous manner imaginable. It [x] appears by the Roman ceremonial, that it formerly was on the very coronation day. This is the order of the march, which generally begins at St. Peter's church.

" [y] Twelve [z] trumpets and twelve light horſe begin the march by ſix ranks, each of " four horſe, followed by the cloakbearers of the Cardinals, who, each ſends his own, " well mounted, with ſcarlet embroidered portmanteaux. After them come the mace-" bearers of the ſame Cardinals on horſe-back too, with ſilver maces, on which are the " arms of their eminences.

" The gentlemen and almoners of the Cardinals, Ambaſſadors, and Princes, with [a] ſe-" veral gentlemen and Roman barons immediately following --- ſeveral anſpeſſades pran-" cing about with their naked ſwords out of the ranks, to regulate the march. Then " four of the Pope's querrys (who, according to the Roman Ceremonial do not walk till " after the taylor, barber, &c.) with large red copes; and then his taylor and two cloak-" bearers in the ſame dreſs, with [b] two velvet portmanteaux embroidered with gold. " The Pope's grooms of the ſtable in looſe coats of red ſerge come after, leading [c] the " white jennets which the kingdom of Naples is obliged to ſend yearly to his Holineſs (as " a tribute or homage from the ſovereign of that kingdom; for the Pope pretends that " it holds of the pontifical ſee). Theſe jennets have ſilk houſings with gold fringes and " leaves of plate ſilver half raiſed. After them come ſeveral mules capariſoned and " barbed

[r] Etiam ſi ſint fratres aut filii Regum, Ibid.

[s] Diaconi (ſerviunt) mantile hinc inde tenendo, Ibid.

[t] Si plures Reges, mixti erunt cum primis Cardinalibus, primò Cardinalis, deinde Rex ſucceſſivè, Ibid.

[w] An inſcription over the great gate of this church juſtifies what we have here advanced. Vide Tableau de la Cour de Rome. " The Kings of France are protectors of this firſt church of the univerſe, and to this end " their arms are fixed over the principal gate, and the canons who belong to it ----- commemorate it, &c. Nodot. Memoirs de Rome.

[x] Vide Cerem. Eccl. Rom. L. I.

[y] Tableau de la Cour de Rome.

[z] The treatiſe entitled, Relazione della Corte di Roma e de' Riti da oſſervarſi in eſſa, &c. from whence the author of the Tableau de la Cour de Rome has taken almoſt every thing he has ſaid concerning this Court, mentions but one trumpet; it is proper to inform the reader that the French author whom we follow, has drawn up the deſcription he has given of this proceſſion, upon that of the Italian author, who gives the particular deſcription of Innocent X.'s taking poſſeſſion.

[a] Theſe ſometimes are glad to mix among the gentlemen and almoners of the Cardinals to avoid diſputes about precedency. Vide the treatiſe entitled, Il maeſtro di Camera in the Relazione, &c. before cited.

[b] The pontifical habilliments of his Holineſs are packed up in theſe two portmanteaux. Vide Cerem. Eccl. Rom. L. I. After the taylors comes the barber, &c. according to the Roman Ceremonial, and the Maeſtro.

[c] The Maeſtro di Camera ſays twenty, the Roman Ceremonial twelve, ſo that the number is not fixed.

" barbed with red velvet and gold fringe, which ſeveral of the Pope's domeſtics lead by " the bridle.

" [d] Three litters follow covered with red velvet, or ſcarlet cloth embroidered with " gold. Two officers on horſe-back go before the litters, and the Pope's maſter of the " horſe on horſe-back with his ſtaff-bearers on foot cloſe this part of the proceſſion.

" [e] The Roman nobility and the titulars walk next, without any order to avoid pre-" cedency, mounted on fine horſes, whoſe manes are adorned with a great quantity of " ribband of ſeveral colours. All this nobility have their ſtaff-bearers on foot.

" Five of the Pope's mace-bearers come after in long full gowns of violet coloured cloth,
" laced with black velvet, wearing their maces and collars of mail. Fourteen drums follow
" on foot in red ſatin flowered with gold, with plumes of feathers in their hats, each of " them bearing an enſign of the fourteen quarters or diſtricts of Rome. Theſe are followed " by a choir of the Pope's trumpets, dreſſed in red laced with gold. After this walk
" the apoſtolical gentlemen of the bedchamber, and the pages of the chamber without
" the walls dreſſed in red; the commiſſary and fiſcal of the apoſtolic chamber in violet;
" the conſiſtorial advocates in black; the chaplains of the lower part of the Pope's fa" mily in red: the pages of the privy chamber and of honour, and the four participants,
" who are the laſt of this diviſion, clothed in violet, carrying the Pope's four crimſon
" hats [f].

" After them come forty officers of the Roman people upon ſtately horſes, viz. the " judges, the maſters juſticiary, ſecretaries, notaries, comptrollors, fiſcal, &c. in long
" ſenatorial robes and hats of black velvet; the houſings of their horſes being of the " ſame.

" The regiſters of the ſupreme Court, the clerks of the chamber, auditors of the rota,
" maſter of the ſacred palace, walk on the dean of the rota's left-hand, followed by
" fourteen Marſhals of the Roman people, in veſts of white ſatin, and waiſtcoats of violet
" ſatin with caps of black velvet. The fourteen captains of the reſpective quarters or
" diſtricts come next in long robes of crimſon velvet lined with ſilver tiſſue, with white
" ſatin breeches laced with gold, and black velvet caps, adorned with jewels.

" [g] The governor of Rome and the Roman conſervators come after, leaving a place
" void on the governor's left-hand for a Roman ſenator, who does not appear in the " cavalcade, to avoid yielding the precedency which the governor conteſts with him.
" The Princes of the pontifical throne, the Pope's relations, and the ambaſſadors of " crowned heads march with all their trains according to the rank agreable to their cha" racters, and two of the Pope's maſters of the ceremonies come after, before the apo-
" ſtolical ſub-deacon, [h] who carries [i] the tripple croſs turned back towards the Pope.
" The ſub-deacon, who thus carries the croſs, is between two officers, who carry red " wands [k].

" Then

[d] The Roman Ceremonial makes a led horſe go before theſe jennets, twelve running footmen (curſores Papæ) dreſſed in red, walking two and two, each with red colours in their hands; they are followed by the enſign of the quarters of Rome (Vexilliferi Capitum Regionum) likewiſe dreſſed in red, after whom comes the enſign of the Roman people, that of the teutonic order, of the Pope, of the church, and laſtly that of St. John of Jeruſalem.

[e] The Maeſtro di Camera makes the pages of the chamber extra muros walk before the titular nobility, anſwerable to the cut here inſerted, &c. after whom he places the pages of the chamber, who carry the Pope's four hats; but the Roman Ceremonial places theſe latter after the (12.) jennets. In the Maeſtro di Camera the regiſters, &c. walk after them, who carry the four hats.

[f] They are carried on high poles covered with red velvet, both according to the Maeſtro, &c. and the Roman Ceremonial.

[g] This is different in the Relazione della Corte, &c.

[h] Veſtito con mantellone e Cappello largo, with the rochet, and a hat with very broad brims.

[i] The triple croſs is the ſign of the Pope's ſpiritual juriſdiction over the whole world. Pope Sylveſter I. is ſaid to have been the firſt who had it ſolemnly carried in public; but the cuſtom was laid aſide till Leo IV. who revived it. The Cardinal-deacon who proclaims the Pope's election to the people, at the ſame time ſhews them the croſs.

[k] After the ſub-deacon, and thoſe who attend him, the Roman Ceremonial places twelve perſons a foot dreſſed in red, who carry twelve lighted tapers before the holy Sacrament. The two in red on horſeback march immediately after the holy Sacrament, each with a ſilver lantern in his hand. The holy Sacrament follows immediately after on a white jennet, with a bell hung to him. Fourteen Roman citizens carry the canopy by turns. The ſexton follows on horſeback with a white wand in his hand, &c. This cavalcade ſhall be ſpoken of, when we come to deſcribe the manner of carrying the holy Sacrament when his Holineſs is on a journey.

" Then follows the Pope in [l] a litter in the midſt of fifty young Roman gentlemen " clothed in white ſatin, and the ſtaff-bearers and running footmen of the Pope ſurround " the litter, together with the gentlemen of the bedchamber. " The captain of the " Swiſs guards marches at the head of two files of horſe who guard the Pope. The lit- " ter in which his Holineſs is carried is of red velvet embroidered and fringed with gold; " and he himſelf is dreſſed in a caſſoc of white ſatin, with the rochet ſtole and mozzette " of red velvet, if it be winter, or of red ſatin if it be ſummer, with a calot of the ſame " under his red hat.

" The maſter of the chamber to the Pope, his cup-bearer, ſecretary and phyſicians " alſo walk near the litter, and before the Swiſs guards. The Cardinals follow on horſe- " back two and two in the middle of ſome halbardiers immediately after the Pope's " guard. After their eminences, follow [m] the patriarchs, archbiſhops, biſhops, apoſtolical " prothonotaries, auditors, treaſurers of the apoſtolic chamber, and referendary prelates " of both Seals. Laſtly, After the relays, and trumpets of the Pope, the proceſſion cloſes " with two companies of light horſe, with their officers before them ſplendidly dreſſed, " the officers in coats of ſcarlet with very narrow hanging ſleeves of yellow and red " velvet; which makes a beautiful ſhew as they march with their lances reſted.

" The way they take is along the Borgo of St. Peter, to the bridge of St. Angelo, from " thence ----- to St. Andrè della Valle ----- and ſo to the capitol, where the Ro- " man people erect a triumphal arch for the Pope; and the ſenator preſents him the keys " in Campo, and with a ſceptre in his hand makes an oration to the new Pontiff, which " he ſtops to hear. From thence the cavalcade proceeds to Campo Vaccbino, where the " Duke of Parma erects another arch before his palace. They then croſs the Colliſeum, " where the Jews likewiſe have another arch erected, under which they preſent the Pope " Moſes's pentateuch [n] in Hebrew. (What they ſay conſiſts in an exhortation to him to reve- rence the law of Moſes, and to implore the holy Father's protection, who ſhews them the profound reſpect he has for this divine law, at the ſame time that he rejects their falſe ex- planations of it.) " After which, the Jews retire without anſwering one word, and the " cavalcade leaving the Colliſæum, goes on through ſtreets hung with tapeſtry, and " crouded with infinite numbers of people, directly to St. John de Lateran.

[o] The differences we have obſerved in the deſcription of this ceremony, ſhew that it is not always performed the ſame way. [p] The clergy of St. John de Lateran come out to meet this ſolemn proceſſion, in the manner as repreſented in the figure; and we are now to ſee his Holineſs's reception into the cathedral.

[l] He is not always in a litter. According to the Roman Ceremonial he is ſometimes mounted on a white jennet, and eight gentlemen carry the canopy over him. A King, nay the Emperor (were he to be at the ceremony) would be obliged to hold his Holineſs's ſtirrup, and lead the horſe by the bridle. Vide Cerem. L. 1. When the Pope goes in a chair, and the Emperor is at Rome, he muſt be one of the chairmen; but not above a moment, he is ſoon relieved. The eight noblemen, who ſupport the canopy, are likewiſe relieved by eight Roman citizens as far as St. John de Lateran.

[m] Con mantellone & cappello grande, Ibid.

[n] For the origin of this cuſtom, See p. 175.

[o] The figure repreſents Pope Clement XI.'s taking poſſeſſion, and is graved after the Roman original.

[p] During the proceſſion, money is now and then thrown among the people, to keep off the croud, ad preſſuram dimovendam, ſays the Roman Ceremonial.

The CEREMONIES practised at the RECEPTION of the POPE into the CHURCH of St. JOHN DE LATERAN.

"[q] THE Pope being come to the great gate of St. John de Lateran gets out of his "litter, (or dismounts if on horseback) [r] the Cardinal-arch-priest presents him "the cross [s] to kiss, then his Holiness goes up to the throne prepared under the "same portico, where his pontifical robes and mitre are put on, whilst he is on this "throne the canons of St. John de Lateran come and kiss his feet, the Cardinal-arch-priest "makes him a speech in the name of the chapter, and presents him the keys of the "church; one of which is gold the other silver [t] in a silver gilt bason with flowers in it.

"As soon as that ceremony is over, the Cardinals put on their sacred ornaments, and the "Pope walks towards the great gate of the basilica, where the Cardinal-arch-priest gives "him

[q] Tableau de la Cour de Rome.

[r] Prior canonicorum Lateranensium, says the Roman Ceremonial, effert crucem osculandam pontifici, quam diaconus Cardinalis accipit & ad os pontificis, cui priùs tiaram extraxit, ponit. Osculatâ cruce pontifici ponitur mitra, & regnum datur in manibus auditoris. Ipse verò pontifex a priore & canonicis prædictis ducitur ad marmoream sedem, ante portam principalem a sinistrâ stantem, quæ stercoraria appellatur, & ibi eum sedere faciunt, qui ità tamen sedet, ut magis jacere videatur; ad quem mox accedentes Cardinales elevant eum honorificè, dicentes; suscitat de pulvere egenum, & de stercore erigit pauperem, ut sedeat cum principibus & solium gloriæ teneat. Surgens pontifex accipit de gremio camerarii sibi assistentis quantum pugno potest complecti pecuniarum, ubi tamen nihil prorsus sit argenti aut auri, & spargit inter populum dicens, Argentum & aurum non est mihi, quod autem habeo hoc tibi do --------- præcedentibus canonicis, & cantantibus Te Deum laudamus. Pontifex cum Cardinalibus intrat ecclesiam, & ante altare mijus supra faldistorium procumbens sine mitrâ aliquantulum orat. Deinde surgens benedicit populo, dicens sit nomen Domini benedictum, &c. Inde cum mitrâ ascendens ad sedem eminentiem, sedens recipit ad osculum pedis canonicos Lateranenses. Deinde ---- ascendit ad Palatium Lateranum per portam quæ est in ecclesiâ, & cum perventum fuerit in ---- aulâ concilii, sedet pontifex in sede sibi paratâ apud tabulam lapideam in capite aulæ quæ dicitur mensura Christi, &c. ------ Finitis laudibus Papa procedit ad capellam sancti Sylvestri. Ibi ante portam capellæ sunt duæ sedes porphyreticæ perforatæ --- sedet pontifex super primam --- Prior ecclesiæ accedit & genuflexus dat pontifici ferulam in manus, signum correctionis & reginimis, & claves ipsius basilicæ ac palatii, in signum potestatis claudendi & aperiendi, ligandi atque solvendi. Surgit deinde Papa ----- & sedet in alterâ sede porphyreticâ ad aliam partem, & ibi restituit eidem priori ferulam & claves, & ab eodem præcingitur, super planetam sedens, cum cingulo quodam sericeo rubro, cum bursâ etiam sericeâ & rubrâ, in quâ sint duodecim lapides pretiosi cum musco. Tum pontifex præcinctus & sedens, e gremio camerarii capit denarios argenteos ----- & super populum spargens dicit, dispersit, dedit pauperibus: justitia ejus manet in sæculum sæculi ----- ducitur deinde pontifex ad sancta sanctorum, ubi super faldistorium sine mitrâ genuflexus orat. Inde surgens cum mitrâ revertitur ad capellam sancti Sylvestri. Ibi sedet super sedem sibi paratam, tum deponit mitram, chirothecas, pallium, planetam, & assumit pluviale & mitram simplicem, & sedens dat presbyterium hoc modo: Cardinalibus duos aureos & duos grossos argenteos. Veniunt Cardinales & profundè caput inclinant ante pontificem, porriguntque & mitram apertam, in quâ pontifex immittit pecuniam. Illi acceptâ pecuniâ manum pontificis osculantur ---- Alii prælati genuflectunt ante pontificem & accipiunt in mitrâ unum aureum & unum grossum, & osculantur dextrum genu Papæ. Alii verò prælati & officiales accipiunt in manu tantundem, & osculantur pedem, &c. This extract of the Ceremonial contains several particulars, which perhaps are abolished or altered; since the author of the Relation of the Court of Rome and its ceremonies, already cited, makes no mention of them. The most remarkable we shall here translate just as the Latin ceremonial describes them. The first canon (arch-priest) of St. John de Lateran presents his Holiness the cross to kiss. The Cardinal-deacon takes and puts it to the Pope's mouth, taking off his tiara; and after the cross is kissed puts it on again. The Regne (the papal crown) is put into the auditor's hands. Then the Pope is conducted to the gate on the left-hand, which the Ceremonial calls the Stercorary, where he is seated so as to be half lying along; whereupon some of the Cardinals go up to him, and take him up saying, he taketh the indigent out of the dust, and raises the poor from off the dunghill, to seat him amongst Princes, and place him upon the throne of glory. The Pope, that poor and indigent person, rising throws a handful of money among the people, but it is neither gold nor silver; indeed at the same time he does so, he says; silver and gold I have none, but such as I have I give unto you. We dare not venture to say these words are luckily applied, for it might very reasonably be denied. After this, his Holiness goes into the church with the canons before him, and together with the Cardinals, blesses the people, and admits the canons to kiss his feet; and then is carried to the place of St. John de Lateran. He enters the Council-hall, where laudes, &c. are sung. From thence he passes on to St. Sylvester's chapel, at the gate of which are two hollow seats, whereon the holy Father seats himself. As soon as he is set down on the first, the keys and the ferula, the signs of his authority and magisterial corrections, are represented to him; and when he is on the other, he gives them back to the first canon or arch-priest (prior) who puts him on a silk girdle, to which is fastned a purse with twelve precious stones and musk in it (the former to be sure to represent the twelve Apostles.) The chamberlain who performs this sacred office, gives him a few pieces of silver which he throws among the people, saying, he hath destributed to the poor, his justice shall endure for ever. After this, he returns to St. Sylvester's, and from thence goes on and says a prayer in the Holy of Holies. He then returns to St. Sylvester's, where he gives medals and other pieces of gold and silver to the Cardinals, prelates, and other ecclesiastics of lower rank, who all in their order do homage to his Holiness.

[s] The Pope is on his knees, stando nostro signore in ginochione. Vide Relaz. della Corte, &c.

[t] The gold key shews the power of absolving, the silver of excommunicating. Casal. de Veter. Christ. rit. His reason is, that silver is inferior to gold. A grave and learned reason!

" him a ſprinkler, with which he takes holy water and bleſſes the people: " then the " ſame Cardinal thrice incenſes the Pope. When this is done, he goes into his chair, " and his ſtaff-bearers carry him along the nave, under a canopy ſupported by the canons " of St. John de Lateran, to the high altar where he prays. He is afterwards carried " into the choir to a throne, where the Cardinals come and do homage: then the two " Cardinal-deacons put on and take off the mitre whilſt he gives the benediction, as the " ceremonial preſcribes; when this is over, he is carried into the palace of St. John de " Lateran, where ſeveral anthems are ſung, at the concluſion of which the Cardinal- " prieſt ſays a few prayers. The tiara is then again ſet upon the Pope's head, and " he is carried into an open place over the porch of the baſilica of St. John, from whence " he twice bleſſes the people.

The POPE'S ROBES of CEREMONY.

AS [w] ſoon as a Pope is elected, he has put on him a caſſoc of white wool, ſhoes of red cloth, on which is embroidered a gold croſs, the Mozzette or camail of red velvet, the red ſilk girdle with gold claſps, the rochet, and red berrette: then he has given him [x] the amict, the white linen albe tied with a red ſilk ſtring, and a ſtole ſet with pearls. This laſt, if he be a prieſt or biſhop, is put on his neck; but if he be only a deacon, he muſt wear it on his left ſhoulder; if a ſub-deacon only, it is not put on at all.

[y] If the new pontif be not in orders, they muſt be conferred on him; if he be a deacon only, and would be ordained prieſt, he muſt firſt have prieſt's orders conferred on him, and then be conſecrated biſhop. " [z] Theſe ceremonies are performed in Sixtus's cha- " pel by the Cardinal-deacon, who is always biſhop of Oſtia, to whom the right of con- " ſecrating the Pope has been long granted.

The holy Father being at home in his private clothes [a] wears a white ſilk caſſoc, a rochet of fine linen, a camail of red velvet, or of carnation ſatin. In the winter his Holineſs wears a fur cap, in ſummer a ſatin one; during Lent, Advent, and all faſt days a caſſoc of white wool, with a camail of red cloth; but from Eaſter-Eve to the following Saturday he wears a white damaſk camail.

His pontifical robes are of two ſorts. When he celebrates maſs, he, beſides the caſſoc, wears the rochet, the amict, the albe of white linen, the ſtole, the maniple, the dalmatica, the chaſuble, the mitre and gloves; all which are of a ſuitable magnificence to the dignity of the vicar of Chriſt, and the ſucceſſor of St. Peter: but the colour of them is altered according to the circumſtance of time, and depends upon the ſolemnity of the feſtival. His Holineſs celebrates Whitſontide and all feſtivals of martyrs in red [b]; Eaſter and all feſtivals of virgins in white; Lent, Advent, and all eves whereon faſting is preſcribed, in violet; Eaſter-Eve, and all maſſes for the dead in black. On the night of Chriſtmas he wears a capuche and cowl of black velvet; which he likewiſe wears all the laſt week of Lent, and during that time puts on no mitre, and only wears a red cloth mantle. When the holy Father has on the tiara, he wears a white calot; and at home the red hat.

The

[a] And ſprinkles himſelf too, Ibid.

[w] Relaz. &c. Tableau de la Cour de Rome. Cerem. Eccl. Rom. before cited.

[x] Cerem. Eccl. Rom. L. I. [y] Id. Ibid. [z] Tableau de la Cour de Rome.

[a] Relazione della Corte di Roma, &c. di Lunadoro.

[b] By the red is typified the tongues of fire mentioned when the Holy Ghoſt deſcended upon the Apoſtles, and the blood of the martyrs of CHRIST: by the white, the joy which our Lord's reſurrection muſt cauſe in the hearts of the faithful, and the chaſtity of thoſe virgins whoſe feaſt is kept; by the violet, the pale aſh colour of ſuch as obſerve the faſts, vigils, and abſtinences of Lent as the church preſcribes; by black, the mourning which the death of CHRIST muſt cauſe in the Chriſtian's heart, &c. It is of conſequence not to be ignorant of things, which, being neglected, make a great chaſm in the piety of ſome zealots.

The holy Father [c] appears at all conſiſtories and congregations in his ordinary dreſs: but with the cowl and mitre at the firſt after his election. His Holineſs's great affair there is to thank the ſacred college.

[d] When the Pope does not wear the mitre or tiara, he walks between the two moſt ancient Cardinals, the reſt follow two and two, the biſhops firſt, then the prieſts, and the deacons laſt. This is quite contrary to the order obſerved, when the Pope has on the tiara or mitre, for then the Cardinals go two by two before the holy Father; the deacons firſt, the prieſts next, and the biſhops laſt.

The ORDER and CEREMONIES of the POPE'S Holding a CONSISTORY, according to the Roman Ceremonial for the Year 1516.

WHAT we are going to entertain the reader with upon this head [e] is taken from the Roman Ceremonial. Conſiſtories are held by the Pope for the reception of Princes or their ambaſſadors; for the canoniſation of any ſaint; for treating of any important affair, either civil or eccleſiaſtical; for the promotion of Cardinals, &c. When there is to be a conſiſtory, the Pope's throne is erected in the great hall of the apoſtolic palace, and this throne is almoſt ſquare, and about twelve palms [f] wide, to which he goes up by three ſteps. The Pope ſits down on a ſeat adorned with cloth of gold, or ſomething of that kind, under a canopy of the [g] ſame, each anſwerable to the other in magnificence. The foot of the throne [h] is covered with red cloth. The Cardinal-biſhops and prieſts ſit on the right, [i] below the throne; the deacons on the left, but ſo as to have their faces towards the Pope. Between the ſeats of the Cardinal-biſhops and prieſts, and thoſe of the deacons there is a pretty large [k] ſpace left for room to paſs and repaſs.

When the Pope holds a public conſiſtory, he walks with the mitre, amict, albe, ſtole, and (red) chaſuble on, the croſs and Cardinals going before. The proceſſion being come to the conſiſtory chamber, the Pope takes his place, and then the Cardinals, having firſt made a bow to the holy Father. The archbiſhops, biſhops, prothonotaries, and other prelates ſit on the ſteps of the throne: [l] on the loweſt ſtep, the ſub-deacons, auditors, clerks of the chamber, and acolytes with their woollen cowls; [m] and the eccleſiaſtical officers of the Pope's court [n], on the ground between the Cardinal-ſeats. The pages of the chamber, and ſecretaries likewiſe ſit on the ground, between the prelates and eccleſiaſtical officers. The nephews of the reigning Pope, if he has any, and ſome other Roman Princes are on each ſide the throne, and are therefore called Princes of the throne. Ambaſſadors and other foreign miniſters are placed to the right of the throne between the ſteps and the wall, which is the place of the greateſt quality. The other gentlemen are on the left among the Pope's domeſtic [o] officers. The conſiſtorial advocates are behind the Cardinal-deacons, and the proctors of Princes with the fiſcal proctor behind the Cardinal-biſhops; this laſt officer takes place of the other proctors. The entrance of the paſſage leading to the throne is taken up by the Pope's guard. The maſter of the Sacro Hoſpitio ſtands between the guard and the end of the row of Cardinal-prieſts. The clerks of the ceremonies are at the top of that of the deacons, to be the nearer in order to execute the Pope's orders. When his Holineſs holds a conſiſtory for judicial cauſes, the advocate, who has any thing to move, ſtands behind the Cardinal-prieſts, over againſt the [c] Tableau de la Cour de Rome.

[d] Id. Ibid.
[e] Cerem. Eccl. Rom. L. I. Sect. 9. cap. i.
[f] The palm is an Ital. meaſure of eight inches, or thereabouts.
[g] Supra caput pendebit aureus pannus, Ibid.
[h] Planum totum ------ coopertum erit panno coccineo, Ibid.
[i] A dextra infra ſolium, Ibid.
[k] Spatium decem palmorum aut duodecim.
[l] Et eum eis in ultimo (gradu) Ibid.
[m] Super terram inter ſedilia Cardinalium.
[n] Curiales togati, Ibid.
[o] Familiares.

the Pope; and when he has opened his cauſe, throws [p] his petition to the eccleſiaſtical officers, who take and give it to the vice-chancellor. Laſtly, When the conſiſtory is over, the two eldeſt Cardinal-deacons advance to ſupport the Pope, and then they all go back in the ſame order as they came.

Private conſiſtories have fewer ceremonies, and are held in ſome by-room of the ſacred palace. The pontifical ſeat has no ſteps, only a ſort of [q] footſtool or bench without an eſtrade, and another ſmaller which ſerves to go up to the biggeſt. The Cardinal-biſhops and prieſts are ſeated each [r] according to his rank, ſo that the eldeſt Cardinal is next the Pope on the right, as well as the eldeſt Cardinal-deacon next him on his left. Before the rows there are [s] benches on which their eminences ſet their feet, and the aſſembly is ſo placed that the laſt Cardinal-deacon is next the laſt Cardinal-prieſt, who holds a bell to call ſuch as are to receive any orders. The Pope's ſeat is covered with red cloth; but thoſe of the Cardinals are only painted in that colour with the Pope's arms. The ſpace between his Holineſs and their eminences is covered with a carpet. When this eccleſiaſtical ſenate has any ſtate or church affairs under deliberation, [t] every body goes out except the Cardinals, and when they come to voting, [u] each gives his own ſtanding.

This is the manner of calling a private conſiſtory. Every Sunday two meſſengers in violet gowns with a black rod or wand in their hands go to the apoſtolic palace at the time of prayers. They ſtand at the gate till his Holineſs has ended his devotions, and when he comes out of chapel, they make him a compliment kneeling, to this effect; holy Father, may you long enjoy life and health; is there to be a conſiſtory to morrow? To which the Pope anſwers, yes; and thereupon the meſſengers add, ad multos annos. From thence they go round to the houſes of the Cardinals, in the ſame manner make them a compliment kneeling, and inform them there is to be a conſiſtory. 'Till the fifteenth century conſiſtories were called by the ſound of a bell therefore called conſiſtorial; and the meſſengers, having informed the ſacred college, ſummon a conſiſtory by fixing up a paper at the door of the apoſtolic chancery. But they are now forbidden by a decree of the congregation of rites of the 16. Feb. 1630. to ſummon the Cardinals to any conſiſtories, chapels, congregations, &c. otherwiſe than by going home to them.

Beſides public and private conſiſtories, there is one called half-private. In the private, biſhopricks are propoſed, the merits of any candidate for them are examined into, and allowed, the Pallium is granted, and the mouths of Cardinals ſhut and opened, &c. and theſe are held on a Monday once every fifteen days. The half-private is generally held for affairs that properly relate to the eccleſiaſtical ſtate. Such as diſputes with any foreign power. On theſe occaſions all ſuch as are concerned in the affairs under debate are the only perſons admitted to ſpeak in the conſiſtory (either by themſelves, or agents.) The canoniſation of ſaints likewiſe are here conſidered.

[w] The Pope appears in private conſiſtories in a white ſilk caſſoc, rochet, mozzette or camail, ſtole, red velvet cap laced with ſilver, or of carnation ſatin laced in the ſame manner, if it be in ſummer; and the red cloth ſhoes already deſcribed.

After the door of the conſiſtory is locked, and their eminences have had audience of the holy Father, their [x] cowls muſt be ſpread all over their rochet, in ſuch a manner as to be entirely covered by it. The Cardinal that comes in, after the conſiſtory is ſet, [y] makes a low bow to the Pope in the middle of the hall where they are ſitting, and then with a nod

[p] Cedulam ſuæ ſupplicationis inter ſedentes in terram curiales projicit, Ibid.
[q] Scabellum habet magnum, ſuper quod pontifex tenet pedes, & aliud parvum, per quod ad majus aſcenditur, Ibid.
[r] A dextra & a fronte ſedent epiſcopi & presbyteri, &c.
[s] Scabella pro pedibus Cardinalium ante pontificem locantur, &c.
[t] This is called the Extra omnes. The door is then ſhut, and none come in or go out till the conſiſtory is up. The laſt Cardinal-deap rings the Extra omnes with his little bell.
[u] They muſt then be ſtanding and bareheaded, and have nothing in their hands.
[w] Relazione della Corte di Roma di Lunadoro.
[x] Devono diſtender le Cappe ſopra a' Rochetti, in modo che rimanghino intieramente coperti, Id.
[y] Id. Ibid.

a nod ſalutes all the Cardinals preſent, beginning from the right. The Cardinals ſtand during this ſalutation.

We muſt not here omit the reaſon given by a famous [z] doctor of the church cited by father Bonanni to juſtify the magnificence in dreſs and ornaments, which diſtinguiſh the vicar of Jeſus Chriſt from the reſt of mankind; and it is this, that as God made himſelf known to them by the incarnation; ſo men in the ſame manner make themſelves known to each other by their dreſs. Whence it is a neceſſary conſequence, that the ſovereign Pontif ought to dreſs in a particular manner, and his dreſs be pompous and ſplendid; and that the people be thoroughly convinced by the ſplendor of thoſe worldly ornaments, that he who wears them is the real Prince of the church, and the ſucceſſor of St. Peter: for as father [a] Bonanni very juſtly obſerves after St. Paul, Man as a creature underſtands not the things which are of the Spirit of God, but he comes to the knowledge of inviſible by viſible things. Beſides we are perſuaded that if the Pope be conſidered as [b] King of Kings, Lord of Lords, and only Prince of Chriſtians; if we do but obſerve that his [c] authority is of a greater extent than that of the moſt powerful Emperors, and the vaſt influence his deciſions have over the faithful; it will not be doubted but that the holy Father ought to be diſtinguiſhed from the populace as the greateſt Monarchs are. A man muſt be a Janſeniſt, or at leaſt a Calviniſt not to agree as to this principle.

The DIVINE SERVICE or CANONICAL HOURS.

BEFORE we enter into a deſcription of the Pope's chapel, and of the ceremonies of the maſs, we muſt give the reader ſome account of the divine ſervice.

This ſervice [d] conſiſts of prayers and holy leſſons [e] appointed by the church, to be every day read by the clergy at certain hours. This ſervice has been named canonical hours, it having been ordained by the canons of the church, which has not only preſcribed the hours in which they are to be ſaid, but likewiſe all the circumſtances relating to them. And yet they are not entirely the ſame in all churches. This office is called the Breviary, a modern word which ſome think was not introduced till after the office was abridged; for it was formerly much longer.

The clergy being appointed for the edification of Chriſtians, their firſt obligation is to ſtick cloſe to the repetition of their breviary, that is, to pray to God for the church, devoutly to ſing the divine offices, to keep up and revive a taſte for piety in the Chriſtian ſoul, and to adminiſter ghoſtly comfort to their reſpective flocks. If they apply themſelves to theſe holy duties, they muſt of courſe renounce all ſtate intrigues, and politics, which turn the man of God into a looſe and tricking courtier. Nor does the breviary tally better with that agreeable gallantry, which makes the eccleſiaſtical poſſeſſor of it often wiſhed for and courted to parties of pleaſure, and makes him an aſſiduous humble ſervant of the ladies, and fixes them to him.

The office is to be ſaid ſtanding purſuant to the ancient rule of the church: the knee is bent only on days of penance. Writers upon church ceremonies ſay, [f] that genu-fluxion

[z] Card. Bellarm. [a] Hierarch. Eccl. ch. cxvii. [b] Ladiſlaus King of Hungary thus ſtiled Pope Nicholas V.

[c] Plus terrarum lex Romanorum pontificum, quam Imperatorum obtinuit, S. Greg. L. II. Epiſt. 75. F. Bonanni perfectly well applies the following verſes of Rutilius to his Holineſs.

Omnia perpetuos quæ ſervant ſidera motus.
Nullum viderunt pulchrius Imperium.

[d] Alet's Ritual.

[e] It is pretended there are inſtances of canonical hours to be found in the Scripture: the Matins in Pſal. cxviii. or according to the Hebrew, cxix. Primes in Pſal. xcii. Tierce in Acts ch. ii. Sextes in ch. x. of the ſame book, and Nones in the iii. ch. Veſpers in our Lord's laſt ſupper; but they moſt aſſuredly owe their riſe to Judaiſm. The Heathens had likewiſe their Matins; and the Egyptians ſaluted their Gods every morning. They had their Primes, Seconds, and Tierces; which we call Prime, Tierce, Sexte, &c. Du Choul upon the religion of the ancients.

[f] Alet's Ritual.

ſtuxion is a ſign of ſorrow and dejection of mind; but ſtanding that of joy and of raiſing the mind to God. This poſture too is a type of the reſurrection, the object of Chriſtian faith.

[g] The office is compoſed of ſeven hours, reckoning Matins and Lauds as one, but eight if they are divided. In the firſt ages of the church it conſiſted but of ſix parts, which were for the day, Tierces, Sextes, and Nones; and for night, the prayers for night, midnight and the morning. At preſent they are divided into ſeven or eight, as we juſt now obſerved. Matins for night; Laudes for the beginning of the day; Prime, Tierce, Sexte, None, for the day; Veſpers for the evening; and complines for the entrance of the night. They who have written upon ceremonies beſides inſiſt that Matins repreſent what paſſed on the night of the paſſion, that Laudes are appointed in honour of CHRIST's reſurrection; Primes to meditate on the unworthy treatment he received at the houſe of Caiaphas, and for humbling ourſelves at the ſight of thoſe injuries. The Tierce is particularly deſigned in order to return God thanks for ſanctifying his church by the Holy Ghoſt. Sexte honours the crucifixion of our Lord; and Nones the myſtery of his death, which happened at this hour. Veſpers commemorates his coming, which, according to an hymn of the church, was towards the night of the world. The hour of Complines was inſtituted to implore God's protection during the night, as it had been already for the day at Primes. The exact hour for ſaying Matins is the night. Laudes, which have been, as it were, incorporated into Matins, were ſaid at the day break. Theſe two offices having aſſumed the common name of Matins are ſaid towards the end of the night. The hour of Primes is immediately after ſun riſing, the ancients then beginning their day, and dividing it into twelve hours, which were unequal, according as the days were longer or ſhorter; thus Tierce is the third hour of the day, and anſwers to nine a clock at the equinoxes; Sexte the ſixth hour of the day, and always noon; Nones the ninth hour, or about three a clock in the afternoon; Veſpers is towards the evening, and Complines after ſun ſet. Care is taken to ſay the [h] offices for theſe hours near about the time we have juſt now obſerved.

Not only ſuch eccleſiaſtics as are in holy orders, but [i] nuns and friars too who have profeſſed, and all ſuch as hold benefices are obliged to ſay the office; and all who neglect this duty are guilty of a mortal ſin, and ought to make reſtitution of the revenues of their benefices, unleſs they have performed other functions depending upon thoſe benefices, or other [k] reaſonable hindrances may juſtify the inaction of thoſe goſpel labourers. A cunning prieſt ſhall artfully enlarge the bounds of his duty, and eſcape mortal ſin by ſetches which ſincere ſouls never think of.

The ſervice muſt be ſaid in the church before the holy ſacrament, or in an oratory, or ſome other proper and decent place. The attention, that is, an entire application of the mind and heart of him who ſays the office is likewiſe abſolutely neceſſary, that he may not be reproached with honouring God with his lips only. It is thus that a prieſt or monk honours him, who having made it a law to ſay it over at the appointed hour, diſpatches it in poſt haſte, and mumbles over his prayers; that he may ſhew himſelf equally punctual in paying what is due to God and the world. The books treating upon this ſubject enlarge much upon the attention which is neceſſary to the reading or repeating the breviary; and explain

[g] Alet's Ritual.

[h] Except Veſpers, which during Lent are ſaid before dinner, upon account of ſuch who cannot keep faſt as preſcribed by the church, till the ordinary hour of Veſpers. In winter, that is from all ſaints to Eaſter, Veſpers are ſung at two a clock, and the reſt of the year at three. After Veſpers, the curates or vicars ought to pronounce their inſtructions, unleſs it has been already done after the ſermon at maſs. The evening prayer follows.

[i] Alet's Ritual.

[k] Theſe may be ſeveral accidents cauſed by ſickneſs: for inſtance, the loſs or diminution of the ſight. But ſuppoſing that one of theſe goſpel labourers ſhould have loſt it by ſome notorious debauchery, or conſiderably weakened it by too aſſiduouſly repeating the acts of charity of the Cordeliers of Catalonia ſo well painted by la Fontaine; could ſuch an one alledge reaſons ſufficiently convincing to excuſe an incapacity which he had brought upon himſelf? The curate, who like him des Bigarrures mentioned by the ſieur Des Accors, could not read the largeſt letters of a breviary, though he could diſcern the ſmalleſt points of dice, would not appear more excuſable than the former.

plain the different ſorts of attention men may have in ſaying it over; with many other things neceſſary for the ſecular and regular clergy, who often take care to be as careleſs as they can at it.

The CEREMONIES of the POPE'S CHAPEL.

" [1] GENERALLY there are every year forty papal chapels for maſſes, of which " the Pope celebrates three, the Cardinals thirty, and the archbiſhops and biſhops " aſſiſtants ſeven. [m] It is on Eaſter, Whitſunday, and Chriſtmas-day, that the " Pope ſays maſs, when not indiſpoſed. The other thirty ſeven chapel maſſes are ſaid " in his preſence on the feſtival days ſet down in the pontifical, a catalogue of which " would be uſeleſs and tireſome.

" There are five matins which are ſung in the papal chapel, viz. on Chriſtmas-Eve, " the three days in paſſion week called Tenebræ, and the ſecond of November, appoint- " ed for ſaying the office for all departed ſouls. The Cardinals one after another ſing " the leſſons for Chriſtmas matins; but at other matins they are ſung by muſicians.

" On the eves of ſolemn feſtivals the Pope and Cardinals are preſent at the firſt " veſpers at chapel: but the ſecond veſpers are never ſung before the Pope. There are " ten marked in the pontifical, at which he is uſed to be preſent. All theſe [n] chapels " are generally held in the apoſtolic palace, in the Pauline chapel, when the Pope is at " Monte Cavallo; and at Sixtus's chapel, when he makes any ſtay at the Vatican; except " on Eaſter Sunday, and the feaſt of St. Peter when he goes to the church of that ſaint, " and the aſſumption of the virgin, when he goes in cavalcade to the church of St. Mary " Major; and on ſome other occaſions, when he goes out of the Vatican, and Monte " Cavallo, to viſit ſome churches or baſilica's in Rome.

" When the Pope goes out in order to hold a chapel, he is carried in an armed chair " to the chamber where his robes are: but when he is dreſſed he goes into another " chair [o] carried upon the ſhoulders of twelve of his grooms, dreſſed in long ſcarlet " robes, reaching to their heels. When he goes to St. Peter's, he is carried under a ca- " nopy by the knights of St. Peter, with two grooms dreſſed in the ſame manner before " him, who each carry [p] a large fan of peacock's feathers, at the end of two ſticks fixed " to the arms of the chair, ſo that the Pope being ſeated (in the chair) ſeems to have " two wings on his ſhoulders, which are continually kept in motion by the means of " the two ſticks, which paſs underneath. This whole machine is covered with brocade " enriched with gold embroidery.

" On the Sundays in Advent and Lent, the Pope goes a foot to his chapel, by way of " penance. The third Sunday in Advent, and fourth in Lent he is carried, they being " days deſtined to privileged rejoicings. " When [1] Tableau de la Cour de Rome. Several remarks are added to this account from a modern author, who no more than copies from the Italian writers.

[m] Lunadoro in his Relazione, &c. ſays the Pope celebrates maſs on Chriſtmas-day, Eaſter-Sunday, and the feaſts of St. Peter and St. Paul.

[n] Eight of theſe ſolemn maſſes are celebrated at St. Peter's, and at three other churches. The 29. others at the apoſtolic palace, in Sixtus's chapel. Vide Seſtini.

[o] Taken from Seſtini's Mäeſtro di Camera.

[p] When the Pope pontifically equipped, with the Triregne or pontifical crown on, is carried on men's ſhoulders the day of the holy ſacrament, Candlemas-day, Palm-Sunday, and other ſolemn days; two fans borne by two grooms on each ſide his Holineſs's chair keep him from being moleſted by flies, &c. Theſe fans are myſterious. Caſalius, de ſacris Veter. Chriſtian. Ritibus, quotes a paſſage from St. Jerom, in order to prove that the fan ſignifies continence, as the flies, driven away by the fan, ſignify luxury. A celebrated biſhop (Suarez) quoted by F. Bonanni is of opinion that the holy Apoſtles inſtituted the uſe of ſacred fans, and does not doubt but the Holy Ghoſt inſpired them with the invention. This divine inſtitution is luckily come down to us. The Apoſtle St. James has recommended the uſe of fans in his liturgy, which are among the conſtitutions of S. Clement. Indeed few who read are ignorant, that theſe conſtitutions are falſly attributed to S. Clement; but however, ſince the Seraphims covered the face of God on his throne with their wings, it may well be allowed the Pope, who is Vice-God, weakly to imitate the Divinity by cauſing himſelf to be fanned with peacock's feathers; it is thus that his dignity ſhines out in the eyes of the Chriſtian world. We have made uſe of the very expreſſions of Suarez. We are not to omit that he aſſures us, that the ſinging, or rather crying of the peacock drives away ſerpents. The peacock is a type of Jeſus Chriſt, and the ſerpent of the Devil.

" When the Pope goes a foot from Sixtus's to the Paulin chapel, carrying the " ſacrament for the 40. hours, the firſt Sunday in Advent, and the Thurſday in Paſſion " week (three days before Eaſter) for the ſepulchre, the two eldeſt Cardinal-deacons " ſupport him under each arm. A perſon of the firſt rank, [q] (ſuppoſing there be ſuch " a one preſent) carries the tail of his cowl and caſſoc. Two participant apoſtolical " prothonotaries bear up the fringes of his cowl before.

" When the Pope himſelf celebrates maſs, the Cardinals are robed in white damaſk " with ſilver lace, with this difference, that [r] the Cardinal-biſhops wear the cowl, the " Cardinal-prieſts the chaſuble, and the Cardinal-deacons the tunic; and all of them " white damaſk mitres. The biſhops too wear their cowls, but whereas thoſe of the " Cardinals are white, thoſe of the biſhops are of rich ſilks of ſeveral colours, embroi- " dered with gold; but their mitres are only of white linen, ſewed upon paſtboard. The " penitentiaries of St. Peter's alſo go to the ſame chapel in their party-coloured chaſu- " bles; but when the Pope does not celebrate maſs himſelf, the Cardinals wear the rochet " only covered with their cowls, and ſuch prelates, as have a right to wear it, with their " ſhort mantles only, while ſuch as have no right to wear it remain in their violet co- " loured robes." We muſt not omit that their eminences, and all the dignified clergy, which can ſave themſelves the trouble of walking a foot, [s] go in a coach to the Pope's when they are to aſſiſt at pontifical maſs. At entring into the Pope's palace, the Cardinals pull off their gloves, and lay aſide every thing they may have in their hands in order to put on their cowls, their robes, in a room ſet apart for that purpoſe. Their eminences train-bearers are to give them the amict to kiſs, before they put it on. The Cardinals being robed go into his Holineſs's robing chamber. The two Cardinal-deacons aſſiſtants perform the office of robing him; after which the vicar of Jeſus Chriſt, the whole Chriſtian ſenate, and their ſubalterns, go and humble themſelves before God in the following order.

ORDER of the POPE'S PROCESSION when going to hold a CHAPEL at St. PETER'S.

" THE firſt who file off from the robing room to chapel are the gentlemen of " the Cardinals, then the Pope's pages of the chamber and chaplains, after them " the conſiſtorial advocates, and abbreviators of the high court, followed by the " acolytes in their ſurplices, auditors of the rota and the chamberlain of the ſacred pa- " lace with the dean of the rota on his left hand. Theſe are followed by the apoſto- " lical ſub-deacons and ſeven acolytes bearing ſeven candleſtics [u].

" The croſs comes next carried by an apoſtolic ſub-deacon in a violet caſſoc, rochet, " and cowl of the ſame colour. This croſs turns [w] towards the Pope during the pro- " ceſſion, [q] In the abſence of ſuch a perſon the firſt prothonotary performs the office.

[r] This is what Seſtini ſays. The Cardinal-deacons put on the amict and tunic; the prieſts the amict, and planet (or chaſuble); the biſhops, the amict and pluvial (a ſort of cowl) and ſurplice; and all of them the white ſatin mitre; this is very different from the author of the Tableau, &c.

[s] Maeſtro di Camera di Seſtini.

[t] Tableau de la Cour de Rome, who has tranſcribed it almoſt word for word from Seſtini.

[u] With lighted tapers. Vide Seſtini.

[w] F. Bonanni in his Gerarchia Eccleſiaſtica, ch. xcii. gives us the following account of the cuſtom of bearing the croſs (or rather the crucifix) before the ſovereign pontif; " The croſs is carried on the end of a pike " about ten palms long. The image of our Saviour is turned towards the Pope, and the chaplain who car- " ries it walks bareheaded when his Holineſs goes in public, or is carried on men's ſhoulders: But when he " goes in a coach or chair he carries the croſs on horſeback, bareheaded, with a glove on his right-hand, the " left manages the horſe.

" In ſolemn and religious ceremonies, when his Holineſs appears in his ſacred robes, an auditor of the rota " carries the croſs on horſeback, dreſſed in a rochet and cappuce (or ſort of cowl) violet coloured when the " Pope goes in ſolemn proceſſion; but there are three days in Paſſion week, on which the croſs is not car- " ried before him: And at ſuch times he and the ſacred college go to chapel in mourning.

" It

" ceſſion, though this be contrary to the common practice of the Court of Rome. The " ſame ſub-deacon this day ſings the epiſtle, and his office is ſold for about three thou- " ſand crowns, and brings in eight per cent. yearly. On each ſide the croſs are two ſorts " of vergers with [x] red wands and long violet mantles trailing on the ground.

" After the ſub-deacon, walk the penitentiaries [y] of St. Peter's, the [z] biſhops, arch- " biſhops, patriarchs, [a] the governor of Rome, and the Cardinal-deacons aſſiſtants on " each ſide the Cardinal-deacon, who is to ſing the goſpel. Then march the captain " of the Swiſs guards, ſome carrying halbards and others in ſteel armour with large two " edged ſwords drawn.

" In the midſt of the guards ride the captains, and general of the light horſe, the " Roman conſervators, the Princes of the throne, the Pope's relations declared Princes, " and the ambaſſadors of crowned heads. Then comes the Pope ---- and immediately " after him his chamberlain and cup-bearer followed by the apoſtolic prothonotaries, " clerks of the chamber, generals of orders, referendaries, and the reſt who have a place " at the chapels.

" When the Pope goes to chapel without his mitre, [b] which he generally does to " matins, and all the holy week, he goes immediately after the croſs between the two " eldeſt Cardinals. The others go after, two and two; then comes the governor of " Rome, the patriarchs, arch-biſhops, biſhops, and other prelates in quite the contrary " order of precedency we juſt now deſcribed, viz. thoſe of the higheſt quality firſt, " whereas on the greateſt ſolemnities they walk laſt, it being a cuſtom long introduced " among the clergy of Rome, to yield the laſt places, as the moſt honourable, to ſuch " as are raiſed to the higheſt dignities in the eccleſiaſtical ſtate.

" As ſoon as they enter the Paulin chapel, they ſalute the officiating prieſt, who is " robed for ſaying maſs, and ſtanding on the epiſtle ſide with his back to the altar; af- " ter which each going to his place, ſays a ſhort prayer kneeling, and then riſes and " remains ſtanding till the Pope comes. The ſame is obſerved at entring St. Peter's; " they

" It is doubted whether St. Peter or his ſucceſſors till St. Sylveſter I. had the croſs carried before them" (which we too very much doubt. It is ſuppoſed and very juſtly, that Apoſtle and his earlieſt ſucceſſors had no opportunities of attending to ceremonies: if they obſerved any, it muſt have been in ſecret, they living under Princes that were ſworn enemies to the Chriſtian religion; and would not ſuch have deemed carrying the croſs in public as an inſult upon their religion? Beſides it is certain, that the Apoſtles and their diſciples thought of nothing but ſettling the church. They, who in the ſequel thought of ceremonies were already perfectly at their eaſe.) " The primitive Chriſtians, continues F. Bonanni, carried the croſs in their hand (to prove which he quotes Surius, an author whoſe merit is well known, and then ſeems tempted to determine for the antiquity of the cuſtom of carrying the croſs in public.) " It will be found, ſays he, that St. " Clement I. eſtabliſhed ſeveral cuſtoms: among others he ordained, that as often as the ſovereign pontifs " went abroad, they ſhould take with them the banner of the croſs; from whence it may be concluded, that " this practice began about 70. years after St. Peter. Were this opinion followed, it muſt be believed that " the pontifs, who went before St. Clement, never appeared in public without the croſs before them; and " that thus St. Clement only confirmed this cuſtom. But however, St. Sylveſter was not the firſt who prac- " tiſed it.

" Anaſtaſius the librarian in his life of Leo IV. who flouriſhed in the ninth century, ſpeaks in a much clearer " manner of this ceremony, and his words ſhew it was much more antient. In ſhort, it is not to be doubted, " but that after peace was reſtored to the church in the reign of Conſtantin the Great, S. Sylveſter and his ſuc- " ceſſors had the holy croſs carried before them with more pomp and magnificence than before. It was a " trophy of that victory which the church had juſt gained over hell, and a proof of the ſovereignty which Je- " ſus Chriſt our Saviour put into the hands of the ſovereign pontifs his vicars.

" Many reaſons, adds F. Bonanni, authoriſe this cuſtom. It is a monument of the ſufferings of Jeſus " Chriſt, and of the ſucceſſors of St. Peter's adherence to the Saviour of the world. It is, as it were, the bul- " wark of the pontif, and all faithful Chriſtians, and animates to imitate Chriſt's example. Laſtly, It is the " true mark of the pontifical dignity, and repreſents their authority in the church, as the Roman Faſces for- " merly did that of their Conſuls and other magiſtrates.

" The crucifix turned towards the Pope ſhews the particular protection of Jeſus Chriſt." There are ſeveral other myſteries couched under the manner of carrying the croſs; it ſhall ſuffice to have pointed out ſome of them.

[x] I cuſtodi con le Mazze, e co' i collari di Maglia, ſays Seſtini.

[y] With the planet and berrette. Vide Seſtini.

[z] All with the pluvial, and white linen mitre, Idem.

[a] Then come the Cardinal-deacons, prieſts, and biſhops. After them the two Cardinal-deacons aſſiſtants on each ſide the Cardinal-deacon. Then the ambaſſadors, and Princes themſelves walk about the Pope, carried in a litter under a canopy, &c. as before obſerved. The Pope's chamberlain and cup-bearer walk at ſome diſtance, after the Pope come the participant prothonotaries, ſome other prelates, and generals of orders. This is the order of the ceremony according to Seſtini.

[b] On the night of Chriſtmas, and at matins in Paſſion week, according to Lunadoro.

Fig. 4.

The POPES Chappel

C. Du. Bosse.

" they ſalute the Cardinal arch-prieſt, who is at the head of the chapter towards the " door of the choir." When his Holineſs does not celebrate maſs, there are ſome ſmall differences which we ſhall point out to the reader. [c] Neither the ſurplice nor any other ornament is worn, and yet their eminences go into the robing room with their ſurplices croſs their arm, like a ſcarf. 2. The penitentiaries, &c. who otherwiſe ought to go before the croſs, walk after the Pope. 3. The Cardinals follow next the croſs, &c.

When his Holineſs goes to hold a chapel at any other church, the proceſſion is the ſame as already deſcribed. They walk in the ſame order out of the robing-room to church; where the firſt thing to be done is to offer up the heart to God before the ſacred body of Chriſt upon the altar.

The ſame order is obſerved, when the head of the church militant is carried in a chair to Sixtus's chapel. He goes on foot only on certain days appointed for returning more expreſly to God, as in Lent, &c. as we have already taken notice. His Holineſs being then in a courſe of penance, is ſupported by two Cardinals. One of the participant prothonotaries bears up the fringes of his cowl before, and if any Prince be there, he muſt hold up the train of this ſacred habiliment.

DESCRIPTION of the POPE'S CHAPEL according to F. BONANNI.

WE have taken this deſcription from the [d] Eccleſiaſtical Hierarchy of the reverend F. Bonanni, and have with it given a plan engraved at Rome. The cyphers ſhew the rank of ſuch who are obliged to be there either upon account of their dignity or office; but before we go ſo far as that it will be proper to give the reader an idea of this ſanctuary. It is compoſed of the following parts, the throne, the benches, the area, the rails, the veſtibulum, the presbyterium, the entry or paſſage, the choir and the gallery.

1. [e] The place where the throne ſtands is a ſort of elevation, where his Holineſs's throne is placed before the altar on the goſpel ſide.

2. The ſeats or benches for the Cardinals round the altar and throne. Then thoſe for ambaſſadors and prelates.

3. [f] The ſquare ſpace lying before the ſteps of the presbyterium, and encloſed by the benches juſt mentioned. This is deſigned for monks, and the officers [g] of the Pope's court. The Palatines do not ſit there.

4. There is a ſort of [h] rail, which ſeparates this holy court from the populace. Four, ſix, or ſeven lights are ſet there, according to the ſolemnity of the day.

5. The veſtibulum is between the ſquare (ſeptum) under the ſteps of the presbyterium, and this is the place of [i] the pages of the chamber and advocates.

6. The entry or paſſage is from the gate to the altar.

7. The choir is for the muſic.

8. The Tribune, where ſtands the altar, and a [k] ſeat for the perſon officiating.

The

[c] Seſtini. [d] This deſcription takes up the whole cxxvi. chap. of the book.

[e] Suggeſtum ſive Thalamus locus elevatus ubi ſedes pontificis ampla, ſolium ſive thronum dicta, &c.

[f] Septum. [g] Togati Curiales. [h] Cancelli. [i] Cubicularii Togati.

[k] Faldiſtorium, whence perhaps comes the French word Fauteuil, an eaſy chair. We are told this portable ſeat, which is uſed for the functions of the biſhop, repreſents his dignity, power, and the reſpect to be paid him. This curious diſcovery we owe to the learned Caſalius, who has written upon the rites of the Chriſtian church: It is he too who has found the independency of the church in the figure of the epiſcopal ſeat. He obſerves to us, that this ſeat is not ſupported on any ſide, and from thence concludes it repreſents the church, which has no viſible ſupport; that is, according to this prelate, that it in no manner depends upon mankind, and that it ought not to acknowledge any authority but that of Jeſus Chriſt Sovereign of the world, who afterwards reſigned his temporal kingdom to St. Peter and his ſucceſſors.

The altar is adorned with [l] ſeven candleſtics with tapers in them, a myſterious number juſtified by weighty reaſons. The uſe of lights was eſtabliſhed by the Apoſtles, who took it from the Jews, as remarked by Cardinal Baronius. There muſt never be leſs than two of theſe lights at the altar; but when there are four they repreſent the four Evangeliſts, who enlightned the church by their doctrine; wherefore the primitive Chriſtians gave the form of Ezekiel's four beaſts to the feet of the candleſtics which were lighted up at their religious ceremonies. On certain ſolemn days ſix are ſet upon the high altar of ſome churches, in imitation of the ſix branches of the Moſaic candleſtics, mentioned in the xxv. chap. of Exodus. A biſhop officiating pontifically has ſeven to light him. [m] The croſs is to be placed before the middlemoſt taper, higher than the candles; but as to the altar of the Pope's chapel, though there be already ſeven candles on it, ſeven acolytes go before the croſs and [n] the deacon, who is to ſing the Goſpel, each with a taper in his hand. When the Pope ſings maſs, ſeven more are added, and at veſpers ſix.

As to the cuſtom of placing the croſs before the candles, it is very ancient, and tranſmitted from the Apoſtles to us by tradition, according to F. Bonanni; to the end that the prieſt, who is celebrating the myſtery of the maſs, may continually have before his eyes the paſſion of JESUS CHRIST, of which the croſs and ſacrifice of the Maſs are types: Theſe are Cardinal Bona's words. And one proof, which ought to perſuade us, that the croſs is an eſſential part of the religious worſhip performed at the altar, is the miracle of which [o] F. Gretzar has preſerved the memory. A Spaniſh prieſt was obliged to ſay maſs before a perſon of diſtinction, but the croſs being forgotten, he did not dare undertake to celebrate it. Whereupon an angel, who perceived the holy prieſt's perplexity, went immediately and fetched a croſs and placed upon the altar in ſight of all the people. This croſs is retigiouſly preſerved and continues to be the object of the veneration of the faithful.

[p] Pope Innocent III. thought proper to have the croſs placed in the middle of the ſeven candleſtics, to give Chriſtians an idea of Chriſt's mediation between the Jews and Gentiles whom he has united into one church.

The pontifical throne, marked figure 2. is on the Goſpel-ſide; this place is appropriated not only to the Pope, but to the biſhop [q] too, when the altar is adjoining to the wall of the chapel.

[r] The church militant is a lively image of the church triumphant. In the latter Chriſt ſits on a throne with the elders on lower ſeats. In the church militant the head of the univerſal church, and the biſhop (who in his dioceſs repreſents that head) are to have the chief place. The reſt have inferior places round the altar and epiſcopal ſeat, each according to his rank in the Eccleſiaſtical Hierarchy. The chair of St. Peter, [s] which time has miraculouſly ſpared, and is carefully preſerved in the baſilica of the Vatican, will doubtleſs hand down to us an idea how St. Peter was ſeated at church till time ſhall be no more.

If we are to believe the dealers in myſteries, there is no ceremony without its myſtery. They pretend that a good catholic may with the eyes of faith diſcover an infinite number of eſſential truths which the animal man has not ſtrength to ſee. Theſe myſteries in [l] The lamps and tapers which give light to religious myſteries have often furniſhed oil and wax for many miracles, according to the account of Caſalius in his treatiſe on the rites of the ancient church. Devils have been driven away, the dead raiſed, and ſick cured. He beſides aſſures us, that the light of tapers is a type of the Goſpel-light, which ſcatters the darkneſs of infidelity and ignorance. F. Bonanni, from whom we have taken this deſcription, quotes a paſſage from Macri, whence it may be concluded that the ſeven candleſtics are an admonition to the biſhop to adorn himſelf with the ſeven gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, and this thought is in his opinion ſo much the more juſt, as ſome fathers thought the ſame as to the Moſaic candleſtic.

[m] Piſcara Praxis Ceremoniar. p. 29. [n] Id. Ibid. [o] Bonanni ch. cxxvi. of his Hierar. Eccl. [p] Id. Ibid. [q] Si altare inhæreat parieti. Piſcara L. II. chap. iii. Praxis Cerem. [r] Id. Ibid. [s] Bonanni Hierarch. Eccl. chap. cxxvi. This chair St. Peter uſed for the epiſcopal functions, and was brought from Antioch to Rome. It is of wood very coarſly wrought, but in the ſequel ſome pious Artiſans added ſmall ivory figures. St. Stephen the Pope's chair is likewiſe ſtill preſerved, which Pope Innocent XII. made a preſent of to the great Duke of Tuſcany, and it is now at Piſa.

in an eſpecial manner ſhine forth on every thing that has any relation to eccleſiaſtical hierarchy; and this hierarchy, we are told, does nothing without reaſons drawn from the pureſt Chriſtianity, and without ſpiritual views. We mean views entirely ſpiritual, which perſons of a ſuperficial judgment might perhaps look on as the effect of human whim and extravagance; ſuch as the exact care to be taken to change the colour of the ſeats according to the ſolemnity of the day.

The cuſtom of [t] covering the pontifical throne, and the ſeats of biſhops [u] with rich ſtuffs is very ancient. Baronius finds it practiſed in the earlieſt ages of the church; and it appears that in St. Auſtin's time the prelates ſat upon ſeats raiſed above the reſt, and which were doubtleſs more eaſy, and more richly adorned. But however that may be, it certainly is but juſt, that the leaders of the church ſhould have the moſt conſpicuous place, from whence they may ſee and be ſeen by the congregation. This is ſo natural a diſpoſition, that it would be very uſeleſs any longer to inſiſt on it; but yet we muſt obſerve, that with the ancient Chriſtians, the pontifical throne was always raiſed above the other ſeats, and that it does not now ſtand in the Pope's chapel in the ſame place as it ſtood formerly in Chriſtian churches; for it uſed to ſtand in the middle of the ſemicircle of the tribune, as well as the altar, in ſuch a manner that the Pope at once looked towards the altar and the people. The ſeats of the clergy were ranged on each ſide, as is yet ſeen in the churches of St. Clement and St. Nereus, where the biſhop's ſeat ſtands three ſteps higher than thoſe round it.

We ſhall ſay one word concerning the pontifical chair, which we have already ſeen was covered with rich ſilks; and we muſt add, that when that chair was marble, it was embelliſhed with ſculpture. On Good Friday all worldly ornaments are taken off the Pope's chair; his Holineſs aſſiſts at the office of the day clothed in a robe of mourning and penance, that is, covered with a very coarſe red woollen cowl. The Pope then in ſome meaſure lays aſide the majeſty of CHRIST's vicar, to bewail the Saviour of the world's death with all humility.

[w] The canopy too is to be found among the ancients, which adds to the ſplendor of the Pope's dignity; but that over the Pope's ſeat is ſmaller than that over the altar.

The 3. cypher ſhews the ſeats ranged on each ſide the chapel for the Cardinals, who appear at the ceremonies of the chapel with a red or violet cowl according to the office of the day.

The ſeats covered with tapiſtry are raiſed from the ground by ſteps marked with the figure 4. There ſit the trainbearers of the Cardinals in violet cowls, or ſurplices and rochets over them, when their eminences wear their mitres.

The following order is to be obſerved by the apoſtolical court in placing themſelves at chapel; and the figures refer to the cut.

5. The firſt Cardinal-deacon ſeated at the Pope's right-hand.
6. The ſecond Cardinal-deacon at his left.
7. The Cardinal-biſhops.
8. The Cardinal-prieſts.
9. The Cardinal-deacons.
10. Foreign ambaſſadors.
11. Dukes.
12. Patriarchs, and biſhops aſſiſtants.
13. The governor of Rome.
14. Envoys or eccleſiaſtical legates.
15. Biſhops of the firſt order.

[t] Bonanni Hierarch. Eccl. cap. cxxvi.

[u] The pontifical (or epiſcopal) throne was formerly more or leſs richly adorned according to the wealth of the pariſh: but it appears that in the firſt centuries the cuſtom was to cover it with fine linen. Vide Bonanni, chap. cxxvi. Hierarch. Eccleſ.

[w] The canopy is a ſquare cloth of ſtate made of rich ſilk, or ſome richer ſtuff, hung over the altar and pontifical chair. As to its colour, it muſt be changed according to the ſolemnity of the day.

16. Biſhops of the ſecond order.
17. Biſhops of the third order.
18. Abbots, prothonotaries, generals of orders, and penitentiaries.
19. Procurators general of the religious orders.
20. Lay-gentlemen.
21. The officiating Cardinal.
22. The deacon and ſub-deacon aſſiſtants.
23. The Cardinal's aſſiſtant.
24. Chaplains to the perſon who officiates.
25. They who are to give the water.
26. A ſide-board, or ſort of [x] beaufet.
27. The ſexton and pontifical croſs.
28. Two gentlemen of the privy chamber. The auditor of the rota, who takes the Pope's mitre off. He wears at his neck under his cowl or ſurplice, when he has one on, a ſcarf of white linen, with which he holds the pontifical mitre. He that carries the croſs is laſt, and ſits among the others.
29. The Deſk.
30. Senators.
31. Conſervators.
32. Barons and knights.
33. Apoſtolical ſub-deacon.
34. Firſt auditor of the rota.
35. Chamberlain of the ſacred palace.
36. Auditors of the rota.
37. Apoſtolic acolytes.
38. Abbreviators of the high court.
39. Gentlemen of the privy chamber to the Pope.
40. Gentlemen of the chamber participants.
41. Chamberlains.
42. Conſiſtorial advocates.
43. The Pope's phyſician.
44. Train-bearers of the Cardinals.
45. [y] The Faldiſtorium or ſeat for the perſon officiating.
46. The chief maſter of the ceremonies ſtanding.
47. The firſt Cardinal-prieſt in waiting.
48. The ſecond maſter of the ceremonies.
49. Perſons appointed for the ſervice of the pontifical chapel.
50. The choir of muſic.
51. The maſter of the Sacro Hoſpitio. The ſquires. The captains of the Swiſs guards.
52. The Pope's mace-bearers.
53. The Swiſs guards.
54. The preacher.

[z] There are beſides in the Pope's chapel two clerks formerly called the bell-clerks; the reaſon of which name is unknown, bells not being here uſed; all that can be gueſſed at is, that perhaps they were ſo called from ringing a bell to give notice to the muſic, who were to ſing the office at the ſame inſtant as it was given out at St. Peter's to the clergy of that church. They might likewiſe be ſo named upon account that when his Holineſs is [x] There is one of theſe on each ſide the altar, if there be room. The bigneſs of theſe tables is not fixed, but this is what is eſſential, they muſt be covered with a fine, white, clean cloth, which reaches all over the table down to the ground. On the table of the epiſtle ſide ſtands every thing neceſſary for celebration; but no image. That on the Goſpel-ſide ſerves for holding the ſacred veſſels. Vide Piſcara Prax. Sacr. Cerem. Lib. II.

[y] It muſt be an acolyte to whom the care of this ſeat is committed; and as the art of giving, and placing, and diſplacing it in time, &c. requires an active and experienced man; care muſt be taken to chuſe an acolyte of penetration and vigour. Thus ſays Piſcara Prax. Sacr. Cerem. Lib. I. chap. xiv.

[z] All this is from F. Bonanni, chap. cxxvi. Hierarch. Eccleſ.

is on a journey with the holy ſacrament, they were to ring ſuch a bell; which is taken notice of in an ancient ritual at Avignon. But however it may be, when theſe clerks accompany the veneràbile in the Pope's journies, they muſt be dreſſed in red; but at chapel in violet, and in ſurplices. One of theſe clerks muſt neceſſarily be a prieſt, to be able to take the holy ſacrament off the horſe, and carry it to the altar as often as maſs is ſaid during the journey. It is they too, who have the right to go along with it each on horſeback, with a lantern in their hand. They ſet out the altar, light the tapers, cover the * tables of the altar, prepare the ſeat for the officiating-prieſt, ſet the benches and cuſhions, dreſs the aſſiſtant, take care of the thurible, give the water and wine to be uſed in the maſs, &c.

We are apprehenſive, that whoever may read theſe deſcriptions, may be often diſguſted at the ſcrupulous regularity obſerved in all theſe religious practices we here deſcribe; but we anſwer to it, that the devotion of great numbers of people would be put wholly out of order, ſhould the leaſt of thoſe ceremonies, which their eyes are accuſtomed to during their acts of piety, be forgot or omitted. For inſtance, there are perhaps ſome devotees whoſe piety is exhilarated and revived by the change of colours in the dreſs to be worn by the perſon officiating. Poſſibly they lift up their hearts to God with more eaſe and chearfulneſs, when the red takes place of the violet. The pomp and equipage of CHRIST's vicar, who whilſt on earth was the humbleſt of men, ſtrikes others. An altar covered with its ornaments, a prieſt clothed in his pontifical robes, all the ceremonies he uſes at maſs, prepare us for the greateſt and moſt auguſt of all myſteries. But unhappily people ſo much accuſtom themſelves to them, as that they cannot think of the myſteries, if the prieſt be not clothed decently, or any ceremony be omitted. If the cuſtom of turning round like Turkiſh derviſes, or of meaſuring ſo many acres of land with one's body, as certain faquirs of the Mogul's country do out of devotion, had been introduced for ſome ages into the Chriſtian religion, it is to be preſumed people would eaſily have accuſtomed themſelves to it. Cuſtom makes us look with veneration on the dreſs of a prieſt, and with contempt on the wide trowſers of a Swiſs: were there a ſettled veneration for thoſe breeches, as there is for a Cordelier's gown, or a prieſt's caſſoc; we ſhould ſure enough find out great myſteries in thoſe breeches. The wideneſs, for inſtance, might hold out to us the extent of religious virtues: the number of folds in them, the infinite number of religious duties; and the placing them, the order to be obſerved in fulfilling them, &c.

The CEREMONIES of the MASS.

HAVING ſpoken of the Pope's chapel, we ſhall ſomewhat particularly explain the ceremonies of the ſacrifice of the maſs, [a] which the Catholics regard as the moſt excellent of all adorations, and moſt effectual of all prayers. Not only the church prays for herſelf at this ſacrifice, which the prieſt offers up to God in the moſt auguſt manner the wit of man has been capable of conceiving; [b] but Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, by the ſacrifice of his own body, offers up to his Father the moſt perfect adoration that can be paid to him, ſince it is offered by a God. In a word, it is Jeſus Chriſt, who alone always acts in this ſacrifice. The prieſt is no more than the miniſter, the inſtrument, the organ; it being Chriſt who leads and directs him; and who makes effectual the action of the prieſt, who offers him as a propitiation for ſin; ſo that the ſacrifice is equally ſalutary to the church, however corrupt [c] the prieſt may be in his morals.

« [d] Men

* See before.

[a] Some of the learned pretend to derive the word maſs from a Hebrew root, ſignifying offering; which is unlikely, ſince the people of the Eaſt do not uſe it; and ſome other etymologies are as forced. It is generally agreed, that the word is corrupted from miſſio, which is wholly Latin, and of ancient uſe.

[b] Explanation of the ceremonies of the maſs.

[c] God may adminiſter true ſacraments by ſuch as are not of his church, and it is hereby, that the holineſs of

" [d] Men every day ſtanding in need of a ſacrifice, as well for acknowledging God's " abſolute power, as for obtaining of him the remiſſion of their ſins, would be incapa- " ble of offering him a victim that would do honour to his ſovereign Majeſty, and ex- " piate their crimes, had not Jeſus Chriſt given himſelf to them and for them in the ſa- " crifice of the maſs ---- God cannot reject the hoſt, ſince his Son, the object of his " tenderneſs, is therein offered up to him ---- there is this difference between the bloody " ſacrifice of the croſs, and the unbloody one of the maſs; that in the former Jeſus " Chriſt offered himſelf for mankind, without their either offering him, or themſelves " with him; but in the maſs Jeſus Chriſt offers himſelf, and is offered by mankind; the " church offers him up to God, and herſelf with him," &c.

On Sunday before high maſs the water is bleſſed, and there is a proceſſion. The faithful are to appear at maſs with a pure conſcience, and as a ſign of the neceſſity of ſuch internal purity, their bodies muſt be ſprinkled with a water ſanctified for that purpoſe by a ſolemn benediction. The proceſſion is to prepare the hearts of the congregation of the faithful for the holy ſacrifice of the maſs. The prieſt and clergy forward this preparation by ſinging and elevating the croſs carried before the clergy whilſt they walk in a ſolemn manner round the church or the precincts of it.

[e] The maſs is compoſed of two principal parts, viz. that from the beginning to the offering formerly called the Maſs of the catechumens, and the ſecond, from the offering to the end, called the Maſs of the faithful. All manner of people were at it till the offering, becauſe in this firſt part was included the leſſons from Scripture, and the preaching of the Goſpel, from which none were to be excluded. But after the ſermon, none but the faithful, who were fit to receive, were allowed to have a ſhare in the ſacrifice, and the catechumens were ordered to depart, together with ſuch as were poſſeſſed, and penitents, who were not only excluded the communion, but even the ſight of the myſteries; wherefore the deacon cried aloud, [f] holy things are for the holy, let the prophane depart hence.

The thirty five following figures repreſent to the reader the different actions of the prieſt at maſs. In all theſe actions which the church holds to be myſterious, and of uſe to the belief of the faithful Chriſtian, devotion has ſought out a complete allegory of the paſſion of our Lord. The myſteries of this allegory we are now going to explain.

1. FIGURE.

The good Chriſtian, who would lift up his heart to God whilſt the prieſt is walking to the altar, is to look upon this action, as the image of Chriſt's retiring with his apoſtles to the garden of olives. He went thither to prepare for the ſacrifice of himſelf for the ſins of mankind; in the ſame manner the prieſt going to the altar, is preparing himſelf for the ſacrifice of the hoſt, which is the ſacred body of JESUS CHRIST.

2. FIGURE.

of the ſacrifice of the maſs is juſtified, though celebrated by a wicked prieſt, againſt any objections of Heretics. They have not thought fit to diſpute the validity of baptiſm though conferred by a perſon not of their communion, becauſe baptiſm is performed in the name of the Father, &c. it is Jeſus Chriſt who baptiſes. So properly ſpeaking, falſe prieſts do not ſay maſs, or offer up the ſacred body of Jeſus Chriſt, but he thro' them offers up himſelf. The Proteſtants themſelves adhere to this principle, that a wicked paſtor may perform the offices of Chriſt's miniſtry, in the ſame manner as a debauched miniſter of ſtate, or ambaſſador, who have neither religion nor virtue, may however ſtill ſerve their maſters well; and even may make religion and virtue contribute to the ſervice of the ſtate. It is beſides ſufficient for their Princes to have appointed them, in order for them to obey in every thing which may relate to the execution of their charge. The Proteſtants thus diſtinguiſh between internal and external action. External action, is what appears to our eyes outwardly in the motions of the paſtor, and which offers nothing but what is human to our ſight; but internal, is the direction of him who is the ſoul of the paſtor; and it is this director who gives ſtrength to the action, who perſuades, ſanctifies, &c. We ſhall not here mention the eſſence of ordination, which is ſuch that thereby a prieſt remains internally a prieſt, even without actually performing the functions of the prieſthood, his character being indelible.

[d] Explication of the ceremonies of the maſs. [e] Id.

[f] This, according to ſome, was an imitation of the myſteries of Paganiſm; but we ſhould rather ſay, that a form for excluding prophane perſons is a part of all religions.

2. FIGURE.

Before the prieſt begins maſs he ſays a prayer. The faithful ought likewiſe to pray ſilently with him, and meditate on the inward ſufferings of the Saviour of mankind, when he prayed in the garden of olives, and thought himſelf deſerted by God. The prieſt being at the foot of the altar ought to look upon himſelf abandoned, driven out of paradiſe, and baniſhed from God's preſence by the ſin of Adam.

3. FIGURE.

JESUS CHRIST proſtrate in the garden of olives, on the brink of ſuffering the moſt ſhameful and cruel of all puniſhments, ſweated blood. In this condition he confeſſed the ſins of all mankind to God his Father. This, ſay they, is the idea which the confeſſion of the prieſt at the altar ſets before the Chriſtian's eyes. The confeſſion is a ſeries of reflexions made by the prieſt at the foot of the altar. He begs pardon of God for his own ſins, and thoſe of the congregation. He conſiders, that the action he is going upon requires a heart purified not only from mortal, but even from venial ſins. The people are to confeſs their ſins at the ſame time as the prieſt confeſſes his.

4. FIGURE.

The prieſt goes up to the altar, and kiſſes it; which is the ſign of his reconciliation with God, and through him, of the reconciliation of the devout Chriſtian. But this image does not hinder him from forming a very different one; and it is this. The kiſs which the prieſt gives to the altar, may repreſent to him that of the traytor Judas, a fortunate kiſs, ſince it delivered Chriſt up to his executioners, and thereby the wretched apoſtate wrought our ſalvation without deſigning it.

5. FIGURE.

After the prieſt has kiſſed the altar, and whilſt [g] the Introite is ſinging, he incenſes the altar, in order to offer up to God the prayers of the faithful ſignified by the perfume. Allegory likewiſe has a ſhare in his action of turning himſelf towards the epiſtle ſide, but care muſt be taken not to carry the allegory too far; however, by the ſtrength of meditation the good Chriſtian may by the prieſt's action form to himſelf Chriſt's being taken and bound to be delivered to his enemies.

6. FIGURE.

JESUS CHRIST is carried before the High Prieſt of the Jews: the Introite is applied to this circumſtance of our Lord's paſſion. The Introite is called the entrance and beginning of the maſs, and is different every day according to the myſtery or feſtival to be celebrated. [h] The Kyrie Eleiſon, or, Lord have mercy upon us, is a Greek prayer following the Introite. This prayer is three times addreſſed to each of the perſons in the Trinity, to ſhew how much we ſtand in need to God's mercy. Warmth of devotion may find an exact relation between the entrance of the maſs, and that of Jeſus Chriſt into Annas's houſe.

[g] Pope Celeſtin is believed to be the firſt who had the Pſalms ſung in anthems. S. Gregory the Great afterwards appointed thoſe anthems to their particular uſes for introite, the reſponſes, the offertory, the communion, &c. and collected them into a book called the Antiphonal. Vide Bona.

[h] Kyrie Eleiſon, ſignifies, Lord have mercy upon us. It is natural for man to have recourſe to God even when he does not think of it. Beſides this is the form in all the Jewiſh, Heathen, Chriſtian, &c. prayers. But the Chriſtian church has endeavoured to conſecrate it in a particular manner in its worſhip. The force of cuſtom is ſuch, that a Chriſtian, who ſays, Lord have mercy upon me, in Greek, would perhaps think it might have leſs vertue in the vulgar tongue. However, tho' we will not venture to be poſitive in it, yet ſtill it is ſurpriſing, that the Latin church ſhould have affected to rob the Greeks of this form, without any ſatisfactory reaſon that can be given for it. But certain it is, that it is very ancient.

7. FIGURE.

As to the relation between the three denials of St. Peter, and the Kyrie Eleiſon, it is more perfect. The prieſt implores the clemency of the ſupreme Being for himſelf, and the congregation of the faithful. Devotees imagine this idea preſents them with that of St. Peter's tears. Sinning againſt God is diſowning and denying him. We muſt repent as did that apoſtle.

8. FIGURE.

[i] After the Introite and Kyrie Eleiſon, the prieſt riſes: the Lord is going to ſhew himſelf to the faithful. The choir ſings Gloria in excelſis. It is likewiſe called the Hymn of the Angels, it beginning [k] with the words which the angels ſung immediately after our Saviour's birth. This hymn expreſſes the great reſpect the church has for the infinite majeſty of God, &c. but this is not ſaid on days of penance, nor at maſſes for the dead. The prieſt out of reſpect kiſſes the altar, and ſo continues to do every time he turns towards the people. He ſalutes the congregation ſaying, Dominus vobiſcum, the Lord be with you. The prieſt, in pronouncing theſe words, muſt look with an eye of charity upon the aſſembly of the faithful, and by his looks touch their hearts, and invite them to repentance. It was thus, that our Lord looked on St. Peter with an eye of compaſſion, and made that apoſtle internally ſenſible of theſe words, the Lord is with you. The people return the prieſt's ſalutation by theſe words, & cum ſpiritu tuo, and with thy Spirit. The prieſt and people mutually ſalute each other ſeveral times during the maſs, to ſhew the union there ought to be between them in the celebration of the myſteries. The celebrant, or officiating prieſt turns to the altar, and ſays the collect, which prayer is as it were a collection or ſummary of what the church begs of God in the office of the day.

9. FIGURE.

The prieſt reads the epiſtle, and this action is compared to the accuſation brought againſt JESUS CHRIST before Pilate. This leſſon is called the Epiſtle, becauſe often taken out of ſome epiſtle of the apoſtles. The world, the fleſh, and the Devil endeavour to ſet the Chriſtian's heart againſt Chriſt, who would dedicate himſelf to him. This is the relation between theſe two actions. The imagination of a Chriſtian directed by the meditation of a devout ſoul will eaſily perceive a great deal more than we have mentioned.

10. FIGURE.

The gradual [l] is ſung after the epiſtle, and is ſo called [m] from going up into the body of the church to ſing it, as is ſtill practiſed in many churches. It is a preparation for the Goſpel leſſon, to which is added the Hallelujah: but from Lent to Eaſter, which is a time of mourning and ſadneſs, ſome verſes of a Pſalm are ſung inſtead of the Hallelujah: and as they are ſung in a low mournful tone, this is called the Stroke. In the mean while the deacon preſents the incenſe to the prieſt, and the prieſt bleſſes it; ſaying over it, [n] may God, in honour of whom ye ſhall burn, bleſs you. The prieſt kneeling or bowing low to the altar, repeats in a low voice the prayer beginning with theſe words munda cor, &c. The prieſt and Pope are now to conſider themſelves as going to anſwer before the tribunal of the King of Kings. This is the image which the prieſt's action ſignifies in the 10. Figure.

11. FIGURE.

[i] Explication of the ceremonies of the maſs.

[k] The ſequel of this anthem is aſcribed to Teleſphorus, a Pope who lived 150. years after Chriſt. Others attribute it to Pope Symmachus, who lived 350. years after. The truth is, its author is not certainly known.

[l] The gradual began to grow into uſe in the time of Pope Honorius, about the year 633. others think it much more ancient.

[m] Explication des ceremonies de la Maſſe.

[n] Ab illo benedicaris, in cujus honore cremaberis.

11. Figure.

The prieſt is here ſeen reading the Goſpel, and Jeſus Chriſt ſent from Herod to Pilate. The explanation of the ceremonies of the maſs, let us into that of this allegory. The Goſpel is carried from the right to the left-hand of the altar, which repreſents the preaching of it to the Gentiles after the Jews had refuſed to hear it. In the ſame manner Jeſus Chriſt, after being deſpiſed and outraged by Herod, who is the emblem of the Jews, is carried before Pilate, the emblem of the Gentiles. Indeed Pilate refuſed on this occaſion to hear Chriſt, or at laſt heard him with a great deal of indifference; but allegories are like compariſons. They are only juſt in one certain point of light.

12. Figure.

It is for this ſingle reaſon, that the parallel of uncovering the chalice with the ſcourging of Chriſt will be found exact. The Chriſtian who ſees the chalice uncovered is to figure to himſelf in what manner our Saviour was ſtripped to be ſcourged. But the compariſon muſt be made by way of oppoſition. The prieſt's action is dazling and pompous, and inſpires reſpect. The ſcourging of our Saviour ſet the Jews and Romans againſt Chriſt, as it was full of ignominy and outrage.

13. Figure.

After reading the Goſpel the prieſt riſes. We ſhall but juſt touch upon the ° ſermon which follows the reading and incenſing the Goſpel, which the prieſt kiſſes, and the choir too ought to kiſs, when the prieſt ſays, Behold the ſacred law, &c. to which the choir anſwers, I believe it with my heart and confeſs it with my mouth. The prieſt adds, may our ſins be blotted out by the words of the Goſpel. It is to be obſerved, that after the ſermon the creed is ſung by the whole congregation, &c. Which being ended, and the prieſt having kiſſed the altar turns to the people, and ſalutes them again in the terms already mentioned, which is followed by the offertory, and the prieſt then offers up the hoſt, which has ſome reference to the ſcourging. The latter was the beginning of Chriſt's ſuffering, the former the preliminary to the ſacrifice of the maſs.

14. Figure.

The prieſt raiſes the chalice, to offer it in the manner preſcribed in the law (of the Jews) and then covers it. Jeſus crowned with thorns ſhewed he was going to be raiſed as a victim offered to God for the ſalvation of all nations. It is well known, that the pagan victims were crowned before their being ſacrificed to their falſe Gods.

15. Figure.

The prieſt bleſſes the bread and wine which he has offered to God; he afterwards bleſſes the incenſe, and incenſes the bread and wine. He begs of God, that the odour of the ſacrifice may be more acceptable to him than the ſmoke of victims offered to him under the ancient law. Then the altar is incenſed. Laſtly, The prieſt waſhes his fingers in imitation of Chriſt's example, who waſhed his apoſtles feet, or rather as a memento to Chriſtians, that in order to celebrate the myſteries of the maſs, it is not ſufficient to have a conſcience clear of actions acknowledged as criminal, but that they muſt cleanſe themſelves from the leaſt blemiſhes too. Many other things might be here ſaid: but we ſhall only tell the reader, that therein is to be found Pilate's action, who waſhed his hands thereby declaring our Lord innocent.

16. Figure.

After the prieſt has waſhed his fingers, he bows to the middle of the altar, and addreſſing himſelf to the holy Trinity, makes a ſecond oblation of the bread and wine to them. He

° It will be ſpoken to lower.

He then turns to the people, and exhorts them to pray, that the ſacrifice going to be offered, may be acceptable to the divine Majeſty. The people anſwer the prieſt's intention, and in a low voice, which is called the Secretum of the maſs. The imagination of a pious Chriſtian may find ſome conformity between the prieſt turned towards the people, and Chriſt covered with a purple robe. We ſhall ſay nothing of it, that we may not engage too far in the boundleſs ocean of allegories.

17. FIGURE.

At the concluſion of the Secretum, which is to be conſidered as the treaſury wherein the prieſt locks up the prayers which the faithful have juſt ſaid, he raiſes his voice and ſays, [p] per omnia ſæcula, for ever and ever, &c. after which [q] he admoniſhes the people to lift up their hearts, for that the hour of conſecration is at hand. The words of the prieſt are going to bring down the Lord of heaven and earth [r] upon the altar, and the people anſwer that they are in the diſpoſition which the prieſt requires of them. The prieſt [s] exhorts them to return thanks to God for it, to which the people again anſwer; that [t] that is reaſonable. Then the prieſt addreſſes himſelf in a prayer to God the Father. This is what is called the [u] Preface which is followed by the Sanctus, Holy, holy, holy is the Lord, &c. which the people ſing in celebration of the glory and majeſty of God. This part of the maſs is thought to refer to Chriſt's condemnation, of which the reader will eaſily judge.

18. FIGURE.

What follows the preface is called the [w] Canon. It begins thus, Te igitur clementiſſime Pater, &c. We therefore beſeech thee, moſt merciful Father. In this part of the maſs, the living are commemorated in the manner obſerved in the remark; and God is prayed to for the redemption of their ſouls, the hopes of their ſalvation, &c. This part of the maſs is applied to Chriſt bearing the croſs and going to die for us, that we may live.

19. FIGURE.

After this commemoration, the prieſt covers the hoſt and chalice with his hands; a cuſtom which, as well as the elevation, is imitated by the Jewiſh and Gentile prieſts, who formerly laid their hands upon the beaſts they were going to ſacrifice, and afterwards held up part of the victim. This impoſition of hands ſignifies the union between the ſacrificer, and the hoſt he ſacrifices. In this moment the prieſt teſtifies, that, as far as he is able, he ſacrifices himſelf for the ſalvation of mankind. The people are in ſpirit to accompany the prieſt, and beg of God to be pleaſed to receive that teſtimony. Laſtly, The prieſt's laying his hands upon the hoſt and chalice, is found to keep up in the good Chriſtians mind [x] St. Veronica's action, who officiouſly gave her handkerchief to Chriſt when [p] Per omnia, &c. the people anſwer, Amen. Dominus vobiſcum, the people anſwer, & cum ſpiritu tuo.

[q] Surſum corda. The miniſters of Paganiſm in their religious ceremonies formerly uſed the words, hoc age, that is, mind what you are about. The Proteſtant Calviniſt miniſters often repeat theſe words, lift up your hearts, when they give the communion. Thus all religions adopt ſome forms for performing their myſteries. He who has obtained the vocation of a paſtor of the people (in whatever religion it be) will obſerve to pronounce theſe forms in ſuch a manner as to terrify and move the people. He will compoſe his eyes, geſtures and voice ſo as to gain the eſteem and attention of his auditors.

[r] Habemus ad Dominum. [s] Gratias agamus Domino. [t] Dignum & juſtum eſt.

[u] The preface, as it appears, is a wholſome admonition from the prieſt to the faithful. Its inſtitution is aſcribed to Pope Geloſius I. but it is very probable, that ſo eſſential a part of religious ſervice is incomparably more ancient; it being ſo natural, that it is to be met with in all religions, at leaſt they have ſome form equivalent to it.

[w] That is, a rule, becauſe this part which never alters, contains the order, rule and words whereby the conſecration is to be performed. The prieſt therein particularly recommends ſuch perſons for whom he is going to offer the ſacrifice. For although this ſacrifice be offered for the whole church, as a continuation of the ſacrifice of the croſs, yet a particular commemoration of ſome perſons is always made, &c. Explication des Prieres de la Meſſe.

[x] One of the holy women who followed Chriſt, bearing his croſs when he was going to ſuffer, ſeeing him covered with blood and ſweat, took off the linen or handkerchief that was on her head, and preſented it to our Saviour, who wiped himſelf with it, and as a teſtimony of his acknowledgment left three prints of his face when he was led to ſuffer death. It is to this act of charity of St. Veronica to our Saviour, the memory of which will laſt throughout all ages; that the image of our Saviour now preſerved in the Vatican is owing.

20. Figure.

The prieſt makes the ſign of the croſs over the hoſt and chalice, and pronounces the words by which Chriſt inſtituted the ſacrament of the Euchariſt, in order to perform the conſecration. It is then that our Saviour, who by pronouncing them at the laſt ſupper changed the ſubſtance of bread and wine, into that of his body and blood, here works the ſame ineffable change by his almighty power. This portion of the maſs is the true repreſentation of the ſacrifice of Chriſt on the croſs.

21. Figure.

In the ſame manner the adoration of the ſacred hoſt by the prieſt, and his lifting it up to be adored by the people, perfectly repreſent our Saviour lifted up upon the croſs, always to be adored, but chiefly at the time of his ſufferings [y].

22. Figure.

The prieſt having conſecrated the chalice by pronouncing Chriſt's words, This is the cup of my blood, &c. lifts up the blood of our Saviour for the people to adore, and to beg of God the fruits of that ſacrifice he has juſt been offering by their prayers.

23. Figure.

By vertue of this ſacrifice, the prieſt recommends to God the ſouls of all the faithful in purgatory, and chiefly of ſuch, whom he is under ſome particular obligation to remember. This prayer has a reference to that which Chriſt made on the croſs for his enemies. The compariſon would be thought a little forced, if by way of humility the pious did not reckon themſelves in the number of his enemies, who by their ſins crucify him every day; did they not think themſelves as dying in their ſins, and not to be reſcued from the flames of purgatory, but by the force of that ſacrifice which the prieſt offers for ſuch as are ſuffering in that purging fire.

24. Figure.

Then he lifts up his voice, and ſmiting his breaſt, implores the divine mercy upon himſelf and the congregation, through the interceſſion of ſuch ſaints whom he names. He begs of God a place in his kingdom for himſelf, and them, as the good thief did of Jeſus Chriſt upon the croſs.

25. Figure.

He lifts up the hoſt and cup, and ſays, the per omnia already mentioned, after which, he repeats the Lord's prayer. " [y] The ſigns of the croſs which he makes over the hoſt, " the chalice, and the altar repreſent to God the bleeding ſacrifice which his Son offered " up to him on the croſs, to do him that inexpreſſible honour, which all his creatures " together could not do him; and the ſame is ſignified by all thoſe ſigns which the prieſt " makes face on it, the handkerchief being thrice doubled. One of theſe holy faces is at Jeruſalem, another at Rome, and a third in Spain. The woman to whom this handkerchief belonged, whom tradition has always named Veronica, went, as they ſay, to Rome, where ſhe cured Tiberius of a dangerous diſtemper, by application of the holy face. This handkerchief fell into the hands of Pope Clement I. but we know not poſitively how it was handed down to Conſtantine's time, who preſerved it in the baſilica of St. Peter. John VIII. who was Pope in 705. conſecrated a chapel to it. Chifflet in his treatiſe De linteis Sepulchralibus, mentions the tranſlations of this relic; to whom we refer the reader. When it is ſhewn to the Roman people, after proſtrating themſelves before it, they muſt ſeveral times implore God's mercy. The pious on this occaſion obtain conſiderable indulgences. In France we have copies of this famous original. Thoſe of Montreuil and Cahors in Gaſcony have acquired great reputation by the miracles and extraordinary cures performed by them.

[y] Explication des ceremonies de la Meſſe. The prieſt is to ſtretch out his hands in ſaying the Lord's prayer, that his body may repreſent the figure of the croſs, which is the badge of Chriſtianity.

" makes over the hoſt, chalice, &c. during maſs." It is to be obſerved, that the prieſt having ſaid in a low voice what is to be pronounced in this manner in the canon of the maſs, at length raiſes his voice. The bread offered by the faithful is only conſecrated by him, to be diſtributed among them in the communion. Therefore with deſign to prepare them for the conſummation of the ſacrifice, he repeats the Lord's prayer aloud; and when he comes to give us this day our daily bread, the deacon takes the paten, and lifts it up, ſhewing it to the people, to inform them that the communion is going to be given. He then gives it to the prieſt, who puts all the hoſts into the paten, to diſtribute them to the communicants. The good Chriſtian who is going to participate of the ſacrament then becomes a true child of God, and may apply to him as a father; he makes a ſpiritual covenant with Chriſt, and this is the relation we find between the good Chriſtian and St. John, whom our Saviour made the virgin Mary own as her ſon.

26. FIGURE.

After the Lord's prayer, the prieſt ſays a private prayer to God to obtain his peace by the interceſſion of the holy virgin, and the reſt of the ſaints. At concluding it, he puts the ſacred hoſt upon the paten, and breaks it, which naturally ſets before the pious Chriſtian's eyes the agony of Chriſt, who recommended his ſoul to God after having been offered up to God to blot out ſin, which had broken the peace, and ſeparated man from God.

27. FIGURE.

Whilſt the prieſt is putting a portion of the hoſt into the chalice, the good Chriſtian is with the eyes of faith to follow Chriſt deſcending into hell.

28. FIGURE.

Then the prieſt and choir ſing the [z] Agnus Dei, &c. three times, and the prieſt ſmites his breaſt whilſt he ſays it. This action is an image of the grief of Chriſt's diſciples, who, having ſeen him ſuffer, returned home ſmiting their breaſts.

29. FIGURE.

After ſaying the Agnus, the prieſt ſays a prayer to himſelf, whereby he once again begs of God the peace of the church. The prayers ended, he kiſſes the altar and inſtrument [b] of peace preſented him by the deacon, which he returns to the deacon, and ſends it round to the congregation with theſe words ſaid to each of them, peace be with you. Whilſt the peace is kiſſing, he prepares himſelf for the communion by a private prayer. At taking the hoſt, after adoring it, he ſays in a low voice, I will eat of the celeſtial bread, &c. and ſmiting his breaſt, adds theſe words, [b] I am not worthy that thou ſhouldſt enter my houſe, &c. which he repeats three times. After he has received our Lord's body, he uncovers the chalice, repeating this verſe of the cxv. Pſalm (according to the vulgate) what ſhall I give unto the Lord for all the good things which he hath done unto me? He goes on with the reſt of that verſe, I will take the cup of ſalvation, &c. He makes the ſign of the croſs with the chalice ſaying, may the blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt keep my ſoul, &c. When the prieſt has received the communion, he gives it to the people. To the prieſt's communicating is applied the burying our Lord's ſacred body, who died, was buried, and deſcended into hell; that we might live. During the prieſt and people's communicating the choir ſing the anthem called Communion.

30. FIGURE.

[z] O Lamb of God, who takeſt away the ſins of the world, &c.

[a] The cuſtom of kiſſing in token of peace and from a religious principle is one of the moſt ancient in the church. The kiſs of peace was given after the Lord's prayer, to which were added theſe words, peace be with you. Theſe kiſſes might occaſion very carnal thoughts. The inſtituting the inſtrument of peace is aſcribed to Pope Leo II. who lived about 683. but others make it much more modern.

[b] Domine non ſum dignus, &c.

30. FIGURE.

After the communion, the prieſt putting [c] wine into the chalice, to make what is called the Ablution, repeats a ſhort prayer, whereby he begs of God, that the communion, which to the ſenſe appears a temporal remedy, may to the heart of the faithful prove a means to obtain a bleſſed eternity. Then he has wine and water poured out for the ſecond ablution, which he accompanies with another ſhort prayer; [d] after which he ſalutes the congregation. Theſe ablutions allegorically repreſent the waſhing and embalming the body of our Lord upon the croſs, offered by the prieſt. From this body it is, that the ſpiritual balm diſtils, which brings eaſe and health to the ſoul of the faithful communicant.

31. FIGURE.

The prieſt ſings the Poſt-Communion, which is a prayer wherein he begs of God the fruits of the ſacrament then juſt received. The fruits of this communion, whereby is typified Chriſt dead, are the glorious reſurrection of the regenerate Chriſtian. The Poſt-Communion may be the image of our Saviour's reſurrection.

32. FIGURE.

The action of the prieſt, who turning towards the congregation ſalutes them, is an agreeable image of Chriſt's appearing to his mother and diſciples. The prieſt turning towards them, ſalutes them as Chriſt's ambaſſadors, and pronounces peace to his ſoul, who, if we may be allowed the expreſſion, dies, and riſes again every day by the hands of the prieſt for all true Chriſtians.

33. FIGURE.

The laſt prayers, and the beginning of the Goſpel of St. John, which the prieſt repeats after the ſacrifice of the maſs, are wholſome inſtructions, which revive in the Chriſtian's heart thoſe inſtructions, which Chriſt, being raiſed, gave during 40. days to his diſciples.

34. FIGURE.

We have ſeen Chriſt offered up by the prieſt, in the Poſt-Communion we have ſeen the image of the reſurrection, and here we ſee that of his aſcenſion. The congregation is diſmiſſed with theſe words, Ite, Miſſa eſt: [e] Depart, the maſs is over. To which they anſwer, We thank God for it. In the ſame manner Chriſt by his glorious aſcenſion received the eternal reward of the ſacrifice, which he himſelf offered upon the croſs, both as prieſt and victim. The ſacrifice of our Saviour upon the croſs was the true and genuine maſs compoſed of all its parts, which appears by the explanation we have juſt given of them.

35. FIGURE.

Laſtly, The people receive the benediction from the [f] celebrant, or the biſhop, when preſent. This is a perfect image of thoſe our Saviour ſhowered down upon his apoſtles by the miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt.

It

[c] The wine of purification.

[d] He waſhes his hands and mouth, wipes the chalice, folds up the linen and corporals, the uſe of which we ſhall explain, when we come to the ſacred veſſels and linen.

[e] In the ceremonies of the worſhip of Iſis, the prieſts diſmiſſed the aſſembly in much ſuch a form, called The Diſmiſſion. Vide Polyd. Virgil. The Calviniſt miniſters, after giving the benediction of Moſes, as in the book of Numbers, diſmiſſed the people with this form, Depart in peace, and may the God of peace be with you, &c.

[f] This benediction muſt be given with eyes lifted up to heaven, after kiſſing the altar. The arms muſt be extended, and then gently brought back towards the ſtomach, that the hands may join in an affectionate manner for the congregation of the faithful. This ſtretching out the arms, and joining the hands are both myſterious, and ſhew the charity with which the prieſt calls his ſpiritual brethren to God. At pronouncing the benediction, he is to lean in an amorous poſture towards the altar. Theſe rules are preſcribed by the Italian Myſtagogues. Vide Piſcara, Baudry, and others.

It is to be obſerved, how thoſe who come to maſs are placed. The ſanctuary, otherwiſe called the Presbyterium, is appointed for the celebrant, and his officers; the choir for the clergy in ſurplices. The upper part of the nave for men, and the lower for women.

The congregation muſt be on their knees from the beginning of the maſs to the Kyrie; ſtanding during the aſperſion of the holy water; on their knees during the prayer that follows it; ſtanding at the gloria in excelſis; kneeling during the prayers. At the beginning of the epiſtle they may ſit to the Goſpel. During the Goſpel they ſtand. At ſermon they ſit, and kneel at prayers. While the prieſt repeats the firſt words of the Creed they ſtand, then ſit, kneel, and bow when he comes to & incarnatus eſt, &c. conceived by the Holy Ghoſt. They afterwards ſit to the end of the creed, but riſe till the prieſt has ſaid oremus. The people likewiſe ſit till the preface, and during it is ſaying ſtand. They kneel down at the Sanctus, and continue ſo 'till after the communion; ſit after the holy ſacrament is put up in the tabernacle, riſe when the prieſt ſays Dominus vobiſcum; kneel down again till after the prieſt's benediction, and then riſe and continue ſtanding during the laſt Goſpel. And this is the benefit which may be reaped from the different poſtures which the church cauſes to be obſerved during maſs. Kneeling is a ſign of the pious Chriſtian's humiliation and repentance; ſtanding ſhews the confidence with which we ought to addreſs our prayers to God, and the courage with which we ought to execute his will; ſitting ſignifies the ſteadineſs neceſſary for perſevering in his ſervice.

The people, during maſs, ſhould be forbidden all talk and diſcourſe, looking about them, or being in any indecent poſture. A woman ſhould avoid trying the force of her charms, and not make uſe of her power in preſence of the ſupreme Being. As for men, armed with Chriſtian modeſty, they ſhould endeavour to blunt the weapons of coquetry. Their eyes ſhould be ſtrangers to their ſhe pariſhioners, and ignorant that there are ladies in the congregation of the faithful; and avoid their looks. Rich clothes, a bare neck, briſk, wanton, amorous black eyes cannot fail debauching the Chriſtian from religious worſhip.

Nor is modeſty leſs commendable in the prieſt. A jolly eaſy prieſt, who carries a ſort of health about him which one may call agreeable, and knows how to put the talents nature has beſtowed on him, to the beſt uſe, who has an audible, ſoft, harmonious voice, who affects a languiſhing polite devotion, who lifts his eyes to heaven with an humble affability, gives the communion with a plump white hand, which he takes care to ſhew, beſtows his benediction on the congregation with a tender amorous eye, and ſhews them by geſtures, eloquent indeed, but ſtudied at his leiſure hours, that he thinks on nothing but their ſalvation; ſuch a prieſt ſaves few ſouls —— it is well if he ſaves his own.

The advantages of the maſs are the partaking of public and common prayer, the reciprocal union of all the faithful, the edification they receive the one from the other, the ſubmiſſion and obedience paid to the church. Nor is it to be objected as an imperfection, the cuſtom long ſince eſtabliſhed of ſaying maſs in Latin, which now the leaſt part of the congregation underſtands. On the contrary, thence reſults an advantage, which Jews as well as Catholics are ſenſible of; that is, uniformity of ſervice, and the pleaſure of being able, by a habit, to follow the curate of the pariſh. The Jews have their ſervice in Hebrew; but becauſe this tongue is unknown to many of them, recourſe is had to tranſlations, by which means the Jew can exactly keep up with the Rabbi. The hours in the vulgar tongue are of the ſame uſe to the Catholic; not to mention mechanical devotion, that excellent guide, and [s] road to piety, ſupported by a tolerable memory and

[s] L'Enfant petit, ſi-tôt qu'il eſt levé,
Dire on luy fait, Pater noſter Ave.
Semblablement le Credo des apôtres,
Et en après, qu'a dit ſes patenôtres,
Le dit Enfant, par forme coûtumiere,
Dupain demande à quleque chambriere.

By cuſtom taught, the child when riſen,
Makes his addreſſes firſt to heaven:
Of Paternoſters ſays a ſcore,
And next the Creed is huddled o'er.
Then after all this godly clutter,
Away runs Jack for bread and butter.

Taken from an old French Poet quoted by Bayle, Tom. V. of his Queſtions d'un provincial.

LES

CEREMONIES

DES

PETITES MESSES

Representées

EN

TRENTE CINCQ

FIGURES

avec leurs

CONFORMITÉZ à la

PASSION de nôtre SEIGNEUR

JESUS-CHRIST.

Jesus-Christ va au Jardin des Olives.

Le PRÊTRE va à L'AUTEL.

J.C. arrivé au Jardin y fait sa priere.

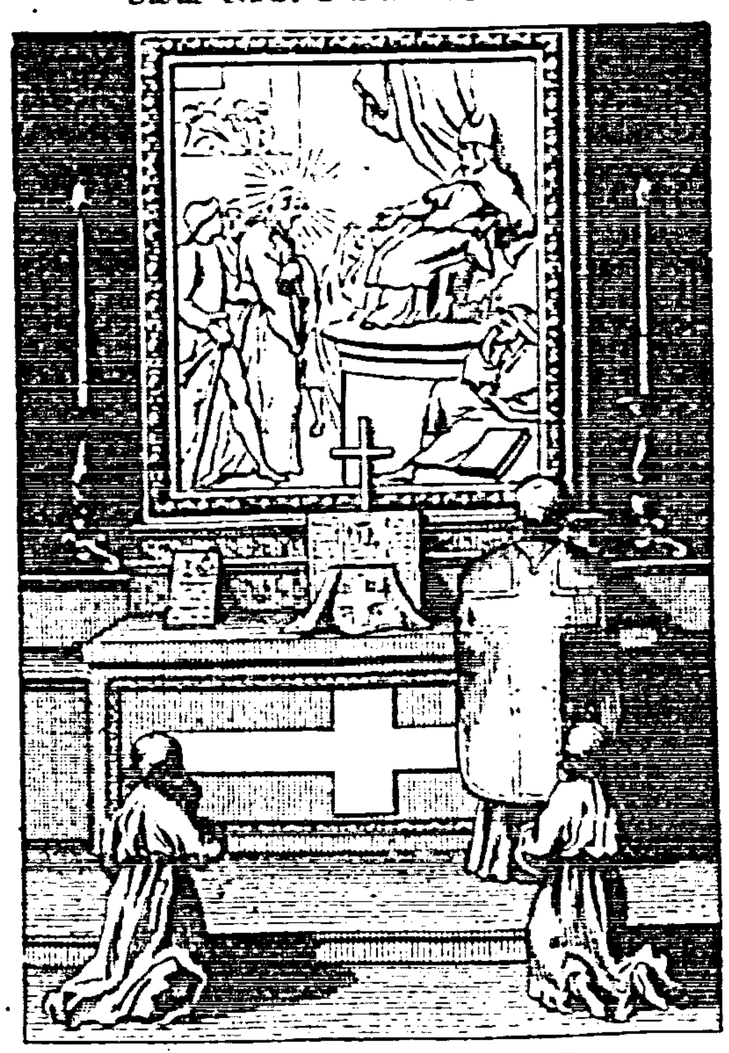
Le PRÊTRE commence la MESSE.

Jesus-Christ prosterné sué de Sang.

Au CONFITEOR.

Jesus Christ trahi par un baiser.

Le PRÊTRE baise L'AUTEL.



Jesus-Christ lié et pris.

Le PRÊTRE va au Côté de L'EPITRE.

9

Jesus-Christ amené chez Anne.

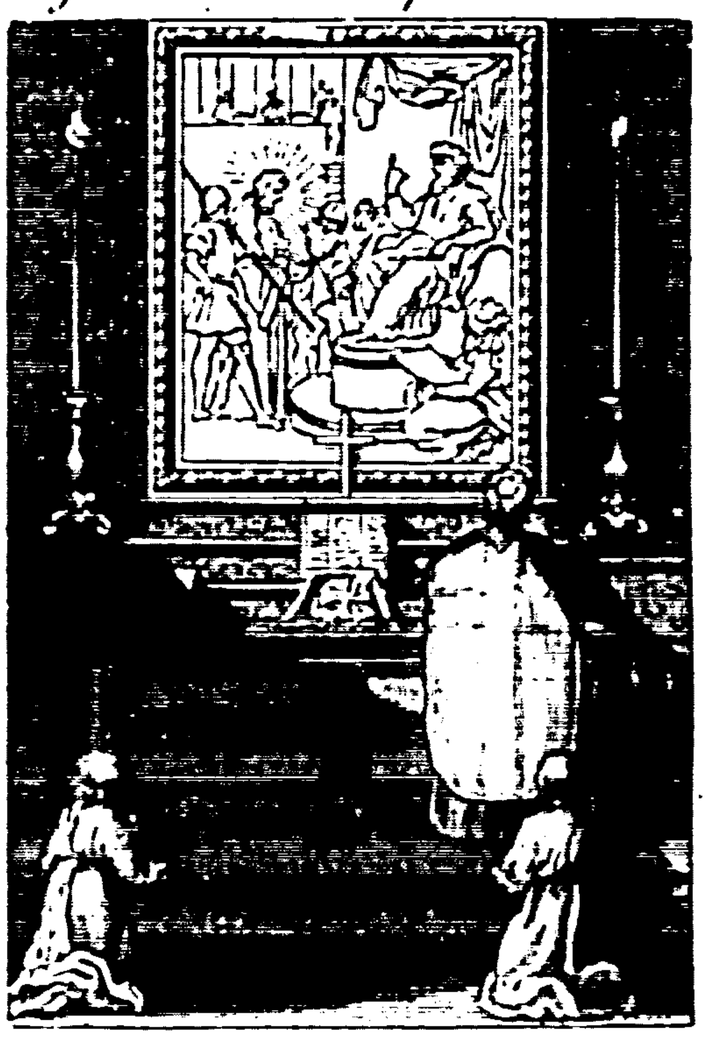
A L'INTROÏTE.

7

S.t Pierre renie trois fois Jesus-Christ.

Le PRÊTRE dit le KYRIE ELEYSON.

8



J.C. regardant Pierre lui fait pleurer son peché.

Le P. tourné vers le Peuple dit DOMINUS VOBIS CUM

Sub. le Clerc delin.

Jesus Christ accused before Pilate.

the Priest reads the Epistle.

JC. accused before Herod makes no reply.

the Priest bowing down before the Alter says MUNDA COR &c.

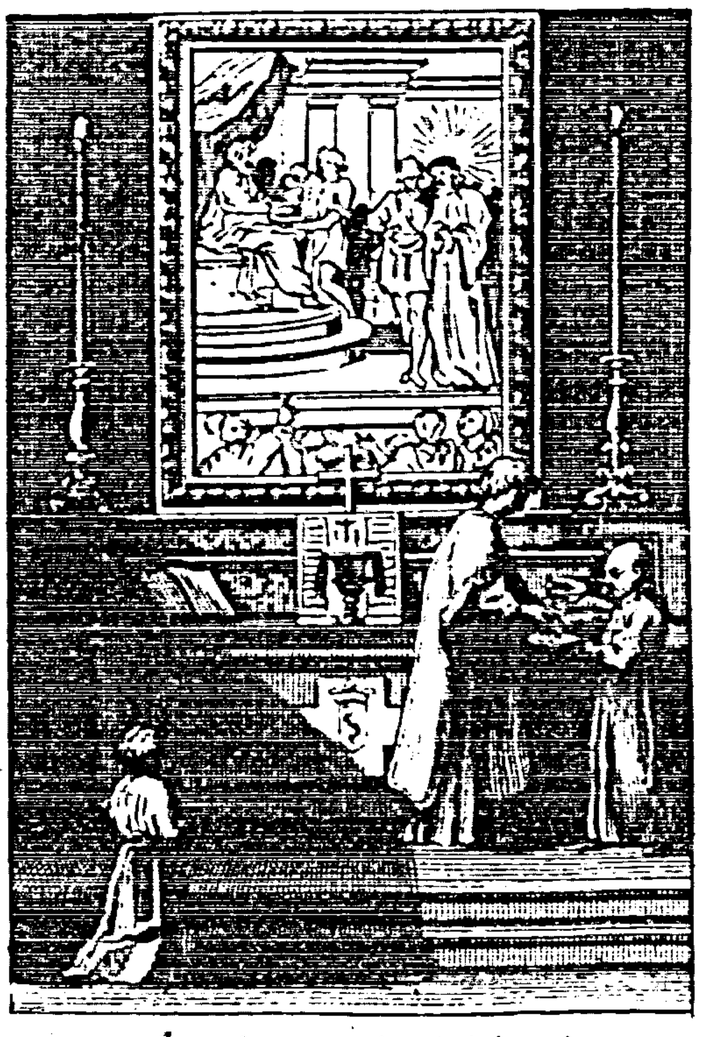
Jesus Christ sent back from Herod to Pilate.

the Priest reads the Gospel.

JC. stripd in order to be Scourged.

the Priest unveils ye Chalice.

JC. tied to the Pillar, and Scourged.

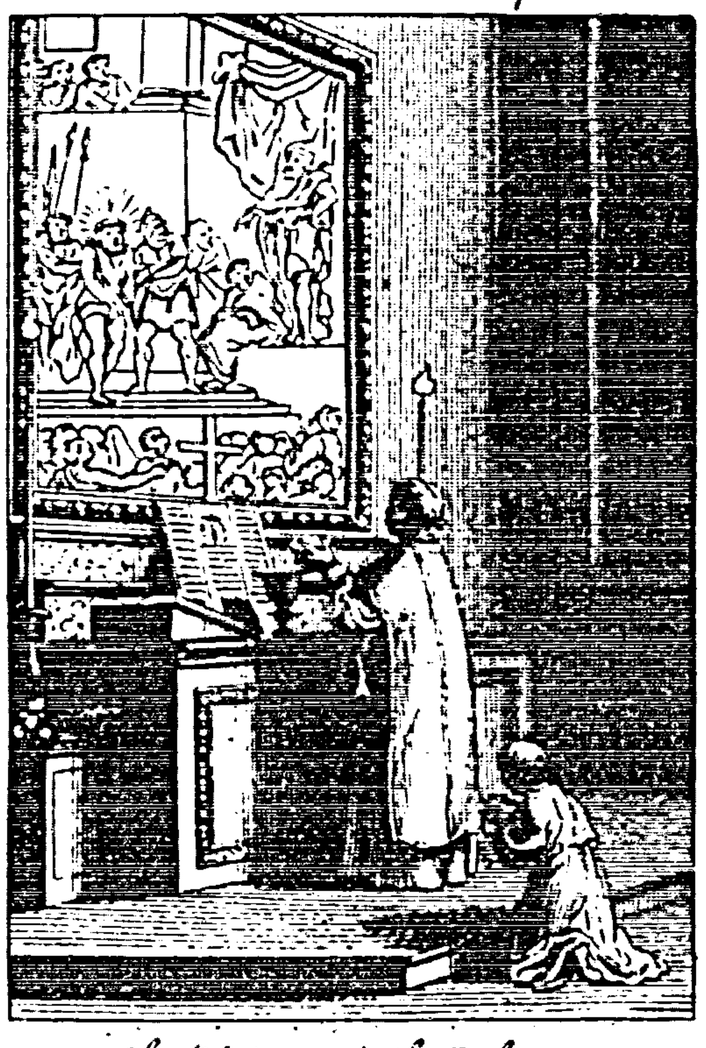


The oblation of the HOST.

JC. Crowned with thorns.

the Priest after offering up ye Chalice covers it.

Pilate washes his hands and declares JC. to be innocent.



the Priest washes his hands.

JC. dressd in a purple Robe.

the Priest turning to ye people says ORATE FRATRES

JC. condemned to be crucified.

the Priest reads the Preface.

Sébastien le Clerc del.

C. Du Bosc Ex.

J.C bearing J Crosse he is to dye upon that we might live the PRIEST Joyning his hands prays for the faithfull that are living.

S! Veronica offers J.C her handkerchief

The Priest extends his hands over the HOST and CHALICE.

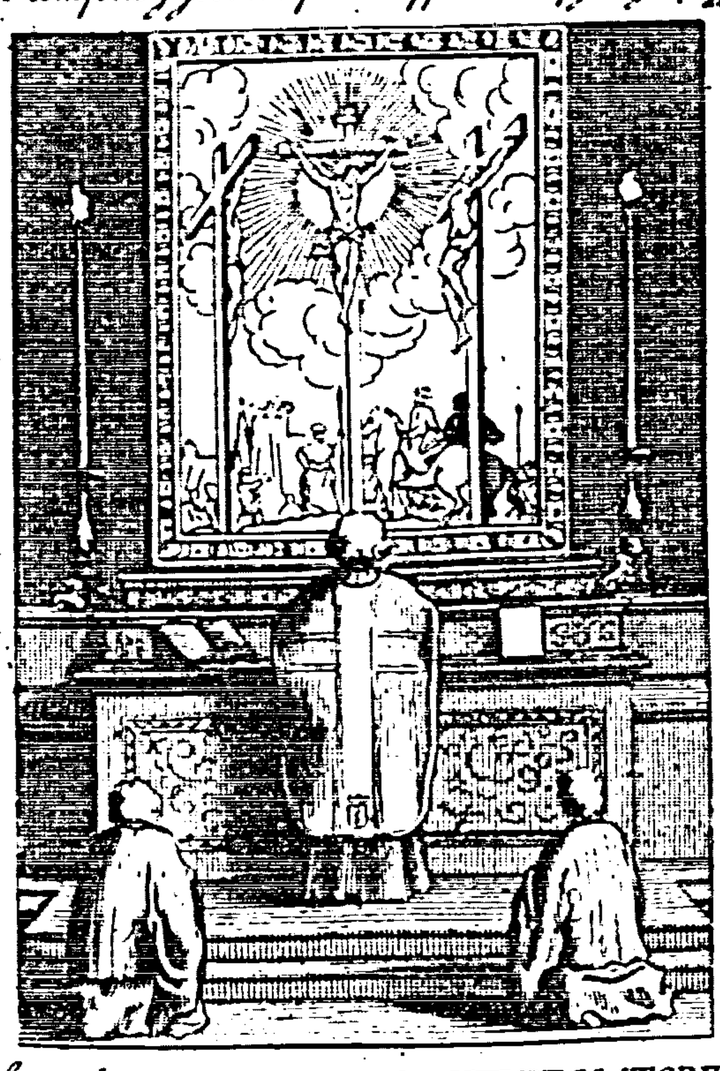
J.C Nailed to the Crosse

the PRIEST makes Signs of the Crosse upon the HOST & CHALICE.

J.C is raised up in the ayr

the priest adores the host before Elevation thereof

the Blood of J.C shed upon the Crosse



the Elevation of the Chalice

J.C prays for his Enimies

the priest commemorates J faithfull deceased

J.C comforts J good thief with J promise of going to paradise

the priest says NOBIS QUOQUE PECCATORIBUS

J.C recommends S! John as he was on to the B. Virgin at the PATER NOSTER &c.

J.C gives up his Ghost to his Holy Father

The priest devides J HOST.

Sabla Claudia.

CDuBosc Exc.

the Soul of JC descends into Limbo

the priest puts a small part of the Host into the CHALICE.

JC. being aspired several people whom smiting their breasts.

the priest Smites his breast repeating three times AGNUS DEI &c.

the Body of JC. is imbalmed

the Priest takes the ABLUTION.

the Resurrection of Jesus Christ

the Post-communion

the Body of JC. is Layed in a New Sepulchre

the Priest receives the Communion

JC appears to his Mother and his Disciples.

the Priest turning to the people says DOMINUS VOBISCUM.

JC. appears to, and instructs his disciples for 40 days.

the LAST COLLECTS.

JC. in the presence of his Disciples, ascends into Heaven.

the Priest turning to the People Says ITE MISA EST.

JC. Sends the H: Ghost to his Apostles the Priest gives Benediction to the Congregation

Seb. le Clerc del.

C. Du Bosc Exc.

The CONSECRATION of the GREAT CROSS. | CONSECRATION de la grande CROIX.

The manner of THURIFYING CROSSES. | L'ENCENSEMENT des CROIX.

The manner of CHRISTENING a BELL. | LE BATÊME de la CLOCHE.

The manner of BLESSING a BELL. | BENEDICTION de la CLOCHE.

The manner of PERFUMING a BELL. | On PARFUME la CLOCHE.

The CONSECRATION of an IMAGE. | CONSECRATION de une IMAGE.

and long practice, which has been continued down through so many ages from father to son, and will continue to the latest posterity. How strange soever the country may be to the Catholic or Jew, with the help we have just lent them, they will never be at a loss for a priest or Rabbi.

Different Masses.

We shall speak of the masses of Passion-week, when we come to the ceremonies of Easter; and of some particulars of the first episcopal mass, when we treat of episcopal consecration. We here design to describe what is peculiar to high or solemn mass, to some papal masses, and to the mass for the dead. We pass over an infinite number of [h] masses, which have nothing peculiar in them but the name.

High Mass, Solemn Mass, Episcopal Mass.

When [i] there is to be a solemn mass, [k] the bishop, if it be he who officiates, is attended to church by the canons and other ministers of the church, who go and wait upon him in pomp at his palace; but if that happens to be too far from the church, the chapter, who wait for him at the church gate, advance to meet him, as soon as ever he appears in sight; and as soon as he draws near to the church, the bells are rung to give the people notice of it, and the moment my lord bishop sets his foot within the church, the organs begin to play. The master of the ceremonies gives the sprinkler to the head canon, who presents it to the bishop after first kissing both that and his sacred hand. The bishop in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, sprinkles himself with it, and then the canons, and then goes and says a prayer before the altar whereon stands the holy sacrament, at a desk prepared for that purpose, and does the same at the high altar. From thence he goes into the vestry, there to put on the ornaments suitable to the solemnity of the mass, which he receives in the following manner.

The sub-deacon goes to the credence, and there takes the episcopal sandals and stockings, which he carries and presents to the bishop lifted up high. He kneels down, pulls off the bishop's shoes and stockings, who is in the midst of seven or eight acolytes all kneeling as well as the deacon, who spread the prelates cowl in such a manner, that nothing indecent may appear in putting on his Lordship's stockings. [l] Two acolytes, after washing

[h] Such are the mass of St. Mary of the snow celebrated on 5. Aug. the masses of the saints, that of St. Margaret, patroness of lying-in women, that of the feast of St. John Baptist, at which are said three masses on account of the triple mystery to be found in the life of this saint, which are, baptism, the Nazareat, and the quality of fore-runner of Jesus Christ. Such too is the mass of the innocents, at which the Gloria in excelsis and Allelujah are omitted; and it being a day of mourning, the altar is in violet. Vide Casal. de Ritib. &c. It is now above a century since some French saints have lost their masses by the authority of Pius V. and Clement VIII. who reformed the missal. For instance, S. Bigobert, S. William, S. Maur, S Bonet, &c. are degraded to make room for some Italian saints. As to ordinary masses, there are some, which are said for the Christian's soul, and contribute to fetch him out of purgatory, or at least to ease him there. Whosoever has his salvation at heart must never forget this point. A necessary fund must be left by will to the curate to rescue him from the everlasting pains, he has merited. In Spain, Portugal and Italy it often happens, that the souls of the faithful are the first heirs of the wealth they leave behind them in this world. The dying man sometimes bequeaths twenty or thirty thousand masses to his soul, charging the pastor, in whom he confides most, to remit this stock to him in the other world, immediately after his departure hence. There are likewise private masses, said for strayed goods, cattle, or health, for travellers, for returning God thanks, &c. These masses, as well as those beforementioned, bear one common name of votive masses. The difference between high and low mass is well known. That said at sea is called dry mass, the cup being retrenched, for fear of spilling the consecrated wine by the ship's motion. Vide Durant. Rat. and Cassand. de rebus Liturg.

[i] There are several kinds of solemn mass. Such are the collegiate, the pontifical, those celebrated before the Pope, Cardinals or bishops, that of Christmas, that of Passion-week, of some of which we shall speak in their places. It shall now suffice to speak of the episcopal mass.

[k] This description is taken from Pescara, Baudry, and the ceremonial of bishops.

[l] The deacons, acolytes, &c. are to be in their proper robes. This remark shall suffice for all the ceremonies we shall hereafter describe.

waſhing their hands, take the ſacred veſtments, lift them up, and give them to the two deacons aſſiſtants to put on the biſhop, after he has waſhed his hands. The deacon ſalutes the biſhop, takes off his cowl, and puts him on the amict, the croſs of which he kiſſes; then they give him the albe, the girdle, the croſs for his breaſt, the ſtole and pluvial. He kiſſes the croſs that is upon them, one after another, and teſtifies the extreme veneration he has, or ought to have for the croſs of Chriſt. The deacons aſſiſtants too, ought moſt devoutly to kiſs thoſe ſacred habiliments. When the biſhop is ſeated, they put him on the mitre; and a prieſt gives him the paſtoral ring. The deacon preſents him his right glove, and the ſub-deacon his left; which each of them kiſs, as likewiſe the hand they have the honour to ſerve. In all theſe circumſtances there are ſome little ceremonies to be obſerved, the particulars of which we ſhall leave to Chriſtian myſtery-hunters; it is of much greater conſequence to inform the reader, that ejaculatory prayers have been adapted to each piece of the epiſcopal robes, and that the devotion of this ceremony is ſupported and ſtrengthened by the ſinging the office of [m] Tierce.

The biſhop being thus robed in all his [n] ornaments, his clergy range themſelves all round him. Two canons deacons place themſelves on each ſide him, each in their dalmatica, and after them, a deacon, and a ſub-deacon. The thuriferary appears with the incenſer, and a prieſt with the navet, or box for holding the incenſe. The biſhop takes incenſe out of the navet, puts it into the incenſer, and gives it his bleſſing. He then ſalutes the croſs which is upon the veſtry-altar, and goes in proceſſion to that where he is to celebrate maſs. The thuriferary walks at the head of the proceſſion, after him the two ceroferaries, with lighted tapers in their hands, march on each ſide of the croſs-bearer. All the clergy come after, the ſub-deacon who is to ſing the epiſtle, carries raiſed to his breaſt the book of the Goſpel ſhut, in which is the biſhop's maniple. A deacon and a prieſt with their pluvials on, go before the biſhop, who, to do honour [o] to his dignity, walks leaning humbly on his two deacons aſſiſtants, holding the ſhepherd's crook in his left-hand, and the right ſomewhat raiſed, ever in a readineſs to give his benedictions to ſuch good Chriſtians as he meets in his way. The biſhop being now near the altar, ſalutes his clergy with one ſingle bow of the head. Being on the loweſt ſtep of the altar, he gives his crook to a ſub-deacon, and a deacon takes off his mitre. Then the prelate and his officiating clergy make a low bow to the croſs on the altar; after which they all retire, except the ſub-deacon who has the care of the epiſcopal crook, the thuriferary, two deacons aſſiſtants, one [p] prieſt aſſiſtant, who ſtands on the biſhop's right-hand, one deacon at his left, and one behind this laſt. The biſhop repeats the Confiteor [q] with them, and the choir ſing the Introibo. At the end of the confeſſion the ſub-deacon takes the [m] The Tierce has been already explained, under the head of canonical hours.

[n] Each of the biſhop's ornaments contains in it ſome myſtery. The ſtole repreſents the yoke of the Goſpel. The biſhop's ſhoes are taken off by vertue of what God ſaid to Moſes, put off thy ſhoes from off thy feet, &c. Iſaiah himſelf admired the ceremony of this myſterious putting off the ſhoes, when he ſays, Oh how beautiful are the feet of ſuch as love peace! The dalmatica, which is in the form of a croſs, ſhews the deacon that he muſt be crucified to the world. The albe repreſents the purity of the ſoul of the prieſt. The epiſcopal ring points out the biſhop's ſpiritual marriage with the church. To make the compariſon the cloſer, we might ſay, that the biſhop uſes her as many husbands to their wives, whom they forſake for miſtreſſes. His gloves ſignify, that he is to be inſenſible of the good works he performs, or that he muſt direct them to a ſpiritual end. The girdle, that he is to be girded with juſtice and vertue: the ſandals that he ought thenceforth to walk in the paths of the Lord; the two horns of the mitre, the old and new teſtament; the ſhepherd's crook, his correction and paternal authority. The pluvial, which formerly was a dreſs for travelling and fatigue, from whence it is plain that it took its name, repreſents the miſeries of this life expoſed to temptations and human infirmities; thus a biſhop who has long been groaning under the preſſing weight of ſeveral fat benefices, as often as he puts on the pluvial, becomes a living image of the Chriſtian, whoſe life is expoſed to perpetual temptation. We have borrowed theſe allegories from the moſt able dealers in myſtery, ſuch as Coſalius and others.

[o] Honoris causâ. Bauldry Manuale Sacr. Cerem. p. 165.

[p] An arch-deacon or arch-prieſt. Vide Cerem. Epiſc.

[q] The pagan prieſts likewiſe practiſed confeſſion. Before they approached the altars, or ſacrificed, they prayed the Gods to pardon their ſins, and by a voluntary confeſſion prevented the chaſtiſement they were afraid of both on their own, and their people's account, in caſe they ſhould fail to own themſelves ſinners. Perhaps they both were perſuaded, that they might afterwards look on themſelves as regenerate. This idea has loſt nothing of its force among Chriſtians. They who think themſelves eaſed of the burthen of their iniquities by a long and vain-glorious penance, eaſily forget their old ſins, and fancy themſelves whenever they pleaſe in a ſtate proper for a ſpiritual and intimate converſation with the Deity.

the maniple out of the Goſpels, kiſſes it, and gives it to the biſhop to do the ſame; after which kiſſing his Lordſhip's hand, he puts it on his left arm, and in the mean time, the canons in their robes repeat the confeſſion. Then the prelate goes up to the altar praying all the time, and continuing his prayer, or rather repeating a new one, he leans towards the altar, ſtretching out his hands upon the table of it, and affectionately kiſſing it in the middle, when he comes to the mention of the holy relics contained in it. The ſub-deacon preſents the Goſpels, which he kiſſes. The thuriferary comes forward with the incenſer and navet which he gives to the deacon, and he to the biſhop to bleſs the incenſe. The celebrant then takes the incenſer, incenſes the altar, gives it back to the deacon, takes the mitre from another deacon, goes to the epiſtle ſide, and is there three times incenſed by the deacon who holds the incenſer. After this, the biſhop ſalutes the holy croſs, takes the croſier, into his left-hand, and leaning upon his two deacons aſſiſtants, whilſt the deacon and ſub-deacon remain at the altar, goes to his epiſcopal throne. There laying aſide his mitre, and making the ſign of the croſs, which begins at the forehead and ends at the breaſt, he reads the introite out of a miſſal which the officiating prieſt holds, whilſt another holds a burning taper to light his lordſhip. The two deacons point with their finger to what he is to read, and then all together ſing the Kyrie, after which the biſhop puts on his mitre and gremial (a ſort of ſacerdotal apron) and ſits down. The two deacons aſſiſtants ſit down on each ſide of him, and the prieſt aſſiſtant places himſelf on a ſtool. They all riſe whilſt the choir ſing the end of the Kyrie; then the biſhop turning towards the altar at firſt ſings aloud Gloria in excelſis, but ends it in a low voice with his miniſters. We have been thus particular upon the preliminaries to the epiſcopal maſs, that the reader might be fully informed how a biſhop prepares himſelf for ſacrificing the body of Chriſt; but we ſhall be ſhorter as to the reſt of his religious act.

There is nothing peculiarly obſervable as to the gradual, Allelujah or Goſpel, only that the laſt is ſung in a ſort of proceſſion. The maſter of the ceremonies walks firſt, after him the thuriferary, and then the ceroferaries each with a burning taper. A ſub-deacon follows with his hands joined in a praying poſture. The deacon comes next with the Goſpel on his ſtomach. This devout company paſſing in review before the altar, bend the knee by way of ſalutation, and when they are at the place for reading the Goſpel; the deacon, who then ſtands between the taper-bearers, turns to the right of the altar, opens the book, and begins the Goſpel. The biſhop riſes, takes off his mitre and gremial, when the deacon ſays Dominus vobiſcum, makes the ſign of the croſs, when he comes to theſe words, here beginneth the holy Goſpel; and laſtly, bleſſes himſelf by again croſſing himſelf; after which he takes his crozier, croſſes himſelf again, and all his miniſters do the ſame after him.

The Goſpel being read, the celebrant kiſſes the book, and they all return in the ſame order they came. The prieſt aſſiſtant incenſes the biſhop.

Next, the biſhop, or one of the canons who is a prieſt, preaches. After ſermon, the deacon, who ſung the Goſpel, goes and ſtands at the biſhop's left-hand, and leaning a little forward confeſſes before the biſhop.

As ſoon as this confeſſion is ended, the prieſt aſſiſtant publiſhes the indulgences, and the biſhop gives the abſolution. If there be no ſermon, they go on to the Goſpel and Creed, which are repeated in ceremony, as all the reſt is.

The Offertory follows the Creed, which the biſhop reads ſtanding and bare-headed; and then goes back to his ſeat, and puts on his mitre. A deacon takes off his paſtoral ring, another his gloves, and ſome lay-man of diſtinction preſents him [r] the baſon to waſh his hands. The arch-deacon, whom the ceremonial conſtantly calls the prieſt aſſiſtant, gives him the napkin. His lordſhip again goes up to the altar ſupported by his two aſſiſtants; the ſub-deacon goes to the credence, and by the help of two acolytes, puts on on his ſhoulders the veil that covered the ſacred veſſels; ſo that it hangs a little lower on the right ſide, than on the left. With his left-hand he takes the chalice and paten, whereon are two [t] hoſts in good order and covered with a pall. The right-hand lies lightly over the veil, the longeſt ſide of which ſerves to cover the chalice. An acolyte follows the ſub-deacon to the altar with wine and water. The deacon gives the paten to the celebrant, all this part of the maſs ſolemnly celebrated by the biſhop is performed as in common maſſes.

[r] The ceremony of waſhing of hands before the ſacrifice was generally, and ſtill is, practiſed by the Pagans.

The prieſt aſſiſtant is to take care that the prelate, who officiates, exactly follows the rubric of the maſs. [t] He may be in ſome meaſure called his Prompter. Some of the miniſters are to be on each ſide the altar with burning tapers to honour the elevation of the holy ſacrament.

When the biſhop elevates the hoſt, the deacon kneeling on his right ſide raiſes the border of the celebrant's planet, which he likewiſe does at the elevation of the chalice. We muſt not omit telling the reader, that an acolyte three times incenſes the body and blood of our Lord at the elevation. After that, the miniſters who lighted the myſteries of the ſacrifice with their [u] tapers, withdraw without the [w] Presbyterium to put them out, unleſs they aſſiſt in giving the communion.

After the Agnus Dei, the prieſt aſſiſtant places himſelf at the biſhop's right-hand, and a deacon on the left. The former kneels whilſt the celebrant ſays a ſhort prayer, then riſes, and both kiſs the altar. The celebrant gives the peace to the prieſt, who turns his left [x] cheek to receive it. Having thus ſaluted each other with a holy kiſs, the prieſt aſſiſtant diſtributes the peace he has received to the choir, and begins his pious liberality by the perſon of the higheſt diſtinction in the congregation. As to the laity, they have what is called the inſtrument of peace given them to kiſs, which at leſs ſolemn maſſes is conſtantly uſed inſtead of an immediate kiſs. What follows, to the concluſion, is not at all different from what is practiſed at common maſſes.

By this deſcription the reader may have a pretty general notion of what are called ſolemn Maſſes; and the cut will completely lay before his eyes the magnificence of this ceremony. He will therein ſee high maſs celebrated at the church of Notre Dame, which is the cathedral of Paris.

SOLEMN MASS celebrated by the POPE.

WE ſhall not here undertake a deſcription of every thing to be performed at the Pope's chapel, from the moment he ſets his foot into it in order to perform his devotions, till he goes out again. Such a detail would tire the reader. Perhaps he is very little in pain to know [y]: that there muſt be a Cardinal-deacon on the left to take off his Holineſs's mitre, an auditor of the rota to receive it, another Cardinal-deacon to take off his hat (il berettino) who muſt be at his Holineſs's right-hand; that whilſt the Pope is at prayer, the Cardinal who celebrates maſs, advances in order to ſay the confeſſion, and that then one of the two aſſiſtants muſt ſtand at a diſtance, after which the Pope begins the confeſſion; that at the indulgence the celebrant draws a little back, to receive

the

[t] Mundæ. Cerem. Epiſc. Lib. II.

[t] Suggerit illi ſubmiſſâ voce, vel modeſtè nutu indicat, ſi memoriæ lapſæ, vel aliâ de cauſâ deficeret. Vide Cerem. Epiſc.

[u] The cuſtom of lamps or tapers burning in temples and at altars, has always been obſerved as well by Jews as Gentiles: and ſtill continues amongſt the former, there being night and day a lamp burning before the Heebal. The ancient Heathens punctually obſerved this practice, which has nothing ridiculous or ſhocking in itſelf, but the abuſe that may be made of it among ſilly devotees, who think their prayers much more effectual, becauſe they pray to God, or recommend themſelves to ſome ſaint, by the light of a candle burning before his image. Were the candle to be taken away from ſuch people, they would loſe themſelves in their prayer books, and all the ſprings of their devotion put out of order.

[w] The reader has been already informed what this is. That part of the church too, appointed for lodging the curate, is ſo called.

[x] Appropinquat ſiniſtram genam ſuam ſiniſtræ celebrantis. Vide Cerem Epiſc.

[y] Vide The Maeſtro di Camera of Seſtini.

the maniple from the ſub-deacon of the chapel, and that the Cardinal-deacon, who was retired at ſome diſtance, comes forward towards his Holineſs who goes through the confeſſion with him; after which the other Cardinal-deacon gives him his hat, which he had taken with the mitre. The deacon on the right ſide [z] extends the ſtrings of the mitre, and both of them leading the Pope to his throne, hold the end of his Holineſs's pluvial. Every time that the vicar of Chriſt lifts up his ſacred hand to croſs himſelf, or to give the benediction, the Cardinal-deacon, at his right alone, lifts up the pluvial; but when his Holineſs raiſes both his hands, the Cardinal-deacon at his left lifts it up too. We omit the bows, genufluxions, &c. of the Cardinal-deacons to the Agnus, and the kiſſes of peace which his Holineſs beſtows on them; we likewiſe omit all the bows of their eminences at their entrance into the chapel, which have much more of ceremony than devotion. The firſt of thoſe bows is to the altar, the ſecond to the celebrant if robed, a third for ſuch of their brethren as are come before them. The Cardinals being in their places, ſay a ſhort prayer kneeling, and then riſing remain in that poſture till the congregation and the Pope be come. Their eminences ſalute him [a] with an inclination of the head, but the reſt of the congregation kneel in order to receive his bleſſing which he never fails giving them as he paſſes. The treatiſes on the ceremonies obſerved at the holy Father's court, give us ſome other obſervations leſs intereſting to the reader than what we have already mentioned.

The Pope having taken his place, the Cardinals do him homage thus; riſing off their ſeats, they go with their cowls trailing after them, and firſt ſalute the altar, which is the throne of JESUS CHRIST; then they ſalute his vicar, and kiſs his hand. Going a ſtep or two back, they make a ſecond bow to the viſible head of the church, and next ſalute their collegues, ambaſſadors and Princes. Being returned to their places, they ſtand bareheaded, till the reſt of the Cardinals have gone through the ſame ceremonies; but when the ordinary prelates go to do homage in their turn, their eminences ſit down and are covered. Theſe prelates, who are archbiſhops, and biſhops aſſiſtants, penitentiaries of St. Peter's, &c. do homage only when the Pope officiates; archbiſhops and biſhops kiſs his knee, penitentiaries his foot.

Theſe are ſome of the ceremonies, obſerved in the devotion of the apoſtolical court, of all courts in the world the moſt ceremonious. It was neceſſary to give a ſhort account of them, before entring upon ſeveral other particulars relating to the Pope's ſolemn maſs. We ſhall here copy what Aimon has ſaid of them in his Tableau de la Cour de Rome."

" Solemn maſs is different from thoſe celebrated by Cardinals or prelates, in two things " always obſerved when the Pope himſelf officiates. The firſt is the ſinging two Goſpels, " one in Greek, the other Latin. The ſecond thing peculiar in the papal maſs is the commu- " nion, performed after this manner. After ſinging the Agnus Dei, [b] the Pope goes to his " throne. The Cardinal-deacon of the Goſpel ſtands on the Goſpel ſide with his hands cloſe " together, ſo that he can ſee the ſacrament upon the altar, and the Pope going to his throne. " When his Holineſs is got thither, the deacon goes and takes the conſecrated wafer " upon the paten, covered with a veil, and turning to the people, elevates it three times, " that is, in the middle and at each end of the altar. He then gives it to the ſub-dea- " con, who carries it to the Pope. In the mean time, the ſame deacon takes the cha- " lice wherein is the conſecrated wine, and having elevated it three times as well as the " hoſt, carries it to the Pope, who adores Jeſus Chriſt under both kinds, as ſoon as [z] Infulæ. [a] Seſtini.

[b] The Pope conſecrates at the altar, according to the cuſtom, but it is to be obſerved, that he only receives the communion at his throne; ſeveral reaſons are given for this whimſical cuſtom, which perhaps is no better grounded than on the caprice or pride of ſome pontif of former times. One of thoſe reaſons is too ſingular to be paſſed over. The altar, ſays Roccha, repreſents the hall where our Lord at ſupper inſtituted the unbloody ſacrifice of his body; but the throne of the holy Father repreſents the croſs of Jeſus Chriſt, and the Pope's communicating the bloody ſacrifice of our Lord. A man muſt exert the ſtrength of his imagination, to find out that the Pope ſeated on his throne, loaded with the pontifical ornaments, and the weight of a ſplendid dignity, repreſents Jeſus Chriſt on the croſs, covered with diſgrace and ignominy, and ſinking under a diſhonourable humility.

" they are brought to him; which he performs by a pretty low bow of half his body
" [c] ſtanding all the while; and when the deacon and ſub-deacon are come quite up to " him, they place themſelves one at his right, the other at his left. The Pope takes
" [d] the large wafer upon the paten and communicates, himſelf putting it into his mouth;
" he then gives two ſmall wafers to the deacon and ſub-deacon who are kneel-
" ing, and kiſs his hand before receiving them; however the deacon ſtill holds the chalice
" till the Cardinal-biſhop aſſiſtant comes in his cowl up to the pontifical throne, preſents
" him a ſmall gold pipe, one end of which he dips into the chalice, and the Pope at
" the ſame time lays his hand on the other, and leaning down his head a little in or" der to put his lips to it, [e] draws up ſome of the conſecrated wine, leaving the reſt to
" the deacon who carries the chalice to the altar, and there ſucks up ſome of the re" maining wine, and leaves a few drops for the ſub-deacon, who drinks it without the " pipe, as well as what it poured out for waſhing the chalice, which he wipes with
" the purificatory. During this, the pope gives the kiſs of peace to the deacon alone,
" and the communion under one kind only, to the other Cardinals, ambaſſadors, Princes,
" and prelates, and ſometimes to private perſons who deſire to receive it from him; after
" which, he returns to the altar, and goes thro' the maſs with the uſual ceremonies.

We have already mentioned the purſe preſented to the Pope, with 25. Julio's ancient money, pro bene cantatâ miſſâ.

The other ſolemn maſſes have likewiſe ſomething peculiar to themſelves. It ſhall ſuffice to deſcribe what is moſt remarkable in the high maſs on Chriſtmas-day, when the Pope officiates. His Holineſs being dreſſed, by the Cardinal-deacons already robed, in all his pontifical ornaments (the moſt remarkable of which on this occaſion are the white pluvial and precious mitre) bleſſes the incenſe preſented to him by the thuriferary. After that, he ſets out to church preceded by the Roman, and other prelates, who all have on a white mitre.

[f] The thuriferary and ſeven acolytes, each with a taper in their hand, walk before the croſs-bearer, and the thuriferary has a clerk of the chamber before him, who holds a ſword elevated with a cap upon it, which perhaps ſignifies the irreſiſtible power of the pontifical ſword which the vicar of Chriſt has inherited from St. Paul, together with the power of freeing Chriſtians from the ſlavery of the Devil, by a right acquired by the Son of God, whoſe birth is then celebrated; perhaps it is an emblem of the church's freedom, or rather of the clergy's under the Pope's government. We ſhall not ſpeak of the reſt who make up this holy proceſſion, they being the ſame as walk on other occaſions. But ſhould the Emperor, or any other ſovereign Prince, then happen to be at Rome, he muſt carry the train of the papal mantle, as we have already obſerved upon other ceremonies. Two Cardinals likewiſe bear up the two ends of it. The Pope walks proudly under a canopy ſupported by eight gentlemen of the firſt diſtinction, and were the ſons of Kings to have the honour to be at this ſolemn proceſſion, they could at moſt but walk with the firſt Cardinal prieſt.

His Holineſs being got into church, paſſes on to a chapel, changes his robes, and then ſits down. The Cardinals come and bow to him, and kiſs the border of the holy Father's pluvial on the right ſide, then come the other prelates in order, and kneeling three times

[c] This poſture of the Pope's communicating with his face towards the people, is ſaid to repreſent Chriſt's agony upon the croſs.

[d] The Pope receives the wafer on the left-ſide, and on the right the pipe which he dips into the chalice, becauſe, as they pretend, Jeſus Chriſt crucified was pierced on the right-ſide. The Cardinal-deacon and ſub-deacon, who communicate at the ſame time with the Pope, and in both kinds as well as he, repreſent the twelve Apoſtles to whom Chriſt gave the ſacrament at his laſt ſupper with them. We ſhall here obſerve, that the privilege of communicating under both kinds is granted to ſome Princes, the Emperor, for inſtance, and King of France. His moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, at his coronation and death, always communicates under both kinds.

[e] This cuſtom of ſucking the blood of Chriſt through a pipe is very ancient, and was formerly practiſed in giving the communion to the laity. Vide Rhenanum in Tertullian. For the exceſſively devout clergy, fearing leſt any the leaſt drop of our Saviour's blood might be ſpilt through the indiſcretion or clumſineſs of the people, thought fit to prevent ſuch an accident, by introducing the uſe of this pipe, which has ſince been reſerved for the Pope's communicating.

[f] Cerem. Eccl. Rom. Lib. II. Sect. 1.

times kiſs his right knee. The Latin and Greek deacons, who aſſiſt the Pope, ſtand in readineſs at the altar. After ſinging ſome anthems, [g] a Sacriſtan puts on the Latin deacon's arms a ſmall napkin, whereon he lays his Holineſs's ſandals and ſtockings. The ſub-deacon carries the whole to the Pope, holding his hands as high as his eyes. The acolytes follow him, and whilſt the ſub-deacon and a gentleman of the privy chamber go under the Pope's pluvial, to put on his ſandals and ſtockings, the acolytes take care to ſpread the edges of the pluvial. [h] Whilſt the ſub-deacon is putting them on, the biſhops aſſiſtants, preſent at this religious ceremony, hold a book and taper before his Holineſs. The Pope and his deacons aſſiſtants devoutly ſing an anthem and a Pſalm. The choir ſing Tierces, and during this the Pope riſes, an aſſiſtant biſhop goes up to his Holineſs with the pontifical; two ceroferaries have lights in their hands; the Pope takes off his mitre (at all the ceremonies of the maſs where he officiates, it is taken off and put on at leaſt a dozen times.) A biſhop aſſiſtant ſets the pontifical on his own head, that the Pope may read the offices for the day, and the other aſſiſtant with one hand ſupports the book, and in the other holds a taper. When the Pope is again ſeated, and his mitre put on, water is preſented him to waſh: [i] four laymen of the greateſt quality ſerve the ſervant of ſervants in this ceremony, and theſe noblemen are the firſt Princes in Europe if they happen to be at Rome. Neither dignity nor rank make any exception in favour of them, becauſe it is written in the Pſalms, that he (the Pope) ſhall waſh his hands [k] amongſt ſuch as are clean or innocent. Whilſt the Pope is waſhing his hands, all the people are kneeling, the prelates ſtanding and barebeaded. His Holineſs having waſhed, the Goſpel-deacon, aſſiſted by two other deacons, and a ſub-deacon takes off his mitre, pluvial, and ſtole, to put on other robes, which the acolytes fetch from the altar. Theſe are the girdle, the breaſt-croſs, the dalmatica, the tunic, the albe, the gloves, &c. all which are to be moſt devoutly kiſſed, and the Pallium, the croſs of which his Holineſs kiſſes. Laſtly, They put him on the ring called the Pontifical. His Holineſs thus dreſſed, and [l] followed by two auditors, who hold up the corners of his pluvial, [m] goes and humbly confeſſes himſelf before the altar. We omit the proceſſion, it having nothing particular in it. The three youngeſt Cardinal-prieſts come forward to kiſs the holy Father's mouth and breaſt, and whilſt he is receiving them, the ſub-deacon, who ſtands behind him, [n] lays his hands upon his ſhoulders to ſupport him.

The Goſpel-deacon incenſes the Pope, and the Pope the altar; and then returns the thurible to the Goſpel-deacon, and going towards the middle of the altar receives the kiſſes of the two Goſpel-deacons, and of the deacons aſſiſtants. Then he ſalutes the altar, reads the Introite and Kyrie in the pontifical, which the biſhop aſſiſtant inſtead of a deſk carries on his head, as we have already obſerved. The Pope being ſeated, they lay the gremial (a ſort of napkin or apron) on his knees, and when he gets up they take it away. The Latin ſub-deacon ſings the epiſtle in Latin, and the Greek in Greek: after which the two ſub-deacons with the maſter of the ceremonies kiſs the Pope's feet, who in his turn reads the epiſtle and gradual. From this to the end of the Creed there is nothing particular, unleſs that ſeven acolytes, who each carry a burning taper, encloſe the holy Father whilſt he walks to read the Goſpel.

After the Creed the Pope again waſhes his hands. As ſoon as the Latin deacon has ſet the corporals, the pyx, purificatory, &c. in order, all which the ſub-deacon gives him, a Sacriſtan goes to the credence, and thence takes the chalice and paten, on which laſt there is a ſmall gold ſpoon. He covers the whole with a veil of cloth of gold hanging at his neck, and places it on the altar on the epiſtle ſide, All theſe things muſt have been [g] Subdiaconus Latinus accedit ad altare, cui mappulam quandam ſuper brachia ponit & ſuper eam caligas & ſandalia, quæ ambabus manibus ad oculos elevatis ad Pontificem defert. Hunc ſequuntur acolyti, quibus extendentibus fimbrias pluvialis Papæ, ſubdiaconus cum uno ex ſecretis cubiculariis Papæ ſubtus intrant & ---- caligas & ſandalia imponunt, Cerem. Eccl. Roman. Lib. II. Sect. 1.

[h] Id. Ibid. [i] Id. Ibid. [k] Or according to other tranſlations, I will waſh my hands in innocence.

[l] Cerem. Eccl. Rom. Ibid. [m] Supplicabundus vadit ad confeſſionem ante gradus altaris, Ibid.

[n] Manibus retrò ad ejus ſpatulas oppoſitis, Ibid.

been firſt well wiped. The Latin deacon takes three wafers, [o] and ſets them in order upon the paten where they wait for the Pope. After the offertory, the Pope's mitre is put on, his ring and gloves taken off, and he waſhes his hands again. Upon this ablution his ring is given him again, he goes up to the altar, the Latin Goſpel-deacon takes off the mitre, and two Cardinal-biſhops, aſſiſtants to the pontif, ſet the maſs-book on the altar on the Goſpel-ſide; one of whom [p] tells the Pope what he is to ſay, and with his finger points him out the places he is to read.

Of the three unconſecrated wafers upon the paten, the Latin Goſpel-deacon takes one, with which he touches the two others, and gives it the Sacriſtan to taſte. [q] He takes another, touches the chalice and paten with it, then gives it to the ſame Sacriſtan, who eats it as he had done the former, and alſo taſtes the wine and water for the maſs. The third wafer the Pope takes, and conſecrates. We omit the mixing the wine and water, the conſecration of the chalice, the incenſings, and all the circumſtances to the end, which have nothing in them to diſtinguiſh them from others. To conclude, the holy Father ſcatters amongſt the congregation indulgences of many years, and ſome ſcores of pardons [r].

The MASS for the DEAD.

THE rubric of the miſſal [s] forbids the ſaying any maſſes for the dead on Sundays, or double feſtivals. No ſuch maſs muſt be ſaid on Chriſtmas-day, the Epiphany, Eaſter, and Aſcenſion-days, &c. If there be but one maſs in any pariſh church, it muſt not be for the dead; becauſe it is not reaſonable, that for the ſake of one deceaſed perſon, millions of good Chriſtians who are living, ſhould loſe the great benefit of ſo ſacred a myſtery. We ſhall refer thoſe to the rituals, who would be completely informed concerning all the particulars of maſſes ſaid for the departed. Nor ſhall we mention the riches thereby accruing to the clergy. But we may venture to ſay without offending againſt the dignity of ſo very venerable a ſacrifice, that the maſſes for the dead is a real Peru for which they are obliged to the ſuperſtition of bigots; the charity of ſome of which bigots extends [t] even to communicating for the dead, in hopes of giving them eaſe by an act of religion, which Chriſt inſtituted for the living only; but that is not the only abuſe to which the maſs is expoſed. We ſhall give the reader ſome other remarkable inſtances.

Lawyers, who are retained againſt each other in a cauſe, have each of them a maſs ſaid for victory. Maſs is ſaid for diſcovering loſt goods. That of the Holy Ghoſt is ſaid for detecting a thief, or for preventing his making off from the place where the robbery has been committed. In Italy, St. Anthony of Padua's maſs is ſaid for recovering any thing loſt. The avarice of prieſts likewiſe may be the occaſion of theſe practices, who have multiplied them to the degree we now ſee them at. This is a ſhocking and diſagreeable truth: but ought we tamely to look on, and ſee Chriſtianity made the ſport, and ſtale of ſome men?

As the ſubject of this deſcription we ſhall chuſe [u] the moſt ſolemn maſs for the dead, that celebrated by a biſhop. The mournfulneſs of the ceremony does not allow any pompous ornament upon the altar. Flowers, feſtons, relics, images, all diſappear. A croſs in the midſt of ſix yellow wax lights are all the decoration. Two other tapers of the ſame kind give light to the credence, which is covered with a very plain ſmall table cloth, where all the ornament is no more than what is abſolutely neceſſary for ſo ſad an occaſion; ſuch as a maſs-book, a veſſel of holy water, a ſprinkler, a thurible, a navet, and [o] Ponit eas ordinatim ſuper patenam, ſicque Papam exſpectant, Ibid.

[p] Dicit quæ ſunt dicenda, & ea digito ſuo Papæ ſemper oſtendit, Ibid.
[q] This is occaſioned by Victor III.'s being poiſoned by a wafer.
[r] Concedit plenariam indulgentiam tot annos, & totidem quadragenas de verâ indulgentiâ, Cerem. Eccl. Rom.
[s] Baudry Manuale Cerem. [t] Thiers de la plus neceſſaire de toutes les devotions.
[u] This deſcription is taken from Cerem. Epiſc. and from Baudry. 2 and a black cloth for abſolution. The acolytes ſpread a black cloth upon the altar, and the biſhop officiates in black. After maſs, he puts on a pluvial of the ſame colour; the dreſs of his miniſters, the epiſcopal hat, and the pontifical books are likewiſe black. The biſhop who celebrates it, has neither his crózier, gloves nor ſandals on; nor does he ſay the Judica, the Reminiſcaris, the quam dilecta, nor ſeveral prayers ſaid at other maſſes. After the Confiteor, he kiſſes the altar but not the book; nor do the [w] miniſters kiſs any thing during it, for it is forbidden. They make no ſign of the croſs neither at the Introite nor abſolution, nor is the altar incenſed at beginning this Maſs. In ſhort, not to fatigue my reader with any other differences of leſs importance to the laity than the clergy, let it ſuffice to obſerve, that the celebrant does not ſmite his breaſt at the Agnus; that he does not give the kiſs of peace, that he cloſes the maſs without any benediction; that no indulgences are publiſhed; and that the deacon ſays the Requieſcant in pace in the plural number for the repoſe of the dead, if it be general maſs.

The ſermon follows, for which reaſon the pulpit is hung with black; and if it be a particular maſs for any private perſon, diſtinguiſhable by his rank or his virtues, by pious foundations, or by any uncommon fortune, the maſs, which is to procure reſt and tranquillity for his ſoul in the other world, is followed by a funeral oration, wherein the panegyriſt, as far as he can, diſplays all the beauties of rhetoric, and [x] endeavours to lend the graces of novelty to old thread-bare praiſes, which eloquence gave birth to in the earlieſt ages of the world, and which flattery will for ever keep alive.

For perſons of diſtinction, they erect a Chapelle [y] ardente, or repreſentation of the deceaſed with branches, and tapers of yellow wax in the middle or other part of the church, or round the deceaſed's tomb. If he be not buried in that church, it may be made in the nave, if he be a lay-man; or in the choir, if a clergyman, provided the choir be diſtinguiſhed from the Presbyterium; for a Chapelle ardente muſt never be made in the Preſbyterium. A prieſt's head is turned towards the altar, and a layman's feet. After the ſermon, they proceed to the abſolution of the deceaſed, almoſt after this manner. The Goſpel of St. John being read, the celebrant, deacon, and ſub-deacon, return to the middle of the altar, where after kneeling, or bowing if there be no tabernacle, they go to the epiſtle ſide. Being at the bottom of the ſteps, the ſub-deacon takes the croſs, having laid aſide his maniple as well as the deacon, and go all together to the place where the Chapelle ardente, or repreſentation is, in the ſame manner as if they were going to interr the corps. The thuriferary and holy-water-bearer walk firſt; the ſub-deacon follows between the two ceroferaries with the croſs; then the choir, each with a yellow taper in his hand. The celebrant walks laſt, having the deacon at his left-hand, and being the only perſon of them all who is covered, unleſs they go out of the church, and in this caſe they are all covered.

Being arrived at the Chapelle ardente where the celebrant abſolves the deceaſed, the thuriferary, and acolyte, who carries the holy water, place themſelves in that part of the chapel which looks towards the altar, rather on the epiſtle ſide, and behind the celebrant, who has the deacon on his right. The ſub-deacon who carries the croſs and two taper bearers ſtand over againſt and at the head of the corps, a little towards the Goſ-

[w] Miniſtri nihil prorſus oſculantur, Baudry. Prohibentur oſcula in hâc miſſâ, Id.

[x] Above all things, an orator muſt not be ſparing of his flowers on ſuch occaſions; but rather than be dry on the merits of the deceaſed, rob both ancients and moderns of ſuch flattering expreſſions as he ſhall think applicable to the defunct. He muſt endeavour skilfully to copy the delicate turns, ingenious compliments, and ſounding phraſes, which regularly employ the aſſemblies of a famous academy. The panegyriſt muſt take care to hide all his hero's defects, and ſpeak of his good qualities only. If the deceaſed has gained a reputation by any pious foundations, or liberalities to the church, or by a retirement as advantageous to the convent which he has choſen, as beneficial to his own ſoul; ſuch a circumſtance he will ſhew in its full luſtre, which by the way of canonization, has procured to ſeveral ſaints the chief places in heaven. If the hero riſing from the obſcurity of his birth, has, as it were, flown with rapidity to the higheſt poſts in the ſtate, he muſt prove, that fortune never raiſes groveling ſouls. In ſhort, if the orator be by trade a profeſſed Panegyriſt, if he has a penſion for praiſing both the living and the dead; he will wiſely imitate another orator, who always had a ſet of dedications, ſpeeches and funeral orations ready for ſale, with blanks for names; which he filled up as faſt as he diſpoſed of them.

[y] A Chapelle ardente is all thoſe funeral preparations which ſurround the body, or repreſentation of a dead perſon.

2

pel-ſide. When they are all placed, the celebrant uncovers himſelf, and taking the ritual out of the deacon's hand begins the deceaſed's abſolution by a prayer, the firſt words of which are, non intres in judicium, &c. (enter not into judgment, &c.) We paſs over ſome reſponſes after this prayer, ſuch as the libera nos Domine, and ſome others, to come to the bleſſing of the incenſe, after which the celebrant walks round the repreſentation, throwing on it a good deal of holy water, incenſing it on both ſides, and making a great many bows and genuflections, all the while performing the great work of abſolution The celebrant then ſays the Pater, and thereupon turns to the croſs, repeating verſes and prayers to be ſeen in the rituals. Laſtly, He makes the ſign of the croſs over the repreſentation, and ſays the Requiem for the deceaſed, to which the choir anſwer, Requieſcat in pace (may he reſt in peace.) Yet it is certain, that the deceaſed does not immediately reſt after his departure out of this world, and that in his journey from hence to heaven, he muſt at leaſt croſs purgatory, though he had the good fortune to go on without baiting. In this manner we think ourſelves obliged to explain the reſt which theſe men of God procure to ſouls, and which they procure for themſelves by the revenues annexed to theſe mortuary maſſes. After the abſolution, the celebrant and his company return in the ſame order as they came.

Exceſs of devotion often induces ſcrupulous perſons to have ſeveral abſolutions for their deceaſed friends. And yet methinks the dead once abſolved ſhould find themſelves very little the better for being abſolved five or ſix times more; but on the other-hand, if the clergy have more trouble, they find their advantage in it. The Biſhops Ceremonial ſpeaks of abſolution repeated by ſeveral prelates, and thus deſcribes it.

Four Biſhops go to the four ſides of the Chapelle ardente. The youngeſt places himſelf to the right of the dead man's feet, the ſecond to the left towards the head, the third to the left of the feet, and the fourth to the right of the head. The celebrant ſits in his epiſcopal ſeat, at before mentioned, having behind him the thuriferary and holy-water-bearer. The deceaſed thus, as it were, inveſted by the five biſhops, is no longer expoſed to the malice of hell, which, in this condition dares not attack him. The celebrant gives him the firſt abſolution ſaying, non intres, &c. After him, the firſt of the four biſhops ſtanding at the four corners, thrice ſprinkle and incenſe the repreſentation on each ſide, going quite round it. Then ſome verſes are ſaid, and whilſt the Requiem is ſinging, the miniſter fetches the ſecond who goes his round. He ſprinkles and incenſes as the former, ſays a few prayers and verſes, and each man returns to his place. Whilſt the third prelate is coming to give his abſolution, the reſponſes are begun. Laſtly, The fourth gives his, and the choir ſing Libera me Domine, &c. Then the celebrant ſprinkles and incenſes the repreſentation in the ſame manner as the reſt, ſays the abſolution prayer, to which the choir anſwer, Amen; pronounces the Requiem, and the muſic ſay Requieſcant in pace, if it be for more than one.

The ceremonial adds, that theſe four or five abſolutions are never allowed, but at the interment of the deceaſed; but one being performed at [z] anniverſaries; and after the nine days mourning [a].

[b] When

[z] The ancient Grecians, convinced by tradition and reaſon, that man was not wholly annihilated in the grave, but that his nobler part, was not corruptible like matter, annually celebrated the memory of their hero's, which ſolemnity was performed round the tombs of thoſe illuſtrious dead. The Chriſtians of the earlieſt ages imitated them, though it has ſince been carried much farther. All human inſtitutions are at firſt pure and ſimple. The anniverſaries of the Grecians for preſerving the memory of their departed heroes, induced the living to imitate them, and like them to obtain immortal happineſs. The deſign of the anniverſaries of the Chriſtians was to encourage men to the holy practice of religion, and to ſhew that ſuch as die to God live in him, and ought always to live in the memory of the church. The death of the Chriſtian, whoſe anniverſary was celebrated, was deſcribed to the people; and ſuch a death was begged of God; after this an offering was made, and converted to the neceſſities of the church. When once the notion obtained, that this offering could deliver the ſoul of the deceaſed from many crying ſins, every man was willing to eaſe his friends deceaſed; Fathers made offerings for their children, children for their parents, and wives for their husbands. Hireling Chriſtian prieſts finding their intereſt concerned encouraged well-meaning devout perſons to thoſe charitable offerings of which they found the ſweets, and then firſt began to ſhew a mighty concern for the ſouls of the righteous. They ſay, that the prayer for the dead in uſe among the Heathens, crept into the church towards the end of the ſecond century, and hiſtory informs us, that public prayers were made for Conſtantine the Great's ſoul. The writers of the firſt ages of the church alſo tell us, that ſouls often returned from the other world to beg the aſſiſtance of the living in this. Some Proteſtants are of opinion, that maſſes for the dead were not introduced till the ſixth century.

[a] The nine days devotion for the dead in uſe among Chriſtians, has ſome conformity with the ſame under

[b] When there is no repreſentation, the acolytes ſpread a black cloth before the middle of the altar; the celebrant, who has on each ſide the thuriferary and holy-water-bearer, turns towards this cloth, and taking the ſprinkler from the firſt deacon, ſprinkles and incenſes the cloth three times.

At Rome, when the Pope and Cardinals aſſiſt at the maſſes for the dead, their eminences are in violet, the Cardinal grand penitentiary ſings the maſs. His Holineſs is incenſed at the offertory, and ſings the prayers for the dead upon the [c] Catafalque. The firſt Cardinal-prieſt gives the ſprinkler and incenſe to his Holineſs, to whom the Cardinals at this ceremony do not do homage. After maſs, their eminences wait on the Pope home, and then go pay their devotions before the holy ſacrament at St. Peter's. From thence they viſit the tombs of the Pope's, and ſay a few prayers for them [d].

We ſhall refer ſeveral remarks to the ceremonies preceding or accompanying funerals.

The Devotion of the Cross.

After the ceremonies of the maſs we place the devotion of the croſs, not to be diſpenſed with in all the ceremonies of the Chriſtian religion. We have already mentioned the cuſtom of carrying the croſs before the Pope.

It has been remarked [e] that among the ancient Egyptians the letter Tau, which is a ſort of croſs, ſignified the life to come, and they repreſented their God Serapis with this letter on his breaſt; and is not this a notable emblem of the pectoral croſſes of the prelates of the church? One of the religious duties of paganiſm was to kiſs their hand upon carrying it to their mouth, the firſt finger being laid in the form of a croſs over the thumb. The croſs was in great veneration among Chriſtians of the earlieſt ages, they drew it upon their forehead to ſhew the Heathens, that they gloried in being diſciples of a crucified God; and the better to diſtinguiſh themſelves from idolaters, they made the ſign of the croſs to diſtinguiſh each other from the infidels, and to unite together under the banner of the Goſpel. They prayed to God, joining their hands, or ſtretching them towards heaven in the form of a croſs; and from that time were perſuaded, that the Devil was [f] horribly afraid of that ſign, and that there was no better way of ſending him back to hell. In all this, perhaps, the expreſſions of the Chriſtians of thoſe firſt ages were wholly allegorical; however, it cannot be denied, but that the devotion of the croſs has gone on encreaſing ever ſince thoſe firſt ideas. From the beginning of the fourth century, this devotion has grown exceedingly from the finding of the holy croſs, by St. Helen, mother of the Emperor Conſtantine the Great, in her voyage to the Holy Land. The Son no leſs religious than his mother, had the croſs put into his ſtandards, or rather had them made in the form of one. However it is ſaid, that the croſs was not introduced into churches till the beginning of the fifth century, though it had long before appeared upon the coin, colours, [g] ſhields, helmets and crowns of the Emperors. Towards the cloſe of the ſeventh century, the ſixth univerſal council held at Conſtantinople, decreed, that the Heathens. The Romans mourned for their dead nine days, and all that time, offered expiatory ſacrifices, and made ſeveral feaſts for them, called Cœnæ Novendiales, accompanied with vows and prayers for the departed. They likewiſe ſacrificed to their Manes at their tombs, and were perſuaded this devotion was of great eaſe to their ſouls. Their ſervice for the dead was called Inferiæ, whether performed immediately upon their deceaſe, or at their anniverſary.

[b] Baudry Manuale Cerem.

[c] What is before called the Repreſentation.

[d] Relaz. della Corte di Roma di Lunadoro.

[e] See Cœl. Rhod. Lect. Ant. Lib. X. chap. vi.

[f] S. Hieron. de Nativ. Hoc ſignum diabolus contremiſcit, &c. Cardinal Bona in his treatiſe de divina Pſalmodia, cap. xvi. has taken the pains to give us a collection of all the virtues of the ſign of the croſs. The croſs, ſays he, is the ſeal of the Lord, and upon the Chriſtian's forehead is what circumciſion is to the Jew. It is the ſteps whereby we go directly to heaven. It beſtows life, delivers from death, leads to virtue, hinders the corruption (of the pious) quenches the flame of the paſſions, opens heaven, guards cities, fortifies and cements friendſhip, &c. Moſes ſmote the rock twice making the ſign of the croſs. Severus, a Chriſtian Poet, tells us in his bucolics, that a ſhepherd reſcued his ſheep from the jaws of the wolf, by marking them in the forehead with the croſs. Prudentius, another Chriſtian Poet, has not been leſs full upon the vertue of that divine wood.

[g] Vide Lipſ. de Cruce.

that Jeſus Chriſt ſhould be painted in human form upon the croſs, the more ſtrongly to ſet before the eyes of Chriſtians the death and paſſion of our Saviour; but ſymbolical figures of him had already been in uſe for many ages. Chriſt was often painted in the figure of a lamb [h] at the foot of the croſs, to which [i] the Holy Ghoſt was added in that of a dove. Sometimes a crown was painted over the croſs, to ſhew the faithful, that the crown of eternity would be the reward of their ſufferings for the croſs of Chriſt. A ſtag was often painted at the foot of this ſacred wood, becauſe the ſtag, being an enemy to ſerpents, is the ſymbol of Chriſt who was the Devil's enemy. But all theſe ſymbolical figures diſappeared at the ſight of our Saviour repreſented upon the croſs in human form by decree of the ſixth œcumenical council; and this is the firſt riſe of crucifixes.

[k] The croſs of Chriſt is affirmed to have been of oak. We have already hinted, that this was happily found by St. Helen, together with the [l] inſcription written over it. Pope Sergius about the year 690. diſcovered another large piece of the croſs, which is carefully preſerved at Rome, and in 1492. the inſcription was found in a church in the ſame city that was repairing. It had been hidden in a wall, and the misfortunes of the times had ſuffered it to lie there forgotten. Pope Alexander VI. thereupon iſſued out a bull promiſing an annual remiſſion of ſins to all ſuch devout Chriſtians, who ſhould yearly every laſt Sunday in January viſit the church where that [m] inſcription had been found; and yet a large part of the inſcription upon the croſs is to be ſeen among the benedictine friars at Toulouſe, which is publicly ſhewn twice a year, viz. the 3. of May, and 14. of September; and it is at ſuch times ſteeped in a certain quantity of water, and afterwards given to the diſeaſed, who find great benefit by it. To reconcile this relic with that at Rome, the ſame arguments, which the monks uſe as to the nails of the croſs, muſt be employed; which we ſhall preſently give the reader. [n] Two of thoſe nails, which faſtned our Lord to the croſs, were found in Conſtantine's time, who adorned his helmet and horſe's bridle with them. Rome, Milan and Treves, glory in the poſſeſſion of one of thoſe nails. That at Rome is to be ſeen in the church of the Holy croſs of Jeruſalem, and is every year [o] expoſed to the veneration of the people. That of Milan has the ſame reſpect paid to it, and as there is room to believe this to be the ſame with which Conſtantine adorned his horſe's bridle, the good friar who tells us theſe particulars, very happily applies one of the prophet Zacharias's prophecies [p] to it. That of Treves is not quite ſo famous: but however does not leſs deſerve the religious worſhip of the devout. Theſe are the three celebrated nails which pierced Chriſt's hands and feet: as to the reſt of them, to which it has been thought proper to attribute the melancholy honour of having been inſtrumental to our Saviour's ſufferings, they are either [q] ſuch as have been rubbed againſt the former, doubtleſs in order to receive the ſame divine and miraculous qualities; or are only pieces of the true and genuine ones (ſuch, for inſtance, is that at Aix, la Chappelle, it being the point of that ſhewn at Rome) or are only ſuch as faſtned the pieces of the croſs together. Perhaps too, they may be nails of croſſes, to which ſeveral holy martyrs may have been fixed; and as martyrs are the members of Chriſt, there is ſome authority for ſaying they are the nails of our Saviour's croſs; thus it may eaſily come to paſs for many dozen of ſuch nails of the croſs to appear in the world. Pope Innocent VI. in 1353. appointed a feſtival for theſe ſacred nails.

[h] Sub cruce ſanguinea niveo ſtat Chriſtus in agno, S. Paulin.
[k] Nicquet de titulo ſanctæ Crucis.
[l] Nicquet, Ibid.
[m] Vide Giry Vies des Saints.
[n] Curtius de Clavis Dominicis.
[o] Curtius, Ibid.
[p] Chap. xiv. ℣. 20.
[q] Curtius, Ibid.
[i] Vide Caſal. de ritibus. veter. Chriſt.

FESTIVALS inſtituted in Honour of the CROSS, and ſome CEREMONIES concerning the ſame.

WE muſt not forget to tell the reader, there is a great quantity of the wood of the true croſs diſperſed over the ſeveral kingdoms of Chriſtendom, of which wholſome plenty the Heretics make a jeſt, ſaying, that with this ſacred wood the carpenters might make numberleſs pieces of work, and find themſelves employment for a great while. But we ſtop their mouths, by alledging the reaſons juſtifying our veneration for the two inſcriptions, and for the great number of nails ſtill remaining under the name of nails of the croſs.

We have already mentioned the invention of the holy croſs, which St. Hellen found together with the nails and inſcription; and it happened in this manner: They were perplexed how to diſtinguiſh our Saviour's croſs from two others found near it, which were the croſſes of the two [q] thieves. But St. Macarius removed this difficulty. He ordered the people to addreſs themſelves to God in prayer, and to beg of him to diſcover to them which was the true croſs; and God heard him. A woman in the agonies of death was brought, and made to touch the croſſes of the two thieves one after another, but to no purpoſe. She was then brought to our Saviour's; and immediately found herſelf cured of her diſtemper, which till then had ſtood out againſt the moſt effectual remedies.

The feſtival of the invention of the croſs is celebrated the 3. of May: and was ſo in ſome churches before the pontificate of Gregory the Great; but ſince his time, has been introduced into other places, till at length it became general.

The exaltation of the croſs is celebrated the 14. of September. In the reign of Heraclius, Coſroes King of Perſia ſacked Jeruſalem, carried off that part of the croſs, left there by the Empreſs Hellen in memory of our Saviour, and ſent into Perſia that divine wood, by his ſoldiers called The God of the Chriſtians. After many battles, wherein the Perſian always was defeated, [r] Heraclius had the good fortune to recover the croſs. This Prince carried it himſelf to Jeruſalem, and laid aſide his imperial ornaments, to humble himſelf before the croſs, under the weight of which he could not walk for the magnificence of his robes; he threw them off, and then laid it upon his ſhoulders, to carry it with the greater pomp to mount Calvary from whence it had been taken. This glorious day was made famous by miracles, and the feſtival of the re-eſtabliſhment of the croſs was afterwards inſtituted, which is ſtill celebrated under the name of exaltation. However, a feſtival of the ſame name was long before celebrated, which is thought to have been appointed in Conſtantine's time. But be that as it will, the recovery of the croſs was far from making up to the Chriſtians the loſs of the Eaſt, which Mahometaniſm, that aroſe under this Emperor, tore from them with an amazing rapidity.

Poitiers glories in having part of the true croſs. Radegonda wife to Clotaire King of France, obtained this celeſtial preſent for the capital of Poitou: Paris has another piece of it; and on the firſt Sunday in Auguſt, the honour of poſſeſſing it is celebrated under the name of the reception of the holy croſs.

The Roman rituals preſcribe the prieſt's manner of making the ſign of the croſs. He is to place his [s] left-hand ſtretched quite open under his breaſt, and to take care [t] that it touches upon no part whereon the croſs is to be made; he is to obſerve too, to keep the fingers of that hand cloſed together. The right, which is appropriated for making the ſign, muſt be placed as the left. He muſt ſtand with his head ſtreight and erected, and the hand

[q] That of the good thief was long after found, and carried to Rome. It is at the church of the holy croſs of Jeruſalem.

[r] Giry Vies des Saints.

[s] Bauldry Manuale Sacr. Cerem. p. 76. Ed. 1711.

[t] Extra Limets Crucis, Id. Ibid.

hand likewiſe; nor muſt the fingers of the hand be bent. The ſign is to begin at the forehead, and ſo down upon the breaſt, from whence he is to go from the left-ſhoulder to the right; after this ſign is made, the prieſt muſt be careful not to carry his right-hand either to his breaſt, or his mouth, which is indecent. Immediately after making the ſign, the right hand muſt be joined with the left. Theſe ſigns are made an infinite number of times in all publick and private devotions. But it would be uſeleſs to ſay more of them here, and as for the clergy, they may conſult their rituals.

The CONSECRATION of public and private CROSSES.

BOTH great and ſmall croſſes are conſecrated after the following manner. The figure repreſents the conſecration of a great croſs. An acolyte appears very buſy in lighting the candles at the foot of this croſs. The reſpectful gravity of the celebrant ſeated in a chair prepared for the purpoſe, with his paſtoral crozier in his hand, and in the midſt of his clergy in ſurplices, ſhews his mind intent on this ceremony; of which we ſhall now give a deſcription. [t] The celebrant muſt have on all his pontifical ornaments; the amict, albe, girdle, ſtole, white pluvial, plain mitre, and paſtoral ſtaff. In this equipage he preſents himſelf before the great croſs; and part of the clergy turn towards the celebrant, who ſits down, and makes a diſcourſe to the people upon the excellence of the croſs, at the foot of which, three tapers are lighted; and as ſoon as they are lighted, the celebrant takes off his mitre, and ſays a prayer before the croſs. The Litanies follow the prayer, and an anthem the Litanies. He then ſprinkles and afterwards incenſes the croſs, and that being performed he ſets candles upon the top of each arm of the croſs; and if the croſs be high, and he cannot reach to the top [u] a ladder is brought him. Pſalms and prayers conclude the ceremony. The conſecration of all croſſes deſigned for public places, croſs-ways, and high-roads are performed in the ſame manner. We ſhall refer the adoration of the croſs preſented to the people on Eaſter-eve to that feſtival.

As to ſmall croſſes newly made and deſigned for proceſſions, churches, chapels, altars, or private houſes, when a prieſt with leave from his biſhop bleſſes one of them, he muſt place it on the altar on the epiſtle ſide on a cuſhion, and having cauſed at leaſt one taper to be lighted, ſhall put a ſtole of a colour proper for the day over his ſurplice; and being attended if poſſible, by a clerk in a ſurplice, who is to hold the water pot and ſprinkler, ſhall make the ſign of the croſs over himſelf, and repeat prayers agreeable to the ſubject, &c. [w] But ſtill it muſt be obſerved, that the ſame prayer uſed to bleſs the croſs of ſtone or metal, will not ſerve for one of wood: after this he ſhall kiſs it, and the by-ſtanders muſt kiſs and adore it after him.

The croſs muſt be always upon the altar. It is carried before patriarchs and biſhops, as well as before his Holineſs; the image upon it always turned towards the prelate. The croſs-bearer muſt be in the dreſs of a clerk.

Prelates wear the pectoral or breaſt-croſs. Which hangs on a chain or ſilk ſtring tied about the neck, [x] in which muſt be ſet ſome relic, or piece of the true croſs. This breaſt croſs is inſtead of the pectoral ornaments of the ancient High Prieſt of the Jews; and the cuſtom of wearing it was appointed, according to report, about the beginning of the ninth, or latter end of the eighth century. In 811. the patriarch of Conſtantinople ſent Pope Leo III. a gold relic box, in which was a little piece of the true croſs. This relic box was in Greek called Encolpion, a word ſignifying any thing worn on the breaſt. This cuſtom without doubt proceeded from that of the firſt Chriſtians, who out of devotion

[t] Pontific. Rom. [u] Scala ſuper quam aſcendens Pontifex poſſit aſcendere, &c.
[w] Peſcara Praxis Ceremon. Lib. II. cap. iii. [x] Bonanni Gerarch. Eccl.

BENEDICTION des HABITS SACERDOTAUX

BENEDICTION d'une nouvelle CROIX.

L'ADORATION de la dite CROIX.

BENEDICTION du SOLEIL.

B. Picart. del.

BENEDICTION d'un HOMME de GUERRE.

BENEDICTION d'un DRAPEAU.

votion for the croſs of JESUS CHRIST, wore it on their breaſt, and even made it the object of their remembrance on the ſmalleſt occaſions. To give an inſtance of this, they cut their bread in the form of a croſs, which is a cuſtom that long continued in the church; but without aſcribing it to the reſpect of the firſt Chriſtians for the croſs of Chriſt, may it not be a relic of the ancient Roman way of cutting bread, which gave riſe to a very famous [y] proverb? When they travelled, or even walked about the city, they carried croſſes about them as a teſtimony of the religious love due to that of our Lord. It afterwards ceaſed to be any thing more than an ornament, and accordingly was ſet off with jewels like the diamond croſſes of our modern ladies. Croſſes too were engraved upon tomb-ſtones, and at the entrance of chapels. The pectoral croſs, like all others, muſt be conſecrated and ſprinkled with holy water.

The conſecration of croſſes is very ancient, and is at leaſt antecedent to the VII. general council. Some writers pretend it to have been practiſed ever ſince the ſecond century, and that judicial oaths were then made before croſſes; which is very improbable, the church being then under the yoke of paganiſm.

Famous CRUCIFIXES.

LORETTO is famous for its image of our Lady. In the borough of Cirolo in the road to that ſmall city, is a miraculous image by St. Luke. They who go to pay their devoirs to our Lady will take care to remember, that they owe at leaſt as much reſpect to the Son, as to the mother.

The [z] Santiſſimo Croceſiſſo at Naples is of wood; nor does the clumſineſs of the matter, in the leaſt diminiſh its value; and the gratitude it ſhewed to St. Thomas Aquinas, [a] in thanking him for his beautiful and ſalutary writings, ſhould redouble their zeal who viſit the chapel where it reſides.

The Santo Volto at Lucca is of cypreſs, and dreſſed in a pompous robe; its ſhoes [b] are ſilver covered with plates of gold, and it has on a crown ſet all over with jewels. They ſay, that Nicodemus was the maker of it, but it is the general opinion, that he only made the face. The difficulty of the undertaking having drawn down the angels out of curioſity to ſee how he would finiſh ſo important a work, they were ſoon tired with the ſlow progreſs Nicodemus made; and moved to pity a man whom zeal had induced to undertake a more than human work, they finiſhed it themſelves; and from thence the crucifix took the name of Santo Volto. We can give no account how this wonderful crucifix came to Lucca. At firſt it was carried, or rather of itſelf went and fixed at St. Frediano's church; but either finding itſelf ſtraightened there, or having particular reaſons for decamping, it flew away to the cathedral of that city, and remained hanging in the air, till an altar was built for it, on which it was found. [c] This charitable crucifix, one day reſolved to beſtow one of its ſhoes upon a poor man who begged alms of it. This was obſerved; the ſhoe was redeemed, and the poor man had the value in gold given him.

The crucifix at Loretto is celebrated for many miracles. The angels carried it together with the Santa Caſa from Paleſtine to Italy. A crucifix of St. Mary Tranſpontina at Rome, has often held diſcourſes with St. Peter and St. Paul.

The holy Crucifix at Trent is remarkable for the approbation it gave to the decrees of the council held in that city in the ſixteenth century.

In

[y] Alienâ vivere Quadrâ, Juven. The Quadra was called the four pieces into which the bread was cut.
[z] In the church of St. Dominic the Great.
[a] Falſe religions have likewiſe aſcribed the gift of ſpeech to the images of their Gods; and examples of it are to be met with in the idolatry of the Indians. Formerly the Juno of Veiæ upon being asked to go to Rome declared ſhe liked the propoſal.
[b] Curtius de Clavis Dominicis.
[c] Id.

In the church of the Beguine nuns at Ghent, is to be ſeen a crucifix with its mouth always open. One of thoſe nuns vexed at being left out of a party of pleaſure, which had been made during the carnaval, went and complained to the Crucifix of it, which, at the ſame time it exhorted her not to afflict herſelf at it, invited her to its wedding; and ſhe died the next day. The Beguine perhaps would have preferred the ſenſual pleaſures of this world to that celeſtial wedding. But however; ever ſince the crucifix has remained with its mouth open.

[d] That at Bavaria, diſcovered by a hind that was hunted by dogs, muſt not be omitted. The hind pointed it out to the hunters with her foot, and made no attempt to eſcape from the fury of the dogs, till ſhe had diſcovered the crucifix. This miraculous diſcovery happened in the reign of Charlemaigne, and gave the name to the monaſtery of Pollingen, the firſt ſyllable of which ſeems to expreſs the barking of dogs. A fair was ſet up at Pollingen, by which means the crucifix, monaſtery, and church which St. Boniface built there, ſoon grew famous, and drew upon Pollingen the jealouſy of Weilbaum, a ſmall village in the neighbourhood. The fair was tranſported thither, which ſlackened the devotion of the Bavarians, and ſoon cauſed the crucifix to be forgotten; but it revenged itſelf, and burnt the little town of Weilbaum to aſhes. Notwithſtanding this puniſhment, that town could not agree to looſe what it had ſo unjuſtly gained; but the fire which once more deſtroyed it, forced that unhappy town to reſtore what it had ſo ſacrilegiouſly uſurped.

In a church at Cologne is ſeen a crucifix with a peruke on. The date of this head dreſs is not known; all that can be ſaid is, that it cannot be of any long ſtanding, ſince the uſe of perukes is pretty modern. Thoſe auſtere eccleſiaſtics, who have declared againſt ſuch falſe hair, would perhaps have looked upon a crucifix thus dreſſed with indignation; and this very peruke is exceeding marvellous and edifying; for the hair is never diminiſhed, though the devout pilgrims never take leave of it without carrying away a lock or two of the peruke.

We ſhall ſay nothing of an infinite number of crucifixes, ſome of which have ſhed tears, ſweated blood, diſcovered ſacrileges, and blinded or lamed malefactors. Some have even reſtored life to the dead, and ſome health to the diſeaſed; and all have diſtinguiſhed themſelves by ſome remarkable inſtance. Neither ſhall we ſpeak of domeſtic crucifixes, their favours ſeldom reaching farther than the families they protect. Among theſe latter [e] ought to be ranked the crucifix which honoured F. Bencius with ſeveral nocturnal viſits, and at laſt made him reſolve to take the Jeſuit's habit.

The CUSTOM of BELLS in CHURCHES.

FROM croſſes we go on to bells, thoſe inſtruments of metal which make themſelves be heard by the faithful a great way off, [f] and which repreſent the duration of the Goſpel, the ſound of which has been carried through the earth. [g] They likewiſe repreſent the church exciting the faithful to praiſe God, and the paſtors of the Goſpel preaching the word of God. They have beſides ſeveral other myſterious ſignifications, to be found in the rituals. It is pretended they were invented in Campania, a province of Italy, and from thence took their [h] name in bad Latin. The firſt uſe of them [i] is aſcribed to Pope Sabinian; however it is certain [k] that the Romans had them in uſe long before, and it is known that the ſacerdotal robe of the Jewiſh High Prieſt was

[d] Curtius de Clavis Dominicis.
[e] Alet's Ritual.
[f] Roman. Ritual.
[g] Vide Alegambe de Script. &c.
[h] Campanæ.
[i] It is pretended that S. Paulinus biſhop of Nola eſtabliſhed the uſe of bells in his dioceſs. Salmuth, a commentator upon Pancirollo, thinks he only conſecrated a cuſtom long before practiſed among the Heathens. The following is a merry proof of the antiquity of bells, viz. that in a church at Rome was formerly preſerved a part of the ſound of the bells of Jeruſalem.
[k] They called them Tintinnabula.

was hung round with little bells. But be that as it will, about the year 603. Sabinian eſtabliſhed the uſe of bells for the ſolemnity of the maſs, and for canonical hours, as now practiſed. The cuſtom of tolling them for the dead was [l] eſtabliſhed in England from the beginning of the eighth century, [m] and is ſtill preſerved in ſome heretical countries notwithſtanding their defection from the holy ſee. Bells [n] likewiſe ring the Ave Mary in the morning, at noon, and night, to put people in mind to pray at ſuch times. They are rung [o] at the elevation of the hoſt, when carried to the ſick, and at proceſſions.

During Paſſion-week the Creſſelle is uſed inſtead of bells, which is an inſtrument of wood. There are myſteries in the Creſſelle. For inſtance, it repreſents Chriſt praying upon the croſs, and calling nations to his preaching. It repreſents our Saviour's humility, &c. The uſe of this Creſſelle is thought much more ancient than that of bells, [p] and that the firſt Chriſtians made uſe of it to call their brethren ſecretly to the prayers they made in ſubterraneous, and loneſome places.

The BENEDICTION of BELLS.

THE giving bells a benediction is by the people called [q] bleſſing them, becauſe the name of ſome of the ſaints is given them, [r] under whoſe invocation they are offered to God, to be protected by him. The benediction conſecrates them to God's ſervice, to the end he may beſtow on them the power, not of ſtriking the ear ----- but of touching the heart by the vertue of the Holy Ghoſt --- This bleſſing likewiſe, when they are rung, contributes to drive away devils, &c. The biſhop generally performs this ceremony. But firſt of all, the curates who are to ſee to the caſting of the bells, [s] muſt take care they are caſt neither in the church nor the church-yard; that nothing prophane be graved on them, but only a croſs, or the image of the ſaint patron of the church. They are likewiſe to hinder all ſorts of ſuperſtition at the time of caſting, or bleſſing them.

The bell being perfected, it muſt, as ſoon as poſſible, be put into a condition to receive the benediction, that is hung up and ſo diſpoſed as to leave room to walk round it, to come at it within and without, to waſh it and perform the holy unctions to it. Near the bell muſt be a ſeat for the celebrant, a ſtool at his left for the deacon, and ſeats on each ſide for the reſt of the clergy; and a deſk with the anthem book, or ritual, muſt be carried to the place where the ceremony is to be performed: if in the church, a credence is prepared on the epiſtle ſide covered with a white cloth, whereon are ſet the ſprinklers, the holy water pot, another for ſalt, the napkins, veſſel for oil, that for the chriſm, paſtils, incenſe, myrrh, cotton, a baſon and ewer, and the crum of bread; if elſewhere, all thoſe things are to be carried where the ceremony is to be performed, after which they proceed to ſanctify the bell in the following manner. The celebrant in his albe, ſtole, and white pluvial, and the deacon robed entirely in the ſame colour, walk out of the veſtry in proceſſion; the thuriferary firſt, and after him two taper-bearers each with a burning taper, then the clergy two and two, and laſtly the celebrant having the deacon on his left. Being arrived at the place, the ceroferaries ſet down their tapers on the credence, near which both they and the thuriferary ſtand. The clergy range themſelves on

[l] Bede quoted from Caſalius de Ritibus Vet. Chriſt.

[m] In Holland, Pruſſia and other places. The Lacedemonians, at the death of any of their Kings, ſtruck upon braſs kettles. The ſound of braſs was then thought to keep away evil ſpirits, juſt as the Catholic church now holds that the ſound of bells keeps the powers of the air at a diſtance.

[n] Pope Calixtus III. ordered a bell to be rung at noon, as it was before at night to ſalute the virgin Mary. He is ſaid to order this in 1455. in favour of ſuch as went to the wars againſt the Turks.

[o] Gregory IX. who lived in 1230. appointed the uſe of a bell to give notice to kneel and adore the hoſt at the elevation, Caſal. de Rit. vet. Chriſt.

[p] Vide Caſal. de Chriſt. Ritibus.

[q] Pope John XIII. firſt baptiſed bells, by giving his own name to that of St. John de Lateran in 965. Caſal. de Rit. Chriſt.

[r] Alet's Ritual.

[s] Alet's Ritual.

on each ſide, and the celebrant ſeats himſelf on a ſeat near the bell, and covering himſelf inſtructs the people in the holineſs of the action he is going to perform, and endeavours to awaken their attention as much as poſſible, and thereupon gets up in order to ſing the Miſerere, and other hymns appointed in the ritual together with the choir.

This being over, they riſe, and all uncover, the celebrant as well as the reſt. [t] He exorciſes and bleſſes the ſalt and water addreſſing himſelf to them, beſeeches God for each of them, and in one prayer begs that, by vertue of the holy water, the bell may acquire that of guarding Chriſtians from the ſtratagems of Satan, of driving away ghoſts, of breaking the force of tempeſts, and raiſing devotion in the heart, &c. He then mixes the ſalt and water, and croſſing them thrice in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, over each of them pronounces theſe words, [u] God be with you. In the prayer after mixing them, God is beſought to look down [w] with favour on the creature of ſalt, and the creature of water; which might almoſt tempt one to believe, that theſe creatures are ſuch genii or ſpirits preſiding over the ſalt and water, as the Count de Gabalis has deſcribed his Gnomes and Sylphs, &c. Laſtly, The celebrant takes his ſprinkler, dips it into the holy water, and waſhes the bell, which his miniſters make an end of: After ſprinkling, rubbing and waſhing it within and without, it is carefully wiped dry with linen cloths. During this ablution Pſalms are ſung.

A veſſel containing what they call oil for the infirm, is then opened by the dean; into which the celebrant dips his right hand thumb, and applies it to the middle of the bell in order to ſign it with the croſs. At this action the deacon raiſes the celebrant's pluvial on his right-hand ſide, and nothing is done to the bell without the ſame ceremony. As ſoon as the prieſt or biſhop has made the ſign, he ſays a prayer to the ſame effect as all the former, after which he wipes the places, where he has made the ſign with cotton. The xxviii. Pſalm being ſung the bell is marked with ſeven freſh croſſes, and four other made with the holy chriſm, as it were, ſets the ſeal of benediction upon this metal; and it is at theſe four laſt croſſes, that the celebrant honours the bell with a ſort of baptiſm, conſecrating it in the name of the Trinity, and naming the ſaint who ſtands god-father to the bell, which generally bears his name.

The bell thus baptiſed or conſecrated, is perfumed in the following manner. The thuriferary with the thurible and navet in his hand goes up to the celebrant who is ſeated by the bell. The celebrant takes incenſe, myrrh, and paſtils out of the navet, puts them into the thurible without bleſſing them, and gives back the thurible to the thuriferary, who ſets it under the bell to receive the ſmoke; the prayer, ſaid after an anthem ſung with a vehement devotion, calls this perfume the dew of the Holy Ghoſt. The ceremony of the perfuming is ſucceeded by a benediction upon the incenſe, and the thuriferary walks between the two ceroferaries, the clerk or ſub-deacon, and the deacon carrying the Goſpels to the place where the Goſpel is to be read. The deacon gives the clerk the book to hold, who ſtands between the two ceroferaries in ſuch a manner, ſays the ritual, as to have their backs to the North; as for the celebrant, he turns towards the deacon. The thuriferary, who is at his right, gives him the thurible to incenſe the Goſpel as uſual. After the Goſpel is read, the clerk gives the book to the celebrant to kiſs, and the deacon incenſes him. The celebrant then turns to the bell, and makes the ſign of the croſs over it with his right hand; upon which the clerk returns him his cap, and they all go back and unrobe.

The rituals tell us, that the conſecration of bells repreſents that of paſtors: that the inward and outward ablution followed by the anointing with oil expreſſes the ſanctification of their baptiſm; the ſeven unctions in form of a croſs ſhew [x] that paſtors ſhould ſurpaſs the reſt of Chriſtians in the graces of the Holy Ghoſt, and poſſeſs the fulneſs thereof typified by the ſeven gifts; that the anointing the inſide with the chriſm ſignifies a perfect fulneſs of the [t] Exorciſo te creatura ſalis aut aquæ, &c.

[u] Dominus vobiſcum.
[w] Ut dignanter aſpicias.
[x] Alet's Ritual.

the Holy Ghoſt with which the biſhop finds himſelf endowed by his ordination. We may eaſily imagine that the perfuming does not include myſteries of leſs importance. The firſt idea we can conceive from it is, that as the ſmoke of the perfumes riſes in the bell and fills it, ſo a paſtor adorned with the fulneſs of God's ſpirit, receives the perfume of the vows and prayers of the faithful. [y] Such as are fond of myſterious enquiries may find many other in the rituals.

BENEDICTIONS of IMAGES.

BY the decrees of the Council of Trent it is forbidden to ſet up any extraordinary and unuſual image in churches without the biſhop's approbation firſt obtained; and to the benediction of images, they proceed in the ſame manner as to that of a new croſs. At ſaying the prayer, the ſaint, whom the image repreſents, is named; after which the ſprinkler is taken, and the prieſt ſprinkles the image with holy water to conclude the conſecration; but when any image of the virgin Mary is bleſſed, [z] it is thrice incenſed beſides the ſprinkling, to which are added an Ave Mary, Pſalms, and anthems, the prayer beginning Deus qui virginalem aulam, &c. the anthem ô gloriosa Dei genetrix, the Magnificat, &c. and to conclude a double ſign of the croſs to be made with the prieſt's right-hand.

Proteſtant writers inſiſt, that image-worſhip is of no earlier date than the fourth century, but grew conſiderably in the ſucceeding ages, to which the mad zeal of Iconoclaſts, or image breakers, contributed in a much greater degree than religion; though ſome few might act out of a religious principle. Such was Serenus biſhop of Marſeilles, who had them all thrown down through his dioceſe, to hinder the new converts from idolatry from adoring them as idols or falſe divinities; though Pope Gregory ordered him to replace them. Whilſt he praiſed his zeal, he blamed its irregularity and exceſs, and preſuming their groſs and material ideas might not be ſo powerful as his paternal inſtruction, pointed him out this latter way, to let his flock into the true and genuine uſe of images.

Images are almoſt as ancient as religion, nor is it ſurpriſing; ſince the riſe of them is owing to the weakneſs of the human mind, which not being able long to fix its attention on objects purely ſpiritual, turns inſenſibly towards matter, and endeavours to make the object of its worſhip, if we may be allowed the expreſſion, palpable to itſelf. Hardly any man ſpeaks to God as he would to the King, the former being inviſible, and on the contrary, the majeſty of the King commanding the ſpeaker's attention by his viſibility. How many ſenſible ſigns are there not made uſe of in teaching children to pray to God, and acknowledge the wonders he has wrought? Indeed the uſe of thoſe ſigns grows dangerous; and God was formerly obliged to forbid them to the Jews; but yet Chriſtians have thought they might, without any riſk, imitate the Heathens their predeceſſors; and thus in order to keep up devotion by objects that ſtrike the ſenſes, God is painted in churches like an old man, as he ſtiled himſelf the ancient of Days. [a] The Son is repreſented as a man, as he put on an human form; and the Holy Ghoſt in the form [b] of a dove, the ſymbol of ſimplicity. The angels are repreſented like young men with [y] For the reader's improvement we ſhall give him the anatomical abridgment of a bell, and all its parts, according to Durant's diſcoveries in his treatiſe de Ritibus. The metal ſignifies the ſtrength of the preacher's underſtanding, and the clapper, his tongue. The ſtroke of the clapper, the tongue's cenſure againſt vice; what holds the clapper, the moderation of the tongue. The wood on which hangs the bell, the wood of the croſs, the pieces to which the wood is fixed, the oracles of the prophets. The cramp iron fixing the bell to the wood, denotes the preacher's attachment to the croſs of CHRIST. The bell-rope likewiſe includes conſiderable myſteries; the three cords, for inſtance, of which it is made, are the three ſenſes of the Scripture, viz. the hiſtorical, the moral, and the allegorical.

[z] Piſcara Praxis Cerem. Lib. II. Sect. 12. chap. iii.

[a] He was formerly painted in the form of a lamb with one foot before the croſs, or of a ſhepherd with a lamb on his ſhoulders.

[b] This way of painting the Holy Ghoſt is very ancient, and even the Euchariſt was formerly kept in a box made with wings on their ſhoulders; their character and diligence as miniſters of the Deity not being to be deſcribed, but by the youth of man and agility of birds.

The ancient Heathens did not aſcribe an almighty power to thoſe great men, whom after their death they entitled Gods or Demi-Gods, though they paid them ſome of the honours which ſeemed to belong to the ſupreme Being alone; but they thought, that when ſuch excellent perſons were become Gods, demons, or genii by an apotheoſis, which was much the ſame thing as the church's canonization, they were the lieutenants or ſubſtitutes of the Divinity; that they preſented him the vows and prayers of men; and that their interceſſion was infinitely agreable to him. They beſides conſidered thoſe bleſſed genii as governors or intendants of provinces, and were perſuaded that all ſuch as had a ſhare in the honours of the court of heaven moſt infallibly took into their protection the kingdoms and ſtates of the earth, the fortune of mankind, their employments, trades, &c. Almoſt the ſame notion prevails amongſt the modern Heathens, wherefore, both the one and the other have conſecrated to them images and ſtatues, with much the ſame honours as thoſe paid to the images of the ſaints of the church. They burnt tapers and lamps before them; [c] carried them in proceſſion, and moſt devoutly wore them out with their kiſſes. Cicero in one of his pleadings againſt Verres, obſerves, that the perpetual kiſſes of devotees had worn away the beard and mouth of an old Hercules of [d] Agrigentum. Nay, very often their devotion hurried them on to kiſs whatever belonged to the ſaint, or was a part of his equipage. Such zealots may be compared to your country gentleman juſt come to town, who beſtows a part of the compliment he deſigned for the maſter upon his porter at the door.

Few Chriſtians are ſtrangers to the miracles and miraculous effects of the images of our ſaints; of which we ſhall give the reader a taſte. The image of JESUS CHRIST, which feeling itſelf wounded with a dagger by an impious wretch, laid its hand upon the wound, is famous at Naples: but [e] that of our lady made by St. Luke, the famous painter and Evangeliſt, is not leſs celebrated; and indeed it is reported that the angels have often ſung the Litanies round her. The image of St. Catherine at Sienna has often driven away Devils, and wrought other miracles. Our lady of Lucca inſolently attacked by a ſoldier (who threw ſtones at her, and had like to have broken the child Jeſus's head, which ſhe held on her right arm) immediately ſet it upon her left, and the child liked ſitting on that arm ſo well, that ſince that accident, he has never changed his ſituation. It would be impertinent here to give the hiſtory of ſeveral other miraculous images, there being entire books written upon this ſubject; nor will it be leſs ſo to obſerve to the reader, that long before Chriſtianity, the Heathens aſcribed the power of working miracles to the images of their God's and Heroes. Livy, that ingenious legendary of Paganiſm, has thought fit to adorn his hiſtory with an infinite number of miracles and prodigies, amongſt which are many wrought by heathen images and idols; and Cicero, who was none of the moſt credulous, often tells us of thoſe religious wonders. Such, for inſtance, are the [f] ſweating of ſome ſtatues. To conclude, the Mahometans, Pagans and modern Jews have reſolved not to loſe ſo valuable a privilege: [g] They too have their miracles, and thoſe of the moſt difficult kind.

The

made in the form of a dove. In ſhort, the cuſtom of painting the ſaints with certain things ſignifying their functions or qualities was likewiſe practiſed by the pagans in the repreſentations of their Gods. Mercury, Apollo, Æſculapius, Diana, Minerva, Hercules and Bacchus are inſtances of it. At this time, St. Anthony's fire ſhews his love of God; the hog at his feet, his trampling upon, and deſpiſing ſenſual pleaſure; the bell his diligence in prayer, the letter Tau the croſs of Chriſt. S. Chriſtopher's gigantic ſtature denotes a Chriſtian's ſtrength, the infant he carries, the love of the Son of God; the river he is paſſing, the torrent of afflictions. Many ſuch examples are to be ſeen in Caſal. de Sacr. vet. Chriſt. Rit. In Molanus's Hiſtory of Holy Images, in the lives of the ſaints by Giry, and in ſeveral other writers.

[c] The Eaſt Indians likewiſe carry the images of Eſtwara & Viſtnou in proceſſion.

[d] A town in Sicily now Gergenti.

[e] Now at Rome in the Paulin chapel.

[f] Lib. I. de divinatione, he ſays, that the ſtatues of Apollo at Cumæ, and of victory at Capua ran down with ſweat. It is remarkable, that Cicero puts this ſtory into his brother's mouth, whom he introduces in this book, and confutes in the ſecond.

[g] With this difference, that amongſt the Mahometans and Jews, they are attributed neither to ſtatues nor images, they being unlawful.

1

FIGURE des deux FAMEUX SUAIRES.

Roma 1722.

The HOLY HANDKERCHIEF.

IF the croſs, ſanctified by the ſufferings of Chriſt, requires the veneration of Chriſtians; [h] if it be allowable to addreſs to the holy croſs in the ſame manner as to Chriſt crucified; ſure the holy handkerchief has a right to expect the ſame veneration. This immediately touched the Redeemer of mankind, and wrapt up Chriſt's body in the ſepulchre, whilſt his ſoul deſcended into hell to triumph over death, and redeem thoſe who expected the coming of the Meſſiah. The prayer to St. Veronica, already ſpoken of, is thus, [i] O bleſſed figure, conduct us, to the end that we may ſee the face of Chriſt; much more reaſonably then may we ſay to the holy handkerchief, [k] Preſerve us, O divine reſemblance of Jeſus Chriſt, the likeneſs of the Father, who is immutable. To thee we direct ourſelves as to an intelligent Being, &c.

There are two famous handkerchiefs in Europe, that of Bezançon, and that of Turin; Chifflet has given the hiſtory of them both, and [l] pretends that the handkerchief at Bezançon was brought thither from Paleſtine in the time of the cruſades, about the beginning of the 12. century; and almoſt ever ſince has been introduced the cuſtom of ſhewing it to the people. The ſame author has taken this ceremony out of an ancient ritual, and it is thus. On the feſtival of Eaſter at Matins three canons walking out of the chapel to the high altar ſing, who is he who ſhall take away the ſtone from the ſepulchre? At the ſame time, boys dreſſed like angels meet, and aſk them, whom ſeek ye? To whom they anſwer, we ſeek Jeſus of Nazareth; upon which the angels reply, he is not here. Then the chanter thus addreſſes himſelf to the firſt of the three canons; Tell us, O Mary, what thou haſt ſeen in the way; I have, ſays the canon, ſeen the ſepulchre of Chriſt who liveth, and the glory of him who is raiſed. The ſecond adds, I have ſeen the angels witneſſes of the reſurrection; I have ſeen the holy handkerchief and clothes; and at the ſame time ſhews the holy handkerchief, the third canon at the ſame time confirming the ſanctity of the ceremony by theſe words, Jeſus Chriſt our hope is riſen. The choir confeſs the truth of our Saviour's reſurrection in the following terms; It is better to give credit to the teſtimony of Mary, than to the impoſtures of the Jews: we know that Chriſt is riſen from the dead. This religious act ends with ſinging Te Deum.

The handkerchief of Bezançon is famous for miracles. It has even raiſed the dead, and this, which happened in the 14. century, conſiderably raiſed its reputation. The church of St. Stephen, where it is kept, was ſoon found too ſmall. The croud of devotees flocking in from all quarters to ſee ſo wonderful a relic, a theatre was forced to be ſet up before the church, and afterwards a ſtone one, from whence it is ſhewn twice a year, viz. Eaſter-day, and the Sunday after Aſcenſion. [m] Chifflet in his diſſertation has preſerved the memory of miracles performed by this relic. It has ſeveral times cured dangerous diſtempers, reſtored the blind to ſight, ſtopt the plague; nay the very images of [h] It is thus St. Thomas Sum. Theol. 3. p. 9. 5. Art. 4. expreſſes himſelf. They who ſhall read the concluſion of a paragraph in the xvi. chapter of Cardinal Bona's Pſalmody, will take all he ſays to the croſs for a poetical enthuſiaſm. But ſure thoſe, and other ſuch expreſſions are never to be taken ſtrictly; nay, it would be malicious to do ſo. It is hardly to be imagined, that any Chriſtian can be perſuaded upon the leaſt reflection, that two pieces of wood made into the form of a croſs are able to ſave him, who apoſtrophiſes them for that end, as does Cardinal Bona in the following words:

Salva nos tremendo tuo
Signaculo munitos.

But it may be ſaid, that he who ſhall addreſs himſelf to a piece of wood of the true croſs, and at the ſame time touch it, will undoubtedly feel the ſalutary effects of it; it being to be preſumed that the particles flying off from the wood to which Chriſt was faſtned, will have the ſame effect upon man's body, as the load-ſtone upon the needle.

[i] O felix figura, deduc nos ad videndam faciem quæ eſt Chriſti pura.

[k] Chifflet concludes his little treatiſe De linteis Sepulchralibus Chriſti, with this prayer to the holy handkerchief of Bezançon, O divina ſimilitudo ejus, quæ mutari non poteſt, patris ſimilitudinis ---- tecum loquor, tanquam cum re animatâ ----- conſerva cum qui piè nobis imperat, &c. [l] De lint. Sepulchral. c. 9. [m] Ibid.

this holy handkerchief have wrought wonderful cures, as may be ſeen in the before cited author.

The fraternity of the holy handkerchief of Bezançon was inſtituted upon a violent plague, from which they aſſure us this relic delivered the city in 1544. this fraternity every third of May go in proceſſion to the church and cloyſter of St. Stephen, and carry the handkerchief in ceremony in a ſilver caſket, at which the chief of the town aſſiſt. Pope Gregory XIII. in 1579. granted extraordinary privileges to the altar of the holy handkerchief. That Pope's bull aſſures us, that all the ſouls for whom maſs ſhall be ſaid at this altar, ſhall obtain indulgences in the other world; and ſhall be delivered from the pains of purgatory, through the merits of JESUS CHRIST, of the bleſſed virgin, and of the apoſtles St. Peter and Paul.

That of Turin no way falls ſhort of the other, this too was brought from Jeruſalem, the hiſtory of which may be ſeen in Chifflet. He tells us how after two or three times changing its abode, it at laſt fixed at Turin in the chapel of the holy handkerchief, which is part of the cathedral. This relic is as famous as the other for miracles. Its preſence alone delivered ſome that were poſſeſſed in 1534. and if a father who ſaw his ſon drowning had not [n] called upon it, the youth had been loſt. It is ſhewn on the 4. of May, its feſtival inſtituted by Julius II. in 1506 [o]. The ſame Pope appointed the fraternity for it, in compliance with the devotion of Duke Charles and Claude his mother. He added indulgences [p] for ſuch who on ſtated days ſhould viſit its chapel, and pay their devotions there.

Beſides theſe two handkerchiefs, there is one preſerved at Compiegne in the church of St. Cornelius. They ſay there are three others at Rome, one at Milan, one at Lisbon, and one at Aix la Chapelle; moſt of them known under the name of Veronica. There are even two in this laſt city; one of them called the Holy Garment, in which Joſeph of Arimathea wrapped Chriſt's body when he put him into the ſepulchre; the other, which they particularly name the holy handkerchief, with which our Saviour's face was covered, [q] and which S. Peter, as they ſay, found in a place ſeparate from the other Veſtments, as a ſure ſign that Chriſt was riſen.

The BENEDICTION of the PONTIFICAL ROBES.

THIS benediction is performed by no body but the biſhop, unleſs he conſents a prieſt ſhall perform it; but whoever does it, he muſt be dreſſed in a ſurplice with the ſtole of a colour ſuitable to the day, over it. The benediction does not differ from any of the foregoing, and is given by the light of tapers with the aſperſion of holy water, and a few prayers to be ſeen in the ritual. All the robes from the mitre to the ſandals receive the ſame benedicton.

We ſhall defer mentioning what is peculiar in the benediction of the table-cloths and other linen for the altar, till we come to the dedication of the altar; as well as what is peculiar to that of the corporals, pales, tabernacles, pyx and box for keeping the hoſt, and alſo laſtly, of the veſſels for the holy oils. Anointing, and making the ſign of the croſs with the chriſm is added to the benediction [r] of the paten and chalice, after which they are both rubbed with the crumb of bread.

As

[n] Vidit periculum infelix pater, O ſancta ſindon, ait, ſerva me, Ibid.

[o] The handkerchief was then at Chamberg. The plague which raged in Italy 1578. occaſioned its being brought to Turin. Duke Emanuel Philibert who had it tranſlated, promiſed to reſtore it to the people of Chamberg: yet neither he nor his ſucceſſors ever made good that promiſe; and the Savoyards complain that ſince it has been taken away, their country has been expoſed to great calamities. The mule which carried the ſacred relic, and would not ſtir one ſtep beyond the gate of Chamberg, is a manifeſt proof of the right the inhabitants have to it. Vide Chifflet, Ibid.

[p] Omnibus fidelibus, certis diebus ſanctam capellam viſentibus, in eâque orantibus indulgentias quaſdam largitus. Chifflet, Ibid.

[q] Vide A ſmall book entitled Prône des Saintes Reliques, which the provoſt of the church of Nôtre Dame gives to the devotees who come to viſit the relics, and Chifflet's above-cited work.

[r] Piſcara Praxis Cerem. Lib. II. c. ii.

La Consecration du SEL et de l'EAU, pour benir la premiere PIERRE.

Benediction du TERRAIN ou l'on doit bâtir l'EGLISE.

L'EVÈQUE va poser la premiere PIERRE.

L'EVÈQUE benit les FONDEMENS de l'EGLISE.

L'EVÈQUE, fait l'ASPERSION de l'EGLISE, par de hors.

L'EVÈQUE, fait le Signe de la CROIX, à la Porte de l'EGLISE.

As to the bleſſing ſuch as are appointed for the holy war, as knights, ſtandards, colours, &c. all which are repreſented in this cut; theſe are the moſt remarkable circumſtances in it. [r] At the ſame time, the biſhop bleſſes the new [t] warrior, he gives him a ſword, already bleſſed by his lordſhip by the aſperſion of holy water. The biſhop, giving him the ſword, exhorts him to employ it againſt the enemies of the church, and religion, in defence of widows, orphans, &c. after which it is put up into the ſcabbard, and the biſhop himſelf puts it upon him. The ſoldier who all this while is kneeling, gets up, draws it, flouriſhes it three times in the air, then bringing it over his left arm. The biſhop, that Goſpel-warrior, whoſe arms are the croſs and the breviary, all ſpiritual, then courageouſly takes the material ſword, gives three ſoft blows to him who is to be the wearer of it, and admoniſhes him to be a [u] ſoldier of peace. After this, his lordſhip puts up the ſword, gives the novice a gentle ſtroke, exhorts him to [w] watch, and laſtly gives him the kiſs of peace. The fellow ſoldiers of this newly initiated warrior put him on his ſpurs. The biſhop has an [x] anthem ſung, after which he riſes from his ſeat, and again bleſſes him whom he has conſecrated for the war, who kiſſes the prelate's hand, takes off his ſword and ſpurs, and goes quietly home.

Standards and arms are conſecrated by ſigns of the croſs and ſprinkling of holy water. We ſhall refer the benediction of water, ſalt and incenſe to the dedication of churches. Every one knows that before the ſacrifice of the maſs, [y] the people are ſprinkled with water, and that the biſhop alone enjoys the privilege of taking of it himſelf. It is likewiſe poured upon the altar, upon the ſick in the article of death, upon dead bodies in church yards, and upon the tombs of the deceaſed. To conclude, the devout always have ſome of it in their houſes for their own uſe, to guard againſt thunder, and ſtorms, and to keep off the effects of the Devils malice, who generally are concerned in the agitation of the air. There is nothing particular in the benediction of tapers.

The PRONE.

THE Prône or ſermon is too conſiderable a part of ſervice not to be here mentioned. Under the word Prône, Alet's Ritual tells us, we are to include the inſtruction given to the people concerning what is neceſſary to their ſalvation; the prayers of the church chiefly for the faithful; the publiſhing of feſtivals, faſts, bans of matrimony, ſacred orders, marriages and other things relating to the diſcipline of the church. The Prône is after the Goſpel, becauſe this part of religious ſervice is peculiarly deſigned for explaining the myſteries and word of God.

After the Goſpel, the curate, whoſe buſineſs the Prône is, having bowed to the altar goes to the bottom of the ſteps by the epiſtle ſide, takes off his chaſuble and maniple, puts on his cap, kneels down on the middle of the laſt ſtep of the altar, and there offers to God the action he is going about. He then goes to the pulpit, but if there be none, performs the Prône at the entrance of the nave ſtanding, and with his cap on; but whether in the pulpit or not, he muſt be ſeen by the congregation [z], and in ſome place where he

[r] Or the Pope. This benediction is taken out of the Roman Ceremonial.

[t] We here interpret the word miles, ſoldier or warrior, which is its genuine ſignification, though it has ſince taken that of knight. Such as know the riſe of knights, will not think it ſtrange that we tranſlate miles ſoldier.

[u] Eſto miles pacificus.

[w] Exciteris a ſomno.

[x] It begins thus, ſpecioſus formâ, &c. Thou art the faireſt among men, gird thy ſword upon thy thigh, O thou moſt mighty.

[y] At the entrance into all churches there ſtands holy water in veſſels called Benitiers, holy water pots; a practice originally Heathen, but ſince made a part of the Chriſtian religion.

[z] Not to enter too far into the depths of erudition, in order to examine whether all ſuch of the ancients, who ſpoke in public, always choſe ſome riſing ground for the theatre of their eloquence; or whether for want of desks and pulpits, they mounted upon turfs, or benches rather than ſtand upon the ſame ground with thoſe they harangued; I ſay without entring into ſuch enquiries, it muſt be agreed that all ſpeakers ought to be ſeen by their audience, which cannot be without he is raiſed above them. This is the original of pulpits and theatres.

he may be heard by them too. Before the inſtruction he bows to the croſs, and likewiſe croſſes himſelf [a]. He next bows to the chief of the congregation and people. In Italy the angelic ſalutation [b] goes before the exordium of the diſcourſe, in France, after it. If whilſt the inſtruction is reading, or the diſcourſe repeating, the curate or preacher pronounces the name of Jeſus, or Mary, he takes off his cap and bows. [c] In Italy he does the ſame thing, whenever the reigning Pope is named in the ſermon. The inſtruction and ſermon both conclude by the curate's benedictions to the people; but if he preach before his biſhop or a ſuperior clergyman, he aſks his bleſſing before he begins his ſermon.

Before the biſhop or the holy ſacrament ſolemnly expoſed on the altar, the cuſtom is to preach bareheaded. The angelic ſalutation is never uſed on Good Friday; in its ſtead the preacher kneeling [d] addreſſes himſelf to the croſs, which is on the altar, or on the deſk of the pulpit in a prayer. After ſermon, he ſhews the people the image of the crucifix, and has at ſuch time on each ſide an acolyte in his ſurplice, with burning tapers in their hands. Many other particulars on this head may be found in the rituals, more proper for a curate's peruſal than any other's.

As to the external behaviour, and the character of the ſermons of ſuch as are to preach the Goſpel, it is well known we do not now live in the age of the Barelettes and Menots. There are now none of thoſe fanatic extravagant preachers, who furniſhed the [e] author of Herodotus's apology with ſo many buffooneries. France has cleared itſelf of ſuch filth; or ſuppoſing there were any country curates impertinent or clowniſh enough to fall into the exceſſes we have already hinted at; yet the Bourdaloues, the Maſſillons, the Cheminais's, and all thoſe other excellent preachers, now diſperſed over all parts of the kingdom, would invincibly prove in how much contempt thoſe mean and unworthy creatures are held, who bring the Goſpel into the ſcorn and deriſion of libertines, and diſſolute perſons. The decrees of the councils preſcribe an apoſtolical gravity to preachers, and forbid every thing contrary to that decency, whereby a paſtor ought to preach the Goſpel. And yet Italy has not as yet been able to conform to this decency, ſo neceſſary to add a weight and authority to religion. Not only their ſermons are full of points, puns and cold alluſions; but their whole exterior is like that of a ſtage dancer. They are extravagant in their geſtures, they ſtrike with their hands and feet, rowl their eyes, and walk from one end of [f] the pulpit to the other with an immoderate and ridiculous vivacity. "Their fineſt ſermons, ſays a celebrated [g] traveller ſpeaking of the Italian, are "thoſe that raiſe the moſt laughter; and every order of monks has its particular manner." This traveller gives quarter to the Jeſuits, but as to the Capuchins; "they always thun-tres. In the firſt ages of the church, the biſhop inſtructed the people ſitting or ſtanding in a pulpit appropriated to himſelf alone. The preacher often ſtood upon the ſteps of the altar. Several curious remarks on this ſubject are to be found in Ferrarius de Ritu Veteris Eccleſiæ Concionum, Lib. III. The Engliſh editor thinks proper to acquaint the reader that this argument of pulpits is moſt learnedly and accurately handled in Dr. Swift's Tale of a Tub.

"der,

[a] It appears from a paſſage of Corippus, a poet contemporary with the Emperor Juſtinian, that Chriſtian Princes always began their diſcourſes in public with croſſing themſelves. The doctors of the church did the ſame in their diſputes againſt Heretics and Infidels; perhaps to drive away the Devil, whom the Pope exorciſes in the perſon of thoſe whom he reconciles to the church.

[b] Baudry Manuale Cerem. The cuſtom of repeating the angelic ſalutation before the ſermon is not very ancient, if, as Ferrarius in the before mentioned treatiſe obſerves, St. Vincent Ferrier, who lived at the beginning of the 15. century, is the firſt who took notice of, or inſtituted it. It is thought that the blaſphemies and hereſies againſt the virgin Mary, the fruits of theſe latter ages, gave birth to it; tho' Eraſmus aſcribes it to a much leſs ſerious original; for he inſiſts that it was introduced to ingratiate with the fair ſex, in imitation of the Heathen poets, who invoked the muſes at the beginning of their poems. Anciently care was taken to proclaim ſilence before ſermon began, which was the dean's office, and the ſame was obſerved in the Jewiſh church before reading the ſacred books. One of the Heathen forms on theſe occaſions was favete linguis. According to Ferrarius, the church of Milan to this day, retain the ancient manner of commanding ſilence in pontifical maſſes. The orator or preacher often commanded the aſſembly's ſilence by a motion of the hand. We ſhall not enter into a detail of thoſe ſigns, which were made in a different manner; but ſhall rather obſerve, that ſome leſſons out of the Scripture anciently, as well as now-a-days, went before the inſtruction to the people, or the diſcourſe we call the ſermon. The Jews have always followed the ſame rule, as well as all Chriſtian congregations, except the Quakers, as ſhall be hereafter obſerved.

[c] Piſcara. Prax. Cerem. Lib. II. Sect. 2. cap. vi.

[d] O crux, ave, ſpes unica, hoc paſſionis tempore, &c.

[e] In Italy the pulpits are very long, and proportionably wide.

[f] Henry Stephens.

[g] Miſſon. Travels to Italy.

" der, adds he, and never preach but on terrible ſubjects, when it is not a day for buf-
" foonery ---- they ſeize their own beards, clap their hands, and ſcream enough to " fright one, &c. ---- The other day I heard a Carmelite, who was preaching to the " repentant nums of the holy croſs, on the ſubject of Mary Magdalen, and who gave a " full ſwing to his imagination. In order to raiſe a more exalted idea of the ſacrifice,
" which his penitent had made of the pleaſures of this world, he ſpent a whole quarter
" of an hour in painting her out as the moſt charming creature under heaven. Not one " beautiful feature in the moſt perfect body was omitted, and he talked more like an
" accompliſhed painter, than a preacher.

The angelic ſalutation, as already has been obſerved, goes before the ſermons of the Italian preachers: after which the preacher names his text, and if he then enters upon the ſubject ariſing out of the text, it is after a very immethodical manner; and almoſt always without troubling himſelf to connect it. Their ſermons, however, are generally divided into two parts, the firſt of which is the more ſerious, and full of ſcholaſtic divinity, enough to ſet a Frenchman a yawning; after which [h] comes the poor's collection. The ſecond part, wholly ludicrous, and often nothing elſe but a rhapſody of tales and hiſtories concerning the other world, is of more diverſion than edification of the people; unleſs, ſo inſipid an entertainment can be called the latter.

In Italy, there are ſeldom any ſermons but in the time of Advent and Lent: but then God only knows what preparations are made by theſe preachers many months beforehand to [i] ſhine out in all the beauty and pomp of eloquence; and indeed, the harveſt of theſe labourers in the Goſpel is moſt abundant. At all other times, ſermons are rare in the pariſh churches, and nothing elſe is performed but the office, and maſſes without muſic. The fryars preach in their convents upon topics which we may call eternal; for they ſeldom loſe ſight of their founders or of ſome particular practices which they are fond of; ſuch as the roſary, the ſcapulary, and St. Francis's girdle.

In ſome cities of Italy are itinerant preachers. They who have heard them, aſſure us, they pretty well imitate your jugglers and mountebanks, in their way of dealing out Goſpel truths in their diſcourſe, [k] of which they make a ſort of ſale to the people, after cooking them up with their buffooneries, according to the way of common quacks. A fryar, taking a large crucifix, that has been carried before him with a little bell, goes up into a moveable pulpit in order to deal out his ware, which is as pernicious to the ſoul, as the ſophiſticated drugs of a mountebank to the body.

The Spaniſh and Italian preachers, preach the Goſpel in a manner at leaſt as particular as the Italians. " Theſe, ſays the author of the Delices de l'Eſpagne, preach in the public
" ſquares and high ſtreets; and if they have the leaſt ſkill or genius, never fail of a " numerous audience. Their manner is ſomewhat different from that of other nations;
" they particularly affect moving ſinners, and to that end take great pains, and every " now and then ſmite their breaſt, or face, and the whole congregation does the ſame
" thing. Some reſerve their grand exclamations for the cloſe of their ſermons, and they
" who draw moſt tears are thought the beſt preachers." This is the fragment of a ſermon made on Eaſter Sunday by a Portugueſe preacher, as given us by M. Dellon in [l] his [h] This is likewiſe the way in the Proteſtant churches in Holland, the preacher ſtops to exhort his audience to charity. The deacons go from row to row with purſes tied to long poles, at which there is a ſmall bell to wake ſuch as ſleep, or pretend to do ſo.

[i] Se ne viene in coteſta Città, ſays Loredano, il Padre Girolamo Olivi a far pompa d'Eloquenza nel corſo quadrageſimale.

[k] They traffic with theſe truths, as a mountebank with his Orvietan, and often rob them of ſome of their patients. Theſe preachers methinks might be compared to the Mimes and Pantomimes of the old Romans, and their ſermons to their Attellani. It is well known, that the Mimes did not ſpare their very Gods in their farces, nor the Pantomimes in their poſtures. Nor are we to learn that the Pagan theology was turned into ridicule by the Attellani, and it is probable the Arlequinades of the Italian Monks is a relic of that ancient taſte. But as to the cuſtom of preaching in the public ſtreets or markets, it was practiſed among the ancient Jews, and it appears, that Chriſt himſelf practiſed it. A ſermon preached in the open market, ſo touched the heart of St. Nicolas Tolentinus, that to do juſtice to truth, which he had all his lifetime loved, he was canoniſed after his death. The tree which ſerved St. Anthony of Padua for a pulpit, is now ſhewn near Padua.

[l] Tom. I. p. 459. Ed. of 1709. printed at Paris, tho' in the title page at Cologne.

travels, and is very particular. " You know, ſaid he, croſſing himſelf, that this " ſermon is appointed for three reaſons; the firſt is, to wiſh my auditors a happy Eaſter. " And, gentlemen, in order to comply with this duty, I wiſh you in general all ſorts of " bleſſings and proſperity theſe holy days. The ſecond motive is to demand the Eaſter " eggs, a preſent uſually ſent to the preacher at the end of Lent; and to the performance " of this article, I muſt exhort you ----- To conclude, gentlemen, the third reaſon " for this day's ſermon, is, as you know, to give the audience a little diverſion, who, " perhaps, are too much caſt down and afflicted with the auſterities and mortifications " they have practiſed during Lent. In order to ſucceed herein, I am to tell you, that yeſter- " day morning ----- I met a great tun-bellied fellow, who did not ſeem to be faſting, " &c." Such a diſcourſe ſure muſt rather move the audience's pity for the preacher, than their good humour: but may it not be copied from the curate of Colignac's? Or may not M. Dellon, exaſperated at being ſo long ill uſed in the priſon of the Inquiſition, have carried things too far?

As to the preacher's voice and geſticulations, they are not the proper buſineſs of a work of this kind: and yet mode and cuſtom have a ſhare even in this. In France, they formerly coughed methodically in ſome places of their ſermons, which cough, tho' certainly not Ciceronian, is noted as a perfection in the ſermons of Oliver Maillard, a preacher of the 15. century. We ſhall ſay nothing [m] of the French and Latin, which appear in their turns in their oratorial diſcourſes. Rabelais has very agreeably rallied [n] both the cough and interlarding of Latin with the French, in the impertinent harangue he puts into his Janotus de Bragmardo's mouth. Alluſions, points and antitheſes have been in vogue, rambling looſe diſcourſes have had their turn, a falſe and extravagant pathos attended with odd whimſical geſtures has been cried up; burleſque and comic rants, rather than Chriſtian flights were able to move the hearts of our anceſtors: but now all theſe whims are deſpiſed and fallen to the ſhare of the Capuchins. A plain familiar inſtruction, or a leſſon from the Goſpel accompanied with ſome reflexions in a popular ſtile, without being low or creeping, would have a better effect, were not the ear tired with what was uniform; and it is this diſguſt which opens a way for the mode. This mode, it is true, is often ſupported by the preacher's ambition, whoſe general motive to eloquence, as well as to the pains he takes in the converſion of ſouls, is no other than reputation and eſtabliſhment in the world.

The devotion of the audience too has a ſtrong tincture of mode and cuſtom in it: this ſame mode, indeed, has no great chance for being univerſal, as mankind cannot find the ſecret of reconciling the art of fearing God, with that of making a fortune; and yet there are countries we ſee where the people ſafely and without being called to any account mingle devotion and paſſion. Strict and faithful obſervers of the cuſtoms ſettled among them, according to which, they who follow the injunctions of the church are eſteemed good Chriſtians, in other reſpects they ſtab, or devoutly poiſon their enemies. The very prieſts themſelves, having made an end of their prayers, haſten to ſhew their good breeding and gallantry to ſome Signora. On the other-hand, devotion is not the cuſtom where freedom of ſentiments is eſtabliſhed: but becomes ſo whenever a worn out debauched Prince takes it into his head to reform. A Prince who affecting devotion, ſhall fill his palace with croſſes, breviaries and roſaries, who will not give audience till he has ſaid his prayers before ſome image; nor ſign any orders till he has ſigned himſelf with the croſs, and ſprinkled himſelf with holy water: Such a ſovereign would ſoon ſee his court grow moſt holy, at leaſt in externals; tho' otherwiſe perhaps extremely vitious, their devotion being the effect of complaiſance or imitation. Examples of what we here advance, are eaſy to be found in private families. The maſter of a houſe, who has no other recreation than what he finds

[m] This was ſtill in uſe at the end of the 16. century, as may be ſeen in the ſermons of Maitre Jean Boucher, a famous partiſan of the league. There is not only Latin, but Greek too in them.

[n] Book I. chap. xviii.

finds in his piety, is ſure to make his houſe a nurſery of devotees. The family, brought up to look on every one that bears any relation to this world with horror, moſt charitably condemns all ſuch as ſhew any concern for the things of it. They paſs all the time they can ſteal from buſineſs in maſſes and prayers, and as if the ſize of every thing [o] inſtrumental to their devotion augmented it, their prayer books, their chaplets, their crucifixes, and their whole ghoſtly equipage, very much exceeds thoſe of others; but their piety being no more than a habit, is alſo found to fall infinitely ſhort of that of the moſt lukewarm Chriſtian.

DESCRIPTION of the ALTAR, and of what is required for keeping it in due Order.

THE deſcriptions we have already given of the Pope's chapel, maſſes, croſſes, &c. likewiſe require we ſhould give one of [p] an altar: after which we ſhall go on to churches.

The altar [q] muſt be of ſtone, according to the holy canon, it being to repreſent Chriſt, the foundation ſtone, the ſpiritual building, which is the church of the faithful. A ſaint of the firſt order, St. Charles Borromeo has declared, that for want of ſtone, it muſt be built of brick at leaſt; and it is the biſhop's buſineſs to conſecrate it. The table of it muſt be of one ſingle ſtone, and the body filled up with brick-work or ſupported by pillars, to which there muſt be three ſteps to go up to it, either of ſtone or brick covered with a carpet. The clerks are to take care to cover the table with a chriſmal, whereon is to be laid a fine cloth as white as poſſible, to the end, that all things may be done with decency and order, according to St. Paul's command to the Corinthians. All this muſt be obſerved with the greateſt exactneſs in regard to the high altar, where Chriſt's body is generally kept, and to adorn and take care of this high altar, two of the moſt able clerks ſhall be choſen, who are never to approach it but in ſurplices. As ſoon as they ſhall be within reach of it, they are to kneel, adore the holy ſacrament, and ſay ſome ejaculatory prayers. When the altar ornaments are to be changed, the following rules are to be obſerved. Before the new ones are put on, the circcloth called the chriſmal muſt be taken off, the carpet muſt be ſpread upon the fore-part of the altar, and the table cloth and other linen that has ſerved muſt be neatly folded up: all which muſt be locked up, and then the clerks muſt ſweep off the duſt which happens to be on the altar with a bruſh. They ſhall next put on the covering deſigned for it according to the day, and this to be ſo adjuſted as to form a croſs in the middle; and three table cloths ſhall be laid over it, one of which muſt hang down to the ground all round the altar, the two others not to be ſo long. The whole to be bleſſed, croſſed, and ſprinkled with holy water. The ſame formalities are to be obſerved in regard to the tabernacle of the altar, to the pyx, to the box wherein the hoſt is locked up, to the corporals on which they conſecrate, &c. and for [r] the glory of God, care muſt be taken to add every thing of the greateſt value to the ornaments of the altar.

We

[o] Rabelais has given us a genuine and humorous deſcription of theſe falſe devotees, in the character of his Gargantua. "After a good breakfaſt, he went to church, and they carried to him in a great basket, a huge "breviary weighing what in greaſe, claſps, parchment and cover, little more or leſs than one hundred and "ſix pounds. There he heard ſix and twenty or thirty maſſes, this while, to the ſame place came his mat-"tin-mumbler, muffled up about the chin, round as a hoop, and his breath pretty well antidoted with vine-"tree ſyrrup. With him he mumbled all his Kyrie's, which he ſo curiouſly thumbed and fingered, that there "fell not ſo much as one bead of them to the ground. As he went from church, they brought him upon a "dray drawn by oxen, a confuſed heap of Pater noſters of Sancte Claude, every one of the bigneſs of a hat "block; and ſauntring along thro' the cloiſters, galleries and gardens, he riddled over more of them, than "ſixteen hermits would have done, Lib. I. ch. xxi.

[p] Taken word for word from Piſcara, Prax. Cer. Lib. I. Sect. 3. cap. i. Lib. II. Sect. 1. cap. i. Ed. of Venice in 1681.

[q] Cardinal Bona carries the original of altars very high, for he makes no doubt but Adam was the inventor of them. Rerum Liturg. Lib. I. cap. xx. It appears, they were eſtabliſhed among Chriſtians from the earlieſt ages of the church; but it is not known whether they were of wood or ſtone. The inventing the latter is aſcribed to S. Sylveſter, but without good proof.

[r] Piſcara, Ibid.

We juſt now ſaid, that the ornaments were changed according to the ſolemnity of the day. Altars are likewiſe ſet out with natural and artificial flowers according to the ſeaſon.

The duſt [f] muſt every day be ſwept off the altar. And the carpets well beaten by the clerks at leaſt once a week. When the clerk who ſweeps the pavement of the Presbyterium, comes near the holy ſacrament, he muſt be bareheaded.

The tabernacle of the holy ſacrament is placed upon the altar. Neither gold, ſilver, nor jewels are ſpared on it, and the moſt ſplendid and magnificent productions of art contribute to its luſtre; but the chief and firſt care muſt be that the Euchariſt be not expoſed to any moiſture. Tapers are ſet on the right and left ſide of the tabernacle, which muſt be of white wax, except at all offices for the dead, and the three laſt days of Paſſion-week, when they are of yellow. We have already ſpoken of the canopy.

On the altar muſt be a crucifix in relievo neatly made, tho' there be one upon the tabernacle, and a croſs painted or carved on the door of the tabernacle. The crucifix muſt be ſo placed as to have its foot as high as the top of the candleſtics, and appear quite above them. It would be impertinent to tell the reader that it muſt be bleſſed as well as the croſs and images. The candleſtics muſt be of an eccleſiaſtical figure, that is, different from ſuch as are uſed in private houſes.

Upon every altar there muſt be a copy of what is called [t] the Te igitur or canon, the letters of which muſt be written pretty large, that the prieſt may read them with eaſe; this muſt be at the foot of the crucifix.

We ſhall ſay nothing of the burette, or cryſtal bottle for the wine and water, the baſon, or napkin uſed at the levabo, after waſhing the hands, nor of the golden hook on the epiſtle ſide for holding the prieſt's cap; but we muſt not omit the little bell which is to be rung at the Sanctus, and the two elevations. The clerk muſt tinkle it twice at each Sanctus, and nine times at each elevation; that is thrice when the prieſt kneels down, thrice at his elevating the hoſt, and thrice at his ſetting it down upon the altar; and the ſame muſt be done as to the chalice.

Before every altar muſt be a balluſtrade of either iron, marble, or wood to ſeparate the people, or to keep them off from the altar.

On each ſide [u] the altar, and before the laſt ſtep muſt ſtand a taper in a ſilver candleſtick, if the pariſh be rich enough to afford it, this is for doing honour to the ſacrament at its elevation: three, or ſometimes even five lamps are hung up before it [w] to give light to it.

The great or high altar is to be [x] twelve ſpans long, from above the foot four ſpans and two thirds high, and from the ſteps to the edge four ſpans. The foot muſt always be of ſome hard poliſhed wood.

The portable altar or ſacred ſtone, which is inſtead of a conſecrated altar, muſt be of hard ſtone or marble, wherein muſt be a ſepulchre, or ſmall cavity in the middle of the ſide before, in which are the relics of ſaints and martyrs put, and ſealed up by the biſhop; ſhould the ſeal break, the altar loſes its conſecration.

[f] Id. Ibid.

[t] The Te igitur is the beginning of the canon of the maſs. It is a fine prayer addreſſed to God only, the firſt perſon in the Trinity; it is alſo called the ſecret prayer.

[u] Both Epiſtle and Goſpel ſide.

[w] In noted churches, the cuſtom of hanging up lamps before the holy ſacrament is taken from the Jews.

[x] Small altars are to be from nine to ten ſpans long, two ſpans two thirds high, three ſpans and an half broad. It is enough for theſe altars to have a foot without ſteps, which muſt be four ſpans wide, and three quarters of a ſpan high. It muſt jet out beyond the altar a ſpan and half on every ſide if there be room. On theſe altars muſt ſtand a gradin of a ſpan in heighth and breadth.

The ſacred VESSELS of the ALTAR, &c. The CORPORALS, PALLES, PURIFICATORIES, PURSES, VEILS, and other ORNAMENTS of ALTARS and CHURCHES.

WHAT we have ſaid concerning the altar would be imperfect, were we not to give ſome account of the veſſels, and other inſtruments annexed to it, for the ornament aud ceremony of the ſervice, or for preſervation of the Euchariſt. [y] Both the one and the other raiſe the ſoul to the contemplation of heavenly objects, and engage it to bleſs and praiſe the Deity. In theſe terms a Roman prelate expreſſes himſelf, at the ſame time adding, that the forming and conſtruction of theſe things is an act of worſhip.

No layman muſt be allowed to uſe any ſacred utenſils. It belongs to the clergy alone to handle them, a cuſtom borrowed from the Jews.

The chalice muſt be either gold or ſilver, whereby we may lay it down as a rule, that the Chriſtian church is rich. The ſubject of chalices gave Boniface biſhop and martyr a hint we ſhall give the reader in the [z] notes. This prelate found very little edification in the looſeneſs of the clergy of his time. [a] In the infancy of the church the chalices were made of wood: and indeed, the church itſelf was nothing more than a bark of fiſhermen. Afterwards, they were made of glaſs or marble, but at laſt of ſilver or gold. The chalices muſt be conſecrated by the biſhop, as well as the patens, nor muſt the inſides only of them be conſecrated. [b] The general height of chalices is nine inches for the ſmall, and eleven or twelve for the large.

The paten muſt be of the ſame matter as the chalice, and its uſe is to hold the conſecrated hoſt; [c] it muſt be proportioned to the ſize of the chalice, that is, be about ſix or eight inches diameter.

The pyx for holding the holy ſacrament muſt be at leaſt of ſilver gilt within, and its foot muſt be half a ſpan high. The height of the cup muſt be anſwerable to its width, and the bottom of it have a gentle riſing to take out the wafers with the more eaſe when there are but few in it, and to be the more conveniently cleanſed. They are not to remain too long in the pyx without cleaning it, for fear of their growing mouldy: [d] ſo that it muſt be cleaned once in eight days at leaſt. We omit particulars of a more minute conſequence in the deſcription of the pyx. Its common height muſt be nine inches, three for the cup, and ſix for the foot. A veil in form of a pavillion, made of a rich white ſtuff, with a fringe round it, muſt cover this precious repoſitory of the wafers.

There muſt likewiſe be a box for carrying the communion to the ſick, made of ſilver gilt within, when it is to go far; and in places difficult of acceſs, it muſt be put into a white ſilk purſe, and hung about the neck. The box and pyx muſt be bleſſed. There muſt be another box for large wafers, round, and ſomething bigger than them; and [y] Caſalius de Vet. Chriſt. ſacr. Ritib. cap. xxxiv.

[z] Quondam ſacerdotes aurei ligneis calicibus utebantur, nunc e contra lignei ſacerdotes aureis utuntur calicibus. This thought is prettily expreſſed in the following French verſes.

Aux tems paſſés au ſiécle d'or,
Croſſe de bois, Evêque d'or;
Maintenant, qu'ont changé les Loix,
Croſſe d'or, Evêque de Bois.

[a] Caſalius, &c. cap. xxi. [b] Alet's Ritual. [c] Ibid.

[d] De ſeptimo in ſeptimum diem mutetur ne fortè diu ſervata mucida fiet. Vide Caſalius, &c. Alet's Ritual ſays, the wafers muſt be changed every 15. days, and care taken that thoſe put into the pyx be freſh made.

this may be made of ſilver, tin, paſtboard, &c. lined with white taffeta within, and ſet off with ſome rich ſilk without. Into this box muſt be put a round leaden plate, covered with taffeta, that the wafers may be in a readineſs. Theſe wafers muſt be kept neither in too dry, nor too moiſt a place. Nor muſt ſuch as are too ſtale be uſed.

[e] The ſun for expoſing the holy ſacrament muſt be ſilver, the height of the foot of the ſmalleſt muſt be a ſpan. This ſun muſt have two cryſtals of the third part of a ſpan diameter, or more, that a large wafer may the more conveniently be put between, and this muſt be ſet in a little half moon of ſilver, but always gilt. One of the cryſtals muſt be fixed to the ſun by a ſmall chain, like the caſe of a watch. Over this ſun muſt be a croſs.

[f] The thurible may be ſilver or pewter, but with four chains. Two thuribles are never uſed but in proceſſions of the holy ſacrament. The navet is of the ſame metal with the thurible.

The incenſe uſed at church muſt be of a fine ſmell, a little broken before it is put into the navet, but not into powder.

The holy-water-pot muſt be ſilver, pewter or tin, the ſprinkler the ſame or wood, with hog's briſtles, or woolf's hair twiſted round it; and at the end of it a hollow knob with holes, in which muſt be encloſed a ſmall ſpunge. There muſt be two veſſels of pewter, delf, or earthen ware, for waſhing the corporals, palles, purificatories, and chalices. In the place where the wafers are made, muſt be another pewter or earthen-ware veſſel, to be applied to this ſingle uſe.

[g] The peace-inſtrument muſt be of gold, ſilver, or embroidery, with ſome godly image of the crucifix, or other myſtery. It is to be half a ſpan high, ſomething leſs than an inch broad, ending in an half round at top. On the back ſide muſt be a ſmall handle to hold it by, to which muſt be fixed a veil of the colour of the office of the day to wipe it with.

[h] The corporals muſt be of fine white linen; not too thin, nor ſewed, and without lace. But if there be a lace, it muſt be very narrow within two fingers breadth of the edge that comes forward. In that part where the prieſt generally kiſſes the altar, ſhall be placed a ſmall croſs made of white ſilk or thread in this form ✠. The corporals muſt be ſo folded that all the ends may be within ſide, and not appear, &c.

[i] The Palles muſt be of the ſame linen as the corporals, and muſt be lined with paſteboard between the two linens; upon theſe muſt be neither embroidery, croſs, nor image, nor any lace round; but four ſmall taſſels only at the four corners to hold them by. They muſt be bleſſed with the corporals, and none under a ſub-deacon can touch them.

[k] The Purificatories are of linen, and two ſpans long. They are folded three double. In the middle of them muſt be a ſmall blew thread croſs.

[l] The outſide of the Purſes for the Corporals is made of the ſame kind of ſtuff as the other ornaments, but the inſide is lined with fine white linen, with a ſtrong paſteboard between. Theſe purſes are a ſpan wide, faſtned by a button and loop, and have a croſs of about three quarters of a ſpan long, embroidered on the outſide.

The Veil of the Chalice is made of ſilk, and of the ſame colour as the reſt of the ornaments, three ſpans ſquare, without any croſs or other figure.

[m] In

[e] Alet's Ritual. [f] Id. Ibid. This is the allegory which Germanus of Conſtantinople has found in the thurible. It repreſents, as he ſays, the human nature of Chriſt. The burning of the perfume is his divine nature, and the perfume itſelf the Holy Ghoſt. Happy the man born for making ſuch ingenious and uſeful diſcoveries! The incenſe is the ſymbol of penance, of the preaching of the Goſpel, and of the prayers of the faithful. It repreſents the virtues and good works of the Saints. The thurible is likewiſe the image of Chriſt's body; S. Auſtin tells us ſo. Theſe and many other allegories are more than convincing, that perfumes ought to be uſed at church in honour of the Deity; and S. Ambroſe very wiſely obſerves, that an angel appears at this ceremony.

[g] Alet's Ritual. [h] Id. Ibid. The uſe of corporals is ſaid to have been preſcribed by Pope Euſebius, or by Sylveſter I. This repreſents the ſheet wherein our Saviour's body was wrapped after his death, and for this reaſon can be made of nothing but linen. Vide Caſalius de ritib. &c. chap. xxxiv. We ſhall paſs over the many myſteries contained in the corporals; but Caſalius may be conſulted hereon.

[i] Alet's Ritual. Piſcara Prax. cerem. [k] Alet's Ritual. [l] Id. Ibid.

[m] In churches where the ſolemn office is performed, there muſt be veils for the ſubdeacon for holding the paten at high maſs, of ten ſpans long, and as wide as the ſilk, of the four colours, that is, [n] white, red, green and violet. There muſt be none black, for they are never uſed at maſſes for the dead, nor on Good Friday. Theſe veils muſt be white ſilk edged with lace, &c. Alet's Ritual adds, that in the moſt noted churches there muſt be another veil of the ſame ſize, white and more coſtly, to put on the ſhoulders of the officiating prieſt, when he is to carry the hoſt in proceſſion; and in the pariſh church a canopy likewiſe under which the holy Viaticum is carried to the ſick. This canopy muſt be five or ſix ſpans long, and four or more wide, and of white ſilk. The vallant muſt be a ſpan and a half deep, reckoning in the fringe, and theſe two of white ſilk. There muſt be two poles of five or ſix ſpans long to carry it with, covered with the ſame ſilk as the canopy, unleſs they are painted or gilt. He that carries the holy ſacrament in proceſſion, is ſuperior to him who carries it to the ſick.

There muſt beſides [o] be veils or covers to the croſſes and images in paſſion week. Theſe muſt be of camlet or ſome other ſtuff of violet colour, but without figure, image, croſs or other inſtruments of the paſſion.

In every [p] pariſh church ſhould be a banner of a colour ſuitable to the patron of the church, which muſt be nine or ten ſpans high, and ſix long; in the middle of which the patron is to be embroidered. This banner muſt be of ſatin, damaſk, taffeta or camlet lined with linen, or a light ſtuff with a ſilk border and a fringe. The pole of it muſt be a [q] cane and a half long.

We ſhall ſay nothing of the maſs book, the uſe of it is ſufficiently known, as well as that it contains the prayers and leſſons uſed in the devotion of the altar. They who believe the conſtitutions of St. Clement to be genuine, make no doubt but St. Peter was the inſtitutor of the maſs book, and recommended the uſe of it to S. Clement his ſucceſſor.

Having now ſpoken of the ſacred veſſels of the altar and their ſeveral uſes, it would be unneceſſary to take notice of the attention its miniſters ought to ſhew to the holy ſacrament. This falls not within our province, and beſides, the care taken of the ornaments belonging to thoſe veſſels, the precautions uſed in keeping them neat and clean, by conſecration, and other religious methods, all theſe ſhould be conſidered as ſo many proofs of reſpect paid the Euchariſt. If Calvin have robbed the holy ſacrament of all its ſplendor, it was becauſe he looked upon the bit of bread given to thoſe of his ſect as nothing more than a type or ſign; but the catholics think they ought to clothe the body of the King of Kings, in the moſt coſtly and pompous ornaments. The faithful of the ancient church, when they travelled, often carried the Euchariſt about them, and kept it in [r] their houſes. However, there are in thoſe practices, [s] things which ſeem contrary to that notion which the church orders Chriſtians to entertain concerning the holy Euchariſt.

[m] Id. Ibid.

[n] The reaſon for theſe colours has been already given in the Diſſertation on Religious Worſhip, and in this Diſſertation likewiſe, p. 291. Vide Caſal. de Vet. Chriſt. ritibus. ch. XXXIV.

[o] Alet's Ritual.

[p] Id. Ibid.

[q] A meaſure in Languedoc and Provence containing about an ell and two thirds.

[r] It may be ſaid, that Chriſtians were on theſe occaſions betrayed into profanation by an exceſs of piety. It was certainly one, for inſtance, the ſetting the Euchariſt on a corps, and burying it with it; and yet this was formerly practiſed.

[s] Was not letting the body of Jeſus Chriſt on the ſtomach of a dead body buried, or dividing the holy wafer, as did St. Baſil, in order to let part of it into the grave with him, was not this, I ſay, burying the living with the dead? No ſolid reaſon can be given for ſuch a practice.

BENEDICTION of the FIRST STONE of a CHURCH, which is building.

THE congregation of the faithful, and the place where they meet are both called the Church. The latter is a place appropriated solely to religious worship, the most essential part of which, as well as the most agreeable to God, is prayer, meditation, contemplation, and the elevation of the heart to the supreme Being. These qualities are essential to Christianity, which professes to adore God in Spirit. Thus the name of Church must be confined to Christian assemblies, and at the same time to their temples.

[t] Before a church be begun, the bishop's consent must be obtained. It is he who fixes the place, the space, the revenues of it and its ministers, the fund to be settled for lights, ornaments, and maintenance of it. It is he who plants the cross on the ground of the new designed church, and lays the first stone; or at least, if he does it not immediately himself, it is with his good pleasure and consent, that some inferior clergyman performs this sacred office. The day before the stone is to be laid, a wooden cross must be set where the altar is to stand; and the next day a square, angular stone is to be chosen; which is to be the first and foundation stone of the building. In order to perform this ceremony of benediction, the Pontif, if he be at Rome, and will discharge this religious duty, shall have on his rochet, and other robes suitable to the solemnity of the action: but an inferior [u] ecclesiastic must, besides the surplice, have on the amict, the albe, the girdle, the white pluvial, and plain mitre; and hold the pastoral staff in his left hand. Thus equipped he must go to the ground designed for the new church, [w] and there bless the salt and water. He begins with the salt, to which he says; may it be exorcised by the living God, &c. to the end that being thus exorcised for the salvation of such as believe, it may procure health of body and mind for all such who shall take of it, and may have the virtue to destroy the malice of Satan. After this, the Pontif takes off his mitre, and pronounces the benediction over the salt. He then puts on his mitre in order to exorcise the water, that like the salt it may be capable of destroying the power of the Devil and his angels, and goes on with the ceremony, as he had before done as to the salt. These two benedictions ended, he puts the salt into the water in the form of a cross, says prayers suitable to the occasion, takes his mitre, and causes an [x] anthem, and the lxxxiii. Psalm according to the Vulgate, to be sung; and all the while, the celebrant with his mitre on, sprinkles the spot of ground where the cross stands. As soon as the Psalm and Anthem are over, he turns himself towards the place he has been sprinkling with holy water, takes off his mitre, and addresses himself in a prayer to God, under the direction of the saint to whom the new church is to be dedicated, after which, once more taking off his mitre, he blesses the stone. This benediction is succeeded by prayers, and the prayers by sprinkling the stone. The sprinkling performed, the celebrant makes several [y] figures of the cross in the name of the Father, Son, and holy Ghost on the stone with a knife. An Oremus and some Litanies follow, after which the celebrant, who before was on his knees on a carpet spread on purpose, rises without his mitre, and repeats a prayer turning towards the stone. In the mean while, the mortar is preparing, and when ready, the celebrant again puts on his mitre beginning an anthem, the subject of which is the stone which Jacob laid for a monument when journeying

[t] Pontif. Rom. Part II. According to the holy canons, no church or chapel is to be built without the authority and command of the bishop. He must mark out the ground, the entrance, &c. Alet's Ritual.

[u] The Pontifical says Religiosus.

[w] This Blessing of the salt and water is what is constantly practised.

[x] Of which this is the purport. Set, O Lord, a mark of salvation on this place, nor suffer the destroying angel to enter it.

[y] He signs the stone on every side with a cross, so that it has six. Vide Alet's Ritual.

ing in the deſart; after which follows the cxxvi. Pſalm according to the Vulgate. To conclude, the celebrant with his mitre on touches this foundation ſtone with his ſacred hand, and lays it in its place, [z] thro' faith in Jeſus Chriſt; and ſtill as the maſon faſtens the ſtone with mortar, the celebrant takes care to ſprinkle it with holy water, ſaying to God, [a] Thou ſhalt cleanſe me with hyſſop, &c. after all this, the l. Pſalm according to the Vulgate is ſung.

Whenever a biſhop, or prieſt by his order, goes to bleſs a ſtone, he is to walk with two clerks in ſurplices before him, one of which carries the ritual, and a ſmall veſſel with ſalt; and the other a veſſel with fair water and the ſprinkler. One of the clergy carries the croſs between two taper-bearers.

Benediction of the Foundation of a Church.

THE Pſalm ended, the celebrant walks with the ſprinkler in his hand all the way ſprinkling the foundations of the church to the right and left. This ceremony is performed with the ſame formality as the benediction of the firſt ſtone; and all the time he is ſprinkling, an anthem, and part of the lxxxvi. Pſalm is ſung. When a third part of the foundations are conſecrated, the anthem is repeated. The biſhop takes off his mitre, ſays an Oremus, once again reſumes the mitre and anthem, and ſprinkles another third of the foundations. Then follows a prayer, then an anthem, and the cxxi. Pſalm. For the laſt third of the ſacred building follows a third aſperſion, the anthem is again ſung, another prayer ſaid, and the biſhop begins to ſing Veni Creator, and kneels whilſt the firſt verſe is ſinging; but riſes at the ſecond, and ſtands uncovered to the end of that hymn, after which the celebrant begs of God, that the holy Ghoſt would vouchſafe to dwell in this holy place, that this houſe of devotion may remain inviolable, and that he would think it worthy of the enjoyment of his favours, &c. One of theſe favours is doubtleſs, that the pious Chriſtian may contribute to build it by his liberality. Then the celebrant with his mitre on, ſits down and exhorts the congregation to contribute largely. This exhortation cloſes with a bleſſing, and a preſent of indulgences from the Pope.

The Dedication of a Church and Altar.

IF poſſible, a Sunday or holy-day muſt [b] be choſen for [c] this ceremony. The archdeacon is to give notice of the dedication to the clergy and inhabitants of the place, that on the eve of it they may faſt. In the interim, [d] the relics, [e] to be put into the altar of the new church, are preparing. They are put into a decent clean veſſel together with three grains of incenſe. To this is added a piece of parchment whereon is ſet down, " that ſuch a day of ſuch a month and year, the church of * *, " and [a] Aſperges me, Domine, hyſſopo, &c.

[z] Theſe words are the beginning of a prayer he then ſays.

[b] Taken out of the Roman Pontifical and Alet's Ritual.

[c] If by dedication is underſtood the conſecrating a certain houſe to God by prayer, it may be looked upon as very ancient, and eſtabliſhed by the apoſtles themſelves. But as for all the train and implements of the ceremony, this no doubt began when the church was freed from the perſecution of its enemies, and ſtill grew with the proſperity and worldly mindedneſs of its miniſters. We ſhall here obſerve, that the Chriſtians at firſt built their temples as like as poſſible to that of Jeruſalem, but afterwards gave them the form of a croſs in remembrance of our Saviour. Vide Bona. Lib. I. c. xx. Rerum Liturgic. and Caſalius, &c. c. xxxiii.

[d] This is done on the eve of the dedication.

[e] It is pretended, that the cuſtom of putting relics under the altar owes its riſe to the veneration of the Chriſtians to the church-yards and tombs of martyrs. When the Chriſtian church triumphed over Paganiſm, the firſt temples were built in ſuch places, and, as it were, over theſe faithful defenders of truth. The Roman church was the firſt that obſerved to place relics under the altar; and the practice muſt be ancient, ſince S. Ambroſe and Prudentius mention it, yet notwithſtanding it might be firſt owing to chance. For tho' aſſemblies were held at the tombs of martyrs, very likely it might not be for their ſakes, but becauſe they were there ſecure from the rage of the Heathens. But however that might be, it was afterwards ordained, that they who ſhould conſecrate any church without having firſt provided it with relics, ſhould be depoſed as tranſgreſſors of the traditions of the church. Vide Bona.

" and its altar were conſecrated by biſhop * *, that there are relics under the altar of " the church, and that all pious Chriſtians who ſhall viſit it, will obtain indulgences," &c. The vaſe where the relics lie muſt be ſealed up and placed in a very clean place [f]. Two tapers muſt be kept burning continually before them. There are other circumſtances to be obſerved on this occaſion, which may be ſeen in the rituals.

The following inventory contains what is neceſſary for the dedication of a church and altar.

A ſmall veſſel containing the holy chriſm.
Another with the [g] conſecrated oil.
Two pound of incenſe or powder.
A thurible, navet, and ſpoon.
A vaſe for live coals.
Another with aſhes.
Another with ſalt.
Another with wine.
An hyſſop-ſprinkler.
Some napkins or towels of coarſe cloth, to rub the altar table.
A cire-cloth to lay over it.
Five little wax-croſſes.

Some wooden ſpatulas to ſcrape the places of the altar burnt by the incenſe, and wax of the candles.

A veſſel for theſe ſcrapings.

Lime, ſand, and brick-duſt for making the cement, deſigned for cloſing up the place where the relics, &c. lie.

Two burning flambeaux or tapers to be born before the celebrant.

A baſon with water for waſhing the celebrant's hands.

Napkins to wipe them.

Crumb of bread.

Two pound of ſilk to rub the croſſes made by the celebrant with the chriſm upon the church walls, and round the altar.

Two veſſels for holy-water.

All theſe ſeveral things are neceſſary, we have borrowed them from the Roman pontifical, and the reader will immediately ſee to what uſe they are all deſigned.

Before the dedication is begun, care is taken to have three croſſes painted on each of the church walls at a reaſonable height; over each of which twelve croſſes muſt ſtand [h] a candle of an ounce weight. We muſt not omit that the ſexton muſt have a ladder ready for the uſe of the celebrant; that the holy-water-pots be clean, and every thing that might cauſe any hindrance be removed all round the church, that the conſecration may be performed with all requiſite regularity.

On the morning of the day deſigned for the ceremony, the biſhop appears in his pontifical robes, and orders the twelve candles already mentioned to be lighted up. He then goes out of the church, and makes every body do the ſame, except one ſingle deacon who remains ſhut up in the church, dreſſed in his amict, albe, girdle and ſtole. The biſhop goes to the place where the relics have been put the day before. There he in a low voice begins the ſeven penitential Pſalms, and an anthem without Litanies, all the while putting on his amict, albe, white pluvial, &c. The reſt of the clergy preſent are in their robes. After the ſeven Pſalms, the biſhop with his miniſters goes to the church door, and taking off his mitre, begins an anthem, which is generally followed

[f] For example, under a tent or pavillion at the entrance of the church.

[g] Oleum Catechumenorum.

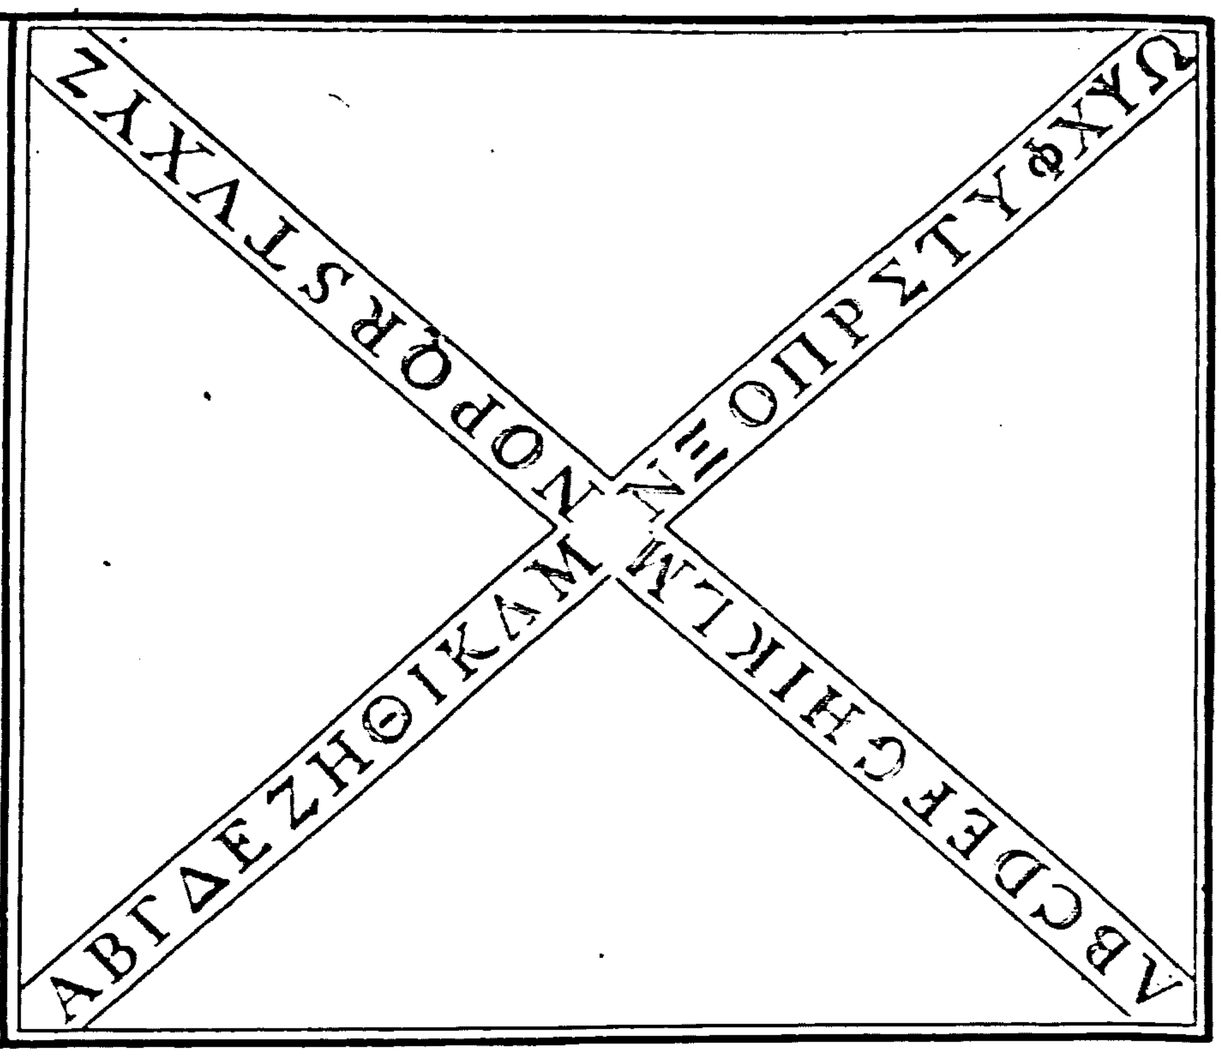
[h] Theſe twelve candles repreſent the preaching of the Goſpel, the light of it diſperſed all over the world by the twelve apoſtles, and the attention which pious Chriſtians ought to give to it.

L'EVÈQUE asperge L'ALPHABET sur la CROIX de CENDRES que le SOUSDIACRE a fait



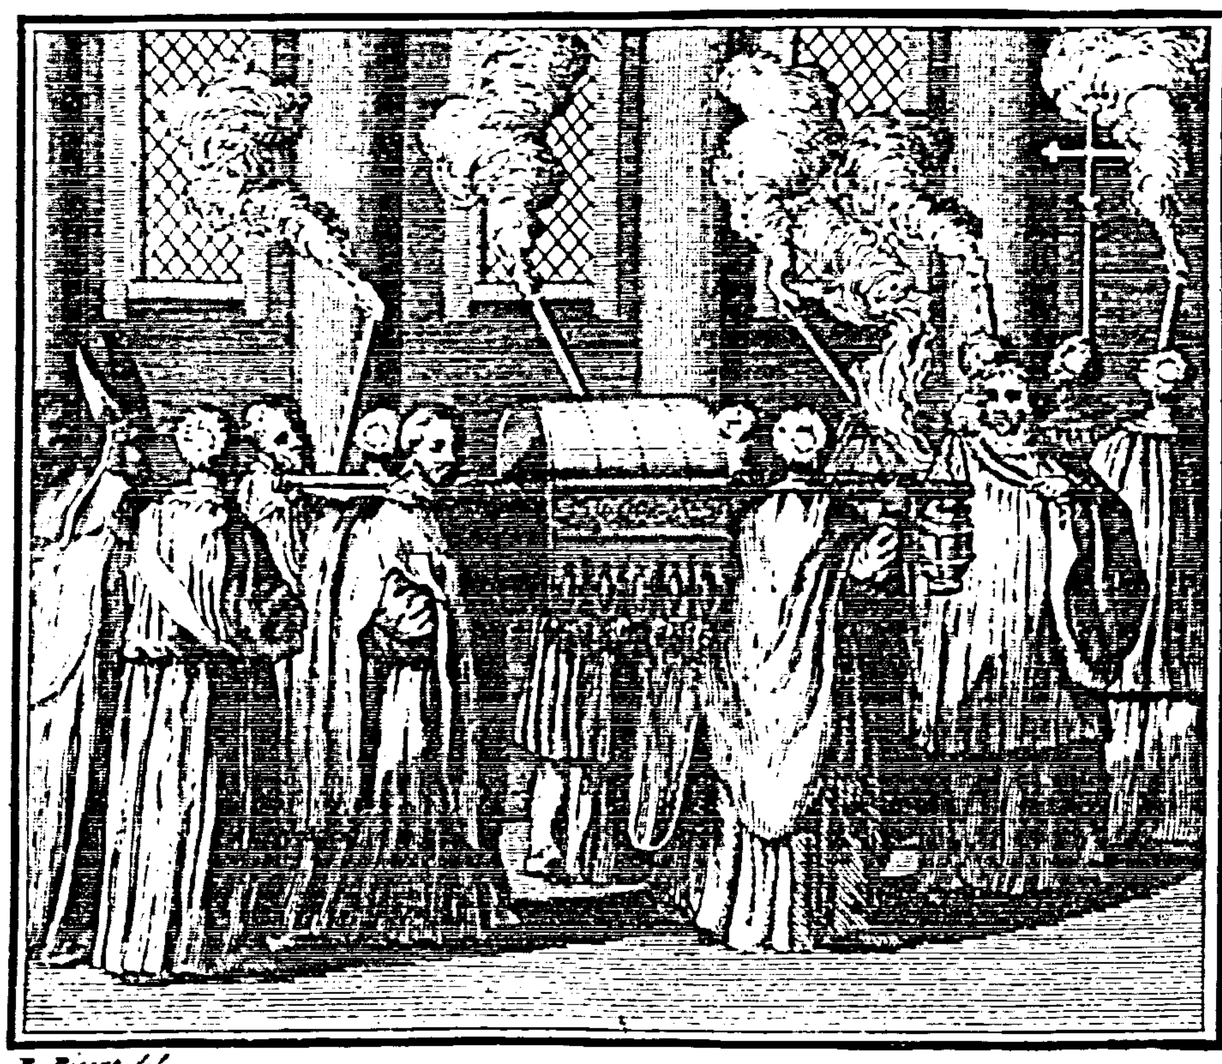


FIGURE de la CROIX de CENDRES qu'on a tracée sur le PAVÉ de L'EGLISE.

L'EVÈQUE fait la CROIX avec de L'EAU BENITE au milieu de L'AUTEL.

L'EVÈQUE ASPERGE le PAVÉ de L'EGLISE avec de L'EAU BENITE.

B. Picart del.

on porte les RELIQUES en PROCESSION dans L'EGLISE.

L'EVÈQUE enferme les RELIQUES dans L'AUTEL.

ed by an Oremus. He then leans upon a chair ſet there for that purpoſe on a carpet, whilſt the Litanies are ſinging; whereupon he bleſſes the ſalt and water, ſprinkles himſelf and aſſiſtants, and orders them to begin to ſing. As ſoon as they have begun, he again puts on the mitre, and makes the tour of the church beginning to the right, before him walking the ſub-deacon with the croſs between two ceroferaries, together with the clerk carrying the holy-water-pot. As he goes along, he ſprinkles the church wall above and below, in the name of the holy Trinity. All the while [i] the biſhops aſſiſtants bear up the two ſides of his pluvial, and he that carries the holy water, is to obſerve to walk a little before him on his right ſide; that the biſhop may take the holy water when it is required.

Being come back to the place they ſet out from, and the anthem being repeated after the Pſalm, the celebrant ſtill ſtanding and uncovered, ſays Oremus turning towards the church door. The firſt aſſiſtant ſays [k] flectamus genua, upon which they all kneel except the celebrant, the croſs and taper-bearers. Then the other aſſiſtant ſays levate, and they all riſe with him. This ſpiritual exerciſe is not eaſily learnt upon account of the many and different evolutions, wherefore all the ceremonies of the church are performed Ritual in hand. We aſk quarter of the Chriſtian reader in favour of the compariſon we have juſt been making; it being no offence to the eſſentials of religion. The prayer which in the pontifical follows the levate, is very much in the miſtic goût. As ſoon as it is over, the celebrant puts on his mitre, and going up to the church door ſtrikes it with his paſtoral ſtaff pronouncing [l] the attollite portas, & introibit rex gloriæ. The deacon, who remained ſhut into the church, aſks who this King of Glory is, to which the biſhop anſwers, that it is the Lord God Almighty, the God of armies. Is it in order to condeſcend to human weakneſs, or as Charron expreſſes it, [m] becauſe it is allowable to play the fool with young children, that a ceremony is practiſed, which ſeems to have no manner of footſteps of the apoſtolic ſpirit in it: Whoever invented religious ceremonies plainly ſaw, that in matters of religion, human underſtanding was uncapable of any thing grand or ſublime.

The biſhop, having gone round the church on the right, does the ſame on the left, ſprinkling the outſide of the walls as high as himſelf. The anthem and prayer are different from the others. The ſame ceremony goes on, except that after the deacon in the church has aſked who is the King of Glory, the clergy and biſhop both anſwer, [n] it is the Lord Almighty, he is the King of Glory and that they all together cry out thrice [o] open. The biſhop croſſes the door at the ſame time repeating [p] a verſe in Monkiſh Latin, which however does not the leſs confound the Devil and all the powers of hell. The ſenſe of this verſe is that all the Devils muſt ſcamper off at ſight of the ſign of the croſs. At length the door being opened, the biſhop goes in, followed by his miniſters alone, the people remaining without, except a maſon or two, who are to cloſe the ſepulchre where the relics lie, and faſten the altar table with mortar. At going in the biſhop ſays, peace be in this houſe, to which the deacon anſwers, [q] when thou ſhalt enter into it. Whilſt words ſuitable to this wiſh are ſinging out of the Scripture; the biſhop advancing towards the middle of the church, begins the Veni Creator on his knees and bareheaded, with his face towards the high altar. Then one of the ſub-deacons takes aſhes, ſprinkling them on the pavement in form of a croſs, in the manner preſcribed in the pontifical and repreſented in [r] the figure. Next the Litanies are ſung, wherein is twice

[i] Alet's Ritual.

[k] That is, let us kneel

[l] Lift up your gates, that the King of glory may enter in, Pſalm xxiii.

[m] On Wiſdom, Lib. I. Sect. 8.

[n] Dominus virtutum.

[o] The paſtoral ſtaff with which the biſhop knocks at the gate, repreſents the ſacerdotal power communicated by Chriſt to his diſciples, and which their ſucceſſors have encreaſed by thoſe arms which religion has furniſhed them with. The blows given upon the church door, teach us that heaven, earth and hell, muſt all yield to the authority of Chriſt's vicar. We are obliged to Caſalius, ch. xxxiii. de ritibus, &c. for this explanation.

[p] Ecce Crucis ſignum, fugiant phantaſmata cuncta. Pontif. Rom.

[q] This is admirable when conſidered only as a ceremony. For your mitred eccleſiaſtics are oftner the forerunners of war than of peace. The veſſel of the church would run ſtrange risks of being expoſed to ſhipwrecks, did not the pilot's wiſdom hinder the villany of the ſailors who work it.

[r] Vide The firſt cut of the plate.

twice named the saint who gives his name to the church or altar. We are to inform the reader too, that the same honour is done to those whose relics are buried under the altar; for we cannot lay too great a stress on this article. All this is performed whilst they three times address themselves to God in these words; [r] we beseech thee to hear us, but however, still calling on the church's saint, and all the while making signs of the cross. The celebrant makes three upon the church and altar. These ceremonies are succeeded by some Oremus's, an anthem, the song of Zachariah; and whilst some of the bishop's officers are singing in chorus, he puts on his mitre, and with his crozier draws upon the ashes a double [s] alphabet in capitals. The reader may completely inform himself as to this ceremony, by consulting the representation of it given in the [n] two cuts.

The CONSECRATION of the ALTAR.

WE go on to the consecration of the altar. It is here in its proper place, tho' we have already spoken of the altar before the church. [w] As soon as the bishop has made the two alphabets in the ashes, he turns to the high altar at a reasonable distance, takes off his mitre, kneels down and prays; [x] and the choir answers. This is done thrice, and every time they raise their voice a note higher. Then the celebrant puts on his mitre, and blesses the water, salt, ashes and wine. The exorcism [y] of the salt and water, &c. and the Oremus's, are different from those already mentioned at the benediction of the first stone. At blessing the ashes, God is besought to send his angel to consecrate and bless it, that it may become a wholsome remedy to all such who shall call upon the sacred name of God and confess their sins. And that they, who whilst they call on his name, shall sprinkle themselves with it in order to redeem themselves from their sins, may obtain health of body, and salvation of soul. This prayer ended, the bishop takes the salt, mixes it with the ashes in form of a cross, takes a handful of this composition (for such may we call it) and throws it into the water at three times, each time repeating a benediction. Then he blesses the wine, and mixes it with the water in form of a cross. This benediction, like the former, has some prayers solely relating to it, and which are peculiar to it. The benediction concludes with an account of the benefits procured by water, and the miracles wrought by it, which the bishop gives, all the while looking at and directing his discourse to it. The consecration does not immediately follow. The celebrant again goes to the church door, signs it with the cross at top and bottom with his pastoral staff, and begs of God, [z] that the cross may be invincible, that all who shall visit this church may abound in all manner of good things, &c. Lastly, He returns to the place where he blessed the water, and turning towards the high altar [a] bareheaded, exhorts the congregation to beseech God to bless and keep this place, by the aspersion of water mixed with wine, salt and ashes, and through JESUS CHRIST, &c. [b] An Anthem follows, which is several times repeated. At the beginning of it, the celebrant

[r] Te rogamus audi nos.

[s] This alphabet represents the first principles of the Christian religion. The cross lets us know, that the first thing a Christian should learn, is Jesus Christ crucified. Vide Casalius de ritibus, &c.

[n] Vide The two first figures in the plate. We doubt not but this and some other ceremonies appear singular enough. But that Judaism has been a source of mysteries and ceremonies, and that Paganism is not behindhand with it, is not at all strange. Ceremony may in some measure be stiled——the essence of both those religions. What is matter of great astonishment is, that Christianity, whose principles are the most plain and simple, should load itself with so cumbrous a train, and so difficult, that those very people, who are obliged to support it, cannot acquit themselves without infinite pain and trouble. It is easily imagined, that it costs more to learn such things, than to be informed of religion.

[w] Pontif. Rom.

[x] He begins with Deus in adjutorium, and the choir having answered, he says Gloria patri, &c. and the choir answers sicut erat in principio. All this must be done methodically, for method is the soul of formularies. The least reflexion upon what passes in all bodies, as well ecclesiastic as secular, will convince the reader of this truth.

[y] Creatura salis, Creatura aquæ, &c. thus the Pontifical calls them.

[z] Sit positis crux invicta liminibus, &c. Pontif. Rom.

[a] Ibid.

[b] If there be several altars to consecrate, the celebrant bestows the same ceremonies on them all, consecrating them one after another, Pontif. Rom.

brant ſtands before the altar, dips his right thumb in the water which he has before bleſſed, and makes a croſs on the middle of the altar table, which he conſecrates [c] in honour of God Almighty, of the virgin Mary, and of all Saints, in the name and memory of Saint ----- and in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. Beſides the croſs in the middle, he muſt make one at each of the four [d] corners; one on the epiſtle, one on the Goſpel ſide, and two more at the other ends. A prayer follows, after which the celebrant goes ſeven times round the altar ſprinkling it with holy water. We ſhall not farther enlarge on the ceremonies of the ſeven turns round the altar, it appearing of no uſe; but we ſhall add, that after them, and whilſt the anthem is ſinging, the celebrant paſſes on behind the altar, and on the right ſide in order to go round the church, and ſprinkles the walls at the bottom; and returning the ſame way, ſprinkles the middle. At the third round, going to the left, he ſprinkles the upper part and pavement, and then begins ſprinkling before the altar; from thence he goes to the great gate, and continues the ceremony croſs wiſe from one end of the wall to the other. He likewiſe ſprinkles it, turning to the [e] four corners of the world. He then turns towards the great gate, and ſays a very ſhort, but truly [f] Chriſtian prayer, and then another, which in the whole does not fall ſhort of it. After this he ſtretches his hands upon his breaſt, and together with the choir repeats what the church calls the [g] Preface.

After the preface, the biſhop or prieſt celebrating, puts holy water into the cement which is to faſten the ſtone which is ſet over the ſepulchre of the relics, which he bleſſes, and prays over.

The Procession of the Relics; continuation of the Dedication of a Church.

THE celebrant followed by ſeveral eccleſiaſtics, and preceded by the croſs carried between two ceroferaries, goes and fetches the relics with great ceremony. The chriſm is carried to the entrance of the church, and at going into the pavilion where the relics are, an anthem, and the xciv. Pſalm according to the Vulgate, are ſung: but ſometimes they only ſing a reſponſe in honour of the Saint, whoſe relics are going to be carried; after which the celebrant, who ſtands before the relics, uncovers himſelf, and ſays a prayer [h] in honour of them. The incenſe is then put into the thurible, and the proceſſion begins in the following order. The croſs-bearer walks firſt between two ceroferaries with tapers in their hands, and the reſt of the clergy follow ſinging. After them go the prieſts, bearing the relics ſplendidly ſet out upon a litter.

The incenſe-bearer walks by the ſide of it, and takes care continually to incenſe the relics during the proceſſion. Several ceroferaries with tapers likewiſe walk on one ſide towards the head of the litter. After the relics, appears the celebrant attended by his miniſters. When the proceſſion ſets out from the tent where the relics were, he begins an anthem, which is followed by others ſung by the choir; when they are come to the church door, the celebrant with the croſs, ceroferaries, and relics before him, leaves the choir in order to go round the church; and then ſtops at the church door, and makes a diſcourſe [i] to the people, at the cloſe of which he makes an exhortation to him who

[c] Pontif. Rom.

[d] The altar is the type of the church. Its four corners repreſent the four corners of the world. This ceremony therefore ſignifies the extent of the church, and of the merit of the croſs of Chriſt. The ſeven turns round it, and ſeven ſprinklings expreſs the fulneſs of the grace of the holy Ghoſt.

[e] Verſus Orientem, Occidentem, & Pontif. Rom.

[f] The purport of it is, that God would ſhed his mercy on all who ſhall call upon him in this church.

[g] Per omnia ſæcula, &c.

[h] He begs of God, that the faithful may thro' his grace, in a worthy manner, touch the members of thoſe ſaints which have been particularly conſecrated to him.

[i] This turns upon the reſpect due to God, and to his churches, the veneration which Jewiſh, and afterwards Chriſtian Princes have ſhewn to theſe holy places. We muſt not omit, that criminals who ſeek an aſylum in founded the church, telling him it ought to be endowed; that is, a fund raised for its maintenance. In return, the church by the mouth of the celebrant, promises the founder and his heirs, that they will always be ready to appear first at the processions to be held on the anniversary of the dedication, &c. After this they pray for him, sing a response, and pray again. The celebrant, before he goes in, makes a cross on the outside of the door with his right-hand thumb. Lastly, The priests take the litter on their shoulders, and enter the church in procession, followed by the people and clergy. Then those saints, whose precious remains they are carrying, are invited [k] to come and take possession of the apartment the Lord has prepared for them, by an anthem which the celebrant begins, and afterwards the whole choir joins in. In the mean while the procession continues walking on, and when they are come to the altar where the relics are to be deposited, tapers are lighted up round the litter, which is set upon the altar. The celebrant honours the arrival of these holy relics by singing an anthem which is repeated, and by two Psalms which are followed by a very short prayer.

DEPOSITING the RELICS under the ALTAR.

BEFORE they are laid in the sepulchre, the bishop or other person who officiates, shall take his mitre, and mark the deposit with the chrism, but first seal up the vase which holds the relics. This marking with the chrism he must take care to accompany with four signs of the cross, which he shall make on the four sides of the sepulchre, in the name of the Father, &c. This is the consecration of the sepulchre. He is then to repose the relic box with all possible veneration, which he shall do bareheaded, the better to testify it to the congregation. After this an anthem is repeated, during which the celebrant still without his mitre on, incenses the relics, and afterwards puts it on, takes the stone which is to be laid over the sepulchre with his right-hand, dips the thumb of the other in the chrism; and makes the sign of the cross in the middle of the stone on the outside, that is to be towards the relics in order to consecrate it on that side. Anthems and [l] the Oremus immediately follow according to custom. After this the celebrant fixes the stone upon the sepulchre, the masons make an end of the work, and the celebrant sanctifies it by the sign of the cross to be made over the stone.

The INCENSING of the ALTAR.

THE stone being placed, blessed and signed with the cross, the altar must be incensed. The celebrant puts incense into the thurible, [m] blessing, and making the sign of the cross over it. Then he incenses the altar on the right and left, before and behind, the choir singing all the while. After the incensing, he prays, and then his ministers rub the altar-table with a very clean cloth. This table is incensed by the celebrant in form of a cross. The four sides of the altar must also be incensed, which is several times performed without intermission. The in churches (especially in Italy, Spain and Portugal) are protected by the intercession of the clergy who officiate in such churches. And yet he exhorts Christians to enter them with purity. "The holy Pontifs, adds "he, have granted privileges to the church we are dedicating in honour of the Almighty, of the blessed Vir- "gin Mary, of all the Saints, and particularly of Saint ---- We declare that we have deposited the relics "of the Saints --- under its altar, and that the bodies of Saint --- and Saint --- lie in such a place. All "who visit them shall enjoy the indulgence granted by --- We exhort you to pay the whole tythes to such "who shall officiate in this church." On this capital point, he must enlarge, and prove, that it will draw down the blessing of God, &c. Vide Pontif. Rom.

[k] Ingredimini, sancti Dei, preparata est enim a Domino habitatio sedis vestræ, &c. Pontif. Rom.

[l] In this prayer, they testify to God, that they embrace the relics of the saints, for which this ceremony is performed with a religious affection.

[m] Ab illo benedicaris in cujus honore cremaberis, Pontif. Rom.

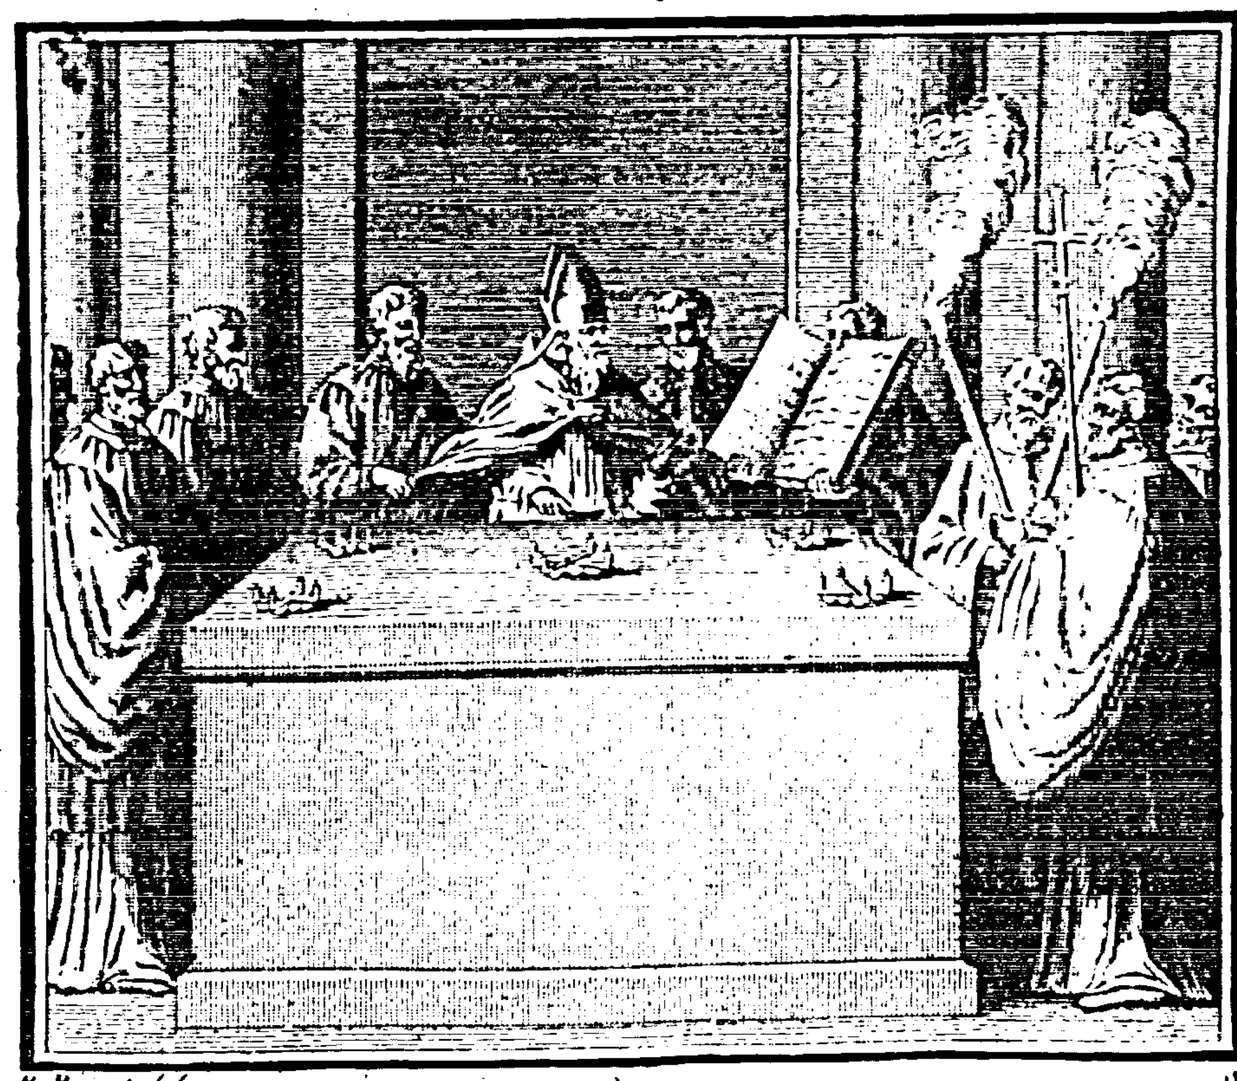
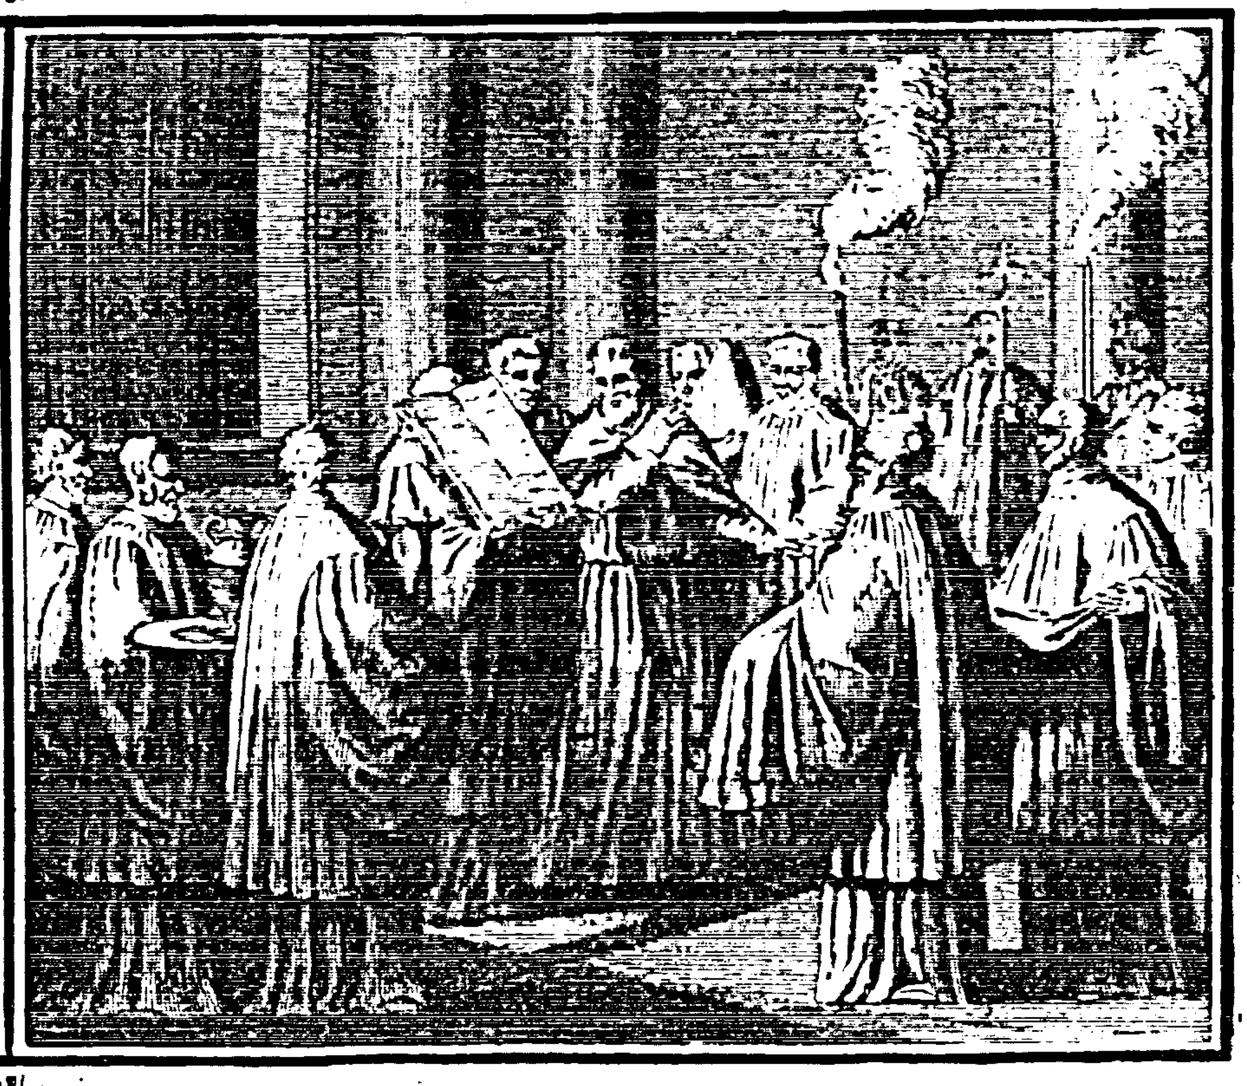
Le CELEBRANT oint avec le St. CHRÊME. les douze CROIX des Autels.

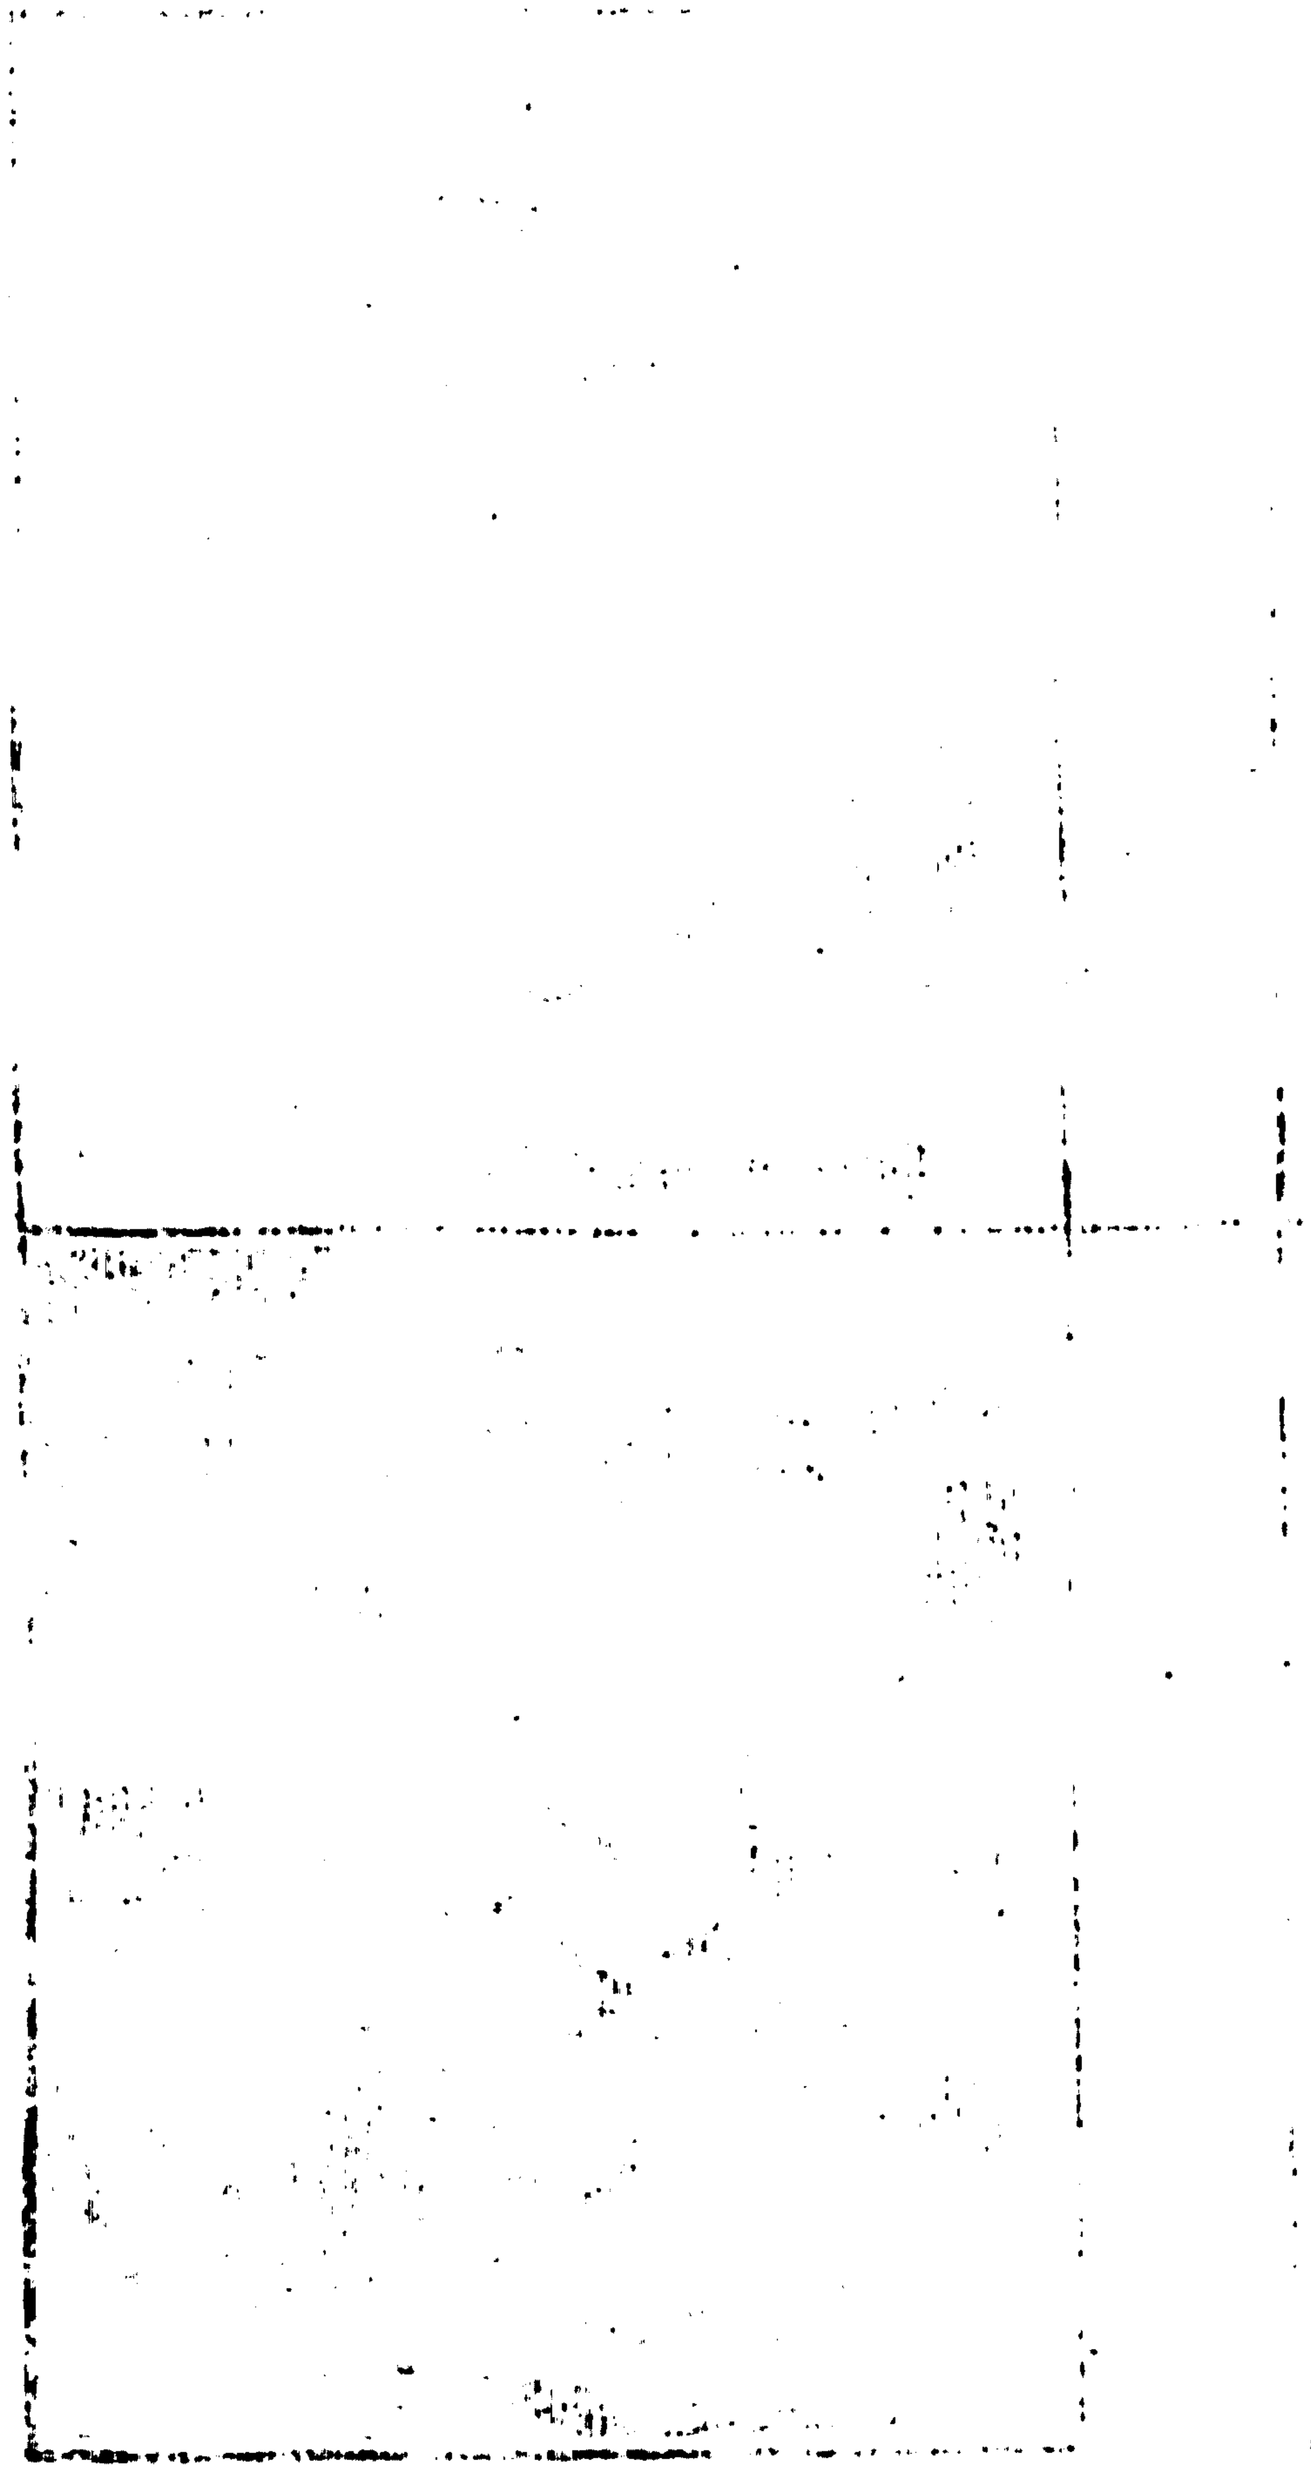


Il fait avec le St CHRÊME. une CROIX au devant de L'AUTEL.

Il BENIT les VAISEAUX. qui doivent servir à L'AUTEL.



Il VERSE de L'HUILE et du CHRÊME sur la TABLE de L'AUTEL.



B Picart. del.

Il ALLUME les CINQ CROIX de CIRE qui sont posés sur les cinq CROIX d'ENCENS

Il CONSACRE les PAREMENS de L'AUTEL.

The celebrant then makes five croſſes with the holy oils, one in the middle, and one on each ſide of the altar, in the ſame places he before made them with holy water. Theſe five croſſes are repeated with the oils, and the incenſing begins again. Pſalms, anthems, Oremus's varied, accompany theſe perfumes, and all the ſigns of the croſs which the celebrant makes a third time with the chriſm. In ſhort, not to enter farther into particulars, the celebrant [n] at the ſame time pours an equal quantity of oil and chriſm upon the altar; which he anoints and rubs all over with his right hand. In the mean time the choir ſing the patriarch Iſaac's benediction to his ſon Jacob, after which comes a Pſalm; and then the celebrant exhorts the aſſembly [o] to beg of God to bleſs and conſecrate the ſtone which has been anointed, &c.

The Anointing of the twelve Crosses.

WHILST the choir and clergy are edifying by ſinging of anthems and Pſalms, we ſhall break in upon the incenſing of the altar, by paſſing on to the anointing of the twelve croſſes, which the celebrant has made upon the wall of the church. This he begins behind the altar, and going on to the right, anoints them all one after another; and at every unction repeats the form of [p] conſecrating a church. Every croſs is particularly incenſed after being anointed.

Continuation of the Altar's Incensing.

THE incenſing of the twelve croſſes being finiſhed, the celebrant returns to incenſing the altar, begins an anthem, and begs of God with the accuſtomary [q] ſign of the croſs, to ſanctify the altar, and bleſs the offerings of his ſervants, &c. He does not forget bleſſing the incenſe, that [r] creature, which by [s] its odour drives away all faintneſs and diſeaſes, but eſpecially guards the faithful againſt the ſtratagems of the enemy (that is the Devil). In the ſame manner, neither, does he forget to make five new croſſes upon the altar, each with five grains of incenſe, in the ſame places where he before made them with holy water, with holy oil and with the chriſm. Over every croſs of incenſe he puts one of wax, as repreſented in [t] the cut. Then kneeling down before the altar he lights it, and begs of the holy Ghoſt [u] to light the fire of his love in the hearts of the faithful. The anthem is preceded by an Hallelujah. The choir continue ſinging, and the prieſt cloſes this act of devotion with a prayer. In the mean while the wax croſſes and incenſe burn, and the celebrant orders their ſacred aſhes to be carefully collected. One of his miniſters performs this office, puts them into the appointed vaſe, and then empties them into the pool. The ordinary concluſion of this whole ceremony is an Oremus pronounced by the celebrant, upon the ſteps of the altar [w] in due order. The Oremus being ended according to the rules given in the note, the celebrant, in a tone moderately loud, and with his hands ſpread over his ſtomach, repeats the per omnia, which we have already ſpoken of.

The altars are on Thurſday and Friday in Paſſion week ſtripped of their ornaments, which at Rome are waſhed in water and wine. This ſtripping them, ſhews the Chriſtian's affliction for our Saviour's ſufferings, or elſe repreſents the manner in which he was ſtripped and ſcourged. The abſolution with water and wine ſignifies the blood and water that came out of his ſide.

The

[o] Pontificale Romanum.

[n] See the fourth copartment of the cut.

[p] Sanctificetur & conſecretur hoc templum, &c.

[q] It is to be obſerved, that the ſign of the croſs is appropriated to the three perſons of the Trinity in benedictions, when certain words are pronounced, ſuch as, bleſſing, conſecrating, ſanctifying.

[r] Creatura Incenſi, Creatura Aquæ, Creatura Salis, &c. are the uſual terms of the Pontifical, as already hinted. Pontific. Rom.

[t] Vide The fifth copartment in the cut.

[u] It is the hymn beginning with theſe words, Veni, Sancte Spiritus, &c.

[w] That is ſtanding, and without the mitre. One of his aſſiſtants afterwards ſays, flectamus genua: upon which all, except the celebrant, kneel. The other aſſiſtant ſays Levate, and all riſe with him.

The CROSS before the ALTAR.

AFTER all thoſe croſſes with which the celebrant has been bleſſing, conſecrating, ſanctifying, &c. the altar, one would think nothing more could be done. Far from it, there ſtill wants one for the front of the altar, which is made with the chriſm, and accompanied with a prayer. In fine, the ſub-deacons come and rub the table of it with towels appointed ſolely for it. The celebrant ſeats himſelf near the altar, and rubs his hands with crumb of bread, then waſhes and wipes them in ceremony; after which the acolytes preſent him the cloths, linen, veſſels, and all the ornaments of the altar to bleſs. Theſe are circumſtances particular to this ceremony. There is nothing worthy obſervation, in conſecrating that which is called the portable altar, nor in bleſſing any altar by itſelf, where there is no dedication of the church; as to conſecrating the portable altar, they are to begin by preparing a few inconſiderable relics, and three grains of incenſe for that part on which it is to be conſecrated, and that muſt be performed faſting. After the conſecration, the prieſt, if he thinks fit, may ſay maſs.

BENEDICTION of the VESSELS and ORNAMENTS of the ALTAR.

THE celebrating prieſt ſprinkles theſe veſſels and ornaments with holy water. After which his aſſiſtants ſpread the chriſmal upon the altar, and put on the reſt of the ornaments, as croſs, &c. The celebrant begins ſtanding the firſt verſe of the anthem; which is followed by a Pſalm, and then he goes up to the altar, ſalutes the croſs, and incenſes the altar three times. After this he prays, and that being over, goes into the ſacriſty, takes off his pluvial, [y] and returns with the ſandals, waſhes his hands, and dreſſes himſelf all over in white. The church is adorned, tapers lighted up at the altar, and the prieſt ſays maſs, if the fatigue he has ſuffered will give him leave, if not, it is ſaid by another.

[x] Pontif. Rom.

[y] Si celebrare voluerit, adds, the Roman Pontifical.

DISSER-

DISSERTATION

ON THE

CEREMONIES

OF THE

ROMAN CATHOLICS.

THIRD PART.

Containing the Customs relating to the Devotion of the Roman Catholic Church.

DISSERTATION

ON THE

CEREMONIES

OF THE

ROMAN CATHOLICS.

THIRD PART.

Containing the Customs relating to the Devotion of the Roman Catholic Church.

BENEDICTION of AGNUS DEI's.

THE Roman [a] Pontif in the first year of his pontificate performs the ceremony of [b] baptising and blessing the Agnus Dei's, and every seventh year of his reign repeats the same ceremony. These agnus's we shall now describe. Wax is the ground-work of certain pastils made in the form of an oval medal, whereon is the figure of JESUS CHRIST under that of a lamb holding a cross; wherefore these pastils are called Agnus's. [c] Formerly this wax was provided by one [d] of the gentlemen of the Pope's chamber, who held his office from the master or chamberlain of the sacred palace. They who intended to have any agnus's laid it upon St. Peter's altar; and an apostolic sub-deacon fetched it from the altar, and carried it to a room of the Pope's palace. The sub-deacon and his collegues assisted by some of the acolytes worked

[a] Cerem. Eccl. Rom. Lib. I. p. 37. Ed. of 1516.
[b] At Rome this ceremony is called Baptising.
[c] Cerem. Eccl. Rom. Ibid.
[d] Magister Ceræ Palatii Apostolici.

worked up the wax, and made them into agnus's [c] with great devotion, reſpect, and neatneſs, according to the directions of the Roman Ceremonial. The apoſtolic chamber was at the whole expence of theſe ſacred Paſtils. The wax, which was the baſis of them, was melted in a quantity of holy oil and chriſm of the laſt year. When all the paſte was completely prepared, the agnus's were preſented to his Holineſs in one or more baſons, and his Holineſs gave them his bleſſing. [f] At this time the prelate who is the Pope's ſacriſtan ſets his chaplains, and the clerks of the chapel about this work. The wax they are made of, is taken from the remains of the Eaſter wax of the laſt year, and as that would not be near enough, the apoſtolic chamber provides the reſt.

[g] On Eaſter Tueſday the ſacriſtan performs the benediction over the water, and the next day as ſoon as the pontifical maſs is over, the Pope clothed in his amict, albe, and in a ſtole of white damaſk with a ſilver lace, and having a linen mitre of cloth of gold on, conſecrates the water bleſſed by the ſacriſtan the day before. This water is in a large ſilver baſon; the conſecration conſiſts of the uſual benedictions, to which his Holineſs adds a prayer to God, beſeeching him to ſanctify ſuch things, [h] whereby the ſins of man may be waſhed away, &c. after which he takes ſome balm, and pours it into the water, thereto adding the holy chriſm which he likewiſe pours in the form of a croſs. Whilſt this is performing he ſeveral times offers up prayers to God. Then he turns to the agnus's, [i] bleſſes and incenſes them, begging of God to ſhower down upon them all the virtues commonly attributed to them. Then a ſecond and third prayer follow; after which the holy father, ſeated in an eaſy chair prepared for him, [k] with a napkin round him, and his mitre on, takes the agnus's, one after another, which the gentlemen of the chamber preſent him in ſilver gilt baſons, and throws them into the holy water; the next moment, the Cardinals in fine linen albes take them out with a ſpoon deſtined to this purpoſe. Their eminences carry them to a table covered with a clean white cloth, and there wipe them with a napkin, they alſo were in form of an apron; and the aſſiſtant prelates range them on that table where they are left to be thoroughly dry. After this [l] baptiſm of them is over, the Pope riſes and addreſſes himſelf in a prayer to the holy Ghoſt, beſeeching him to bleſs them, he makes another to JESUS CHRIST; after which they are again put into the baſons, and his Holineſs takes all the Cardinals, who [m] have aſſiſted him in this office, to dinner. This work is again reſumed the following Thurſday, and continued till they are all bleſſed, which is always on the Friday. This ceremony is performed in preſence of the foreign miniſters and great numbers of foreigners, whom curioſity brings thither to ſee this baptiſm of agnus's.

The following Saturday, the day on which the agnus's are diſtributed, there is a chapel held, and maſs ſung by a Cardinal prieſt, at which the Pope aſſiſts in his pontifical robes. " [n] As ſoon as the Agnus Dei is ſung, an apoſtolic ſub-deacon in his robes, with " the croſs-bearer, two ceroferaries and the thuriferary before him, goes to the Pope's " ſacriſtan, and takes from him a baſon full of thoſe Agnus Dei's, newly bleſſed, and " wrapped up in China cotton of ſeveral colours." The ſub-deacon is followed by a clerk of the ceremonies, and two chaplains in ſurplices. When theſe are got to the door of the chapel, they all kneel, and the ſub-deacon with a loud voice [o] ſings theſe words in bad Latin. [p] Holy Father, behold the new lambs, who have pronounced unto you Allelujah. It is not long ſince they were to drink at the fountain of holy water. They are now very light

[c] Cum magnâ devotione, reverentiâ, & munditiâ.

[f] Cerem. Eccl. R. Ibid. Aimon in his Tableau de la Cour de Rome ſays, " that generally the Feuillants, or Monks of S. Bernard and S. Pudentiana mold the agnus's.

[g] Lunadoro, Relaz. &c.

[h] Quatenus ipſorum veneratione & honore nobis famulis tuis crimina diluantur, &c. Cerem. Eccl. Rom. Ibid. Vide The cut on which are inſcribed the virtues of Agnus Dei's.

[i] Benedice, and turifica of gl' Agnus. Lunadoro.

[k] Accinctus linteo.

[l] Cerem. Eccl. R. Omnibus baptizatis.

[m] Lunadoro, Relaz. &c.

[n] Aimon. Tableau de la Cour de Rome.

[o] Cerem. Eccl. R. Lib. II. Fol. 111.

[p] Pater Sancte, iſti ſunt agni novelli, qui annunciaverunt vobis Alleluja. Modò veniunt ad fontes: repleti ſunt claritate. Allelnja.

light (or rather very much enlightened) At this news the muſic in the choir anſwer: God be bleſſed: Allelujah. After this the ſub-deacon riſes, and walks on. Being come to the door of the baniſters in the chapel, he repeats the words juſt mentioned, he likewiſe ſays them a third time, when being near the pontifical throne, he proſtrates himſelf at the holy Father's feet, who receives him ſitting with his mitre on. However, when the croſs enters, he and the whole congregation riſe, but he immediately ſits down, and the ſub-deacon remains kneeling at his Holineſs's feet, whilſt he thus diſtributes the agnus's.

Two auditors take a very white napkin, and give it to two Cardinal-deacons aſſiſtants, who lay it handſomely on his Holineſs's knees, and the two auditors hold the two ends of the napkin, whilſt the ſacred college partake of the holy Father's liberality. Their eminences, after their uſual inſtances of reſpect and veneration paid, preſent their mitres with the horns downwards to the Pope, who puts as many agnus's as he pleaſes into thoſe corners of the mitres. [q] Formerly he gave no more than three a piece to the ſacred college, two to the other prelates, and one to the clergy, &c. Their eminences kiſs the holy Father's hand and knee. After the Cardinals and clergy have received their ſhare, ambaſſadors and other perſons of diſtinction come forward with white napkins to have a ſhare of theſe ſpiritual benefits in their turn. His Holineſs treats theſe laſt children of his ſomewhat leſs liberally than the others; but however, he puts a reaſonable number of agnus's into their napkins.

The Pope, having thus diſtributed them, waſhes his hands, the ſacred college unrobe, the celebrant returns to the altar, [r] maſs ends with a double Allelujah, and the holy Father beſtows his bleſſing on his children together with a great many indulgences, which the celebrant publiſhes. The Roman Ceremonial informs us, that formerly the Popes had a baſon full of agnus's brought to table after dinner, and diſtributed them among the apoſtolic court.

" [s] All the Agnus Dei's, remaining out of the prodigious quantity that have been bleſ-
" ſed, are kept by the prelate who is maſter of the Pope's wardrobe, --- who every " day at ſet hours diſtributes them among pilgrims and other foreigners who go and aſk
" for them. By one of Pope Gregory XIII.'s conſtitutions made in 1572. all ſuch who are " not in holy orders, are forbidden to touch Agnus Dei's, unleſs in extraordinary caſes,
" and ſtill as a greater caution, all laymen are order'd to have them ſet in glaſs, or cryſtal,
" or other things that are tranſparent; and that ſuch as have the means of wrapping
" them up in ſome rich embroidery, ſhall ſo order it, that the agnus may appear on one
" ſide as in a reliquary. The ſame conſtitution prohibits painting them under pain of " excommunication, in as much as the whiteneſs of the wax, with which theſe figures
" in relievo are formed, was by that Pope eſteemed more ſuitable than any other colour
" that could be imagined --- to repreſent the immaculate Lamb of God. Theſe are the " words made uſe of by all the Popes down from Gregory XIII. till now ----- in ſpeak-
" ing of the miraculous effects of agnus's.

The riſe of this ceremony was thus. [t] In the firſt ages of the church, ſmall figures in wax, repreſenting Chriſt under the form of a lamb, were given to ſuch as came to be baptiſed, which theſe catechumens wore at their neck; and is a cuſtom which ſeems to have ſucceeded in the room of the Heathen Amulets. Among the Romans, the figure of a heart, and alſo of another certain part of the human body was hung about the necks of young children, and were, tokens both of the courage and ſtrength of the male ſex; but Chriſtians, as diſciples of a better maſter, in their room introduced that of a lamb, which is the ſymbol of humility and patience. A virtue of preſerving from charms and enchantments, and from many other accidents to which the life of man is expoſed, was by the ancient Heathens aſcribed to thoſe figures which they called Bullæ, and theſe bullæ

[q] Cerem. Eccl. R. Lib. II.
[r] Ite, miſſa eſt, cum duplici Allelujâ, Ibid.
[s] Tableau de la Cour, &c.
[t] Caſalius de ritibus, &c.

bullæ were more eſpecially given to children, they being from their tender age more expoſed than manhood. Wherefore care is taken now-a-days to provide them with agnus's and ſcapularies.

The CANONIZATION of SAINTS.

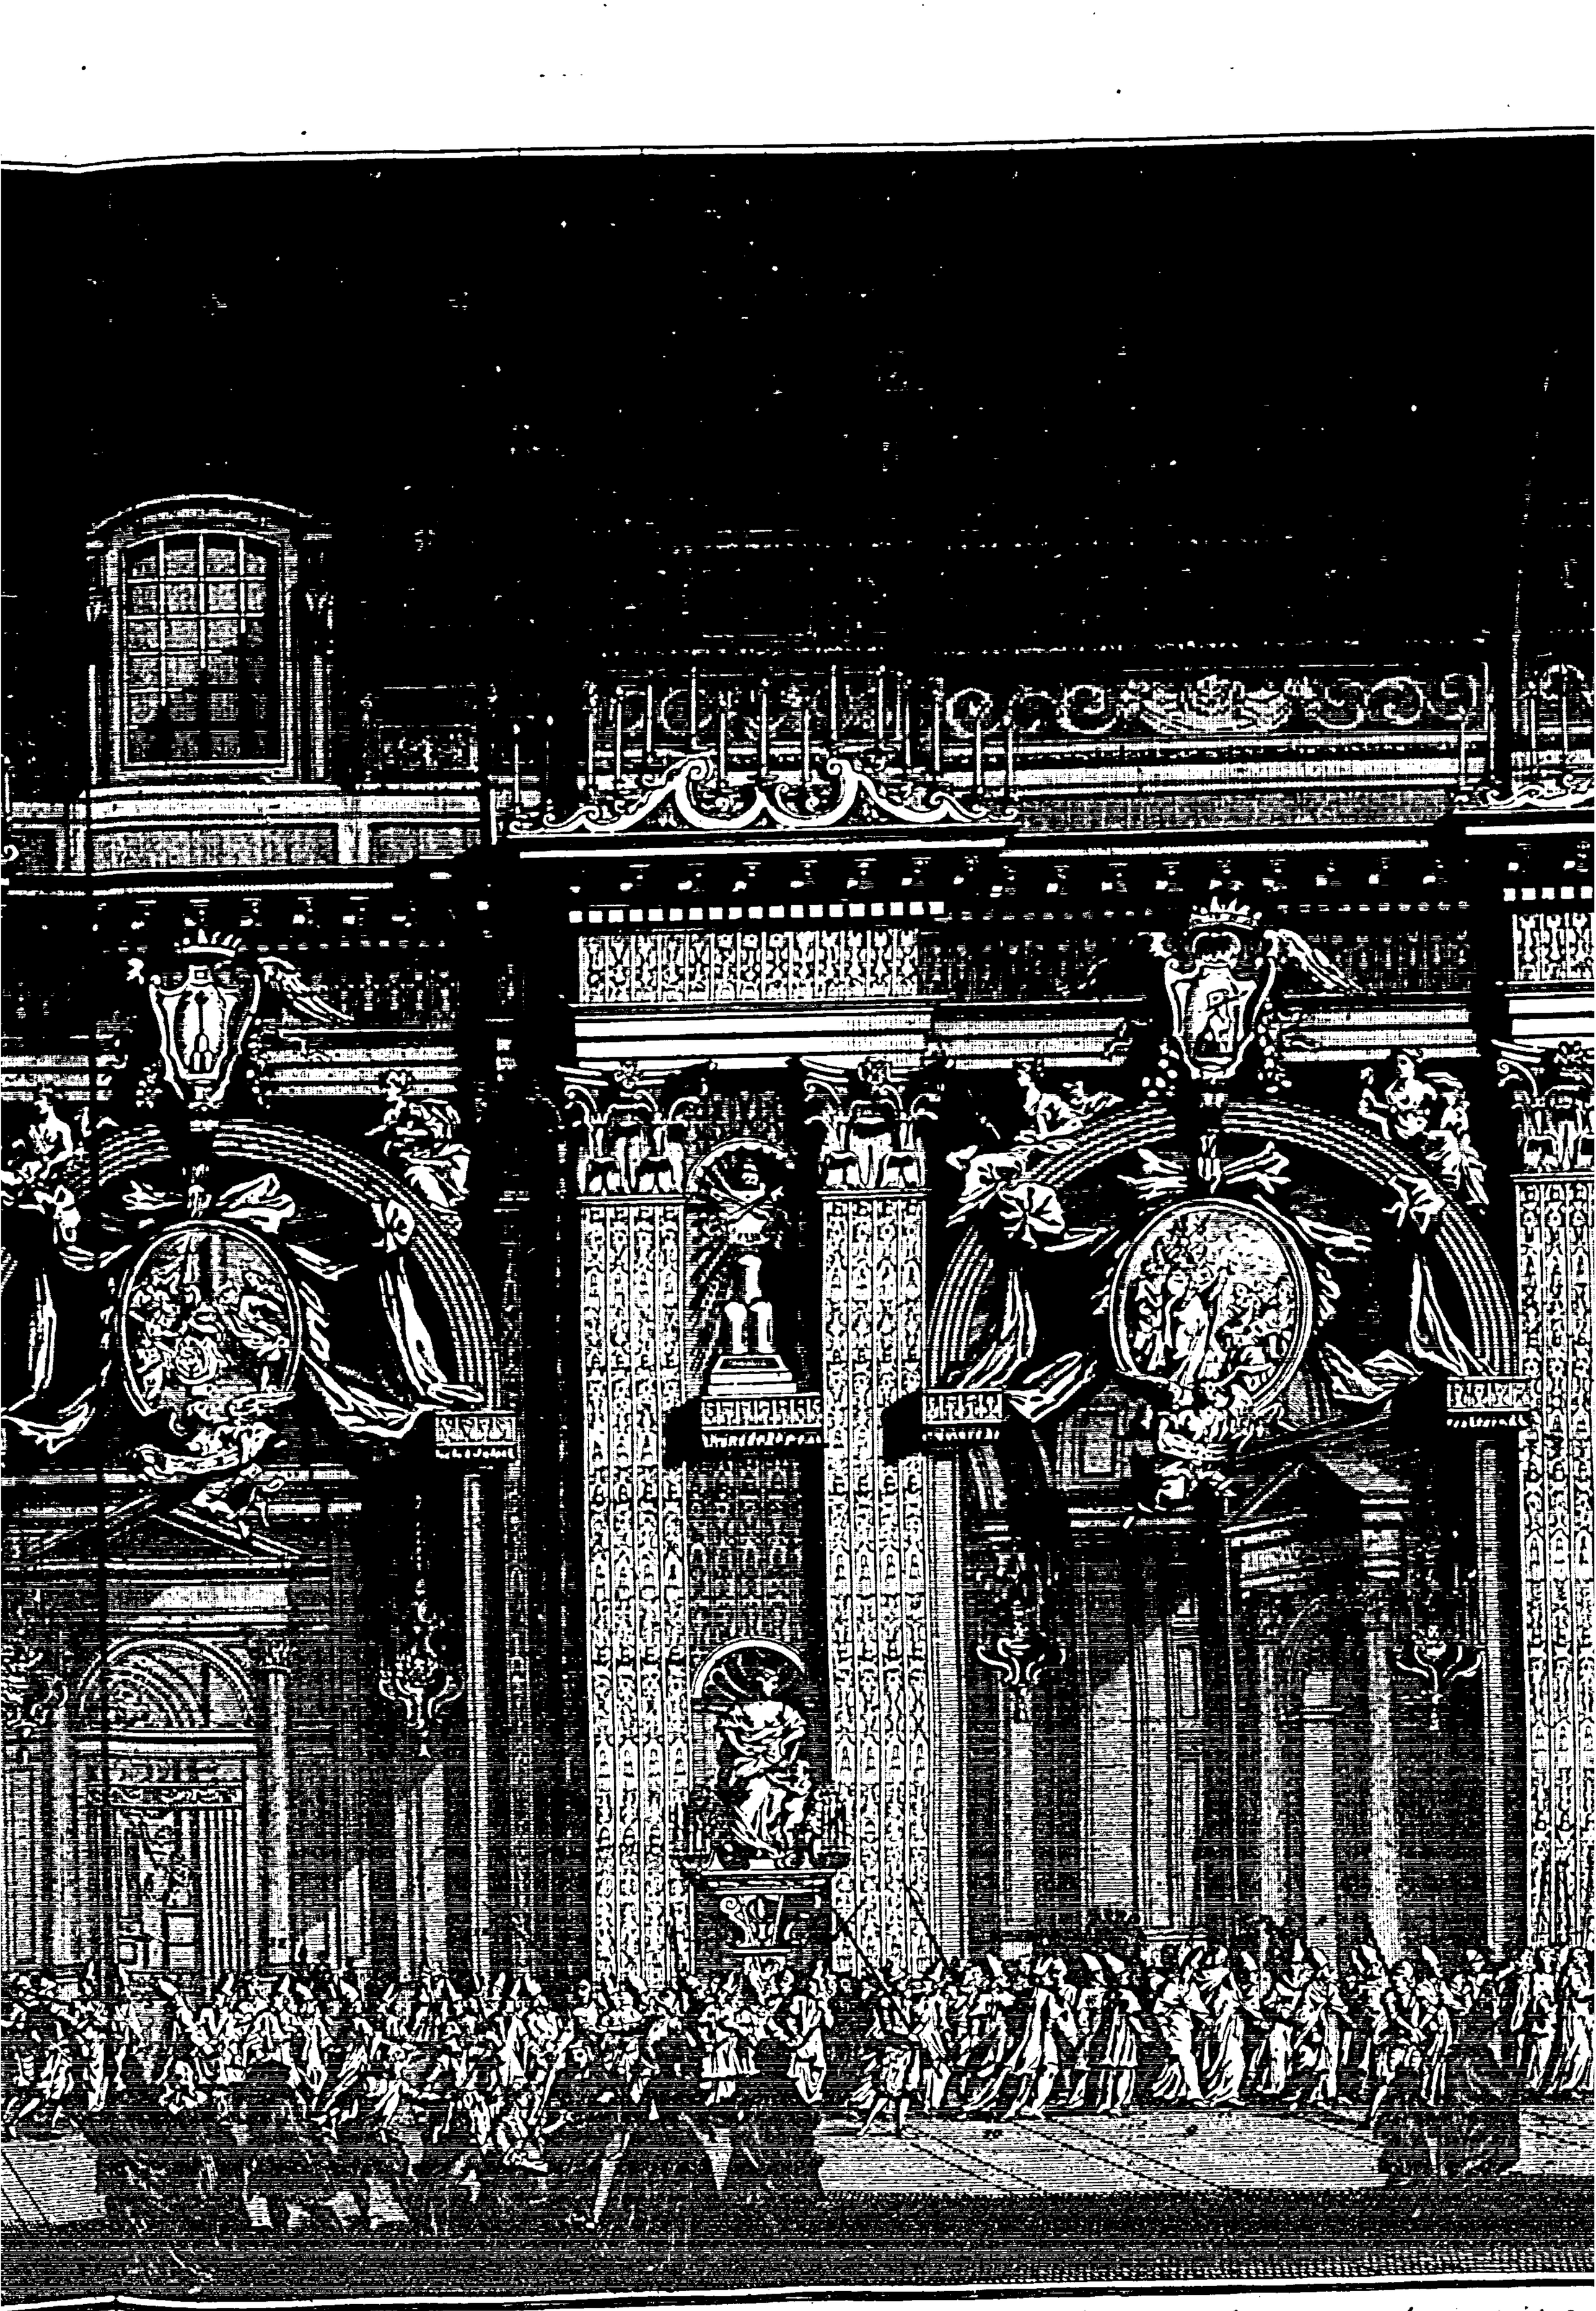
BEFORE that bleſſed perſon, whoſe canonization is required, is regiſtered in the catalogue of ſaints, his Holineſs holds four conſiſtories, the two firſt of which are private, the third public, and the fourth demi-public. In the firſt, the Pope cauſes the petition of them, who demand to have their ſaint univerſally acknowledged ſuch in the Catholic church, to be examined by three auditors of the rota, and orders the Cardinals to reviſe all the inſtruments, which relate to the proceeding. In the ſecond, the Cardinals make their report to his Holineſs. The third is held in public, [w] as we have already obſerved, in which the Cardinals pay obeiſance to his Holineſs; after which one of the conſiſtorial advocates makes the panegyric of him who is to be proclaimed a ſaint, and gives a particular detail of the life and miracles of this faithful ſervant of God; nay, he often enters into the moſt hidden ſecrets of the new ſaint, purſues him thro' all his thoughts, and examines the minuteſt motives, by which he acted, with that exactneſs ſo ſcrupulous and neceſſary, when the buſineſs is to acknowledge a new mediator with God, and to add him to the body of interceſſors appointed at different times, for the faithful in the church. The fourth is demi-public, and is held in the ducal hall where the Pope aſſiſts in his plain mitre and pluvial, and at which no homage is paid him. At this conſiſtory patriarchs, archbiſhops, biſhops, prothonotaries, and auditors of the rota are admitted; and the train-bearers perform their office clothed in violet; but after the Extra, every body goes out, except the prelates beforementioned. This conſiſtory is for taking the votes of thoſe prelates for and againſt the canonization, and as ſoon as it is reſolved upon by plurality of voices, the holy Father [x] intimates the day deſigned for the ceremony.

On the canonization-day, the Pope officiates in white, and their eminences are dreſſed in the ſame colour. St. Peter's church is hung with rich tapeſtry, upon which appear the arms of the Pope, and of that Prince or State requiring the canonization, embroidered in gold or ſilver. An infinite number of lights blaze all round the church, where millions of Chriſtian ſouls wait perhaps with a devout impatience, till the canonized ſaint has made his public entry into paradiſe, thereupon to addreſs their petitions to him without danger of being rejected. We ſhall enlarge upon the particulars of the canonization, when we come to deſcribe this ceremony, as performed in the pontificate of Clement XI.

Canonization coſts ſuch Princes, who are deſirous of the glory of procuring it for ſome good Chriſtian, immenſe ſums. Beatification, as it is called, is in ſome meaſure the fore-runner of it. Beatitude is a natural ſtep to ſanctity, and leads to a ſuppoſition, that he that is looked upon here below as bleſſed, ought to be acknowledged as ſuch in heaven: but ſeveral Beati have never yet been able to arrive at ſanctity; whether the neceſſary teſtimonies and certificates have never yet been to be procured, or a ſufficient number of miracles have been wanting to get them declared ſaints; for ſaints and ſoldiers who endeavour to advance themſelves in the military way, are in the ſame caſe. They muſt both produce ſome proofs at leaſt of a diſtinguiſhed valour; and as the great men of this world are not always capable of judging of merit by themſelves, it is neceſſary for the one and the other to have patrons to lay their virtue before the eyes of the great, and advocates to plead in their favour.



The

[w] In the hall called the Royal.

[x] Seiſtini's Maeſtro di Camera.
[x] Vide Chiapponi Acta Can. &c. Romæ 1720.

Abbreviateurs.
Notans de la Signature.
Clercs de la Chambre.
Auditeurs de Rote, et Maitre
du Sacré Palais.
5. Acolytes avec les 7. Chandeliers.
6. Soudiacre avec la Croix.
7. Penitenciers.
8. Abez.
9. Evêques Assistans, et non Assistans.
10. Cardinaux Diacres.
11. Cardinaux Prêtres.
12. Cardinaux Evêques:

Ordre de la PRO
L'EGLISE

la CANONIZATION de quelques SAINTS, dans s le Pontificat de CLEMENT XI. en 1712.

23. Legat de Boulogne, avec le
Prieur des Quartiers.
24. Conservateurs.
25. Connétable Collonna.
26. Gouverneur de Rome.
27. Card: Dia Assist: &
28. Le Pape, sous le Dau
les Referendaires.
29. Cubiculaires Assista
l'Auditeur de la N

The nativity of martyrs, the commemoration of their death, the offerings made t' their memory on thoſe days of ſolemnity, and the extraordinary veneration the churc' ſhewed for thoſe generous champions of truth, were many ages earlier than the canc nization of ſaints. [y] Yet ſome footſteps of invoking them may be traced ſome years before the firſt Council of Nice. At the cloſe of the third, and beginning of the fourth century, was introduced the cuſtom of collecting their relics, which were ſcattered i very different places, upon account of perſecutions. The Proteſtant writer cited : the bottom of the page inſinuates that [z] the invocation of ſaints was owing to the proſopopœias and apoſtrophes of Chriſtian orators of thoſe firſt ages. But however that may be, devout expeditions were from that time made to the tombs of martyrs, nor did theſe travellers ever return without bringing with them ſome parts of their bodies. The wonderful properties diſcovered in thoſe relics for the cure of the diſeaſed, and ſalvatio of the ſoul, gave birth to their tranſlation. It grew into a perſuaſion, that the bodies o the ſaints were able to draw down a bleſſing from heaven on cities and ſtates; and kingdoms put themſelves under their protection. Miracles without number, related in the legends, as well ancient as modern, convinced the people that the protection of ſaints was no indifferent circumſtance. Their images were ſet up in their churches, and their names inſerted in their Litanies. Hitherto canonizations were made by a tacit conſent of the clergy, without any formality: but long before that, the uſe of certain eccleſiaſtical regiſters known by the name of diptics had obtained, wherein were ſet down the names of martyrs and ſuch as died in a reputation for holineſs, after having diſtinguiſhed themſelves by their virtues; nay, they often regiſtered the names of ſuch who had no other pretenſions but their quality.

We have no inſtance of a ſolemn canonization before that of St. Sibert, canoniſed by Pope Leo III. at the beginning of the ninth century; tho' ſome aſcribe the firſt ſolemn canonization to P. Adrian, and others inſiſt that St. Ulric canoniſed in 993. by Pope John XIV. or XV. is the firſt ſaint canoniſed in form; and ſome again attribute the glory of this inſtitution to Pope Alexander III.

It appears pretty plain, by what we have ſaid, that canonization by the church, bears a very great affinity to the apotheoſis of the ancient Romans, and perhaps ows its riſe to it. At leaſt ſeveral formalities of the ſame nature appear in both. Such, as to the old Romans, are the Senate's approbation of thoſe whom they deified, the examination into their lives and virtues, the hymns and forms of prayer compoſed in honour of thoſe ſubaltern Deities, the temples built for them, and prieſts appointed for the ſervice of them. A more circumſtantial compariſon would be impertinent, we ſhall therefore only obſerve, that thoſe great men raiſed to the rank of Gods at Rome, were not alwa' worſhipped in the provinces ſubject to the Roman government, and ſtill ſeldomer in countries to which their command did not extend. In the ſame manner our ſaints are not equally acknowledged every where. The Eaſtern churches have ſeveral which we ſhould in vain look for in our calenders, and ſome of ours are not taken notice of in theirs; and yet ſuch as have written the lives of the ſaints of the Eaſt and Weſt, or endeavoured to have them canoniſed, evidently prove by a great number of miracles, that both the one and the other may be addreſſed to without ſcruple.

[a] The acts of canonization of Pope Pius V. Andrew d'Avellino, Felix de Cantalice, and Catharine de Bolognia, will furniſh us with an ample account of every thing particular in this ceremony; which four holy perſons juſt named were canoniſed in 1712. in the pontificate of Clement XI. In the private conſiſtory held by his Holineſs on that ſubject, he declared [b] that the miſeries of war and fear of a peace which might be fatal to religion, had [y] Hiſtory of Ceremonies and Superſtitions, Ed. of 1717. [z] Id.

[a] Acta Canon. printed at Rome in 1720.
[b] Republicâ Chriſtianâ bellorum procellis agitata ----- timendum magis eſt ne ---- deterior bello pax ---- orthodoxæ Religioni maximè perniciosa ---- coaleſcat.

had [c] determined him to procure the afflicted church new patrons who might have credit with God; in hopes they would labour to appeaſe his wrath, and their help be effectual towards obtaining peace from the divine Majeſty: thereupon followed a relation of their lives and miracles, and theſe are two out of ſix which the congregation of rites approved in the relation made to them concerning St. Pius V. Two images of this ſaint were miraculouſly preſerved from fire; and a ſingle touching the ſaint's ſhirt, healed a violent diſeaſe in a perſon who had put himſelf under his protection. After which the holy Father ordered the votes to be taken in order to proceed to their canonization. We ſhall ſay nothing of the conſiſtories held after this reſolution, nor of the panegyrics pronounced in honour of the four ſaints. They were ſucceeded by a diſtribution of indulgences, which the Cardinal, his Holineſs's vicar-general, promiſed to ſuch pious Chriſtians, who, after faſting the 4, 6, 7. of May 1712. confeſſing within that week, and afterwards communicating, ſhould, for ſeveral days together, viſit the baſilica's of St. John de Lateran, St. Peter and St. Mary Major. The whole city ſtrove to have a ſhare in thoſe liberalities which the holy Father, in the quality of heaven's treaſurer, offered to all nations; the curates publiſhed the good tidings, which the vicar of Chriſt promiſed to all penitents, to their reſpective flocks, and his Holineſs himſelf offered up the ſacred body of our Saviour in his private chapel, and with his own hands gave the communion to ſuch as had the honour to be admitted. In ſhort, the more effectually to excite the devotion of Chriſtians, he, on the firſt Sunday in May, with great humility viſited the abovementioned baſilica's, and the ſacred college were invited to do the ſame in their ſcarlet robes; but on days of penance they appeared in violet. Great numbers of relics were expoſed, and prayers and humiliations were offered up to God before them. All this devotion was with deſign to bring down the Holy Ghoſt into the hearts of thoſe, who were to ſet the laſt hand to the canonization of the four ſaints, which was at laſt done in the demi-public conſiſtories held on that occaſion; in conſequence whereof his Holineſs appointed the 22[d] of May, for the public entry of thoſe new ſaints of the church; a day every way ſolemn, the feſtival of the holy Trinity being celebrated at the ſame time. Whilſt preparations were making for ſo auguſt a ceremony, the vicar-general cauſed freſh indulgences to be fixed up in all public places, together with remiſſion of ſins to all ſuch, who upon confeſſing and communicating, ſhould by any acts of piety intereſt themſelves in the canonization of the four ſaints, and after appear at the proceſſion of that day. As to ſuch devout perſons, whom any extraordinary caſes might hinder being preſent at it, they had a ſhare in the indulgences, upon repeating three Paters, and three Aves, on that morning at the time the bells of Rome ſhould ring.

A magnificent theatre is always erected in the church of St. Peter for the ceremony of canonization. That which was prepared for theſe four new ſaints ſhall be preſently deſcribed. On the day of this ceremony, the entrance to the theatre is guarded by the Swiſs guards, who are likewiſe poſted at the doors of the baſilica; a detachment of the horſe guards is drawn up in the ſquare of St. Peter, another of the cuiraſſiers in that of the Vatican, and a third in all the ſtreets thro' which the proceſſion paſſes. Theſe bodies, together with thoſe poſted in the other quarters of Rome, and the garriſon of Caſtle St. Angelo make a general diſcharge of the artillery at a ſignal given that the ceremony is begun, and all the bells in the city are rung. Te Deum is ſung to inſtrumental muſic, &c. Thus far we have only given a general idea of this day's ſolemnity, but the following is a particular deſcription of the honours done by Pope Clement XI. in 1712. to thoſe ſaints publickly acknowledged by his Holineſs as the Chriſtian's mediators with our Saviour.

On the 22. of May, all the avenues of St. Peter's were lined in the manner we have obſerved. And nothing leſs was neceſſary to put a ſtop to the impetuoſity of the vaſt croud of people of all ages and ſexes, whom devotion and curioſity had equally brought thither.

[c] In tanto rerum diſcrimine ---- novos ac validos afflictis Eccleſiæ rebus apud divinam benitatem patronos quærere decrevimus, qui ſcripti ſint ---- lenire iracundiam Dei, &c.

thither. This multitude of all ſorts of people flocked from all parts of Rome to St. Pe- ter's at day-break; whilſt the ſecular and regular clergy aſſembled at the Vatican, according to the order iſſued out to them. The Cardinal-deacons then robed his Holineſs in proper ornaments, after which the holy Father with the croſs before, and the clergy behind him ſet out for Sixtus's chapel. Where being arrived, he made the ſign of the croſs over his pious retinue, took off his triple crown, knelt down before the altar, and prayed. He next chanted an anthem beginning with theſe words, Ave Maris Stella, &c. and again knelt till the muſic of the chapel had made an end of the hymn. Whereupon his Holineſs riſing put on his mitre, went again [d] into his chair, and in it received from Cardinal Albani his nephew, petitions for the canonization, two large and one ſmall painted taper, whereon were ſeen the arms of his Holineſs, and the images of the candidate-ſaints. At preſenting them, his Eminence kiſſed the hand and knee of the Pope his uncle. One of theſe tapers was by his Holineſs's order given to the conſtable Colonna to be carried before him in the proceſſion, and to be held during the ceremony of canonization. The other was given to no body, there not being any perſon of ſuit-able quality to walk with the conſtable in this ſolemnity. The ſmall taper was given to the chief aſſiſtant cup-bearer, or chamberlain to the holy Father; but firſt a general di-ſtribution of tapers was made among the clergy, each of them being armed with one according to his rank and dignity. The four banners on which were printed the images of the four ſaints, and which were to be carried in the proceſſion, were ſet up under the portico, near Conſtantine's ſteps; for that was the general rendezvous of this army of the faithful. Their arms were delivered to them at the entrance of the gate of the Vatican, from whence the Myriads, of which the regiments and battalions of the church are compoſed, filed off taper in hand; and this is the order and march of thoſe apoſtolic troops.

GENERAL PROCESSION obſerved at ROME on the 22. May 1712. the Day of CANONIZATION of the four SAINTS.

THE children of the apoſtolic hoſpital of St. Michael walked firſt with burning tapers in their hands, then the orphans, the Fathers of the convent of the church of St. Mary of Miracles of the third order, the bare-foot Auguſtins of Jeſu Maria, the capuchins, the brothers of charity, the fathers of mercy of St. Adrian, the hermits of St. Onuphrio, the minims of Mount Trinity, the fathers of St. Andrew of the Monks; thoſe of the third order of St. Francis, of St. Coſmo and Damian, the Minors, conventuals of the holy Apoſtles, the obſervantins of St. Mary in Ara Cœli, the Auguſtin friars of our lady of the people, the hermits of St. Auſtin, the Carmelites of St. Chryſogonus, thoſe of the Tranſ- pontina (or other ſide the Tyber) the Servites of St. Marcellus, the Jacobins of la Mi- nerva, the Hieronomites of St. Alexis, the canons regular of St. Saviour, the friars of Mount Olivet of the congregation of St. Bennet, the Citeaux of the congregation of Tuſcany, thoſe of the holy Croſs, the Feüillans of St. Bernard, the Fathers of the congregation of Vallambroſa, the Camaldules of St. Gregory, the Benedictins of the congregation of Mount Caſſino, the canons regular of St. Mary of peace. The ſeculars followed in good order, with their banner before them, as well as the regulars. A camerlingo, or chamberlain bearing the ſacerdotal ſtole was their ſerjeant, and took care that they marched in order; St. Mary on the other ſide the Tyber, and St. Laurence in Damaſo, who every other year have the precedency of each other came next; and after them the reſpective chapters of St. Mary Major, St. Peter of the Vatican, and St. John de Lateran.

After

[d] Sedes geſtatoria. The chair in which he goes to chapel.

After theſe came the officers of the Pope's chapel, his ſquires in caſſocs, the procurators general of the five mendicant orders in their proper habits, the gentlemen of the bedchamber in red, the fiſcal procurator, the commiſſary of the apoſtolic chamber, the conſiſtorial advocates, the Pope's private chaplains, the gentlemen of the bedchamber, the muſic of the chapel ſinging Ave Maris Stella perpetually during the whole proceſſion. Immediately after them appeared the [e] four coſtly banners, the ſtandards of the four ſaints, whereon were their images and chief miracles; the whole being the work of ſome of the moſt excellent painters. As the precedency had been given to St. Catharine of Bologna, her ſtandard went firſt, that of St. Felix de Cantalice appeared next, followed by St. Andrew d'Avellino, and St. Pius V. came laſt as Servant of Servants. Six of the Minor Obſervantin friars, each with a taper in his hand, walked before St. Catharin's banner, accompanied by the fraternity of the Bolognians of St. Petronius; the banner being ſupported by four of the principal Fathers of the order. That of St. Felix, ſupported in the ſame manner by ten capuchin friars, marched at the head of a numerous detachment of the fraternity of the Stigmata of St. Francis. Another detachment of the ſame fraternity followed St. Andrew d'Avellino's ſtandard, and the fraternity of the Agonizants, that of St. Pius V. each in the habits of their reſpective fraternities, but the Agonizants had ſacks on. The referendaries came next, before the regiſters of the high court, the voters of the ſignature, and clerks of the chamber. After them came the maſter of the ſacred palace among the auditors of the rota, then the apoſtolic acolyte performing the office of thuriferary, marched ſingle with the thurible in his hand, and next came ſeven more acolytes, who walked in the [f] figure of a creſcent or ſemicircle. Theſe laſt carried each a ſuperb ſilver candleſtic with a lighted taper in it. The ſub-deacon croſs-bearer appeared in the middle of them in his white robes, carrying the pontifical croſs, having on each ſide an apoſtolic officer with his red ſtaff. After them came the Vatican penitentiaries of the company of Jeſus, in white with their hats on, the abbots, generals of orders, prelates aſſiſtant and non-aſſiſtant, and the ſacred college, the Cardinal-deacons firſt, then the prieſts, and laſt the biſhops. The envoy of Bologna walked on the left of the prior of the captains of the quarters, followed by the conſervators, walking before the conſtable and governor of the city. The Cardinal-deacons aſſiſtants, with the Goſpel Cardinal-deacon, walked before the Pope's chair. Then appeared the holy Father. [g] He was going to open the gates of heaven to the new ſaints, and by his preſence gave freſh courage to the apoſtolic troops, ſeated on high in his chair, and carried by eight chairmen cloathed in red. Eight of the oldeſt referendaries bore up a rich canopy over his Holineſs with pikes adorned with ſilver, and the Swiſs guard walked with their naked ſabres round the chair. His Holineſs was followed by an apoſtolical ſub-deacon, whoſe title is auditor of the mitre: This auditor walked between two gentlemen of the privy chamber in red robes, and then actually in waiting. The apoſtolical prothonotaries participants together with their deputies, and the begging orders with their generals at their head, all in their proper habits cloſed the march, and brought up the rear of this army of the faithful, in the center of which marched the Pope, Prelates and Cardinals.

The proceſſion was ſucceeded by an infinite number of people, whom [h] the preſence of the holy Father, and the grave, modeſt and religious appearance of the faithful in the proceſſion, on a ſudden inſpired with ſo violent a devotion, that for a moment nothing was ſeen but tears, nothing heard but ſighs and groans, voices interrupted by ſobbs, and the cries of thoſe who preſſed forward to be the firſt to receive the holy Father's benediction. The whole multitude fell down on their knees; each man beating his breaſt, and [e] The church militant, always at war with the world and the Devil, has in her proceſſions preſerved an image of the military diſcipline of the children of the world. Might not the banner in proceſſions be compared to the Labarum? The proceſſions of the old Romans were in many things like the proceſſions of our devotees; but we ſhall refer the reader to what we ſhall ſay of them in the ſequel of this diſſertation.

[f] In Hemicycli formam diſpoſiti. Acta Canon. &c. [g] Janitor Cœli. Id. Ibid.

[h] Id. Ibid.

and whilſt one was entreating to be inſtantly bleſſed, another was begging an indulgence. His Holineſs quite ſoftned, could not refrain from tears, at the ſame time as he was ſcattering the graces of heaven to the right and left on his faithful ſubjects. He [i] went thro' the ranks weeping, with one hand bleſſing his people, and with the other holding the ſmalleſt of the painted tapers already mentioned, in a little white veil embroidered with gold, and deſigned to catch the drops of wax which ſhould fall from the ſacred taper.

Such was the proceſſion which marched with colours flying towards St. Peter's, where the Pope was received by the clergy belonging to that cathedral, whilſt the choir of muſic there ſung the anthem, beginning with theſe words; Tu es Petrus, Thou art Peter. The holy Father ſeemed aſtoniſhed at the pomp and ſplendor with which his cathedral was adorned, and ſure enough at the ſight of it, his Holineſs might juſtly ſay; [k] I have ſeen the holy city, the New Jeruſalem, come down from heaven adorned as the bride for her bride-groom. The Poſtulants (or petitioners) for ſo are they called who ſue for the canonization of any Beati, had ſtudied to outdo the magnificence of all former canonizations, at which the holy Father wept for joy. The firſt thing he did was to go and proſtrate himſelf before the holy ſacrament in the chapel of the holy Trinity, having firſt quitted the taper and mitre. The eccleſiaſtical Senate followed the example of his Holineſs, who taking back the taper and mitre went into his chair, and was carried to the altar of the apoſtles. There the holy Father gave the taper to his cup-bearer (who held it all the ceremony) knelt upon his ſeat and prayed for ſome time, after which he beſtowed freſh bleſſings upon the aſſembly, went up to his throne there to perform the office of Chriſt's vicar; and received the homage of the ſacred college. After this the oldeſt of the Cardinal-biſhops went up to the pontifical throne, and took his place on the right, but ſo that his face was to the left. The Cardinal deputed to demand the canonization advanced forward to the ſteps of the throne, having on his left the Cardinal-legate of Bologna, and on his right a conſiſtorial advocate; the maſter of the ceremonies who attended the Cardinal-poſtulant being on the Legate's left. They firſt bowed to the altar and the Pope, then the Cardinal-poſtulant roſe, and the advocate addreſſing himſelf to the Pope in his Eminency's name, begged his Holineſs would be pleaſed [l] to cauſe the four Beati to be enrolled amongſt the ſaints of the Lord. Scarce had he ended, when one of the gentlemen of the Pope's bedchamber, ſecretary of his Holineſs's briefs riſing took up the diſcourſe, and made a ſhort panegyric on the merit and virtues of the four bleſſed perſons all natives of Italy; and who have immortalized themſelves by their religious exploits. Indeed Italy is grown famous by the great names of many ſaints. The bravery of the two ſaint Francis's, of St. Anthony of Padua, &c. are well known, [m] thoſe brave and generous ſoldiers of the armies of the Lord, who conquered the kingdom of heaven by their Chriſtian virtues, and acquired a reputation infinitely preferable to that of the heroes of ancient Rome. And indeed Italy ſeems to have long renounced all pretenſions to the latter ſort of glory.

The gentleman of the bedchamber cloſed his diſcourſe with an exhortation to the aſſembly to beg the light of God's Spirit on ſo nice an occaſion. Then the Pope riſe off his throne, and all the clergy knelt, two of the chapel muſic in their ſurplices and kneeling likewiſe ſung the Litanies of the ſaints; after which the Cardinal who petitioned for the canonization renewed his inſtances, and this was ſucceeded by a prayer to God to beg the aſſiſtance of his Holy Spirit, and his Holineſs ſung the Veni Creator Spiritus; which is a hymn addreſſed to the third perſon in the Trinity. The two muſicians ſung the verſe beginning with Emitte Spiritum, and the Pope called upon the Holy Ghoſt whilſt the two continued ſtanding before the ſteps of the throne, with tapers in their hands. A third and laſt entreaty made in the ſame manner as the former, followed this invocation. Then the ſecretary of the briefs reſumed the diſcourſe, and [n] declared it was time to yield

[i] Inter utrumque Clerum præteriens, Id. Ibid.
[k] Id. Ibid.
[l] Id. Ibid.
[m] Id. Ibid.
[n] Ibid. p. 224.

yield to God's commands; the holy Father, continued he, is going to make a decree, in order to raiſe PIUS V. ANDREW D'AVELLINO, FELIX DE CANTALICE, and CATHARIN of BOLOGNA to the rank of ſaints; to the glory of God, and the honour of the Catholic church, to the end, that their names may be called on for ages to come, &c. After theſe words the ſecretary withdrawing, the Cardinals ſtood up, and the Vicar of JESUS CHRIST, [o] aſſiſted by the Holy Ghoſt pronounced the decree of canonization; commanding that from thenceforth they ſhould be held as ſaints by the Catholic church, and their feſtival ſolemnized on their birth-day. The apoſtolic prothonotaries and notaries upon the ſpot drew up an act of this canonization, and Te Deum was ſung in order to return thanks to God for it.

Whilſt Te Deum was ſinging by the muſic of the chapel, the ſignal made by the maſter of the ceremonies gave notice to all the city of the ſolemn promotion of theſe four new ſaints. The ſound of trumpets, the noiſe of drums, the ringing of bells, and the diſcharge of the artillery ſpread the triumph of the church militant, under the lieutenant general of Chriſt on earth into every quarter of Rome. Nothing was talked of but the glorious miracles of the new ſaints, their auſterity, their piety, and other virtues. Already did the people recommend themſelves to them, chuſe them for patrons, and in the tranſports of joy of the Roman devotees, a thouſand vows were heard offered up to God for the holy Father's proſperity.

As ſoon as the muſic had ended the Te Deum, the Cardinal-deacon aſſiſtant, who was on the right, ſung the Litanies in honour of the new interceſſors, and called on them by their names. The holy Father read aloud a form of prayer of his own making, in order to inform the devout how they were to call upon them. The ſubſtance of which was to beg of God to grant to the pious ſuch aſſiſtance as any perſon might expect, who puts himſelf under the protection of a ſaint; and as ſoon as it was read, the Cardinal-deacon of the Goſpel went up to the pontifical throne, continued ſtanding at the foot of it at his Holineſs's right hand, and turning towards him ſung the Confiteor, therein expreſly naming the four ſaints, whoſe promotion CHRIST's vicar had juſt declared. In the mean while the epiſtle-ſub-deacon went and took the croſs from the altar, carried it to the loweſt ſtep of the throne, and kneeling down, placed it before the ſovereign Pontif; who thereupon read the benediction and abſolution to the aſſembly in the following words.

May God have pity on you by vertue of the prayers and merits of the holy virgin, of St. Michael the Archangel, &c. - - - and of St. Pius, St. Andrew, St. Felix and St. Catharine: may God, for their ſakes, pardon your ſins and lead you into eternal life. May God grant you indulgence, abſolution, and remiſſion of ſins, &c.

Pontifical maſs ſucceeded the canonization. His Holineſs was conducted in form between two deacons aſſiſtants, and ſupported by two auditors of the rota, to the little throne repreſented in the cut of the theatre for the canonization. The holy Father, in his way to it from the great one, ſcattered his bleſſings on the apoſtolic Senate. Immediately his Holineſs laid aſide his mitre, got up, turned his face to the altar, in a low voice repeated the Pater and Ave, croſſed himſelf, and for the Tierce ſung Deum in adjutorium: the reſt of the particulars of this maſs we omit, as little differing from other papal maſſes; and ſhall only obſerve, that the holy Father made a diſcourſe or ſort of homily. One of the moſt remarkable things in it was, that the misfortune of the times made it abſolutely neceſſary to propoſe to the people freſh examples of virtue, to give a new life to devotion which was now grown cool, and to ſecure freſh aſſiſtance from heaven in defence of religion. To this end, more proper ſubjects could not be pitched upon than St. Pius and his three aſſociates in ſanctity. In the midſt of his diſcourſe, the holy Father in a moſt edifying manner addreſſed himſelf to the four ſaints of his own creation, beſeeching

[o] Celeſti Spiritu afflatus, Ibid. Formerly the Pope, before he pronounced the decree of canonization, made a proteſt, declaring that by ſuch decree, he did in no wiſe intend to derogate from the faith of the church, and glory of God, Cerem. Eccl. R. Lib. I. Fol. 32. Ed. of 1516.

beſeeching them with eyes of pity to look down upon the calamities of the church, and with the moſt fervent zeal recommending to them the New Zion, the mother and miſtreſs of all other churches. After this homily, the Cardinal-biſhop aſſiſtant begged his Holineſs to be pleaſed to grant indulgences to ſuch as ſhould perform their devotions to theſe new ſaints: upon which the Pope, turning towards the people, declared a plenary indulgence of ſeven years, for ſuch as ſhould annually viſit their ſepulchres.

[p] As to the offerings repreſented in the cut, they were divided from each other into four parts, upon tables placed over againſt the little throne, and preſented in proceſſion after the following manner. [q] The maſter of the ceremonies, at the head of the proceſſion, was followed by 4. mace-bearers with ſilver maces on their ſhoulders. After them came two of Cardinal ABDUA's chief domeſtics each with a large taper, whereon were painted St. Pius, and the arms of CHRIST's vicar. The Cardinal with his mitre in his hand walked on the right hand of the ſollicitor for the canonization. Two friars, one of which was the maſter of the ſacred palace, followed, carrying a ſmall tapet painted like the great ones; and two turtles in a little gilt baſket. Two of Cardinal Pignatelli's gentlemen in long robe scarried two loaves, one gilt with gold, and the other, with ſilver, and both with his Holineſs's arms on them. The Cardinal himſelf followed and after him two moſt reverend friars, one of them, commiſſary of the holy Roman Inquiſition; the other procurator general of the order of the preaching friars. The former with a ſmall taper, and the latter with a pair of doves in a baſket ſilver-gilt. Two gentlemen of Cardinal Pamphilio's came after in the habit of clerks carrying two ſmall barrels, one with wine and gilt with gold, the other with water and gilt with ſilver, both of them having at the bottom the arms of the Pope; and the petitioners for canonization. Theſe were followed by their maſter, and he by the reverend father the ſecretary of the congregation of the Index, and the reverend the provincial of the Holy Land; the ſecretary with a gilt cage full of little birds, and the provincial with a ſmall wax-light like thoſe we have already mentioned, under which he held a fine white napkin, that not a drop of the wax might be loſt. As ſoon as they were come to the ſteps of the Pope's throne, the mace-bearers and gentlemen made a lane to the right and left; Cardinal Abdua and Cardinal Albani, ſollicitors for the canonization, went and placed themſelves on the Pope's right hand, after paying him their reſpects. They, who carried the great tapers, gave them into Cardinal Abdua's hands, who having kiſſed them, preſented them to his Holineſs. Cardinal Albani, as ſollicitor, preſented the ſmall lights, and the [r] offerings carried in the little baſkets. The reſt of the Cardinals preſented the bread, and the barrels in which were the water and wine to his Holineſs; and they were [p] It is well known, that offerings were in uſe among the Jews. Nor were they leſs in vogue among the ancient idolaters. The Chriſtians have taken up the ſame cuſtom, which in length of time has degenerated into an abuſe that can hardly eſcape ridicule. In the time of Conſtantine the Great, there was no approaching the altar without a preſent, which was a capital point, and ſwelled the revenues of the clergy; nay, and was of the ſame conſequence as the articles of religion. "Go to church, pray, pardon-ſinners, aſſiſt at maſs, carry your offerings:" in this manner Nicolas I. expreſſes himſelf in a paſſage from Ciapponi in his Diſſertation upon offerings.

Theſe offerings were of ſeveral kinds, ſome were common, as bread, wine and water for the communion; others were for the ceremonies, and other neceſſities of the church and her miniſters; ſuch as incenſe, perfumes, tapers, oil, ſacred veſſels, the firſt-fruits of the earth, and of the flock; but eſpecially, money, inheritances, poſſeſſions in land, lordſhips and other fine eſtates, which the faithful ſervants of the church have in the courſe of years gained from timorous ſinners.

At this day there is, in the church of Milan, a ſort of offering much reſembling that of bread and wine in the ancient Roman church. Two old men of St. Ambroſe's ſchool offer three waters in a plate, and a ſmall ſilver veſſel full of wine, which is likewiſe performed by two old women. Theſe are footſteps remaining of the communion under both kinds, of which the Roman church has likewiſe preſerved an idea in the canonization of ſaints, the conſecration of biſhops, and the bleſſing of abbots; on all which occaſions, bread, wine and water are offered. In ancient time, tapers and candles were likewiſe offered to Popes and Prelates, a cuſtom ſtill ſubſiſting in ſeveral religious ceremonies, ſuch as the collating to orders, and the bleſſing of virgins; in its annual ſolemnities Rome ſtill by its magiſtrates offers patins, chalices, tapers, &c. at the altars of its moſt conſiderable churches.

[q] This is a particular deſcription of the offering made for Pius V. taken word for word from the acts regiſtered by S. Ciapponi.

[r] The author of the Tableau de la Cour de Rome ſays, that the Pope opens the door of theſe cages of birds, and gives one of them its liberty, whilſt the reſt are kept priſoners; which, ſays he, is an emblem of limbo or purgatory, from whence the Pope delivers ſuch whom he pleaſes to let into heaven, &c.

afterwards admitted to kiſs his feet. They then went down the ſteps on the left ſide, and all the offerings were thereupon again ſet upon the tables, from whence they had been taken.

We ſhould here give a deſcription of the decorations of the theatre, but as ſuch accounts are dry and tireſome, we ſhall only mention the moſt remarkable at the bottom of the cut. We ſhall in general inform the reader, that the theatre was covered with rich tapeſtry, and that it would be difficult to imagine any thing finer than the Pope's great throne; on one ſide of which was a ſtatue repreſenting the church, and another repreſenting juſtice. The middle of the throne was fifty Roman palms high, and thirty ſix broad, on one ſide of this throne ſtood a figure of faith, and on the other one of hope. An infinite number of wax lights blazed round the church and theatre. The author to whom we are obliged for this account, of which we have only given an abridgment, has not omitted a complete liſt of every thing neceſſary for a regular and pompous canonization.

Nor ſhall we ſay any thing of the particular graces and bleſſings which the holy Father beſtows on the roſaries, chapels, images, croſſes, medals and other ſuch things ſanctified on account of this ceremony, or at the time of the triumphant entry of the four ſaints into heaven; this was expreſſed in an indulgence, together with the promiſe of remiſſion of ſins to whoever ſhould viſit ſeven churches in one day, or at leaſt as many as ſhould be found in the town he reſided in, were there but a ſingle one; provided however, that if there were but one, he ſhould viſit all the altars in it. The ſame was granted to him, who in remembrance of our Saviour's paſſion ſhould kiſs the earth ſeven times, perform any virtuous action in imitation of our four ſaints, read any chapter of their lives, viſit their altars, or adore their relics, at the ſame time praying for the glory of the church, and the converſion of ſinners, &c.

We muſt mention another ceremony that ſucceeded the canonization, which was the carrying in pomp St. Pius V.'s ſtandard from the baſilica of St. Peter of the Vatican, to that of St. Mary of Minerva, and was performed on Saturday 6. of Auguſt 1712. To this end, the order of the preaching friars, and of the Agonizants met in the baſilica of the Vatican, whither the clergy of that church came in their robes of ceremony. They all drew up before the confeſſional of St. Peter, and thence they began the proceſſion. Paſſing in review before the altar they all made one genuflexion, except ſuch as carried croſſes, banners, tapers, &c. The brothers of the holy ſacrament, who carried the ſtandard of the ſaint, halted near the altar of the choir, to hear an anthem ſung by the muſic in honour of the ſaint, which was followed by a Litany to him. Then the canon, whoſe week it was to officiate, ſung that ſaint's prayer, and walking directly up to the ſtandard, on which the image of that new canoniſed Pope was painted, he incenſed it three times in form. In the mean time, the clergy of that church appeared following the croſs with tapers, and walked immediately after the Dominicans. The ſtandard was then given to four Fathers of that order by the canon for the week, who immediately fell on his knees moſt devoutly adoring the holy image. This is what paſſed in the church. When the ſtandard went out, the clergy and chapter made a lane on each ſide to do honour to it, and kneeling down, paid homage to the repreſentation of that holy Pontif.

Nothing could be more reaſonable, than that the Dominicans ſhould have the honour of carrying the banner of a Pope who had been of their order. Theſe pacific friars walked with lighted candles in their hands after the drums and trumpets of the people of Rome, and after the Agonizants armed likewiſe with candles, in the midſt of a great number of muſicians, and carrying the croſs, the banner of the fraternity, and lanterns. The banner of Pius was guarded by twenty of the Pope's grooms, and thirty of his Swiſs guard. The bells of all the churches in their way were rung, and the windows of the houſes adorned with a great deal of devotion. There were illuminations throughout the city, and ſeveral diſcharges of the artillery. To conclude, the order of St. Dominic

. Pape.
ge du Cardinal Evêque sistant.
rdinaux Diacres Assis-
s. rdinaux, Evêques, etêtres.

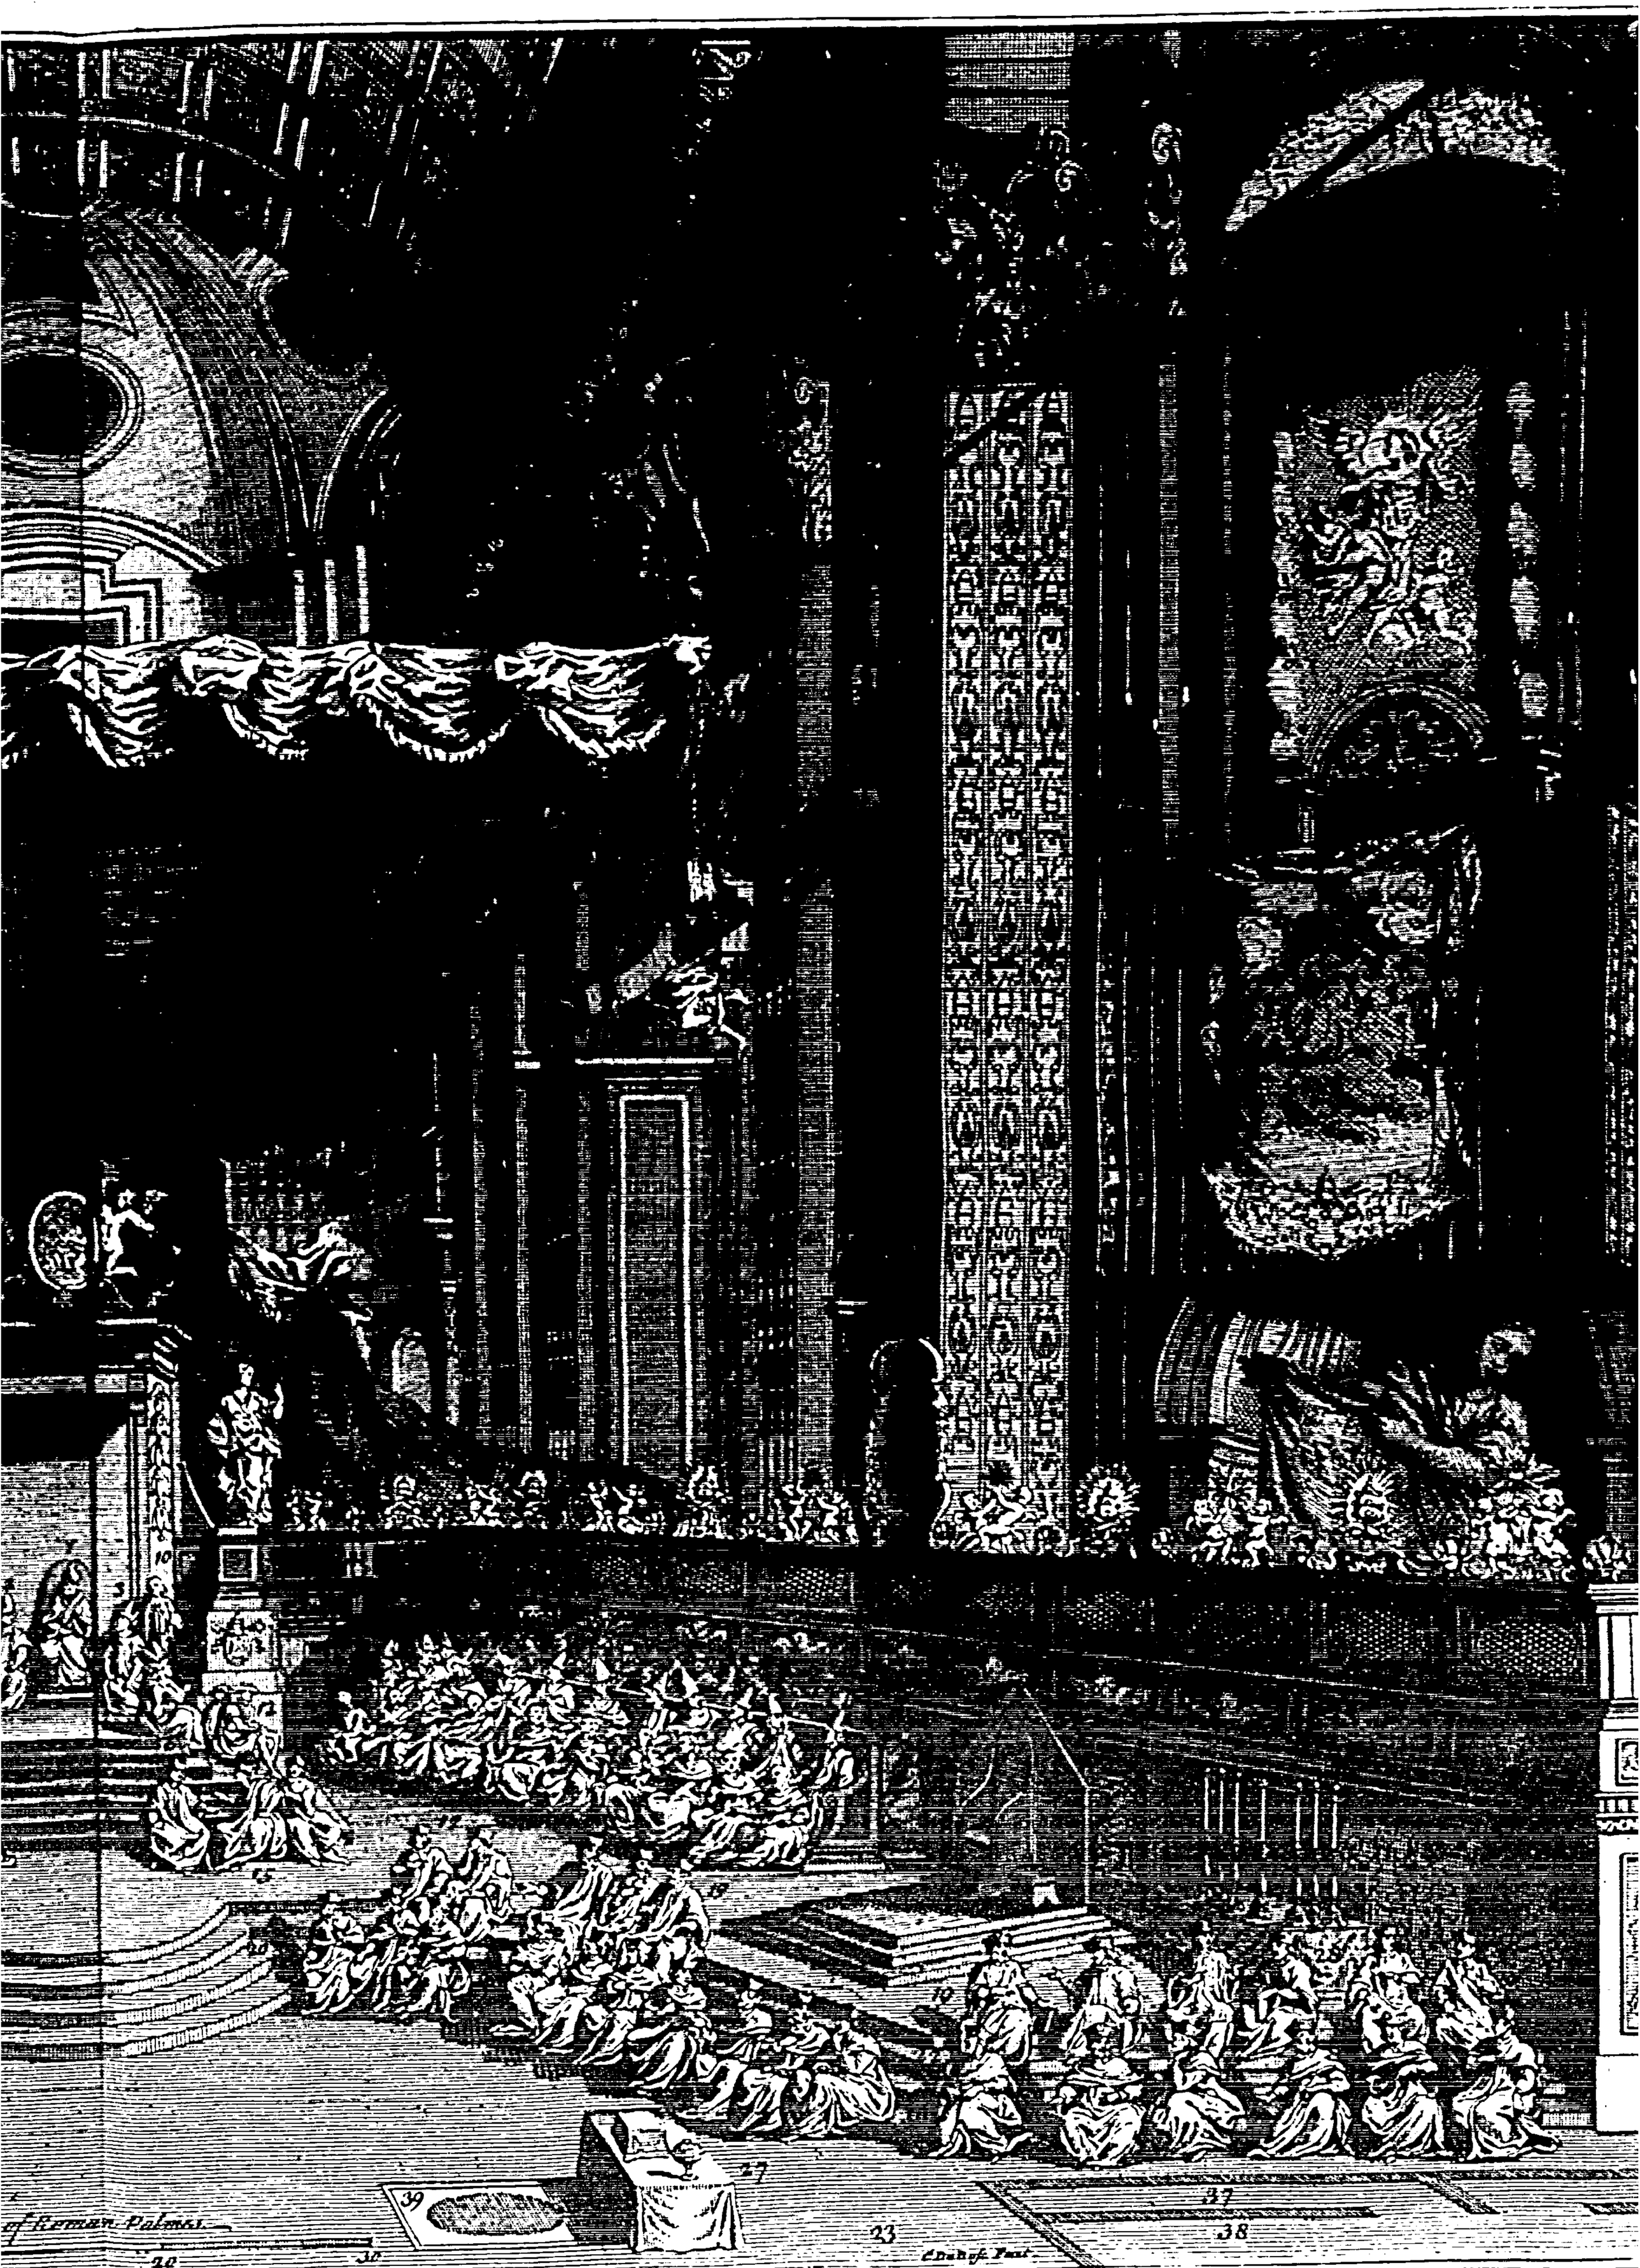
5. Cardinaux Diacres.
6. Evêques Assistans.
7. Evêques non Assistans.
8. Penitentiers.
9. Gouverneur, de Rome.
Protonotaires et Adjoints.



10. Connêtable Colonna.
11. Généraux d'Ordres.
12. Conservateurs de Rome.
13. Legat de Bologne.
14. Place du Maitre du Sacré Hospice.
15. Auditeurs de Rote.

16. Clercs de la Chambre.
17. Prelats Votans de la Signature de Justice
18. Abbreviateurs.
19. Referendaires.
20. Cameriers Secrets.
21. Cameriers d'Honneur.

THEATRE dresse

quelques SAL

P. Pasart delin.

de S.t PIERRE pour la CANONISATION de ficat de CLEMENT XI. en 1712.

22. Chapelains Secrets et Communs.
23. Place des Ecuiers.
24. Caudataires.
25. Maitre de la Garderobbe.
26. Offrandes.
*. Avocats Consistoriaux

27. Credence sur la quelle on met les vases Sacrez.
28. Autre Credence, sur la quelle on met 7 Cierges.
29. Credence du Pape.
30. Ceux qui postulent pour la Canonisation du Saint.

31. L'Ambassade
32. L'Ambassade Portugal ince
33. Neveux du Pa
34. Belle Soeur
35. Choeur des
36. Dame de Qua

began their parts. Fifty ſmall canons were at their charge placed before St. Mary's of Minerva, and it appeared, that the grumbling of the artillery had nothing frightful in it to thoſe recluſes, who in their retirement are ſuppoſed to handle nothing but their croſſes and chaplets. The proceſſion marched on to St. Mary of Minerva, and croſſed that church in two columns.

When the ſtandard was juſt upon entring the church, a Cardinal, who waited for it at the door in his pontifical robes ſtanding between his deacon and ſub-deacon, haſtned towards it, and laying aſide his mitre, fell on his knees on a carpet laid for that purpoſe, and in that poſture [r] adored the image, and incenſed it. It was then ſet upon the altar, and whilſt the elevation of it was performing, his Eminence turning to the croſs upon the altar, began the Te Deum, incenſed the image, ſung the ſaint's prayer, and then bleſſed the congregation to the ſound of canon, drums and trumpets. Eight whole days were ſpent in pious rejoycings accompanied with maſſes and indulgences. Here we ſhall cloſe this deſcription, which is already but too long.

Every thing offered at a canonization is myſterious: The tapers, which, according to our [s] dealer in myſteries, repreſent Chriſt's humility, are likewiſe an emblem of the ſaint's chaſtity, and good works. The bread, water and wine give us an idea of the ſpiritual life. Bread, beſides, ſhews gratitude towards God, and theſe three all together are types of the offering Chriſt made of his body at the laſt ſupper. As to the turtle, it is an emblem of conjugal fidelity, and it would be a hard matter to be without it at a canonization-ceremony; it but too well repreſenting the inviolable fidelity which the ſaints have ſworn to God. It is likewiſe a type of the contemplative life of the ſaints, for, like them, it loves ſolitude. Its ſighs expreſs the wonderful affliction which the ſaints feel for the ſins of mankind. However theſe excellent qualities in the turtle ſhould not make us deſpiſe doves which love company, and fly by troops, which is a lively image of the active life of the ſaints. Beſides, it is under this form that the Holy Ghoſt is painted. As for the little birds offered in this ceremony, they too are a type of the ſaints, who taking wing towards heaven by the ſtrength of contemplation, there converſe familiarly with God. The very barrels of wine and water, the cages for birds, the baſkets for the bread, the painting of the tapers, and the gold and ſilver with which loaves are ornamented, are all myſterious affairs. But we refer our readers to the author, who had ſupplied us with the particulars we have juſt given him.

CEREMONIES of BEATIFICATION.

NONE can be beatified within fifty years after their deaths. All atteſtations of virtues and miracles are examined by the Congregation of Rites. This examination often continues for ſeveral years, after which his Holineſs reſolves upon the beatification: For the candidate's reputation runs no riſk, the affirmative being always on his ſide.

As ſoon then as the congregation has carefully examined the requeſts of the petitioners firſt, and the life of the future Beato, the holy Father ſigns the decree for his beatification. [u] His corps and relics are from thenceforth expoſed to the veneration of all good Chriſtians, his images are crowned with rays, and an office ſet apart for him; maſs is ſaid in honour of him, tho' neither his body nor relics are carried in proceſſion; and indulgences and remiſſion of ſins are granted on the day of his beatification, which tho' not ſo pompous as that of canonization, is however ſplendid, and worthy of a perſon raiſed to beatitude.

[r] Sancti Pii imaginem adoravit. Acta Canon.
[s] Acta Canon. p. 260.
[u] Ciapponi Acta Beatif. &c.

DEVOTION

DEVOTION to SAINTS.

THERE are various claſſes of ſaints. Some, by the means of their temporal good things, have during their lives been benefactors to the church, and its miniſters; others backed by the authority they poſſeſſed, declared themſelves its protectors and patrons. A great many of them diſtinguiſhed themſelves by the brightneſs of their parts and judgment. A long and whimſical retirement, a life, which to the world would paſs for extravagant, has canoniſed many. A ſincere return to God, after an irregular courſe of life, has gained ſeveral others the ſame honour. In ſhort, amongſt thoſe ſaints acknowledged by the Catholic church as ſuch, are to be found a conſiderable number of martyrs for JESUS CHRIST.

All theſe ſaints have their place in the legends as well ancient as modern, where their lives are inſerted for the edification of the godly, with praiſes that would be ſuſpected, were they beſtowed on perſons of the world. Nothing but what is miraculous, extraordinary, or divine is to be found in them.

Beſides ſuch ſaints as are effectually and nominally known to us, there are millions not at all known to us, not ſo much as by name; but it is preſumed, they are real genuine ſaints, becauſe the Pope declares them ſuch, after their bodies have been taken out of thoſe burying places called catacombs. Whatever figure theſe new patrons may have made in the world during their lives, they are ſure of the gift of miracles after their deaths. Rome is convinced of this, it being a place where unknown ſaints are much in vogue.

It ſhould ſeem, that after the deciſions of the apoſtolic court, the faithful run no riſks in throwing themſelves into the arms of unknown ſaints; and yet ſome doctors have endeavoured to overturn the foundations of this worſhip. Monſieur Thiers, one of theſe doctors, deſcribes this ſort of devotion with no other deſign than to make it odious, and he thus expreſſes himſelf. " [w] One of the kinds of devotions now moſt in vogue, is that to the new ſaints, whoſe bodies are taken out of ---- catacombs, and given gratis " to any conſiderable perſon who aſks them, after the Cardinal-vicar to the Pope, or " the biſhop who is ſacriſtan of the apoſtolic chapel has given them names ---- The " churches where the bodies of ſuch new ſaints lie, are flocked to, offerings are carried, " vows are made, and pilgrimages and nine-days-devotions are made to them, perſons " ſick of all ſorts of diſeaſes are carried and recommended to them, as well as children " ſtill-born, and dead without baptiſm, in hopes of their reſurrection by the interceſſion " of theſe new ſaints; people ſtrive to kiſs their ſhrines, to have their chaplets, medals, " and the clothes for the ſick touched by them; they cry out a miracle ---- every one " endeavours to be a witneſs of it, it is ſpread every where, the croud gathers, and the " churches thereby become more frequented, and grow into greater reputation ---- " This devotion might be very meritorious with God, did it not tend to leſſen that re- " ſpect which the church has always paid to the ancient ſaints --- and were it true, " that theſe new ſaints were really ſo ---- But it is to be feared, that the worſhip paid " to them may bring people off from the veneration which is due to the ancient ſaints, " and that they may imagine, that the new ones have more power and credit with God." Indeed it muſt be allowed, that the vulgar, always fond of novelty, may eaſily give into ſuch an exceſs; for they look upon God to be like man, and that the laſt comer muſt always be the greateſt favourite with the ſupreme Being. Monſieur Thiers is of opinion, that the devotion to the ancient ſaints is much more regular, ſure, and better eſtabliſhed. But allowing him full liberty to think as he pleaſes, we muſt take the liberty of telling him, that there is no danger in aſſociating to the ancient ſaints all ſuch whom the Pope has has cauſed to be acknowledged in the laſt ages by a ſolemn canonization, or other lawful ways.

[w] Thiers chap. xxiv. of the moſt neceſſary of all kinds of devotion.

Devotion to ſaints is grounded upon their power, and that on the miracles they wrought during their lives, or after their deaths: ſo that miracles are the authentic proofs of their ſanctity whom the Pope [x] canonizes, ſince God would not grant thoſe eſſential tokens of his ſupreme authority, except to ſuch as diſtinguiſh themſelves by their virtue. Formerly, all ſupernatural operations were called miracles, as well ſuch as interrupt the courſe of nature, as ſuch as run counter to thoſe laws by which ſhe acts. Theſe operations were, if we may be allowed the expreſſion, a violence done to nature; and accordingly, God allowed them only upon extraordinary occaſions; ſuch, for inſtance, as the deſtruction of error, and the eſtabliſhment of the truth of religion, &c. As for thoſe miracles formerly uſed under Paganiſm in ſupport of error, they have been ranked under ſorcery, cheats, and illuſions; nor ſhall we enter into them.

For ſome ages paſt we muſt have another notion of miracles. They are in general become more eaſy and common, than in the primitive ages of the church. They have ceaſed to take religion and truth for their ſole objects, but on the other hand, we have the comfort to ſee all the laws of nature deſtroyed, for the leaſt favour a ſaint aſked of God, or for his private occaſions. [y] Birds have been ſeen to grow ſilent, and liſten to the ſermons of ſaints, and [z] fiſhes leave the water to hearken to their preaching. In a word, ſince this change of idea, ſaints have made their proofs with leſs difficulty, and perſons of mean extraction have been admitted. All theſe changes have been ſucceeded by an infinite number of miracles, which are not yet ceaſed, nor ever will to the end of the world. Notwithſtanding the endeavours of the incredulous, the faith of pious good ſouls is not exhauſted, but is a ſource that will never dry up.

IDEA of the POWER of the SAINTS of theſe latter AGES.

HAD faith no other ſupport than reaſon, it would ſoon be a-ground. It requires ſtronger aſſiſtance, than that of a brain exhauſted in ruminating upon the truths of religion. To be plain, it muſt have examples that ſtrike, and as it were ſtun it. This is what will with ſome devotees juſtify the neceſſity of the miracles of theſe latter ages. We have already given ſome inſtances of theſe miracles, [a] to which we ſhall add the following.

St. Raymond of Pennaforte, after having long cenſured the debauchery of a King of Spain, without being able to break off his criminal engagements, reſolved to leave him to his own wicked inclinations, and ſo embark in order to return to Barcelona; but the King having forbid any one to tranſport him, St. Raymond revived the miracle of CHRIST walking upon the water. For he threw his cope into the ſea, and taking his ſtaff in his hand, went into this new kind of boat, and arrived ſafe in Catalonia. At the ſaint's approach the very gate of the convent opened of itſelf.

St. Peter of Nola, [b] that unprofitable ſervant, the off-ſcowering of the earth, and real nothing, had yet very familiar converſation with God and the holy Virgin. One day the Apoſtle St. Peter made him a viſit in the ſame poſture in which he was crucified, that is, with his head downwards.

[x] He canonizes none who has not wrought two or three.
[y] St. Francis ſilenced the ſwallows who interrupted him.
[z] St. Anthony of Padua not being able to gain the attention of the Heretics, deſired them to go to the ſea-ſide, in order to convince them of the docility of the fiſhes.
[a] Theſe examples are taken from Giry's Lives of the Saints.
[b] This ſaint took theſe titles in his letters.

St. Francis of Paula was a very ſtrong robuſt ſaint, ſince Sampſon, there never was his fellow. He without aſſiſtance, carried away a rock of a prodigious bigneſs that hindred the foundation of the dormitory of a monaſtery he was building; he bore that on his ſhoulders which four men could not ſo much as move. He hung in the air a piece of rock, which breaking from a mountain was going to beat down his new building, and daſh in pieces a great number of his workmen. He then propped it up with his ſtaff, and in that condition left it for a long time expoſed to view, for the edification of a multitude of people who flocked to ſee ſuch a miracle. This rock was afterwards uſed in finiſhing of the ſaint's monaſtery, but hiſtory does not inform us, there has been any relic made out of it, which ſeems extraordinary.

Manna was often ſeen to fall on St. Agnes of Monte Pulciano in the form of a croſs. On one of the feſtivals of the Aſſumption the bleſſed Virgin appeared to her with the child Jeſus in her arms, whom ſhe permitted her to embrace, and preſs to her breaſt. [c] At parting ſhe left the ſaint a croſs, which the little Jeſus wore about his neck. We ſhall ſay nothing of the roſe that appeared in the midſt of winter, in a plate which the ſaint ſerved up to two hermits; but we muſt not omit the advances in point of civility, which ſhe after her death made to St Catharine of Sienna, who went to pay her a viſit at her tomb. Whilſt the living ſaint was endeavouring to kiſs the feet of the dead one, the latter lifted up her foot to St. Catharine's lips, thro' an exceſs of humility to be before-hand with her. However, St. Catharine did not think proper to expoſe herſelf to ſuch an accident any more, for in her ſecond viſit to St. Agnes, inſtead of her feet, ſhe kiſſed her head.

St. Bonaventure, that excellent author of the [d] pſalter of our Lady, not being able to communicate in the common way, by reaſon of a violent indiſpoſition in his ſtomach, [e] had the holy pyx placed on his breaſt, and the ſacred wafer immediately penetrated from thence into his very bowels, there to be the life of his ſoul.

St. Ignatius given over by the phyſicians was viſited by St. Peter, who touched him with his hands, and wrought a miraculous cure on him. After that, the bleſſed Virgin made him a viſit, and at the ſame time a preſent of a celeſtial ointment, which may be called the Balm of chaſtity, ſince it annihilated his ſenſes, and even blotted out of his mind all the images of ſenſual pleaſure. It is to be preſumed, that St. Ignatius has tranſmitted the vertue of this balm down to his ſpiritual children. F. Alegambe tells us extraordinary things concerning the aſſaults they have made upon the fleſh, and the victories they have gained over it. Father Gil at the age of 70. knew no woman by ſight, ſo great was his care to prevent his ſenſes fixing upon ſuch objects. He was afraid even of himſelf, he almoſt was frightned at touching himſelf, and thanked God that the defects of his eyes ſerved as a remedy againſt his ſenſes. F. Coſterus declared, he had never felt any diſorderly motions, and that his imagination knew nothing capable of corrupting it. F. Cotton, confeſſor to a Prince whoſe brain was eaſy in receiving the impreſſion of a moving object, preſerved his chaſtity to ſuch a degree, as to hold every thing that could in the leaſt taint his virtue, in the greateſt deteſtation; and beſides, had his ſmelling ſo quick, as to diſcover ſuch as had violated the laws of chaſtity. F. Spiga, who died at 74. could not diſtinguiſh any of his nieces from each other, ſo much had he accuſtomed his eyes not to look on the fair ſex. But to return to St. Ignatius, as he was on his pilgrimage to Jeruſalem, he reſolved to viſit the mount of Olives, and Chriſt himſelf ſerved him as a guide. He cured the ſick of the falling ſickneſs, freed the poſſeſſed, and many recovered by touching the hem of his garment. In fine, they reckon to the number of two hundred miracles wrought by him.

[f] St. Clara was in ſuch eſteem with God, that ſhe eaſily obtained whatever ſhe asked. From her very infancy, there appeared in her powerful ſigns of her future ſanctity; it was nothing but

[c] Theſe are Giry's words.

[d] He compoſed it in Latin, but a Jeſuit tranſlated it into French. It was printed at Liſle in 1655.

[e] We make uſe of F. Giry's very words.

[f] Words of F. Giry.

but praying, faſting, and giving alms in her early years, inſtead of playing like other children. All the ſaints have generally begun with theſe practices of devotion, to be convinced of which, one need only read their lives. But from her very infancy ſhe went farther, and wore a hair-cloth to mortify the fleſh, and to put a ſtop to all irregular motions and deſires, to which, it ſeems, they who intend to profeſs holineſs, are more expoſed than the reſt of mankind. In the heat of her pious exerciſes, ſhe was very ſeldom alone. One day a very beautiful child, with two ſhining wings flew into her lap, claſping her with them, and careſſing her with many fond endearments. Another time being indiſpoſed, and not able to go to matins, ſhe notwithſtanding heard the office diſtinctly, tho' ſung at a church very diſtant from the monaſtery, and what is wonderful, ſhe was ſo happy as to ſee the child Jeſus lying in his manger. At the moment of her death, he was ſeen near her attended by ſeveral virgins crowned with flowers. One of theſe virgins who wore a cloſe crown ſhining brighter than the ſun, drew near and embraced St. Clara. The reſt ſpread a carpet of ineſtimable value over her body. The daughters of this holy mother have inherited her virtues and auſterities, eſpecially the nuns of the Ave Mary; but they do not work miracles.

St. Barbara attended by two angels gave the communion to the little bleſſed Staniſlaus Koſtca lying very ill, during which he lodged with Heretics, who would not ſuffer the holy ſacrament to come into their houſe. We ſhall ſay nothing of the converſations he held with the virgin Mary, [g] his lady, his miſtreſs, and his good mother; nor of a great number of miracles by his interceſſion wrought after his death. At Staniſlaus's bare name devils have left the bodies they have been tormenting. [h] He brought almoſt as many to life as he had lived years (he lived 19.) and this great miracle is ſo common with him, that the thing is grown into a proverb in Poland, and it is an ordinary ſaying among the people, let us go to the bleſſed Staniſlaus who raiſes the dead. In 1673. the application of this young ſaint's image cured a young Jeſuit of 14. years of age at Lima, upon this condition, that he ſhould every day of his life ſay a Pater and an Ave in honour of the little Poliſh ſaint; that on the eve of his feſtival he ſhould live on bread and water, and ſhould once perform the ſpiritual exerciſes of St. Ignatius to the glory of his bleſſed ſon Staniſlaus. This ſhall ſuffice to give ſome knowledge of the ſaint. We ſhall now only advertiſe thoſe who are incommoded with palpitations, ſwellings, broken limbs, ſore-eyes, feavers, &c. [i] that a little wine wherein one of the ſaint's bones has been ſteeped, is a ſovereign remedy againſt all thoſe diſtempers.

[k] St. Roch patron of perſons infected with the plague, has diſtinguiſhed himſelf by ſeveral extraordinary cures. The dog with which he is painted, charitably fed the ſaint during a very violent plague.

The bleſſed Clara of Montefalco had the figure of Chriſt crucified, and all the inſtruments of his paſſion graved on her heart. Her repeated aſſertions of this miracle to the nuns of her convent emboldened them to ſee if it were true, and after her death, they divided her heart, and found it to be as ſhe had aſſured them.

St. Bridget raiſed ten dead perſons. What is ſtill more remarkable, Chriſt himſelf did not go near ſo far. Saint Thereſa appeared to ſeveral [l] after her death (which was cauſed by an exceſs of divine love) to inform them of the eminent degree of glory to which ſhe was raiſed. We omit her wonderful viſions, and the love-wound which a ſeraphim made in her heart with a golden arrow pointed with red hot ſteel.

St. Didacus

[g] Giry in the life of this ſaint. The firſt time the virgin Mary appeared to Staniſlaus, ſhe ordered him "to enter into the company of Jeſus, and put her ſon into his arms; as if ſhe intended that little Staniſlaus "ſhould have the pleaſure of carrying the little Jeſus ---, the virgin Mary came a ſecond time attended by "ſeveral bleſſed virgins, to conduct him to heaven." Taken from the opuſcula of father Bouhours, printed at Paris 1684.

[h] Opuſcula of F. Bouhours, p. 323.

[i] Id. Ibid.

[k] This ſaint was of Languedoc, a country full of vain boaſters. St. Roch muſt have been a great favourite of God, to have been able to keep clear of the ſame character.

[l] "F. Giry ſays, ſhe was ſo influenced with the ſacred fire of divine love --- that being no longer able "to bear up againſt it, ſhe ended her life in the midſt of the flames." She was carried off in fourteen hours.

St. Didacus cured the diſeaſed with the oil of a lamp burning before an image of our Lady. One day being deſtitute of food in a journey he was making with one of his companions to his convent, he offered up a prayer to God. Immediately they found a table ſpread before them on the graſs, and the entertainment was very tolerable.

St. Xavier during his miſſion to the Eaſt-Indies raiſed ſeveral to life. Being in the neighbourhood of Amboina, he calmed a tempeſt by plunging his crucifix into the ſea. In the heat of the action his crucifix ſlipped out of his hand, but an officious fiſh reſtored it to him in a moment, and took care in giving it to him to hold it upright, to ſhew the triumph of the croſs over the Infidels.

St. Thomas of Becket archbiſhop of Canterbury was amply rewarded for the violent death he ſuffered, by the many miracles he performed after his death, and which he even ſtill performs, if we may believe F. Giry. Scarce was this ſaint buried, but he declared himſelf the phyſician of a multitude of ſick perſons. We muſt obſerve, that as to reſurrections the ſaints of the latter ages go far beyond thoſe of the Apoſtle's days.

[m] The bleſſed Roſa was hardly quite five years old when by an expreſs vow ſhe conſecrated her virginity to God. " To hinder ſo fine a flower from loſing its ſcent and " beauty, ſhe, as it were, hedged it in with thorns and brambles, by preaching all ſorts " of auſterities ſhe was capable of from that moment. In ſo tender an age ---- ſhe " lived upon bread and water the three days in the week, which are conſecrated by the " moſt holy myſteries of Chriſtianity." F. Oliva very well obſerves, in his panegyric upon this ſaint, that mankind had an infinite loſs, in that God, inſtead of Eve, did not create Roſa in the terreſtrial paradiſe. The fondneſs ſhe ſhewed to ſuffering made her ingenious in ſearching the means of crucifying herſelf. This holy maid uſed to rub her cheeks and eyes with the [n] bark and powder of Indian pepper, that ſhe might not be obliged to go to balls, or appear in company. The ſharpneſs of the pepper, had a very different effect from the paints and coſmetics uſed by our modern worldly minded ladies, making her face bloated and full of ulcers. Beſides this, Roſa had the glory of finding out freſh methods every day, and of perpetually reproaching nature with the crime ſhe had been guilty of in making her ſo handſom. It is certain, that nothing is more ſhocking and inſupportable to ſaints of a myſtical conſtitution than this corporeal beauty. They moſt heartily relinquiſh it, and the pleaſures of ſenſe to the Devil.

The bleſſed Roſa, like Chriſt, multiplied loaves. She miraculouſly filled an empty veſſel with celeſtial honey, to eaſe her mother who was ſick. Her vocation has no inſtance like it. " As ſhe was going by ſaint Dominic's church, for whom ſhe had always had a particular " veneration, ſhe found herſelf inſpired to go in, in order to pay her laſt reſpects to the " image of our Lady of the roſary. She was no ſooner on her knees, than ſhe remained " immoveable, and as it were nailed down to the ground ---- aſtoniſhed at ſo amazing " a prodigy ---- ſhe promiſed the holy Virgin to become a nun of the third order of " ſaint Dominic ---- As ſoon as ſhe had ended her prayer, ſhe immediately and with- " out any difficulty, did that which ſhe had not been able to do in ſeveral hours, and " with great and redoubled efforts." Roſa, at her beginning a new life, thought herſelf obliged to invent new auſterities. She put a great chain, with which ſhe had long given herſelf diſcipline, three times round her waiſt, and not ſatisfied with wearing ſo gauling a girdle, ſhe faſtened it with a padlock, and threw the key into a well. She long bore the pains this chain gave her; but was at length forced to ſeek eaſe, and human means failing, ſhe addreſſed herſelf to the bleſſed Virgin, who at once opened the lock. The bleſſed Roſa thinking her lodgings at her mother's too good, reſolved to build herſelf a ſorry hut at the end of the garden. She was ſoon attacked by an army of gnats, and as they interrupted her meditations, ſhe thought proper to make peace with them; and theſe were the conditions of the treaty. The gnats were allowed to ſhelter themſelves

[m] Panegyric of the bleſſed Roſa by F. Oliva in Bouhours's Opuſcula.
[n] She was of Lima, the capital of Peru.

themſelves in the cell during exceſſive heat or cold: and they on their ſide ſtipulated not to moleſt Roſa any more, and even to retire, as ſoon as ſhe found any inconvenience from them. This peace was near a rupture by the imprudence of a nun, who was viſiting Roſa. For this curious paſſage we ſhall refer to F. Oliva's fine panegyric; but we cannot omit obſerving, that the largeſt trees in the garden bent down their branches, nay and trunks too, when Roſa paſſed by them to her cell.

The MANNER of a Perſon's DEVOTING himſelf to SAINTS, &c.

[o]THIS was formerly a cuſtom much in vogue, and is ſtill practiſed in ſeveral Catholic countries. [p] A yearly tribute was paid to the ſaint choſen as patron, and the vaſſal often bound himſelf and his whole poſterity, or at leaſt his children. We ſhall give an extract of the form of ſuch ſpiritual engagement. It is of the year 1030.

IN THE NAME OF THE HOLY TRINITY.

" JGHISLA born at Ghent, of free parents, convinced by the example and exhortations of the ſaints, that humility is the chief of all Chriſtian virtues, have reſolved to ſet an example of this humility by devoting myſelf, body and mind, " to the ſervice of ſome one of them, to the end, that under his protection, and with " his aſſiſtance I may partake of the divine mercy. To this effect, I devote as well my " ſelf as my poſterity, to ſaint Gertrude, whom I have choſen as patroneſs of me and my " family, to the end, that by this our voluntary ſervice we may obtain the remiſſion of " our ſins. In witneſs whereof, I do hereby promiſe and grant for me and my poſterity to " pay annually at the high-altar of St. Gertrude the ſum of ---- and leſt any one ſhould " preſume to violate our engagement, ſentence of anathema has been publiſhed in the " church of Nivelles againſt all and ſingular, who ſhall violate the ſame; to the end, that they may periſh with Dathan and Abiram. Done at Nivelles in the preſence of witneſſes in the year of grace 1030.

There are other ways of devoting and engaging one's ſelf in the ſervice of any ſaint, and the ſigns of ſuch religious ſervice are a chain about the neck, or round the arm, [q] and which muſt never be left off ſo long as the perſon lives. This is the cuſtom ſtill obſerved to this day by the ſervants of the virgin Mary, according to the [r] author quoted at the bottom of the page. In an age more devout than the preſent, a Chriſtian Prince would have made his dominions tributary to ſome ſaint, which was formerly the practice. But times are now changed, and no Prince of our days carries his devotion ſo far as even to conſent to be a vaſſal to the church. The ſaint to whom a man had granted the revenue of his eſtate, thereby acquired houſes, lands, and a conſiderable income, which the monks and the reſt of the clergy took care to improve for him; but the preſent race of Chriſtians are grown a little cool on this occaſion. We find a ceremony in the fourteenth century performed by the devotee at giving his goods to the church. He takes a knife with a handle to it, and a turf of earth, in which is planted the branch of a tree. Theſe three things he offered his patron ſaint, or rather to the monks or [o] This cuſtom was introduced in the ninth or tenth century.

[p] Taken out of the Life of St. Gertrude, written in Latin by Ryckel, and printed in 1637.

[q] Two decrees of the holy office at Rome made in 1673. condemn all fraternities of ſlavery to the virgin, and forbid the uſe of chains, images, and medals repreſenting the ſame, and all books treating of that kind of devotion. In the cuts of ſuch books are ſeen men with chains falling from Chriſt, the pyx, the virgin Mary, St. Joſeph, &c. It is this pretended ſpiritual captivity which is termed ſlavery.

[r] Ryckel ubi ſupra.

other eccleſiaſtics, who were the ſaint's agents. The turf repreſented all immoveable goods, the branch the fruits of the earth, and the handled knife all moveables.

The ſaints have their offices and Litanies in the church. Theſe Litanies aſcribe to the ſaint ſuch praiſes as belong to him, and give the pious an exact idea of his power.

It is common for devotees to prefer the ſaint their patron to all the other ſaints of paradiſe, and put all their concerns into his hands, without giving themſelves much trouble about the reſt of his brethren, &c. " [f] They imagine, that God has granted " their ſaint particular privileges, certainly and infallibly to obtain of him all ſorts of " favours both ſpiritual and temporal they ſhall aſk, thro' his interceſſion, without giv- " ing themſelves any pain about repentance, or fulfilling God's will." This exceſs of devotion addreſſed to a particular ſaint leads to other exceſſes.

" Some, ſays the author we laſt cited, believe, that by their devotion to St. Barbara, " in ſeveral places called The Mother of Confeſſion, they ſhall not die without confeſſion, " however they may have lived.

" Others pay their devotions to St. Chriſtopher, and fancy, that by looking at his image " in a morning, they ſhall not die that day, nor the following night -----

" To find ſtolen, loſt, or ſtrayed goods, many devotees perſuade themſelves they need " only be devout to St. Anthony of Padua, and ſay [g] the eighth reſponſe of the matins of " his feſtival in honour of him.

" Many others flatter themſelves, that by repeating for a whole year the little crown " of St. Anne, God will at the year's end infallibly grant them one of the three things " they ſhall aſk of him.

This is ſufficient to give an idea of ſome exceſſes in the devotion to ſaints.

DEVOTION to the BLESSED VIRGIN.

THE church in its Litanies calls the holy Virgin the Mother of God, the Queen of Angels, the Refuge of Sinners, the Mother of Mercy, the Gate of Heaven, the Myſtic Roſe; the Virgin of Virgins, &c. M. Thiers, [h] in the work we have already quoted, uſes conſiderable reſtrictions in the ideas which thoſe epithets may raiſe in pious perſons; he chiefly dwells upon that of Refuge of Sinners, which perſuades a multitude of people, that a regular devotion to this Mother of Mercy, is always and at all times a preſervative againſt eternal damnation. But the notion and arguments of this celebrated divine will be no law or rule of faith as to devotion. By diminiſhing the pretended exceſs he finds in that to the virgin Mary and ſaints, the piety of great numbers might be diminiſhed, who ſincerely believe, that things are managed in heaven as they are here below, and that we muſt go thro' the ſaints to God. They likewiſe imagine that the ſaints are a whimſical, fickle, touchy ſort of folks, that admiſſion to them is difficult, and that they may be gained, and prejudiced in favour of particular perſons. They are afraid their promiſes may be as ineffectual as thoſe of courtiers here; which the vulgar call Court holy water. In ſhort, there are ſome of the devotees who regulate the government of heaven upon the foot of their own family, ſo confined and narrow is the ſphere of their piety. Are not the irregularities to be found in the devotion of thoſe who have ſuch ideas to be pardoned, and is it to be taken amiſs for people to ſtick to the practices of devotion which F. Bary preſcribes to people of weak underſtandings in his paradiſe opened to Philagia? He aſſures us, it is open " to ſuch who keep in their " chambers, or carry about them an image of the virgin, and look ſteadfaſtly at it, ---- " who night and morning beg a bleſſing of her, ſtanding near ſome of the churches de- " dicated

[f] Thiers concerning the moſt neceſſary of all devotions, chap. xxiii.

[g] Si quæris miracula, mors, error, calamitas, dæmon, lepra fugiunt, ægri ſurgunt ſani, cedunt mare, vincula; membar, reſque perditas petunt, &c.

[h] Chap. xxiii.

" dicated to her, or give to the poor for her ſake ---- who out of reſpect avoid pro-
" nouncing her name in reading, but uſe ſome other inſtead of it ---- who beg of the " angels to ſalute the mother of God in their name, who give her images honourable names,
" and caſt amorous glances at them," &c.

There is no title of honour but what the divines of the church, and eſpecially thoſe of latter ages, have beſtowed on the virgin Mary. Having robbed Paganiſm of every thing that was moſt auguſt and glittering to beſtow it on the mother of our Saviour, they have continued to invent ſplendid names which even the fruitful fancy of poets were never capable of deviſing. The hereſies againſt her inſenſibly produced an exceſs of reſpect and devotion to her. In the firſt ages of the church ſhe was called Queen of Angels, and Mother of God; afterwards the diſputes ariſing on her account, made her champions advance every thing that could make her conſiderable againſt Heretics, and accuſtomed her devotees to immoderate expreſſions, but yet very natural in diſputes. She was looked upon as the diſpenſer and depoſitary of God's favours, the treaſurer and even Queen of Heaven, the Spring of ſalvation and life, the Gate of paradiſe, the Mother of light, and Mediator between God and man; the Hope of mankind, [w] the Ocean of the divinity. Writers of note have ſtiled her [x] Goddeſs, and towards the end of the 16. century, Father Salazar declared her the [y] Accompliſhment of the Trinity. Long before that declaration, [z] the pſalter, and whole bible too had been applied to her, and it had been proved by miracles and apparitions, that the bleſſed Virgin appeaſes CHRIST's wrath againſt ſinners; [a] that ſhe can abſolve, and has the power of binding and looſing. We ſhall ſay nothing of the temples and altars all along conſecrated to her for many ages, of the vows and prayers addreſſed to her, of the works by devout writers publiſhed under her patronage, of the poetry and other pieces of wit compoſed in honour of her; nor laſtly, of the theological [b] writings under her name.

The firſt and chief of the ſorts of devotion to the Virgin is, that whereby we imitate her virtues: but this is ſomewhat difficult. Theſe other are what all devotees may eaſily practiſe. The Jeſuit, who publiſhed the Pſalter of our Lady in French recommends to the good Chriſtian who ſays theſe words at the beginning of it, Holy Lady open thou my lips, &c. " to make two ſigns of the croſs in ſaying them; one upon his lips with " his thumb, and the other upon himſelf with his hand, as the prieſts do at beginning
" their canonical hours." He aſſures us, that this method will procure the devotee the honour and happineſs of being canon, or canoneſs of heaven, and that our Lady will admit him into paradiſe, as a reward of ſo edifying a piety. He gives us a pattern for the vows the devotee is to make " for Jeſus and Mary, and for all lovers of Jeſus and
" Mary of every ſex," he deſcribes the alliance to be made by him with the moſt amiable and honourable mother of all mothers, the act of contrition in order to reconcile himſelf with her, and all the great and ſmall practices, whereby he may devote himſelf to the bleſſed Virgin.

Whoever

[w] F. Binet a Jeſuit ſays, that from the Virgin's womb, as from an ocean of divinity, flow the ſprings and rivers of all graces.

[x] Numbers of celebrated writers have ſtiled the Virgin, Goddeſs; whereon may be conſulted the diſputes between the biſhop of Bellay and Mr. Drelincourt upon the honour due to her. Almoſt an abſolute and ſovereign power over her Son our Saviour has been attributed to her; nor has this thought been diſagreable to the church, witneſs the hymn wherein are theſe verſes:

O felix puerpera,
Noſtra pians ſcelera,
Jure matris impera
Redemptori.

[y] In Proverb. Salom.

[z] The Pſalter of our Lady is aſcribed to St. Bonaventure, and the Bible to Albert the Great.

[a] St. Antoninus archbiſhop of Florence.

[b] The Polyanthea Mariana, the Mariale, the Floſculi Mariani, the Stellarium Coronæ beatæ Virginis, the Faſti Mariani, &c. In the Menagiana, p 281. of the 2. Tom. of the continuation, Ed. Holl. 1713. we find that a Monk took it into his head to compoſe a vaſt work in folio, under the title of Summa Deiparæ; that two or three thouſand new queſtions concerning the virgin Mary were therein treated, and that the good friar exactly followed St. Thomas's method in his Summa Theologiæ. Juſt as St. Thomas examines this queſtion whether there be a God, ſo the Monk enquired whether there be a virgin, &c.

Whoever intends to draw down the benedictions of the Virgin [c] upon him, muſt ſalute her every day both at going in and out. The legends have handed down to us ſeveral memorable inſtances of benefits produced by Ave Maries; not to mention the thouſand days indulgence granted by ſeveral [d] Popes to ſuch as ſhall ſay it at the hour of the Angelus. It were therefore to be wiſhed, that the Chriſtians of this age were more exact in the practice of this kind of devotion, and would imitate St. Margarite of Hungary, who repeated an Ave kneeling before all the images of the virgin ſhe met with in her way; or ſaint Catharine of Sienna, who ſaid as many Aves as ſhe went up ſteps to her houſe. Theſe remarks may ſuffice as to private devotions. Nor ſhall we ſay any thing of faſting on Saturday in honour of the virgin Mary, unleſs that it is a treaſure of indulgences and delights, and that we are aſſured it is an excellent preſervative againſt eternal damnation.

FESTIVALS inſtituted in honour of OUR LADY.

WE ſhall conclude by a popular or rather ſuperſtitious devotion, we mean the cuſtom of dreſſing our Lady in a pompous manner, of crowning her on her feſtival, and other ſolemn days, of lighting up one or more tapers before her images, and preſenting her with fruits and flowers. The common people do the ſame honour to the reſt of the ſaints. The leaſt offering they think they can make is a taper or candle.

And we ſhall follow the ſame order, in which the church celebrates thoſe feſtivals. The Purification of our Lady is ſolemnized the 2. of February. This feſtival was anciently called the feaſt of St. Simeon and St. Anne, theſe two holy perſons happening luckily to meet in the temple at the ſame time the bleſſed Virgin went thither to offer JESUS CHRIST to God. For the ſame reaſon the Grecians have called it Hypapante or meeting. It is now-a-days known to the church only under the name of the Purification of our Lady, and to the people under that of Candlemas, on account of the proceſſion then made round the church with tapers.

[c] This feſtival was appointed in the room of the Amburbales or proceſſions, which the Romans celebrated at the beginning of February, in honour of the Goddeſs Februa, and of their nocturnal courſes with flambeaux, to repreſent thoſe of Ceres, when ſhe wandered about the country in ſearch of her daughter Proſerpina, whom Pluto had run away with. Thoſe devotional practices amongſt the Romans were real ſources of debauchery, for which reaſon the Roman Pontifs reſolving to remove thoſe ſnares of Heathen ſuperſtition, were obliged to give the people an equivalent to make up for the loſs of this ſolemnity, which in reality was no act of religion in regard to Chriſtians. Therefore the luſtrations of the month of February were conſecrated; and thence came our Candlemas. For the Virgin's ſake the people carried the ſame flambeaux or tapers they had formerly carried for the ſake of Februa and Ceres. They being allowed to mix with their devotion thoſe diverſions and pleaſures, which feſtivals never fail inſpiring them with. [f] The Candlemas tapers are bleſſed with the uſual ceremonies. [g] The biſhop or his vicar diſtributes them to the chief of the clergy, then to the chief of the laity, prieſts, acolytes, &c. and laſtly, to the reſt of the beſt faſhion preſent. [h] A canon ſomewhat advanced in

[a] Suffren. in his Ann. Chr.

[b] The inſtitution of this feſtival is by ſome aſcribed to St. Gelaſius, who lived in 492. by others to P. Vigilius, who ſay, he only revived it about the middle of the ſixth century. P. Sergius, who flouriſhed towards the cloſe of the ſeventh century is, according to ſome writers, the founder of the proceſſion with tapers. Il mua, ſays the old legend, la contume des paiens en meilleure: c'eſt à ſçavoir, que les Chriſtiens environnaſſent l'Egliſe a clerges benits & alumès en l'honneur de la mere de Dieu; ſi que cette ſolemnitè tint, & qu'elle fut faite à autre intention.

[d] Leo X. and Paul V.

[f] The vulgar fancy theſe tapers have the power of driving away demons, and preſerving from their temptations.

[g] Cerem. Epiſc. Lib. II.

[h] A ſeniore dignitate, Cerem. Epiſc. Ibid.

in years, diſtributes them to the women of condition, but as to the common people, as ſoon as the large tapers are diſtributed to perſons of the higheſt diſtinction, only the ſmall ones remain to be diſtributed to them [i] by an ordinary prieſt, without diſtinction of age or ſex.

[k] The proceſſion is made round the church, as we have already obſerved. The fingers are at the head of it, the thuriferary follows, the ceroferaries walk after them on each ſide the croſs-bearer, and after them the clergy. They who are on the right, carry their tapers in their right hands, and they on the left, in their left. Then comes the biſhop between two deacons aſſiſtants, carrying a taper in his left hand, and with his right, beſtowing his bleſſing on his flock. They all carry burning tapers, and the reaſon given for it is, That they [l] repreſent JESUS CHRIST, the light of the world. "They kneel at "the altar before they ſet out, but if they be canons, and there be no tabernacle, they "only bow to it." The repreſentation of theſe Candlemas ceremonies may be ſeen in the cut of the Eaſter ceremonies.

On the 25. of March is celebrated the Annunciation of the bleſſed Virgin. This feſtival is earlier than the third century.

The 2. of July is the Viſitation. St. Bonaventure, general of the order of the Minors appointed this feſtival to be kept throughout the order in 1263. In 1389. Pope Urban VI. by his bull made this feaſt extend to the whole church: which the council of Baſil confirmed, and fixed the day of it on the ſecond of July. St. Francis de Sales and mother Jane de Chantal, have founded an order of nuns in memory of the viſitation of the Virgin.

Our Lady of mount Carmel has her feſtival the 16. of July, which more particularly concerns ſuch as pay their devotion to the ſcapulary.

The feaſt of our Lady of the Snows is on the 5. of Auguſt. We are aſſured, that a miracle gave riſe to the ſolemnity. [m] In the pontificate of Liberius, a patrician or Roman nobleman finding he was old and childleſs, reſolved with one accord with his wife to make the bleſſed Virgin his univerſal heir. The vow was made with much devotion; the only concern now was to employ the inheritance in ſuch manner as ſhould be agreable to our Lady: and to know her pleaſure therein, they faſt, pray, relieve the poor, and viſit the ſick. At length the Virgin appeared to each in a dream, and told them "it was her's and her ſon's pleaſure, that they ſhould employ thoſe goods in building "her a church on a certain part of the Mons Eſquilinus, which they ſhould find covered "with ſnow." The devout husband firſt communicated the revelation to his wife, who thereupon in a ſurpriſe told him, that that very night ſhe had had the ſame revelation; but had not the two dreams been alike, an exceſs of zeal would have been enough to have given them all requiſite conformity. The two good people went and declared their dreams to the Pope, who found himſelf a third man in the revelation, for the holy Father had had the ſame viſion. [n] It was no longer doubted, but heaven had a hand in the affair. The Pope had the clergy aſſembled, there was a proceſſion to mount Eſquiline in order to ſee if the miracle were real, and the place pointed out in the dream was found covered with ſnow. The ground was juſt of a ſuitable extent to build a church on, [o] which was afterwards called Liberius's Baſilica, and St. Mary ad præſepe, becauſe the manger, which ſerved our Lady as a cradle, was brought thither from Bethlehem, and is now called St. Mary Major. Every feſtival-day the memory of this miracle is revived, by letting fall white jeſſamin leaves in ſo artificial a manner as to imitate the falling of ſnow on the ground.

On the 15. of Auguſt the Aſſumption of our Lady is celebrated, but it is not reckoned earlier than the ſixth century: before which time, there had been no revelation of the Aſſumption of the Virgin, ſoul and body to heaven.

[i] Aliquis de capitulo diſtribuit candelas minutiores populo utriuſque ſexûs, Cerem. Ep.
[k] Cerem. Epiſc. Ibid.
[l] Alet's Ritual.
[m] Giry's Lives of the Saints.
[n] Id. Ibid.
[o] Idem. Ibidem.

The eighth of September is appointed for The Nativity of our Lady, and is a feſtival unknown till the ſeventh century; but in the twelfth, Innocent IV. made it univerſal.

The ſeventh of October is conſecrated to the ſolemnity of the Roſary, of which we ſhall treat under that head.

Father Giry aſſures us, [p] that "from the moment of the bleſſed Virgin's appearance "in the world, ſhe preſented herſelf before God to be his perpetual ſervant. The ſa-"crifice of her mind and heart was earlier than her birth; that ſhe offered in her mo-"ther's womb." However, it is not that private offering herſelf, that the church ſolemniſes the 24. of November; but her conſecration to God by her parents St. Joachim and St. Anne. This feſtival came firſt from the Eaſt, and began to be eſtabliſhed in Europe towards the cloſe of the fourteenth century.

The Conception of our Lady is celebrated by the church on the 8. of December, and is called Immaculate, it being pretended that the bleſſed Virgin was conceived without ſin. This Feſtival of the Conception is of earlier date among the Greeks than with the Latins, and began to be taken notice of in Europe in the beginning of the twelfth century. Pope Sixtus IV. who had been a cordelier, and conſequently a defender of the immaculate conception, authoriſed this feſtival by his bull in the fifteenth.

On the 18. of December is celebrated the feſtival of our Lady of the O, or of the delivery of the Virgin. It was inſtituted in Spain, during the pontificate of Vitalian towards the middle of the ſeventh century. It is likewiſe called the feſtival for expecting the birth of our Lord. The name of our Lady of the O, is derived to it from the anthems called the O's, on account of the exclamation O being often repeated. By thoſe anthems, the church invites the eternal Wiſdom to come down on earth.

In Italy and Spain, nine days are allowed for expecting the Nativity in memory of the nine months pregnancy of the bleſſed Virgin: [q] during which time, the altar is adorned in a proper manner, and the image of our Lady thereon expoſed.

Formerly the Feſtival of the Virgin's Eſpouſals were ſolemniſed. It is ſaid to have been inſtituted in France in the year 1532, and that the ſolemnization was fixed on the 12. of January.

PLACES famous for the WORSHIP of OUR LADY, or for her MIRACLES.

IT is pretended, that [r] the Apoſtle St. Peter himſelf dedicated a chapel to the Mother of God: but it is allowable to doubt it.

The Spaniards ſay, that St James being at Saragoſſa, the bleſſed Virgin appeared to him, and that thereupon that holy Apoſtle cauſed a chapel to be built to her, which was afterwards called Neuſtra Sennora del Pilar. Some annaliſts ſay, [s] that the angels themſelves were the architects of the chapel. The bleſſed Virgin ſplendidly dreſt, reſides there upon a marble pillar, holding a young Jeſus in her arms. Several ſilver angels ſurround her with flambeaux, not to mention fifty ſilver lamps and a great number of branches of the ſame metal, with tapers burning night and day before her. The walls of this ſacred place are hung [t] with the figures of feet, hands, arms, legs, hearts, &c. offered by the pious to the bleſſed Virgin, as an acknowledgment of the miraculous cures wrought by her on thoſe parts.

Our Lady of Atocha is at Madrid [u] in a chapel blazing with an hundred gold and ſilver lamps. She there performs as many miracles as at Saragoſſa, Loretto, &c. Our Lady

[p] Vie des Saints.
[q] Piſcara Prax. Cerem. Lib. III. Sect. 1.
[r] Ralph. Volat.
[s] Etat de l'Eſpagne, Tom. I.
[t] The ancient Heathens, as well Greeks as Romans, had the ſame cuſtom from a principle of acknowledgment to their Gods, to whom they thought themſelves obliged for any cure. The cuſtom of offering thoſe parts of the body ſuppoſed to be cured, in gold or ſilver, to our Lady or any other ſaint, is very common in Flanders, Brabant and Picardy.
[u] Id. Ibid.

Lady of Atocha generally wears widow's weeds, and has a chapelet in her hands; but yet with all this devout attire ſhe is crowned with a ſun, and on ſolemn feſtivals is dreſſed like a Queen in all her finery, and in all her jewels.

It is now ſix hundred years ſince our Lady ſettled at Lieſſe in Picardy. During the cruſades a Princeſs of Egypt, having heard talk of the bleſſed Virgin's miracles, was reſolved to have an image of her, and to that end addreſſed herſelf to three gentlemen of Picardy, that were priſoners at Cairo. None of them knew how to paint, and yet one of them had courage enough to engage to paint the image. Having endeavoured to no purpoſe to acquit himſelf of his promiſe, by the help of an art which he did not underſtand, he addreſſed himſelf to the bleſſed Virgin. His two companions joined their prayers to his, after which they all fell aſleep. Upon waking they found a fine image of our Lady, which they ſent the Princeſs, who in return for their preſent, gave the three priſoners their liberty. The reſt of the hiſtory we omit, we ſhall only acquaint the reader, that the Princeſs, converted to Chriſtianity by the means of this image, and the three gentlemen who by their prayers had obtained it from heaven, miraculouſly eſcaped out of Egypt, and by a continuation of the ſame miracle, found themſelves of a ſudden in Picardy, on the ſame ſpot of ground where the church of our Lady of Lieſſe is now built.

Our Lady of Neubourg would always have remained unknown, if the piety of Mark d'Aviano, a Capuchin Father, had not recalled the zealots back to her. The 40. years indignation of this good frier to ſee our Lady wholly forgotten, drew upon him the miraculous regards of the image; of which ſeveral devout old women were ocular witneſſes, nor is it ſtrange.

Our Lady of Monte de la guardia, five miles from Bolonia, is not at all indebted to the foregoing images. Her image painted by St. Luke is carried in proceſſion three days ſucceſſively every year in the city of Boulogne.

We ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak of Our Lady of Loretto in the ſequel of this Diſſertation: but ſhall only juſt name our Lady of Mont-Serrat in Catalonia, of Hal and Aſpremont in Flanders and Brabant, of Pity at Naples, of Cures in Gaſcony, &c. The miracles wrought by her in all theſe places are almoſt innumerable. Nor is it eaſier to reckon up thoſe [w] of her images. In conſequence of the miracles wrought by them, the devout are to carry repreſentations of our Lady about them, adorn her images with flowers, dreſs them in ſilk, or other coſtly ſtuffs, burn tapers before them, kiſs and ogle them, touch them with their chaplets; rub their handkerchiefs on them, &c. and ſalute them with reſpect.

Relics of the Blessed Virgin.

ONLY the relics of the bleſſed Virgin now remain to ſpeak of. We have almoſt all her hair, as to her milk, we are aſſured, that not one drop of it was ever loſt, and that relics were made of it immediately after our Saviour's birth. Some of it is to be ſeen in ſeveral parts of Chriſtendom. Our Lady's wedding ring is preſerved with great veneration at Perouſe. The fate and miracles of this ring are deſcribed in [x] a book printed in the beginning of the ſeventeenth century. The bleſſed Virgin's clothes are to be ſeen at Rome and elſewhere; her ſhifts at Chartres and Aix la Chapelle, one of her handkerchiefs at Treves; her girdles at our Lady of Mont-Serrat, at Prato, &c. one of her combs at Rome, another at Bezançon, her ſhoes at our Lady of Puy, and at St. Flour; one of her ſlippers in Brittany. [y] The meaſure of her foot is in the hands of the Spaniards.

[w] Of theſe images ſome are of a wonderful origin. Our Lady of Banelle, for inſtance, was found in the middle of an oak.

[x] De annulo pronubo Deiparæ Virginis, autore J. Bapt. Lauro, Colon. 1626.

[y] La Medidad del piè ſanctiſſimo de Nueſtra Sennora. Pope John XXII. gave 700. years indulgences, and a pretty full remiſſion of ſins to the devotee who ſhould thrice kiſs the holy meaſure, and ſay three Aves in honour of it.

Spaniards. In a word, it is not to be doubted but all the ſeveral pieces of her goods, kitchen furniture, her toilette, and the furniture of her houſe, have been carefully preſerved. Her gloves, headclothes, veils, bed, chair, the ſtones whereon ſhe waſhed our Lord's ſwadling-clothes; her candles, the oil for her lamp, and her earthen utenſils are ſtill to be ſeen. Indeed it is true, that theſe things were loſt for ſeveral ages; but the monks have had the good luck to find them one after another. We have no [z] relic of her body left us, that being taken up into heaven, as we have already obſerved.

The JUBILEE.

THE jubilee is of origin half Jewiſh, half Pagan. Amongſt the Jews, it procured liberty to ſlaves, to the poor an acquittance from their debts, and the recovery of their goods to ſuch whom neceſſity had engaged to pawn them. The very ground reſted during the year of the Jewiſh jubilee. By the Chriſtian, of which the former was no more than a type, the Pope grants the like privileges to Chriſtian ſouls. To them it is a year of reſt. His Holineſs frees them from ſin, relieves the ſpiritual poverty of the penitent by opening to it [a] the treaſures of the divine mercy, remits its debts and reſtores it to the poſſeſſion of celeſtial goods. On the other hand, it ſeems as if the jubilee was deſigned to ſucceed the Ludi Sæculares or ſecular games of the Romans, and that in order to divert the Chriſtians from this Pagan ceremony, it was the intention of Boniface VIII. to ſubſtitute a better, accompanied with ſeveral ſhining acts of piety. It was he who had the firſt grand jubilee celebrated.

Pope Boniface VIII. [b] when he inſtituted this grand jubilee, expreſly declared by his bull, that ſuch as ſhould in the year 1300. and every hundred years afterwards, viſit the baſilica's of St. Peter and St. Paul, after confeſſing and ſincerely repenting them of their ſins, ſhould obtain an entire remiſſion of them, together with indulgences as extenſive as were poſſible to be granted to repenting ſinners. It does not appear, ſays M. Turtin [c], that this Pope had the leaſt regard to the Jewiſh jubilee, ſince he not only did not give it the name of jubilee, but on the contrary doubled the time preſcribed the Jews. But it was not the ſame thing as to Clement VI. This Pope called that inſtitution the jubilee, and ordered it to be celebrated every fifty years.

Several Roman Catholic writers have found ſome conformity between the jubilee of Chriſtians, and the ſecular games of the ancient Romans. We ſhall cite [d] two paſſages on this ſubject, without pretending however to ſay any thing againſt the ceremony of the jubilee. The evil lies not in the relation between a practice eſtabliſhed in a falſe religion, and one adopted into the true; but in the abuſe and ſuperſtition, to which views of intereſt and ambition unavoidably lead.

Onuphrius formally and expreſly compares the jubilee to the ſecular games. "An "expiation for the ſins of Rome was made in them, men were regenerated and promiſed "to lead a better life; our jubilee grants us a general pardon of our ſins." M. Turtin in his Diſſertation furniſhes us matter, whereby to make an exact compariſon of theſe two ceremonies. We ſhall quote what he ſays. "Both the one and the other muſt be "ſought for at Rome. The ſecular games were ſolemnly publiſhed as now-a-days the "jubilee [z] Milk and hair, properly ſpeaking, are not relics of the bleſſed Virgin's body. [a] Indulgences.

[b] The character given to this Pope in hiſtory, makes it a reaſonable preſumption, that he inſtituted the jubilee to heap up wealth, and to give a luſtre to the papal dignity. Cloathed in his pontifical robes the firſt day of his jubilee, he, as the common father of all Chriſtians, gave the people his benediction; but the next day he preſented himſelf as Emperor, inveſted with the ornaments of empire. His Holineſs had even a naked ſword carried before him; and to ſhew his double power the vicar of JESUS CHRIST, ſeated on his throne cried out, behold two ſwords. Albert Krantz cited by M. Turtin in his Diſſertation upon the Ludi Sæculares.

[c] Diſſert. de Ludis Sæcularibus.

[d] Polyd. Virgil, in his treatiſe De Rer. Invent. ſays, that this Pope inſtituted the jubilee to divert the Chriſtians from the ſuperſtition of the ſecular games. The Cardinal of Pavia ſpeaking of the jubilee in a letter he writ to Pope Paul II. calls it an imitation of the ancient ſuperſtition (antiquæ vanitatis.)

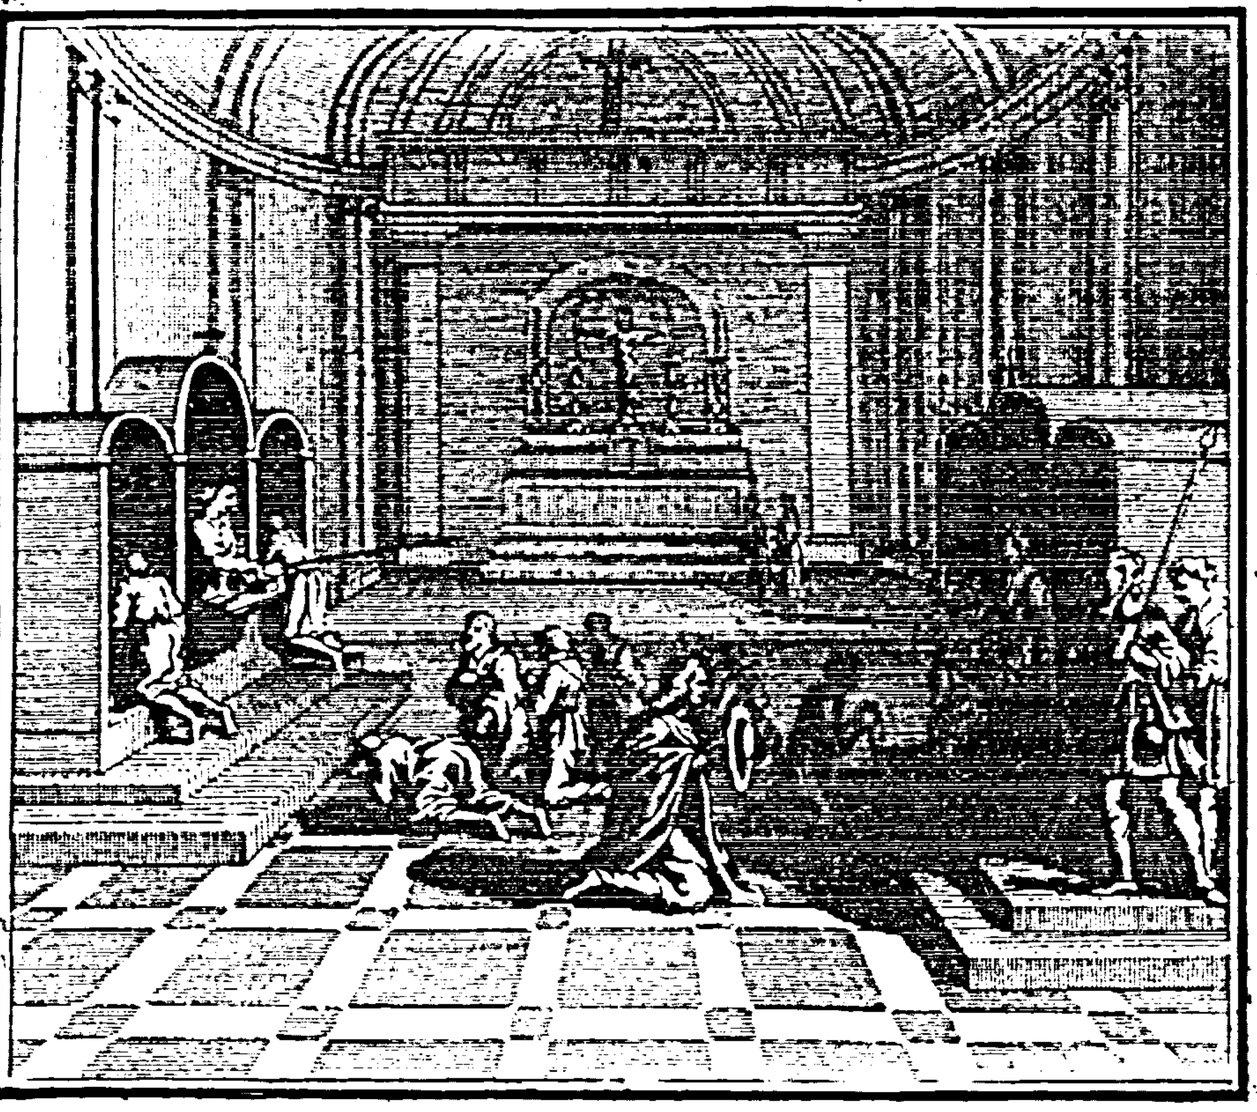
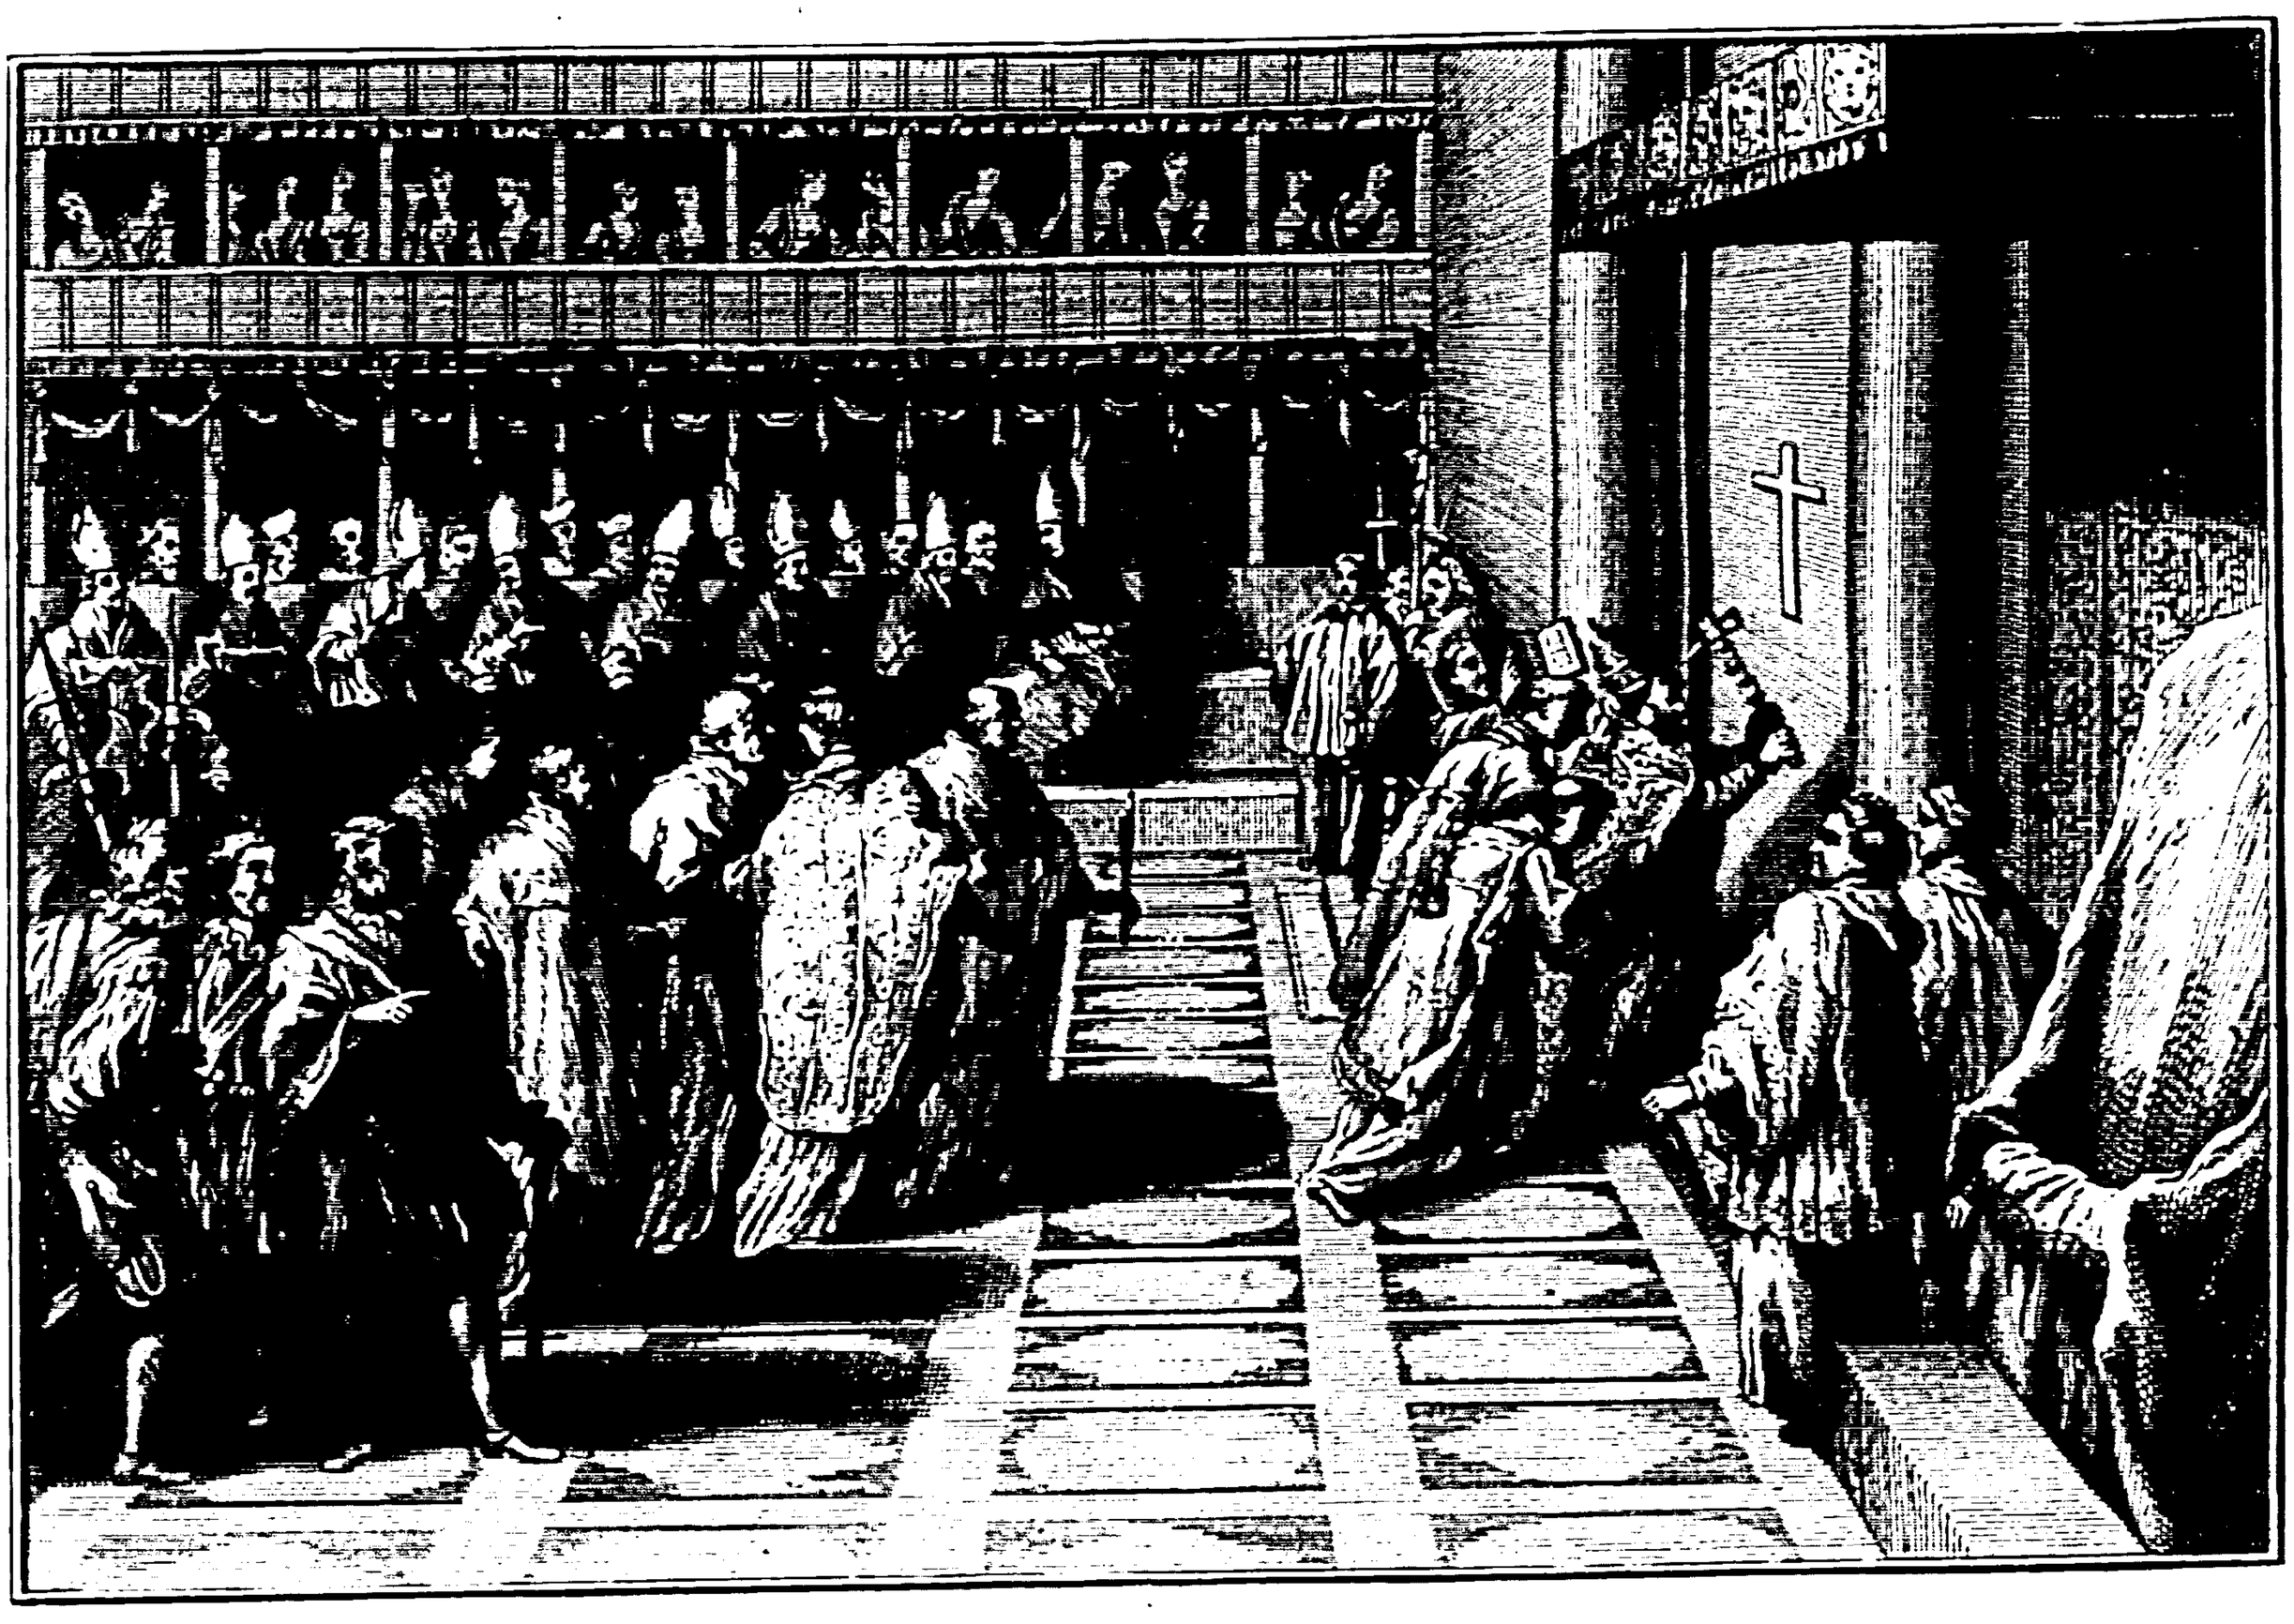
La proclamation du JUBILÉ au son des trompettes dans l'église de S.t PIERRE

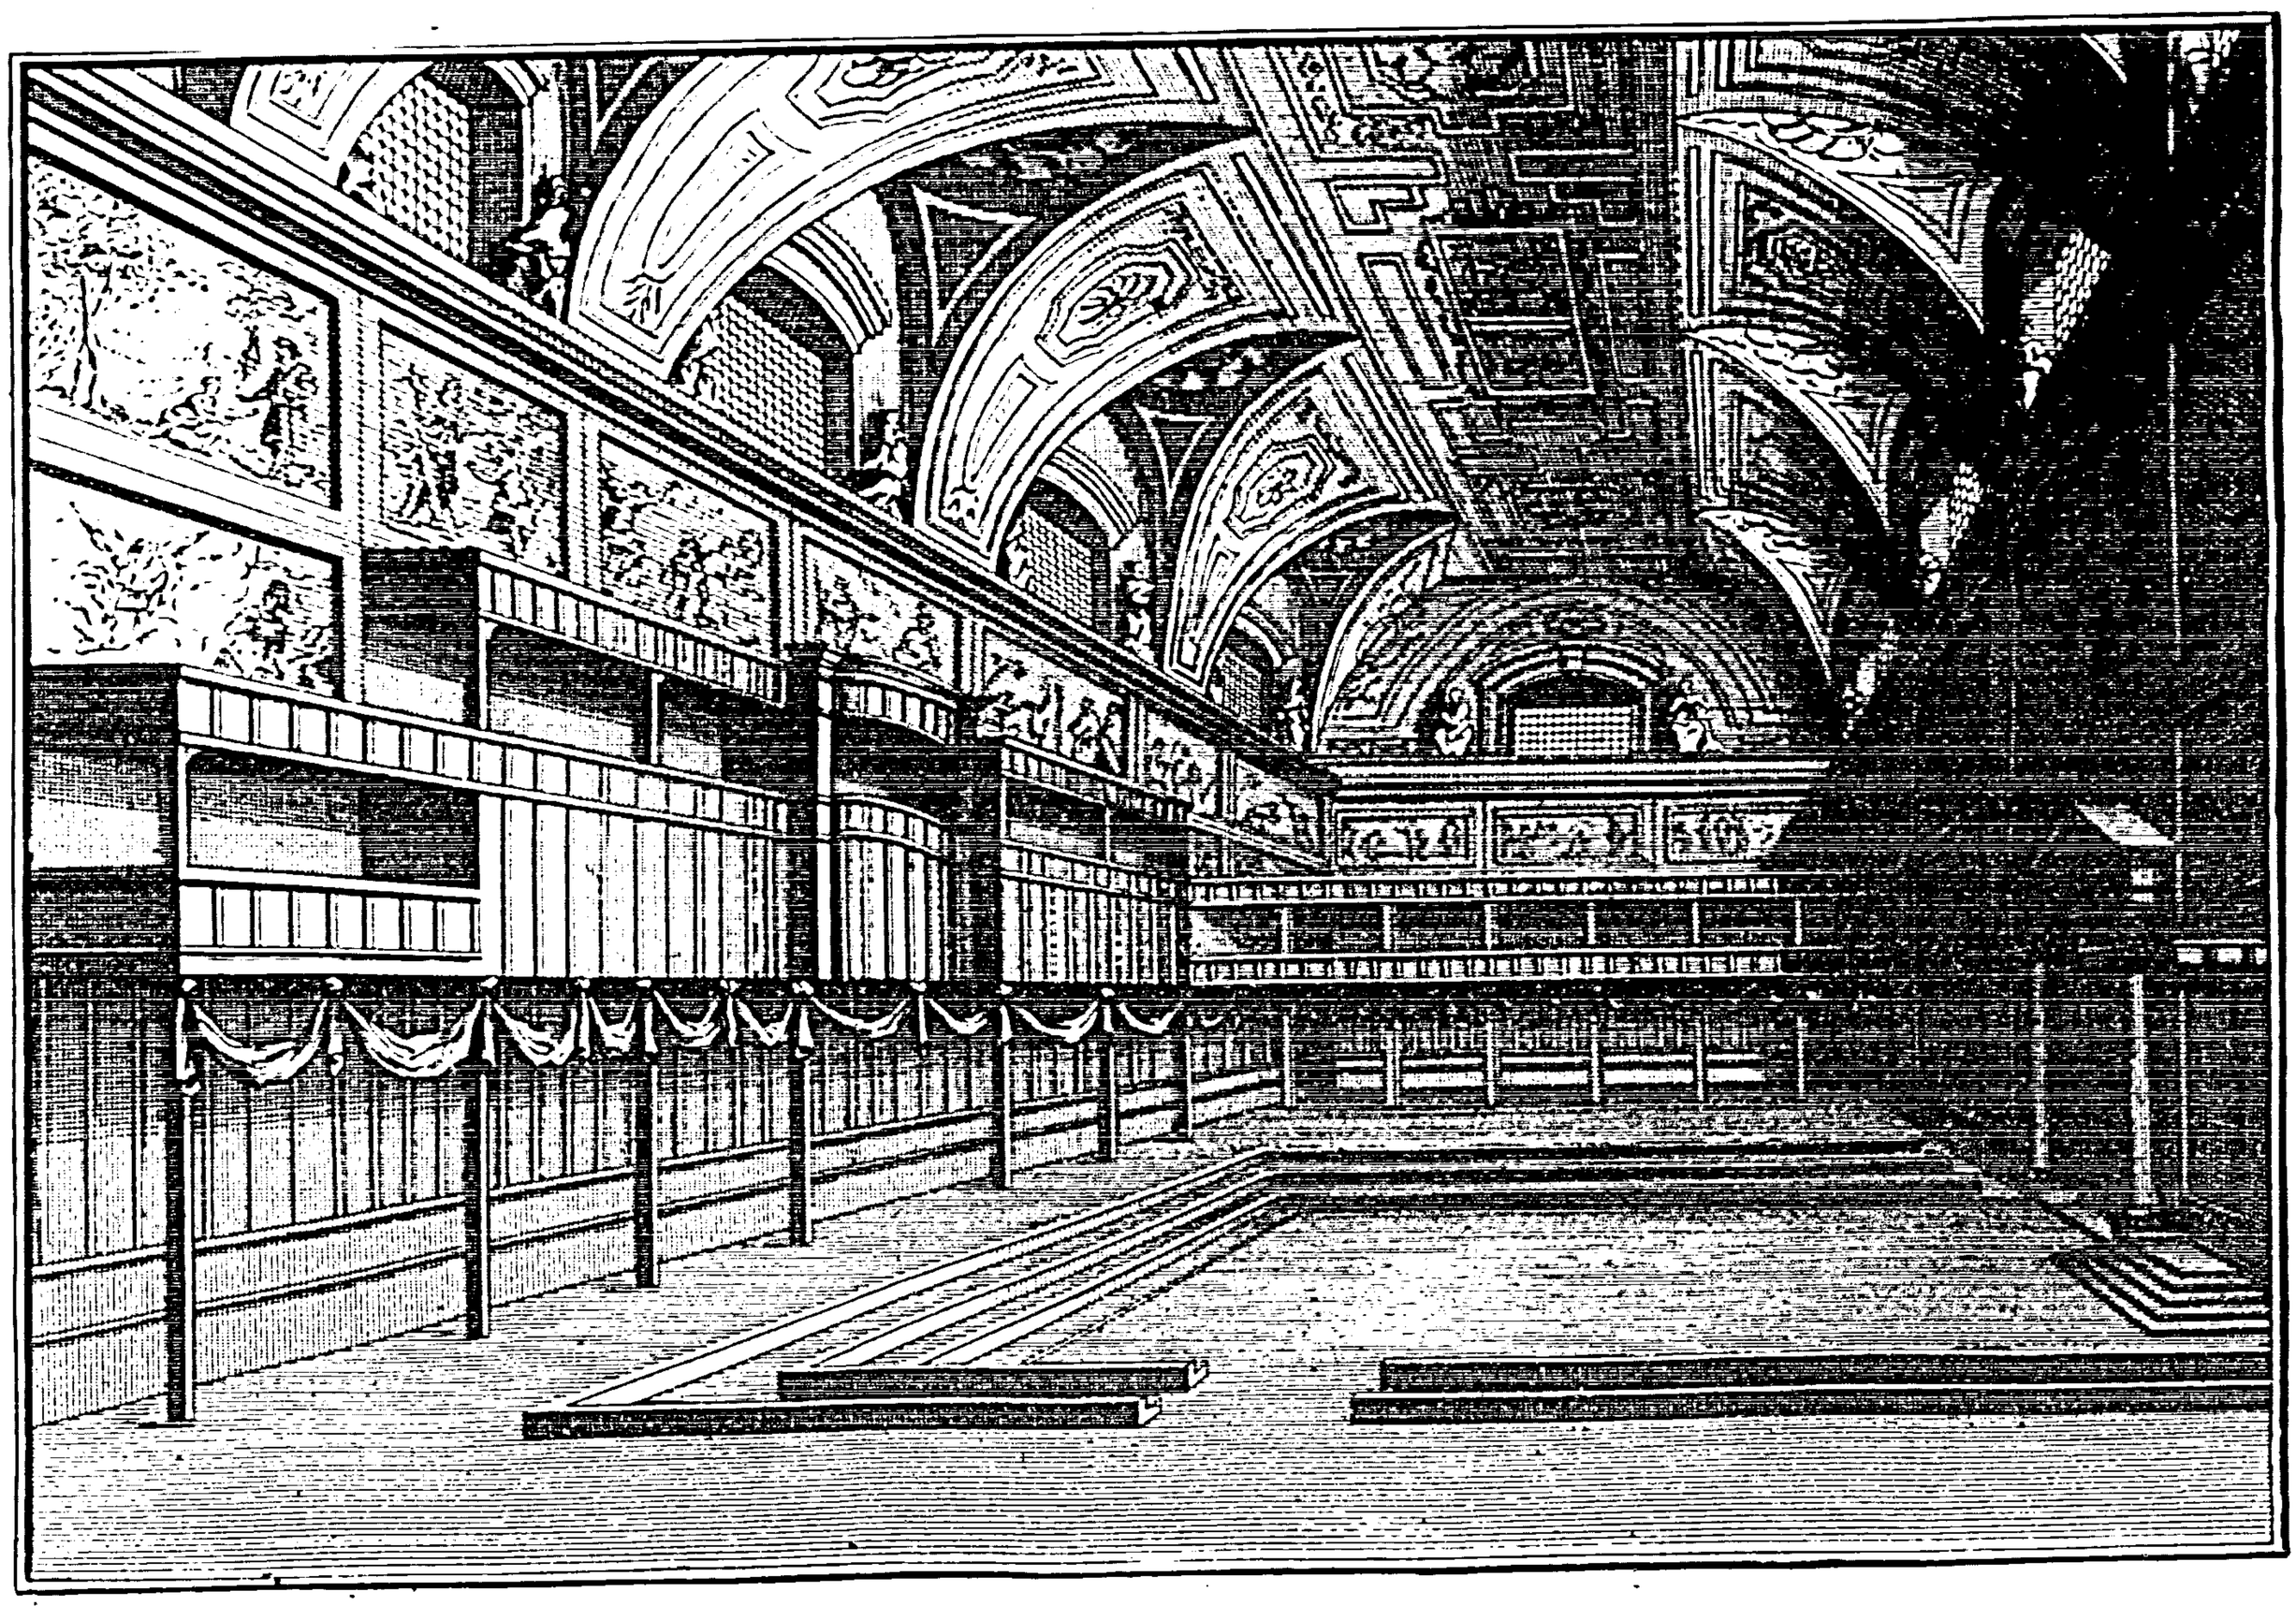
Les Pénitenciers ayant frappé la PORTE S.te après qu'elle a été démurée, le PAPE prend sa croix, et y entre en chantant le TEDEUM.



Le PAPE députe trois CARDINAUX pour aller ouvrir les portes de S.t JEAN DE LATRAN, de S.te MARIE MAJEURE, et de S.t PAUL.



Marche des CARDINAUX députez par sa SAINTETÉ pour aller faire l'ouverture de la PORTE SAINTE aux trois autres Eglises.



La garde de la PORTE SAINTE, êst commise aux MILICE.

Les PENITENCIERS remettant les pechez aux PELERINS, en les touchant de leurs Baguettes.

Le PAPE faisant l'ouverture de la PORTE SAINTE.

Vue des LOGES d'où la NOBLESSE regarde la Ceremonie de l'ouverture de la PORTE SAINTE.

" jubilee is publiſhed, by bulls ſent to all Chriſtian Princes. During the ſecular games " the temples of the two great divinities of paganiſm were viſited, in the ſame manner " as the baſilica's of St. Peter and St. Paul, St. John de Lateran, and St. Mary Major are " now viſited during the jubilee. The expiations and luſtrations of the ſecular games " were looked upon as very proper for obtaining remiſſion of ſins, ſatisfying the Gods, " and diverting their judgments. The object of the jubilee is the expiating of ſins, &c. " The offerings which the people made during the ceremony of the ſecular games " may (in ſome meaſure) be conſtrued as an equivalent for the money offered for indul- " gences. Formerly the Emperor (as ſovereign Pontif) was the primum mobile and head " of the ceremony, as the Pope now is of the jubilee. Some medals ſhew us the Roman " Emperor knocking with a rod at the door of a temple, in the quality of director of the " ſecular games, the Pope performs the ſame ceremony with his hammer; after which " the ſacred doors open to them both. The Heathen ceremony was attended with hymns, " ſo is now the ceremony of the jubilee. In ſhort, the Emperors often changed the time " fixed for ſolemnizing the [e] ſecular games." Auguſtus did not ſtay till the hundred years were expired, and Claudius celebrated his about ſixty years after thoſe of Auguſtus. The Popes have imitated the Emperors. We ſee Clement VI. ordered the jubilee to be celebrated twice in a century. Urban VI. reduced the term to thirty three years. Boniface IX. celebrated it nine years after, and in proceſs of time a bull of Sixtus IV. fixed it to twenty five years. His predeceſſor Paul II. had before fixed it to the ſame time by a decree of the year 1470. However, Sixtus IV. celebrated a jubilee in 1475. and Alexander VI. not content with ſolemnizing it in 1498. revived it again in 1500.

The decrees of Paul II. and Sixtus IV. do not prevent the Popes publiſhing an univerſal jubilee the year of their exaltation to the pontificate, and likewiſe on ſome other extraordinary occaſions. However, the holy gates are never opened but for the twenty five years of jubilee, which, if the expreſſion may be allowed, brings with it an univerſal indulgence, [f] whereby the heart of the faithful is comforted, and joy entereth into the houſe of the Lord.

The jubilee gives ſuch confeſſors as are approved by their ſuperiors a power of abſolving in all caſes that are reſerved, from all cenſures, and the greater excommunication; of annulling the ſuſpenſions of benefices, and eccleſiaſtical offices, and of taking off interdicts. It beſides allows them to change vows, provided they relate not to religion or chaſtity, or be not of the nature of thoſe that engage to certain pilgrimages, ſuch as thoſe of Rome, Jeruſalem, and St. James of Galicia.

As ſoon as the Pope has appointed the jubilee, he notifies it to all the prelates throughout Chriſtendom by apoſtolical [g] letters he orders to be ſent to them; and theſe cauſe it to be publiſhed in their reſpective dioceſſes, with proper admonitions, to the end that the faithful may put themſelves into a condition of obtaining it. The holy Father's in[e] As all the world is not acquainted with what the ſecular games of ancient Rome were, we ſhall here give a ſhort deſcription of them. Varro and Valerius Maximus equally aſcribe the riſe of theſe games to public calamities, tho' in a very different manner. They were inſtituted by V. Publicola in the earlieſt times of the Republic, but often neglected in the ſequel. When Auguſtus revived them, it might perhaps be, as much from a principle of policy as any religious motive. The people who had juſt loſt their liberty were at once to be dazled and relieved, and made to forget the oppreſſion and violences of the triumvirate.

When the time for celebrating them came on, they were ſolemnly publiſhed at Rome and throughout Italy. The officers named the Quindecemviri diſtributed ſulphur, bitumen, and torches among the people therewith to make an exact luſtration which was to expiate their ſins. Three days and nights were employed in ſacrifices to Jupiter, Juno, Latona, Ceres, Apollo, Diana, Pluto, Proſerpine and the Deſtinies. White victims were offered to ſuch Gods as inhabited heaven, and black to thoſe of hell. The firſt night of this religious ceremony, the Prince, or firſt perſon in the Republic, opened the devotion by a ſacrifice of three lambs on three altars raiſed on the banks of the Tyber. After this, hymns were ſung, and firſt fruits offered for the redemption of ſins. They reſorted to the Capitol to pay their devotions, and there ſacrificed. From thence they went to the theatre to ſee the games celebrated in honour of Apollo and Diana. The next day the ladies in their turn went and performed their devotions at the Capitol. To conclude, the third day twenty ſeven young boys, and the ſame number of girls, all of good families, and whoſe fathers and mothers were living, went to the temple of Apollo ſurnamed Palatinus, to ſing the ſecular hymn in honour of Apollo and Diana. Devotion created no interruption in their joy and mirth, the Heathens had the art of blending them agreably together.

[f] Caſal. de Vet. Sacr. Chriſt. Ritib. [g] Piſcara Praxis Cerem. Bauldry Manual. Sacr. Cerem.

tentions are explained, the churches, that are to be viſited, are nominated, certain acts of devotion, which are always accompanied with ſuitable indulgences, are preſcribed, and proper litanies, and prayers peculiar to the ſolemnity of the jubilee, and to the ſubject procuring it, are cauſed to be printed. No fraternity, no religious order muſt abſent itſelf from the proceſſions ordered for ſolemnizing this piece of devotion. The people, their magiſtrates, and the reſt of their ſuperiors are invited to appear at it with all the modeſty that ought to attend an act of religion. On the days ſet apart for repentance and faſting, the biſhop and his clergy are commanded to appear overwhelmed with ſorrow, and filled with ſentiments of humility. They are to pray to God with heart and mouth, to offer him the fruits of a ſincere repentance, conſiſting in renouncing all thoſe engagements whereby we are generally devoted to the world, and in taking up a ſtrong reſolution to inſtruct the people by their own example. The good Chriſtian having gone thro' a long penance capable of edifying the church, may pretty poſitively aſſure himſelf that he is in a proper way to enjoy the indulgences. We will take a view of the ceremonies of this univerſal jubilee.

" The Pope, ſays the Sieur Aimon in his Tableau de la Cour de Rome, notifies the uni-
" verſal jubilee in the capitol of Chriſtendom, by a bull he cauſes to be publiſhed on the " Aſcenſion-day of the preceding year, when he gives the ſolemn benediction. An apo-
" ſtolical ſub-deacon begins the publication of this jubilee in the preſence of the whole
" court of Rome, by reading the bull which is in Latin, and another ſub-deacon reads
" it aloud to the people in Italian. Immediately after which the Pope's twelve trum" pets in ordinary begin to ſound, and preſently after them twelve huntſmen ſound their
" ſilver horns, in a kind of concert agreeing with the trumpets, and at the ſame time
" the caſtle of St. Angelo gives a diſcharge of all its artillery.

" On the 4. Sunday in Advent [h] the apoſtolical ſub-deacons a ſecond time publiſh the " bull for the jubilee, and on the three days immediately preceding Chriſtmas-day the " bells of the city on all ſides proclaim a ſolemnity, which is to be opened the next " day.

" The 24. day of December of the holy year, all the ſecular and regular clergy meet at " the apoſtolic palace, and from thence go in proceſſion to St. Peter at the Vatican; but
" the clergy being come into the great ſquare before St. Peter's, find the doors of the " church ſhut, and all the entrances of the portico lined with guards to hinder the mob
" from entring. The Pope, Cardinals and Biſhops, in their white damaſk robes with " their mitres on meet in Sixtus's chapel, where his Holineſs ſings the Veni Creator,
" holding a lighted taper in his hand. All the Cardinals, in the ſame manner with one
" in their hands, come out each according to his rank, and go to the Swiſs portico,
" where the Pope names three of them his Legates a latere to go and open the gates
" of St. John de Lateran, St. Mary Major, and St. Paul without the walls." Theſe Cardinals having received his Holineſs's orders on their knees in the manner deſcribed in the ſecond figure, go to thoſe ſeveral churches, the manner of which is to be ſeen in the fourth figure; preceded by trumpets, hautboys, and a troop of armed men, half in war, half in religion, if the expreſſion may be allowed. Their march begins as ſoon as the holy Father has opened the holy gate at St. Peter's.

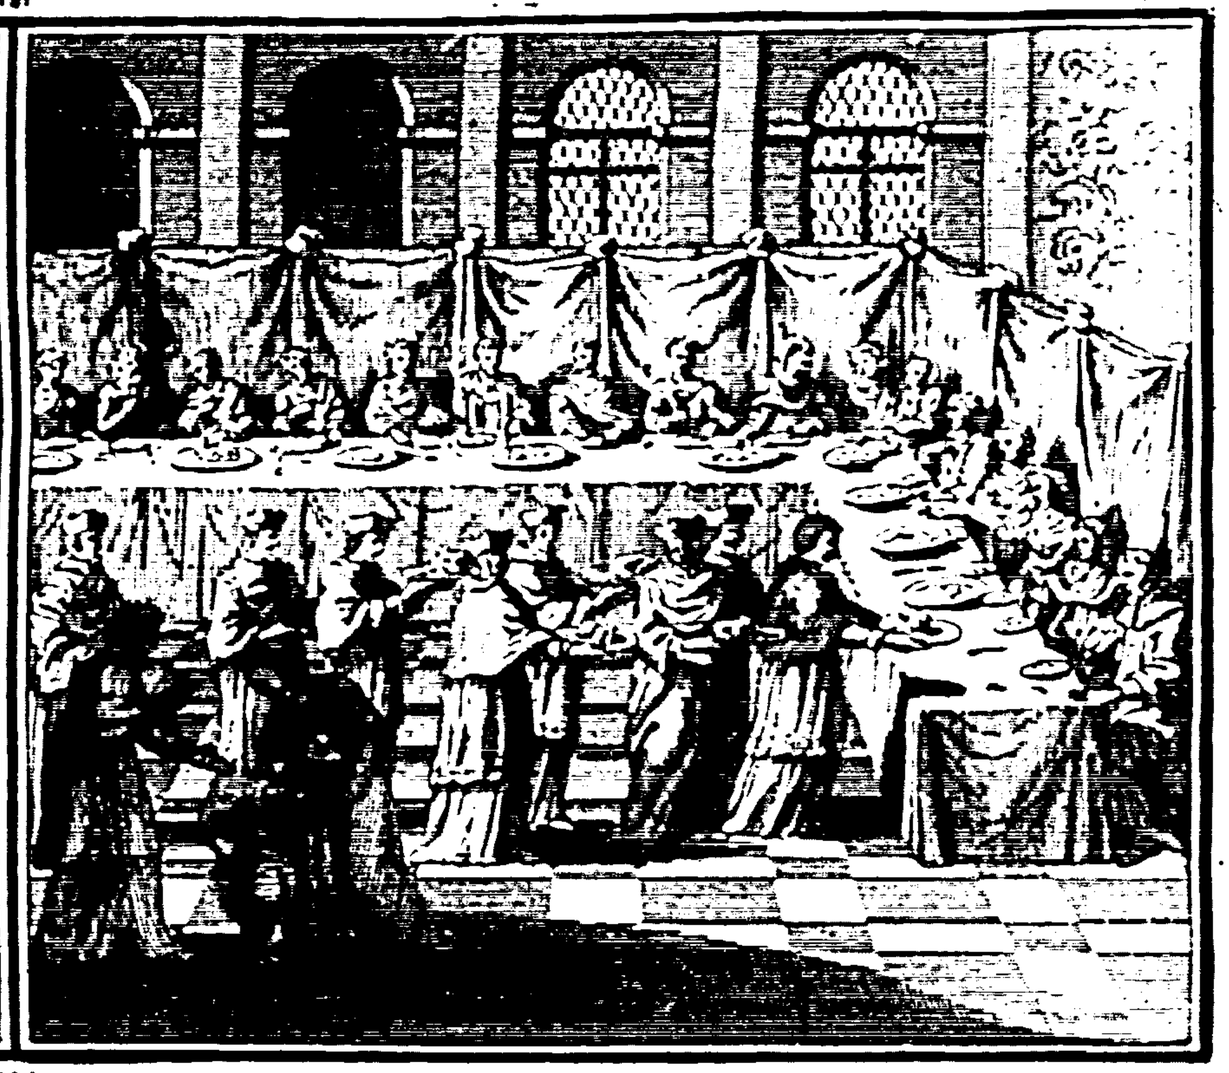
The chief of the Roman ſoldiery have the charge of guarding this holy gate, which is always opened by the Pope himſelf, unleſs the infirmities of age, or ſome particular indiſpoſition, prevent his performing this ceremony; in which caſe the Cardinal-dean officiates for his Holineſs.

[h] As deſcribed in the firſt figure of the plate.

The



Les Pelerins vont en Procession visiter les Sept Eglises.

Les Pelerins montent à genoux LA SCALA SANTA

Les PRELATS. et BARONS Romains, vêtus en Penitens lavent les pieds des Pelerins, et les servent.

Le PAPE benit les Tables des Pelerins, et leur sert a manger avec les CARDINAUX et autres PRELATS.

Le PAPE distribuë aux Pelerins des Chapelets. Medailles. et Agnus Dei, et ils lui baisent les pieds.

A La fin du Jubilé, le PAPE pose la premiere pierre, pour fermer la PORT SAINT.

The OPENING of the HOLY GATE by the POPE.

THE vicar of JESUS CHRIST ſeated on a throne raiſed before the great gate and in the middle of the great portico already mentioned, there reſts himſelf a little while; after which the Prince of the throne preſents him a golden hammer, which the holy Father takes in his right hand. Then he riſes from his throne in order to go and knock at [l] the holy gate. His clergy follow him with tapers in their hands. His Holineſs knocking thrice againſt the gate ſays aloud, aperite mihi portas juſtitiæ, open unto me theſe gates of juſtice, to which the choir add theſe words, this is the gate of the Eternal, the juſt ſhall enter therein, &c. [k] In the interim the head-maſons break down the wall which cloſes up the holy gate, and the rubbiſh of it is diſtributed amongſt the zealots, who eagerly pick it up in order to place it in the rank of the moſt precious relics. And it is ſo to ſuch who imagine there is a ſecret, and always divine vertue reſiding in every thing uſed in the ceremonies of religion. Whilſt the pieces of wall are putting out of the way, the Pope goes and ſits down on his throne.

As ſoon as the wall is demoliſhed, the penitentiaries of St. Peter take their brooms, clear the gate, ſweep out of the paſſage the bricks and lime that remain, which are not to be looked on as contemptible things, ſince relics are made of them, and the mouldings and all round the gate are waſhed with holy water. This operation being over, his Holineſs comes down from his throne, beginning this anthem, hæc dies quam fecit Dominus, this is the day which the Lord hath made, &c. which the choir goes on with after him. Being come to the holy gate, the holy Father repeats ſome prayers, takes the croſs, kneels down before the gate, begins the Te Deum, and ſtill ſinging it riſes up and paſſes thro' the holy gate. His clergy follow him. Every body goes into the church to ſee this magnificent ceremony, or aſſiſt at the veſpers of the Pope's chapel. After veſpers the Cardinals take off their white robes, put on their red cowls again, attend the Pope to the door of his apartment, and then retire. On Chriſtmas-day, after the maſs of the day, his Holineſs goes to the benediction pew, and bleſſes the faithful by way of jubilee.

The STATIONS or VISITATION of the CHURCHES by the PILGRIMS.

THE Pope's [l] bull commands the viſitation of the [m] four churches already mentioned. Theſe viſitations contribute to gaining the jubilee. And indeed the Romans are ordered to viſit them thirty times, but the Pope abates half the number in favour of ſuch of the faithful as are foreigners. He has the ſame indulgence for Chriſtians, who are afraid of not being able to bear the fatigue of ſo difficult and laborious a devotion.

[l] The holy gates are images of God's grace: The paſſage of the pilgrims thro' them repreſents unto us the Chriſtian's paſſage from the ſtate of ſin to that of grace. All ſuch as perform the ſtations ordered by the holy Father in the four baſilica's at Rome muſt paſs thro' theſe holy gates. It is likewiſe pretended that the opening of theſe gates ſignifies the opening of the church unto all men, provided they go to it after a ſincere converſion. The Pope opens the gate, which denotes his having the key of the celeſtial treaſures. The three blows given by his Holineſs upon the gate, repreſent the three quarters of the world, Europe, Africa and Aſia, to which the Pope offers the treaſures which he diſpoſes of. Vide Caſal. de Ritib. &c. There is ſome injuſtice in this allegorical explanation. Why is not America comprehended under it? We ſhould then rather ſay, that the three ſtrokes with the hammer are an excellent image of that joy which the jubilee gives the faithful in heaven, on earth, and in purgatory.

[k] Tableau de la Cour de Rome. This wall is built in ſuch a manner as to hold but very ſlightly by its four ſides. The ſtones are not faſtned with cement, thus the moment the holy Father knocks at the holy gate it falls without any reſiſtance.

[l] Tableau de la Cour de Rome.

[m] Boniface VIII. founder of the jubilee, preſcribed the viſitation of the baſilica's of St. Peter and St. Paul, in order to obtain the indulgences annexed to this ſolemnity. To theſe two churches Clement VI. added that votion. A man muſt go a twelve miles journey to viſit thoſe four churches only once a day: thus the zealous Chriſtian, who would be regular in his devotion, may reckon that during the jubilee he will devoutly walk an hundred leagues for God's ſake. There are little books of prayers drawn up by the Pope's order to direct the faithful pilgrim's devotion, in the churches ordered him to viſit; and if by ill luck he dies before he has made all his viſits, a clauſe inſerted in the bull for the jubilee favours the pious Chriſtian's intention, and puts him into poſſeſſion of all advantages annexed to the indulgence.

Another piece of meritorious devotion, is the going up the ſteps of the Scala Sancta, thus are eight and twenty ſtairs called, by which it is ſaid that CHRIST went up to Pilate's or Caiphas's houſe. Nay, they affirm, that a little braſs grate there covers a drop of our Saviour's blood. They add, that the preſervation of this holy ladder is owing to St. Helen, mother to Conſtantine the Great. The pilgrim being got to the top of the holy ladder muſt repeat a ſhort prayer before he goes into the Holy of Holies. As for women they never go into it, however they obtain the indulgence by looking at that chapel thro' an iron grate. All theſe acts of devotion procure to pilgrims an entire remiſſion of ſins, and the penitentiaries put the ſeal to ſuch remiſſion by touching them with their rods. The Roman prelates and barons in the dreſs of penitents waſh their feet, the Pope and Cardinals laying aſide the ornaments of their dignity wait on them at table. His Holineſs makes them preſents of chaplets, holy medals, and Agnus's, and admits them to kiſs his feet.

The jubilee concludes with ſhutting up the holy gates, which is done on Chriſtmas-eve, a year after they have been opened. The Pope, his Cardinals, the clergy, and moſt diſtinguiſhed perſons of the court of Rome go to St. Peter's in their robes of ceremony. Veſpers are ſaid, after which the clergy go with lighted tapers in their hands and offer their homages to the holy face, known by the name of Veronica. Then the Pope ſings an anthem beginning with theſe words, cum jucunditate exibitis, ye ſhall go out with joy. As ſoon as the anthem is begun, every one makes haſte to get thro' the holy gate. The holy Father goes up to the gate, when every body has gone thro' it, and turning towards it, ſays, Adjutorium, &c. Our help, &c. together with a few prayers with which he bleſſes the ſtones and mortar deſigned to ſhut the gate which the jubilee has opened. His Holineſs himſelf lays the firſt ſtone under which are hidden ſeveral medals which ſerve to hand down the memory of this pious ceremony to lateſt poſterity.

Having laid the ſtone, his Holineſs waſhes his hands, returns to his throne, and [n] ſalvum fac populum, &c. is ſung. In the mean while the maſons make an end of muring up the gate, in the middle of which they ſet a croſs of copper, whilſt the Pope repeats ſome prayers, which he continues till the breach is repaired. The benediction that CHRIST's vicar gives from the pew, which has from thence taken its name, to the faithful met together to receive it, cloſes this piece of devotion, which might be ranked amongſt the moſt difficult, if there could be ſuch a thing to thoſe who make the felicities of heaven depend on theſe external pains. The Cardinals and clergy throw off their robes of ceremony, wait on the holy Father back to his apartment, and his Holineſs entertains them with a fine ſupper, which ſerves to unbend them from the fatigues of the day.

that of St. John de Lateran, and Urban VI. that of St. Mary Major. Afterwards a fifth was viſited, which is that of St. Laurence without the walls; and as St. Sebaſtian's lies between St. Peter and St. Paul, and that of the holy croſs of Jeruſalem between St. John and St. Laurence, they are viſited in the way to the others. Theſe are the ſeven churches, which pilgrims look upon it as their duty to viſit. According to Nodot, in his Memoirs de la Cour de Rome, a man muſt walk three good leagues to accompliſh this act of devotion, nay four, including the three fountains and the Annonciada, whither the greateſt zealots never fail going.

[n] Lord, ſave thy people.

INDULGENCES.

THIS is the touchſtone, made uſe of by the holy Father to try the faith of the believer. An infinite number of devotees imagine, that indulgences ſecure the conqueſt of paradiſe. The riſe of theſe means, the ſalutary inſtitution of which has degenerated into an abuſe, ſeems pointed out in a [o] paſſage of St. Cyprian: but however that may be, the relaxing of pains did not bear the name of indulgence till long after. It was very common in the ſeventh and eighth centuries. In 884. Pope Sergius at once gave three forty-days indulgences to ſuch as [p] ſhould viſit the church of St. Martin on the Hills on his feſtival.

If we define an indulgence, [q] a remiſſion from temporal pains which are due to actual ſins, it will be eaſy to underſtand, that acceſs to heaven is not the freer to thoſe zealots who have obtained it, unleſs they make the proper advantage of it, by acts of virtue; and yet no body is a ſtranger to the exceſſive power attributed to indulgences, nor the conſiderable ſervices they have done to avarice, falſe zeal, and ambition. Nor ought it to be believed, that by this expreſſion our intent is to overthrow the advantages of them. We are too well acquainted with the miracles wrought by St. Bernard, who whilſt preaching up the indulgences of Pope Eugenius the third, [r] at once inflamed the hearts of the believers of his age with a ſpirit of war and a ſpirit of contrition, and ſhewed them the expiation of their crimes, and the remiſſion of their pains fixed to thoſe croſſes and ſwords, with which he perſuaded them to arm themſelves againſt the Infidel. Nor are we ignorant, that St. Bridget in her revelations declared the viſion ſhe had from our Lord JESUS CHRIST, who told her, "that the ſhorteſt way to atone for all her "ſins, was to obtain indulgences; that as to himſelf, when he had a mind to treat any "ſoul kindly, he would adviſe it to paſs its life at Rome, there being no place in the "world where ſo many indulgences might be gained." It muſt be added too, that there is not a more commodious city than this for devotees, who would turn their piety towards this object. Its baſilica's have perpetual indulgences for every day; which are doubled on feſtivals.

M. Thiers is very large on the abuſes of indulgences: we ſhall here give an abſtract of what he has ſaid on this matter in his [s] treatiſe, concerning the moſt neceſſary of all devotions. There is no neceſſity, after what he has ſaid, of mentioning indulgences owned to be falſe and ſpurious; nor thoſe that exceed the power of thoſe who grant them; that are granted without a juſt and reaſonable cauſe; that are too frequent, too numerous or exceſſive;

[o] Pœnitenti, operanti, roganti poteſt clementer ignoſcere; poteſt acceptum ferre quicquid pro talibus & petierint Martyres, & fecerint ſacerdotes. Indulgences were at firſt no more than the ſoftening of pains impoſed on ſinners condemned to penance, which in the the firſt ages of Chriſtianity was very ſevere. The church had regard to the weakneſs of penitents, who could not undergo the rigour of them: but they were at the ſame time to diſcover a real ſorrow, and ſeriouſly endeavour to purify themſelves from their crimes according to their ſtrength, and with a perfect ſincerity. A relaxation from eccleſiaſtical pains by degrees introduced into devotion certain practices, difficult in appearance, but yet much eaſier than a ſpiritual worſhip. Nothing gave a greater ſcope to the abuſe of indulgences, than the commuting pains into pecuniary mulcts, which producing a vaſt profit to prieſts, and ſhewed them the way of ſelling the remiſſion of ſins.

[p] Caſal. Ibid. [q] Tolet. apud Caſal. de Ritib. &c.

"[r] St. Bernard omitted nothing that could effectually move the hearts (of Chriſtians) from the conſidera- "tion of the glory of their anceſtors, ---- of their ſalvation which they might ſecure to themſelves by this "kind of martyrdom --- and eſpecially of the honour of Chriſt, whom he diſplayed marching at the head of the "cruſade-warriors --- As ſoon as he had made an end, the King who had hearkened to him with all the "ſigns of a tender and hearty devotion, riſe from his throne, and went and threw himſelf at his feet humbly "begging the croſs of him --- He went up into the desk with St. Bernard, and himſelf exhorted the aſſem- "bly to follow the example of their King ---- Immediately all the by-ſtanders cried out the croſs, the croſs. "St. Bernard threw a vaſt number of them from the desk, which were laid there in large bundles, and to "ſatisfy the eagerneſs of ſuch who had been able to get at none, he cut his robe in pieces, and upon the ſpot "made more croſſes of it ---- Men were ſo throughly perſuaded, that the ſucceſs of the war depended on "him, that it was reſolved --- that not only he ſhould go to it, but ſhould have the general command of "the whole army, which could not fail being always victorious under a chief, who was thought to have the "omipontence of God in his hands by the gift of miracles." Maimbourg's Hiſtory of the Cruſades, Lib. III.

[s] Chap. xx.

ceſſive; that are not iſſued from the holy ſee, or from biſhops empowered to grant them; that are propoſed to the faithful after they have been recalled, or after the time is expired; that are granted on falſe allegations, on falſe facts; on private viſions that have no authority, or on bulls containing things contrary to the doctrine of the church; as for inſtance, that certain perſons ſhall be abſolved from all pains and crimes (a thing beyond the power of Popes) if they be of ſuch a religious order, ſuch a fraternity, if they wear ſuch an habit, or ſuch an inſtrument of piety. All which indulgences are null, as they are vicious. Such as go beyond a certain term are the ſame. As would be any given for an hundred, two hundred, a thouſand years, &c. or which Cardinals ſhould grant for above an hundred days, or biſhops for above forty. In ſhort, the cauſe, or rather, the works to be formed for obtaining indulgences muſt have ſome proportion with them. Nor is this proportion to be found in a few minute trifling practices of devotion, ſuch as ſaying a Pater, or an Ave, or ſome certain prayer at a fixed hour, or carrying about one a medal, an image, a chaplet, a croſs, a ſet of beads, kiſſing theſe objects of piety, looking on them with an eye of contrition by fetching a few ſighs, which one may regularly produce at hours one is uſed to viſit ſuch ſacred things, upon which, however, devotees perſuade themſelves, that they are upon a par with the greateſt ſaints of the church. They flatter themſelves, that the viſiting a church, a chapel, an altar, and aſſiſting at a maſs give them the ſame title and right.

M. Thiers in the ſame place, gives us a ſhort account of the practices made uſe of for gaining the indulgences granted for the deliverance of ſouls out of purgatory; and theſe are his words. " They are, ſays he, become ſo common, and ſo exceſſive for about a " century and an half, that it is not always ſafe to truſt too much to them, unleſs they " have firſt been well examined, and purged. The application of them, is by ſaying of " prayers, or by viſiting of churches, chapels, or altars, by ſaying, or cauſing to be ſaid, " or by hearing of maſſes, by aſſiſting at certain offices, and certain proceſſions, by con- " feſſing and receiving the communion, by giving alms, or wearing particular habits, " croſſes, chaplets, crowns, beads, &c.

The devout part of the Roman Catholics pay a great reſpect to privileged altars, [t] a thing never talked of in the church, till after the concluſion of the Council of Trent. The decree that eſtabliſhes them is very mortifying to numbers of ſouls. It runs thus: Every time a maſs for the dead ſhall be ſaid at ſuch an altar for the ſoul of any deceaſed perſon, an indulgence ſhall be obtained, by vertue whereof ſuch ſoul ſhall be delivered from purgatory, or the pains of purgatory. M. Thiers is in the right to ſay, that for the eaſe and comfort of all ſouls the Pope ought to have made every altar a privileged one. Is it juſt, for inſtance, that the ſoul of one whoſe virtue was not extraordinary in this world, ſhould be eaſed ſooner than that of a perfect devotee, becauſe the body of Chriſt has been ſacrificed for the former at a privileged altar?

We ſhall ſay nothing here of the abuſes formerly committed in the diſtribution of indulgences: ſuch was [u] the infamous traffic of them carried on publickly throughout Europe, [t] Thiers, Ibid.

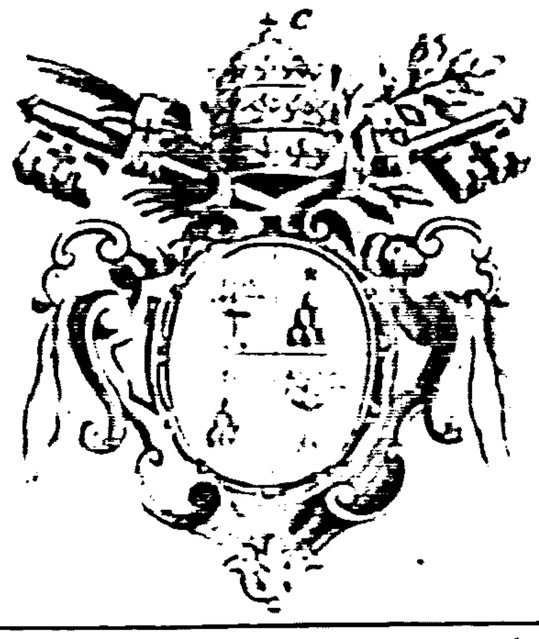
[u] It is unneceſſary to look for proofs of this beyond the pontificate of Leo X. For this we ſhall call on Father Maimbourg as our voucher. This is what he ſays in his Hiſtory of Lutheraniſm. " Leo X. raiſed to the ſupreme Dignity of the church at the age of 37. years, " gave ſhining inſtances of all the perfections of a great Prince, without poſſeſſing all thoſe of a great Pope, " having undertaken to complete the ſuperb edifice of the baſilica of St. Peter ---- according to the exam- " ple of Pope Julius, had recourſe to indulgences, which he every where publiſhed, with permiſſion to eat " eggs and cheeſe in Lent, and of chuſing their own confeſſor by all ſuch as ſhould contribute what was " asked of them for the building of St. Peter's. Indeed it muſt be owned (and we do own it with ſome ex- " ception after F. Maimbourg) that the ſucceeding Popes have been much more regular in their diſpenſation " of theſe ſpiritual treaſures, and that ſome things were then done, which would not be now, and which " made thoſe indulgences of Leo odious, eſpecially in Germany ------- There are authors who affirm, that " a fund was in a manner raiſed out of theſe indulgences, and that the ſooner to come at ready money, the " money ariſing from them was farmed out to the higheſt bidders, who thereupon not only to reimburſe, " but likewiſe to enrich themſelves by ſo ſhameful a commerce, choſe ſuch preachers of indulgences and " collectors as they thought the moſt proper, they being well paid to induce the people, in order to obtain " theſe pardons, to contribute whatever theſe covetous and ſacrilegious wretches inſiſted upon for them --- " It is certain, that theſe collectors who were appointed at the ſame time that the indulgences for the cruſades

A

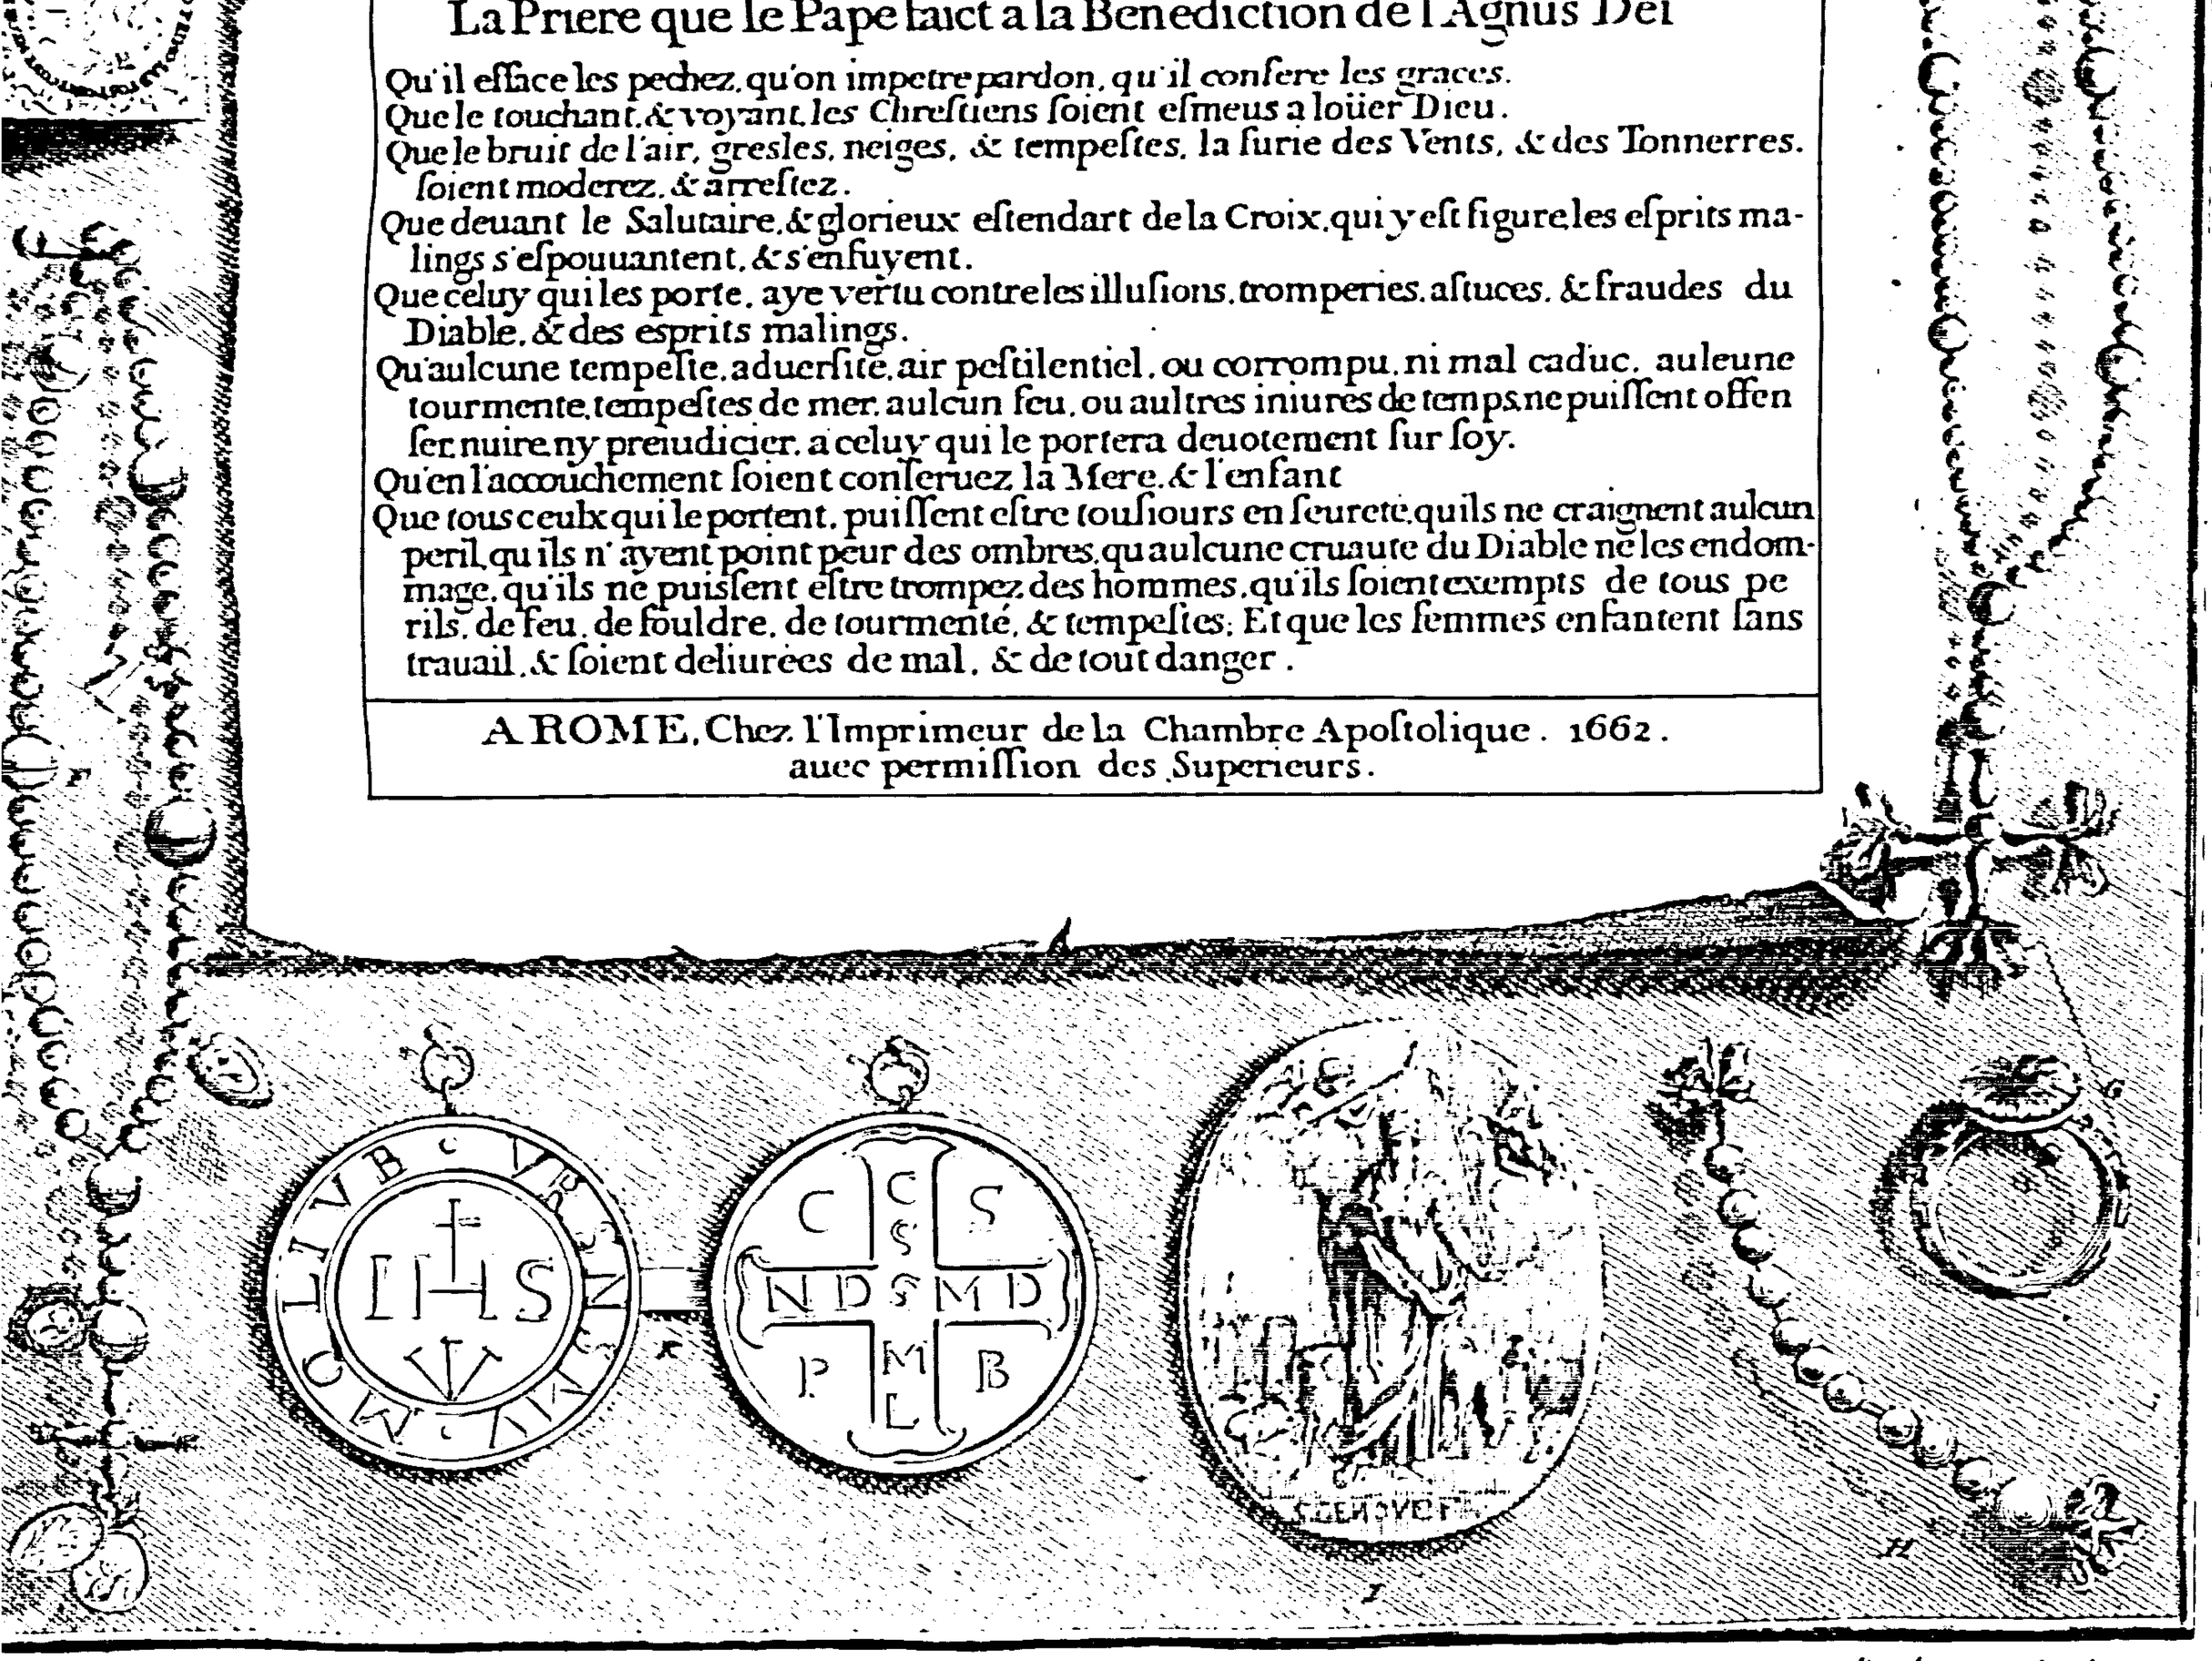


LES VERTVS DE L'AGNVS DEI,

Composè de Sainct Creſme, Baume, & pure cire. Extraict du liure appellè le Ceremonial, ou parlant de la Benediction d'iceux, les paroles ſuyuantes, ſe trouuent regiſtrées ſur la fin en ceſte maniere.

B

C



Il ſe lit que le Pape Vrbain V. enuoya à l'Empereur des Grecs trois Agnus Dei, auec ces vers & paroles.

Les tonnerres il chaſſe;
Les pechez il effiace;
Sauue d'embraſement;
Et de ſubmergement.
Garde de mort ſubite,
Les Diables met en fuite.
Dompte les ennemis.
Hors de danger ſont mis
Et l'enfant & la Mere.
Qui trauaille à le faire
Il donne maint pouuoir
Aux dignes de l'auoir
La part quoy que petite
Tant que la grand profite

La Priere que le Pape faict à la Benediction de l'Agnus Dei

Qu'il effice les pechez, qu'on impetre pardon, qu'il confere les graces.
Que le touchant, & voyant les Chreſtiens ſoient eſmeus à loüer Dieu.
Que le bruit de l'air, gresles, neiges, & tempeſtes, la furie des Vents, & des Tonnerres. ſoient moderez, & arreſtez.
Que deuant le Salutaire, & glorieux eſtendart de la Croix, qui y eſt figure les eſprits malings s'eſpouuantent, & s'enfuyent.
Que celuy qui les porte, aye vertu contre les illuſions, tromperies, aſtuces, & fraudes du Diable, & des esprits malings.
Qu'aulcune tempeſte, aduerſité, air peſtilentiel, ou corrompu, ni mal caduc, auleune tourmente, tempeſtes de mer, aulcun feu, ou aultres iniures de temps, ne puiſſent offenſer, nuire, ny preiudicier, à celuy qui le portera deuotement ſur ſoy.
Qu'en l'accouchement ſoient conſeruez la Mere, & l'enfant
Que tous ceulx qui le portent, puiſſent eſtre touſiours en ſeureté, qu'ils ne craignent aulcun peril, qu'ils n'ayent point peur des ombres, qu'aulcune cruauté du Diable ne les endommage, qu'ils ne puiſent eſtre trompez des hommes, qu'ils ſoient exempts de tous perils, de feu, de fouldre, de tourmenté, & tempeſtes; Et que les femmes enfantent ſans trauail, & ſoient deliurées de mal, & de tout danger.

A ROME, Chez l'Imprimeur de la Chambre Apoſtolique. 1662.
auec permiſſion des Superieurs.

oie exacte de la feuille imprimée, que le Pape donne avec les Agnus Dei qui ést spece de medaille de cire, representant un Agneau comme on le voit a la lettre
Ce medaille a pour revers l'image de quelque Saint.
Armes du Pape Alexandre VII. qui a donné l'original de la susdite euille A.
Scapulaire.
Rosaire, Chapelet composé de 15. dixaines.
apelet ordinaire enrichi de Reliques &c.
G. Bagues dont les Chevaliers de Malthe, se servent pour dire leur Rosaire. la Rose qui ést au dessus, tourne à ressort et marque avec le petit point noir sur les 15. chifres qui sont autour, le nombre des dixaines deja dites.
H. Dixaine pour dire son chapelet.
I. Pain de S.te Genevieve, ou espece de petit biscuit sec, que les Religieux de S.te Genevieve distribuënt pour la fievre
K. Medaille Benit de cuivre que les sœurs de la charité à paris, portent à leur Chapelet, pour conserver leur virginité

Europe, ſome hundred years ſince: happy time for ſinners! their crimes were rated, and the remiſſion of them ſet up at auction. [w] The apoſtolic chancery taxed ſins at a pretty reaſonable rate. It coſt but 90. livers and ſome few ducats for certain crimes, which the people on this ſide the Alps puniſh by burning the criminal. The nuns might often repeat their amorous paſtime, and refreſh themſelves with their gallants after the fatigue of divine worſhip, without fearing any other puniſhment than a fine of 36. livres and 9. ducats. But that time is paſſed. The kingdom of heaven is now-a-days farmed out to a much leſs profit, and the farmers do not make near the gain as they [x] formerly did.

There is nothing particular in the form uſed at Rome in publiſhing indulgences.

Several Instruments of Piety: Societies for Devotion.

We have deſcribed the Agnus Dei's, and the manner of making them. We muſt now ſpeak of chaplets. The hiſtorians of thoſe wars generally called the Cruſades ſay, that Peter the Hermit firſt taught thoſe warriors to pray by tale, and to that end invented an inſtrument called the Chaplet [y], the uſe of which ſoon grew very common. S. Dominic founder of the order bearing his name, and of the holy office of the Inquiſition, greatly raiſed the reputation of this devout inſtrument, by publiſhing that the bleſſed Virgin had brought him one from heaven myſteriouſly compoſed of a certain number of beads, which he called the Roſary. The public received it with great zeal and reſpect, and it is ſtill one of the moſt devout exerciſes of piety of a great number of Catholics. As to the chaplet, there is not the leaſt doubt but it came from the Mahometans. Peter the Hermit doubtleſs borrowed it from them, in favour of ſuch of the ſoldiers of the holy wars who not being able to read, could not make uſe of a book to ſay their prayers. The motive was commendable, but where did the Mahometans get this cuſtom? Perhaps they are beholden for it to the Eaſt-Indians, who likewiſe make uſe of a kind of chaplet. It appears likewiſe, by the medals to be ſeen in the treatiſe on the Religion of the ancient Romans by Du Choul, that they too had the uſe of the chaplet amongſt them. Nor was it leſs neceſſary for the Heathens than for the Chriſtians and Mahometans, the prayers of the firſt being at leaſt as full [z] and as difficult to retain as thoſe of the others. It is thought, that the ſame Peter the Hermit already mentioned invented the hours and office of our Lady.

Four

" were began to be publiſhed under Urban II. from that time ſlackened, being conquered by their avarice ----" Indeed meaſures were taken to put a ſtop to ſo ſcandalous a trade, but adds Father Maimbourg, " notwithſtanding theſe precautions, very great abuſes crept into the publication of theſe indulgences of Leo ---- " ſome of theſe preachers of indulgences exaggerated the price and value of them to ſuch a degree, as to give " occaſion to the people to imagine that they were ſecure of ſalvation, and of delivering ſouls out of pur- " gatory as ſoon as they had paid the money required for the Letters, teſtifying they had obtained the indul- " gence ---- The clerks of the farmers, who had bought the profits of thoſe indulgences, were ſeen daily " in the taverns making good cheer, and ſpending part of that money in all manner of debaucheries; which " the poor inſulted was barbarouſly forced from them.

[w] Vide Treatiſe entitled, Tax of the Chancery, &c.

[x] And yet indulgences ſtill produce immenſe gains both in the old and new world. In the latter, eſpecially, a vaſt trade of bulls is carried on, which the Pope ſends from Rome to the Indies; and it may eaſily be believed, that the apoſtolic court does not diſtribute them gratis. That would not be reaſonable. " There " is not one child in any good family, who according to what Coreal ſays, Tom. I. of his Travels to the " Eaſt-Indies, p. 81. does not provide himſelf with ſome of them, at two reals a piece; tho' there are ſome " much dearer. The Spaniards oblige their people ---- to buy them." Is it avarice, or their care for the ſalvation of the poor Indians that puts them upon this? If the bull has the ſame effect on the hearts of the Indians, as a paſtoral inſtruction enforced by good examples ought much more naturally to have; let us overlook this ill principle in the Spaniards.

[y] And long before the invention of the chaplet prayers were ſaid by tale, and F. Giry the author of The Lives of the Saints gives ſome inſtances of it. Another writer (Ryckel, who has given us The Life of St. Gertrude) tells us of a chaplet by way of Roſary, which this ſaint who lived in the ſeventh century, made uſe of at her devotions. It is pity, that ſeveral of the beads are loſt, by being given to be kiſſed and handled by big bellied women.

[z] Agmine verborum Deum adeundum putant, Tertul. de Orat.

Four inſtruments or helps to piety, have occaſioned four conſiderable fraternities. That of the roſary owes its birth to the roſary of S. Dominic. The roſary is a large chaplet of 150. beads which make ſo many Ave Maries. Every 10. beads is divided by one ſomething larger which makes a Pater. The 15. large beads repreſent 15. myſteries, [a] which are as it were ſo many lively images wherein are to be ſeen the deſigns of " the eternal Father in the temporal birth of his Son, the accidents that befel him in " his infancy, and in the private and unknown part of his life, in his ſuffering and pain- " ful part, and in his glorious and immortal life." The common chaplets contain only 50. Aves and 5. Paters. Before the perſon repeats his roſary, he muſt take it and croſs himſelf. He muſt then repeat the Apoſtles Creed, in order to put himſelf into a proper diſpoſition for prayer; after which he is to ſay a Pater and 3. Aves on account of the three relations which the bleſſed Virgin bears to the three perſons in the Trinity. After theſe preliminaries to devotion, he paſſes on to the 15. tens. The devout Chriſtian muſt obſerve to let himſelf into the myſteries of each 10. by a prayer, he will find in the books treating of the method of devotion of the roſary. The 15. myſteries are divided into 3. claſſes, the firſt of which includes the 5. myſteries of joy; the 5. next are thoſe of ſorrow, as they turn upon our Saviour's paſſion; and the 5. laſt thoſe of glory, they being deſtined to his reſurrection, aſcenſion, &c. After the roſary, the brethren who have the honour to bear the name of it, muſt ſay the Litanies and prayers for the afflicted, &c. They ſhall lift up their heart to the Virgin [b] who is the Queen of the roſary, Empreſs of heaven and earth, High Treaſurer of the finances and celeſtial riches: and as the faithful ought not only to pray for each other, but likewiſe for an increaſe of the worſhip of which they make profeſſion; thoſe of the roſary muſt never omit this laſt article, but endeavour to make proſelytes to the faith of St. Dominic.

This ſaint, of whom the legend writers tell us wonders, was born of a very illuſtrious family in Spain in the year 1170. He was as yet a child, [c] when the bleſſed Virgin began to teach him the devotion of the roſary, which ſoon became the grand object of this ſaint's piety. A miſſion to which he was appointed in Spain to ſtir up the devotion of the people towards our Lady, gave him occaſion to ſet up [d] the fraternity of the roſary, and he ever afterwards preached up the eſtabliſhing of it in every place thro' which he paſſed. We ſhall ſay nothing of the miracles of his miſſion againſt the heretics of Languedoc, nor of the holy perſecutions he made them ſuffer, believing he ought to join temporal arms to the ſpiritual againſt people, who they ſay, maintained their doctrine with an obſtinacy capable of fretting the moſt patient of all devotees. The ſaint authoriſed by the Pope's orders, diſputed againſt error, preached up the holy war againſt its agents, had ſuch as refuſed to yield to his arguments, judged and condemned; but the roſary alone, infinitely more effectual than the temporal ſword, or the charitable ſermons of S. Dominic, [e] brought back above an hundred thouſand ſouls into the boſom of the church. We omit all the other miracles wrought by this inſtrument of piety, but we muſt do honour to the ſaint for an action, the like of which is not to be found in the life of JESUS CHRIST: which is, that he miraculouſly drowned a great number of heretics in paſſing over the Garonne.

On the firſt Sunday in October is celebrated the ſolemnity of the roſary. This feſtival is owing to the piety of Pope Gregory XIII. Several [f] Popes have by bulls confirmed the way of praying with the roſary, and granted all ſuitable indulgences, as well plenary as limited, to ſuch as ſhall devoutly ſay it over.

As

[a] Alanus redivivus.

[b] Vide The practice of confeſſion and exerciſe of the roſary after the Pſalter of our Lady printed at Liſle 1662.

[c] Alanus de rupe. Giry Vies des Saints.

[d] He ſet it up in favour of ſome Mahometan pirates, who carried him away one day as he was preaching by the ſea-ſide. After having been long ill treated by theſe barbarians, he had the good fortune to convert and baptiſe them, whereupon he made them devotees of the ſacred roſary.

[e] Giry's Life of St. Dominic. The bleſſed Virgin adviſed him to preach the roſary to Heretics, and to explain the 15. myſteries of it to them, &c. Several writers date the inſtitution of the roſary from this apparition of the bleſſed Virgin.

[f] Leo X. Pius V. Gregory XIII. Sixtus V.

As to the fraternity of it, the legendaries of the order of St. Dominic, as well as ſeveral others, aſſure us, that it owes its riſe to the holy founder of the roſary. He appointed it, as they ſay, by an order from the bleſſed Virgin in the time he was labouring to reduce the Albigeſe, and to exterminate Heretics. After the ſaint's death, the devotion of the roſary was wholly neglected; but Alanus de Rupe [s] revived it with great benefit, and for 15. years laboured to procure devotees to it. The fraternity is divided into two branches, one of which, that of the common roſary, is every week obliged to ſay the 15. diviſions of ten beads each, and to confeſs and communicate every firſt Sunday in the month. The brethren of it are beſides obliged to appear at all the proceſſions of the fraternity. The other branch is that of the perpetual roſary: the faithful of this fraternity are under very ſtrong engagements. The firſt duty of theſe is to repeat the roſary perpetually. That is, there is always ſome one of them, who is actually ſaluting the bleſſed Virgin in the name of the whole fraternity.

The ſcapulary forms another, which in matter of devotion no way yields in exactneſs to that, which we have already deſcribed. After many prayers and pious ſollicitations, the bleſſed Virgin gave the ſcapulary to Simon Stock, general of the Carmelites, in the ſame century, and almoſt at the ſame time, ſhe granted the roſary to St. Dominic; ſhe aſſured the holy man of her protection, promiſed to be propitious to all the faithful who ſhould join in the devotion of the ſcapulary, and to look upon them as her children; and engaged to ſave all ſuch as at the hour of death ſhould be found provided with ſo precious a pledge.

The ſcapulary of the Carmelites is a ſmall woollen habit, of a brown, ſubfuſk or tawny colour, that goes over the ſtomach, back and ſhoulders. It likewiſe conſiſts of two ſmall pieces of cloth three or four inches ſquare, tied together by two ribbands; and this is what the brethren of the devotion of the ſcapulary wear. We ſhall ſay nothing more of the miracles wrought by this excellent preſervative againſt the accidents of life, but ſhall refer to the legendaries, who have omitted nothing on this head.

The devotees of the ſcapulary celebrate its feſtival the 16. of July, a day likewiſe ſet apart to our Lady of mount Carmel. The bulls of the Popes have from time to time ſecured indulgences without number to them; but what will ſet the ſcapulary above all other practices of devotion, is the Sabbatin bull of John XXII. This Pope therein declares, that the bleſſed Virgin gave him a poſitive promiſe, one day as he was at prayers, that ſhe would deliver the Carmelites her children, and the brethren of the ſcapulary out of hell, on the Sunday after their death, upon three conditions; 1. To wear the ſcapulary to their death. 2. To preſerve their virginity, or at leaſt their continency, and to obſerve conjugal chaſtity. The Carmelite muſt fulfil theſe three points. It is enough for one of the fraternity to keep to that concerning marriage. 3. To repeat his canonical hours, or if he cannot read, to faſt on the days appointed by the church, and forbear eating fleſh every Wedneſday and Saturday round the year, except Chriſtmas-day, when it falls out on either of thoſe days. Theſe practices are difficult, it muſt be owned. Continence is the grand point, the want of which might ruin the vertue of the ſcapulary. What ſtruggles for a poor Carmelite, who by the rules of his order is obliged to wear it, on condition of ſubmitting at the ſame time to the gauling yoke of chaſtity! Can the ſufferings of a brother, who has made a vow to arm himſelf with it in order to ſave himſelf from hell, be deſcribed in their proper colours? How many temptations is he not obliged to combat?

As to the faithful of the fraternity of the ſcapulary, ſeveral Popes have remitted them the third part of their ſins. The chief or arch fraternity of our Lady of mount Carmel at Rome dreſs in a particular manner. A tawny coloured ſack is fixed to a cowl which covers the faces of the devout of the arch-fraternity, and falls down in a point as low as the girdle. The cowl has two holes made in it over againſt the eyes. The ſack is tied with a leathern girdle, the maſked devotoes ſhoulders are covered with a [h] camail or very ſhort cloak of red ſerge.

[s] In 1460. or thereabouts.

St. Francis's girdle forms the third fraternity. They who are acquainted with the extraordinary merit of this ſaint, and [i] all the perfect relations he bears to JESUS CHRIST, will eaſily imagine, that the Chriſtian who unites himſelf to God by the means of this girdle is the happieſt of all mortals. We look upon [k] St. Francis as a pattern of patience, chaſtity and humility. The ſtigmata or marks he received from a ſeraphin in his feet, hands and ſide, in memory of the wounds of JESUS CHRIST, prove the firſt of theſe virtues. The great extent of his poverty, and how he treated his miſerable [l] brother aſs, are beſides circumſtances well known. As to his chaſtity, no body is a ſtranger to the manner of his rolling his body in the ſnow, upon thorns, and [m] fire to preſerve to it its purity. In ſhort, both his wiſdom and humility were conſpicuous beyond all doubt, when he made himſelf be heard by the birds and fiſhes, to whom [n] he preached, and whilſt, in order to keep under a ſlight motion of impatience and pride, he forced frier Bernard de Quintavalle to ſet his foot on his throat.

St. Francis's girdle is that thick cord, that ſerves for that purpoſe to thoſe friars who live under the rule of that ſaint, and who are divided into different orders, tho' all children of St. Francis. This cord, after ſurrounding the friar's middle falls down almoſt to his feet, and is uſed by him as a whip to diſcipline himſelf with; to this end, it has very large knots at ſome diſtance from each other, eſpecially at the end, which an ingenious poet in one of his epigrams calls ſtings [o]. St. Francis's girdle has often cured the ſick, helped labours, fortified the health, procured children, and wrought an infinite number of other edifying miracles.

Of all the ſocieties devoted to St. Francis, that of the ſtigmata at Rome is the chief. A chirurgeon gave riſe to it at the cloſe of the 16. century, and ſoon drew after him a great number of devotees. After the ſtatutes of the fraternity were drawn up, it was called the arch or Chief Fraternity. The author of the Hiſtory of the religious Orders, has given an exact account of every thing relating to this fraternity, in the l. chapter of the 5. part of his work, to which we refer our reader; only obſerving here, that the members of the fraternity out of humility dreſs in a ſack of an aſh colour; that they tie this ſack with a thick cord adorned with a large chaplet of wood; that they [p] wear a ſcutcheon, whereon are the arms of St. Francis's order; that in proceſſions, they walk barefooted with wooden ſandals carrying a wooden croſs; and laſtly, that they cover their face with their cowl [q].

St. Auſtin's girdle, likewiſe unites a large number of devotees under the name of an Arch-Fraternity. It is of leather. The Auſtin friars aſſure us in a treatiſe written on the [h] Mozzetta.

[i] Vide Liber conformitatum S. Franciſci de Barthelmi of Piſa, or its abridgment, the Alcoran of the Cordeliers.

[k] He lived towards the cloſe of the 12. century.

[l] St. Francis called his body thus. Vide Giry's Lives of the Saints, Tom. II. Edit. of 1715.

[m] A very beautiful woman endeavoured to gain St. Francis's love, but he threw himſelf naked upon burning coals. This is my bed, ſaid he to her. The lady however was not in the humour to accept the man of God's courteſy, Lib. Conform. Fol. 113.

[n] He called an enraged wolf by the name of brother, and made him promiſe never to bite any one. The wolf too happy to get off at ſo cheap a rate, ſolemnly promiſed him he would obey him; and as a mark of his faith gave him his paw, Ibid.

[o] Vide Epigram 61. beginning à deux genoux, &c. in Rouſſeau's works, Tom. II. Ed. of 1716. It is ingenious, but the author talks in vain. However it is with this ſting that the brethren of St. Francis's order give battle to the fleſh; and drive the Devil out of hell. It were to be wiſhed too, that thoſe religious orders who are ſo happy as to enjoy any extraordinary means, able to inſpire Chriſtians with devotion, would exerciſe a little more charity and forbearance towards each other. It is but too common to ſee a Dominican ridiculing the girdle of St. Francis, or the ſcapulary of the Carmelites, in order to cry up the roſary. Are we to believe, that the ſcapulary or the girdle are not of equal virtue and dignity with the roſary? On the other hand, does St. Auſtin's girdle make fewer elect to the Lord than the Carmelite's ſcapulary? Theſe ideas are by no means charitable.

[p] Theſe are two arms croſſed over each other; the one naked, the other in a ſleeve, the hands bored with nails, and theſe are placed upon a wooden croſs. Hiſtory of Religious and Military Orders, chap. l. 5. part 4°. Edit. of 1718.

[q] Towards the end of the 16. century, Sixtus V. by a bull granted vaſt privileges to the fraternities of the girdle, and conſiderably augmented the indulgences of thoſe who took upon them to wear it. The bull directs, that the girdle deſigned for any of the faithful brethren ſhall receive the benediction of a prieſt of the order.

the ſubject of this fraternity, that the bleſſed Virgin, empreſs of men and angels, wore it on her reins. The law of nature, the written law, and the law of grace have all three enjoyed the benefit of uſing this girdle. It is probable, that our firſt parents who lived under the law of nature, being dreſſed in skins, muſt have worn a girdle of leather. (So that they were of the order of St. Auſtin.) As to its being uſed under the written law, it is not allowable to call it in doubt; the prophet Elias alſo wore it about his reins, it being written that he was girded with a girdle of leather. St. John Baptiſt wore it under the law of grace, which is proved without the leaſt difficulty.

St. Monica's girdle ought not to be forgotten. It has its virtues as well as that of St. Francis of Paula. This girdle has in it five knots, which all together are upon the ſame footing with thoſe of St. Francis's. We ſhall leave to the children of St. Francis of Paula, the glory of fixing all the advantages of their girdle. It is enough for us to have mentioned it here, for the edification of ſuch zealots as ſhall think proper to put themſelves under its protection. [t] The fraternity of the holy ſacrament at Rome acknowledges St. Francis of Paula for one of its patrons, and wears the girdle of the friars minims over their ſacks, which are of a violet colour.

From girdles let us go on to clothes. [f] Formerly it was an opinion, that a man could not die a good Chriſtian, if in the article of death he was not wrapped up in St. Francis's robe, or breathed his laſt in his cowl. Piety is ſince grown cold, now-a-days a man may die a Chriſtian without being cloathed like a monk; and be ſaved in his lay-habit. However, let us ſay one thing that ſeems to juſtify the indevotion of our days. [x] Neither the Scripture nor tradition prove that the dreſs of a friar has a privilege of putting the Chriſtian into the way of ſalvation. This is a ſpecious reaſon, but by ill luck Chriſtians build on this principle. They boldly advance, that it is allowable to believe, that without true piety any particular habit is to no purpoſe, and that wherever true piety is, the habit has much leſs vertue than a bottle that holds ſome excellent liquor. "Can "a monk (ſays one that has been accuſed of impiety) imagine, that there exhale from "his body corpuſcles of piety, which ſpread themſelves over his robe; and then pene-"trate directly to the heart of the dying man who is covered with that holy garment?" Such are the errors of our age! But notwithſtanding all theſe fallacious arguments, a friar convinced by cuſtom or ſtrength of imagination, of the divinity of his order, may with a very good conſcience ſet his harneſs next to baptiſm and the paſſion of our Lord. Libertiniſm and Hereſy oppoſe it to no purpoſe; thoſe three things will ever be of equal dignity.

CONTINUATION of the ſame SUBJECT: [u] FRATERNITIES.

WE have already ſpoken of ſome of theſe fraternities, which their founders ſet up againſt the ſocieties of the fleſh and the Devil. No body is ignorant, that the end of them is to join under one and the ſame livery, and to liſt under one ſtandard to make war upon the enemy of mankind. They attack him with a bravery, which outwardly promiſes much, but it is with theſe fraternities as with troops hired of a foreign prince. They fight againſt an enemy, who is not properly their own. Every fraternity has its rules, practices and forms of piety, arts of war, ſtratagems and diſcipline. The chief point is conſtantly to wear the marks of the ſociety into which any one enters. The new brother receives from the general of the fraternity his letters of adoption;

[s] Hiſtory of Religious and Military Orders, in 4°. 6. part xxxiv. chap.
[t] Thiers upon the moſt neceſſary of all devotions, ch. xxiii.
[f] Eſpecially in the 14. and 15. centuries.
[x] The Greeks and Romans afford us examples of the ſame kind of aſſociations in honour of their divinities, and ſome are to be found among the Eaſt-Indians.

adoption; after which, he has a ſhare in the flagellations, mortifications, and every other good work of the fraternity.

We ſhall here give ſeveral particulars relating to the fraternities of Chriſtendom, but yet without enlarging beyond bounds. A particular account would require a pretty large volume. Our own age has produced ſeveral new fraternities, of which we ſhall ſpeak: the preceding ones had not the air of novelty, which equally ſtrikes the devout man and the worldly man. There was a neceſſity for quickening the taſte of that celeſtial manna, which a ſucceſſion of many ages had rendered flat and inſipid enough. Nothing ſeems more eaſy than to pray to God at home with one's family, or to join with the reſt of the faithful in public devotion; but it is much more glorious to ſummon Chriſtians to their ſtandard, and march with colours flying towards heaven. Such perhaps is the riſe of a great number of theſe fraternities.

Italy, Spain and Portugal are the countries of Europe, where one ſees the greateſt number of theſe fraternities, of which many aſſume the name of Arch-fraternities as we have already obſerved. Theſe latter are, as it were, the mothers or ſuperiors of the reſt. [w] They communicate to them their rules and ſtatutes, their way of dreſs and privileges. Rome alone contains within her boſom a conſiderable number of theſe pious ſocieties, each of which has its church or oratory. Employments, arts, trades are exerciſed in a fraternity in this capital of religion, and every one therein puts himſelf under the protection of the ſaint whoſe ſtandard the brethren have ſet up. They march in proceſſion, ſays one author, [x] under thirty ſeven different banners; which, according to him, are the following.

" The officers of the Pope march under the banner of St. Martha.
" The mace-bearers of Cardinals under that of St. Catharine.
" [y] The train-bearers under that of our Lady of purity.
" The notaries under that of St. Bennet.
" The proctors under that of St. Euſtace.
" The clerks and other writers under that of St. Thomas.
" The painters under that of St. Luke.
" The [z] gravers, ſculptors, and ſtone-cutters under that of St. Leonard.
" The goldſmiths under that of [a] St. Eloi.
" The ſmiths and farriers under that of St. George.
" The curriers under that of St. Laurence.
" The coachmen under that of St. Lucia.
" The waggoners, &c. and meſſengers under that of S. Anaſtaſius.
" The carmen under that of St. Vincent.
" The grooms under that of St. Anne.
" The cow-keepers and tanners under that of St. Bartholomew [b].
" The butchers under that of St. Mary of the oak.
" The innkeepers under that of St. Euſtace.
" The vintners under that of St. Sylveſter.
" The wholeſale-merchants and woollen-drapers under that of St. Laurence.
" The mercers [c] under that of St. Sebaſtian.
" The druggiſts and apothecaries under that of St. Laurence [d] of Miranda. " The [w] Hiſtory of Religious and Military Orders, part 6. chap. xxxiv. [x] Tableau de la Cour de Rome.

[y] Eſtabliſhed in 1527. [z] This fraternity was erected in 1406. under the protection of the nine martyrs, ſculptors by profeſſion, &c. Clement VIII. approved their ſtatutes in 1596.
[a] St. Eloi, biſhop of Noion, formerly goldſmith to King Clotbaire II. famous in the writings both of ancient and modern legendaries. His application to God and religion in the midſt of the grandeurs of the court, with which he was ſurrounded, did not prevent his working at his trade; but he conſecrated his pious labours to relics. He made the ſhrines of ſeveral ſaints. Several fraternities in France and the Low-countries have the honour of his patronage.
[b] The fraternity of tanners is under the protection of this holy Apoſtle, becauſe he was flayed alive.
[c] To this fraternity belong the glovers, perfumers, skinners, workers in ſilk, cap-makers, &c.
[d] This church, which gives its name to the ſaint, was granted to the fraternity of apothecaries in 1430. by Pope Martin V. On St. Laurence's day the fraternity diſtribute 50. Roman crowns to a number of poor girls that are marriageable.

" [e] The phyſicians (barbers, bagnio-keepers) under that of St. Coſmus and St. Damian.
" The bombardeers under that of St. Mary Tranſpontina.
" The furriers under that of [f] St. Pantaleon.
" The ſadlers under that of St. Saviour.
" The ſhoemakers under that of St. Criſpin [g].
" The coblers under that of [h] St. Goodman.
" The joyners and carpenters under that of St. Joſeph.
" The bricklayers under that of St. Gregory.
" The bakers [i] under that of our Lady of Loretto.
" The coopers under that of St. Mary of the [k] chapel.
" The carders under that of St. Blaiſe.
" The workers in mixed manufactures under that of St. Mary of the gardens, and un" der the banners of St. Saviour, of the crucifix, of the Trinity, of St. Angelo, St. Ber-
" nard, St. Jerome, St. Lucia, St. Roe, St. Julian, St. Thomas, St. Mary of tears, and of the " forty crowned martyrs.
" Twenty fraternities, continues he, march under the banner of the holy ſacrament,
" one under that of the reſurrection, one under that [l] of mercy, one under that of piety,
" one under that of the ſuffrage, one under that of the Annunciation, one under that " of the roſary, one under that of the ſcapulary, one under that of the Saviour, one un" der that of the name of God, one under that of death.

To theſe fraternities we muſt add that of the hatters, who have St. James Major for their patron; that of the cooks erected by Pope Paul III. at the requeſt of his cook John of the Vallies; that of the butlers of the Cardinals; that of the [m] bookſellers, whoſe patrons are St. Thomas Aquinas, and [n] the bleſſed John de Dieu; that of the [o] fiſhmongers, whoſe protector is St. Andrew, on account of his being a fiſherman; that of the regraters; that of the braziers; that of the upholders, who exerciſe their trade under the protection of [p] St. Venant; that of the Dyers; [q] that of the weavers, &c. The Germans, Flemiſh, and Swiſs of his Holineſs's guard have likewiſe a fraternity.

[e] Their ſtatutes were approved by Sixtus IV. in 1494. St. Coſmus and St. Damian were brothers and phyſicians, and lived towards the cloſe of the third century.

[f] St. Pantaleon was a phyſician in the reign of Diocleſian.

[g] St. Criſpin and St. Criſpinian, both noble Romans under Diocleſian, made themſelves ſhoemakers, according to the legend, in order to bring over the Romans, and to endeavour to make converts of them. Theſe two ſaints lie buried at Soiſſons: and yet a church at Rome boaſts that it poſſeſſes them likewiſe. How can this be reconciled? It would be proper to open the ſhrines, and ſee whether they both do not contain different parts of thoſe two bodies. In reality, the ſafeſt way is to believe ſo; for theſe ſanctuaries are not eaſily medled with. This way of reaſoning we owe to F. Giry author of The Lives of the Saints, printed at Paris in 1715.

[h] The taylors and not the coblers. Their patron is St. Homobuono, canoniſed by the church. The feſtival of this ſaint and taylor is celebrated on the 13. of November.

[i] Eſtabliſhed in 1500 under the pontificate of Alexander VI.

[k] St. Mary in Capella, a word corrupted from Copella, a ſort of barrel.

[l] A fraternity of black penitents inſtituted in 1488. It aſſiſts criminals at their execution, has them buried and the ſervice for the dead ſaid for them.

[m] Erected in 1600. by a Jacobin, maſter of the ſacred palace, and in that quality cenſor of books.

[n] John de Dieu flouriſhed at the beginning of the 16. century. He was a ſhepherd to the age of 22. and then a ſoldier. As a puniſhment for not having ſaid the roſary and his other devotions, he fell off his horſe, and hurt himſelf one day when he was gone to forage. Vide Giry, Life of the bleſſed John de Dieu. By the account of his life it appears he was much fitter to make a good ſoldier, than a great ſaint. His negligence had like to have coſt him his life; however, he was caſhiered, and forced to turn ſhepherd again; yet he ventured once more to turn ſoldier, and with more ſucceſs, ſays Father Giry, this being a juſt war. In a tempeſt he reſolved to imitate Jonas, and like him be thrown into the ſea. They were going to take him at his word, but an Ave Mary opportunely repeated brought him off. He long run the race of ſanctity, till being upon a journey, he turned bookſeller, or rather, hawker. He ſold paper, images, catechiſms, and at the ſame time made exhortations to virtue. This pious bookſeller, who perhaps will never have his fellow, thus ſanctified a profeſſion, the piety of which has never made any great noiſe in the world. He then took a ſhop in Granada, and ſome time after left it to run about the ſtreets crying out mercy. He was taken for a madman, and treated as ſuch, and did all he could to perſuade the world he was ſo. One day as he was ſinging the ſalve Regina before our Lady, ſhe drew the curtain that hid her, to do him the honour to look at him. The Sexton ran in, and would have beaten one whom he took for a thief, but his leg withered, nor could he recover the uſe of it again, but by the interceſſion of this bleſſed man.

[o] Eſtabliſhed in 1571.

[p] What procured St. Venant the direction of this trade is his martyrdom. He was thrown down a precipice. On this account he is invoked againſt falls, to which the upholſterers are often expoſed.

[q] Set up in 1517.

Pope Clement VII. inſtituted the arch-fraternity of charity. This ſociety, which cannot be too much praiſed for its charity, makes a general proviſion for the wants of the poor, whatever they be. It diſtributes bread amongſt them every Saturday, cauſes maſs to be ſaid, and the ſacraments to be adminiſtred to priſoners, gives portions to forty poor maids on the feaſt of St. Jerome patron of the fraternity, and does many other good works.

The fraternity, or rather, the arch-fraternity of death buries ſuch dead as are abandoned by all the world, and cauſes maſſes to be celebrated for them.

St. Catharine of Sienna receives the ſpiritual homages of the fraternity of the Sienneſe her countrymen in the church bearing her name. This charitable fraternity on the ſecond Sunday in May, accompanies a figure of this ſaint in proceſſion, and crowns with laurel one criminal whom it ſaves from a halter or from the gallies. This is a privilege granted by a Pope of the ſame country.

The fraternity of the name of Mary was erected in 1683. in memory of the raiſing the ſiege of Vienna.

St. Mary of the Suffrage is at the head of a fraternity [r] which bears her name. The brethren of it engage to eaſe the ſouls in purgatory, and by their prayers to procure them the ſuffrages of the bleſſed. Without entring into farther particulars, it ſhall ſuffice us barely to mention the fraternities of the holy Apoſtles, of the Agonizants, of [s] the ſouls in purgatory, who ſtand in particular need of the maſſes of the faithful ſtill on earth, of St. Marcellus and St. Giles, of our Lady of the people, of the reſurrection, of St. Saviour of the Lateran, of St. Saviour at the Sancta Sanctorum; the arch-fraternity [t] of the immaculate conception of the Virgin; that [u] of the holy ſacrament and of the five wounds of our Saviour, that of the [w] Trinity of pilgrims. This fraternity takes particular care of pilgrims, and defrays their charges for three days. [x] The fraternity of the Piedmonteſe regards the holy handkerchief as the grand object of their devotion; that of the [y] Annunciation peculiarly honours the bleſſed Virgin, and redoubles its homages to her on the day of the Annunciation.

The fraternity of Gonfalon acknowledges St. Bonaventure for its founder, who in the year 1264. gave it the name of the brethren recommended to the Virgin, and ordered them [z] a white dreſs with a red and white croſs on the ſhoulder; from whence they are called the white penitents. [a] They aſſumed the name of Gonfalon, to ſhew their zeal for their country and liberty, on an occaſion wherein they cauſed juſtice to be done againſt the violence and oppreſſion of the Roman nobility.

Towards the middle of the laſt century, Michael Buch, ſurnamed the Good Henry, a poor ſhoemaker by trade, took upon himſelf the trouble of bringing back the ſhoemakers, his brethren, to piety. He was of Luxembourg. We omit all the wonders of his life, that we may only mention the community he eſtabliſhed. With all his zeal, perhaps he had paſſed his life in his endeavours to reform the company of ſhoemakers without noiſe and in obſcurity, had he not had the good fortune to be courted by a gentleman of note. It was the baron De Renti, who produced him to the world, without being prevented by the meanneſs of his trade. The baron procured the Good Henry his freedom. He opened ſhop at Paris, took journey-men and apprentices, without any other intent but to teach them how to pray to God; thus the ſhoemaker's ſhop ſoon became a ſeminary whither people flocked to ſerve an apprenticeſhip of devotion. His ſociety was reſolved upon and formed in 1645. M. De Renti was declared protector of the new corporation, and the Good Henry, father of this inſtitution, at once mounted from [r] In 1592. [s] Dell' anime più biſognoſe del purgatorio. [t] Formed in 1465.

[u] Formed in 1501. [w] Formed about 1550. under the direction of St. Philip Neri.
[x] Eſtabliſhed in 1597. in the pontificate of Clement VIII. [y] Set up by Cardinal Turrecremata.
[z] This dreſs is a robe of cloth or ſerge called a ſack, tied with a girdle. A pointed cowl covers the brother's or penitent's face, except two holes for his eyes. All the brethren wear an eſcutcheon over the ſack, whereon appears the image of the patron, or the livery of the fraternity.
[a] Vide History of Religious and Military Orders, part 6. chap. xxxiv.

from a ſhoemaker to a ſuperior. Such is the origin of the community of the brothers ſhoemakers, which in 1647. was ſucceeded by that of the brothers taylors; likewiſe under the protection of the Good Henry. Several of the ſame nature were ſet up in ſome other towns in France.

The [b] fraternity of mercy at Lisbon is too famous to be omitted. It is compoſed of perſons of the greateſt quality in the State, and the King himſelf is a member of it. This numerous fraternity, which extends its branches all over the kingdom, ſecures a great number of maſſes to the faithful, but chiefly to its own members.

The particulars we have given, are ſufficient to ſhew the nature of faternities. Many devotees believe, that by entring into them, they are much ſurer of their ſalvation, that certain liveries are eſſential and ſure ſigns of their Chriſtianity, and that there is no true piety, but that of their ſocieties. It would be an unlucky circumſtance for ſome religious orders for their devotees to be undeceived.

CONTINUATION of the ſame SUBJECT: PENANCES, PRAYERS, PILGRIMAGES.

WE ſhould be in the wrong to compare the penances of our age to that of the primitive Chriſtians. They were ſtrangers to the cuſtom of whipping themſelves in public, and imploring the divine mercy with a maſk on their face, and a rope about their neck; [c] Chriſtians in drawers, almoſt naked to the waiſt, and mangling their ſhoulders at every ſtep, loaded beſides with a croſs and chains, their arms tied [d] to a piece of wood of an enormous weight, in order to exhibit an holy repreſentation of the crucifixion of our Lord, might, perhaps, have converted a thouſand and a thouſand times more idolaters than the apoſtolic ſimplicity. We ſhall ſay nothing of thoſe who wear on their head a crown of thorns in honour of JESUS CHRIST, who tear their bodies with ſcourges, and ſteel nails, [e] who turn the points of their naked ſwords againſt their breaſts, or make themſelves deep wounds for the ſake of God. Can Chriſtianity be carried farther, than voluntarily to ſuffer evils which the Saviour of mankind never expected or required?

[f] In Spain and Portugal many devotees do penance by proxy. They have people hired to diſcipline themſelves in their ſtead, who laſh themſelves with all the ſeverity of a devotee who is puniſhing himſelf for his ſins, and would pay what he thinks he owes God at the expence

[b] Irmendada de Miſericordia.
[c] Theſe penances are to be ſeen in Italy and Spain, during Lent and Paſſion-week.
[d] This is practiſed in Catalonia.
[e] Dellon's Travels, Tom. I. Edit. of 1709.
[f] It is not in Spain and Portugal only that penances by proxy are in uſe. They are to be found in Provence and Italy too. It is ſome years ſince one James Zeger exerciſed this charitable trade in ſome of the towns of Brabant. This man whipped himſelf till the blood came in preſence of the ſinner, provided he gave him ſomething to buy cordial liquors before he began the operation, beſides what he received for the penance. He had, ſay they, two daughters, who likewiſe did penances, as well for ladies as for wives and maids of common rank, who had wherewith to pay for them. He had fixed the price of ſuch faſts as he was to go thro', according as they were more or leſs difficult; he had ten pence for a faſt where he was to eat no meat. Thirty for one of bread and water, but for penances wherein he was to whip himſelf, and other acts of piety of this nature, there was no ſet price; there an agreement was to be made beforehand. He laid his regiſter before the penitent, and ſhewed him the agreements he was uſed to make. A penance of four uſual faſts; the repeating 52. Ave Maries a day; penance of 25. laſhes on Friday after midnight, with a miſerere mei Deus; a faſt of bread and water on Wedneſday, with three magnificats repeated before ſun riſing; a penance of five roſaries repeated at twelve at noon, with the ſeven penitential Pſalms, and the litanies of all the ſaints. Other penances; to hear three ſucceſſive maſſes in the church of the Jeſuits, before St. Ignatius, bare knee'd on the marble; to ſtand upright with the two arms extended before an image of the bleſſed Virgin, from one to two a clock at night; to go round the holy ſacrament barefoot, without reſting but at every hundred ſteps; to pull 150. hairs off his head at the door of the Carmelites church, where one muſt be between two and three a clock in the morning, and there repeat 150. Ave Maries; give himſelf 25. laſhes, whilſt he repeated the Domine ne in furore to beati quorum; to ſay 250. Ave Maries, and 5. times the laudate Dominum, bare knee'd on a board ſtrewed with ſand; to lie three nights naked and without a ſhirt in ſheets with cow-itch on them, viz. Monday, Wedneſday and Saturday. We ſhall go no farther in this account which does no honour to true Chriſtianity. Theſe practices, far from being commanded, are deſpiſed by all ſincere Chriſtians, and forbidden by all paſtors who intend to honour religion.

expence of his body. During theſe ſevere penances, the women, who are piouſly examining the whole merit of them, [g] cry out and weep with all their might. They likewiſe bruiſe their breaſt and face with blows, tear their hair, and with an eager zeal reproach ſuch who do not laſh themſelves hard enough. On the other hand, the penitents reſume freſh courage by drinking, and whilſt they are giving themſelves ſome relaxation from their acts of piety, the flaggons of wine paſs and repaſs from hand to hand; the women penitents regale their patients with liquors and refreſhments; then they begin afreſh to weep, beg God's mercy, and invoke all the ſaints of paradiſe. This mixture of penances and tipling, has nothing ſhocking in it in countries where they ſincerely believe, that the Chriſtian religion requires ſuch a behaviour; and if we add to that the temper of the people, the warmth of the climate producing exceſſive and extravagant ideas in an heated brain, and the impreſſions received from their paſtors, it muſt neceſſarily be owned, that nothing is more reaſonable, or elſe reſolve to be burnt alive.

[h] The abbot Boileau goes no higher than the eleventh century, for the riſe of flagellations in penancé. It is then, ſays he, that a pack of fellows wrapped up in cowls, armed themſelves with whips and rods to appeaſe the divinity by flagellations extremely rough and ſevere. It appears, that at that time they impoſed on themſelves the moſt heavy taſks of devotion, and exceſſive penances. In ſhort, ſcourging grew to ſuch an height, that in the thirteenth century there ſtarted up a ſect of flagellants, who walked two and two at proceſſions thro' the towns, and whipped themſelves in public in a manner much leſs edifying than worthy compaſſion. This ſort of devotion ſeiſed upon the women. They too whipped themſelves, but that they might give no offence to the public, they did it in their chambers. [i] Fourſcore years after the riſe of this ſect, there ſprung up another, pretending they had received a commiſſion from God to ſcourge themſelves for the ſins of mankind. Nay the very children formed a ſociety of flagellants among themſelves. From the beforementioned author it appears, that theſe good people pretty ſharply cenſured the vices and remiſſneſs of Chriſtians; and yet it cannot be denied, but this ſurpriſing devotion had a great deal of fanaticiſm in it.

Such was in a manner the riſe of flagellation, which [k] the people of Italy, Spain and Portugal have adopted into their public and private penances, and which many religious orders practiſe in their convents. We ſhall have occaſion once more to ſpeak of penance, when we come to the ſacrament of confeſſion; and ſhall deſcribe the proceſſion of the Spaniſh diſciplinants in the article concerning proceſſions.

Nothing appears more neceſſary than prayer. It is a part of all religions, but if the external form be not attended with internal ſentiments of virtue, all its regularity muſt be looked upon as a cuſtom or ceremony, and it is under this quality, that it has a place in our diſſertation. As a ceremony, then, are we to conſider the prayer of ſuch, as being enrolled in any fraternity, religiouſly obſerve all its ſtatutes, and yet make no ſcruple of giving themſelves up to all ſorts of vices; of ſuch, who at the hour of death wrap themſelves up in a monk's robe, and give to convents that patrimony which they rob their [g] Dellon, Ibid. [h] Hiſtory Flagell. Cap. vii. [i] Chronicle cited by the abbot Boileau, Ibid.

[k] In Italy penitents are diſtinguiſhed by their colours. They are formed into ſeveral fraternities under the name of blew, green, purple, grey, black and white penitents. During Paſſion-week the brethren of them whip themſelves in cadence with whips of ſmall cords, which, they ſay, make more noiſe than wounds. If this be the caſe, their penance is not performed with ſo much ſincerity as that of the Bramins and Faquirs, or of the Heathens of antiquity. We ſhall not carry the compariſon farther, for fear of making it odious; but ſince we are upon the article of penance, we muſt put the reader upon obſerving, that it is, if we may be allowed the expreſſion, more whimſical and external in ſuch religions, the worſhip of which requires a great preparation, many prieſts, and practices. It is of the ſame character too in thoſe who retire from the world, and to grow friends with God endeavour to become enemies to mankind. It is ſuch, in ſhort, in thoſe countries where the brain heated by the warmth of the climate is eaſily overcharged with odd and extravagant ideas. To theſe principles are to be aſcribed the penances of the Mexicans, and Eaſt-Indians, thoſe of the Greeks and old Romans, whom Minutius Felix reproaches, that in offering the Gods their own blood, and praying to them by the mouths of their wounds, they were not in their right ſenſes. As to modern flagellations, Polydore Virgil has the aſſurance to compare them to the Lupercales, which were celebrated with the whip in hand, and the face masked. He adds, that the Egyptians whipped themſelves with rods at the celebration of certain ſacrifices.

their neareſt relations of; of ſuch as deliver themſelves up to devotion, as ſoon as they find their ſenſual appetites are of no farther uſe to them. This ſpecimen gives a pretty juſt idea of what we call prayer of ceremony, and what may be ſtiled a compliment made to the Deity. We ſhall leave a more particular account to confeſſors.

[l] In the rank of cuſtoms muſt be put, the practice of wearing particular prayers about one, which may be regarded as a ſuperſtitious relic of amulets; that of praying exactly at the ſame hour, and always in the ſame poſture, or elſe in the moſt difficult and uneaſy that can be imagined; that of confining oneſelf to ſay a particular prayer, [m] during a certain number of days, &c.

" The vows and pilgrimages made to the tombs of the martyrs and other ſaints, to " churches, chapels and other places of devotion, are of great antiquity, and authoriſed " by the teſtimony of the fathers and other eccleſiaſtical writers. [n] So M. Thiers expreſſes " himſelf. But, adds he, to imagine one cannot be perfect without going in pilgrimage " to holy places, or that becauſe pilgrimages are made to holy places, and vows and prayers " are offered there, we ſhall obtain from God what we aſk of him by the interceſſion " of ſuch ſaints as we call upon, that we ſhall be certainly freed from the evils and " pains we ſuffer, that we ſhall be exempted from ſin, ſhall die in the grace of God, " and be ſaved, tho' we lead a common life ---- all this is a groſs error." We are of opinion, that without ſtirring from home, we may eaſily remember the ſaints, imitate their virtues without running from one place to another, and pray to God without viſiting all the churches of a town.

We have juſt ſaid, that the moſt famous pilgrimages were formerly thoſe to the Holy Land. Rome, Compoſtella, Loretto are the moſt celebrated now-a-days. We have already ſpoken of that to Rome under the name of the jubilee. Devotees go to Compoſtella to viſit the relics of St. James Major, known to the vulgar by the name of St. James in Galicia. They go to Loretto to viſit our Lady.

This is what a writer [o] of good note tells us concerning this apoſtle, the object of the pilgrim's devotion. " St. James [p] patron of all Spain, has for theſe nine hundred years " reſted in the Metropolitan church of Compoſtella. The figure of this holy apoſtle is upon " the high altar; it is a ſmall wooden buſt with 40. or 50. white tapers continually " burning before it. The --- pilgrims kiſs the figure three times, and put their hats " upon his head with a reſpectful devotion. In the church one finds hanging thirty " lamps of ſilver always burning, and ſix large candleſtics likewiſe of ſilver, five foot " high given by Philip III. All round the church are fine platforms of large free-ſtones " for walking, and above it is another of the ſame kind, whither the pilgrims aſcend " and fix ſome piece of their cloaths to a ſtone-croſs raiſed thereon. They beſides per- " form another ceremony not leſs particular. They thrice paſs under this croſs thro' ſo " ſmall a hole, that they are forced to ſlide thro' with their ſtomach againſt the pavement; " ſo that they who are never ſo little too fat have a great deal to ſuffer; and yet thro " they muſt go, if they will obtain the indulgence annexed thereto. This is the ſtrait gate " of

[l] Vide Thiers concerning the moſt neceſſary of all devotions, chap. xxi.

[m] Vide Ibid. what the author ſays of the thirty days prayer, and of that of 33. days.

[n] Concerning the moſt neceſſary of all devotions, chap. xxiii. The journies, that have ſince been ſtiled pilgrimages, began in the reign of Conſtantine the Great. They became much more frequent towards the cloſe of the 4. century, but they were nothing in compariſon of the pilgrimages of the ſucceeding centuries. The tenth grew famous for thoſe of the Holy Land, which at laſt gave birth to the cruſades. We ought to reckon as pilgrimages, thoſe ſolemn devotions which the Jews, who lived any diſtance from Jeruſalem, went to pay, at leaſt once a year in that capital of Judea, as alſo the voyages of the devout under ancient Paganiſm, to conſult the oracle of Apollo at Delphos, of Jupiter Ammon in Africa, of Serapis in Egypt; and of Trophonius in Boeotia at the cave which went under his name.

[o] The abbot Vayrac's Etat de l'Eſpagne, Tom. I. Dutch Edit. 1719.

[p] The body of St. James has been at Compoſtella ever ſince the beginning of the ninth century, and ſince then has performed great miracles there. Tamayo de Salazar quoted by F. Giry aſſures us, that this Apoſtle has honoured the Kings and Princes of Spain, ſo far as to appear 15. different times to them all, which have been conſtantly ſucceeded by ſome conſiderable advantage. For inſtance, he one day put himſelf at the head of the troops of a King of Spain, and himſelf leading them againſt the Moors, mounted on a white horſe defeated 70000. of thoſe Infidels. Many ages before, Caſtor and Pollux, mounted likewiſe on white horſes, came to the aſſiſtance of the Romans againſt the Latins.

" of the Goſpel, thro' which the pilgrims enter into the path of ſalvation." There have been ſeen ſome, ſays the author of the Delices de l'Eſpagne, who having forgot to paſs " under the ſtone-croſs, have gone back above 500. leagues on account of this pious ce- " remony." The French pilgrims have a chapel in the ſame church.

Another writer, a Proteſtant indeed, has given us a very pretty turned deſcription of the devotions of Loretto. Without taking notice of thoſe little touches of Hereſy, which good Catholics will find in it, we are of opinion we may inſert it here. It is well known, that the [q] Caſa Santa of our Lady of Loretto is ſurrounded by an encloſure, all round which are a vaſt number of lights. It is by this circumſtance, that pilgrims juſt landed begin to diſcover the holy houſe. The proceſſion is performed on their knees by going [r] round [s] the ſplendid palace of our Lady. " Some, ſays [r] our Proteſtant author, go five " times, ſome ſeven, and others twelve times round it, according to the myſtery they " are pleaſed to find in the number. Fancy to yourſelf forty or fifty perſons, men, wo- " men, and children, all of them trotting on their knees one way, and a like number " meeting them as they go to the other. Each has a chaplet in his hand, and mut- " ters out his pater-noſters; in the mean while they all endeavour to get as near the wall " as they can, as well to ſhorten the way, as to be near the holy place, which makes " them often run againſt each other, and cauſes a great deal of confuſion. This is " only when there are a few. The great reſort thither is at Eaſter, and towards the " nativity of the Virgin, which is fixed in the month of September. Then there is " an abſolute neceſſity for taking other meaſures. I can ſcarce venture to tell you one " thing, that appears almoſt incredible, and yet is affirmed as abſolutely true, which is, " that in the years of the greateſt concourſe, there have ſeveral times been reckoned to " the number of two hundred thouſand pilgrims and upwards, during theſe two feſti- " vals.

" Nothing can be imagined more pleaſant than the caravans of he and ſhe pilgrims, " when theſe caravans arrive in bodies of fraternities. Several fraternities of Bologna, " for inſtance, join in order to go the pilgrimage in a company. Each ſociety puts on " its ſack of common linen, with a cowl that covers the whole head, and has three " holes for the eyes and mouth ---- Nor are forgotten the vaſt chaplets, girdles, " ſtaves and arms of the fraternity, either painted or embroidered, [u] and which are " worn before and behind upon the back and breaſt of each brother. Thoſe pilgrims " thus equipped mount upon aſſes. Theſe aſſes have a reputation of ſanctity, upon ac- " count of their frequent pilgrimages They hardly ever ſtumble, or if by accident they " do, it is, as they ſay, without any danger to the pilgrim. So much for the men. " The women dreſs as fine as is poſſible, and tie a ſmall ſtaff of the length of a hand " to [q] The Santa Caſa, on which the Italians beſtow the moſt lofty epithets, is the houſe wherein the bleſſed Virgin was born, betrothed and married. There happened the annunciation of the birth of the Son of God, and his incarnation. More than thirteen centuries had paſſed ſince this houſe had ſtood at Nazareth, when in 1291. the angels lifted it up and carried it into Dalmatia. At the end of three years and ſeven months they once more took it up and carried it into the territory of Recanati. If the legend writers may be credited, it was there that celeſtial concerts were heard, the harmony of which drew thither the inhabitants of the neighbourhood; the ſame writers add, that all nature rejoiced at the tranſlation of this holy houſe, and that the very trees of the foreſt bowed down before it; and yet it remained here but eight months, after which it was tranſported a little farther. But ſcarce were four months paſſed, when the angels carried it away for the fourth and laſt time. They then fixed it where it now ſtands, and where a church has been built, in the midſt of which ſtands the Caſa Santa. Beſides, it is ſurrounded by four walls, which encloſe without touching it. Some legendaries make a miracle of this ſeparation, nor is this ſurpriſing, ſince the building materials, ornaments, and images of it are all miraculous. The chaplets rubbed againſt it, the handkerchiefs and other pieces of linen that have touched any thing that depends on this ſacred building, likewiſe become inſtruments of miracles. We muſt not omit informing the reader, that all the original inhabitants of Loretto are deſcended from people who ſaw the Santa Caſa arrive, and they want but little of being capable of being ſaints themſelves.

[r] The Mahometans, who go in pilgrimage to Mecca, muſt turn ſeven times round the famous moſque in that city. Vide Reland. de Relig. Mahom.

[s] Regia, this is the expreſſion of an Italian writer.

[t] Miſſon's Voyage to Italy, Tom. I. Edit. Holl. 1702.

[u] See what has already been ſaid hereon.

" to their ſtays: [w] This ſtaff gives occaſion for a world of pretty thoughts, and contri" butes to the mirth and entertainment of the journey. Theſe fraternities of ladies ride
" in chaiſes, and the ſeveral ſquadrons of the riders on aſſes eſcort and ſurround them.
" Is it not pretty to ſee theſe devout merry-andrews thus mounted and equipped, make " a hundred poſtures and curvets accompanied with buffoon ſongs to divert their lady-
" pilgrims? Be not ſurpriſed to ſee women take this liberty. The pretence of devotion
" ----- is a reaſon able to drag them out of their uſual confinement; and beſides I make
" no doubt, but each of them has at leaſt about her ſome brother or ſpy." It may be ſaid in this regard, that Spain is proof againſt this jealous precaution; if it be true, that there the huſband is ſo diſcreet as to withdraw [x] whilſt madam is at her devotion with a reverend father.

To theſe pilgrimages we might add ſeveral others very famous, from which [y] pilgrims never return without acquiring extraordinary benefits. Such is the viſit made by certain devotees to our Lady of the ſeven ſorrows at Nivelles, but it ſhall ſuffice to have hinted at this our Lady, as well as at the pilgrimage of the devout Flemings to this ſame city, there to implore the ſuccour of [z] St. Gertrude. It would be to no purpoſe to mention any others; beſides can we flatter ourſelves that we can exhauſt ſo fruitful a ſubject?

CONTINUATION of the ſame SUBJECT: PROCESSIONS, NINE-DAY DEVOTIONS, RETIREMENTS, FOUNDATIONS.

WE are going to deſcribe thoſe religious marches commonly known by the name of proceſſions, and ſhall begin [a] with that which the inhabitants of Nivelles annually perform in honour of S. Gertrude. On the day of the dedication of St. Michael the archangel, after ſinging maſs, the ſhrine of St. Gertrude is carried early in the morning to the entrance of the church of the canoneſſes on the weſt-ſide. It is placed upon a chariot adorned with paintings, that conſiſt of emblems and allegories which the beaux

[w] There are ſome, ſays the author in the margin of his account, of gold, ſilver, ebony, ivory, artificial flowers; and ſeveral ſet off with pearls and other jewels, &c.

[x] They add, that the friar leaves his ſandals at the door, to give notice to the husband not to diſturb his wife's devotion.

[y] In the ſame manner as in ſome Chriſtian countries penances are done by proxy, ſo there are pilgrimages for which there is a diſpenſation without any prejudice to ſalvation, provided one of the hired devotees before mentioned takes upon him the commiſſion of performing it. A woman of Liege, named Nicole, was, as is reported, famous ſome years ago for commiſſions of this kind; nay, it was a common ſaying at Bruſſels, that if Nicole could not ſucceed in obtaining what ſhe asked by her ſpiritual elevations, it was to no purpoſe to employ prieſt or monk. Her chamber was always crouded with ſervants, who came to have pilgrimages written down for their maſters or miſtreſſes, and viſits to he and ſhe ſaints. She had likewiſe a world of cuſtom among the citizens wives and daughters, who came to conſult her about what they ſhould ask of the bleſſed Virgin. She talked learnedly of the power of ſaints, and of what they had done for her. The good and pious Nicole was the mother of a ſon and daughter brought up to the ſame trade, and they were perpetually abroad upon penances and pilgrimages. Madam Nicole, like the abovementioned James Zegers, kept a journal of the debts contracted with heaven for the diſengaging of ſinners; and thus ſhe kept her accounts. To go in pilgrimage bareſoot from my houſe to our Lady at Hall, then have three ſucceſſive maſſes ſaid to her, and at each maſs offer a taper of a reaſonable weight, &c. To perform a nine-days devotion to our Lady de bon ſecours, with a taper in one hand, and roſary in the other. To recommend the young lady, whom I have beforementioned to her. To make a viſit to St. Brice, and beſeech him from a great lady, to have the goodneſs to take her husband off his debauched courſe of life. A prayer to St. Eloi for a young lady. A viſit to St. Marcow, to beg him to cure an old lady of the itch. A penance for a lady condemned to hold her mouth open as wide as ſhe can, without ſhutting it from noon to one a clock, and who is then to repeat 52. Ave Maries with an Inviolata Integra, &c. ---- for having ſpoken ill of ſome eccleſiaſtics, &c.

[z] This ſaint diſtinguiſhed herſelf from her infancy. Afterwards Itta her mother, become a widow, turned nun, and reſolved her daughter ſhould be ſo too. It was in this retired ſtate, that St. Gertrude finiſhed the conſecrating herſelf to God, and became one of the greateſt ornaments of the church. One of the legend writers has moſt judiciouſly obſerved, that this ſaint made her appearance in the world at the ſame time with Mahomet. An admirable proof of God's Providence, who was pleaſed to make uſe of St. Gertrude to ſupport religion in the Weſt, at the ſame time as it was ſinking in the Eaſt. Another proof of the truth of this obſervation, is the name of Gertrude (Gartrout) which ſignifies perfectly faithful, or a perfect believer. Vide Ryckel already quoted.

[a] This deſcription is taken from the Hiſtory of St. Gertrude by Ryckel, 4°. Ed. of Bruſſels, 1637.

beaux eſprits of the city endeavour to furniſh out in the moſt ingenious manner poſſible in honour of the patroneſs of the place. This chariot is drawn by ſix horſes with rich harneſſes. But before the ſaints march this is a ceremony obſerved.

Whilſt the horſes that are to draw the chariot are making ready, St. Gertrude's ſhrine is committed to the cuſtody and care of the ſuperior of the canoneſſes of Nivelles, ſovereign of the town both in ſpirituals and temporals. The magiſtrates receive this celeſtial treaſure of the ſuperior, having firſt deſired of her the honour of carrying it in proceſſion. Then the march begins in the following order.

Three companies of burghers accompany the triumphal car of the ſaint. At the head of the proceſſion, march the children of St. Francis with the croſs in the habits of religious warfare, and covered with their cowls; the Guilielmites, the ſingers, the canons and canoneſſes of St. Gertrude: The Lady ſuperior with ſome of the old canoneſſes cloathed in blew follow in a coach. During the march the ſaint's praiſes are ſung, and when they are got to the entrance of Mons ſtreet, the Veni Creator is begun; followed by the reſponſes ſung by the choir. Then the muſic makes a pauſe, and in the mean while an innumerable croud of people, as well citizens as ſtrangers, flock in from all parts in order to join the proceſſion. The moſt devout preſs thro' the croud, and come barefoot to implore the ſaint's aſſiſtance. Each endeavours to obtain the firſt favours, all imagine they have obtained them; and this is doubtleſs what the Scripture calls forcing the kingdom of heaven. The magiſtrates, nobility, and perſons of the firſt quality in the city appear at the proceſſion on horſeback. The ſinging goes on, which was interrupted for a few moments, the hymn to the Trinity is ſung, &c. After a ſhort march, they meet another troop of the faithful. It is the proceſſion of St. Barbara. As they go round the city, hymns and reſponſes are ſung in honour of the Virgin, of St. Michael, and all the angels. Whilſt they are ſinging they come before the chapel of St. Anne, where they begin the ſeven penitential Pſalms and the Litanies, which they continue to ſing till they come to our Lady of the ſeven ſorrows, and there our devotees halt, and refreſh themſelves.

The ſignal is given, they fall into their ranks, and the proceſſion goes on, which is to continue two hours longer at leaſt. The whole pious march has laſted five, and it is eleven when they enter Nivelles. Then the ſhrine of the ſaint is returned to the Lady ſuperior with all requiſite ſolemnity. There is ſtill another proceſſion made round the church, into which they at laſt enter in order to ſing Te Deum: After which the ſuperior reſtores the depoſit, which had been committed to her care, to the chapter.

During the octave of St. Michael, the canoneſſes are day and night to repeat the office in preſence of the relics of St. Gertrude: but on the ninth day they are reſtored to their proper place. Six canons in white ſtoles perform the ceremony. Care is taken never but on urgent neceſſities to expoſe or carry in proceſſion the precious remains of a body wherein once reſided a ſoul of the firſt order. Our author obſerves, that the preparation of the proceſſion has often appeaſed the Divinity. And indeed, is there any thing to be ſeen more worthy of the ſupreme Majeſty, than the march of a numerous troop of devotees, who, with their eyes fixed on the ſhrine of ſome bleſſed ſaint, expect with a holy impatience that the grace of God will exhale from that ſacred body, and ſpread itſelf over them like a ſalutary balm?

On the day after Pentecoſt the fraternity of St. Gertrude perform another proceſſion in honour of their patroneſs; of this we ſhall ſay a word or two on account of its ſingularity. The march is opened with a horſeman well mounted, who carries behind him a beautiful maiden dreſſed like a devotee, repreſenting St. Gertrude. A nimble merry Devil curvets and capers before the fictitious ſaint, and every now and then does his utmoſt to diſconcert her gravity. After her come ſeveral young girls with the image of the bleſſed Virgin; theſe are followed by the croſs-bow-men of St. Catharine, and ſeveral other orders.

Of

Of a great number of Spaniſh proceſſions, that of the Diſciplinants, or whippers, which is on [b] Good Friday, is one of the moſt remarkable. It perfectly ſhews the genius of the nation naturally turned to an exceſs in devotion, and [c] pleaſed with every thing that has an appearance of piety. All the religious orders, all the ſeveral courts of juſtice at Madrid, all the companies of trades; nay, the very comedians, whom the church however looks upon as prophane, are obliged to be at it.

The King is often at it, attended by the whole court. Each Lord has his footmen there, carrying flambeaux. The preparations for this ceremony are truly ſad and melancholy. His Catholic Majeſty's guards march with their arms covered with mourning. Men in mourning and maſked play on ſeveral muſical inſtruments. The drums covered with black, beat a mournful march to ſignify the death of the Saviour of mankind. The languiſhing ſound of the trumpets awakens the ſorrow of the penitents, and the banners and croſſes covered with crape, have the ſame effect on the devout heart; but nothing better raiſes devotion than the pondrous machines deſigned for decorations of the paſſion; they are drawn in the proceſſion in order to be afterwards ſet upon a theatre raiſed on purpoſe with intent to repreſent the death of our Saviour to the life. A ſort of pious tragedy divided into ſeveral acts is acted thereon; and during the repreſentation of it, the ſpectators weep, ſigh, and beat their breaſts.

All the diſciplinants at Madrid appear at this proceſſion. " [d] They wear a long cap " covered with cambrick three foot high in the form of a ſugar-loaf, whence hangs a " piece of linen, that falls before and covers their face. There are ſome who undertake " this devout exerciſe from a real motive of piety, but there are others, who perform " it only to pleaſe their miſtreſſes; and indeed it is a piece of gallantry of a new kind, " unknown to other nations. Theſe diſciplinants wear white gloves and ſhoes, [e] a waiſt-" coat with ſleeves tied with ribband of the colour moſt agreeable to their miſtreſſes. " [f] They whip themſelves by rule and meaſure with a whip of ſmall cords, to the end " of which are fixed ſmall balls of wax with pieces of broken glaſs in them. He that " whips himſelf with the greateſt courage and addreſs is eſteemed the braveſt. When-" ever they meet a fine woman in their way, they can [g] whip themſelves ſo artfully, as " to make their blood ſpurt out in ſtreams upon her, and this is an honour for which " they never fail thanking the diſciplinant. When any of them comes before his miſ-" treſs's lodgings, it is then he redoubles his blows with more fury, and mangles his " back and ſhoulders. The lady who ſees him from her balcony, and knows he does " it on her account, thinks herſelf obliged to him in her heart, and never fails return-" ing the obligation. They who undertake this exerciſe, are obliged to go thro' it every " year, in default of which they fall ſick; nor is it the common people or citizens only " that ſubmit to this, but men of the greateſt quality ---------- At Seville there " are ſeven or eight hundred of theſe diſciplinants at a time, and they have the repu-" tation of whipping themſelves more ſeverely than thoſe of Madrid.

[h] The penitents of the proceſſion being returned home, find a magnificent entertainment provided for them, tho' it is one of the moſt ſolemn days in holy week: " but af-

[b] Partly taken from the Delices de l'Eſpagne.

[c] The abbot Vayrac, author of the Etat de l'Eſpagne, and ſome other good writers aſcribe this character to the Spaniards. If they give into it, to the degree which ſeveral of theſe relations attribute to them, it is certain, that they are in a fair way of practiſing all thoſe whims which the mind of man is capable of, in matter of devotion; but perhaps too, the imagination of ſeveral authors has diverted itſelf at their expence, and they have not been afraid of placing an infinite number of follies to the account of the Spaniards. For this reaſon, we ſhall avoid entring into too particular an account on the article of their devotions.

[d] Delices de l'Eſpagne.

[e] They have a pettycoat likewiſe of fine linen hanging down to their ſhoes, and plaited into ſmall plaits, which is ſo full as to take up 50. yards, according to Madam d'Aunoy in her Travels to Spain. She adds, that their waiſtcoat is open in two places on the ſhoulders.

[f] If we may believe Madam d'Aunoy, they have maſters to teach them the art of whipping themſelves in the ſame manner as dancing and fencing are taught.

[g] To gain admiration, ſays Madam d'Aunoy, there muſt be no geſticulations with the arms. The hand and wriſt only are to perform the whole operation.

[h] Madam d'Aunoy's Travels into Spain.

" ter ſo good a work, they think themſelves allowed to do a little evil. Immediately " the penitent has his ſhoulders a long while rubbed with ſponges dipped in ſalt and " vinegar, for fear any of the bruiſed blood ſhould remain in them; after which he ſits " down to table and diverts himſelf with his friends." This proceſſion [i] begins at four in the afternoon, and is not over at eight.

The proceſſion of the holy ſacrament, as performed in Spain, has likewiſe ſeveral ſingularities in it. [k] It is compoſed of all the pariſhes, and all the fryars, who, as is well known, are very numerous and powerful in Spain. The ſtreets, thro' which the proceſſion is to paſs, are hung with the fineſt tapeſtry; and all the balconies and lattices covered with the ſame. A cloth is ſpread from one ſide of the ſtreet to the other, to prevent the exceſſive heat of the ſun from incommoding the faithful, and water is thrown on the cloth, to make it cooler. The ſtreets are all ſtrewn with ſand, watered and covered with vaſt quantities of flowers. The altars ſet up for the ſacrament to reſt on are very large, and adorned with the utmoſt magnificence.

The holy ſacrament is carried under a rich canopy. The King and whole court come next it, followed by the councils and tribunals, but without obſerving the order of precedency, and each with a taper in his hand. His Catholic Majeſty immediately follows the venerabile, and walks with a taper in his hand, like the reſt of his ſubjects. They reſt from time to time, according to the cuſtom ſettled for proceſſions. During the march of the venerabile, and of all the devout retinue, the ladies appear in the balconies in their ſummer ſuits, more inquiſitive into perhaps, and more moved by the merit of a well made penitent, than by the devotion of the ceremony, which however they endeavour to reconcile with their inclinations. They have baſkets filled with flowers, which they throw upon the proceſſion, and bottles of ſweets, the perfumes of which they ſcatter upon the detachment of the church militant, whom the holy-water ſecures from the ambuſcades of the Devil, whilſt the perfumed waters lay them open to thoſe of the fair ſex. Buffoons make a part of this devotion. They mix in the ranks, dance by the ſide of the venerabile, and play a thouſand gambols during the march. Theſe buffoons, for the moſt part Biſcayans, are ſurpriſingly nimble, but what is ſtill more ſurpriſing, is that the Spaniſh gravity can accommodate itſelf to ſuch a contraſt. The proceſſion laſts ſome hours, and it is often two in the afternoon before it is over. As ſoon as it is, the faithful go home to dinner in order to meet again at the Autos Sacramentales. Theſe Autos are a ſort [l] of pious farces, played in honour of the holy ſacrament, in broad day-light, tho' by the light of torches, and in the open ſtreet. The Autos continue a month, and cloſe the devotion of the holy ſacrament.

The proceſſion of the holy ſacrament on Corpus Chriſti day, is much more ſerious at Genoa. The ſtreets and houſes are hung with tapeſtry, as in France: the way is ſtrewed with greens, and the ladies throw flowers and perfumes on the heads of thoſe who have the honour to follow the venerabile; but this piece of gallantry is not ſeaſoned with any thing burleſque, and all the pious buffooneries are wiſely omitted, which Milan, if we may credit travellers, has faithfully retained, and in which [m] we are aſſured people exerciſe themſelves ſome ſhort time beforehand, in order to ſhine in a more Chriſtian-like manner at the enſuing feſtival.

The proceſſion of the roſary, as the Dominicans perform it at Venice, is very remarkable. After the croſs advance a conſiderable number of little angels and ſaints. Theſe are

[i] Ibid. [k] Ibid. & Delices de l'Eſpagne.

[l] Or rather a kind of tragedies, the ſubjects of which are pious, and the execution whimſical: ſo ſays Madam d'Aunoy in her Travels into Spain. She has given us the ſubject of one of theſe Autos, which is this. " The Knights of St. James are aſſembled, and our Lord comes and deſires them to admit him into their " order. Several are very willing, but the eldeſt lay before the reſt the wrong they ſhould do themſelves " to admit a perſon of a mean birth amongſt them; that St. Joſeph his father is a poor joiner, and the bleſſed " Virgin works at her needle. Our Lord with great uneaſineſs waits for the reſolution they ſhall come to, " they with ſome difficulty reſolve not to admit him; but thereon they propoſe an expedient, which is to in- " ſtitute the order of Chriſt on purpoſe for him, and by this all of them are ſatisfied.

[m] Miſſon's Voyage to Italy, Tom. III. Hague Edit. 1702.

are ſo many beautiful well-made boys, amongſt which are ſeveral fine young girls. One of theſe girls repreſents ſaint Apollina, another St. Lucia, and another St. Agnes; in a word, they are all ſo many ingenious copies of the citizens of Paradiſe. Theſe pretended ſaints are attended by a number of little very black Devils. They have tails, horns, talons, and want nothing able to make them appear what they repreſent. Beſides, they omit neither bounds, nor capers, and make a thouſand ridiculous grimaces at the ſhe-ſaints; they go ſo far with them, as ſometimes to take liberties capable of making theſe young ſaints loſe ſight of the fruit of this act of piety; but yet they ſtill keep their gravity; covered with the buckler of a borrowed ſanctity, and perhaps thinking themſelves fortified with all the arms of ſalvation, they affect deſpiſing the artifices of the Devils. The more they endeavour to lead them aſtray, the leſs mind have they to give attention to the dangerous drolleries of hell played off to divert them, drolleries which edify vulgar Chriſtians only. St. Catharine of Sienna appears at this exerciſe of piety with a child by her. This is a little Jeſus, who [n] has in one hand a broom, and in the other a pair of bellows. After theſe ſhe-ſaints appear a number of devout women, choſen from amongſt the moſt beautiful, to repreſent the ſaints of the Old Teſtament. The muſic mixes with the proceſſion, and the Eunuchs ſing hymns and motets. A bleſſed Virgin richly dreſſed, and in royal robes comes next to theſe devotees, with a vaſt roſary in her hand, the beads of which are of the largeſt ſize. They ſay, that the bleſſed Virgin had, in her life time, a particular value for the devotion of the roſary; at leaſt ſuch is the opinion of the Dominicans. The maiden who repreſents the Virgin is carried upon a litter, and at ſome little diſtance is carried a wooden image of our Lady; which the Dominicans hold in high veneration. The people humble themſelves, fall down on their knees, and croud about this miraculous image; being perſuaded, that by this means they ſhall gather a plentiful harveſt of bleſſings. The Dominicans armed with roſaries ſurround our Lady.

Such Chriſtians as are difficult or ſingular in their taſte, can ill bear theſe ſolemn marches, wherein the ſaints appear degraded from that ſtate of humility they had choſen to make themſelves agreeable to God on earth. But however, theſe practices are excellent to ſuch perſons, over whom ſuperſtition and the paſſions are perpetually contending to get the maſtery; a diſpute of infinite advantage to the leaders of the church militant. As to [o] the myſterious part of proceſſions, that is an enquiry we leave to them, and is a ſecret to all but them.

We ſhall not enter into a more particular account on the ſubject of proceſſions. In the courſe of this work will be deſcribed two or three other, of which the leaſt that can be ſaid, is that they are ſingular.

Proceſſions are of Pagan original, and very ſolemn ones were formerly made in honour of their falſe divinities. For this we ſhall refer to Polydore Virgil: but however, for the reader's ſatisfaction we ſhall give him the deſcription of an Heathen proceſſion, as Apuleius has related it in the XI. book of his Metamorphoſis, and is one in honour of Diana. Firſt appeared ſome in the equipage of war, and others of hunters, armed with hunting knives and ſpears; then came men diſguiſed like women, their hair flowing in buckles, their body, feet and legs magnificently dreſſed, and adorned with all the attire of ladies.

One appeared dreſſed like a magiſtrate, another like a philoſopher. A tame ſhe-bear was carried on a litter in honour of the Goddeſs, that being the living ſymbol of hunting, over which Diana exerciſed her authority among the Heathens ---- Theſe, to uſe the expreſſion, were the preliminaries to the proceſſion; after which marched the women devotees clothed in white, and crowned with flowers; they ſtrewed the ways with them, thro' which the mortal ſpoils of ſeveral Gods, and likewiſe the image of the Goddeſs

[n] It was in this condition he once came into the ſaint's room to help and ſerve her.
[o] Vide The next page.

deſs were to paſs ---- This ſacred company, which trampled upon thoſe flowers, likewiſe perfumed the ſtreets with a precious balm, which they poured out by drops during the march. A great number of devotees of both ſexes followed the holy matrons with torches or flambeaux in their hands. There was muſic too, and the ſinging boys mingled their voices in an agreeable manner with the ſymphony of inſtruments, in order to ſing the praiſes of their Gods. After the choir came ſuch as had devoted themſelves to piety -------- The prieſts who followed them bore ſeveral things conſecrated to the uſe of religion; after which appeared their Gods. Anubis, Mercury, Serapis, &c. vouchſafed to be confounded amongſt their adorers under a form repreſenting their character and functions. Nor did they omit carrying in this proceſſion certain myſteries which made the moſt eſſential and valuable part of religion. They were ſhut up in a caſket, which a miniſter of the Gods carried with that gravity ſo neceſſary to gain over the people, and imprint a blind faith on devotees.

Proceſſions were in uſe [p] amongſt the ancient Jews. It is pretended, that they were introduced into Chriſtianity under Conſtantine the Great. The uſe of tapers had been before eſtabliſhed, but they did not appear at proceſſions till long after.

Your clearers up of myſteries aſſure us, [q] that proceſſions recall to the Chriſtian's mind the different travels of JESUS CHRIST for our ſalvation, and the Chriſtian life we ought to lead on earth. We are of opinion, that the Chriſtians, who introduced the uſe of them in the firſt ages of the church, made none of theſe reflexions, and that they only thought they ought to imitate, a ceremony that gives a ſplendor to religion tho' borrowed from Paganiſm, and which the Jews themſelves had made no difficulty of adopting. Beſides, it is eaſy to comprehend how the Chriſtians, living in the midſt of Pagans, have by degrees taken ſeveral cuſtoms from them, which they thought they might apply to their religion without corrupting it.

The croſs carried before the proceſſion teaches us, that the faithful ought always to have CHRIST before their eyes, and the image of the ſaint, that they are under an obligation of imitating their patron-ſaints who were imitators of our Saviour. The people walk after the prieſts and clergy, to ſhew that the faithful ought to truſt themſelves to their inſtruction, and blindly follow them in the way pointed out by them to ſalvation.

As to the manner of appearing in proceſſions, eccleſiaſtics ought to think on nothing but the myſteries of them, and even were there no myſteries in them, perhaps it were no harm piouſly to ſuppoſe ſome. Nor ought they to have any temporal advantage in view, ſuch as the profits of a pariſh, or convent, the deſire of ſetting up any particular kind of devotion, &c. nor deſcend from their ſuperiority as CHRIST did when he converſed with his diſciples. In ſhort, their life ought to be conformable to the deſign of the proceſſion. As for the people, the excellence of the ceremony is to be laid before them, and its myſteries explained, that they may appear at them with that ſpirit which the church loves to diſcover in the faithful.

Nor is it ſufficient to have given a deſcription of ſome proceſſions remarkable for their object; we ſhall now ſpeak of the general order obſerved at proceſſions preſcribed by the church. [r] "The banner or image of the ſaint muſt go firſt, and if poſſible be carried by "a clergyman in his ſurplice. The children follow two and two, having either an ec- "cleſiaſtic in his ſurplice, or their ſchoolmaſter before them. Then comes an exorciſt "with holy-water and the ſprinkler, or a thuriferary holding the incenſer ſmoking, and "the navette; then the croſs-bearer between two taper-bearers. The reſt of the clergy "follow

[p] Examples of them are to be found in the Old Teſtament.

[q] Alet's Ritual. "The compaſs taken in going from any holy place, and coming back to it again, all "the while ſinging the praiſes of God, repreſent the travels of CHRIST, during his living with his diſci- "ples," &c. The application is a little ſtrained. That of a proceſſion to the life of the Chriſtian is not leſs.

[r] Alet's Ritual.

" follow two and two. Thoſe who wear pluvials march after the others; but if there " be any canons, ſuch of the choriſters who are not ſo, walk before them ------ The " celebrant goes laſt. At ſolemn proceſſions made before maſs, the deacon marches at " the celebrant's right hand, and the ſubdeacon at his left ----- another ſub-deacon " carries the croſs ------ At ſolemn proceſſions made out of maſs-time, there needs no " deacon nor ſub-deacon, except at that of the holy ſacrament; but the two firſt cho- " riſters in pluvials are on each ſide the celebrant. The magiſtrates and moſt conſider- " able perſons of the place immediately follow, and after them the reſt of the people, " the men firſt, then the women and girls." For the reſt we refer to the rituals.

The march of the church militant's detachments, who form the proceſſion, is always directed towards ſome church; but they often halt in the way, in order to viſit ſeveral, one after another; an extraordinary piece of devotion, and always attended with indulgences which his Holineſs grants for the encouragement of the faithful. At Rome this devotion is called [r] a Station, a word which formerly ſignified the ſtay made in any place, a port or retreat for ſhips to retire to, an encampment, &c. All of them ideas agreeing with the church militant.

Retirements or retreats are of all religions, if by this term we underſtand a voluntary ſeparation from the reſt of men, to perform our devotions in private, and free from diſtraction. Every man may do this at home, but there are ſome of a much more ſolemn nature, and thoſe only we call retirements, which we perform for ſome time in a ſeminary or convent, in order to pray to God at our eaſe, covered from temptations, and without giving ourſelves up to earthly cares.

We have already obſerved that nine days devotions are of Heathen original; to perform this kind of devotion right, we are to take notice it muſt be confined exactly to the number nine. Some devotees are of opinion, that nine maſſes celebrated nine days ſucceſſively, will be more agreeable to God than twelve maſſes ſaid 12. days. If it be true, that theſe devotions be in honour of nine orders of angels, can we doubt their being well received?

There is nothing that flatters the heart of man to a greater degree, than what are called Works of Piety; as it is looked on by him as a formal contract, or, as it were, a truce between his paſſions and the duties of religion. [s] Somebody has ſaid, " that a " devotee ſays his prayers, and refuſes to pay his debts; that he plunders his neighbour, " and gives the tenth to the poor; that he builds an hoſpital and ruins honeſt families; " in ſhort, that with the devotee religion is the counterpoiſe of injuſtice." We ſhall not enquire into the truth of this character. Moraliſing is not the buſineſs here, but it may be pretty boldly aſſerted, that there are many who look upon works of piety as the high road to ſalvation. We may farther add, that whatever works of piety may be, the clergy have always made their markets of them, under the ſpecious pretence of leading many Chriſtians to heaven; above all they have endeavoured to open them a way to it by foundations, which according to M. Thiers, began in the fourth or fifth century. And yet it was nothing as yet, the mode had not entirely eſtabliſhed itſelf till the following. Nothing was then to be ſeen, but people of all ages, ſexes and conditions, renouncing their goods and fortunes in favour of churches and convents. On all ſides ſprung up new practices of humility, devotees grew diſguſted with vigils, that to them appeared too weak. The prieſts and monks had viſions, they entered into a ſtrict correſpondence with the ſaints of paradiſe. More vigorous meaſures were taken againſt the Devil who grew formidable. Croſſes were dug up, and many relics, till that time unknown and undiſcovered, were found, nay, and ſome of the mouths of hell, and two or three of purgatory too. The maps of the monks preciſely pointed out their [r] Stations were eſtabliſhed, as they tell us, under Conſtantine the Great, but not then regulated. S. Gregory the Great fixed the days and churches where they were to be performed.

[s] Reflex. Moral. Satyr. & Comic. p. 259. Ed. of 1716.

height, nor was this diſcovery the leaſt eſſential of the age. An infinite number of ſouls got out of purgatory, and ſome of the damned eſcaped. Your good ſort of people immediately took care of their relations; new methods of eaſing the dead, for whom any one intereſted himſelf, were invented.

Maſſes were multiplied. and one ſacrifice no longer being ſufficient, there was a neceſſity for ten, twenty, thirty; and ſometimes for thirty thouſand. The ſovereigns of the church created new patrons. An infinite number of altars and churches were founded. Swarms of the vermin called monks and friars overſpread the face of the whole earth. This, they ſaid, was a work of God. Habitations were aſſigned, and revenues appointed them; but good ſouls augmented them. Houſes where piety has always found an aſylum cannot be too much cheriſhed. We may eaſily believe, that convents multiplied with piety, and that they who had given up their patrimonies to the ſervants of the church, found no other reſource, than that of the caſſoc or the veil; in ſhort, a ſtrong perſuaſion then obtained, [u] that God could not be well ſerved but by prieſts and friars; and indeed nothing was to be ſeen but caſſocs, cowls, tonſures, crowns, vows of continence and chaſtity, voluntary ſeparations of huſband and wife upon a motive of devotion, and in order to retire from the world; to the end, that they might pray to God at their eaſe in the company of monks and hermits.

Beſides the foundations of churches, convents and maſſes, there are ſeveral others more remarkable. [w] There are ſome foundations ſettled for expoſing or carrying the holy ſacrament in proceſſion on other days, than thoſe that are ſet apart by the church for it, or for making a day more famous than it is originally, according to the inſtitution of the church. Such is the foundation, ſays M. Thiers, [x] who is our voucher, whereon the holy ſacrament is expoſed on the feſtival of the patron of a pariſh, the feſtival-day of him whoſe name we bear, or for whom we have a particular reſpect and devotion. There are likewiſe foundations for offices and prayers in honour of the ſaints, from the time we have received any extraordinary favours and graces from them.

The DEVOTION of RELICS.

M. Thiers, is ſtill our authority. [x] He aſſures us, that throughout all the ages of the church the faithful have paid a great veneration to the genuine relics of ſaints, and have often received great benefits by them; but he adds, that men have carried this kind of devotion ſo far in theſe latter times, as that many ------ have imagined that one only need be devout to ſome particular relics, carry them about one, or frequent places where they were kept, in order to die free from ſin. M. Thiers has his reaſons for talking thus; and yet he had better have let alone this article. Why ſhould we undeceive a great number of pious ſouls, who more cloſely and ſtrenuouſly labour at their ſalvation before the head or arm of a ſaint, on account of having choſen in a more particular manner this relic for the object of their affection, and being deprived of ſenſible objects are taken up with ſpiritual ideas, which leads him who meditates on them directly to God? The charity of a Chriſtian avoids judgments that are too raſh; one of the faithful aſſures us, that a little relic, that he carries about neatly ſet in a relic box, is an excellent antidote to him againſt the temptations of the fleſh, a ſpiritual balm that ſtrengthens, an eſſence that makes him live to God ---- let us believe him on his word.

The antiquity of this veneration for relics, has been attempted to be proved from the tranſlation [y] of the patriarch Joſeph's bones at the going up of the Jews out of Egypt.

It

[u] Concerning the moſt neceſſary of all devotions. [w] Id. chap. xxiv. [x] Ibid. chap. xxiii.

[y] Exodus chap. xiii. ẏ. 29. The ancient Heathens likewiſe worſhipped the aſhes of their heroes. By order of the oracle of Apollo, the Athenians gathered Theſeus's bones, and religiouſly preſerved them after having carried them in a pompous proceſſion, and offered ſolemn ſacrifices on account of them. Were it neceſſary, other inſtances might be added.

It is very certain, that under the Old Teſtament, it was as it is now, thought, that what has touched a ſaint's body acquires extraordinary properties. The primitive Chriſtians were of this opinion, and inſtances of it are to be found in the Goſpels and Acts of the Apoſtles; from whence we are to conclude, that the body itſelf of any ſaint is capable of producing effects more miraculous. In the ſequel, the conſequences of this opinion of virtue and holineſs has been carried to a great height. It has been pretended, [a] that it was neceſſary to collect whatever had been made uſe of by ſaints, to dig up their bodies, to hunt out their bones and aſhes, thereon to fix a confidence eſteemed juſt and reaſonable; ſince thoſe ſaints had gained it during their lives. Then were temples chapels and altars dedicated to them. [d] The very angels concerned themſelves in it, for they collected the bones of St. Catharine, and buried them on mount Sinai. In the fourth century, tranſlations began to be made with a great deal of ſolemnity. The uſe of reliquaries began at the ſame time.

The church has the ſhrines, wherein relics are put, ſolemnly bleſſed. There is nothing particular in this ceremony. [b] The ſubſtance of the prayer is, that God would grant his protection to ſuch as revere the merits of the ſaints, and humbly embrace their relics, to the end, that theſe faithful ſuppliants may be guarded from the power of the Devil, from thunder, plague, bad air, wild beaſts, and from the hoſtilities and machinations of men. This enumeration ſhews to what uſes relics may be applied. Another prayer ſaid by the celebrant before the ſhrines, wherein are to be locked up the precious remains of the ſaints, are ſprinkled with holy-water, is full as energetic.

Oaths are taken on the relics of ſaints. As an inſtance of this religious cuſtom, we ſhall mention the oath of the King of the Romans on the blood of St. Stephen at Aix la Chapelle on his coronation day.

The believer who viſits relics out of devotion, muſt acquit himſelf of this duty with zeal, and touch the ſacred limbs of ſaints with faith. There is a time fixed for publicly expoſing them to the devout. Every ſeven years [c] are ſhewn the relics of the church of Notre Dame at Aix la Chapelle, which is accompanied with proclamations, which ſerve to prepare the Chriſtian's application. We ſhall copy one of theſe proclamations, that the reader may have a more adequate idea of the ceremony.

The PROCLAMATION is of the Head and right Arm of St. CORNELIUS.

" THE head and right arm of St. CORNELIUS is to be ſhewn, by whoſe in-" terceſſion may our Lord preſerve you from the falling ſickneſs, and after this " life grant you the kingdom of heaven. Pater Noſter. Ave Maria. Credo.

The TRANSLATION of RELICS.

THIS important ceremony requires great application and care. [d] Before they are tranſlated the biſhop muſt examin into them. The tranſlation is preceded by a congregation of the clergy and doctors in Divinity. Nor muſt the conſulting with phyſicians be omitted, eſpecially ſuch as are verſed in anatomy, in order to give their opinions concerning the condition and nature of the relics, without which great abuſes abuſes might be committed. After the faculty's examination, they proceed to the inventory, and the notary draws up an act of it; after which they are depoſited in the place deſigned for them. All this is noted down, the biſhop gives his atteſtation, which is followed by a decree commanding all the faithful to venerate them. To conclude, this ſacred treaſure is locked up. Before relics are depoſited the biſhop ſolemnly bleſſes them.

[a] Bozius in one of his pieces, grounds the merit and incorruptibility of relics on this paſſage of the Scripture. One ſingle hair of your head ſhall not periſh. The Lord preſerveth the bones of his ſervants, not one of them ſhall be broken. Whoſo eateth my fleſh to eternal life. Theſe texts, ſays he, prove, that the ſmalleſt particles of ſaints (even their hair) have been preſerved down to our times, that their bones ought to be placed in ſhrines to draw our reſpect and homage; that the relics of ſaints are endued with eternal life and a vivifying power, and they retain the ſame power of working miracles, as the ſaints were poſſeſſed of in their life-time.

[a] Caſal. de Vet. Chriſt. Ritibus. [b] Alet's Rit. Pontifi. Rom. [c] Vide A ſmall pamphlet entitled, Prône des Saintes Reliques, &c. printed at Aix. [d] Beauldry part II. cap. xv. Man. Sacr. Cerem.

The tranſlation of relics is made in a proceſſion; ſuch devotees as aſſiſt at it may be ſecure of a conſiderable number of indulgences which the holy Father grants to thoſe who are preſent at that religious act. On the day of the tranſlation, the ſtreets thro' which they paſs muſt be cleaned, and the houſes hung with tapeſtry. The [e] church and altar are pompouſly adorned, and the images of the ſaints ranged in open view. He who is to perform the tranſlation-ceremony has all his proper robes on. Attended by his miniſters, he goes to the place where the relics are, prays on his knees before them, riſes and bleſſes the incenſe with which they are to be bleſſed, incenſes them thrice, then bows and orders them to be carried to the place appointed for them, Pſalms being ſung all the way. The people, naturally fond of every thing that has an outward pomp and ſplendor, often ſurround them with tapers in their hands. When the relics are where they muſt be, the clergy have a guard kept about them day and night, which is relieved by turns. We muſt not omit telling the reader, that prayer is the ſole exerciſe of the faithful who are on guard.

Maſs goes before the proceſſion for the tranſlation of relics; the proceſſion is performed in the following manner. [f] Two mace-bearers form the march and make way, the maſter of the ceremonies places the faithful according to their rank; the perſon who has the bells under his care ſets them a ringing, and immediately the march begins.

Firſt walk the muſic, then the fraternities according to their ſeveral degrees, next the images of the ſaint or ſaints, if there be more than one to be tranſlated. Some laymen of diſtinction carry theſe images in the ſame manner as military enſigns are carried in war. Two more bear up the extremities of them. A band of muſic walk before the images, children and young boys neatly dreſſed follow bare-headed. Thoſe of the greateſt note, and the chief of the town follow the images with tapers in their hands. The religious orders fall in by detachments, or by deputies, and walk next to the laity of diſtinction. We ſhall ſay nothing of the order in which the ſecular clergy walk, viz. the thuriferary firſt, the croſs-bearer between two taper-bearers, &c. We have already ſaid enough as to that.

The relics are carried under a canopy. The biſhop. if he is at the ceremony, muſt be in his pontifical ornaments. Some muſicians in their robes walk before the relics, ſinging the praiſes of the ſaint who is tranſlated. During the proceſſions two thuriferaries are perpetually incenſing them.

As ſoon as the relics enter the church, Te Deum muſt be ſung; and the relics are ſet upon the altar to be worſhipped by the people. Before they are locked up the biſhop gives them his bleſſing. Prayers are appointed in honour of them, and a lamp is left burning day and night before the place where they reſt.

[g] Relics of ſaints muſt not be carried by laymen, under colour of ſome fraternity. The tranſlation of images is performed like that of relics.

RELICS for MIRACLES.

WE ſhall ſay little on this matter, which is almoſt inexhauſtible; but ſhall only ſpeak of the blood of thoſe martyrs, which is preſerved in ſeveral parts of Chriſtendom. Rome eſpecially, and Italy are grown famous for the great quantity that is found in them; nor is this ſurpriſing, conſidering the perſecutions of the primitive Chriſtians

[e] The church muſt be adorned with the colour ſuitable to the ſaint, whoſe relics are tranſlated. Red is the proper colour of an Apoſtle or martyr, white of a confeſſor or virgin. Taken from Alet's Ritual.

[f] Bauldry. Manuale Cerem. It muſt be obſerved, that this author writes particularly for Italy.

[g] Alet's Ritual.

Chriſtians under the tyranny of Paganiſm. The earth at Rome is ſtained with the blood of the faithful. This city, ſays an Italian writer, [h] has drank ſo abundantly of it, as to be drunk with it. He adds, that the Pope makes preſents of this ſacred earth to foreigners, endeavouring thereby to content the deſires of ſuch Chriſtians, as come to Rome upon a motive of devotion, and are unwilling to return home without carrying back with them ſome ſalutary token of their travels. This is a relic that cannot fail, having at leaſt ſome part of the properties which ſaints communicate to every thing they touch; this we ſhall prove by a miracle taken from the abovementioned author. An ambaſſador of Poland earneſtly ſollicited S. Pius V. to grant him a relic; whether his Holineſs had no mind to open his treaſures to this Pole, or elſe was of opinion, that a little earth taken off the pavement would have as much vertue as a bone when ſeparated from a ſaint's body, he drew out his handkerchief, put a little Roman earth into it, and then folding it up gave it the ambaſſador, who took the Pope to be in jeſt. However, as ſoon as his Excellence was returned back to his houſe, he opened the handkerchief, and probably was going to throw away the earth, when he ſaw both the earth and handkerchief equally ſtained with blood; and this blood was the blood of martyrs.

The blood of martyrs has wrought an infinite number of miracles. The author quoted at the bottom of the page has collected ſome of ſeveral kinds. We ſhall refer our reader to him.

As to the miraculous manner, "wherein the blood of martyrs, as is reported, has "in all times been ſeen to melt and run, pious ſouls flatter themſelves that God has been "pleaſed to give this ſatisfaction to the faithful, for their conſolation; and as a reward "of their piety." There are now-a-days ſeveral liquefactions of this kind, eſpecially in Italy. [i] On the feſtival of St. Euſtace, Rome ſees the ſaint's blood boil. The blood of St. John Baptiſt does at leaſt as much at Naples, and this in three different churches. It [k] puts itſelf into this violent motion in honour of JESUS CHRIST, and ſeems to endeavour once more to proclaim the coming of our Saviour. In the ſame city, St. Bartholomew's blood does not yield to that of St. John Baptiſt, no more than the blood of St. Stephen which never fails running on the day on which is ſolemniſed the finding this ſaint's body. Some unbelievers pretend, that all theſe liquefactions have more of trick than of a miracle in them, and we ſhould think as they do, were we not convinced by an infinite number of examples, of the fair dealing and ſincerity of the prieſts and monks of this country. We ſhall give one that puts it beyond all queſtion.

On the 18. of September is performed the ceremony of ſhewing the faithful the head and blood of St. Januarius patron of the city. There is a [l] ſolemn proceſſion likewiſe in honour of the ſaint, at which the martyr's head and blood are carried in pomp. Theſe two relics are made to meet, and when they are within reach of one another, the blood is ſeen to grow fluid, to boil, and to force itſelf over the ſides of the glaſs vial it is kept in. One is ſure of ſeeing this miracle wrought every year, for it never deceives the people's expectation, who are always ready to witneſs to the truth of this fact.

[h] Boldetti. Oſſervazioni ſopra i cimiteri de S S. Martiri, Lib. I. cap. xxvi. Edit. of Rome, 1720.
[i] Oſſervazioni ſopra i cimiteri, &c.
[k] This is the expreſſion of a poet quoted by the Italian author.
[l] This, they ſay, gave riſe both to the proceſſion and miracle. A Neapolitan lady, being ſo ſick as to keep her bed, having heard of St. Januarius and his companions, reſolved to go and ſeek her cure upon the place where theſe faithful Chriſtians had been executed. Immediately ſhe gets up, full of hope, takes two vials, and goes to the place of their martyrdom, and finding it ſtill wet with the blood of theſe faithful confeſſors, fills her two vials. In one ſhe put all the pure blood ſhe could take up, and in the other, that which was mixed with earth and other filth. Scarce had ſhe made an end, when ſhe found herſelf cured. Some time after, this good lady learnt, that the head of the ſaint we are ſpeaking of was lodged at Naples; and thought herſelf bound to inform her countrymen, that ſhe was in poſſeſſion of the ſaint's blood, and owed her cure to it. This was a new ſubject of edification for that pious city, the devout think ſeriouſly of tranſlating it; the head therefore of the ſaint is taken and carried in pomp in order to fetch the blood. The lady did not wait for this viſit. She would have done wrong to ſtand upon punctilio's. Equally humble and devout, ſhe takes the two vials, and runs to meet the head of the martyr. In the firſt moment of the interview, the blood diſſolves, the people were convinced beyond a power of doubting, that it was the blood of St. Januarius, and ſince that time, the miracle has never ceaſed. This is what the Italian author already quoted, relates.

We ſhall ſay nothing of [m] the liquefaction of St. Vitus's blood, as it is to be ſeen in one of the abbies of the dioceſe of Tarentum, nor of that of the blood of St. Pantaleon, St. Urſula, St. Laurence, and ſeveral more.

We ſhall likewiſe omit many tranſlations in which relics have formerly ſignalized themſelves by miracles, by an infinite number of miraculous cures, peculiar operations, and noted deliverances that have been owing to them. It is believed, perhaps, that nothing like them is ſeen in our days, modern credulity makes a jeſt of the candour and faith of our anceſtors. We ſhall refer them to the archives of the monks. There they will ſee that the power of the ſaints is not diminiſhed.

[n] In 1672. Rome raiſed a recruit of four hundred and twenty eight ſaints from the catacombs, moſt of them anonymous and unknown; which however furniſhed out a world of relics. Other recruits of the ſame kind had been raiſed before that time.

MANNER of diſtinguiſhing the RELICS dug out of the CATACOMBS, to be genuine.

THE [o] apoſtolic chamber have diggers in pay to work in ſubterraneous places, where are generally found what are called at Rome ſacred bodies. This holy employment is done in ſpring and winter. When the ſepulchres are opened, an apoſtolic commiſſary goes thither and examins the marks whereby are to be known the bodies of martyrs. If there be only the name CHRIST thus ☧ over theſe ſepulchres, or a ſingle croſs, a dove, a crown, an olive-branch, without the figure of a palm-branch, or vaſe of wood or other matter, wherein was uſed to be put the blood of martyrs, they are looked upon barely as ſo many Chriſtian ſepulchres, and in ſuch a caſe [p] are not opened. The veſſel for holding of blood is in an eſpecial manner [q] an evident token of martyrdom, and conſequently of ſanctity. When the ſigns already mentioned have been obſerved, they proceed to the opening with all the care ſo religious a work requires.

All poſſible caution is uſed in regard to the bones of martyrs, without which they could not be taken out whole. Still as they are dug up, they are put into little caſes, which are afterwards corded up and the cords ſealed with the grand vicar's ſeal; immediately after which, the diggers carry them into the chamber ſet apart for relics. The bones are ſet upon tables at a diſtance from each other, that as they dry, the air may in ſome meaſure reſtore them to their primitive hardneſs. All this requires great dexterity, becauſe theſe bones grow brittle, and crumbling with the leaſt touch, by lying under ground for ſo many ages, muſt be delicately and lightly handled. After this, the Cardinal-vicar and Pope's chief ſacriſtan expoſe theſe relics to the veneration of the faithful, diſtribute them as they judge convenient, and arm them with the neceſſary atteſtations. Relics of the largeſt ſize are to be given to crowned heads, and firſt perſons in the church, and to them only.

The Sieur Aimon, in his Tableau de la Cour de Rome, tells us, that the congregation of relics gives names to ſuch bones as being dug up cannot be known by any inſcription, which names are given at the diſcretion of devotees, who would honour them under ſome ſaint whom they name as godfathers and godmothers do at the baptiſing of children.

[r] If it happen that the owners of land under the juriſdiction of Rome, ſhould diſcover any ſepulchres or ſubterraneous places that have communication with thoſe where any ſacred bodies have been dug up, they are obliged to give notice of it to the congregation of relics, who take care to have ſuch places examined. The [m] Oſſervazioni ſopra, &c. [o] Id. Ibid. [p] Id. Ibid.

[p] Or at leaſt are opened but very rarely. Id. Ibid.

[q] Hereby we ſee it is falſe, to ſay, that the ſmall earthen veſſels, where appear any remains of the blood put into them by ſuch as buried the bodies of martyrs, or any part of the inſtrument made uſe of in executing them, or in ſhort any inſcription graved on ſtone, were acknowledged as true and genuine marks of the martyrdom ſuffered by thoſe near whom they were found in their ſepulchre.

[r] Oſſervazioni ſopra i cimiteri, &c.

[r] The biſhop is allowed to give his approbation of the newly diſcovered relics of a ſaint, who has for many ages been in heaven, and is poſſeſſed of the right of ſanctity without having his privilege conteſted. But it is not ſo with unknown ſaints, nor with ſuch as are but little known, or whoſe ſanctity muſt be authenticated. It belongs to CHRIST's vicar only to beſtow on their relics the authority they merit.

Several PRACTICES concerning RELICS.

EXCESS of eſteem and love makes us preſerve what has belonged to our relations or friends with fondneſs. Children of birth tranſmit to their deſcendants particular family-trifles, or ſuch as have been handed down to them from their anceſtors; and if ſuch trifles happen to be attended with a particular circumſtance, the family is very near placing it in the number of relics. Nay often there needs only great antiquity to ſet a value upon things. A lover of antiques, who ſhould be ſo fortunate as to have in his poſſeſſion an arm of Alexander, or Cæſar's robes, would at leaſt think himſelf as happy as a Chriſtian, who ſhould reckon among his treaſures twenty ſacred bodies, together with all their proper atteſtations. This character is naturally ſtamped on the mind of man, one cannot help entertaining a reſpect and veneration for the leaſt things we have remaining of thoſe who in their life-time have deſerved our eſteem; and ſhould this principle of eſteem ariſe from the ſame that gives us a fondneſs for religion; ſhould they, for inſtance, whom we eſteem, have ſuffered for it, or ſhould we have diſcovered an uninterrupted courſe of holineſs in them; we are eaſily perſuaded, that when they left this world, they left a portion of ſanctity with their bodies, that ſome remained in their very clothes, nay, that the earth that bears them, has acquired a certain doſe of it. This perſuaſion is ſtrengthened by time, and a ſeries of time gives it a right one would hardly dare to diſpute.

We are convinced, that this principle may, from the infancy of the church, have been the occaſion of collecting the bones and aſhes of the primitive martyrs. CHRIST's and his Apoſtles garments may poſſibly have been preſerved, ſome of the inſtruments of their ſufferings may likewiſe have ſurvived; ſome may have gained St. Peter's chains, and others the ſtones with which St. Stephen was ſtoned. But let us carry the ſuppoſition a little farther; there may be ſome devotees who are firmly perſuaded that there were Chriſtians patient, or rather, cunning enough to make advantage of the moment that St. Joſeph was cutting wood, in order to get poſſeſſion of his [t] breath in that inſtant, and ſecure it faſt in a bottle. However it may be, without faith and miracles there would be no method of accounting how theſe [u] and ſeveral other relics, at leaſt as ancient, are come down to us without forgery, after ſo many and vaſt revolutions of ſtates, and after ſo many ages.

The cuſtom of wearing about one holy relics by way of devotion, or by the means of them to preſerve oneſelf againſt ill accidents, diſeaſes, calamities, &c. is very early in the church; ſince [w] St. Gregory of Nyſſa mentions a ſmall piece of the wood of the true croſs, which his ſiſter wore on her finger in a ring. This cuſtom might partly ariſe from the practice of the Heathens to preſerve themſelves againſt charms and enchantments. It is pretended, that what the children of the Romans wore about their necks, ſerved them as a preſervative againſt evils preſent and to come; amulets and Abracadabras are from the ſame ſource. But however that may be, it is to St. Helen that relics owe the beginning of their

[r] Id. Ibid.

[t] This is what is pretended to have been ſomewhere preſerved.

[u] Such, for inſtance, is part of the table-cloth laid before CHRIST at the laſt ſupper, and is at Vienna in Dauphine. Such are likewiſe our Saviour's manger, the table whereon was made the laſt ſupper, the linen with which he wiped his Apoſtles feet, his ſeamleſs garment, his purple robe, the cloth he wore round his body on the croſs, the ſponge by which he received the gaul and vinegar, the ſtick with which he was ſtruck, the blood mixt with water that came out of his ſide, the hair and garments of the bleſſed Virgin, thoſe of St. John the Evangeliſt; the girdle of our Lady and St. Joſeph's cloak.

The Carthuſians at Cologne have the hem of CHRIST's garment, which the woman afflicted with loſs of blood touched to be cured of it. The ladies of that place, as they ſay, ſend wine to the Carthuſians to have the relic ſteeped in it, after which they drink of it upon any ſuch indiſpoſition.

[w] Oſſervazioni ſopra i cimiteri, &c.

their mighty reputation; but yet the croſs was then the only relic really in the mode. That pious Princeſs foreſeeing, that the finding of the croſs would inflame the devotion of Chriſtians, took but a part away with her, and left the reſt at Jeruſalem to be an object of the pilgrim's zeal. But it is not to be doubted, but this ſacred wood would have been all loſt by degrees on account of the perpetual diſtributions made to devotees, if St. Paulinus had not aſſured us, [x] that at that time it remained in the ſame condition; that the faithful were inceſſantly taking away ſome of this divine wood, and yet they always found it whole and entire. In proceſs of time, all ſorts of relics were worn, eſpecially about the neck and breaſt [y].

Formerly relics were carried in military expeditions, and this was an eſtabliſhed practice in the time of Theodoſius the Great. Long after, the templars and ſoldiers in the cruſades carried them with them in their expeditions againſt the enemy of the Chriſtian name. Our Kings going to war armed themſelves with St. Martin's cope, and cauſed the ſhrines of ſaints to be carried at the head of their armies. [z] Friar Du Val de Cernay aſſures us, that on a dangerous occaſion, a body of prieſts and friars having the croſs before them, and ſupported by relics, advanced againſt the Albigeſe, after ſinging the Veni Creator, which was their ſignal, and that at the third repetition of a verſe of the hymn, the rebels of the church fled from the field of battle. Nor did the biſhop of Cominge ſhew leſs courage. Without the leaſt conſidering the ſmall number of faithful that were facing above one hundred thouſand Albigeſe, he armed himſelf with the wood of the croſs, and going up to an eminence [a] bleſſed the ſoldiers of the Catholic army by preſenting the croſs to them.

In public calamities, devotion ordains recourſe to be had to holy relics. [b] The blood of St. Januarius, ſet before the flames of mount Veſuvius, has never failed putting them out. [c] The miracles wrought by St. Genevieve, at all times that it has been thought proper to carry her in proceſſion, are pretty well known at Paris; and if the devotees at Rheims are to be credited, St. Remi's handkerchief has had no leſs vertue, whenever it has been found neceſſary to produce it, in order to conjure down the calamities of the public. All this is enough to juſtify this cuſtom. We have already mentioned that of ſwearing by the relics of ſaints. That of employing them as witneſſes of our misfortunes, or inſtruments of our defence againſt the injuries done us by our enemies was no leſs edifying.

Formerly it was allowed to pawn relics upon an urgent neceſſity: nay, they were forced, as it were, to wear mourning for our afflictions; ſince any perſon in that condition threw them down on the ground, and ſet them round with thorns; but that cuſtom is aboliſhed, it had ſomething in it like the practice of the Heathens, who often puniſhed their Gods for not being propitious to them. They were intruſted with the care of defending the fields and lands againſt the villany of Thiers. This cuſtom likewiſe was a relic of the idolatry of the Heathens, who committed the keeping of their gardens to particular Divinities. To conclude, relics were carried in a religious manner thro' the towns and high-ways to encreaſe pious collections and alms-giving.

[x] Id. Ibid. [y] St. Charles Borromeo wore about his neck a tooth of St. Satina. Gregory XII. wore one of St. Catharine of Sienna. Some ages before that, St. Dunſtan, having broke his cane upon the Devil, who appeared to him in the form of a bear, had another made him much ſtronger, in which he ſet a tooth of the Apoſtle St. Andrew. [z] Quoted by the author of the Oſſervazioni, &c.

[a] The Catholic ſoldiers animated by the preſence of the croſs defeated the King of Arragon's army, who was found among the dead.

[b] Oſſervazioni ſopra, &c. At Venice a leg of St. Laurence puts out fires. In a church here, an holy water of great vertue is made with a bone of St. Liberalis. In Sicily, St. Agatha's veil carried in proceſſion by the clergy of Catanea, puts a ſtop to the deluges of fire of mount Gibel. A piece of cotton rubbed againſt this veil has the ſame effect.

[c] St. Genevieve is patroneſs of the Pariſians. In any public calamity her ſhrine is taken down, in which are contained the very planks of this ſaint's coffin, on account of ſome miraculous vertue obſerved in them. When taken down, it is carried to Notre Dame, together with St. Marcellus and ſome other ſaints. The ceremony uſually begins at mid-night. All the companies of the city with the clergy before them appear at the proceſſion. The abbot and monks of St. Genevieve walk barefoot from their own church to that of Notre Dame, where high-maſs is celebrated, which is ſeldom over till four in the afternoon. Many times they only uncover the ſhrine of the ſaint, but whether uncovered or carried in proceſſion, it always anſwers the expectations of the devotees.

THE END.

INDEX

TO

VOLUME I.

Note, The Figures refer to the Pages, and N. to the Notes.

A.

AARON, his deſcendants the ſole miniſters of the temple under the Jewiſh diſpenſation, 46.
Abdalla, his laws againſt the Jews, 174.
Aben-Eſra, a Jewiſh commentator on the Scriptures and philoſophy, 138.
Abjuration of a Jew to Chriſtianity, form of it, 235.
Ablution not always neceſſary, yet required for the more auguſt myſteries, 10. and for conſulting the oracle of Trophonius, ibid. how then performed, ibid. almoſt an univerſal cuſtom among the Heathens, ibid.
Ablutions continual required by the Jewiſh religion, 10.
Ablutions practiſed with great exactneſs by all Mahometans, 10.
Ablutions Jewiſh, 199.
Abraham-ben Meſullam, a Jewiſh Poet and Philoſopher, 139.
Abſtinences of the Jews, 198.
Academies Jewiſh. V. Jews.
Acceſſus, what, 277. N. [q].
Acoſta, his ſufferings after excommunication, 201.
Adorare, etymology of it, 1.
Adrian, his ſeverity to the Jews, and why, 166, 174.
Agnes of Monte Pulciano S. her hiſtory, 370.
Agnus Dei's deſcribed, 355. ceremony of bleſſing them, 356. to 358. riſe of the ceremony, 357.
Agobardus Biſhop of Lions, his rancour againſt the Jews, 167.
Albericus trium fontium, a credulous and inconſiderable writer, his charge againſt the Jews, 171.
Alder tree ſacred to Pan, 20.
Alfes Iſaac, a Jewiſh Rabbi, and famous collector of the deciſions of the Gemara, 132.
Alet, his direction for the foundation ſtone of a church, 13.
Allegation ridiculous in defence of Proceſſions, 404.
Altar, ever one of the principal inſtruments of divine worſhip, 16. formerly the place for prayers, vows, and taking of oaths, ibid. among the Jews the place for confeſſing of their ſins, and the manner how performed, ibid. Chriſtian Church has preſerved the altar for the ceremonies of religious worſhip, ibid. uſes of the altar among them, ibid. prophaned by being made a ſanctuary for the moſt vile and profligate wretches, ibid. and 17. cuſtom of ſanctuaries ancient, but only tolerated for accidental crimes, 17.
Altar, deſcription of it, and of what is required for keeping it in order, 339, 340. rules for changing its ornaments, 339. veſſels and inſtruments annexed to it, deſcribed, 341. to 343. conſecration of it, 348. depoſiting the relics under it, 350. incenſing it, ibid. and 351. croſſing it, 352. bleſſing the veſſels and ornaments belonging to it, ibid. altar, and its parts, types, 349. N. [d]. altars ſtripped of their ornaments on what occaſions, 351.
Americans their religion chiefly conſiſts in dances and and ſongs, and why, 19.
Anaſtaſius S. patron of waggoners, and other meſſengers, 392.
Andrew S. patron of the fiſhmongers, 393.
Annates, what, reflection thereon, 375. N. [a].
Anne S. patron of grooms, 392.
Anniverſaries of the dead, account and reflexions on them, 322. N. [z].
Antoninus Pius, a favourer of Judaiſm, 167.
Anubis, an Egyptian Deity, the ſame as Mercury, why repreſented with the head of a dog, 23.
Apex. ſignification of it, 97.
Apollo, the laurel conſecrated to him, 20.
Apoſtles Chriſt's, days conſecrated in honour of them, 7.
Aquinas S. Thomas, thanked by a miraculous image, 327. reflexion thereon, ibid, N. [a].
Arch-fraternities, V. Fraternities and ſocieties.
Archi-Synagogus, who, 120.
Arithmetic of the Jews. V. Jews.
Aſpergillum, kiſſed by the prieſt in ſprinkling of holy water, 18.
Aſperſion or ſprinkling with what, and how performed among the Romans, 10. on what occaſions, ibid. and 22.
Atocha our Lady of, her chapel famous for miracles, 378.
Ave Maries, efficacy of them, 21.
Augsburg, Jews obliged to pay a florin an hour for their ſtay there, 175.
Auguſtus, believed the good or ill fortune of the day owing to putting on his ſhoe, 13.
Aſtronomy of the Jews. V. Jews.
Authors, explanation of them neceſſary in the learning of tongues, 144.
Autos, a ſort of pious farces, 402. deſcription of them, ibid. N. [l].
Azarias, a Jewiſh Rabbi, a good hiſtorian, 140.
Azyma of the Jews, what, 66.

B.

Babylonian captivity fatal blow to the Jewiſh religion, 166.
Babylonian captives, reputed by the Jews to have been all ſaints, 166. their employment, ibid.
Baptiſm Chriſtian, a kind of ablution, 10.
Baptiſt S. John, wore one of S. Auſtin's girdles, 391.
Barbara S. her hiſtory, 371.
Barcochebas, a falſe Meſſiah of the Jews, 166.
Barnaby S. his blood boils on his feſtival, 409.
Bernard S. miracles wrought by him with indulgences, 385. N. [r].
Barajetot. V. Jews.
Barmizva, what, 86.
Bartholomew S. patron of cow-keepers and tanners, and why, 392. N. [b].
Baſil S. enquiry concerning the genuineneſs of his Liturgy, 148.
Bathing, what neceſſary to be obſerved in it, 9, 10.

INDEX.

Beatification, the fore-runner of canonization, 358. ceremonies of it, 367.
Beatitude, what, 358.
Bells, myſterious ſignifications of them, 328. by whom inſtituted, ibid. and N. [l]. in uſe among the Romans, 328. and Jews, ibid. their uſe, ibid. benediction of them, 329. to 331. myſterious, 330. anatomical deſcription of a bell, 331. N. [s].
Bell, clerks, why ſo called, 302.
Benuet S. patron of the notaries, 392.
Beth Hachaim, the grave ſo called by the Jews, and why, 102.
Beth Hammikra } what, 121.
Beth Hamidras }
Biſhops, prieſts, and deacons, riſe and occaſion of their creation, 121, 123.
Blaiſe S. patron of the carders, 393.
Blood of S. Euſtace boils on his feſtival, 409. and of S. John Baptiſt, S. Barnaby, and S. Stephen, 409, 410.
Blood of martyrs has ſtained the very earth of Rome and Italy, 408, 409. has wrought many miracles, ibid.
Blowing of horns a Jewiſh ceremony, 70, 71.
Books of the Jews. V. Jews.
Books written on the devotion paid to the Virgin Mary, 375. N. [b].
Books, placed on the coffin of a Rabbi, 102.
Boniface, founder of the Jubilee, 380.
Borromeo Cardinal, his prohibition to the Jews, 175.
Bowing the body or head only in religious worſhip, a natural ſign of the reſpect due to God, 15. this cuſtom preſerved among the Roman Catholics, Greeks, and ſome other Chriſtian communities.
Brachmans, by their religion obliged to be chaſte, 8. but do not obſerve the precept, ibid.
Brerewood, his miſtakes as to the Eaſtern Liturgies, 153.
Breviary, V. divine ſervice.
Bridget S. her hiſtory, 371.
Bridget S. her viſion concerning indulgences, 385.
Buch Michael, a poor ſhoe-maker, his hiſtory, 344, 395.
Buffeting, a puniſhment inflicted on the Jews, and where, 174. reflexion thereon, N. [b].
Bull Sabbatin of Pope John XXII. concerning the ſcapulary, 389.

C.

Cabala. V. Jews.
Cadet perſecutes the Jews, and why, 168.
Cadis, a hymn of the Jews, 44.
Chacam Rau or Morenu, a title of honour among the Jews, 54.
Cajetanus Cardinal, his opinion concerning the neceſſity of learning the Hebrew, 143.
Cairo, certain Monks there proſtrate themſelves, 150. times, and lick the duſt of the pavement before they lie down to ſleep, 14.
Calender of the Jews, 216. to 223.
Canon, what, 308. N. [w].
Canons, their office, 124.
Canonical hours, V. divine Service.
Canonization of Saints, the ceremony of performing it deſcribed, 358. to 361. proceſſion on this occaſion deſcribed, 361. to 367.
Canticles, reflexion on the ſtile of them, 145.
Caraites, why ſo called, 89. are reformed Sadducees, 90. their tenets, ibid. and 179, 180. their places of reſidence, ibid. and 179. hated by the reſt of the Jews, ibid. riſe of Caraïtiſm, ibid. Caraites, thought Samaritans or Sadducees, 89, 90. and why, but falſly, 90, 91. difference between them and the Rabbiniſts, ibid. and 92. to 94. admit of the Jewiſh canon of Scripture, 91. and all traditions not falſe or ridiculous, 91, 92. receive the Bible as printed with points, 92. their divinity freer from ſuperſtition than that of the Rabbiniſt Jews, ibid. believe no Cabaliſtic explanations, ibid. their opinion of the ſoul, ibid. reject all the conſtitutions of the Miſna and Talmud in ceremonies, ibid. inſtances of it, ibid. read the Bible in a reaſonable manner, and how, 93. agree with the Rabbiniſts in ſome points of diſcipline, ibid. inſtance thereof, ibid. differ in writing the name Jehovah from the Rabbiniſts, and conjecture thereon, ibid. muſt marry a ſlave when they would turn Rabbiniſt, 24.
Cardinals, what in their rife, 274. when firſt called ſo, ibid. how many in number, ibid.
Carmelite, duties of one difficult, 389.
Caſtles and palaces of wax, why carried at the Pope's coronation, 284.
Catharine S. patroneſs of mace-bearers to Cardinals, 392.
Catharine of Sienna S. her devotion to the Virgin Mary, 376.
Catharine S. of Sienna, her fraternity, V. Fraternities.
Catholics Roman have conſecrated kiſſing on occaſion of ceremony, 18.
Ceremonies, riſe of them, 2.
Ceremonies of the Jews, called a yoke by S. Peter, 116. and by the Jews a bleſſing and prerogative, ibid.
Ceremonies of the Jewiſh ſabbath. V. Jews.
Ceremony, to which the Jews are obliged when the Pope firſt goes to S. John de Lateran, 175. riſe of this ceremony, ibid.
Ceremony, the eſſence of the Chriſtian and Jewiſh religion, reflection thereon, 348. N. [a].
Ceremonies, thought agreeable to God, 2.
Ceremonies relating to the Jubilee. V. Jubilee.
Ceres, what was conſecrated to her, 20.
Chair, pontifical deſcription of it, 301.
Chaplets at prayers, very ancient, 15. uſed by the Romans, ibid eaſe the memory of devotees, ibid.
Chaplets beads, indulgences. roſaries, ſcapularies, Agnus Dei's, their vertue, 21.
Chaplet, by whom invented, 387. borrowed from the Mahometans, who borrowed it from the Eaſt-Indies, ibid. in uſe among the Romans, ibid.
Characters Jewiſh, opinion of the Samaritans concerning them, 95.
Characters Samaritan, opinion of S. Jerome, and modern critics concerning them, 97.
Characters Chaldee, reaſon of the uſe of them among the Jews, 97.
Characters of ſome of the writers of the Bible, 145.
Charity, arch-fraternity of it. V. Fraternities.
Charlemagne, attempted to introduce an uniformity in Liturgies, but in vain, 154.
Charlemagne, favourable to the Jews, 167.
Charles the Bald, tolerates Judaiſm, 167.
Chaver de Rau, a title of honour among the Jews, 54.
Chazan, who, 54, 195.
Chilperic and Dagobert Kings of France, their preposterous method of converting the Jews, 167.
Chiriat Sceman, a Jewiſh thankſgiving, 45.
Choiceſt of meats and drinks offered up to the Sun by the Tartars, 6.
Choſen Hamiſpath, the title of an admirable treatiſe upon the Jewiſh law, 57.
Chriſtianity, general notion of it, 241. to 243. idea of it according to the principles of the Roman Catholics, extracted from M. Boſſuet, 243. to 255.
Chriſtians, conſecrate Sunday to devotion, 7.
Chriſtians, why conſidered as idolaters by the Jews, 116.
Chriſtians, primitive, why enemies to the Jews, 167.
Chriſtians, primitive, their church muſic ſimple, 19.
Church Chriſtian, imitated the Jewiſh diſcipline in her meetings and councils, 119.
Church whole, alone infallible, 119.
Church, its authority and head, 269, 270.
Church Cathedral derivation of it, 122 ridiculous notion of the Spaniards concerning them, ibid.
Church militant, a lively image of the church triumphant, 300.
Church, ceremonies of dedicating one, 345, 349. reflexion thereon, 345. N. [c].
Chronology Jewiſh, imperfect, 140.
Chryſoſtom S. John, his Liturgy, enquiry into the genuineneſs of it, 148.

INDEX.

Circumcision. V. Jews.
Clara S. her history, 370.
Clara of Montefalcone S. her history, 371.
Clergy of Rome, why it has not the same power as the Jewish Sanhedrim, 119.
Clergy, how they should appear at processions, 404.
Cloth yellow, a badge of ignominy to the Jews, 174.
Cloths, touched by the Jews make a bargain valid, 56.
Colours, a mark of ignominious distinction imposed on the Jews, 175.
Colours different, reasons for the Pope's wearing them, 291. N. [b].
Colours, proper for an apostle, martyr, confessor, or virgin, 408.
Commandment of charity, why called new by Christ, 115.
Complexion bad, the mark of a Jew, 175.
Compline, what, 295.
Compromise, what, 277. N. [s].
Conclave, preliminaries to the entrance to it, 275. several ways of electing a Pope, 276, 277. N. [v]. scrutiny, ibid. accessus, ibid. compromise, ibid. inspiration, ibid. intrigues carried on in it, 275, 277. who allowed to remain in it, 278. order observed in Rome during it, 278. description of it, 279. manner of carrying provisions to the Cardinals in it, 280.
Conclavist, his office, and privileges, 278. how many allowed to each Cardinal, ibid.
Conditions, excluding from public worship among the Romans, 7, 8.
Confession of the Jews, form of it various, 198. two sorts of it, ibid.
Confessors, their power at the Jubilee. V. Jubilee.
Consecration of an altar. V. altar.
Consistory, order, and ceremonies observed in holding one, 292. to 294.
Constantine, pretty mild to the Jews, 167.
Constantius, severe to the Jews, 167. his decree against intermarrying with them, ibid.
Contracts, made with the Gods, how, 5.
Conversation unlawful with women, how many ways among the Jews, 77.
Conversation matrimonial, excluded persons from public worship among the Romans, 8. and Jews, ibid.
Cordelieri of Catalonia, their charity, 295. N. [k].
Cosmus and Damian SS. patrons of physicians, barbers, bagnio-keepers, 393.
Covering the head, an essential custom in religious worship among the ancients, 10.
——And now among the Jews in their synogogues, 10.
——And likewise with the Turks.
Council general, what, 271. of whom composed, ibid. its power, ibid. can check the Pope, 272. ceremonies used in calling one, ibid. rank of such as vote in it, 273.
Cresselle, what, 329. is mysterious, ibid.
Cretans, would suffer none to enter the temple of Diana with shoes on, 12. V. Feet.
Crimes imputed to the Jews. V. Jews.
Crispin S. patron of the shoe-makers, his history, 393. N. [c].
Critics modern, their opinion of the Samaritan characters, 97.
Crocefisso Sanctissimo at Naples, described, 327.
Cross, custom of placing it before the candles on the altar, account of its rise, 300. miracle relating thereto, ibid.
Cross carried before the Pope, rise of this custom, and reflexion thereon, 297, 298. N. [w].
Crosses, 12. ceremony of anointing them, 351.
Cross, devotion of it, 323. vertues of it, ibid. N. [r]. in great veneration among the primitive Christians, 323. instances of it, ibid. holy cross found by S. Hellen, and when, ibid. this devotion when introduced, ibid. decree of a general council concerning it, 323, 324. Christ how painted, ibid. cross of Christ, of what wood, ibid. part of it found by whom and when, ibid. part of the inscription on the cross found in several places, and how this difficulty is reconciled, ibid. miracles wrought by it, ibid. nails of the cross at several places, ibid. their number accounted for, ibid. festivals appointed in honour of them, ibid. festivals and ceremonies appointed in honour of the cross, 325. 326. consecration of public and private crosses, 326, 327. famous crucifixes, 327, 328. veneration paid to the cross condemned, 333. N. [b].
Crowns, flowers and fruits customary offerings to the Gods, 17, 20. appropriated by Christians to the saints and the virgin Mary, ibid. and 21.
Crowns offered to the Gods, where commonly hung, 20.
Crucifixes famous. V. Cross.
Crucifixion, of infants by the Jews, their motive thereto, 171. N. [l].
Crusades, terrible to the Jews all over Europe, 168.
Crusades, Maimbourg's history of, a curious passage cited from it, 385. N. [r].
Cures, extraordinary wrought by music, 19.
Custom of changing his name introduced by what Pope, 281. N. [o]. of kissing the Pope's feet very ancient, 282.
Custom of being carried on mens shoulders, introduced by what Pope, 282. N. [r].
Customs observed in religious worship, 5.
Custom of repeating the name of God among the Turks, 6.
Customs Jewish, wherein religion has a share, 232. to 235.
Cybele, the pine consecrated to her, 20.

D.

Dacier, his opinion on Pythagoras's injunction to turn round in worshiping, 17.
Dancing, no relation between it and religion, 19.
Dancing round altars and statues a religious ceremony of the ancients, in which all sexes and ages joined, 19. ancients believed the Gods themselves danced, 19, 20. Salii or priests of Mars led them up at Rome, 19. dances a chief part of the religion of the East and West Indians, 20. prisoners to be put to death, obliged to dance in Brasil, ibid. dancing at religious worship, with much difficulty avoided among Christians, and instances of it, 20.
Daniel, a Jewish impostor, 173. raises himself up in the air, ibid. causes a fiery globe to rest on his breast, ibid. banished, ibid.
Daniel Father, his accusation of the Jews, 170. reflexion thereon, ibid.
Daughter voice, among the Jews, what, 177.
Days solemn, consecrated to the Gods by the Heathens, and how, 7.
Deacon, his office, 123.
Dead body, handling it impure among the Jews, 9.
Decalogue, basis of the Christian religion, 115.
Decree of Constantius, against intermarrying with Jews, 167.
Devotee, false described by Rebelais, 339. N. [o].
Devotee, character of one, 405.
Devotion, extravagant rise of it, 2.
Devotion barbarous, instances of it, 1. 4.
Devotion, a pretence for growing idle and savage, 3.
Devotion Saturday, day of it among the Jews, 7.
Devotion of nine days, a relic of Paganism, 322. N. [a].
Devotions of nine days, account of, and reflexions on them, 105.
Devotion to saints. V. Saints.
Devotion to relics. V. Relics.
Devotion, mode of it has a great influence on courts and private families, 338, 339.
Diaconi Regionarii who, 274.
Diana Anicina, her temple built in woods, 3.
Dichduch, what, 86.
Didacus S. his history, 372.
Dien John de, the blessed, his history, 393. N. [n].
Disciplinants Spanish, their procession described, 401.
Disputings of the Jews, immethodical and noisy, 53.
Dispersion of the Jews. V. Jews.
Divination, all sorts of it unlawful among the Jews, V. Jews.

Divine

INDEX.

Divine ſervice Roman Catholic, 294. wherein it conſiſts, ibid. called canonical hours, and the Breviary, ibid. in what poſture to be ſaid, ibid. of what compoſed, 295. who obliged to ſay it, ibid. where it muſt be ſaid, ibid. inſtances of canonical hours to be found in Scripture, 294. N. [e].
Divorce. V. Jews.
Dominic, a child crucified by the Jews, fabulous hiſtory of him, 170. N. [k].
Dominic S. his hiſtory, 388.
Domitian loaded the Jews with taxes, 166.
Doors of the temples and ſtatues of the Gods embraced by the Heathens, 17. appropriated by Chriſtians, ibid.
Dreſs of a fryar has no privilege to put a man into the way of ſalvation, 391.

E.

Earth ſtained with the blood of martyrs, a preſent made by the Pope to foreigners, 409. ſtory concerning it, ibid.
Eaſt, turning towards it at prayers, 15. rule concerning it laid down by Vitruvius, ibid. riſe of this cuſtom, 16. Eaſt-Indies and Americans turn to the Eaſt at their devotions, ibid. Chriſtians borrowed this cuſtom from the Heathens, proved from S. Auſtin, ibid. obſerved by the Roman Catholics.
Eccleſiaſtes, reflexion on the ſtile of this book, 145.
Eccleſiaſtics mitred, oftener fore-runners of war than peace, 347. N. [o].
Eldavid, a Jewiſh impoſtor, 173. his death, ibid.
Election of a Pope, ſeveral ways of doing it, 276. ſcrutiny what, and how performed, ibid. N. [q]. acceſſus, what, ibid. compromiſe, ibid. inſpiration, ibid.
Elias, believed by the Jews to be preſent at all circumciſions, 84.
Eloi S. patron of the goldſmiths, his hiſtory, 392. N. [s].
Empedocles appeaſed anger by muſic, 19. N.
Emperor, his ſubmiſſions to the Pope at his coronation, 270, 271. 286, 287.
Emperors Roman, treated the Jews with rigor, 166.
Eſdras, reaſons for conjecturing why he uſed the Chaldee letters upon the return from the captivity, 97.
Eſſenes, 181.
Evangeliſts, why ſo called, 90.
Euſtace S. the patron of Proctors, 392. and of inn-keepers, ibid.
Euſtace S. his blood boils on his feſtival, 409.
Excommunication how performed by the Jews, and its effects, 54, 55. 200, 201. terrible effects of it, ibid.
Eyes, caſt down by the Turks at their prayers, 13.
Eyes, caſt down to the ground by the ancients, and on what occaſions, 13.
Eyes caſt down often, a ſign of hypocriſy, 13.
Eyes lifted up a mark of confidence in God, 13.

F.

Faith, ſupported by reaſon only, ſoon a ground, 369.
Faldiſtorium, a type of what, 299. N. [k].
Fans of Peacocks feathers borne before the Pope, a myſtery therein included, 296.
Faſts Jewiſh, how performed, 73, 74, 199, 214.
Feet bared in proceſſions in honour of their Deities by the Gentiles, 12. this honour always paid to Cybele, ibid. Roman ladies always went barefoot into the temple of Veſta, ibid. Jews practiſed the ſame in humiliation, ibid. Grecian ladies obſerved this cuſtom and followed the proceſſions of Ceres with bare feet, and diſhevelled hair, ibid. caterpillars driven away by women barefooted, ibid. this cuſtom practiſed by Chriſtians, and inſtances of it, ibid.
Ferdinand the Catholic, a great perſecutor of the Jews, 168.
Feſtivals of ſaints ſo multiplied that every day in the year has its patron, 7.
Feſtivals in honour of the virgin Mary. V. Virgin.
Feſtivals of the Jews. V. Jews.
Firſt-born in every Jewiſh family, faſts on the eve of the Paſſover, and why, 67.
Fiſherman's ring, what, 275. N. [o].
Flagellants fanatic, deſcription of them, 169. they deſtroy and burn the Jews, 169.
Foot, the right ſet foremoſt by the ancients at entring their temples, and great men's houſes, 13.
Forehead, according to the ancients, the ſeat of modeſty conſecrated to their particular genius, and touched with their hands whilſt praying, 13. ſo touched by the Eaſt-Indians, ibid. this cuſtom practiſed by them in honour of their Princes, ibid.
Foundation of a church ceremony of bleſſing it, 345.
Francis S. his character, 390.
Francis of Paula S. his hiſtory, 370.
Fraternities, ſet up againſt the fleſh and the Devil, 391. how a new brother of one entitled to the merits of them, 392. particular account of theſe fraternities, and of their patrons, 392, to 395.
Fruits, conſecrated to Pomona, 20.
Funeral ſermons, pleaſant directions for making them, 321. N. [z].
Funeral rites impure, 9.

G.

Ganges in great veneration among the Indians, 9. O Ganges purify me, a form of prayer with the Indians. ibid.
Ganz David a Jew, and chronological writer, 141.
Gate holy, manner of opening it, 383. explanation of the ſeveral myſteries included in this ceremony, 383. N. [t]. ceremony of ſhutting it, 384.
Gauls ancient, turned to the left at worſhiping, 17.
Gedalia, a Jewiſh Rabbi and author, 140.
Geometry of the Jews. V. Jews.
Gemara. V. Jews.
Genoeſe, their method of converting the Jews, 168. reflexion thereon, ibid. and 169.
Genim, who, 132.
George S. patron of the ſmiths and farriers, 392.
Germans, ſacrificed to their God Thor every Thurſday, 5.
Gertrude S. her hiſtory, 399. N. [z]. proceſſion in honour of her, 399, 400.
Getæ, conſecrated no temples to their Gods, 3.
Giafar Sadec, a Mahometan caliph his law againſt the Jews, 174.
Girdle leathern, a badge of ignominy impoſed on the Jews, 174.
Girdle of S. Francis deſcribed, 390. advantages of its devotees, ibid. ſocieties of it, ibid. their dreſs, ibid. reflexion thereon, ibid. N. [o].
Girdle of S. Auſtin, its praiſe and privileges, 390, 391. its fraternity, 391.
Girdle of S. Monica, 391.
Girdle of S. Francis of Paula, 391.
Girls Jewiſh, how named at their birth, 85.
Gonfalon, fraternity of, V. fraternities.
God, worſhipped without pomp in the firſt ages of the world, 2.
Gods, worſhipped by the Romans at day break, 5.
Gods, inferior had their particular provinces, employments, and hymns, 19.
Gods of rivers, have reeds appropriated to them, 20.
Goodman S. patron of the coblers, 393.
Graces in muſic, carried to exceſs, ſtifle devotion, 19.
Gradual, why ſo called, 306. when began to grow in uſe. N. [l].
Grammar of the Jews. V. Jews.
Grammarians of the Jews. V. Jews.
Grecians, never ſacrificed with the head veiled, 11.
Gregory the Great, his opinion concerning matrimonial converſation at times of devotion, 8.
Gregory S. patron of the bricklayers, 393.
Greeks and Romans aſcribed a wonderful vertue to particular words, and ſuperſtitious forms, 2.
Greeks, hung up the hair of their dead at the door, and why, 9.
Greek tongue neceſſary to a complete knowledge of the Scriptures, 141.
Greek Liturgies. V. Liturgies.
Guinea, people of it worſhip in groves, 3.

INDEX.

H.

Habdala, name of a Jewiſh ceremony, how performed, 65.
Hagada of the Jews, and Chriſtians, what, 128.
Hagiar Alaſuad, or black ſtone at the temple of Mecca, ſome account of it, 18. N. [e].
Hair of the dead, hung up at the door to prevent peoples defiling themſelves by entring the houſe, 9.
Hakem, a Jewiſh impoſtor, 172. throws himſelf into a tub of Aqua fortis, and why, ibid.
Hakim, the Egyptian caliph, his ſeverity to the Jews, 168, 174.
Halenu le Sabſab, a Jewiſh prayer, 45.
Half Jews, what, 181.
Hands, uſe and application of them in devotion, 16.
Handkerchief holy, the hiſtory of it, 308. N. [x]. 333. miracles wrought by it, ibid.
Handkerchiefs, linen cloths, &c. touched by the images of ſaints, a cuſtom of Heathen original, 17.
Hanuca or feaſt of lights, manner of the Jews obſerving it, 74, 212.
Hay, ſacred to Vertumnus, 20.
Hat high crowned, a mark of ignominious diſtinction impoſed on the Eaſtern Jews, 175.
Hat red, a badge of ignominy to the Jews at Venice, 175. by them turned into an ornament, 175.
Hat yellow, a mark of diſtinction for Jews, 175.
veil yellow, a mark of diſtinction impoſed on Jewiſh women, 175.
Heathens, conſecrated ſolemn days to their Gods, 7.
Heathens, their ſentiments and practice in regard to their Gods, and Demi-Gods, the ſame as thoſe of the Roman Catholics in regard to their ſaints, 332. but condemned, ibid.
Hebrew Rabbinical, taken from the Hebrew of the Bible, 141. account of it, ibid.
Hebrew tongue, its uſe, 141. that and Greek neceſſary to a complete knowledge of the Scripture, ibid. objection againſt learning it anſwered, 142. another objection anſwered, ibid. application to the Hebrew habituates the mind to an exactneſs and readineſs in the ſtile of the Scripture, ibid. Cardinal Cajetanus's opinion of the neceſſity of learning it, 143. Jeſuits opinion thereon, ibid. Hebrew eaſy to be acquired, and why, ibid. plaineſt and conciſeſt grammars beſt, and why, ibid. inſtructions for learning it, 144, 145, no particular pronunciation to be followed, tho' Spaniſh way the beſt, ibid. the ſhort and long points to be obſerved, and why, ibid. conjugations to be learned in the groſs, ibid. this as well as all other tongues ſhould begin with the explanation of authors, ibid. characters of the Hebrew writers, 145.
Hebrew tongue barren, and why, 52. how ſupplied, ibid.
Hell, opinion of the Jews concerning it, 104.
Henry III. of England, his treatment of the Jews, and pretence for it, 169, 170.
Heraclius, his violent charity in converting the Jews, 167.
Hercules, the poplar ſacred to him, 20.
Hercules, account of ſacrifice to him, 23.
Herodians, what, 182.
Hills and mountains conſecrated to the Gods, 3.
Hippocrates and Galen tranſlated from the Arabic into Rabbinical Hebrew by the Jews, 139.
Hiſtory and chronology of the Jews wretched, 140.
Holland more generous to the Jews than other Proteſtant States, 170.
Homer among the Jews, what, 67.
Honours paid to the Pope take their riſe from thoſe paid to the Roman Emperors, 282.
Horn, a badge of ignominy impoſed on the Jews, 175.
Hoſt prophaned, miracles performed by it, 171. N. [o].
Hymns to the Gods, their ſubject, what, 19.

I.

James S. his Liturgy, whether genuine, 148.
James Major S. patron of the hatters, 393.
James of Compoſtella S. deſcription of his church, 397. has appeared 15. times to the Kings of Spain, ibid. N. [p].
Janſeniſts, their chief opinions, 256. to 260.
Januarius S. miraculous liqueſaction of his blood, 409. riſe of this miracle, ibid. N. [l].
Janus, believed by the Romans to be the founder of public worſhip, temples, and altars, and the introductor and advocate with the Gods, 8.
Ilum and Caliza, what, 82, 83, 229.
Iconoclaſts, their ill timed zeal and effects of it, 331.
Jerome S. his opinion of the Samaritan characters, 97.
Jeſuits, their opinion concerning the Hebrew tongue, 143.
Jews, conſecrate Saturday to devotion, 7.
Jews prayed towards the weſt, and why, 16.
Jews, turn to the right in worſhipping, 17.
Jews, their muſic, what, 19.
Jew, building muſt leave part of his houſe unfiniſhed, and why, 36. their doors, chambers, and all frequented places muſt have a reed with a parchment in it fixed againſt the walls of them, and in what manner, 36.
Jews Italian, admit of portraits and hiſtory pieces in their houſes, but not relievo's of entire bodies, 37.
Jews kitchen furniture muſt be new if earthen, if of metal not, and why, 37. and muſt be put into water before uſed, 37. utenſils for milk muſt not be uſed for other food, ibid. have particular kitchen furniture and utenſils appropriated to the paſſover, 66.
Jews, their bed muſt ſtand North and South, and why, 37. prayers at going to bed, 37, 38. have great faith in dreams, and why, 38. faſt after 4 ſorts of dreams, and in what manner, ibid.
Jews, muſt not wear any mixture of linen and wollen, and why, 38. muſt not diſguiſe themſelves by wearing the apparel of the contrary ſex, ibid. precept as to painting, falſe hair, &c. ibid. may not wear a crown or lock in the middle of the head, 39. women wear a peruke or head-dreſs at their wedding, ibid. men think it indecent to be uncovered in their Synagogues, ibid. every garment they wear muſt have 4 corners, ibid. Zizit, what, ibid. this not obſerved among them, and why, ibid. think it becoming to wear a girdle, and why, ibid.
Jews, muſt eaſe themſelves as ſoon as riſen, and waſh afterwards, 40. muſt not refrain it upon any motion, and why, ibid. muſt guard againſt being ſeen, ibid. had an invocation to the angels to protect them at it, and a thankſgiving to God for it, ibid. muſt waſh after it, ibid.
Jews, as ſoon as riſen muſt waſh their hands and face, nor touch any thing ſacred before, 40. muſt not throw the water they have ſo uſed on the ground, ibid. whilſt wiping their hands and face muſt repeat a benediction, ibid. farther particulars concerning their purity and ablutions, 199.
Jews, how rendred unclean, 41.
Jews, forbidden to ſow two ſorts of ſeeds together, or ſeeds with grapes, or to graft trees, or to keep them ſo grafted, 47. and to eat of the fruit of any tree till 3 years after it has been planted, ibid. and to couple animals of a different ſpecies, or let them draw together, ibid. commanded to leave part of their harveſt ſtanding, ibid. and to let the land reſt every ſeventh year, and to leave its produce for the poor, ibid. forbidden to eat the firſt born of any clean female without ſpots, but not now obſerved, ibid. or to take the dam with the eggs, 48.
Jews, very compaſſionate to the poor, 48. poor ones how relieved, ibid. any extraordinary charity, how collected among them, ibid. ſocieties for beſtowing charities, how divided and called among them, ibid. manner of poor Jews applying for charity, and how it is beſtowed, 48, 49. alms ſent by Jews of all parts of the world to Jeruſalem, Joppa, Tiberias and Hebron, ibid. Jews charitable both to man and beaſt, and why, ibid. and 198.
Jews, few of them can make a complete diſcourſe in the Hebrew or Chaldee tongues, but are only acquainted with the language of their birth-place, 51. differ much in their pronunciation of the Hebrew,

INDEX.

In which the Italians excel, 52. their books, contracts, journals, public tranſactions, &c. written in Rabbinical Hebrew, ibid. their letters, &c. generally in their native language, ibid. Jews of the Morea only tranſact every thing in Hebrew, ibid. their ſermons when, in what language and manner made, ibid.

Jews, their agreements how valid, 56. three witneſſes make any agreement ſo, ibid. their witneſſes how unexceptionable, 57. their chief Rabbi judge of all differences among them, ibid. whereon he grounds his opinion, ibid. Jews ſubject to the ſtate where they reſide in criminal matters, ibid. extent of the Rabbi's authority, ibid.

Jews, what beaſts, birds and fiſh they are forbidden to eat, 57. and in what veſſels dreſſed, ibid. forbidden to eat the fat, ſinews and blood of what beaſts, ibid. their manner and caution in killing of animals, 58. precepts concerning killing and eating them, ibid. which relate not to fiſh, ibid. may not eat fleſh and milk at the ſame meal, nor dreſs them in the ſame veſſel, ibid. their veſſels particularly marked, ibid. never eat cheeſe unleſs they have firſt ſeen it in curds, and why, 58, 59. not allowed to drink wine made by any but Jews, and why, 59. this rule not obſerved by them all, ibid. grace pronounced at their drinking, ibid.

Jews, their way of making bread, 59. waſh their hands before eating, 60. ſay a Pſalm at ſitting down to table, ibid. their manner of breaking bread, ibid. forbidden to tread upon it, ibid. waſh their hands after eating, and ceremonies after it, ibid.

Jews, their veneration for the Sabbath, and why, 61. have reduced things prohibited on the Sabbath to 39 heads, and what, ibid. and 62. may not touch fire on the Sabbath, ibid. nor dreſs or eat of meat dreſſed, ibid. nor carry burthens, ibid. nor talk of buſineſs, ibid. nor take in their hands any thing forbidden to be uſed on that day, ibid. nor walk above a mile out of town, ibid. nor handle money, ride, &c. ibid. and difficultly allow of a ſurgeon's aſſiſtance, ibid. make their preparations for the Sabbath on Friday, ibid. and 63. their notion of honouring the Sabbath, 63. time when their Sabbath begins, ibid. then put on clean linen, and waſh their hands and face, and go to the ſynagogue, ibid. their ſalutation thereon, ibid. and behaviour afterwards, ibid. riſe late on the Sabbath, ibid. their prayers, praiſes, leſſons and other ceremonies at the ſynagogue, ibid. believe the damned do not ſuffer on the Sabbath, ibid. their prayers and ceremonies at home on concluſion of the Sabbath, ibid. and 65. farther particulars concerning it, 202. to 204.

Jews, their prieſts, who admitted ſuch, their office and prerogatives, 46. not allowed to marry a divorced woman, 47.

Jews, their ſtudies and academies, 53, 193. they chiefly ſtudy the Ghemara or Talmud, 53. diſpute immethodically, and with much noiſe, ibid. their times of diſputing, ibid. riſe and account of their Talmud. Rabbi Juda author of the miſna or text of it, ibid. two Talmuds, the Babyloniſh, and that of Jeruſalem, 59. Talmud, prohibited by ſome Popes, ibid.

Jews, creation, authority, titles and office of their Rabbi's, 54, 193, 194. excommunication, how performed by them, and its effects, ibid. and 55.

Jews, their manner of keeping the paſſover, 66, 67, 68, 208, to 210.

Jews, their faſts, manner of obſerving them, 72, 73, 74, 199, 214.

Jews, their oaths and vows, 55, 198. forbidden to ſwear in vain or lie, 55. vows not approved of among them, but are obliged to fulfil them, ibid. in what caſes they have a power of diſpenſing with them, ibid.

Jews, their trade and uſury, 55. obliged to obſerve the rules of commerce preſcribed in the Scripture, ibid. forbidden to deceive Chriſtians, ibid. and 56. why they are become uſurers, ibid. allow themſelves to take uſury of Chriſtians, from a paſſage in the Pentateuch, but unjuſtly, and why, ibid.

Jews, how they compute their months, 65. celebrate the feſtival of New-year's-day in Tiſri or September, and why, 69. their ſalutation on this day, ibid. believe God judges the actions of the laſt year on this day, ibid. their penance of the month Elul, ibid. 204. their manner of celebrating their New-year's-day, ibid. and 205. their intercalary month, 66. their calendar, 216, to 223.

Jews, their Chipur or day of expiation, their ſtrict obſervation of it, 70. eat heartily on the eve of this faſt, ibid. ſynagogue then illuminated, ibid. farther particulars concerning it, 206. to 208.

Jews, their unlawful converſation with women of how many ſorts, 57. forbidden to converſe with a woman during her courſes, 78.

Jews, obliged to marry, 78. at what age, ibid. are allowed plurality of wives, ibid. whom they may take for wives, ibid. widow, or woman divorced when allowed to marry, ibid. their manner of betrothing and marrying, 78. to 80. are often betrothed for years, 79. particular days for marrying maids and widows, ibid. bride bathes on her wedding night, ceremonies at and after the wedding, ibid. and 80. farther particulars relating to this head, 226. to 228.

Jews, manner of their women obtaining a divorce, 80. debauching a maid, are obliged to marry, or give her a ſum of money, 80. farther particulars and reflections relating to divorces, 228, 229.

Jews, their women whilſt impure cannot converſe with their husbands, 80. muſt afterwards bathe, and how, ibid. and 225. muſt do the ſame things at and after their lyings in, 81.

Jews, their jealouſy and divorces, 81. 228. wives ſuſpected, how treated, ibid. may divorce their wives on the leaſt diſlike, and how prevented, ibid. form of their divorces, and manner of performing it, ibid. and 82.

Jews, their Ibum or Caliza, what, and manner of performing it, 82, 83, 229.

Jews, their circumciſion, 83. congratulation on the birth of a ſon, ibid. time of their circumciſion, ibid. ceremonies before, at, and after it, 84, 85, 223, 224.

Jews, their redeeming of their firſt born, 85, 225. who eſteemed ſuch, ibid. the ceremony of it, ibid. Levites not bound to redeem, ibid.

Jews, in what they inſtruct their children, and how, 86, 225. at what age Jews are accounted men and women, and conſequences thereof, ibid. 225, 226.

Jews, their reſpect to relations and others, 86. think themſelves obliged to honour their parents, an elder brother or mother-in-law, thoſe who have inſtructed them in religion, all learned and pious men, and the aged, ibid. and 87.

Jews, their feaſt of tabernacles, or ſuccoth, 71. exactneſs of the Rabbi's as to the nature and form of theſe tabernacles, ibid. manner of celebrating this feſtival, ibid. and 72. time of its continuance, 71. farther particulars concerning it, 210, 211.

Jews, their ſynagogues, 120. had many in Jeruſalem, and their uſe, ibid. were places for trials and judgments, ibid. how diſpoſed, ibid. and 121. how dedicated, 192. their different ſorts, 121. conformity of the Chriſtian churches and ſynagogues, 121, 122, 123, 124. their manner of making a doctor, 123. offices belonging to the ſynagogue, 123, 124. farther particulars concerning it, 191, 192. ſervice of the ſynagogue, 44. to 46.

Jews, their prayers, 41, 42, 196, 198, 114. and the conformity of them with thoſe of the Chriſtians, 124, 125, 126. have a great number of prayers, and what, 124. have affixed time for public prayer, 43, 124. which ſort of their prayers condemned by Chriſt, and why, ibid. have different ways of praying, and what, 125. S. Auſtin's explanation of S. Paul's words relating thereto, ibid. two things relied on by the Jews in their prayers, and what, ibid. have diverſity of common-prayer books, ibid. ſubject and order of their prayers, ibid. and 126. their benedictions, and the conformity of them with the Chriſtian, 126, 127. by whom pronounced, 126. paſſages of the Evangeliſts relating to benedictions explained, ibid. and 127. how many perſons make a congregation, 44.

INDEX.

Jews, think it ſinful to give credit to any predictions whatever, 99. or to any kind of divination or witchcraft, ibid. or to cut their skin and colour it, ibid. their behaviour and practice in regard to proſelytes, ibid.

Jews, their injunctions upon women, 99. their practices in regard to ſlaves, 100. their kind of confeſſion, and when and how performed, ibid. their days of penance, when, ibid. they eſteem it a good work to viſit and aſſiſt the ſick, 101. their behaviour in ſickneſs, ibid. ſit up with the ſick, and wherefore, ibid. throw away all the water in the houſe of any dead perſon, ibid. their practices in regard to the dead, and at funerals, 101, 102.

Jews dying, their cuſtoms, 230. their mourning, prayers, and commemoration of the dead, 103, 231, 232. their notions of paradiſe, hell, and purgatory, 104. their belief as to the tranſmigration of ſouls, reſurrection and day of judgment, ibid. their thirteen articles of faith, ibid. and 105.

Jews and Chriſtians agree in the foundation of their religion, viz. ſcripture and tradition, 109. their belief as to tradition, and the manner of its being handed down, ibid. but falſe and why, ibid. opinion of our Saviour concerning the Jewiſh traditions explained, 110. and of the apoſtles, ibid. and of the Council of Trent, ibid. rule to be obſerved in regard to tradition, ibid. Jews cannot agree from whom they received their traditions, 111. their way of ſalving the difficulties in their chain of ſucceſſion, ibid. but improbable, ibid. they impoſe on the world without fear or ſhame, ibid.

Jews, their theology, 112. their articles of faith, ibid. and 183. to 185. reflexions thereon, 112, 113. their divinity over-run with allegories and fables, and the reaſons of it, 113. altered by the ſtudy of the Ariſtotelian philoſophy, ibid. their vain notion of God's preference to themſelves, ibid. their doctrine concerning angels, ibid. and 114. account of their cabala, ibid. they believe a hell, paradiſe, and purgatory, ibid. their opinion of nations not receiving their law, ibid. Jewiſh and Chriſtian religion eſſentially the ſame, 115.

Jews, their morality compared with the Chriſtian, 115. the decalogue, the baſis of that of the Chriſtian, ibid. their morality conſiſts not of ceremony only, ibid. have reformed their doctrines upon the writings of the Chriſtians, ibid. cauſe of their wickedneſs in theſe latter ages, 116. and of their uſury, ibid. their charity to their brethren, ibid.

Jews, their commandments, ordinances, and judgments, 116. into how many precepts they divide the law, ibid. different opinions concerning their number, and riſe of them, 117. another diviſion of theſe precepts and abſurd reaſons thereof, ibid. another diviſion into precepts, ſtatutes and judgments; and explanation of it, ibid. obey the commands of their wiſe men likewiſe, and why, ibid. and 118.

Jews, their Sanhedrim, its riſe and number, preſident, vice-preſident and ſenators, 118. where held, ibid. who admitted into it, ibid. and 119. its great power and authority, 119. and how long it laſted, 120. explanation of ſome circumſtances on this ſubject with relation to what is obſerved among Chriſtians, ibid. and 120. infallibility aſcribed by the Jews to their Sanhedrim, 119, 189. to 191.

Jews, their feſtivals, and the conformity of them with the Chriſtian, 128. to 130.

Jews, their ſtate and government after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, 130. to 132. kept to the ſame diſcipline as before, and in what manner, 130. riſe of the Talmud, and the manner in which it was compoſed, 131. Miſna, Gemara, Toſiphetot, Barajetot, what, ibid. their two Talmuds, an account of them, ibid. and 132. full of uſeleſs queſtions and fables, ibid. and riſe of them, 132, 133. reflexions on their ſucceſſion of doctors, who came after their Talmud, 132. riſe of thoſe ridiculous traditions contained therein, 133, 134. their local practices and cuſtoms, 134.

Jews, their books for the uſe of the ſynagogue, what, how prepared and written, 134, 135. not accented, nor illuminated, ibid. their chief ſtudy, ibid. their method of inſtructing their children, ibid. and of diſputing, ibid. why ſuch bigots, ibid.

Jews, their writings, and how far uſeful to Chriſtians, 136. their Miſna and Gemara of little uſe, ibid. their books of divinity, how far uſeful, and ſome account of them, ibid. account of their writings of the cabala, and reflexions thereon, ibid. and 138. their philoſophy, logic, and metaphyſics borrowed from Ariſtotle, and how far their writings thereon uſeful, 138. boaſt of ſome works of Ariſtotle, which are not in Greek, ibid. their mathematics and medicine, and whence derived, ibid. their arithmetic, geometry, aſtronomy and aſtrology, ibid. their calendar, how regulated, 139. their books of phyſic, tranſlations only, and from whom, ibid. their treatiſes on chirurgery and botany. ibid. rhetoric and poetry neglected by them, ibid. their writers of hiſtory and chronology wretched, 140. their grammarians learned and ſubtle, and the time of their flouriſhing, 140. their modern grammarians of little uſe, ibid. their moſt celebrated grammarians, who, ibid.

Jews, their diſperſion, 163. their own, and the Chriſtians idea of it, ibid. and 164. Eldad, and other hiſtorians, their fabulous accounts of their ſettlement and ſoveraignty, ſince, ibid. and 165.

Jews turn fortune-tellers, and why, 166.

Jews, their number baniſhed out of France, 169.

Jews, accuſed of poiſoning the waters, and obliged thereon to turn Chriſtians, 169.

Jews, treatment and perſecutions of them ſince the laſt revolution of Jeruſalem, under the Emperor Veſpaſian, 166. to 170.

Jews, crimes imputed to them, 170. crucifying children, and receiving the heart of them at their communion, ibid. witchcraft and ſorcery, 171. abuſing the hoſt, ibid. miracle relating thereto, ibid. ſcourging crucifixes, and prophaning images and croſſes, ibid. poiſoning ſprings and rivers, 172, treaſons and rebellions, ibid.

Jews, their impoſtors and falſe Meſſiahs, 172, 173.

Jews, puniſhments and diſgraceful diſtinctions impoſed on them, 173. to 176.

Jews, laws of Princes, and decrees of the church againſt them, 174. to 176.

Jews in the utmoſt contempt amongſt the Mahometans, 175.

Jews, obliged to pay a florin an hour for their reſidence at Augsburg, 175. allowed to ſtay but three hours at Trent, and why, ibid.

Jews, puniſhed for their fidelity to their Prince, 175. reflexion thereon.

Jews, their ſaints, and the miracles performed by them, 176. to 178.

Jews Chineſe, their particular tenets and practices, 181.

Jews, their religious ceremonies whilſt travelling, 230.

Jews preſent the Pope with a copy of their law at his taking poſſeſſion, 289.

Jews heretical. V. Caraites, Samaritans.

Ignatius S. his hiſtory, 370.

Ignorance, mother of a barbarous devotion, 1.

Ilicet, a form, what, and when uſed, 23.

Images, benediction of them, 331. image-worſhip, riſe of it, ibid. images almoſt as ancient as religion, ibid. owing to human weakneſs, ibid. the holy Trinity and angels, how repreſented, ibid. and 332. notions and practice of the Heathens in regard to their Demi-Gods, and the Roman Catholics in regard to their ſaints, the ſame, ibid. but cenſured, ibid. miraculous effects of images, ibid.

Images miraculous, of our lady, 378, 379.

Impudence of the Jews, in impoſing their fictions on mankind, 111.

Impurity contracted by dreams, how cleanſed away, 9.

Impurities among the Jews, how waſhed away, 9.

Incenſing an altar. V. Altar.

Indians, conſecrated no temples to their Gods, 3.

Indians of Peru, never entered the temple of the Sun, but barefooted, 12.

Indians, pray to their pagods barefooted, 13.

INDEX.

Indians East, turn round at their prayers, 17.
Indian temples built in woods and fields, 3.
Indulgences, the touch-stone of faith, 385. rise of them, ibid. N. °. definition of them, 385. wonders wrought by them. ibid. abuses of them, ibid. and 386, 387. N. ².
Infallibility, ascribed to the Jewish Sanhedrim, as well as to the Councils of the Christian church, 119.
Innocent III. a saying of his, 282.
Inscription in the temple of the Samaritans, concerning Phineas, 96.
Inspiration, what, 277. N. ⁹.
Instrument of peace, its institution to whom ascribed, 310. N. ⁴.
Instruments of piety, their vertue and miracles, 387. to 391. V. Chaplet, rosary, scapulary, girdles of S. Francis, and S. Austin.
Intrigues carried on in the conclave, 275. 277.
Inventions human in religion, produce irreligion in some, and bigotry in others, 2.
Invocation of saints, to what owing, 359.
Io Paan, etymology of it, 2.
Io Paan, a prayer addressed to Apollo, not understood by the Heathens, who used it, 2.
Job, full of the boldest and sublimest figures, 145.
Jochanan, a Jewish saint, his ridiculous piety, 177.
John XXIII. Pope, a bitter enemy and persecutor of the Jews, 169.
John Baptist S. his blood boils on his festival, 409.
Jonas, a Rabbi and grammarian, 140.
Joseph S. patron of joyners and carpenters, 393.
Josippon Ben Gorion, a Jewish history censured, 140.
Jozer, a Jewish hymn, 45.
Isaac de Castro of Tartas, a Jewish saint and martyr, 177.
Isaiah, the most eloquent of all the Prophets, 145.
Italy, Spain, and Portugal, swarm with fraternities, 392.
Italy, famous for the blood of martyrs, 409.
Jubilee, its origin, 380. its advantages under the Jewish and Christian œconomy, ibid. author of its institution and his design therein, ibid. N. ᵇ. conformity of it with the Ludi sæculares of the Romans, ibid. and 381. opinion of two Roman Catholic writers thereon, 380. N. ⁴. different times of its celebration, 380, 381. decrees of Popes concerning it, 380, 381. power it gives to confessors, 341. ceremonies relating to it, 381, 382, 383, 384.
Juda the Believer. V. Lopez de Vera.
Juda, a Rabbi and grammarian, 140.
Juda the holy, a Jewish saint, miracles wrought at his funeral, 177.
Judgment last, opinion of the Jews concerning it, 104.
Julius, presented to the Pope, and why, 285.
Juno Lacinia, her temple built in woods, 3.
Jupiter, how worshipped on the mountains of Bithynia, 3.
Jupiter, the oak appropriated to him, 21.
Justinian, his rigor against the Jews, 167.

K.

Keys of the church of S. John de Lateran, of what metal, and why, 290. N. ⁵.
Kimchi David, a Rabbi and grammarian, 140.
Kinian Suidar, or purchase of the cloth, what, 56.
Kissing the images of saints, has obtained many blessings for whole families, 17. N. ibid.
Kissing the hands, mouths, feet and knees of their Gods, the doors of the temples, the posts and pillars of the gates, the ground of any foreign country, an ancient custom among the Heathens, 18. kissing the black stone and four corners of the Kaaba, a custom amongst the Mahometans, ibid. consecrated by Roman Catholics on occasions of ceremony.
Kissing the Pope's feet, a very ancient custom, 282. reasons alledged by the Catholics in support of this custom, ibid.
Kisses thrown up to the Gods, by such as could not come near them, 18.
Kneeling at prayers, one of the most ancient customs in the world, 15. according to S. Basil a type of sin and grace, ibid.
Kyrie Eleison, what, 305. N. ⁸. reflexion thereon, ibid. N. ⁹.

L.

Lag, name of a Jewish festival, 68.
Lamps and tapers have furnished oil and wax for many miracles, 300. N. ¹. are mysterious, ibid. the custom of burning them always observed by Jews and Gentiles, 316. N. ⁿ.
Lauds, what, 295.
Laurel, sacred to Apollo, 20.
Laurence S. patron of the curriers, 392.
Laurence of Miranda S. patron of the druggists and apothecaries, 392.
Laurence S. patron of merchants and woollen-drapers, 392.
Laurence S. liquefaction of his blood, 410.
Law, purity of the Jewish to be learnt from the Samaritans of Sichem, 95.
Law of the Jews. V. Jews.
Laws of Princes made against the Jews, 174. to 176. decrees of the church made against the Jews, 175. 176.
Learned men whose labours are of great use and consolation to devout persons, catalogue of them, 21.
Leo the Isaurian, zealous in converting the Jews, 167.
Leo X. Pope, his scandalous traffic of indulgences, 386. N. ᵃ.
Leonard S. patron of gravers, sculptors, and stone-cutters, 392.
Levita Elias, a Rabbi and grammarian, 141.
Lewis the Debonaire favourable to the Jews, 167.
Liesse, a chapel of our lady there famous for miracles, 370. history of it, 379.
Limbs, figures of them offered to saints, and why, 378. an Heathen custom, ibid. N. ⁱ.
Liquefactions of the blood of martyrs, several in Italy, 409, 410.
Lirinensis Vincentius, a writer on traditions, 91.
Liturgy, its signification, 146. in its rise plain and simple, ibid. wherein it has ever consisted, ibid. account of the ancient Liturgy, ibid. derived from the Jews, ibid. alterations therein produced by time, 147. diversity of them considered, ibid. divided into Eastern and Western, ibid. under the Eastern what Liturgies included, ibid. wherein the difference between the Eastern and Western Liturgies has chiefly consisted, ibid. enquiry concerning the first authors of it, and the tongues wherein it was composed, ibid. 148, 149. disquisition concerning the Liturgies of S. James, S. Basil, and S. John Chrysostom, 148, 149. Liturgies translated from the Greek, 150. reflexions upon them, ibid. to 153. custom of the Eastern Christians in celebrating mass, 151. Brerewood, mistaken as to these Liturgies, 153. Western Liturgy, opinion concerning S. Peter being its author groundless, ibid. and 154. the present uniformity of the Western Liturgies, not always subsisting, ibid. attempted by Charlemagne and others, but in vain, ibid. only fragments of the Liturgies of the Western church remaining, ibid. account of the different Liturgies in use in that church, ibid. 155, 156. substance of the Western Liturgies, notwithstanding any minute differences has ever been the same, 156.
Livy, the Roman historian, the legendary of Paganism, 339.
Logic of the Jews. V. Jews.
Lopez de Vera, a Jewish saint and martyr, 177. judicious reflexions thereon, ibid.
Loretto, our lady of, account of the devotion of pilgrims to her, 398.
Love intrigues, &c. carried on under pretence of devotion, 5.
Lucia S. patroness of coachmen, 392.
Ludi sæculares, described, 381. N. ⁴.
Luke S. patron of the painters, 392.

INDEX.

Lutheranism, Maimbourg's history of, a curious passage cited from it, 386. N. [a].
Lustration by air, how performed, and why, 22.
Lustration by fire, used by the ancient Heathens, 23. trials by fire-ordeal took their rise from hence, ibid.
Lustration by smoke, how made, and of what, 23.
Lustrations, nuptial, 23. by blood, 23. with fruits, dogs, cats, and other animals, ibid. aspersions with laurel, olive, rosemary, hyssop branches, so many lustrations, ibid.

M.

Mahometans, modest and humble at their prayers, 6.
Mahometans in their prayers turn to the South, and why, 16.
Mahometans, abstain from women at the time of their devotions, 8.
Mahometans, all sorts of them practise ablutions with great care and exactness, 10.
Mahometans, at first support the Jews, 168. but afterwards persecute them, ibid.
Mahometan persecutions of the Jews, neither so violent nor general as the Christian, 168.
Maimonides, a Jewish saint, fabulous history of him, 176, 177.
Maimonides Moses, a Jewish Rabbi and commentator on the Talmud, 133.
Manzerim or bastards, who esteemed so among the Jews, 77, 90.
Margarite S. her devotion to the virgin Mary, 376.
Married women, their feet washed, and why, 10.
Martha S. patroness of the Pope's officers, 392.
Martyrs to morality rare, tho' not to doctrines, 177.
Martyrs, blood of them has stained the very earth of Rome, 409.
Mary of the oak S. patroness of butchers, 392.
Mary Transpontina S. patroness of the bombardeers, 393.
Mary in Capella S. patroness of the coopers, 393.
Masquerades, stage drolleries, penitents and buffoons, an odd jumble in religion, 20.
Mass, ceremonies of it, 303. regarded by the Catholics as the most excellent of adorations, and effectual of prayers, ibid. its derivation, ibid. N. [a]. effectual tho' celebrated by a wicked priest, ibid. N. [c]. preparations for it, 304. of what parts composed, ibid. the different actions of the priest at mass described, 304. to 311. persons present at it, how placed, 312. postures required in the congregation, ibid. rules for their devout behaviout at it, ibid. high mass, solemn mass, episcopal mass, 313. to 316. solemn mass celebrated by the Pope, 316. to 320. mass for the dead, 320. to 323. account of several particular masses, 313. N. [b]. reflexion thereon, ibid.
Mathematics of the Jews. V. Jews.
Matins, what, 295.
Meal, how prepared by the Jews for the unleavened bread, 66.
Mecca temple, some account of it, 18.
Medicine of the Jews. V. Jews.
Medrasain. V. Zohar.
Mercy, fraternity of. V. Fraternities.
Metaphysics of the Jews. V. Jews.
Metempsychosis, opinion of the Jews concerning it, 104.
Mezuza, what, 36. 196.
Minerva, the olive tree consecrated to her, 20.
Minim, what, 86.
Miracles, more easy and common than in the primitive ages, 369.
Miracles of the saints of these latter ages, 369. to 373.
Miracle of our lady of the Snows, 377.
Misna. V. Jews.
Molinos, author of Quietism, 263. account of him, 263. his condemnation, 265. N. [z].
Monday and Thursday, devotion on these days, how performed by the Jews, 214, 215.
Money coined after the Pope's death, 275. N. [p].
Monte de la guardia our lady of, her miraculous image there painted by S. Luke, 379.
Morality of the Jews and Christians compared, 115.
Morenu, a title of honour among the Jews, 54.
Mortification of the enemies of one's religion, a great pleasure when approved by the priests, 167.
Moses, a Jewish grammarian, 140.
Moses, master of the greatest perspicuity of stile, 145.
Motawakel, his laws against the Jews, 174.
Murther, how atoned for among Idolaters, 9.
——————————— among Christians, 9.
Music, in religious worship, a general custom from the remotest ages, 18. thought by the ancient Heathens to appease their Deities, ibid. and 19. consecrated to religion, by Jews and Christians, 19. used by the Romans, Grecians and Egyptians at their religious exercises, 18. music of the Jews, 19. of the primitive Christians, ibid. too many graces in it stifle devotion, ibid. music and dances of the Americans, their chief religion, ibid. instances of the power of music, 19. N. ibid.
Myrtle sacred to Venus, 20.

N.

Nabardea, a famous Jewish academy on the Euphrates, 111.
Names of the virgin Mary. V. Virgin Mary.
Nedava, Hebrew word, its signification, 48.
Neuburg, a famous image of our lady there, 379.
Nicolas of Valencia zealous against the Jews, 168.
Nola, S. Peter of, his history, 369.
Nones, what, 295.

O.

Oak, sacred to Jupiter, 21.
Offerings, rise and abuse of them, 365. N. [r].
Olive-tree, sacred to Minerva, 20.
Onuphrius, his comparison of the Jubilee with the ludi seculares of the Romans, 380.
Oral law, a commode invention for supporting punctilio's, 179.
Orators Jewish, who, 145.
Order in Rome during the conclave, 278.
Order of processions prescribed by the church, 404.
Ordination derived from the Jews, 123.
Ornaments episcopal, each contain some mystery, and what, 314. N. [a].
Oscillation, a kind of purification, how performed, 22.
Our lady of purity, patroness of the trainbearers, 392.
Our lady of Loretto, patroness of the bakers, 393.

P.

Pagods Indian, built near the Ganges, and why, 9.
Painters, their ignorance and blunders in representing Christ, 121.
Palm-branch, presented to the priest by the deacon on Palm Sunday, kissed by the latter, 18.
Pan, alder-tree sacred to him, 20.
Pantaleon S. patron of the furriers, 393.
Pantaleon S. liquefaction of his blood, 410.
Paradise, Jewish idea of it, 104.
Parnassim or Memunim among the Jews, who, 48.
Pavia Cardinal of, his opinion concerning the conformity of the Jubilee, with the ludi seculares of the Romans, 380. N. [d].
Peace ecclesiastical, a nice and tender affair, 274.
Penance, Jewish how performed 199. of the month Elul, 204.
Penance, modern different from that of the primitive Christians, 395. description of a modern penitent, ibid. and 396. penance done by proxy, ibid. N. [i]. abuse of it, 396. use of it, and flagellation, ibid. reflexions thereon, ibid. N. [k].
Pennaforte S. Raymond, his history, 369.
Pentateuch, divided by the Jews into fifty two readings, and why, 48.
Pentateuch Hebrew-Samaritan, false opinion concerning it, 98.
Pentateuch Jewish and Samaritan, difference between them, 97.

INDEX.

Pentecoſt feaſt of, how obſerved by the Jews, 210.
Perfumes and incenſe offered by the ancients to their falſe Gods, 20.
Perſecutions of the Jews. V. Jews.
Perſians, erected no ſtatues nor altars to God, 3.
Perſians, preſerved the true religion for a great length of time, 3, 4.
Perſians, why they deſtroyed the Grecian temples, 3.
Perſians, turned round in worſhiping, and why, 17.
Perſians, began the day with hymns to their Gods, 6.
Peſach, the paſſover ſo called by the Jews, 66.
Peter S. falſely eſteemed the author of the Roman Liturgy, 153, 154.
Peter the Hermit, inventor of the chaplet and office of our lady, 387.
Phariſees, who, 180. believe the Metempſychoſis, and in what manner, ibid. believe a fate or deſtiny, 181. their penance, ibid.
Philip le Bel, ruins the Jews, 169.
Philip the Bold, his law againſt the Jews, 175.
Philoſophy of the Jews. V. Jews.
Phrygian cap, what, 23.
Pictures ſet up in the temples of the Gods, on what occaſion, 21. conſecrated by Roman Catholics to ſome ſaints in their churches, as monuments of the miracles wrought by them, ibid. theſe offerings ſometimes of gold and ſilver, ibid.
Piety, why repreſented veiled, 23.
Piety works of, flatter the heart of man, and why, 405. made advantage of by the clergy, ibid. riſe, progreſs, and abuſe of them, ibid. and 406.
Pilar nueſtra Senora del, a chapel famous for miracles wrought by the virgin Mary, 378.
Pinarians. V. Potitians.
Pine-tree, ſacred to Cybele, 20.
Pipe, uſed at receiving the communion, its riſe and cauſe, 318. N. *.
Pius V. Pope, baniſhes the Jews out of the eccleſiaſtical dominions, except Rome, and why, 169. reflexion thereon, ibid.
Places famous for the worſhip or miracles of the virgin Mary. Virgin Mary.
Pleaſures ſenſual, how introduced into religious worſhip, 19.
Plutarch, his opinion on Pythagoras's ſentiment upon turning round at worſhiping, 17.
Points, long and ſhort, to be obſerved in learning of Hebrew, 144.
Polygamy allowed among the Jews, 78.
Pomona, fruits ſacred to her, 20. her ſtory, 22.
Pope, ſucceſſor of S. Peter as head of the church, 119. his ſupremacy, 270. proofs of it, ibid. and 271. his ſpiritual juriſdiction, 274, 275. poſſeſſes the higheſt degree of power and fortune, to which a man can be raiſed in the eccleſiaſtic ſtate, ibid. ceremony of adoring him after his election, 281, 282, ceremony of his coronation, ibid. to 286. the entertainment formerly given him on his coronation-day, 286, 287. ceremony of his taking poſſeſſion, 287. to 289. ceremony of his reception at S. John de Lateran, 290, 291. his robes of ceremony, 291, ceremonies at his holding a conſiſtory, 292. to 294. ceremonies of his chapel, 296. order of proceſſion to it, 297. deſcription of it, 299. ſolemn maſs celebrated by him, 316. reaſons for his wearing the keys and triple crown, 282, 283. preſented with twenty five julio's, and why, 285. preſented with a copy of the law by the Jews, 289. their decrees concerning the Jubilee, 380, 381.
Poplar-tree, conſecrated to Hercules, 20.
Porters and chantres of churches, riſe of them, 124.
Poſtures, of the Turks at prayers, 14. affected diſagreeable to God, 15.
Potitians and Pinarians, who, 23.
Priapus, venerable for ſome certain faculties, 20. how worſhiped, ibid. a remarkable part of his body crowned, and by whom, ibid. and 21. ladies turned to gallantry, how they ſhewed their reſpect to Priapus, 20. what ſacred to him, 21.
Prayer, riſe and occaſion of it, 2.
Prayer amongſt the ancient idolaters, how uſed, 2.
Prayer, modeſt and humble of the Mahometans, 6.
Prayers time of, among the ancient Heathens, 6.
Prayer, five times a day among the Mahometans, 6.
Prayers, repetition of them abſurd, 6.
Prayer, true idea of it, how loſt, 2.
Praying by tale, who the author of it, 387.
Precedents, none to be found in hiſtory for odious diſtinctions in religion, 173.
Prieſts, uſeleſs creatures, 5. tricks of them, ibid.
Prieſts make themſelves maſters of the courts of Princes, and damn people for God's ſake, 5. inſtances of it, 5.
Prieſts Roman Catholic, condemned to perpetual chaſtity, 8. reflexion thereon, N. ibid.
Prieſts Egyptian, abſtained from wine and women, 8.
Prieſts Jewiſh, abſtained from all ſtrong liquors, 8.
Prieſts of Iſis and Cybele, abſtained from certain meats, 8.
Prieſts of all religions, have obſerved certain faſts and abſtinences, 8.
Prieſts and people crowned at religious ceremonies, 20.
Prieſt the being one, ſufficient reaſon for being thought by others, and perſuading oneſelf that one is the depoſitory of the ſupreme Being, 178.
Prieſt, his duty, 294. muſt renounce ſtate intrigues, ibid. and bid adieu to gallantry, ibid. and to the ladies, ibid. reflexions on cunning prieſts, 295. a jolly one deſcribed, 312.
Prieſts Heathen, practiſed confeſſion, and how, 314.
Prime, what, 295.
N. *. reflexion thereon, ibid.
Principle Chriſtian, of deſtroying the body to ſave the ſoul, 167.
Proceſſions of images in uſe among the Heathens, 8.
Proceſſions, deſcription of ſeveral, 399. to 404. condemned by ſincere Chriſtians, 403. their Original heathen, ibid. in uſe among the Jews, 404. ridiculous allegations in defence of them, ibid. how eccleſiaſtics ſhould appear at them, ibid. general order of them preſcribed by the church, ibid. always directed towards ſome church, 405.
Proceſſion, general at Rome upon the ceremony of canonizing four ſaints, 361. to 367.
Prone or ſermon, what, 335. ceremonies preparatory to, at, and after it, 335. to 339. deſcription of ſome fanatic and buffoon preachers, 336. Italian preachers, what, ibid. and 337. itinerant preachers, ibid. entertaining reflexions on the Italian, Spaniſh and French way of preaching, 336, 337, 338.
Prophets Jewiſh, animated by the ſound of muſical inſtruments, 19.
Prophets ſacred, figurative in their ſtile, 145. were the Jewiſh orators, ibid.
Proſelytes, how made among the Jews, 222.
Proſtration before the ſtatues of their Gods practiſed by the Romans, 14. now practiſed by the Turks, ibid. by the ancient Egyptians to their God Anubis, ibid. by the banyans, 15. one hundred and fifty uſed by certain Monks of Cairo before they lie down to ſleep, 14.
Proteſtants cover themſelves at reading the Bible, and preaching, the contrary at ſinging Pſalms or praying, 11.
Proteſtants and reformed churches have rejected the white colour in their worſhip, 11.
Proverbs, account of the ſtile of them, 145.
Proviſions, how carried into the conclave, 280.
Pſalms, character of the ſtile of them, 145.
Ptolomy Philopator, his law againſt the Jews, 174.
Public faith, why repreſented with a cornucopia, and veiled, 23.
Public notaries, in no conſideration among the Jews, 56.
Purgatory, what the Jews think of it, 104.
Purifying the body, not ſo troubleſome as that of the ſoul, 9.
Purim, feſtival ſo called, how obſerved by the Jews, 74, 75, 213.
Puniſhments and badges impoſed on the Jews, 173. to 176.
Pythagoras enjoyned his diſciples to worſhip bare-footed, and why, 12. V. Feet.

Quietiſm,

INDEX.

Q.

Quietiſm, an account of its riſe, progreſs and fall, and reflexions thereon, 260. to 265. conformity of their opinions with thoſe of the Beguards, 263. N. °.

R.

Rabbanim, who, 90, 132.
Rabbi, judges of differences among the Jews, 57. his authority extends to excommunication only, ibid.
Rabbi's Jewiſh, their views after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, 130. how they account for the handing down of their tradition, ibid.
Red hat, a badge of ignominy among the Jews, where, 174.
Reeds, appropriated to all river Gods, 20.
Reflexions on the ſucceſſion of Jewiſh doctors that came after the Talmud, 132.
Reflexions on the ceremonies practiſed at the Pope's reception into the church of S. John de Lateran, 290. N. ‘.
Reflexion on a ſcrupulous regularity in the obſervation of religious ceremonies, 303.
Reflexions judicious, on the ſtupidity of wearing any of the inſtruments of piety, 391.
Reformation Proteſtant, favourable to the Jews, 170.
Relics, ever venerated by the church, 406. abuſe of the devotion to them, and reflexions thereon, 406, 407. antiquity of this devotion, how attempted to be proved, 406. ſhrines of relics bleſſed, 407. oaths taken before them, ibid. directions for ſuch as viſit them, ibid. ceremony of tranſlating them, 407. muſt not be tranſlated by laymen, 408. miracles wrought by them, 408. to 410. recruit of four hundred and twenty eight raiſed at Rome, in 1672. and ſince, 410. manner of digging them out of the catacombs, ibid. time when, and perſons by whom performed, ibid. characteriſtics of them, ibid. cautions uſed in digging them, ibid. manner of diſpoſing them afterwards, ibid. by whom named, ibid. biſhop approves them, 411. ſeveral practices in regard to them, ibid. and 412. cuſtom of putting them under the altar, its riſe, 345. N. ‘. proceſſion of them, 349. ceremony of depoſiting them, 350.
Religion external, the only one of an infinite number of people, 2.
Religion leſs ſpiritual, when over-run with ceremonies, 5.
Religion, Jewiſh and Chriſtian eſſentially the ſame, 109.
Religion Jewiſh, cauſe of the change in it, 166.
Rebellion of the Jews under Veſpaſian, the cauſes of it, 166.
Religious worſhips, cuſtoms concerning it, 5.
Religious worſhip, law of the twelve tables concerning it, 5.
Reſurrection, Jewiſh idea of it, 104.
Retirements, what, and in what place performed, 405.
Rhetoric and poetry, neglected by the Jews, 139.
Ribaldry and nonſenſe always an ingredient in the hymns of the ancients, 18.
Riſe of temples and prieſts, 45.
Rivers and fountains held in high veneration by the Romans, and why, 9.
Robes pontifical, ceremony of bleſſing them, 334.
Roch S. his hiſtory, 371.
Romans for 170. years worſhipped without making any images of their Gods, 3.
Romans, before they beſieged any town, beſought the Gods of it to depart, 4.
Romans worſhipped the Gods at day break, 5.
Romans honoured them with praiſes on feſtivals and other ſolemn occaſions, 5.
Romans went in proceſſion barefoot, 5.
Romans, began their worſhip with the invocation of Janus, 8.
Romans, believed that Janus firſt inſtituted public worſhip, built temples and altars, and was their advocate with the Gods, 8.
Romans paid a great reſpect to rivers and fountains, and why, 9.
Romans exact in their ſuperſtitious ceremonies, 13.
Romans, covered themſelves when they approached any of their Deities, 11.
Romans, covered themſelves in order to move compaſſion, 11. and in nuptial ceremonies, and why, ibid. and in mourning, ibid.
Romans ſacrificed white victims, and why, 11. black, and why, 11. and clothed themſelves accordingly, 11.
Romans uſed beads to count their prayers, 15.
Romans turned to the right in worſhiping, 17.
Romans, Grecians and Egyptians conſtantly had muſic at all their religious exerciſes, 18.
Roman Catholics, their ſentiments and practice in regard to their ſaints, the ſame as thoſe of the Heathens, in regard to their Gods and heroes, 332. but cenſured, ibid.
Roſa the bleſſed, her hiſtory, and miracles, 372.
Roſary, deſcribed, 388. myſteries of it explained, ibid. directions for its uſe, ibid. miracles wrought by it, ibid. time of celebrating the ſolemnity of it, ibid. fraternity of it, 389. proceſſion of it, 402.
Rules for changing the altar ornaments. V. Altar.

S.

Sabbatai Tſevi, a Jewiſh impoſtor, account of his impoſture and death, 173.
Sabbath of the Jews. V. Jews.
Sabbatites or Sabbatarians, what, 181.
Sacrament, proceſſion of it at Madrid deſcribed, 402. at Genoa, ibid.
Sacrificers, body, and ſometimes head only, waſhed, 10.
Sacrifices bloody, not offered in the firſt ages, 2.
Sacrifices, ſometimes went before prayers, and ſometimes after them, 2.
Sadducees, their riſe, 180. their opinions and doctrines, ibid.
Saints of Chriſtianity, firſt, how dreſſed, 21.
Saints of the church, their miraculous power, 21.
Saints of the Jewiſh church, and their miracles, 176. to 178.
Saints and miracles of the Jews. V. Jews.
Saints, patrons of particular fraternities. V. Fraternities.
Saints, canonization of them deſcribed, 358. to 361. Beatification the fore-runner of it, 358. riſe of the ceremony of canonization, 359. invocation of them, to what owing, ibid. firſt inſtance of a ſolemn canonization, ibid. canonization bears a great affinity to the Roman apotheoſis, ibid. devotion paid to them, 368. various claſſes of them, and how diſtinguiſhed, ibid. millions of them unknown, and without a name, ibid. opinion of a learned man concerning the devotion paid to them, ibid. and 369. ground of the devotion to them, 369. idea of the power of thoſe of the latter ages, and account of their lives and miracles, 369. to 373. manner of devoting oneſelf to them, 373. and of their acquiring lands, houſes, &c. ibid. patron ſaint preferred to the reſt, 374. exceſſes in the devotion to them, ibid.
Salomon Iſaaki, a Jewiſh Rabbi eſteemed for his knowledge of the Talmud, 132.
Samaritans converſe not with their wives during their ſabbath, S. nor the Mahometans, ibid.
Samaritans, their riſe, 94. and deſcent, 95. their memory, how revived, ibid. places of abode, ibid. their deſcent, ibid. their temple, ibid. time of their celebrating the paſſover, ibid. obſerve the ſabbath according to Exodus, and how, and look on it as their principal feſtival, ibid. which begins at ſun-ſet, and why, ibid. offer no ſacrifice but on mount Garizim, ibid. and 95. difference between them, and the reſt of the Jews in the obſervation of the ſame feſtivals, 95. their objections againſt the other Jews, ibid.

have

INDEX.

have a lineal deſcent of High Prieſts from Aaron, ibid. their characters uſed by God in writing the law, ibid. their opinion of the Jewiſh characters, ibid. falſly ſuſpected of Sadduceiſm, and why, ibid. number of them living in the time of Benjamin the Jew, 96. their prieſts marry into their own family, and why, ibid. are in poſſeſſion of Joſeph's tomb, and of thoſe of the Prophets, Joſhua, Caleb and others, ibid. calumniated by the Jews, and why, ibid. look upon the Pentateuch only as authentic, ibid. but have other hiſtorical books of the Bible among them, ibid. ſpeak of Eſdras as an impoſtor, and why, ibid. difference between the Samaritan and Jewiſh Pentateuch, 97. have tranſlations of their Pentateuch in Arabic, and Syriac, and how written, ibid. write without vowels, ibid. ſects of them, 98. further account of them, 178, 179.

Sanhedrim of the Jews. V. Jews.

Santa Caſa, or holy houſe of Loretto, deſcription of it, 398. N. [q].

Santo Volto at Lucca, deſcribed, 327.

Saturday, conſecrated to devotion by the Jews, 7.

Saul, relieved by muſic, 19.

Savior S. patron of the ſadlers, 393.

Scala Santa, going up the ſteps of it a meritorious piece of devotion, 384. but fatiguing, 12. preſerved by whom, ibid.

Scapulary, deſcribed, 389. its origin and advantages, ibid. time of its feſtival, ibid. bulls and indulgences of Pope's concerning it, ibid. difficult duties of its devotees, ibid. fraternity of it, ibid. dreſs of the arch-fraternity of it deſcribed, ibid. and 390.

Scach Abbas, King of Perſia, a perſecutor of the Jews, 168.

Scemona aſre, Jewiſh hymns, 45.

Scents bad, the ſign of a Jew, 175. how taken away, ibid.

Sciamas, who, 123. 195.

Scrutiny, what, 276. N. [q].

Scruples imbibed from a religious principle are of a vaſt extent, 20.

Sea-ſhore, why devotions paid there, 9.

Sebaſtian S. patron of the mercers, 392.

Seboreans, who, 132.

Serpent, ſtrange tradition of the Rabbiniſt Jews concerning it, 91.

Severus, treated the Jews with lenity, 167.

Sextes, what, 295.

Shepherds fanatic, headed by a prieſt and a monk, deſtroy the Jews without mercy, 169.

Shoes violet coloured, an ignominious diſtinction of the Eaſtern Jews, 175.

Shoes, friars left at the door to give the husband notice not to diſturb his wife's devotions, 399. N. [r].

Sicyonians, how they worſhipped, 3.

Signs external, cauſe of religious worſhip, 1.

Signs external, by cuſtom grow into the eſſential part of religion, 10.

Signs are to fix our attention on the thing ſignified by them, 11.

Simcha tora, what, 72. how this feſtival is obſerved, 211.

Simon of Emeſa, his manner of converting a Jewiſh glaſs-maker, 167. N. [w].

Sixtus V. Pope, his reaſon for allowing the Jews to live in Rome, 169.

Slaves, cuſtoms of the Jews concerning them, 100.

Societies of the Jews for diſtributing alms, 48.

Societies for devotion, V. ſcapulary, roſary, girdles of S. Francis, S. Auſtin, S. Monica, S. Francis of Paula.

Sorbonne, a doctor of it groſly miſtaken in his opinion of the Caraites, 91.

Spaniſh Jews, pronounce the Hebrew beſt, 144.

Spaniſh Viſigoth Kings, enemies to the Jews, 167.

Spaniard, their character, 401.

Spouſes of the law among the Jews, what, 72.

Staff paſtoral, of the biſhop a type, 347. N. [o].

Staff of the pilgrims, the occaſion of a world of pretty thoughts, 399.

Stephen II. Pope, the firſt carried on mens ſhoulders, 282. N. [y].

Stephen S. his blood boils on his feſtival, 409.

Steps of a temple muſt be odd, and why, 13.

Stigmata, ſociety of it, 340. its author, ibid. its dreſs, ibid.

Stock Simon, general of the Carmelites, patron of the devotees of the ſcapulary, 389. received the ſcapulary from the virgin Mary, ibid.

Stone-foundation of a church, ceremony of bleſſing it, 344, 345.

Stor-junkare, a Lapland Deity worſhipped on mountains, 3.

Strictneſs childiſh, of the Jews in the obſervation of their ſabbath, 7.

Strings blue, a mark of ignominy impoſed on the Jewiſh women, 173.

Studies of the Jews. V. Jews.

Sunday, conſecrated by Chriſtians to devotion, 7.

Surſum corda, reflexion thereon, 308. N. [t].

Sylva, a Jewiſh ſaint ſaved from burning by a tempeſt, 177.

Sylveſter S. patron of the vintners, 392.

Synagogue. V. Jews.

Synod provincial, what, and how often to be held, 273. who has a right to call it, and how called, ibid. order of holding it, ibid. ceremonies before and at it, ibid.

T.

Tabernacles feaſt of, V. Jews.

Taled or Jewiſh veil, its form and uſe, 195.

Talmide Hakamim, who, 121.

Talmud of the Jews, how many, and how formed, 131, 132. uſe of the Talmud, 90. V. Jews.

Talmudiſts, their opinion concerning the beginning of the world, 69.

Tartars, began the day with hymns to the Sun, 6.

Tau, Greek letter, what it ſignified among the Egyptians, 323.

Teffilin or forehead pieces, what, and how worn, 196, 44.

Temples, none in the earlieſt ages, 2.

Temples Egyptian, why built on the borders of the Nile, 9.

Temples Chriſtian, none built till Conſtantius's time, 122.

Tetragrammaton, how written by the Jews, how by the Caraites, and why, 93.

Thales, cured of the plague by muſic, 19. N.

Theodardus S. an incorrect and frivolous writer, his charge againſt the Jews, 172.

Theodoſius, his indulgence to the Jews, 167.

Thomas S. patron of clerks, and other writers, 392.

Thomas a Becket S. his hiſtory, 372.

Thomas Aquinas S. patron of the bookſellers, 393.

Thor, a God of the Germans ſacrificed to every Thurſday, 5.

Throne, pontifical, cuſtom of covering it with rich ſtuffs very ancient, 301. its primitive place, ibid. reflexion thereon, ibid. N. [a].

Tierces, what, 295.

Toledo arch-biſhop of, perſecutes the Jews, 167. N. [z].

Toſiphetot. V. Jews.

Trees, the talleſt conſecrated to the Gods, 2.

Trees, what, appropriated to particular Gods, 20.

Traditionaries Jewiſh, their extraordinary privileges, 178. V. Jews.

Traditions of the Jews, when collected into a body, 111. 131, 132. V. Jews.

Trent, Jews allowed to ſtay but three hours there, and why, 175.

Triregne or Pope's triple crown, its riſe, 283. N. [k] and [l]. deſcription of it, 285. N. [b].

Turbant violet coloured, an ignominious badge impoſed on the Eaſtern Jews, 175.

Turning round, ſtill obſerved at maſs, 17. and why, ibid.

Turning round in worſhip, a cuſtom among the Heathens, 17. recommended by Pythagoras, ibid. Plutarch's and M. Dacier's opinion thereon, ibid. Romans turned to the right, the Gauls to the left, 8.

Indians obſerve the ſame, ibid. Pythagoras recommended turning round in worſhipping, 17.
Turks deteſt black as an ill omen, but eſteem white and green as ſacred, 11. have forbidden Jews and Chriſtians to wear green, but allow them black and yellow, ibid.
Turkiſh religion, much indebted to the Jewiſh, 10, 11.
Turks put off their ſhoes to pray, 12.
Turks pray with down caſt eyes, 13.
Twelve tables, law of it concerning religious worſhip, 5.
Tyrtæus, animated the Lacedæmonians by muſic, 19. N.

V.

Vayrac, abbot his character of the Spaniards, 401.
Veiazin, a Jewiſh hymn, 45.
Veils, their origin, 11.
Veils, of what colour, and why, 11.
Venant S. patron of the upholders, 393.
Venus, myrtle conſecrated to her, 20.
Verſion Samaritan of the pentateuch, what, 97.
Vertumnus, hay ſacred to him, 20. his hiſtory, 21.
Veſpers, what, 295.
Veſſels and inſtruments of the altar deſcribed. V. Altar.
Villany, Enthuſiaſm and bigotry, cauſes of perſecution in matters of religion, 170.
Vincent S. patron of carmen, 392.
Violence in matters of religion, conſidered by the vulgar as acts of religion againſt the enemies of their belief, 174. N. [b].
Virgil Polydore, his opinion concerning the conformity of the Jubilee, with the ludi ſeculares, 380. N. [c].
Virgin Mary, devotion paid to her, 374. her names, ibid. ridiculous opinion as to the devotion to her, ibid. riſe of this exceſſive devotion, 375. ſorts of devotion to her, ibid. books written on this devotion, ibid. N. [b]. feſtivals inſtituted in honour of her, 376. to 378. places famous for her worſhip or miracles, 378, 379. her relics, what remaining, and where, 379, 380.
Viſitation of the churches by pilgrims, 383. its end and advantage, ibid. and 384.
Vitruvius, his directions concerning the ſteps of a temple, and the reaſon of it, 13.
Vitus S. liquefaction of his blood, 410.
Unity of a ſupreme Being, a point generally granted by the Heathens, 18, 19.
Vows and pilgrimages to ſaints and martyrs, abuſe of them, 397. to 399. famous pilgrimages, 397. 399. ceremonies of them, ibid. performed by proxy, 399.
Urſula S. liquefaction of her blood, 410.
Uſury Jewiſh. V. Jews.

W.

Warlike implements, ceremony of bleſſing them, 335.
Warrior holy, ceremony of bleſſing him, 335.
Waters poiſoned by the Jews, 172.
Waſhing of feet, on what occaſions, 10.
Waſhing head and hands, 10.
Waſhing hands, 10.
Waſhing feet, practiſed by the Pope and Cardinals, on what occaſions.
Water luſtral, why uſed, 9. a hint for holy-water among Roman Catholics, 9.
Water holy, a memento to Chriſtians, 9. clean heart preferable to all aſperſions with it, ibid.
Water of the ſea eſteemed for luſtrations, 9.
Water holy, its uſe, 335. ſprinkling with it, an Heathen cuſtom, ibid. N.
Wheat-ears, ſacred to Ceres, 20.
Wheel, capes and long ſleeves, badges of ignominy impoſed on the Jews, 175.
Woman Jewiſh, what injunctions oblige them, 99, 100.
Woman, during her courſes not to be converſed with, 78. what ſtiled a husband-killer, ibid.
Women devout, prayed with their hair untied, 13.
Witchcraft, unlawful among the Jews, 99. V. Jews.
Worſhip of images, its riſe, 331.
Worſhip religious, external ſigns, one cauſe of it, 1.
Worſhip religious extravagant, where ſupreme Being unknown, ibid.
Worſhip public, conditions admitting to, or excluding from it among the Romans, 7, 8.
Worſhip public, of the Romans began with Janus, and concluded with Veſta, 8.
Worſhip religious, what, falſly ſo called. 1.
Writings of the Jews. V. Jews.

X.

Xavier S. his hiſtory, 372.
Xenocrates, healed madneſs by muſic, 19. N.

Z.

Zedaca, Hebrew word, its ſignification, 48.
Zedekias, a Jew, famous for ſwallowing carts, horſes and their drivers, 172.
Zekenim, who, 120.
Zocotora, people of it worſhip in groves, 3.
Zohar and Medraſcim, famous Jewiſh commentaries of little uſe to Chriſtians, 137.
Zizith or Taſſels, its form and uſe deſcribed, 195, 196.

THE

RELIGIOUS CEREMONIES

AND CUSTOMS

OF THE

SEVERAL NATIONS

OF THE

KNOWN WORLD.

VOL. II.

2 - 13 - 19

XX 2 8

THE RELIGIOUS

CEREMONIES

AND CUSTOMS

OF THE SEVERAL

NATIONS OF THE KNOWN WORLD.

Repreſented in above an Hundred COPPER-PLATES,

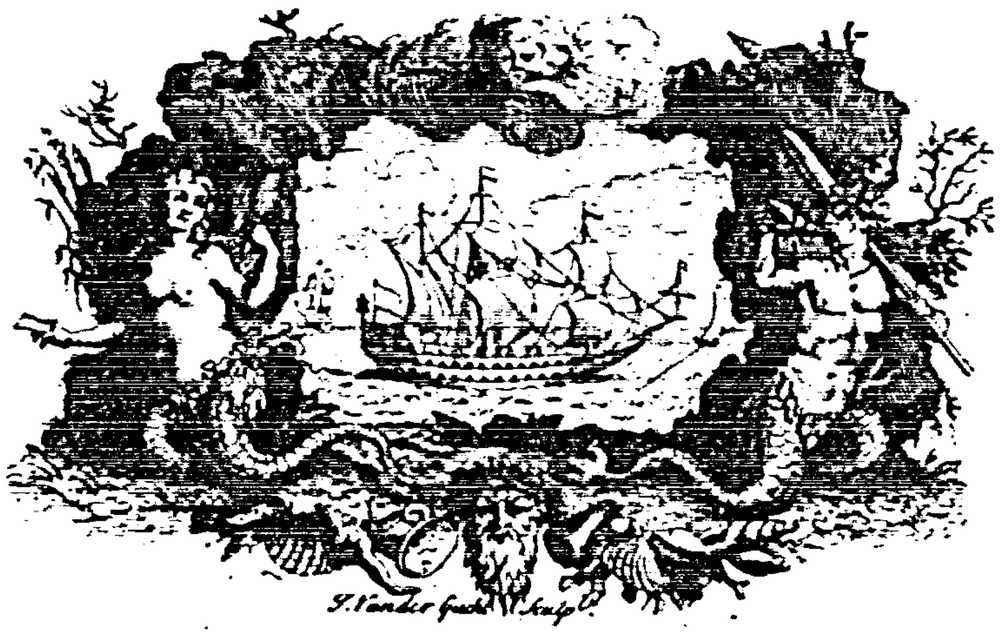
DESIGNED BY THE

FAMOUS PICART.

TOGETHER WITH

HISTORICAL EXPLANATIONS,

AND SEVERAL



CURIOUS DISSERTATIONS.

Written Originally in French; and now Publiſh'd in Engliſh, with very Conſiderable AMENDMENTS and ADDITIONS.

VOL. II.

CONTAINING

THE CEREMONIES OF THE ROMAN CATHOLICKS.

LONDON:

Printed for NICHOLAS PREVOST, and Comp. at the Ship, againſt Southampton-ſtreet in the Strand.

M.DCC.XXXI.

Academiæ Cantabrigiensis
Liber

EXPLANATION

OF THE

SEVERAL PLATES

In the Second Volume.

WITH DIRECTIONS TO THE BOOKBINDER FOR PLACING THE FIGURES.

N° 34.

LE celebrant diſtribuë les cierges le jour de la chandeleur.
Proceſſion de la chandeleur.
Les tenebres.
On porte le S. Sacrament dans le tombeau.
Le feu nouveau le jour du ſamedi ſaint.
Benediction du cierge paſcal.

N° 38.

Le jours des cendres.
Maniere dont on rend le pain benit.

N° 39.

La proceſſion des palmes le dimanche des rameaux.
La proceſſion du ſaint ſacrement le jour de la fête-dieu.

N° 40.

Ceremonie de laver les pieds a 12 pauvres le jeudi ſaint.
L'adoration de la croix par le peuple le vendredi ſaint.

N° 41.

On porte en proceſſion les ſaintes huiles.
Benediction des ſaintes huiles.
Maniere dont l'evêque eſt recu à la viſite de ſon dioceſe.
L'evêque fait l'exortation paſtorale.
On baiſe la main de l'evêque.
Le corps de l'evêque eſt expoſé dans l'egliſe.

N° 42.

Maniere de porter le S. ſacrement quand le pape eſt en voyage.

N° 43.

Le baptême adminiſtré par un prêtre.
Le baptême adminiſtré par la ſage-femme.

N° 44.

Ceremonie de la confirmation.
Autre maniere de confirmer.

N° 34. Page 8.

THE prieſt diſtributes the wax tapers on candlemas-day.
Proceſſion on candlemas-day.
The Tenebræ.
The holy ſacrament is carried to the grave.
The new fire lighted on eaſter-eve.
Benediction of the paſchal taper.

N° 38. Page 13.

Aſh-wedneſday.
Manner of returning the conſecrated bread.

N° 39. Page 16.

The proceſſion with palms, on palm-ſunday.
The proceſſion of the bleſſed ſacrament, on corpus chriſti-day.

N° 40. Page 20.

Ceremony of waſhing the feet of twelve poor men, on holy thurſday.
The people adore the croſs on good friday.

N° 41. Page 22.

The conſecrated oils are carried in proceſſion.
Conſecration of the holy oils.
In what manner the biſhop is received, at his viſitation.
The biſhop gives his paſtoral charge.
The biſhop's hand kiſs'd.
The biſhop's corps lies in the church.

N° 42. Page 44.

The holy ſacrament carried, when the pope is on a journey.

N° 43. Page 68.

Baptiſm adminiſtred by a prieſt.
Baptiſm adminiſtred by a midwife.

N° 44. Page 70.

Ceremony of confirmation.
Confirmation after another manner.

N° 45.

La communion.
Le viatique.

N° 46.

La confeſſion.
Extreme onction.

N° 47.

Les penitens ſe preſentent.
On leur met le cilice.
On les met dehors de l'egliſe.
Ils ſont devant la porte de l'egliſe les cierges eteints.
On les fait rentrer en les prenant par la main.
Pendant qu'ils ſont à genoux, on recite les litanies.

N° 48.

Degradation de l'evêque.
Retabliſſement de celui qui avoit été degradé.
L'excommunication à chandelles eteintes.
Retabliſſement d'un excommunié.
Reconciliation de l'heretique.
L'heretique conduit aux pieds de l'autel par l'evêque.

N° 49.

L'expoſition du corps a la porte du logis.
L'ofrande du pain et du vin à la meſſe des morts.

N° 50.

Le convoi funebre.
Le corps expoſé dans le choeur.
On jette l'eau benite ſur le corps aprés qu'on la deſcendu dans la foſſe.

N° 51.

Ceremonie de marriage.
Benediction du lit nuptial.

N° 52.

Le clerc reçoit la tonſure.
Le clerc reçoit le ſurplis.
Ordination { du ſacriſtain. / du lecteur. / de l'exorciſte. / de l'acolyte.

N° 53.

Ordination { des ſoudiacres. / des diacres. / des prêtres.
Le prêtre reçoit l'impoſition des mains.
L'evêque donne aux prêtres le pouvoir de conſacrer.
L'evêque communie les nouveaux prêtres.

N° 54.

L'evêque deſigné ſe preſente avec les deux aſſiſtans.
Prête le ſerment.
L'evêque deſigné ſe proſterne.
Eſt Oint.
On oint les mains de l'evêque.
On lui donne le baton paſtoral.

N° 55.

N° 45. Page 72.

Communion.
The viaticum.

N° 46. Page 78.

Confeſſion.
Extreme Unction.

N° 47. Page 80.

The penitents preſent themſelves.
The hair-ſhirt is put on.
They are turn'd out of church.
They ſtand at the church-gate, their tapers blown out.
They are led into the church.
The litanies are ſaid; the penitents being on their knees.

N° 48. Page 82.

A biſhop degraded.
The degraded biſhop reinſtated.
Excommunication with unlighted tapers.
An excommunicated perſon receiv'd into the church.
A heretic reconcil'd.
A heretic led to the foot of the altar by the biſhop.

N° 49. Page 100.

The corps is ſet at the houſe-door.
Offering of bread and wine at the maſs for the dead.

N° 50. Page 102.

The corps is carried along.
The corps laid in the choir.
The coffin is ſprinkled with holy water, after 'tis let down in the grave.

N° 51. Page 112.

Ceremony of marriage.
Bleſſing of the nuptial bed.

N° 52. Page 125.

The clerk receives the tonſure.
The clerk receives the ſurplice.
A ſacriſtan, A reader, An exorciſt, An acolyth } ordain'd.

N° 53. Page 128.

A ſub-deacon, Deacon, Prieſt } ordain'd.
The prieſt receives the impoſition of hands.
The biſhop impowers the prieſts to conſecrate.
The biſhop gives the prieſts the ſacrament.

N° 54. Page 130.

The biſhop elect preſents himſelf with the two aſſiſtants.
Takes the oath.
The biſhop elect falls proſtrate.
Is anointed.
Has his hands anointed.
The paſtoral ſtaff given him.

N° 55.

On donne l'anneau a l'evêque.
On lui preſente le livre des évangiles.
Le nouvel evêque preſente les flambeaux, le pain, et le vin.
On met la mitre ſur la tête de l'evêque conſacré.
On lui donne le baton paſtoral.
L'archevêque recevant le pallium.

N° 56.

On donne l'habit eccleſiaſtique a l'abbé.
On lui impoſe les mains.
On donne le voile a l'abeſſe.
La conſecration des religieuſes.
Benediction des habits des religieuſes.
Les religieuſes recoivent le voile.

N° 57.

L'evêque donne l'anneau aux nouvelles religieuſes.
On couronne la nouvelle religieuſe.
On fait la lecture de l'anatheme.
Les religieuſes preſentent des cierges.
L'evêque communie les religieuſes.
On leur donne le breviaire.

N° 58.

La reconnoiſſance du corps du pape défunt.
Les obſéques du pape défunt.
Le corps du pape porté a l'egliſe de St. Pierre.
Le corps du pape expoſé trois jours au peuple dans l'egliſe de St. Pierre.
Catafalque du pape defunt.

Convoi funebre du pape.

N° 59.

La ſale de l'inquiſition.
Diverſes manieres dont le St. office fait donner la queſtion.

N° 60.

Jugement de l'inquiſition dans la grande place de Madrid.

A Le roi et la reine.
B Le grand inquiſiteur.
C Les conſeillers de l'inquiſition.
D Place de quelques grands d'eſpagne, familiers de l'inquiſition.
E Place des criminels, chacun avec 2 familiers de l'inquiſition, et pluſieurs moines de differens ordres.
F Deux cages, ou l'on met les criminels pendant la lecture de leur ſentence.
G Autel ou l'on dit la meſſe.
H H L'etendart de l'inquiſition, et la croix verte.
I La chaire du predicateur.
K K Deux chaires pour ceux qui liſent les ſentences.
L Effigies de carton repreſentant ceux qui ſont morts en priſon, ou qui ſe ſont ſauvez de priſon.

La proceſſion de l'inquiſition à Goa.

A L'etendart de l'inquiſition.
B Les Dominicains.

C Les

N° 55. Page 132.

The biſhop receives the ring.
The book of the goſpels is given him.
The new biſhop preſents the torches, the bread and wine.
The miter put on his head.
The paſtoral ſtaff given him.
The archbiſhop receives the pall.

N° 56. Page 142.

The abbot receives the eccleſiaſtical habit.
Receives the impoſition of hands.
The abbeſs receives the veil.
Nuns conſecrated.
Their habits conſecrated.
They receive the veil.

N° 57. Page 144.

The biſhop gives the newly-conſecrated nuns the ring.
They are crown'd.
The anathema is read to them.
The nuns preſent tapers.
The biſhop gives the nuns the communion.
The breviary is given them.

N° 58. Page 158.

The deceas'd pope's corps view'd.
Obſequies of the deceas'd pope.
The pope's corps carried to St. Peter's church.
The pope's corps expos'd for three days, to the view of the people in St. Peter's church.
Catafalco or temporary mauſolæum, erected in honour of the deceas'd pope.
Solemnity of the pope's funeral.

N° 59. Page 236.

Great room or hall of the inquiſition.
Various methods of torture inflicted by the inquiſitors.

N° 60. Page 238.

The inquiſitors pronounce ſentence, in the great ſquare of Madrid.

A The king and queen.
B The chief inquiſitor.
C Counſellors of the inquiſition.
D Seats of ſome grandees of Spain, who are familiars of the inquiſition.
E Seats of the criminals, each of whom have two familiars of the inquiſition, and ſeveral friars of different orders.
F The two cages in which the criminals are put, whilſt ſentence is paſſing upon them.
G Altar where maſs is ſaid.
H H The ſtandard of the inquiſition, and the green croſs.
I The preacher's pulpit.
K K Two pulpits for thoſe who read the ſentences.
L Effigies of ſuch criminals in paſt-board, as either died in, or eſcaped out of priſon.

The proceſſion of the inquiſition of Goa.

A Standard of the inquiſition.
B The Dominican friars.

C Cri-

C Les criminels qui ont evité le feu par la confeſſion.
D Les criminels qui ont evité le feu par la confeſſion apres leur condemnation.
E Crucifix qui tourne le dos à ceux qui doivent etre brulez.
F Criminels qui doivent etre brulez.
G Effigies de ceux qui ſont morts en priſon.
H Le grand inquiſiteur.

Nº 61.

L'auto-da-fé, ou l'acte de foi.
Suplice des condamnez.

Nº 62.

Homme condamné au feu mais qui la evité par ſa confeſſion.
Fille qui a evité le feu, en avoüant apres ſon jugement.

Femme condamné par l'inquiſition a etre brulé vive.
Homme qui va etre brulé par arreſt de l'inquiſition.

Nº 63.

Banniere de l'inquiſition d' Eſpagne.
Banniere de l'inquiſition de Goa.
Homme convaincu d'hereſie qui s'eſt accuſé luimême avant que d'etre jugé.
Religieuſe qui a evité d'etre brulée en confeſſant avant que d'etre jugée.

C Criminals who have eſcaped the flames by making a confeſſion.
D Criminals who have eſcaped the flames, by their confeſſion after condemnation.
E Crucifix with its back turn'd on the criminals condemn'd to the flames.
F Criminals to be burnt.
G Effigies of ſuch criminals as died in priſon.
H The chief inquiſitor.

Nº 61. Page 307.

The auto da fé, or act of faith.
The executions.

Nº 62. Page 337.

A man condemn'd to the flames, but eſcapes them by confeſſing his guilt.
A maid who has eſcap'd the flames, by acknowledging herſelf guilty after condemnation.
A married woman ſentenc'd by the inquiſitors to be burnt alive.
A man going to the flames by the ſentence of the inquiſitors.

Nº 63. Page 338.

Standard of the Spaniſh inquiſition.
Standard of the inquiſition of Goa.
A man convicted of hereſy, who pleads guilty before he is tried.
A nun who has eſcap'd the flames, by pleading guilty before ſhe is tried.

A DISSERTATION ON THE CEREMONIES OF THE ROMAN-CATHOLICKS.

PART IV.

Containing the feſtivals, ſacraments, and other ceremonies of the Romiſh Church.

FESTIVALS, or holidays, are certain days which the church of Chriſt has peculiarly ſet apart to the ſervice of God, in commemoration of ſome myſtery, or in honour of ſome ſaint. Such inſtitutions are to be found in all religions; at leaſt there are none, but what, after ſome manner or other, practiſe certain ſolemn acts, at appointed ſeaſons, the better to honour the being, or beings, which it teaches to look upon as divinities. Fauchet, in his Antiquities of Gaul, p. 124, in the life of Clovis, pretends that all our feſtivals and ceremonies in general were originally borrowed from paganiſm: and ſpeaking of the former ſays as follows; "The chriſtians, in order to win over the ſouls of the heathens "to the ſalvation of CHRIST JESUS, inſtead of the heathen Pervigilia and "Lectiſternia, uſed to rejoice on the eves and anniverſaries of their martyrs: And to "ſhew that they were careful of the publick weal, and that plenty might be pro- "duced, inſtead of Februa, Vinalia, Ambarvalia, Robigalia, which alſo were hea- "then prayers, they enacted, that chriſtians ſhould keep holy the purification, &c. "and in affliction made proceſſions, rogations, and litanies, i. e. ſupplications; on "which, and in the Nudipedalia, (which were proceſſions and journeys made bare- "footed) they uſed to call upon our Lord Jeſus Chriſt inſtead of Jupiter; by which " they did not paganize, if I may be allowed the expreſſion, but prudently coun-

" termine paganiſm, and employed it as a ſhield, to ward off the reproaches which
" the heathens us'd to vent againſt them." 'Tis manifeſt from the writings of thoſe ages, that chriſtians employed every method to bring men over to JESUS CHRIST. In all theſe particulars, the chriſtians, our anceſtors, have imitated God himſelf, who did not diſdain to borrow part of the ceremonies of the Jewiſh religion from the Egyptians. The imitation is not to be condemned, but the abuſe; 'tis the wretched avarice of prieſts, who inſenſibly influence and encourage that ſhewy and outward devotion, known by the name of ceremonies.

In the church there are moveable feaſts,* double feaſts, half-double, and ſimple feaſts: Some of theſe are of the † firſt claſs, and others of the ſecond. They are ſtill ſubdivided: but we ſhall omit the particulars of them, ſince they can be of no uſe but to thoſe who are devoted to the ſervice of the Breviary; and ſhall therefore content ourſelves with acquainting the reader, that the chief difference between the ſeveral claſſes, is the greater or leſs ſolemnity uſed in them. The churches are embelliſhed, and the altars adorned, according to the ſolemnity of the day; and if we may be allowed to ſay it, according to the rank each ſaint holds in his reſpective church. On double feaſts, ‡ the biſhop, nay the pope himſelf, performs divine ſervice in the cathedral; and the abbot, the prior, or dean of the chapter, in collegiate || churches. According to the rituals of Italy, churches muſt be hung on theſe high feſtivals, and adorned with beautiful and holy images of thoſe whom the church acknowledges as ſaints. The doors of the churches muſt be adorned with feſtoons; and the image of the ſaint, whoſe feaſt is ſolemnized, muſt be ſet off with flowers, and the church ſtrewed with them. We ſuppoſe that chriſtians come to church on theſe ſolemn days, with an humble and contrite ſpirit, proportionable to this exterior pomp. The church muſt be open to them during theſe ſacred days: Wax tapers muſt burn on the altar: the ornaments of the officiating prieſt muſt be as rich as poſſible; the tapers which ſtand on the high altar muſt be thicker than the reſt: and each pariſh ſhall diſplay its zeal in proportion to its riches.

(*) Whenever preparation is made to celebrate the feaſt of the titular ſaint, or of that ſaint who is choſen for the patron of a place, his ſtandard and image muſt be fix'd on the top of the ſpire, and the bells ſet a ringing in his honour. In ſome places 'tis cuſtomary to have (†) illuminations on the eve and feaſt of the ſaint, as a teſtimony of the love and reverence of thoſe who do him this (‡) honour.

A prieſt is obliged to learn ſeveral diſtinctions, which a layman perhaps does not think it worth his while to trouble his head about. A perſon who celebrates a feaſt, is not obliged to know the difference between the double or ſemi-double ſervice; nor is his devotion

* The name of double feaſts is given to thoſe whoſe ſervice is fuller and more ſolemn than the reſt. This office begins at the firſt veſpers, when the altar muſt be covered with ornaments, ſuitable to the ſolemnity of the office.

† The feaſts of the firſt claſs are double, and are ſubdivided into three orders, as thoſe of the ſecond claſs. The magnificence exhibited at theſe times, is much more ſolemn than that of the ſemi-double, &c. The nativity of our Lord, the feaſt of Eaſter, the reſurrection, the feaſt of the patron of a church, are all double feaſts. See more of this in the rituals.

‡ Piſcara praxis cerem.

|| Collegiate churches are thoſe which have no epiſcopal ſee belonging to them, and conſiſt only of a chapter of canons.

(*) The Flamens of old Rome uſed to cauſe all feaſts to be proclaim'd by publick cryers; which cuſtom ſtill prevails in ſeveral Romiſh countries, where certain cryers ring a little bell at the corners of the ſtreets, to give the people notice of the holiday; and declare to them the ſeveral indulgences ſuitable to the ſolemnity of it.

(†) Piſcara, ubi ſupra. (‡) Ibid.

devotion leſs ſincere or fervent, whether the feaſt be of the firſt or ſecond claſs; double of the firſt order, or ſemi-double of the third. The office of a ſaint is either double or ſemi-double, according to the more or leſs ſolemnity us'd with regard to him; as for inſtance, if his body is to be removed, the office muſt be double: as alſo in caſe he be a diſtinguiſhed ſaint, i. e. the patron of a ſtate, a city, &c. If they have his whole body, the office ſhall be double of the ſecond claſs. In like manner, if they have one of his arms, legs, or ſuch like relick, the office ſhall be double, at leaſt ſemi-double. But in caſe he be not one of the moſt * diſtinguiſhed ſaints, and if they have but an inconſiderable relick of him, the office ſaid in his honour muſt be ſingle only. A chriſtian may be unacquainted with all theſe particulars, without any way hazarding his ſalvation. As for the laity, they will not be judged on theſe points; but perhaps it may fare otherwiſe with the prieſts.

All high feſtivals have an octave. This cuſtom was firſt borrowed from the Jewiſh religion; for it was uſual for the antient † Jews to allow eight days to their ſolemn feſtivals, in which they are imitated by the moderns to this day. The octave therefore, conſiſts of the feaſt itſelf, and the ſeven days, which follow after it, tho the name of octave is particularly given to the laſt day of thoſe eight, which anſwers to the ſolemn day of that feaſt. The ‡ rituals ſay, that when two octaves meet, the moſt diſtinguiſhed of them ſhall have the preference, not forgetting at the ſame time to commemorate the ſaint whoſe octave gave way to the other. In this manner the octave of St. John baptiſt, gives the precedency to that of the holy ſacrament, whenever they happen to meet: but if the octave of a (*) ſaint, who is patron of a place, ſhould fall out at the ſame time with that of another ſaint, who had been either a biſhop, an archbiſhop, or cardinal, in this caſe the patron would be obliged to yield to the prelate; for thus the rituals have determined.

The church-day, or feaſt, begins in the evening; a cuſtom which is alſo borrowed from the Jews, who begin their day at ſun-ſet. Here follows the origin of (†) veſpers and vigils, thoſe ſolemn ſeaſons in the church, and which are the beginning of all feſtivals. The writers on myſteries trace the original of vigils as high as the deſtruction which the deſtroying angel made of the firſt-born among the Egyptians; and tell us, that we muſt pray in the night, " that the ſword of the word of God paſſing inviſibly " over our heads, may go and deſtroy the firſt works, the firſt-born of our corruption " before our ſpiritual regeneration." We don't think this of any weight; nor ſhall we take notice of the nocturnal rambling of the devil, and other ſpirits of darkneſs; nor of the agitation and hurry of the paſſions, which ſtrike much more forcibly in the dark; nor of the birth of our Saviour in the night-time. All theſe reaſons are alledg'd to juſtify the neceſſity and origin of vigils; but were we to aſcend into heaven, ſhould we not there find the angels praying and ſinging in the night? And who knows, but the ſtars (‡) may form a kind of ſacred concert during the darkneſs of the night? Give us leave to ſearch among the antient heathens, for vigils which agree exactly with ours. Not to mention thoſe feaſts which were to be celebrated in the night only; all the high feſtivals of the gods of thoſe idolaters,  begun by vigils: Thoſe of the feſtival of Venus laſted three nights; and thoſe of Ceres were famous for their licentiouſneſs. The antient Egyptians had ſome very ſolemn ones, in honour of Minerva: And to prove that theſe idolaters had likewiſe their veſpers, we need only appeal to †† Seneca the

* Si non ſit adeò inſignis. Id. Ibid.

† Levit. chap. xxiii.

‡ Piſcara, as above.

(*) Who in his life-time had been either a confeſſor, or a martyr, but had not poſſeſſed any eminent employment.

(†) You ſhall celebrate the ſabbath from one even to the other, Levit. chap. xxiii.

(‡) Vide aſtrorum choream, Bona cap. 4. Divinæ Pſalm.

 Pervigilia.

†† Nobiliſſimæ virgines ad ſacra facienda noctibus excitantur. Seneca de Providentia, cap. 5.

the philoſopher. All theſe ceremonies have been ſanctified by the chriſtians, to the glory of the true God. The vigils of the latter prepare the ‡‡ heart, by faſting and humility, to commemorate the ſeveral myſteries of religion, and the lives of the ſaints. 'Tis pretended that they were introduced into the church as early as the apoſtles days; they are undoubtedly of great antiquity, but then 'tis as certain that they were but very few at firſt, ſince, in the primitive times, no other feſtivals uſed to be ſolemniz'd except thoſe of Chriſtmas, Eaſter, Aſcenſion-day and Whitſon-tide; and that the prodigious number of holidays now celebrated, was not introduced till after chriſtianity was in a flouriſhing condition.

The cuſtom of wiſhing a good feſtival is very antient among the chriſtians: it was practiſed in the infancy of the church, and 'twas even cuſtomary for people to write * congratulatory letters to one another on thoſe ſolemn days. Zeal ſanctified the birth of theſe pious inſtitutions; at firſt holidays were ſpent in prayers and pious exerciſes, in which they anſwer'd the deſign of thoſe who inſtituted them, but then they degenerated by inſenſible degrees. Feſtivals ſoon became ſo many occaſions for riot, exceſs, and criminal amuſements: the common people looked upon them as ſo many days allotted to idleneſs; few conſecrated them to the ſpiritual life, and the leaſt profane divided themſelves between God and their pleaſures. This licentiouſneſs was carried to a great exceſs in a very little time, the age in which St. Paul lived ſeems not to ‡ have been free from thoſe irregularities, againſt which St. Jerome and the councils inveigh'd with ſo much vehemence three or four centuries after the birth of our Saviour. Let it not therefore be thought that the profanation of feſtivals is owing to later ages: we have already obſerv'd, that 'twould be very ridiculous in us to be blindly prejudiced in favour of the perfection of our anceſtors, or to imagine that the age in which they lived was more fruitful of piety than ours; mankind in former ages were juſt the ſame they are now, but their great diſtance from us prevents our ſeeing their errors, and the motives of their actions.

In Italy certain feſtivals are celebrated, which are not to be found in the calendar of the church, but are frequently met with in the calendar of the lovers of that country. Theſe feſtivals have only an appearance of devotion, as is manifeſt from the motives which give riſe to them. When a lover is deſirous of giving his miſtreſs the higheſt teſtimonies of his gallantry, he immediately makes her the idol of his devotion; he has veſpers, nay maſſes celebrated in her honour; he cauſes the feſtival of the ſaint, whoſe name ſhe bears, to be celebrated in ſome church with the utmoſt ſolemnity. Five or ſix perſons of diſtinction frequently make ſuch a party as this; theſe, without waiting for the feſtival of the ſhe-ſaint, anticipate it by a pompous devotion, whereof the ſaint has only the name; the genuine homage being paid to their ſeveral miſtreſſes. The church indeed is adorned ſuitable to the dignity of the perſon canonized; but then they manage matters ſo well, that the whole pomp ſhall be as relative to the ſaint of the lover, as to that of the church of God. This whimſical, or rather profane devotion, is intermix'd with incidents which don't reflect any great honour on the virtue || of thoſe Italian ladies who are honoured after this manner.

The caſuiſts of the church of Rome, who are not ſo rigid as the Jewiſh doctors, permit of certain works on ſundays and holidays, which the Jews will never allow themſelves to do, tho indiſpenſably neceſſary. But as for us, we don't make the leaſt ſcruple to work on ſundays, whenever the deferring it † may be of dangerous conſequence; ‡‡ Moſt vigils are accompanied with faſts.

* Called literæ feſtivæ. ‡ See 1 Epiſt. of St. Paul to the Corinth. ch. ii. ver. 20. & ſeq.

|| Chi manda la ſua figliuola a la feſta in pauco tempo ne fa una P.

† A notary may draw up a will, or any kind of inſtrument on a ſunday, when the deferring it may be of dangerous conſequence; in like manner an apothecary is allowed to make up his medicines, &c.

quence; but in general, we ought to ſanctify ſuch days with ſpiritual works, and abſtain from all manual labour, which according to the deciſion of our doctors, puts us in a ſtate of mortal ſin.

We ſhall now preſent the reader with the order of the Feaſts, and particulariz eſuch as require it more immediately, as we find it in an ‡‡ author who has given us a relation of modern Rome. We may juſtly prefer this calendar before any other, ſince Rome is the capital of the chriſtian world. By this calendar it will be found that this holy city has not left ſo much as one day throughout the whole year unconſecrated either by feſtivals or ſtations; that the inexhauſtible treaſure of indulgences is always open to the faithful, and furniſhes them continually with materials to repair the breaches which ſatan may have made in their virtue; that the clergy of Rome are always in a readineſs to countermine his works. Tho, like the juſt man mention'd by the royal prophet, he ſhould fall ſeven times every day; we yet need not fear but he will bravely riſe again, invigorated by the ſpiritual ſuccours which Rome laviſhes very profuſely on all ſuch as are willing to be devout.

THE ROMISH CALENDAR.

FEASTS and STATIONS throughout the Year.

JANUARY

1. New-year's-day *, the feaſt of the circumciſion of our Lord, the ſtation is at S. Maria Maggiore's, at S. Maria's in Tranſtevera, at S. Maria's in Ara Cœli, &c. A ſervice is perform'd before his holineſs in the apoſtolical palace, maſs is ſung by a cardinal prieſt, the ſermon is preached by one of the fathers of St. Lawrence's in Lucina. A ſolemn feaſt is held in Jeſus's church, and in Jeſus Maria's in the walks.

2. † The octave of St. Stephen, feaſt at St. Lawrence's church without the walls, where his body is depoſited.

3. Octave of St. John, at St. John's of Lateran, at St. Sebaſtian's without the walls; feaſt for St. Anterus, pope and martyr: his body lies buried here. In Paris, feaſt of St. Genevieva †† the virgin, patroneſs of that city.

‡‡ Francis Deſeine, a famous bookſeller at Rome.

* The rituals likewiſe give the name of the octave of the nativity of our Lord to this feaſt; antiently it was uſual on the feſtival of the circumciſion to commemorate the bleſſed virgin, and to celebrate a maſs in her honour.

† The feaſt of St. Stephen was antiently the feaſt of the deacons, becauſe St. Stephen, the firſt martyr of the church, is ſaid to be the chief or principal of the ſeven deacons who were appointed by the apoſtles in the infancy of chriſtianity. The feaſt of St. John the evangeliſt was formerly the feaſt of the prieſts, and that of the Innocents, the feſtival of ſcholars and children.

†† The legendary writers inform us that we cannot pay too great homage to this ſaint for the wonders ſhe has perform'd for upwards of twelve centuries; and indeed the angels return'd thanks to heaven for the birth of this bleſſed virgin. Father Giry in the firſt volume of the lives of the ſaints, aſſures us, "That the bleſſed ſpirits kept an extraordinary feſtival at her birth, and that all heaven was "filled with joy." St. Germanus of Auxerre aſſerted the ſame to the inhabitants of Nanterre, the firſt time he ſaw St. Genevieva, who was born in their city. In the height of her piety, ſhe was ſeized with

4. Octave of the Innocents, at St. Paul's without the walls, at S. Maria Maggiore's, at the chapel of the Manger, at St. Bibiana's, for S. Dapboroſa his mother, and S. Demetria his ſiſter, both martyrs.

5. St. Theloſphorus, pope and martyr; feaſt at St. Peter's, where his body is interred; veſpers in the apoſtolical palace.

6. ‡ Epiphany :. ſtation at St. Peter's; the pope aſſiſts at the office in the apoſtolical palace. Maſs is ſung by a cardinal biſhop; the procurator general of the order of the Servites preaches the ſermon: at St. Athanaſius's of the Greeks, a biſhop of their church bleſſes the water in a ſolemn manner in commemoration of the baptiſm of our Lord, and maſs is ſung there, in the Greek tongue. Feaſt in the chapel of the Three Kings, in the college de Propaganda Fide; feaſt at S. Maria's d' Ara Cæli; after veſpers a proceſſion is made to it, in which the image of the holy infant Jeſus is carried: the magiſtrates of Rome aſſiſt at it. Feaſt at S. Pudentiana's in the chapel of the Gaetani.

The king of Spain performs the ceremony of offering chalices or communion-cups on Epiphany or Twelfth-day. It is ſaid that this offering owes its original to the Piety of the emperor Charles V. Each chalice is worth about three hundred ducats, and he inſtituted this oblation in commemoration of the worſhip of the wiſe men. In the firſt of theſe communion-cups a piece of gold is put; in the ſecond incenſe, and myrrh in the third. After the oblation, the king ſends one of theſe cups to the veſtry of St. Lawrence in the Eſcurial, and the other two to whatever church or monaſtery he thinks proper. This ceremony is deſcribed by the abbé de Vairac in his preſent ſtate of Spain.

7. St. Julian the martyr, his feaſt in the ſeveral churches that bear his name.

8. Octave of the circumciſion, feaſt in St. Peter's, in S. Maria Maggiore's, and in Jeſus's.

Sunday of the octave of the Epiphany, feaſt and indulgence in St. Martin's in the ſquare on mount di Pietà, where the chriſtian doctrine is made.

9. St. Julian and Celſus martyrs, feaſts in their ſeveral churches in Banchi.

10. St. Agathon pope, feaſt in St. Peter's, where his body is depoſited; in that della Minerva, in honour of St. Amarant.

11. St. Hyginus pope and martyr, his feaſt at St. Peter's, where his body is interr'd.

12. St. Benedict or Bennet, abbot of the order of St. Benedict, feſtival in the ſeveral churches of his order. The ſunday immediately preceding the feaſt of St. Anthony, indulgence in St. Peter's, and feaſt in that of the Holy Ghoſt, whence the virgins go in proceſſion to St. Peter's, where the holy face of our Lord is ſhewn.

13. Octave

with ſo violent a fit of ſickneſs that they thought her dead, but in the midſt of the torments which her body ſuffer'd, " She was raviſhed in ſpirit among the angels, where ſhe ſaw unutterable glories."—— The particulars whereof are not related by the hiſtorian becauſe of the incredulity of mankind. " Then her holineſs ſhone with greater luſtre than ever in the eyes of the Pariſians.—" She penetrated into the moſt inward receſſes of their conſciences, ſpent all her time in prayer, and ſhed ſo great an abundance of tears that the floor of her chamber was quite wet with them. Tho ſhe had led a life of extraordinary penance, ſhe nevertheleſs lived to a very advanced age. A great number of miracles were wrought at her tomb, and would undoubtedly have been wrought to the end of the world, had her relicks been ſtill there; now they are wrought only at her ſhrine. F. Giry ſets them down at length, and to him we refer the reader.

‡ Epiphany or twelfth-day was eſtabliſhed in the church at the beginning of the fourth century. Ammianus Marcellinus mentions it, book xxi. ch. 3. of his hiſtory. On Epiphany, after the reading of the goſpel, the ſeveral moveable feaſts in the year are pronounced to the people, viz. Aſh-wedneſday, Lent, Eaſter, Aſcenſion-day, Whitſon-tide, the feaſt of the holy Sacrament, and the firſt Sunday in Advent. Some churches ſtill preſerve the cuſtom of waſhing the croſſes, and bleſſing the baptiſmal fonts in Epiphany. From Epiphany to Septuageſima the ornaments of the prieſts and altars muſt be green.

13: Octave of the Epiphany, feaſt in St. Peter's, in S. Maria Maggiore's, in S. Pudentiana's, in the church of the Flemings, in St. Julian's of the Cæſarini.

14. St. Hilarius biſhop of Poitiers, feaſt in St. John's of Lateran; in his chapel the heads of St. Peter and St. Paul are ſhewn with great indulgences. In all the churches of St. Francis, feaſt of the holy name of Jeſus.

The ſunday that falls neareſt to St. Anthony's day, feaſt in our lady's del Pianto, in St. Julian's, in Monte Jordano.

15. St. Maurus abbot, feaſt in the churches of St. Benedict or Bennet, in St. John Colabit, in his church in the iſland of the religious of the charity of the bleſſed John of God.

16. St. Marcellus pope and martyr, feaſt in his church in the walks, where his body lies buried; at that of Ara Cœli for St. Berard and his companions, feaſt in all the churches of St. Francis, feaſt in our lady del Pianto.

17. St. Anthony the abbot, feaſt in his church of the French fathers of his order, near S. Maria Maggiore's. The day of the feaſt of this ſaint, the pope, cardinals, princes, and even private gentlemen, ſend their horſes and their mules in order to be bleſſed by him, the ſaddles and harneſſes of theſe beaſts are alſo carried to him; they bleſs and ſprinkle the beaſts and their equipage, in the name, and for the ſake of the ſaint, upon conſideration of a certain ſum paid for each beaſt. Another ceremony in which St. Anthony is applied to, is that of exorciſing, conjuring, and delivering up to the devil, mice, locuſts or graſhoppers, and all other noxious animals. At St. Gregory's, feaſt for St. Anthony, St. Marula, and St. John of the order of the Camalduli; their bodies are here depoſited.

18. St. Peter's chair at Rome, at St. Peter's a ſolemn office in which the pope aſſiſts; a cardinal prieſt ſings maſs. St. Priſcus, feaſt in his church.

19. St. Marius and Martha his wife, martyrs; feaſt at St. Adrian's where they are buried together with St. Audiface and St. Abakkuk their ſons; the heads of the two laſt are in St. Colabit's, where a feſtival is kept; at la Tranſpontina's, feaſt of St. Canute king of Denmark.

20. St. Fabian and St. Sebaſtian, at St. Sebaſtian's without the walls, where their bodies are depoſited; at St. Peter's where is St. Sebaſtian's head; at St. Andrew's della Valle, and other churches of that ſaint.

21. S. Agnes † virgin and martyr; feſtival in the churches under her name.

22. St. Vincent and St. Anaſtaſius; feſtival in their ſeveral churches.

23. S. Emerantiana virgin and martyr, in S. Agnes's without the walls, in S. Maria Maggiore's; and in St. Jago or James of the Spaniards, with muſick, in honour of St. Ildefonſus biſhop of Toledo; at that della Minerva for St. Raimond.

24. St. Timothy biſhop and martyr, at St. Paul's without the walls.

25. Converſion of St. Paul, feſtival in St. Paul's without the walls; in St. Peter's, in St. John de Lateran's, in our Lady's della Victoria, in St. Charles's delli Catinari, and the three Fountains.

26. St. Polycarp biſhop and martyr, in the hoſpital of the Holy Ghoſt, where his relicks are depoſited.

27. St.

† The Romiſh Breviary relates, that when this ſaint was, by the prefect's command, ſtript ſtark naked, in order to be carried in that manner publickly to the ſtews, God gave ſuch a thickneſs to her diſhevel'd hair, that it cover'd her more completely than her clothes. And when ſhe enter'd into the brothel, an angel ſpread ſuch a dazling light round her, that none could touch or ſee her, by reaſon of the great ſplendor; when immediately there appear'd a white garment before her eyes, which ſhe put on, and it fitted her ſo exactly, that all the ſpectators were firmly perſuaded it was made by an angel. The ſon of the prefect ventur'd to enter into that light, in order to violate her chaſtity; but before he had touch'd her he was choak'd by the devil, and immediately dropt down dead.

27. St. John Chryſoſtom biſhop and patriarch, in St. Peter's where his body is interr'd.

28. Second feaſt of St. Agnes, in her church without the walls, and in the Piazza Navona.

The laſt ſunday in January, at S. Maria Maggiore's; tranſlation of the holy image of the virgin, at S. Croſs's in Jeruſalem; invention of the title of the croſs of Chriſt, and other relicks.

29. In the three Fountains, dedication of St. Maria Scala Cœli; in the new-church, feaſt of the holy martyrs Papia and Mauro, where their bodies lie; in the Trinity del Monte, for the feaſt of St. Francis de Sales; but in the monaſtery of the Viſitation in Longara, the feaſt is never celebrated but on the ſunday following.

30. * S. Martina virgin and martyr, in the church dedicated to her in Campo Vaccino; at St. Paul's for St. Felix III. pope, who is there interr'd.

31. St. Cire and St. John martyrs, in St. Praxeda's, at St. Pantaleone's of the well, in St. Angelo's of the fiſh-market, for St. Zoticus and St. Cyriacus; in St. Francis's at Ripa for the bleſſed Loüiſa Albertoni; in St. Adrian in Campo Vaccino, and in St. John's in Campo Marzo for St. Peter Nolaſcus, founder of the order of Mercy.

F E B R U A R Y.

The firſt ſunday in February, feaſt in S. Maria Maggiore's.

1. St. Ignatius biſhop and martyr, in St. Clement's, where his body is depoſited; in St. John de Lateran for St. Ephrem the deacon.

2. † The purification of the virgin; the pope aſſiſts in a ſolemn manner at the apoſtolical palace, maſs is ſung by a cardinal prieſt; the pope performs the bleſſing and diſtribution of the tapers, after the proceſſion in the royal hall is ended; feſtival in the churches dedicated to the Virgin and to St. Simeon. The ſunday of the octave, feaſt at St. Sebaſtian's and St. Valentine's.

3. ‡ St. Blaſius biſhop and martyr, feſtival in the churches, in St. Charles's del Catinari, in S. Maria's in Ponticelli.

4. St.

* S. Martina being brought before the emperor as an enchantreſs, and refuſing to ſacrifice, he commanded her to be ſtripp'd, and her fleſh to be ſlaſhed with ſwords; but the body of this virgin was of ſo dazling a white, that it dimm'd the eyes of the beholders; immediately, milk began to flow from her wounds, which diffus'd a fragrant odour like that of ſpices. And when ſhe was afterwards beaten with clubs, by the emperor's order; thoſe who were employ'd for that purpoſe, cried out that their ſtrength fail'd them, and beſought him, ſaying; "Deliver us from this virgin, for the angels of God "do again ſtrike us with iron bars, and our fleſh and bones are all on fire." But when the emperor would have the blows continued, all ſuch as beat her died. Then was ſhe caſt into priſon, and when one Liminius ſent by the emperor open'd the door, he ſaw a great light ſhining round her, which as he entred encompaſs'd him like lightning, ſo that for fear he fell to the ground; and being ſcarce able to riſe up and enter, he ſaw S. Martina ſitting in a glorious ſeat, and a multitude of men in white about her, holding a golden table, in which the following words were written: Thy works are wonderful, O Lord, in wiſdom haſt thou made them all. All which he related to the emperor.

'Tis farther related, that a fierce lion who had been kept faſting for three days, and ſet upon her in order to devour her; inſtead of that, fawn'd upon her, and falling at her feet kiſs'd them. As alſo how being thrown into a great fire ſhe received no harm, but the flame diſperſing it ſelf, burnt thoſe only who ſtood round it.

† See the deſcription of this feſtival in the ſecond part of the firſt volume of this work.

‡ We are told in the Salisbury Breviary that when this ſaint came to be beheaded, he pray'd to God as follows: "O God hear me thy ſervant, that if any one remembring me, ſhall fall down and wor-"ſhip thee; if any fiſh bone, or any other bone ſhall ſtick in his throat; or if he fall into any infir-"mity, tribulation, or danger, receive, O Lord, I beſeech thee, his requeſt." To which the Lord anſwer'd, "I will fulfill thy petition." The invocation of this ſaint is a preſent remedy in ſuch caſes, preſcrib'd by a Greek phyſician, ſays Ribadeneira, who alſo directs, that taking ſuch perſons by the throat, theſe words muſt be pronounced with a loud voice; Blaſius the martyr and ſervant of Chriſt Jeſus, ſays, thou bone, either come up or elſe go down.

Le CELEBRANT distribuë les CIERGES le jour de la CHANDELEUR.

PROCESSION de la CHANDELEUR.

Les TÉNÈBRES.

On porte le St SACREMENT dans le TOMBEAU.

B. Picart. del.

Le FEU nouveau le jour du SAMEDI SAINT.

BENEDICTION du CIERGE PASCAL.

4. St. Eutychus, martyr; feaſt in St. Sebaſtian's without the walls, and in St. Laurence's in Damaſo, where his relicks are depoſited.

5. S. Agatha, virgin and martyr, in the churches that bear her name; and that of Jeſus, for the three martyrs of Japan.

6. S. Dorothea, virgin and martyr; in the church dedicated to her.

7. St. Romuald the abbot; in the churches of the order of the Camalduli.

8. St. Pelagius the pope; feaſt in St. Peter's, where his body lies interred. St. John de Mata, founder of the order of the trinity-redemption of captives, in the churches of the order.

9. S. Apollina, virgin and martyr; feaſt in the church under her name, and that of St. Auſtin. In St. John of the Maronites, feaſt of St. John Marron their countryman.

10. S. Scholaſtica, virgin, and ſiſter of St. Bennet; feaſt in the ſeveral churches of the order, and in St. Cecilia's, where her head is depoſited. S. Sotera, virgin and martyr, at St. Martin's of the Mountains, where her body lies. In St. Auſtin's, for St. William duke of Aquitain.

11. St. Severin, the benedictine abbot; in the ſeveral churches of the order.

12. S. Eulalia, virgin and martyr; feſtival in our lady of Montſerrat.

13. St. Gregory II. pope; feaſt in St. Peter's, where his body is interred. In St. Apollinarius, a feaſt, and fine muſic, for the manifeſtation of the image of the bleſſed virgin.

14. St. Valentine, the martyr; feſtival in St. Praxedes's, where his body is buried; and in the church dedicated to him, near the palace Dei Mattei.

15. S. Fauſtina and Jovita, martyrs; in the church of the Breſſans.

16. S. Juliana, virgin and martyr; in the church dedicated to her, and in St. Martin's of the Mountains, where her body is interred.

17. St. Gabinus, prieſt and martyr, father of S. Suſanna; in his church at Termini.

18. St. Leo, biſhop; in St. Martin's of the Mountains, where his body is interred.

19. St. Pater, biſhop; in St. Gregory's on mount Cælius.

20. St. Peter's chair at Antioch; feaſt in St. Peter's.

21. St. Polycarp martyr, companion of St. Sebaſtian, in St. Sebaſtian's; in St. Martin's, for St. * Lazarus the painter. In Ara Cœli, feaſt of the bleſſed † Margaret of Cortona.

* St. Lazarus the painter lived in the ninth century, under the reign of Theophilus Iconclaſtes: he uſed to paint images for churches, which drew upon him the hatred and anger of the emperor, who put him to very cruel tortures, in order to force him to abandon his holy employment. St. Lazarus, tho he had ſuffered a variety of puniſhments for the images he had painted, did nevertheleſs go on with his work. This illuſtrious ſaint of the Greek church, did not think proper to imitate the generoſity of our bleſſed Saviour, who prayed to God for his enemies; having never been able to prevail with himſelf, to deliver, by the efficacy of his prayers, the emperor Theophilus's ſoul out of the flames of purgatory.

† Margaret of Cortona, devoted the beginning of her youth to licentiouſneſs and debauchery: but the ſight of the skeleton of her lover, with whom ſhe had held an unlawful commerce for nine years together, touched her heart in ſo efficacious a manner, that from that inſtant, to the day of her death, ſhe loved God with an uninterrupted affection; and expiated, by a ſeries of the moſt ſevere penitence and mortification, the grievous diſorders of her youth. After ſhe had thus devoted herſelf to God, all her pleaſure conſiſted in mortifying her body by the ſevereſt auſterities: Her beauty was now become a ſubject of horror to her; ſhe tore her face with ſtones, ſhed tears of blood, and inflicted ſuch cruel treatment on herſelf, that her eyes ſeem'd to ſtart out of their ſockets: She was for ever beating herſelf, and uſed to whip herſelf with a ſcourge full of great knots, and other inſtruments of penance. She fed continually on bread and water; had herſelf dragged along in her ſhift with

22. St. Matthias the apoſtle; feaſt in S. Maria Maggiore's, where his body lies interred: in St. Bibiana's, invention of his body.

23. St. Felix IV. and St. Gregory IV. popes; in St. Peter's, where their bodies are interred.

24. St. Bon, at St. Laurence's in Damaſo, where his body is interred.

25. St. Romanus the benedictine abbot, in the ſeveral churches of the order.

M A R C H.

All fridays in March, the indulgence is at St. Peter's, where a great concourſe of people aſſemble; and the pope himſelf goes thither after ſermon when his health will permit, and is accompanied with the cardinals, who walk behind him two and two.

1. St. Suithres and St. Aubin, biſhop, and confeſſor, of the order of St. Bennet, in the ſeveral churches of the order.

2. St. Soumuſius and St. Baſilicus, in the church of the holy apoſtles, where their bodies are interred.

3. St. Aſterus martyr, in St. Martin's of the Mountains, where his body is depoſited.

4. St. Lucius prieſt and martyr, in St. Martin's of the Mountains, where his relicks are depoſited. In St. Staniſlaus's of the Poles, feaſt for St. Caſimir.

5. St. Phocas martyr, in St. Marcellus's, where his body is buried.

6. St. Fridelein, the benedictine abbot, in the ſeveral churches of the order; and in thoſe of the Carmelites for St. Cyril.

7. * St. Thomas Aquinas; feaſt in the church of Minerva, where the cardinals aſſiſt ſolemnly at maſs: and in † St. Barbara's of the bookſellers, who have taken St. Thomas of Aquin for their patron.

8. In St. John Colabit, feaſt for the bleſſed John of God, founder of the order of the charity; and in St. Barbara's of the bookſellers, he himſelf having followed that trade. St. Julius, biſhop of Toledo, and benedictine, in the ſeveral churches of the order.

9. S.

with a halter about her neck, till at laſt ſhe was quite inſenſible to all ſenſual emotions, or the leaſt vicious impulſe. Her guardian angel made her ſeveral viſits; and we are aſſured by Father Giry, that our Saviour himſelf uſed to diſcourſe with her with inexpreſſible familiarity. We omit to mention the other favours which God beſtowed on the bleſſed Margaret, ſuch as the virtue of healing demoniacks, the gift of prophecy, and that of miracles. This holy woman had notice given her of her death by a celeſtial light. All the ſouls which had been delivered by the efficacy of her prayers from the flames of purgatory, flocked at that inſtant about her. Giry acquaints us farther, that her body, after her death, exhaled a moſt fragrant odour; a circumſtance very common to ſaints.

* 'Tis related that St. Thomas of Aquin, praying in his youth with bended knees before the ſign of the croſs, and there falling aſleep, he thought he felt his loins faſt-bound by angels, from which inſtant he was never troubled with any luſtful inclination.

† 'Tis related in the golden Legend, that a man who was thought to be ſtarv'd to death, and by a rope caſt about his neck, was drawn to the top of a tower, and thrown down from thence, when he came to the ground he roſe up upon his feet, and gave the following account to thoſe who wonder'd at his being alive, ſince he had continued ſo long without ſuſtenance; and how it was poſſible for him to be preſerv'd in his fall: he aſſur'd them, that S. Barbara preſerv'd him in all his dangers; and in his fall from the tower ſuſtain'd him with her holy hands.

'Tis alſo related, that her father, who was an heathen, and had put her up in a tower for fear of her being ſeduc'd, ſhe being a very great beauty, perceiving by her diſcourſes that ſhe was a chriſtian, drew out his ſword in great indignation, with deſign to kill her; but upon her prayers to God, a great ſtone opening it ſelf, receiv'd her into its cavity, and attended her to a mountain full of caves, where ſhe thought to have hid herſelf; but was diſcover'd by a ſhepherd, who was puniſhed for it in a miraculous

9. S. Frances the Roman, feaſt in the church, that bears her name in Campo Vaccino, where her body is depoſited; ſolemn maſs, at which the cardinals aſſiſt. Feſtival in her church nella Strada Felicè, at Torre de Specchi, and at Ara Cæli.

10. The forty martyrs; feaſt in the churches that bear their names.

11. St. Firminus, the benedictine abbot; feaſt in the churches of the order.

12. St. Gregory the pope; feaſt in St. Peter's, where his body is depoſited; in the other churches, and in the new church.

13. St. Antonin, biſhop and confeſſor; feaſt in St. Peter's, and in St. Venantius's; in the churches of the Carmelites, or White-fryars, for S. Euphraſia the virgin.

14. S. Matilda the queen, of the order of St. Bennet, in the ſeveral churches of the order.

15. St. * Longinus, in St. Peter's, in the oratory of St. Marcellus, and in St. Auſtin's, where ſome of his relicks are depoſited.

16. St. Fælix martyr; feſtival in St. Praxedes's, where his relicks are depoſited.

17. St. † Joſeph of Arimathea, in St. Peter's; and in St. Iſidore's of the Iriſh, for St. Patrick.

18. St. Cyril, biſhop and confeſſor; feaſt in S. Maria's, in Campo Marzo, where his relicks are interred. In St. Nicholas of Tolentine, feaſt of the image of our lady, found near Savonna.

19. St. Joſeph, husband of the bleſſed virgin; feſtivals in the ſeveral churches dedicated to him; in that Della Rotunda, and in S. Anaſtaſia, where her cloak is ſhewn, throughout the whole order of the diſcalceated Carmelites.

20. St. Joachim, father of the bleſſed virgin; feaſt in the churches that bear his name; in that Della Rotunda, in St. Joachim's, and in S. Anne's; in that of the four fountains, in the churches dedicated to S. Anne; in that of Minerva, for St. Ambroſe and St. Sedonio; and in St. Croſs's in Jeruſalem, for the dedication: Women are allowed to enter into S. Helena's chapel.

21. St. Bennet, founder of his order; in the churches that bear his name, and at the nuns of Campo Marzo.

22. Feſtival

miraculous manner, he himſelf being chang'd into a marble ſtatue, and all his ſheep into locuſts, others ſay beetles; which, as a perpetual accuſation of the crime, continually hover about her grave.

'Tis recorded by Surius, that in 1448, at a town called Gorcum in Holland, one Henry Knock, by an accident of a candle's falling into the ſtraw, had his houſe ſet on fire in the night, and he himſelf hardly eſcap'd in his ſhirt, which began to burn in two places: but remembring he had left ſome money in the houſe, he reſolved to return again into it, in order to ſave it, but before he could come to the place where it lay, the houſe fell upon his naked body; when apprehending preſent death, he yet was more tormented, becauſe he had not been prepared againſt the terrors of death by the ſacraments of the church: and in this diſtreſs, he betook himſelf to S. Barbara for ſoul remedies, by addreſſing himſelf to her in prayer. The ſaint being thus invok'd, immediately preſented herſelf before him under ſuch a ſhape as ſhe is uſually repreſented in churches; then with her garments, ſhe quickly quench'd the globes of fire, and with her white hand brought him thro' the ſtraw-roof, and ſetting him in a ſafe place, told him that his life would be prolonged till the next morning, &c. ſaying which, ſhe vaniſhed away. All was perform'd as ſhe had ſaid, tho Henry was ſo burnt, that ſcarce any fleſh was left on his bones unconſumed; and what remained was as black as a Negro's tongue, his eyes, heart, and tongue excepted, which remained untouch'd.

* Tradition tells us, that Longinus, an affranchiz'd ſlave, and a ſoldier in the Roman armies, being almoſt blind, pierc'd our Saviour as he was hanging on the croſs with his lance, and by the touch of that blood, which was ſuppoſed to have fallen on his eye, immediately recovered his ſight and believed; when forſaking his military profeſſion, and being inſtructed by the apoſtles, he liv'd a monaſtic life in Cæſarea of Cappadocia: where leading a life of the utmoſt ſanctity, he, by his ſtrict doctrine and example, converted many to the faith. At laſt he finiſhed the glorious ſtrife of martyrdom for the confeſſion of Chriſt, under Octavius the preſident.

† We are told that this ſaint brought with him into Britain two ſilver veſſels, fill'd with our Saviour's blood; which veſſels were by his order buried with him in his tomb. He was interred in Glaſtenbury.

22. Feſtival thro'out the whole order of St. Bennet, and in St. Peter's, in honour of St. Gregory II. whoſe body is there interred.

23. St. Bruno, the benedictine abbot; feaſt throughout the whole order.

24. Feſtivals in the churches of the order of St. Bennet, and at St. Saviour's Della-certe, for St. Peter, prieſt and martyr; his body is there buried.

25. Annunciation of the virgin, ſolemn maſs; at which the pope aſſiſts, in the church of the Minerva, whither his holineſs and the cardinals go in cavalcade.

On the day of the annunciation the pope performs the ceremony of marrying, or cloiſtering a certain number of maidens. Miſſon has deſcribed it very agreeably in his voyage to Italy, Vol. II. " On the feaſt of the annunciation, the pope and the " ſacred college go to the church Della Minerva, where his holineſs celebrates high " maſs, or ſome cardinal in his abſence, and all the maidens confeſs and commu- " nicate. This being done, theſe maidens, who are clothed in white ſerge, and " muffled up like ſo many apparitions in a large ſheet that covers their heads, in " which they have only a little hole to peep thro', which often is but juſt big enough " for one eye to look out at; theſe maidens, I ſay, walk two by two into the choir, " where all the cardinals are aſſembled, when they fall proſtrate at the feet of the " pope, or the cardinal who performs the ceremony. An officer appointed for that " purpoſe, ſtands on one ſide, having in his hand a baſon, wherein are little white " tabby bags, in each of which is a note of fifty crowns for thoſe who make choice of " marriage, or another note of an hundred crowns for ſuch as prefer the veil. When " each maiden has made an humble declaration of her choice, her bag is given " her by a little ſtring: In taking it ſhe gives it a kiſs, makes a low curtſy, and " immediately wheels off, to make room for the reſt. The future nuns are diſtin- " guiſhed by a garland of flowers to crown their virginity; and they alſo have the " moſt honourable place in the proceſſion." If the reader ſhould inquire, whether many of them did what St. Paul calls the * better, to this the author replies, That of three hundred and fifty maidens who were at this ceremony, thirty two only choſe a religious life; the remaining three hundred and eighteen contented themſelves with doing well, that is, they married.

The day of the annunciation; feaſt in S. Maria Maggiore's, and the other churches of the virgin, particularly at the nuns of Campo Marzo.

26. St. Caſtulus the martyr; in St. Praxedes's, where his body lies.

27. St. Robert, biſhop and confeſſor, of the order of St. Bennet; feaſt in the churches of his order.

28. St. Sixtus III. pope; feaſt in St. Laurence's without the walls, where his body is depoſited.

29. St. Euſtaſius, the benedictine abbot; feaſt throughout the whole order.

30. St. Quirinus, martyr, father of S. Balbina; feſtival in the church that bears his daughter's name.

31. S. Balbina, virgin and martyr, in her church.

The

* He who marries his virgin does well, but he who does not marry her does better: For in this manner does the Geneva verſion render theſe words of 1 Cor. ch. vii.

Le jour des CENDRES.

Maniere dont on rend le PAIN-BENIT.

The Lent STATIONS.

* Septuageſima ſunday, the ſtation is in St. Lawrence's without the walls.

Sexageſima ſunday, in St. Paul's in St. Maria's in Campitelli, expoſition of the bleſſed ſacrament, with ornaments, illuminations, muſick, concerts, ſermons, &c.

Quinquageſima ſunday, in St. Peter's.

Sexageſima monday, the ‡ forty hours are made in the oratory of St. Francis Xavier, with ornaments, illuminations, and an excellent concert of muſick.

Tueſday in Shrove-Tide the holy ſacrament is expoſed during the forty hours, in St. Lawrence's in Damaſo, in preſence of the cardinals, with fine illuminations and ornaments, as alſo a ſermon and muſick.

Sunday in Shrove-tide the forty hours are celebrated in Jeſus's, which church is adorned in a pompous manner, together with machines, pieces of architecture, and perſpective.

1. Aſh-wedneſday, the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the office in the apoſtolick palace; the cardinal grand penitentiary ſings maſs, and the ſermon is preached by a Theatin friar; the pope performs the ceremony of giving the aſhes, after which, being accompanied with cardinals, lords and officers of the court of Rome, he goes in cavalcade to S. Sabina's, where the ſtation is kept, and in that of St. Alexis.

The Ceremony of giving the ASHES.

The ceremony of giving aſhes is one of the antient methods of expreſſing ſorrow, whereof mention is often made in the old teſtament. 'Tis alſo a type or ſhadow, but at the ſame time a very faint one, of the publick penance uſed among chriſtians antiently, during which the penitent was cut off from all communication with chriſtians, and ſtood at the church-door, in ſackcloth and aſhes.

The aſhes that are made uſe of on aſh-wedneſday muſt be made from † the branches of olive, or ſome other trees that have been bleſſed the foregoing year. The ſacriſtan or veſtry-keeper gets theſe aſhes ready, lays them in a ſmall veſſel on the altar, on the epiſtle ſide; after which the officiating prieſt bleſſes the aſhes, for which purpoſe the wax tapers on the altar are lighted: the officiating prieſt, his clerks, and his acolyths, put on ornaments ſuitable to the ſolemnity of the ceremony; during which the choir chaunts nones †† or the ninth hour; after which the officiating prieſt, preceded by the incenſe-bearer and other aſſiſtants, goes up to the altar, kiſſes it, and ſays a prayer with his face a little turn'd towards the aſhes. He afterwards

* The name of Septuageſima is given to that ſunday which preceeds Sexageſima, and which is the third before the firſt ſunday in Lent, whereof Sexageſima is the ſecond, and Quinquageſima the firſt. Some have affirm'd that the name of Septuageſima alludes to the Babyloniſh captivity of the Jews during 70 years; but 'tis an image of the ſpiritual captivity of man under ſin.

‡ The prayer of forty hours, during which the holy ſacrament is expoſed on the altar, was inſtituted, or rather reviv'd, by pope Pius IV. and Clement VIII. This prayer is preceeded and followed by a proceſſion. While the holy ſacrament is expoſed on the altar, two clerks aſſiſtants muſt pray inceſſantly before it till ſuch time as they are relieved by others, and in this manner till the forty hours are expired. In order to give this pious meeting a more ſolemn air, the people ought to aſſiſt at this prayer; and each family is bound to beſtow an hour at it. When the hour is near expiring one of the aſſiſtants rings a little bell, to give the ringer notice that the hour is almoſt ended, and then the latter rings the bell to call other devout perſons to prayers.

† Baudry, Piſcara, cerem. eccleſ. Rom.

†† Piſcara prax. cerem. Baudry manual. cerem. Aſhes are uſually ſcatter'd on the congregation in the morning.

wards makes the ſign of the croſs upon the aſhes, and incenſes them. The incenſing being ended, the prieſt, having on each ſide of him the deacon carrying the aſhes, and his ſub-deacon, goes forward towards the middle of the altar, and turns about towards the congregation: then the chief of the clergy in whoſe church the ceremony of giving the aſhes is performed, goes up to the altar, and drops the aſhes on the head of the officiating prieſt in the form of a croſs, repeating theſe words, memento homo quod pulvis es, &c. i. e. remember man that thou art duſt, &c. After the prieſt has received the aſhes, he gives them to his aſſiſtants, to all the clergy there preſent, and at laſt to the whole congregation. Women as well as men, have the aſhes ſcatter'd on the crown of the head.

A biſhop receives the aſhes ſitting, and with his mitre off, from the officiating canon; after which the prelate, putting on his mitre, and having a white cloth before him, drops the aſhes on the head of the officiating canon, who is before him ſtooping; the biſhop gives the aſhes to a churchman of ‡ ſuperior dignity, ſuch as an archbiſhop or patriarch. Princes, ambaſſadors, and other perſons of diſtinction, receive the aſhes after the canons. The canons and the ſuperior clergy ſtoop their bodies when they receive them, but all the inferior clergy and the laity take them kneeling. The pope receives them from the officiating † cardinal, who does not repeat the memento, &c. to him; but the cardinal ſtoops a little when he takes them from the pope. If an emperor were to aſſiſt at this ceremony of humiliation, he would take them after all the cardinals: the princes of the church are ſuperior to temporal ones.

CARNIVAL, or Shrove-tide, LENT, and EMBER WEEKS.

We find, ſays a * proteſtant author, the origin of the Carnival among the Aſcodrogites, a kind of libertines who ſtarted up in the fourth century, and revived the Bacchanals of the heathens. Whether the carnival be in imitation of the Bacchanalia or the Saturnalia, is nothing to the purpoſe; however it is certain that the licentiouſneſs which reigns during that ſeaſon is not enjoin'd. Theſe periodical debauches are tolerated, and the antiquity of them makes them almoſt paſs for lawful. Maſquerades, diſguiſes and change of dreſs were very frequent in ſeveral feſtivals of the heathens, ſuch were the feſtivals juſt mention'd, the  Lupercalia and the †† Megaleſia of the goddeſs Cybele.

Lent is an imitation of the faſting of our bleſſed Saviour. It muſt be of great antiquity, ſince 'tis cited by ſeveral antient fathers; but in the primitive church, chriſtians did not always faſt during the whole forty days: we have examples of Lent ſeaſons that were of ſhorter continuance, and of others that laſted longer. It was ſometimes uſual to begin Lent at Septuageſima, other times at Sexageſima, and often at Quinquageſima. With ſome it held ſix weeks, with others ſeven, and ſome again began

‡ Baudry & cerem. epiſcop.

† Nihil dicens. Ceremon. Eccleſiæ Roman. lib. ii.

* Hiſtory of the ceremonies and ſuperſtitions that have been introduced in the church.

 The Lupercalia were ſolemniz'd in the month of March, when it was cuſtomary for people to put on all ſorts of diſguiſes; but the moſt devout, in order to pleaſe the god Faunus, uſed to celebrate the feſtival ſtark naked, the better to commemorate an affair of gallantry which happen'd to Faunus, deſcribed by Ovid in the ſecond book of his Faſti. The Saturnalia were celebrated with equal licentiouſneſs in the month of December.

†† This feſtival was celebrated in the beginning of the ſpring, when it was uſual for all people to maſk and diſguiſe themſelves ſo artfully, that they could hardly be known. See Herodian, book i. ch. 32.

gan it but three weeks before Eaſter. It was kept very ſtrictly, for they uſed to abſtain not only from wine, fleſh meats and all kinds of luxury, but to faſt till the evening. Laſtly, all perſons were prohibited from marrying during Lent, which cuſtom is obſerved to this day.

* The faſt of the ember weeks is borrowed originally from the Jews. The ſeaſon called the ember weeks conſiſts in three days of ſtrict faſting in each ſeaſon of the year. By this faſt the faithful are taught that the four parts of the year are to be equally conſecrated to God. Some pretend that theſe faſts were eſtabliſh'd as early as the firſt age of the church, but that they were not abſolutely binding, and that a perſon might over-look them without ſcandal or offence. 'Tis even ſaid that this coldneſs and indifference was not ſuppreſſed but by councils: 'tis further pretended that the ember weeks were not inſtituted till the year 460 by pope St. Leo: moreover 'tis related that pope Gelaſius commanded that prieſts and deacons ſhould be ordained in thoſe ſeaſons; and as it was cuſtomary in the apoſtolick age for faſting and publick prayer to be previous to thoſe ordinations, 'twas but reaſonable theſe ember weeks ſhould be diſtinguiſh'd by theſe pious exerciſes, and that the faithful ſhould employ faſting and prayer to † implore ſuch officers of God as might be worthy of his church.

2. Thurſday, ſtation in St. George's; all thurſdays in Lent in Jeſus's, and in St. Andrea's de la Valle; a ſermon and muſick in the afternoon.

3. Friday, ſtation in St. John's, St. Paul's, and St. George's. All fridays in Lent, the firſt and laſt excepted, prayers are ſaid in the evening in the oratory of St. Marcellus, with excellent muſick, a concert of inſtruments, and a fine ſymphony.

4. Saturday, Station in St. Triphon's and St. Auſtin's. All ſaturdays in Lent, in the afternoon, a ſermon and muſick in our Lady of the Hills; in our Lady's of Loretto, and at Trajan's pillar.

5. The firſt ſunday in Lent, ſolemn maſs at which the pope aſſiſts in the apoſtolick palace; a biſhop aſſiſtant ſings maſs there, and the procurator-general of the order of St. Dominic preaches the ſermon. The ſtation is in St. John's of Lateran and St. Peter's. All ſundays in Lent the bleſſed ſacrament is expoſed, with illuminations and muſick in St. John's of Lateran, St. Praxedes's, St. Auſtin's, &c.

6. Monday, ſtation in St. Peter's in Vinculis; feaſt in St. John's de la Pigna of the Priſoners.

7. Tueſday, ſtation in St. Anaſtaſia's.

8. Wedneſday, in S. Maria Maggiore's. All wedneſdays in Lent, in the afternoon, there is a ſermon and muſick at St: Nicholas's of the Cæſarini, at St. Jerom's della Carità, &c.

9. Thurſday, ſtation at St. Laurence's in Paniſperna.

10. Friday, at the holy Apoſtle's.

11. Saturday, at St. Peter's.

12. The ſecond ſunday in Lent, the pope aſſiſts at a ſolemn maſs in the apoſtolical palace; a biſhop aſſiſtant ſings maſs; the procurator-general of the Franciſcans preaches the ſermon; ſtation at S. Maria Maggiore's, and S. Maria la Navicella's.

13. Monday, ſtation at S. Clement's, feaſt at St. Peter's and St. Marcellinus's, for the conſecration of the church.

14. Tueſday, at S. Balbina's.

15. Wedneſday, at S. Cecilia's.

16. Thurſ-

* According to ſome, the four ember weeks bear a relation to thoſe four faſts which the Jews called of the fourth, fifth, ſeventh and tenth month. The ember weeks are ſolemniz'd in March, June, September, and December.

† Alet's Ritual.

16. Thurſday, at S. Maria's in Traſtevere's.

17. Friday, at St. Vitalis's.

18. Saturday, at St. Peter's and St. Marcellinus's.

19. The third ſunday, ſolemn maſs in the apoſtolical palace, at which the pope aſſiſts; a biſhop aſſiſtant ſings maſs, and the procurator-general of the Auſtin friars preaches the ſermon. The ſtation is at St. Laurence's without the walls; at the church of the Greeks, the adoration of the croſs is ſolemnly perform'd.

20. Monday, ſtation at St. Mark's.

21. Tueſday, at S. Pudentiana's.

22. Wedneſday, at St. Sixtus's, St. Nereus's and Achilleus's.

23. Thurſday, at St. Como's and St. Damian's in campo Vaccino.

24. Friday, at St. Laurence's in Lucina.

25. Saturday, at St. Cajus's, S. Suſanna's, and S. Mary's of the Angels, at Dioclesian's Baths.

26. The fourth ſunday in Lent, ſolemn maſs in the apoſtolical palace, at which his holineſs aſſiſts; a cardinal prieſt ſings maſs; the procurator-general of the Carmelites preaches the ſermon; the pope bleſſes the golden roſe; the ſtation is at the holy Croſs in Jeruſalem.

Ceremony of BLESSING the GOLDEN ROSE.

Pope Urban V. ſent, the fourth ſunday in Lent of the year 1366, a golden roſe to Joan queen of Sicily, and made a decree by which it was ordain'd, that the popes ſhould conſecrate one at that ſeaſon every year. This golden roſe is enrich'd with precious ſtones, and is often ſent by the pope to princeſſes, or to ſome church as a mark of his peculiar affection. His holineſs bleſſes the roſe in the room where the ornaments are kept, immediately before he goes to hear maſs in his own * chapel. The bleſſing of the roſe is perform'd with frankincenſe, holy water, balm and muſk, mix'd together. The benediction being ended, the pope goes out of the room, one of his privy chamberlains carrying the roſe before him, and lays it on a candleſtick †. Then a cardinal deacon preſents it to his holineſs, who taking it in his left hand walks on to the chapel, and with his right hand bleſſes the faithful who line the way. After this the roſe is return'd to the cardinal deacon, when he gives it to a clerk of the chamber, who lays it on the altar. Maſs being ended, his holineſs gives the roſe to whomſoever he thinks proper. We muſt not omit that the ſunday of the golden roſe is call'd ‡ Lætare, and that the ſacred college  come into the chapel cloath'd in caſſocks of the colour of dried roſes.

The roſe is remarkable for three qualities, which are to be applied to the faithful of the church, viz. for its colour, its fragrancy, and taſte. The ſubſtance of the golden roſe, the muſk and the balm with which it is bleſs'd, are ſo many emblems of the divine, the ſpiritual, and human nature of JESUS CHRIST. We owe this ingenious diſcovery to a †† Romiſh prelate.

27. Monday, ſtation at the church of the four crown'd heads.

28. Tueſday, at St. Laurence's in Damaſo.

29. Wedneſday, at St. Paul's.

30. Thurſday, at St. Martin's of the mountains, and St. Silveſter's in campo Marzo.

31. Fri-

* Sacra. cerem. lib. ii. † Piſcara Praxis cerem.

‡ 'Tis call'd Lætare from a leſſon which is read on that day, which begins at ver. 10. of the lxvith chapter of Iſaiah's prophecy.

 Piſcara, ibid. †† Caſal. de vet. Chriſt. ritib.

The PROCESSION with PALMS on PALM-SUNDAY. | La PROCESSION des PALMES le DIMANCHE des RAMEAUX.

The PROCESSION of the B. SACRAMENT on Corpus CHRISTI-DAY. | La PROCESSION du S^t SACREMENT le jour de la FETE-DIEU.

31. Friday, at St. Euſebius's and St. Bibiana's.

32. Saturday, at St. Nicholas's in Carcere.

33. The fifth ſunday in Lent, maſs in the apoſtolical palace, at which the pope aſſiſts with great ſolemnity; an aſſiſtant biſhop ſings maſs; the procurator-general of the Servites preaches the ſermon: ſtation at St. Peter's, and the feſtival at St. Lazarus's without the city.

34. Monday, ſtation at St. Chryſogone's.

35. Tueſday, at S. Quirico's, and S. Maria's in vita latâ.

36. Wedneſday, at St. Marcellus's.

37. Thurſday, at St. Apollinarius's, and the converted in the walks.

38. Friday, at St. Stephen's the round; feaſt at St. Marcellus's for our lady of the ſeven ſorrows.

39. Saturday, at St. John's before the Latin gate, and at St. Cæſarius's; the image of our Saviour in the ſancta ſanctorum is unveil'd, and that of the bleſſed virgin's in S. Maria Maggiore's, and continue ſo till ſunday in Albis.

40. Palm-ſunday, ſolemn maſs in the apoſtolical chapel, at which the pope aſſiſts; his holineſs gives the bleſſing, and diſtributes the palms. A proceſſion is afterwards made round the royal hall, and a cardinal prieſt ſings maſs. Station at St. John's of Lateran. At St. John's of the Maronites, the proceſſion of the palms is exhibited, and high maſs is ſung in the Syrian tongue.

The Ceremonies of PALM-SUNDAY.

Sunday after the Lætare the croſs and the images of the ſaints are veil'd, and continue ſo till the cloſe of Eaſter-eve. On palm-ſunday palms are prepared at the pope's chapel; and for want of * theſe, olive-branches may be uſed, adorn'd with the leaves of the palm-tree, tied up neatly in the ſhape of a croſs: Theſe palm or olive-branches muſt be about five foot in length. Things being thus prepared, the pope goes in proceſſion to the chapel; when the prayers and ceremonies uſual in all other † benedictions are ended, his holineſs ſprinkles and incenſes the branches: After the conſecration of the branches, the chief cardinal biſhop preſents two of the largeſt of them by way of offering to his holineſs; he gives them to two perſons of diſtinction, who, according to the Romiſh ceremonial, muſt ſtand on each ſide of the pope with the branches in their hands. The above-mentioned cardinal preſents him a third branch, leſs than the former; this the pope gives to a chamberlain, and preſents the reſt to the cardinals, prelates, ambaſſadors, and noblemen, who aſſiſt at the ceremony. The branches which the cardinal biſhop offers to his holineſs, are beautifully adorned with flowers, and muſt be kiſs'd by thoſe to whom they are preſented: When the chief cardinal biſhop receives them, he has the honour to kiſs his holineſs's hand and knee; the reſt of the cardinals alſo kiſs his knee, but the clergy, of an inferior order to theſe, only kiſs his foot. The ceremony concludes with diſtributing the branches among the people; and during the ſervice of the paſſion, all the congregation hold their branches in their hands.

On palm-ſunday the altars are adorned with palm or olive-branches; and the branches deſigned to be diſtributed are laid on a cup-board near the altar, and remain there covered with a white cloth, till the bleſſing is performed.

It were needleſs to acquaint the reader with the incident which this ceremony commemorates. Alet tells us in his ritual, that by the bleſſing of the branches, we are taught

* Sacra Cerem. Eccl. R. lib. 2.

† The ceremony is here deſcrib'd in the ſame manner as it is perform'd when the pope himſelf bleſſes the branches.

taught that all our thoughts, deſires, and faculties, ought to be offer'd to God; muſt be made after his ſpirit, and by the impulſe of his grace: but this myſtical interpretation is a little forc'd.

One remarkable cuſtom practis'd on palm-ſunday, and which is ſtill obſerved in ſeveral parts of Chriſtendom, is the ſetting a priſoner at liberty, upon which occaſion the biſhop and clergy go in proceſſion; the ceremony of which delivery is a type of our ſpiritual freedom. This ceremony is borrowed from the Jews, who uſed antiently to ſet a priſoner at liberty on eaſter-ſunday, in commemoration of their deliverance from the Egyptian bondage.

* After the palms have been diſtributed in manner aforegoing, the proceſſion of the palm-branches is performed. It begins by the deacon's preſenting the officiating prieſt with one of theſe branches, which he kiſſes, as alſo the prieſt's hand; this being done, the ſub-deacon takes the croſs, and goes and ſtands between the two incenſe-bearers, at the entrance of the ſanctuary or chancel: Then the march begins; immediately after that the deacon, who having knelt down, has turn'd himſelf towards the people, and repeated to them procedamus in pace, i. e. let us go in peace: this being done, the proceſſion is performed by going round the church. The proceſſion being ended, maſs is ſaid; and during the celebration of the ſervice of the paſſion, the ſeveral members of the congregation hold their branches in their hands, not excepting the officiating prieſt, and the miniſters of the altar: none are excepted but the deacons, who repeat the ſervice of the paſſion, and the acolyths, their attendants. After maſs is ended, every member of the congregation carries home his branch which has been bleſſed: and the rituals inform us, that a branch thus bleſſed, is a preſervative from ſeveral diſeaſes, and an inſtrument of numberleſs bleſſings.

The ſacriſtan reſerves ſome of theſe branches in order to burn them, and keeps the aſhes thereof for the next aſh-wedneſday. The peaſants ſet theſe palms in the fields, and in the midſt of their corn, and fanſy they ſecure them from vermin, and the inclemencies of the air. And we are told, that about the middle of the ſixth century, pope Agapetus inſtituted thoſe proceſſions which are performed in paſſion-week.

41. Monday, in paſſion-week, ſtation at St. Praxades's; feſtival at St. Andrew's à ponte Mole, for the tranſlation of that apoſtle's head.

42. Tueſday, ditto, ſtation at St. Priſcus's, and at St. Sabas's, on mount Aventine.

43. Wedneſday, ditto, ſtation at S. Maria Maggiore's: in the evening the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the office in the apoſtolick chapel, for the ſervice of the Tenebræ; as likewiſe the two days following at St. James's of the Spaniards, and at St. Apollinarius's: the Tenebræ are ſung, and a concert of muſick at the ſame time.

The ſervice of the Tenebræ is performed on wedneſday, thurſday, and friday in paſſion-week †; at which time neither flowers or images are allowed to be ſet upon the altars, but they muſt be covered with purple. Six candleſticks made of wood, or other ſuch cheap matter, in which are ſix tapers made of common wax, are ſet on the altar; then the hoſt is taken away from the altar, before which the matins of the Tenebræ are ſung, and is carried to ſome private place, with the lights and ornaments belonging to it.

On the epiſtle ſide, on that part where the ſub-deacon aſſiſts, during the Introite, a kind of wooden branch, or chandelier made in a triangular form, is ſet, in which they put fifteen tapers made of common wax, all which are lighted; as alſo thoſe of the altar before matins begins. After the pſalm peculiar to this office is ſung,

* The plate repreſenting the proceſſion of the palms, and that of the holy ſacrament, were drawn from the life at Paris.

† Baudry Manual. cerem.

ſung, the ſacriſtan, or an acolyth, puts out with a reed made for that purpoſe, all the tapers in this branch; obſerving to begin with that taper which ſtands at the greateſt diſtance, leaving only one of them lighted, viz. that which is in the center of the triangle. The whole ceremony is accompanied with ſinging, proper leſſons, &c. whereof it were needleſs to mention the particulars, ſince they can be of no uſe but to prieſts. While the Benedictus is ſinging, all the candles, that which burns before the hoſt excepted, are put out; and the ſervice muſt be ſo ordered, that they all may be extinguiſhed juſt at the concluſion of the canticle. As for the taper that was left lighted in the triangle, an acolyth kneels down, and lifts it up on high on a little table, while an anthem of the Benedictus is repeated; but he hides it either behind or under the altar, on the epiſtle ſide, at the ſinging of the verſe which begins as follows, Chriſtus factus eſt, &c. After which the miſerere is ſung in a kneeling poſture, and is followed by the prayer, whereof the firſt words are reſpice quæſumus: all which the officiating prieſt, who is ſtill upon his knees and bare-headed, as alſo his attendants, repeats aloud, till he comes to the qui tecum, when he lowers the tone of his voice. Scarce are the prayers ended, * when a great noiſe is made with ſticks, and often fiſts, againſt the ſeats and benches; the children join in the chorus, and the people, whoſe devotion is generally inconſiſtent with good ſenſe, love noiſe too much to leave off preſently: but an acolyth puts an end to it, by ſhewing the taper which he had hid behind the altar; for this is the ſignal for ſilence.

The pope aſſiſts at this ceremony clothed in his red cope, and his cowl over his head, but the croſs is not carried before him; and the cardinals, who are clothed in purple, neither pay obeyſance to him, or aſſiſt at the altar.

44. Holy-Thurſday, a rattle is made uſe of inſtead of bells, except at the celebration of the maſs of the gloria in excelſis, when a bell is rung. The altars and the croſs muſt be covered with white, and maſs celebrated with that colour. No private maſs muſt be performed on † holy-thurſday, then all the clergy receive the communion from the hands of their ſuperior, the better to repreſent the ſupper of our Lord with his diſciples; but if they are under an indiſpenſable neceſſity of celebrating ſome ‡ private maſs, it muſt be done before divine ſervice.

On holy-thurſday the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the office in the apoſtolic chapel; a cardinal biſhop ſings maſs, which being ended, the pope carries the hoſt in proceſſion to the ſepulchre, prepared in the chapel Paulina.

The PROCESSION of the HOST to the GRAVE.

Here follows the ceremony of this proceſſion, which is made after a ſolemn maſs. It were needleſs to relate how many times the officiating prieſt and his aſſiſtants || kneel, firſt on one ſide of the altar, then in the middle, and afterwards on the ſecond ſtep; nor how that after being come down from the altar, he puts off the maniple, (a kind of little ſtola) and puts on the chaſuble, and continues in prayer whilſt the ſacriſtan or ſome other perſon goes and lights the tapers, lays the corporal or bleſs'd table-cloth on

* The maſter of the ceremonies ſtrikes the firſt ſtroke upon the ſteps of the altar.

† Some writers tell us, that private maſſes were firſt inſtituted in the ſeventh century, and that they took their riſe from the ignorance of the people, and the decay of piety. At that time the people frequented the communion leſs, and the cup was given to the prieſt only; and inſtead of conſecrating a large loaf for all the communicants, as was always the cuſtom, they only conſecrated common wafers. It is alſo affirm'd, that maſſes were inſtituted in the ſame period: However, ſo far from believing that the original of private maſſes is of ſo late date, or that 'tis to be aſcribed to a decay of piety, we are perſuaded they owe their original to the fervent devotion of the primitive chriſtians, who uſed frequently to communicate in private.

‡ Piſcara Praxis cerem. || Baudry Manual. cerem.

on the altar, &c. that another gives out the tapers which are to be uſed in the proceſſion; that the incenſe-bearers get ready their thurables, &c. and the croſs-bearers clothe themſelves in white, in order to walk with the proceſſional croſs. Neither ſhall we obſerve the manner in which theſe miniſters range themſelves about the altar; or how they draw near to it, kneel down and pray; for all theſe ſeveral ceremonies reſemble thoſe which have been already deſcrib'd. Strict care muſt be taken not to turn one's back upon the hoſt; this the prieſt incenſes thrice, and it is veil'd; at the ſame time an acolyth puts another over the prieſt's ſhoulders, after which a deacon goes and takes the hoſt from the altar and preſents it to the officiating prieſt, who lifts it up on high before the congregation, the choir at the ſame time ſinging the pange lingua. This being done, the proceſſion ſets out, with each perſon his taper in his hand, in ſuch order that the youngeſt walk firſt, and the oldeſt laſt. The ſuperior clergy walk immediately after the prieſt, who marches under a canopy, and carries the hoſt. Being come to the grave, the youngeſt place themſelves near the croſs, which is ſet oppoſite to the grave, and the oldeſt place themſelves afterwards: this being done, they all fall down upon their knees, the incenſe and croſs-bearers excepted; the choir ſings, and repeats the anthem tantum ergo ſacramentum, during the whole ceremony. The prieſt incenſes the hoſt, when a deacon takes it up and holds it in his hands, till ſuch time as the prieſt kneels down before it. This being done, the deacon lays it again in the tabernacle, where the prieſt incenſes it thrice; after which the deacon locks up the tabernacle, and gives the key of it to the maſter of the ceremonies. This is what is call'd the carrying of the hoſt to the grave. At the return of the proceſſion the tapers are put out, thoſe of the acolyths who walk before the croſs-bearers, excepted. The officiating prieſt puts off his white veſtments, and puts on purple ones, in order to ſay the office of the veſpers; his attendants do the ſame, and after the veſpers are ended, they uncover the altars.

The pope performs the ſame ceremonies in the chapel of Paulina.

The manner of Uncovering the ALTAR.

The officiating prieſt who is to perform this ceremony muſt be cloth'd in purple: it begins by uncovering the high altar, when the prieſt takes from the altar its coverings, its pallæ, and other ornaments; but does not take off the croſs and its lights. They even take away the little cupboard where the church-plate is kept, as alſo the carpets and flowers, and likewiſe uncover the pulpit and the church-walls; all which the ſacriſtan carries into the veſtry. The croſs is cover'd with a black or purple colour'd veil, the tabernacle is veil'd in the ſame manner, and is left open, as being the houſe of the * living God, who has abſented himſelf from it for ſome time. The † croſs being thus cover'd with a purple or black veil, muſt be placed before the tabernacle. When the altars have been uncovered in order to ſolemnize the paſſion of our Saviour, a black canopy is ſet over the high altar, and the walls of the church are hung with the ſame colour. It were needleſs to acquaint the reader, that this mournful ceremony is uſher'd in by certain anthems.

‡ We are told that the uncovering of the altars repreſents the ignominy with which our Saviour was ſtripp'd of his garments.

After the ceremonies above-mention'd are ended, the pope is carried to the gallery, where the bull in Cœna Domini is read; by which his holineſs excommunicates in a ſolemn manner all hereticks and unrepenting ſinners; after which he gives his bleſſing to all the people aſſembled in the ſquare.

The

* Baudry Manuale. † Piſcara Praxis cerem. ‡ Caſal de Ritib.

Ceremonie de laver les pieds à douze PAUVRES le JEUDI SAINT.

B. Picart. de.

L'ADORATION de la CROIX par le PEUPLE le VENDREDI SAINT.

The EXCOMMUNICATION pronounced on holy Thurſday.

This is what is generally call'd the publication of the bull in Cœna Domini, which is given out from the gallery of the bleſſing.  The pope is then cloth'd in a red chaſuble and a ſtola of the ſame colour; and ſtands in a kind of high pulpit, the better to be ſeen of the people. The ſub-deacon who is at his holineſs's left hand, reads the bull which is in Latin; and the deacon who ſtands at his right, reads the ſame to them in Italian. In the mean time the candles are lighted, and each man takes one in his hand; when the excommunication being promulgated, the pope and cardinals put out their candles, and throw them among the croud, after which the black cloth that cover'd the pulpit is taken away.

†† Two cardinal deacons aſſiſtants, publiſh a plenary indulgence, the one in Latin, the other in Italian.

After this his holineſs waſhes the feet of ‡‡ twelve prieſts in the ducal hall, and entertains them at dinner in another apartment, himſelf waiting upon them; and preſents to each of them two medals, the one of gold the other of ſilver, as alſo an apoſtolical garment made of white ſerge.

The ceremony of WASHING the feet of the POOR.

This ceremony is call'd in Italian mandato, from the anthem which begins with theſe words mandatum novum, which is ſung at it; the rituals alſo call it mandatum.

Here follows the deſcription which a † modern writer gives us of this ceremony, made in imitation of our Saviour's waſhing the feet of his diſciples. The pope and cardinals being come to the ducal hall, where the ceremony of waſhing the feet is perform'd; the cardinal deacons aſſiſtants, clothe his holineſs with his purple ſtola, his red cope, and plain mitre. Their eminencies are cloth'd in purple copes, and his holineſs puts three ſpoonfuls of odoriferous ſpices into the thurable, " and gives his " bleſſing to the cardinal deacon who is to ſing the goſpel which begins, * ante " diem feſtum paſchæ: after which one of the apoſtolical ſub-deacons gives the pope " a book of the new teſtament to kiſs; and the cardinal deacon incenſes him thrice; " immediately after which a chorus of muſicians ſing the 34th verſe of the above-" mention'd chapter, in which are theſe words, mandatum novum do vobis; a new " commandment I give unto you.

" As ſoon as the pope hears theſe words ſung, he takes off his cope, and putting on " a white apron waſhes the feet of thirteen poor prieſts, ſtrangers, who ſit on a high " form or bench, cloth'd in white camblet, with a kind of coul, that reaches down " to the middle of the arm. This at the pope's court, is call'd an apoſtolical garment. " The above-mention'd prieſts have their right leg bare, which is well waſh'd over " with ſoap, before they preſent it to him to waſh; and this being done, his treaſurer, " by his order, gives to each of them two medals, the one of gold, the other of ſilver, " weighing an ounce each; the major-domo preſents them a napkin, with which the " dean of the cardinal college, or one of the moſt antient biſhops of the apoſtolick col-" lege dries their feet: afterwards the pope returns to his ſeat, takes off his apron, " waſhes his hands in water which the layman of the higheſt quality there preſent,

 Sacr. cerem. eccl. Rom. lib. 2. †† Id. ibid. ‡‡ The Romiſh ceremonial ſpeaks of thirteen.
† Aimon. * John xiii.

" pours out to him; and afterwards wipes them with a napkin which is preſented " to him by the chief cardinal biſhop. This being done, the pope again puts on his " cope and mitre, and afterwards ſings the Lord's prayer, and ſeveral others in Latin; " which being ended, he goes into the apartment where the bed of altar-ornaments " are laid, when laying his pontifical veſtments on it, he withdraws to his apartment " accompanied with the cardinals."

This ceremony is perform'd much after the ſame manner in the reſt of the churches in Rome, and in other places by the biſhops and rectors of pariſhes. The place where the † ceremony is perform'd, muſt be adorn'd and perfum'd with flowers and odoriferous herbs; there muſt be at leaſt a table in form of an altar, neatly cover'd. The croſs muſt be veil'd with white, to denote that purity whereof the ceremony of waſhing the feet is a type; and as every thing muſt allude to this, the rituals obſerve that the candles which are lighted at this ſolemn act, muſt be made of the whiteſt wax. The credence, and the baſons into which the water is pour'd, muſt alſo be adorn'd with flowers.

" The thirteen prieſts whoſe feet were waſh'd by the pope, and who are that day " call'd apoſtles, are an hour after carried into a beautiful apartment in the Vatican, " in which there hangs one of the fineſt pictures in Rome, repreſenting the battle of " the emperor Conſtantine. In this apartment the thirteen prieſts are entertain'd with " a moſt ſplendid dinner. They are no ſooner ſeated, than the pope comes in, and " preſents to each of them the firſt diſh, and afterwards pours out to each of them " the firſt glaſs of wine; during which he diſcourſes to them with great familiarity, " and grants them ſeveral privileges on that occaſion; which being done he with- " draws.

" Then the pope's preacher in ordinary begins his ſermon in the above-ſaid apart- " ment, while the thirteen prieſts are ſitting at dinner, in lieu of the ſpiritual ſervice " which is always read at meals in all eccleſiaſtical ſocieties. The preacher who of- " ficiates on this occaſion is the ſame that generally preaches once a week before the " pope in his chamber during lent and advent. On this occaſion the pope ſits in a " gallery unſeen by any perſon, and the cardinals ſit round his chamber in purple " couls, as in the conſiſtory.

" But in caſe of the pope's abſence, the cardinal deacon, in preſence of the whole " apoſtolical college, performs the ceremony of waſhing the feet of thirteen poor " prieſts." The ceremony ends with a ſumptuous entertainment which his holineſs gives to the cardinals, and the whole is heightned with a fine concert of muſick. 'Tis thus that Rome annually beholds the image of our Lord's ſupper with his apoſtles, renew'd.

The magiſtrates of Rome are preſent at this ceremony of waſhing the feet, which is perform'd in the hoſpital of St. John of Lateran; the ſame ceremony is likewiſe exhibited in a ſolemn manner at la Conſolatione, and in other places.

In a word, 'tis ſolemniz'd on holy thurſday by all the princes of the Romiſh religion in Europe. In France the king's chief phyſician makes choice of twelve children for that purpoſe, whoſe feet are waſh'd by his majeſty, and he himſelf ſerves up the diſhes. They are afterwards preſented in the king's name with money, bread, and clothes. * The king of Spain performs this ceremony in his anti-chamber, after having perform'd his devotions at chapel: for this purpoſe forms are fix'd in the anti-chamber for the poor men to ſit on, and oppoſite to them long tables are plac'd on which they dine; the ſtuff to make their clothes is alſo brought into the ſame apartment, and for each a purſe with money. The officers of the pantry provide the victuals

† Baudry Manual. cerem.

* The ſtate of Spain by abbé Vairac.

On porte en PROCESSION les SAINTES HUILES. &c.

BENEDICTION des SAINTES HUILES.

Maniere dont L'EVÊQUE est recu a la visite de son DIOCESE.

L'EVÊQUE fait L'EXORTATION PASTORALE.

On baise la MAIN de L'EVÊQUE.

Le CORPS de L'EVÊQUE est exposé dans L'EGLISE.

victuals for theſe poor people; thoſe of the cellar furniſh each of them with wine and water; and thoſe of the fruitery ſerve up the ſeveral courſes, and adorn the table with flowers, &c. The clerk of the alms, cauſes each poor man to ſit down on the bench where their feet are to be waſhed; here they are viſited by the phyſician of the chamber, to ſee that they have no infectious diſtemper: the apothecary, the clerk of the alms, the chief marſhal, and the principal almoner, waſh their feet very clean, to prevent their being offenſive to his majeſty.

" As ſoon as the holy ſacrament is lodg'd in the tabernacle of the monument, the " king comes out of the chapel, and goes in proceſſion to the anti-chamber, attend- " ed by his ſtewards with their ſtaves; the officer in waiting, takes care to put the " people in order, to prevent confuſion.

" The king's guards are drawn up in two lines in the great hall, and the lieutenant " who commands them ſtands at the lower end of the poor men's table with two of " the ſaid guard.

" As ſoon as the king is come, the deacon begins to ſing the goſpel, when immedi- " ately his majeſty takes off his hat and ſword, ties a cloth round him which the " chief almoner preſents him with, and in his abſence the ſumiller de courtine, and " waſhes the poor men's feet: this being done, the king puts on his hat and ſword, " and the clerk of the almonry cauſes the poor men to ſit down at table.

" The king begins to wait upon them, giving to one of the officers of his own " table, the ſeveral courſes which were ſet on it, in order for their being put " into the voiders.

" Whilſt the king is ſerving up a courſe to the firſt poor man, the gentlemen of " his bed-chamber go according to their ſeniority, and take the other diſhes at the " door of the apartment in which they are ſet; and each of theſe, aſſiſted by his do- " meſticks, carries the courſe deſign'd for each poor perſon, and gives it to the comp- " troler, who preſents two diſhes to the king, which his majeſty ſets before two of " the poor men. The above-mention'd officer who waits at the king's table, receives " the reſt from the king's hand, and lays them in the voiders.

" The butler ſtands behind the table, and waits on the poor men with wine.

" After that all the courſes are ſerv'd up, the gentlemen of the bed-chamber fetch " the deſſert, which the king takes from them, and preſents to each of the poor men, " who receives it in a napkin; and at the ſame time the officer of the king's table afore- " mention'd takes it back, and lays it in the voider, with the bread, the ſalt-ſeller, " knife, ſpoon and fork; which being done, the clerk of the pantry takes off the cloth, " and the gentlemen of the bed-chamber go to the buffet to fetch thence the garments " appointed for the poor men, and preſents them to the king, who diſtributes them " to the poor men in their ſeveral turns.

" * After the apparel has been thus diſtributed, the chief almoner ſays grace, and " pronounces the bleſſing.

The Bleſſing of the OILS, &c.

† The holy oils are made on holy thurſday, at which time thoſe of the preceding year are burnt. They are made with great ſolemnity, after having firſt reconciled the penitents to the church. After nones or the ninth hour, the officiating prieſt clothes himſelf in white, and puts on his ſandals, &c. The canons, the ſeveral miniſters of the altar, ſeven deacons, ſeven ſub-deacons, and twelve prieſts

* The plate repreſenting the ceremony of waſhing the feet of twelve poor men, &c. was drawn from the life at Paris.

† Piſcara Praxis cerem. The uſe of oils is very antient.

prieſts are likewiſe clothed in white, and all walk in proceſſion to the altar. Omitting the genuflexions, prayers and anthems that follow the proceſſion, we ſhall obſerve that the officiating prieſt bleſſes, conſecrates, and exorciſes three ſorts of oil: he firſt performs the ceremony on that of the * infirm, afterwards on that of the chriſma, and laſtly of the catechumens; and ends with a † ſalutation, which the officiating prieſt and the miniſters who aſſiſt at the conſecration, make to theſe ſanctified oils, ſaying to them, ave ſanctum oleum, hail holy oil. After this the new made oils are carried in proceſſion into the ſacriſty, when the officiating prieſt waſhes his hands, maſs is ſung, the bleſſing is pronounced, and every man returns home.

In Spain, and ſome parts of France bordering upon Spain, the cuſtom of bleſſing meats publickly at eaſter is ſtill preſerv'd. " One would imagine, ſays biſhop Alet " in his Rituals, that this cuſtom owes its original to what follows, viz. that as the " hereſy of the Priſcillianiſts had infected Spain and Guienne, the fathers of the " church after having condemn'd it in their writings, were alſo deſirous of having " it condemn'd by a ſolemn cuſtom of bleſſing fleſh, as one of God's creatures, and " a thing that was good and uſeful. ——— In order the better to oppoſe the hereſy " of Priſcillian ‡, who held that the prince of darkneſs, and not God, was the cre- " ator of fleſh, and that the faithful ought to reject it as impure and wicked. This " bleſſing is ſcarce ever us'd, except in thoſe churches and near thoſe places where that " hereſy formerly prevail'd." To this bleſſing of the meats, we muſt add that of bread and eggs at eaſter.

On holy thurſday the ſtation is at St. John of Lateran, when the heads of the holy apoſtles St. Peter and St. Paul are ſhewn, as alſo the table on which our Lord eat his laſt ſupper. In the evening ſeveral cardinals, princes, &c. go to the Trinity, where they waſh the feet of pilgrims, and wait on them at tables, adorn'd with great magnificence, and cover'd with the moſt exquiſite diſhes. The ſame night, the fraternities go in proceſſion by torch-light to St. Peter's, preceded by great numbers of penitents who ſcourge themſelves as they walk; and as a reward for their voluntary puniſhment, they are ſhewn the holy face of our lord, the lance, and the true croſs.

45. Good-friday, ſtation at St. Croſs's in Jeruſalem, where ſeveral relicks are ſhewn; the miraculous crucifix is ſhewn unveiled at St. Peter's and St. Paul's, as alſo that of St. Marcellus. Feaſt in the church of the Armenians, where a holy ſepulchre, in imitation of that of Mount Calvary, is ſhewn; the pope aſſiſts at maſs in a ſolemn manner in the apoſtolical chapel; a Jeſuit preaches the paſſion ſermon, and a cardinal penitentiary performs the office, and is cloth'd in || black, without either ſandals or gloves; the altar is uncover'd, and the croſs which ſtands in the middle is veil'd with black, as was before obſerved: the tapers are made of common wax, the canopy is cover'd with black, as alſo the pope's chair, and the walls of the chapel are ſtript of all their ornaments. The gloomy ſolemnity of the day does not permit of certain honours which would otherwiſe be paid to his holineſs: the cardinals don't bow to him, nor do the miniſters who are to ſing the paſſion, kiſs his foot. When thoſe who ſing the ſervice above-mention'd come to theſe words, having bowed down his head, he yielded up the ghoſt; the pope, the miniſter who officiates, and the reſt of the congregation, turn themſelves towards the altar, kneel down, and pray with a very low voice. The ſame is done in the reſt of the churches, nor would it be otherwiſe were the pope himſelf to officiate.

On

* 'Tis the oil that is uſed in extreme unction, exorciſms, &c.

† Miniſtri ſacri chriſmatis cooperatores.

‡ Priſcillian a heretick of the fourth century is ſaid to have condemn'd marriage, and the fleſh of animals, and to have requir'd that the bleſſed ſacrament ſhould be received without eating it.

|| Ceremon. ſac. eccleſ. Rom. lib. 2.

* On Good-friday, the pope ſits only on a plain form; and after ſervice is ended, when the cardinals attend on him back to his chamber, they are all obliged to keep a deep ſilence, as a teſtimony of their ſorrow.

In the night at 22 a-clock, (according to the Italian manner of counting the hours) the Greeks perform the obſequies of our Saviour in their own tongue, round a great crucifix, laid on a bed of ſtate adorn'd with flowers; theſe the Greek biſhop diſtributes to the aſſiſtants, as an act of devotion, after the office is ended.

The ADORATION of the CROSS.

The following ceremony gives great ſcandal to hereticks, who look upon this ſolemn adoration on good-friday as manifeſt idolatry. They cannot conceive that the prayers which are uſed on that day are offer'd up to a crucified Saviour; and that when it is ſaid to the croſs, O crux ave ſpes unica; hail thou croſs our only hope, it is figuratively ſpoken to our Saviour himſelf. Perhaps it would be proper to remove all ſtumbling-blocks, ſince it might leſſen the averſion of the enemies of the church, and would probably contribute to bring back into its boſom, many people, who out of prejudice object inſincerity to us, becauſe we ſay on good friday, in a figurative ſenſe, of the croſs which is the object of the ceremony, ecce lignum crucis, venite, adoremus; behold the wood of the croſs, let us come and adore it. Would it not be better to take away ſome things, than for us to have a ſett of people for our enemies who for upwards of two hundred years, keep true catholicks in awe; and make us bluſh for a great number of ceremonies, which tho antiently ſo conſtant, and had ſuch a ſanction given to them, are now almoſt buried in oblivion, or continued only in Spain and Italy? How many catholicks are reduced to ſhifts, diſguiſes, and evaſions, becauſe they are afraid of openly defending many things which are a folly to the libertine, and a ſcandal to the proteſtant?

† After nones the officiating prieſt goes up to the altar, preceded by the acolyths without tapers, and the reſt of the miniſters of the altar: they firſt kneel before it, and bow to the croſs, a duty at all times neceſſary, but particularly on this day. Immediately after that the officiating prieſt and his miniſters have repeated on their knees certain prayers with a low tone of voice, the acolyths cover the table of the altar, and lay the maſs-book on a black cuſhion on the epiſtle ſide. This being done, the maſter of the ceremonies makes a ſignal to the officiating prieſt and his miniſters to riſe up; when the acolyths take away the cuſhions that were knelt upon, and the black cloth; while the choir and the congregation ſay their prayers upon their knees. The miniſter who is to officiate goes up to the altar, kiſſes it as uſual, and afterwards either repeats or ſings with a low voice the ſeveral leſſons of the day, and his miniſters after him. Prayers being ended, the officiating prieſt goes on the epiſtle ſide, the deacon takes the croſs which is veil'd from the altar, and preſents it to the officiating prieſt, who after he has uncover'd the top of the croſs, elevates it with both his hands, at the ſame time ſinging theſe words, ecce lignum crucis; behold the wood of the croſs. Then all the congregation riſe up with their heads bare, and the miniſters of the altar ſing as follows, in quo ſalus mundi pependit; on which the ſaviour of the world hath ſuffer'd death: the choir anſwers, venite & adoremus, let us come and adore. Every one falls proſtrate on his knees, the officiating prieſt excepted. A moment after they all riſe up; the officiating prieſt uncovers the right arm of the crucifix, and the head of the Jeſus; ſhews it; elevates it; and ſays, ecce lignum,&c. as before. Laſtly, he goes up towards the middle of the altar, turns towards the congregation, and with a very loud voice repeats the ſame ceremonies, at the ſame time elevating the crucifix, and ſhewing it quite uncovered.

* Id. ibid. † Piſcara Praxis cerem.

The acolyths ſpread a purple piece of cloth, or carpet in the midſt of the chancel of the altar, and before the ſteps of it: On the carpet a purple cuſhion is laid, and a ſilken veil embroidered with gold. The officiating prieſt carries the croſs thither, and kneeling down lays it on the cuſhion, and bows to it; and being preceded by his miniſters, who attended upon him to this auguſt ceremony, he returns to his place, where he puts off his ſandals and his miter. He afterwards goes forward in the midſt of his miniſters, who alſo put off their ſandals, when he kneels thrice, repeats thrice a ſhort prayer, and at laſt kiſſes the holy wood of the croſs, which the miniſters do likewiſe; after which, having bowed to the croſs, they all return back, and put on their ſandals.

The reſt of the dignitaries of the church follow after, each in his rank, and perform the ſame ceremony, as alſo the people. * In thoſe countries where the women don't ſit with the men, a prieſt, having a black ſtola over his ſurplice, goes and preſents them the crucifix in the manner above-mentioned.

The ſame ceremonies are performed at the pope's chapel. † After his holineſs has kiſs'd the crucifix, his offering muſt be twenty-five ducats of gold at leaſt, which he puts into a veſſel of the ſame metal, laid near the left arm of the crucifix. Emperors and kings go and worſhip the croſs after the cardinals, who are the princes of the church, as is well known, and who conſequently are ſuperior in dignity to all the ſovereigns upon earth. As this is always practis'd in all ceremonies, it were needleſs to make any farther mention of it.

We are not to omit, that in that part of the paſſion which is called the prayer for the Jews, the congregation are not to kneel down ‡, becauſe that at our Saviour's crucifixion, the Jews, who put him to death, bowed the knee purely to mock him.

The ceremony of the adoration being ended, the deacon ſalutes the croſs, elevates it, and in this poſture carries it to the altar, where he lays it down, obſerving to bow the knee before it: As he walks along with it, he goes before the officiating prieſt, who is ſtanding up; but the reſt of the miniſters of the altar are upon their knees.

PROCESSIONS on GOOD-FRIDAY.

There is no true and unfeigned chriſtian but conſiders our Saviour's paſſion as the æra from which the ſalvation of mankind is to be dated: It would be impoſſible for them to pay him too much homage for the blood he has ſhed for them; and the moſt unſullied virtue, the moſt profound humility, the moſt auſtere devotion, is not worthy of approaching him, who, for man's ſake, gave himſelf up to the moſt dreadful torments. But ſo great is the weakneſs of the human mind, that 'tis to the gratitude ſo juſtly paid to God for this excellent ſacrifice, that we owe the mad folly of numberleſs multitudes of zealots, and thoſe violent mortifications, in which an odd complication of extravagance and devotions, are equally conſpicuous: your zealots are as much infected with a mixture of envy and emulation as the children of this world, and will not ſuffer themſelves to be out-done. Hence the ridiculous cuſtoms, which having got footing in ſpite of all the precautions of the holy leaders of the church, are daily increaſing. It is therefore but juſt to condemn theſe practices, and all ſuch as tend to divert mankind from ſincere and genuine piety, by amuſing them with trifles ſo unworthy of the ſacred character of religion, which nevertheleſs are tolerated in ſome countries for the ſake of temporal intereſts, to the ſhame and ſcandal ſcandal of the clergy thereof. This being premiſed, let the reader conſider in what light he is to view certain whimſical cuſtoms we ſhall now deſcribe, after having once again declar'd, that we do not thereby intend to give the leaſt offence to true and unaffected piety.

* Piſcara Praxis Cerem. † Sacra Cerem. Eccl. Rom. lib. ii. ‡ Idem ibid.

At Courtray, there is a proceſſion on good-friday of our Saviour to mount Calvary. The city gives five and twenty livres to a poor man, who repreſents the ſuffering Saviour: and the monks, as we are told, aſſure him of certain ſalvation, in caſe he happens to die under the blows that are given him in this ceremony. The proceſſion firſt aſſembles in the pariſh church, when the mock Saviour is brought into the ſacriſty, where he is clothed with a purple robe, his loins girded with a thick rope, and his head crowned with thorns; after which he is made to walk bare-foot, with a kind of pack-ſaddle bound about his neck: On each ſide of the pack-ſaddle ſix ropes are put, of the thickneſs of ſuch as are uſually put to draught-horſes; which being done, the mock chriſt has a long croſs of great weight laid on his ſhoulders: and thus equipped, he rambles up and down the whole city. Six Capuchines, who walk at his right hand, draw the ſix ropes, which are fix'd on either ſide of the pack-ſaddle; and the other ſix are drawn by as many Recollets, a kind of Franciſcans: ſo that the poor fellow is ſo dragg'd and hal'd by the twelve friars, that he is continually ſtumbling, and is almoſt pull'd to pieces. The poor mock ſaviour would have a horrid time of it, were it not for a ſham Simon the Cyrenian, who very luckily comes in the god-ſpeed to free him from his torments. The poor wretch, before he gets into the church is half killed: however, by this aſſiſtance, notwithſtanding the kicks and cuffs which the people, and the mimick Jews belabour him with, he is ſo thorowly perſuaded of the merits of his ſufferings, and that they will procure him an eternity of bliſs, that he bears all his torments without the leaſt murmur or complaint.

Nor is the proceſſion at Bruſſels, in which the crucifixion of our Saviour is repreſented, leſs extraordinary in its circumſtances. Both the city and the court endeavour to do honour to this ſolemnity; and although they may probably be perſuaded, there is little devotion in it, they nevertheleſs give into it from mere cuſtom, and to pleaſe the common people, who revere it becauſe of the * antiquity of its inſtitution. 'Tis performed in the church of the Auſtin-Fryars, at the foot of the altars. The perſons who form the proceſſion get together in St. Gudila's, the cathedral church, by eight in the morning. The brotherhood of the Mercy come thither in their proper habits, bare-footed, and their faces mask'd. Some walk with drums covered with black cloth. After the brotherhood, a great number of priſoners come forward, each of whom drags after him an iron cannon-ball, that is chain'd to his foot; next come ſeveral Auſtin-Fryars, dreſs'd in Jewiſh habits, in the midſt of whom is a man, who is always a criminal, that is pardon'd for the part he acts, bound and fetter'd, crown'd with thorns, and dreſs'd in a purple robe. Then ſeveral trumpets come forward, and after them the prebends, the prieſts, and a multitude of people. In this equipage they all croud into the church, where the concourſe is always ſo great, that multitudes are oblig'd to ſtand without. In the church, a large ſcaffold is erected, and a croſs, twenty foot in height, ſet upon it; the perſon who repreſents the crucify'd Saviour, aſcends this ſcaffold, and is followed by thoſe who repreſent the Jews, with hammers, nails, and ropes in their hands. Then the brotherhood of the Mercy croud round the ſcaffold: the ladies have high ſeats prepared for them, and the common-people ſtand below in the pit. The mock-Jews ſtrip the pretended Chriſt

* There is great room to believe, that the Spaniards, their antient ſovereigns, firſt introduced this ceremony among them.

Chriſt of his ornaments, lay him along the ſcaffold, caſt dice for his garments; which being done, they ſtrip him to his ſhirt. Laſtly he is fix'd on the croſs, by tying his hands and feet with leathern thongs, which are nail'd to the croſs; and the better to imitate our Saviour's ſufferings, they put little bladders fill'd with blood under the thongs, when pricking them with the nails, the blood is ſeen to trickle from his hands and feet. This is the very pathos of this pious farce; for at the ſight of the blood, the hearts of the people are moved, and the moſt devout beat their breaſts, while the monks ſing anthems ſuitable to the occaſion.

It were needleſs to mention the whimſical ſcenes that are exhibited on good-friday, in the ſeveral countries of the chriſtian world. We ſhould never have done, were we to take notice of our Saviour's burial, as it is ſolemnized in Portugal; the various ways of crucifying him in other countries; the ſeveral marches and counter-marches of the proceſſions made by the penitents of the ſeveral colours in Rome, who all pretend to be ready to attack the devil, and for that purpoſe are armed with tapers, whips and croſſes, and enroll'd under different banners. At Venice, on good-friday, the holy ſacrament is carried in proceſſion, about nine or ten at night, with the * utmoſt ſolemnity: it is laid in a coffin cover'd with black velvet, and in this manner is carried round the ſquare of St. Mark. St. Didier informs us, " that there cannot be " a finer ſight than this ſquare. Two large flambeaus of white wax are ſet at " each window of the palace Della Procuratia, which goes round the ſquare. This " double range of flambeaus, and thoſe which are ſet over the church gate, are to light " the ſeveral proceſſions of the fraternities and the neighbouring pariſhes, who go pur- " poſely into the ſquare. We here ſee the penitents in maſquerade, wearing ſharp- " pointed caps two foot high, who beat themſelves till the blood follows the blows; " walking every now and then behind the crucifix. For this purpoſe they have ſcourges " made of a great number of little ſharp cords, which they hold with both their hands " and dip in a pot filled with vinegar, brought to them for that uſe; and they ſtrike " themſelves

* St. Didier aſſures us, that the popes, notwithſtanding their great authority, have never been able to aboliſh this cuſtom: but he adds, that whereas this ceremony was formerly practis'd in the whole extent of the Venetian territories, 'tis now confined to the churches of Venice only, where ſuch a proceſſion is performed in every pariſh the ſame evening.

Here follows the order which is obſerv'd in the proceſſions on holy-thurſday at Venice. There are three or four hundred men, all of them holding thick torches of white wax, ſix foot long, and weighing at leaſt twelve or fifteen pound each. Theſe walk two and two, with a like number of perſons, each holding a lanthorn, and walking between each torch, in ſuch a manner, that the ſpectator ſees alternately a flambeaux and a lanthorn. They are all clothed in black or white ſerge, according to their fraternities, having a large cowl two foot in length, and that terminates in a point, hanging down on their backs. Their lanthorns are very large, and are fix'd to the end of a ſtick: Each has ſeveral tapers in it, which give a great light, they being made of a very clear glaſs: and as there are a great number of glaſs-houſes in and about Venice, ſome of them are made in a very odd ſhape, and are ſo heavy, that one man is hardly able to carry them. Some are made in the ſhape of ſtars, or like ſuns, with a great number of rays darting from them, and are ſix foot in diameter: The glaſſes thereof are fix'd in with pieces of iron and lead gilt. Others are made in the ſhape of roſes, full and half-moons, comets, pyramids, croſſes, globes, pelicans, with extended wings, &c. In the midſt of theſe flambeaus and lanthorns the ſtandard is plac'd, and afterwards the croſs, with a crucifix four foot high, cover'd with crape; and a noſegay of flowers at the foot of it, as broad as a half-buſhel. The fraternities ſtrive to rival each other in the ſingularity and beauty of their flowers, as well as the form they ſhall give to their noſegays. The Battuti walk before the croſs, who ſcourge themſelves by ſtarts, and walk backwards, having their eyes always fix'd on the crucified Saviour. After the croſs the relicks follow, which are carried on litters cover'd with flowers and tapers. On both ſides of it ſeveral perſons walk with long flambeaus in their hands, and large ſilver chandeliers, with ſeveral candleſticks in them fix'd to a long pole. After, a chorus of voices is heard, and the clergy next; then the guardian, the deputy-guardian, and all the brethren of the fraternity, each having a torch in his hand.

" themſelves on the back with ſo much order, and in ſuch exact cadence, that they " muſt neceſſarily have ſtudied this art very much, to be ſo very expert in it. So " great a conſumption of white wax is made in theſe proceſſions, that it is thought " there is more ſpent that night in the city of Venice only, than in all Italy together, " during a twelvemonth." We conſider all theſe ceremonies as ſo many ſnares to delude the ſimple and ignorant; or as expedients, to which wicked people, who are unwilling to amend their lives, are, by the wily prieſts, prompted to have recourſe; and without aſſuming the office of a cenſor in this place, we believe that thoſe who ſuffer them to be practis'd, don't conſider how derogatory they are to true religion.

* The adoration of the croſs is followed by the proceſſion to the bleſſed ſacrament, which, as was before obſerved, is laid in a kind of grave. The officiating prieſt incenſes it in the grave, after having ador'd it; which being done, he elevates the hoſt, and turns about to the people: at the ſame time the choir ſings an anthem †, which is the ſignal for the march; whereupon all the congregation ſtand up, and return in proceſſion to the altar.

The officiating prieſt and his attendants are ſtill in black veſtments. We are not to omit, that during the proceſſion an acolyth ſtays at the altar, and gets it ready againſt the return of the congregation; who being come, the ceremonies above deſcrib'd are continued, and the ſame are perform'd at the pope's chapel, on which occaſion his holineſs communicates alone at the altar, and drinks out of the cup, whereas at other times he receives the ſacrament thro' a pipe; but he muſt not then be incens'd, this ceremony being to be perform'd on this day to the bleſſed ſacrament only.

46. Eaſter-eve, ſtation at St. John's of Lateran, where after the bleſſing of the fire and water, the catechumens who are of age, are baptized in the Baptiſterium of Conſtantine; the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the office in the apoſtolick chapel, and a cardinal-prieſt chaunts maſs.

‡ Eaſter-eve, the bells begin to ring about four in the afternoon; the ornaments of the churches and the altars are chang'd; the black with which the latter was cover'd, is taken off, and white put on; the tabernacle is alſo uncover'd, and cover'd with white, but ſo that the outward ſide of it is ſtill cover'd with purple, till the litanies are ended. In like manner after that part of the ſervice has been celebrated, a carpet or ſome rich covering muſt be laid on the ſteps of the altar, and the images unveil'd. Then ſix large tapers ſhall be got ready for ſolemn maſs, and all the lights which are to burn before the altar. This is ſufficient to give the reader a general idea of the ceremony perform'd on this day, without troubling him with the mention of the credence, wherein a great number of ſmall candles are laid, to light ſuch great ones as may happen to go out.

Near the goſpel, a great candleſtick muſt be placed, made in the ſhape of an angel if poſſible, and very neatly wrought. In this candleſtick, the paſchal taper muſt be placed; it muſt be made of the whiteſt wax, and weigh about eight or ten pounds; five holes muſt be made in it, in the ſhape of a croſs, in which five grains of frankincenſe muſt be laid, gilt over, and made in the ſhape of a pine apple. To conclude, ſome edifying ſubject muſt be painted on the taper, ſuch as the patron of the place, &c. As every thing muſt correſpond with the ſolemnity of the day, the ritual ordains that the reed with which the tapers are lighted, muſt alſo be gilt and adorn'd with flowers. The three ſmall candles which are fix'd to the top of the reed, repreſent the trinity in unity, and muſt therefore join together at the baſis, i. e. at the end which touches the reed.

* Piſcara Praxis cerem. † Vexilla regis prodeunt. ‡ Baudry Manuale Cerem.

It is alſo ordain'd by the rituals, that baptiſm is not to be adminiſtred for a week before eaſter-eve, unleſs a perſon's life be in danger.

The BLESSING of the NEW FIRE, &c.

The place where this ceremony is perform'd, muſt be ſtrew'd with flowers. On the ninth hour the old fire muſt be put out *, and at the ſame time an acolyth muſt † light the new one without the church.

†† The officiating prieſt, dreſs'd in all his ſacerdotal veſtments, and attended by the miniſters of the altar and the clergy, walk out of the church in proceſſion after the ninth hour, and go to the place where the bleſſing of the fire is to be perform'd. The veſſel in which the holy water is put, is carried thither in great pomp, as alſo that of the frankincenſe, the ſub-deacon's maniple, who is cloth'd in purple, and the maſs-book; the ſub-deacon walks ſingle with the croſs, and is follow'd by the clergy. When every one is got into his place, the officiating prieſt uncovers himſelf, and pronounces theſe words, Dominus vobiſcum; the Lord be with you, &c. as uſual; he afterwards repeats the ‡ prayer, Deus qui filium tuum, &c. in the midſt of which he makes the ſign of the croſs over the fire; he likewiſe bleſſes the five grains of frankincenſe, which are put in the navicula which an acolyth holds lifted up on his breaſt. In the mean time the thuriferary puts ſome coals, after their being bleſs'd, into the thurable, into which the officiating prieſt throws ſome frankincenſe and bleſſes it; then a deacon gives him the ſprinkler, kiſſing it at the ſame time; the officiating prieſt ſprinkles thrice with holy-water the fire he had juſt before bleſſed, and as he is ſprinkling ſays theſe words, aſperges me Domine; he incenſes the ſacred fire thrice, in the manner above-mention'd: then one of the acolyths, or a ſacriſtan, takes a ſmall candle, and lights it at the new fire.

As they went in proceſſion to the place where the ceremony was perform'd, they return back from thence in the ſame order ||, but the deacon firſt puts off his purple ornaments, and the ſub-deacon takes the maniple of the ſame colour, upon which the deacon puts on white veſtments. We ſhall not trouble the reader with the order of the proceſſion; the only particular circumſtance in it is, that the deacon walks in it with the above-mention'd reed in his hand, and the ſub-deacon has a ſmall candle ſhut up in a little lanthorn. The proceſſion being come to the church-door, makes a halt, when the deacon kiſſes the reed, and the acolyth lights one of the candles fix'd upon the reed with that which he has in his hand; then they all fall upon their knees, and the deacon elevates the reed, and ſings the anthem which begins as follows, lumen Chriſti, &c. i. e. the light of Chriſt. He lights

a

* Baudry Manual. cerem.

† The acolyth muſt ſtrike fire with a flint and ſteel, and therewith light ſome coals which are brought in a veſſel for that purpoſe. The antient Greeks and Romans, &c. uſed to light their ſacred fire with no leſs ceremony, and for that purpoſe generally made uſe of a kind of burning-glaſs, or rather a veſſel in a concave form, in the ſame manner as the antient inhabitants of Peru. They likewiſe uſed to ſtrike fire by rubbing two hard ſticks againſt one another, a cuſtom practiſed by the Mexicans, who at the beginning of every century light their new fire. The Romans uſed to renew the fire of Veſta in the month of March, as Ovid tells us in his faſtorum:

Adde quod arcana fieri novus ignis in æde
Dicitur, & vires flamma refecta capit.

This might induce one to believe that the ceremony of the new fire was borrow'd from the heathens.

†† Baudry Manual. cerem. ‡ You ſhall ſprinkle me, O Lord. || Baudry Manual. cerem.

a ſecond candle in the middle of the church with the ſame ſolemnity, and the third is lighted on the ſteps of the altar, where we will leave them a moment. There they muſt perform certain acts of devotion, or rather ceremonies, which tho deſcribed at length in the rituals, would be unneceſſary in this place.

The BLESSING of the PASCHAL TAPER.

One of the ceremonies on this occaſion is the deacon's aſking the officiating prieſt bleſſing, after which the former goes to the deſk on which he lays the maſs-book, and incenſes it thrice, but neither ſigns himſelf or the maſs-book with the ſign of the croſs. The reſt of the miniſters range themſelves round the maſs-book in * manner following: the croſs-bearer ſtands with the croſs turn'd towards the officiating prieſt, the thuriferary is at the deacon's right hand; the other acolyth who has the reed in his hand, and he who bears the five grains of incenſe, are at his left. When the deacon begins to ſing the leſſon call'd the præconium, which begins exultet, &c. the officiating prieſt and his miniſters uncover themſelves, and in the † midſt of the chaunting, he puts the five grains of incenſe in the form of a croſs, into the taper, and afterwards at certain words ‡ adapted to the myſteries of the ceremony, lights the paſchal taper; and whilſt he is chaunting, an acolyth lights all the reſt of the candles with the new fire.

This ceremony being ended, the  deacon returns back to the ſacriſty, where he puts off his white ornaments, and reſumes the purple ſtola, and the maniple of the ſame colour. After the bleſſing of the tapers follows the leſſons call'd prophecies, the verſe ſung by the choriſters call'd in latin Tractus, and the ſinging of the prayers.

The three candles fix'd at the extremity of the reed, and which are lighted one after the other, denote, as we are told, the progreſs of the goſpel in the three great diviſions of our hemiſphere; but a fourth ſhould have been added ſince the diſcovery of America. We have already obſerv'd, that the three candles are likewiſe an emblem of the trinity; it were endleſs to take notice of the whimſical notion of ſome enthuſiaſts. As for the paſchal taper, we are aſſur'd that it is a type of our Saviour's humanity, and the new fire that of the new doctrine of the goſpel.

We are told that the bleſſing of the paſchal candle is of great antiquity in the church, and that pope Zozimus in the beginning of the fifth century, commanded that one ſhould be lighted in every pariſh.

†† The paſchal taper muſt remain on the goſpel ſide from eaſter-eve to aſcenſion-day. The rituals inform us at what hour it is to be lighted on eaſter-eve, eaſter, and the following days, &c.

The Bleſſing of the Baptiſmal FONTS, and the Baptiſm of the CATECHUMENS.

The officiating prieſt and his miniſters go in proceſſion to the font; the croſs and taper-bearers go on the other ſide it, and the miniſter who officiates puts himſelf over againſt them, in ſuch a manner, that the font ſtands between him and the croſs. The other eccleſiaſticks range themſelves on each ſide, an acolyth ſtands at a little diſtance behind the officiating prieſt at his right hand, holding a napkin to wipe his hands, and the thuriferary ſtands next in order to him.

The

* Cerem. epiſc. lib. 2. † At theſe words, Curvat imperia. ‡ Rutilans ignis accendit, &c.
 Baudry Manual. &c. †† Piſcara Praxis cerem.

* The miniſter who officiates uncovers himſelf, and falls proſtrate on his knees with his miniſters, the croſs and taper-bearer excepted. After having chaunted in a manner ſuitable to the ſolemnity, he riſes up, and turning towards the font, pronounces the bleſſing, making the ſign of the croſs towards the font. He afterwards exorciſes the water; makes a croſs in it with his hand; pours ſome out of the veſſel towards the four cardinal points of the horizon, which done, he wipes his hand with the napkin given him by the acolyth, and repeats a prayer, at the concluſion of which he blows thrice on the water, and in three different places, always obſerving to do it croſs-ways; he alſo ‡ plunges a taper thrice into the ſame water, obſerving to ſink it deeper the ſecond time than the firſt, and the third more than the ſecond, ſaying at each immerſion the following words, deſcendat in hanc plenitudinem fontis virtus ſpiritus ſancti, i. e. may the ſpirit of the Holy Ghoſt deſcend into this water. † The aſſiſtants, in caſe the officiating prieſt has any, ſprinkle the people with a little of this water, and they alſo ſend a prieſt or a ſacriſtan to ſprinkle the houſes therewith.

After this ceremony the officiating miniſter ſprinkles the font thrice with frankincenſe; after which he takes the oil of the catechumens, and pours it on the water croſs-wiſe, and does the ſame with the chriſma. He afterwards mixes them both upon the water, pouring them in equal proportions, and ſtill croſs-wiſe; after which he mixes them with his right hand, in order that they may be diffus'd equally over every part of the font.

The font being bleſſed in the manner above deſcrib'd (†), the officiating prieſt goes and receives the catechumens at the church-gate, and clothes himſelf in white, to perform the ceremony of their baptiſm, which ſhall be deſcribed in its proper place.

We mentioned the bleſſing of houſes, but there is nothing particular in that ceremony. The perſon who officiates on this occaſion muſt be clothed in a white ſtole; and the holy water with which he ſprinkles them muſt be ſet apart, before the oils are pour'd upon it. Upon his entring into the houſe he ſalutes it.

After the ceremony of bleſſing the fonts is ended, the litanies are ſung; a ſolemn maſs and veſpers are ſaid. Whilſt the litanies are chaunting, the hoſt, which till now was hid, is taken out, and being ſet on the altar, all the tapers are lighted: after this the altar is covered with its ſeveral ornaments, the images are unveil'd, and the ſeat of the officiating prieſt is cover'd, who, together with his prieſts, reſume their white ornaments, and prepare themſelves for the celebration of a ſolemn maſs. Upon the officiating miniſter's beginning the Gloria in excelſis, the bells fall a ringing again (‡); for which purpoſe a ſignal is given from the cathedral.

47. Eaſter-ſunday; ſtation at S. Maria Maggiore's, and our lady's of the angels: the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the office in St. Peter's, where he himſelf ſings maſs; after which the holy face, the lance, and the true croſs are ſhewn to the people: Afterwards his holineſs is carried into the gallery, whence he bleſſes the people. At St. John's of Lateran, S. Maria Maggiore's, and St. Praxades's, the relicks are ſhewn both before and after veſpers.

Ceremonies obſerved at EASTER.

Mattins muſt be ſaid on eaſter-ſunday before day-break, becauſe our bleſſed Saviour roſe at that time. We might likewiſe take notice of ſeveral peculiar differences in the leſſons, and the chaunting; but as they concern only the prieſts, ſuch may look for

* Piſcara Praxis Cerem. Baudry. ‡ Piſcara. † Piſcara, ubi ſup. Alet's ritual.
(†) Baudry, ubi ſup. (‡) Baudry, Piſcara.

for them in the rituals. * When the pope himſelf officiates, certain ceremonies are performed, which deſerve our notice. Before the preface, the two youngeſt cardinal deacons (not thoſe who aſſiſt his holineſs) place themſelves to the right and left of the altar, both of them being turn'd towards the people. Theſe two deacons, dreſs'd in white ornaments, repreſent the two angels who watch'd our Lord's ſepulchre in white raiment; and they ſtand in this poſture at the altar till the † Agnus. After that the deacon and ſub-deacon have received the communion from the pope's hands, the deacon of the goſpel goes up to his holineſs, who has his head bare in honour of the holy ſacrament that lies upon the altar, and repeats, according to the uſual form, the confiteor in theſe words: ‡ "I confeſs my ſelf to God Almighty, "to the bleſſed Virgin, to St. Michael the archangel, to St. John baptiſt, to "St. Peter, to St. Paul, to all the ſaints, and to you, my father, becauſe of the "great multitude of my ſins; I have offended in thought, in word, and in action; "I ſay my fault, my own fault, my very great fault: I therefore beſeech thee, bleſſed "Mary, &c. and thou, my father, to pray for me." After confeſſion the deacon returns to the altar; his holineſs pronounces abſolution, and makes the ſign of the croſs over the people, but without ſaying any thing. Next follows the communion, when his holineſs adminiſters it to the congregation: two auditors, hold a (‡) kind of ſilk napkin on his holineſs's knees, and a cardinal biſhop aſſiſtant ſtands at his right with the paten in his hand. In the Romiſh Ceremonial we have a complete deſcription of the paſchal ceremonies obſerved in the pope's chapel.

Here follows the order obſerved by the Ceremonial, when an emperor or a king is to receive the ſacrament from the pope's hands: firſt, his holineſs gives himſelf the communion, and afterwards adminiſters it to his deacon and ſub-deacon; the former, after having repeated the confeſſion, takes a wafer from the altar, with which the monarch is to communicate, lays it on the paten, and gives it, after the uſual ceremonies are perform'd, to the ſub-deacon, who carries it to his holineſs: then the firſt cardinal biſhop leads the monarch to the feet of the pope, who kiſſes him; after which the deacon conducts the monarch back to his ſeat.

On eaſter-ſunday the faithful muſt have all their food bleſs'd: we have already made ſome mention of this cuſtom. (*) The anniverſaries for the deceaſed muſt be poſtpon'd till after the octave of eaſter.

48. Monday; ſtation at St. Peter's, where the relicks are ſhewn after veſpers: the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the office in the apoſtolical chapel, where a cardinal-prieſt ſings maſs.

49. Tueſday, ſtation at St. Paul's, where the relicks are ſhewn on the papal altar: the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the office in the apoſtolical chapel, where a cardinal prieſt ſings maſs.

50. Wedneſday, ſtation at St. Laurence's without the walls.

51. Thurſday, ſtation at the holy apoſtles.

52. Friday, ſtation at the Rotunda and the Minerva.

53. Saturday, ſtation at St. John's of Lateran: the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly in the apoſtolical palace, where a cardinal prieſt ſings maſs.

* Sacra Cerem. Eccl. Rom. lib. ii.

† We are told that pope Sergius I. inſtituted this prayer at the end of the ſeventh century: vid. Bona l. ii. c. 16. § 5. Rer. Liturg.

‡ Confiteor Deo omnipotenti, beatæ Mariæ ſemper virgini, beato Michaeli archangelo, beato Johanni baptiſtæ, ſanctis apoſtolis Petro & Paulo, ac omnibus ſanctis, & tibi pater; mea culpa, mea culpa, mea maxima culpa: Ideo precor beatam Mariam, &c. & te pater orare pro me, &c.

(‡) Mappulam bombycinam duo auditores hinc & inde apud papam genuflexi tenent, &c.

(*) Piſcara Praxis Cerem.

54. Sunday, in Albis, or of the octave of eaſter: ſtation at St. Pancras's, and at S. Mary's in Traſtevera, where the relicks are expoſed; at St. Laurence's in Lucina; St. Vincent's, and St. Anaſtaſius's at the fountain of Trevi: feſtival for the anniverſary of the inſtitution of the congregation of clerks, regular minors.

The ſaturday and ſunday after eaſter are called Sabbatum & Dominica in Albis, becauſe that the catechumens who are baptiz'd, aſſiſt at the devotions on thoſe days, clothed in white garments.

In the month of A P R I L.

1. St. Venantius, biſhop and martyr; at his church of the Lateran, where his body is depoſited.

2. S. Maria the Egyptian, has a church dedicated to her of the Armenian nation, where ſervice is perform'd in that tongue.

3. St. Francis of Paul, founder of the Minims; in the churches of his order.

4. S. Agapita and Chionia, virgins and martyrs; at S. Anaſtaſia's, where their bodies are depoſited.

5. St. Vincent Ferrerius the Jacobin; feſtival at the Minerva, and other churches of St. Dominic.

6. St. Sixtus, biſhop and martyr; at St. Peter's.

7. St. Albinus the benedictine, in the churches of the order.

8. Tranſlation of S. Monica at St. Auſtin's.

9. Dedication of the church of St. Peter and St. Marcellinus.

10. St. Leo the great: feſtival at St. Peter's, where his body lies; at St. John's of Lateran, and S. Maria Maggiore's, where his relicks are depoſited.

11. Dedication of the church de Ara Cœli.

12. St. Julius pope; feaſt at S. Maria's in Traſtevera, where his body is depoſited.

13. St. Juſtin, prieſt and martyr; feaſt at St. Praxades's, where his relicks are found.

14. † St. Tiburtius, Valerius and Maximus, martyrs; at St. Cecilia's, where their bodies are depoſited, and at St. Peter's: feſtival for St. Abundus, dean of this great church.

15. S. Baſiliſſa, the martyr; at St. Paul's, where her body is interred.

16. S. Valentine and Martin, at St. Praxades's, where her relicks are lodg'd; at St. Marcellus's for holy Joachim the Servite: at St. John's of Lateran, tranſlation of the heads of St. Peter and St. Paul, which are ſhewn to the people.

17. St. Aniceetus, pope and martyr, at St. Sebaſtian's, where his relicks are depoſited; and at the chapel of the palace of the dukes of Altaemps, wherein, by a grant from pope Clement VII. his body is interred.

18. St. Bartholomew the monk of Vall-ombroſa, at St. Praxades's; and at St. John's Della Pigna for St. Eleutherius.

19. St.

† An angel brought two crowns from paradiſe, compos'd of roſes and lilies, and gave one to Valerian, and the other to Cecilia, his new-married wife; the angel added, becauſe Valerian thou haſt conſented to the counſel of chaſtity, (he having been perſuaded by Cecilia not to violate her virginity) Chriſt has ſent me to tell thee, that he will grant thee any petition thou ſhalt aſk of him. Valerian at theſe words fell down and worſhipped, and begg'd that his brother Tiburtius might become a chriſtian. Tiburtius afterwards coming into the houſe, ſmelt the fragrancy of the roſes and lilies, but ſaw nothing: but as he was wondring whence it came, Valerian told him of their two crowns, which his eyes were not yet able to ſee; but aſſur'd him, that in caſe he would turn chriſtian, he ſhould ſee them both, and the angel of God alſo. At theſe words he conſented to be baptiz'd, and thereupon obtain'd all he had deſir'd of God, and the ſight of the angels daily.

19. St. Leo IX. pope, of the order of St. Benedict; in the churches of the Religion, and at St. Peter's, where his body is interred.

20. The bleſſed Agnes of Monte Pulciano; at the Minerva, and the churches of the order.

21. St. Anſelm, biſhop and confeſſor, of the order of St. Benedict; a feſtival thro'out the whole order.

22. St. Soterus and Cajus, popes and martyrs; at St. Sebaſtian's, and S. Suſanna's.

23. * St. George the martyr, at his church, where the magiſtrates of the people of Rome attend, in order to have their ſtandards bleſs'd. The ceremony of bleſſing the ſtandards on St. George's day was perform'd about the ſame time by the antient Romans, in honour of Mars, when for ſeven days together the Roman eagles were conſecrated.

24. St. Melitus, biſhop and confeſſor, of the order of St. Bennet; feſtival thro'out the whole order.

25. St. Mark, feſtival in his church; where the whole clergy both regular and ſecular aſſemble together, and go in proceſſion in a body to St. Peter's †, the chapter of the ſaid church excepted, who go thither before.

On St. Mark's day the great litanies are ſung in a ſolemn manner; they are called great litanies becauſe they were inſtituted by St. Gregory the great, and to diſtinguiſh them from the leſſer ones, which were firſt eſtabliſhed by St. Mamertus, biſhop of Vienna. The great litanies owe their inſtitution to the great floods, and the inguinary peſtilence, which laid Rome waſte, under the pontificate of that prelate. The church cauſes them to be ſung at this time, in order to implore the bleſſing of God, and the preſervation of ſuch fruits of the earth as begin to ſpring up at that time. 'Tis thought that litanies are of greater antiquity in the eaſt. Theſe litanies were called ‡ Septiformes, becauſe pope Gregory divided the proceſſion which ſung them into ſeven choirs. The firſt choir was that of the clergy; the ſecond of the abbots and monks under them; the third of the abbeſſes and their nuns; the fourth of children; the fifth of the laity; the ſixth of widows; the ſeventh of married women. The particulars relating to theſe litanies, and the ſenſe in which they are underſtood, may be ſeen in the (*) rituals.

Here follows in general the order which is obſerved in the proceſſions of St. Mark, and of the Rogations, of which mention will immediately be made. The clergy and the congregation being aſſembled in the church in the morning, the officiating prieſt, clothed in ornaments ſuitable to the occaſion, the purple ſtola, and the chaſuble of the ſame colour, goes up to the altar with the deacon and the ſub-deacon, clothed in purple-habits of their reſpective orders, but without their maniples. Being come to the altar, the miniſter who officiates, all the clergy that compoſe the choir, and the congregation, fall proſtrate on their knees, and addreſs themſelves to heaven in prayer; which being done, the ſub-deacon fetches the croſs, ſets himſelf at the entrance

* This celebrated patron of our country, was, according to ſome, an imaginary ſaint; to others an Arian heretick. We need not take notice of the famous ſtory of his killing the dragon, and delivering the king's daughter, it being ſo trite, that there is hardly a child but has heard of it.

† We find the order and march of the proceſſion of the clergy in Aymon's Picture of the court of Rome, p. 446. edit. of 1707.

‡ Septiformis, Vid. this inſtitution in the hiſtory of Paul the deacon, book iii.

(*) To give thoſe who are unacquainted with litanies, a general idea of them, we need only obſerve, that God, and all the ſaints are invok'd in them, for the peace and proſperity of the church, for the clergy, for the people, for kings and princes; for the fruits of the earth, for the bleſſed ſouls departed, &c.

entrance of the chancel of the altar, and continues there till the proceſſion ſets out, which is alſo obſerv'd in all proceſſions. In the mean time one or two choriſters begin the anthem exurge, &c. which being ended, they all fall down upon their knees, the croſs-bearer excepted, who, as has been already obſerv'd, never kneels on theſe occaſions. Afterwards two choriſters, or the officiating prieſt alone, go forward towards the high altar, and begin the litanies of the ſaints upon their knees, and are anſwer'd by the choir. At the ſinging of the ſanĉta Maria ora pro nobis, all the congregation riſe up, and walk in proceſſion, follow'd by the people, who make their reſponſes to the litanies: and as the proceſſions on this occaſion take a larger tour than ordinary, ſtations muſt be made at ſome † croſs, ſome oratory or church; after the ſinging of the litanies, prayers are offer'd up.

St. Mamertus biſhop of Vienna, upon his dioceſe's being troubled with earthquakes and other calamities, inſtituted the ‡ rogations about the middle of the fifth century, and appointed them to be of three days continuance.

The church ordains proceſſions for obtaining of rain, fine weather, during a ſeaſon of mortality, war and famine, &c. Prayers of thanks are alſo offer'd up. There is nothing particular in all theſe proceſſions, except that at the above-mention'd the officiating prieſt and his miniſters are cloath'd in white. In the proceſſions which are made to divert a ſtorm, the pariſh-prieſt cauſes all the bells to be ſet a ringing, and throws the holy water upwards.

26. St. Cletus and St. Marcellinus, popes and martyrs; feſtival at S. Maria Maggiore's, where the head of the latter is depoſited; and at St. Peter's, where the body of St. Cletus is interr'd; at our Lady of the Mountains, for his firſt miracle wrought; and at St. Margaret's on the other ſide the Tyber, for the conſecration thereof.

27. Pope St. Anaſtaſius, at S. Bibiana's where his body lies; at St. Martin's of the Mountain where his relicks are depoſited, and at St. Coſmus's *.

28. St. Vitalis the martyr, feſtival at his church:

29. St. Peter the martyr, feaſt at the church of Minerva, where the cardinals of the inquiſition aſſiſt at the office with great ſolemnity; feaſt at our Lady's of the Peace, and at St. Marcellus's for the bleſſed Pelerinus the ſervite.

30. St. Catherine of Sienna; feaſt at the church of Minerva, and throughout the whole order of St. Dominic, and in the churches of that ſaint; at St. Sylveſter's in campo Marzo, for S. Sophia the virgin and martyr.

MAY.

† When the ſtation is at ſome croſs, the following anthem is ſung, crucem ſanctum ſubiit; but if the ſtation is at a chapel or church, the prayer or anthem of the patron muſt be chaunted.

‡ We have reaſon to believe that the proceſſion of the great litanies and of the rogations, ought to be conſider'd as ſo many pagan ceremonies, which ſome pious prelates have thought worthy of being conſecrated to God. The Romans uſed to celebrate on the 25th of April a feſtival call'd Robigalia, to deprecate the mildew from the corn, which is often very fatal to it in that ſeaſon. This feſtival was inſtituted by Numa king of Rome, in honour of the god Robigus, or the goddeſs Robiga, at which time prayers and ſacrifices were offer'd up to her; they uſed alſo to go in proceſſion round the fields, in order to draw down a bleſſing upon the fruits of the earth, as is ſtill the cuſtom in Romiſh countries: the Romans call'd theſe proceſſions Ambervalia.

* St. Coſmus and St. Damian were brothers, and both phyſicians. The following miracles are ſaid to have happen'd at their death: being chain'd together and thrown into the Sea, an angel looſed their bonds and deliver'd them. After this, they were thrown into a great fire, but upon their prayers the fire had no power to hurt them. They were then hang'd on a croſs, and commanded to be ſtoned; but the ſtones rebounded back on thoſe who threw them; and the ſame happen'd when arrows were afterwards ſhot at them.

* MAY.

On all ſundays in May, indulgence at St. Sebaſtian's, at the Annunciada without the walls, and at St. Laurence's in Fonte.

1. † St. Philip and St. James the apoſtles, feaſts in their churches, where their relicks are depoſited; as alſo at St. Peter's and S. Maria Maggiore's, where alſo are ſome of their relicks.

2. St. Athanaſius biſhop and confeſſor, feaſt at the church of the Greeks, who have the ſervice there in their own tongue; at that of Minerva for St. Antoninus archbiſhop of Florence.

3. Invention, or finding of the holy croſs, feſtival in the church dedicated to it; at St. Croſs's in Jeruſalem the relicks are exhibited; at St. Alexis's, feſtival of the holy martyrs Alexander, Evantin and Theodulin.

The firſt ſunday in May, feaſt at S. Catherine's à monte magna poli; at the church Minerva for S. Catherine of Sienna; and at S. Anaſtaſia's, for the bleſſed Torribio archbiſhop of Lima.

4. St. Monica the widow, at St. Auguſtin's where her body is interr'd; at the church of the Piemonteze, feſtival of the holy ſhroud of our bleſſed Saviour.

5. St. Auſtin's converſion, feſtival throughout the whole order. St. Angelus the Carmelite, feſtival throughout the whole order. At the church of Minerva and that of S. Maria Maggiore's, feſtival of the bleſſed Pius V. where his body is interr'd, and where alſo the cardinals aſſiſt ſolemnly at the ſervice.

6. St. John before the Latin-gate, feſtival in the ſame place, where the chapter of St. John of Lateran meet and celebrate the office.

7. St. Staniſlaus biſhop and martyr, feſtival at the church of the Poles; at the Chieſa nova, for S. Ilaria the martyr; and at St. Laurence's without the walls, for the tranſlation of the body of St. Stephen the firſt martyr.

8. Apparition of St. Michael the archangel in his churches, at S. Maria Maggiore's, and at St. John's of Lateran.

The legend writers inform us that St. Michael the archangel has reveal'd himſelf ſeveral times; the moſt famous of his apparitions is that the feſtival whereof is ſolemniz'd on the eighth of May; it was ſeen about the end of the fifth century upon Mount Gargan, ſince call'd Mount St. Angelo, in the kingdom of Naples.

* The antient heathens never uſed to marry during this month becauſe of the Lemuria, which conſiſted of ſacrifices and other acts of devotion, by which they pretended to keep ſpirits or apparitions from hurting them; they imagin'd that all the women who were married at that ſeaſon were good for nought:

Menſe malas Maio nubere vulgus ait. Ovid.

The chriſtians ſeem to have borrow'd this notion from the heathens, for the vulgar among us think that 'tis not good to marry in that month.

† On the firſt of May it is cuſtomary to ſtick boughs of May before the houſes of perſons of diſtinction, or thoſe for whom one has a particular eſteem. This cuſtom is ſtill obſerv'd in ſeveral parts of Europe, particularly in Germany and Italy. It owes its original to the antient feſtivals of Flora which were ſolemniz'd at the ſame time, when the youth among the Romans uſed to go into the woods, where they cut down a numberleſs multitude of branches, with which they adorn'd or repair'd the houſes; which cuſtom is ſtill obſerv'd by the youth in Italy. In Lagni, a city in the iſland of France, the image of the Roman Floralia is exactly preſerved. "Early in the morning "on Whitſon-day, the common people, inſtead of going to church, flock into the woods to cut down "branches of trees, and in the afternoon they perform a great number of bodily exerciſes in a "very burleſque manner, as in the Floralia of the antient Romans; as for inſtance, ſome peaſants "run in their ſhirts for a wager." Vide Paſquier in his Recherches, lib. viii.

9. St. Gregory Nazianzen the biſhop, at St. Peter's where his body is depoſited, and in the monaſtery of the nuns in campo Marzo.

10. St. Gordian and St. Epimachus martyrs, at St. Laurence's in Lucina; at S. Mary's in Traſtevera, for St. Calepodus.

11. St. Majoli abbot of Cluni, feſtival throughout the whole order of St. Benedict; at Jeſus's church, for St. Bon the martyr.

12. St. Nereus and St. Achilleus, feſtival in their church; St. Pancratius the martyr, feſtival in his church.

13. Dedication of S. Maria Rotunda.

14. St. Boniface the martyr, feſtival at St. Alexis where his body is depoſited.

15. St. Iſidorus, feſtival at his church; at St. Martin's of the Mountains, for S. Quirina virgin and martyr.

16. St. Ubaldus the biſhop, at our Lady's of the Peace. St. Pelerinus, feſtival in his church.

17. Tranſlation of St. Bernardin's body, feſtival in the church of Ara Cœli.

18. St. Venantius the martyr, feaſt in his church and that of St. Peter's, where ſome of his relicks are depoſited. The bleſſed Felix de Cantalice a Capuchin friar, feſtival at the Capuchins.

19. S. Pudentiana the virgin, feſtival in her church. St. Ives advocate for the poor, feaſt in his church; at the church of la Sapienza the cardinals aſſiſt ſolemnly at the office, where the clerks of the chamber, and the conſiſtorial advocates aſſemble. St. Peter the celeſtine, feſtival at St. Euſebius's, and our Lady's of Loretto.

20. St. Bernardin of Sienna the Franciſcan friar, feſtival throughout the whole order of St. Francis.

21. Feſtival at St. Croſs's in Jeruſalem, for the tranſlation of the relicks.

22. St. Romanus the Benedictine abbot, feſtival in the churches of the order. At St. Auſtin's, feſtival for the bleſſed Rete dela Caſcia, and in his own church under the capitol.

23. St. Angelus of the order of Val-ombroſa, feſtival at St. Praxeda's, and in the Chieſa nova for the dedication.

24. Tranſlation of St. Dominic's body, feſtival throughout the whole order.

25. Pope St. Urban the martyr, feſtivals in his churches, and St. Cecilia's where his body is interr'd; at St. Peter's for St. Boniface, where his body is depoſited. Tranſlation of the body of St. Francis, feſtival throughout the whole order. S. Mary Magdalen of Pazis, feſtivals in all the churches of the Parmeſans, and at St. John's of the Florentines.

26. Pope St. Eleutherius the martyr, feſtival at St. Peter's, where his body is interr'd. St. Philip Neri, feſtival in Chieſa nova, where his body lies, and where the cardinals aſſiſt ſolemnly at the office.

27. Pope St. John the martyr, feſtival at St. Peter's where his body is depoſited.

28. St. Germanus biſhop and confeſſor, of the order of St. Benedict, feſtival in the churches of his order.

29. St. Cononi abbot of Lerma, throughout the whole order of St. Bennet.

30. Pope St. Felix, feſtival at St. Prancras, where his body is depoſited; at St. Peter's for St. Gabinus the martyr, where his body is interr'd; at St. Bartholomew's in the Iſland, for St. Exuperantius pope and martyr: his body is interr'd here.

31. S. Petronilla the virgin, at St. Peter's where her body lies.

The

The STATIONS of the Moveable FEASTS after Eaſter.

Monday in rogation-week, ſtation at S. Maria Maggiore's; the clergy aſſemble at St. Adrian's, and go thither in proceſſion.

Tueſday, ſtation at St. John's of Lateran and S. Maria Novella's, from whence the clergy go in proceſſion.

Wedneſday, ſtation at St. Peter's, the clergy aſſemble at St. Laurence's in Damaſo, and go thither in proceſſion. On this day at veſpers, the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the office in the apoſtolical palace.

Thurſday, feſtival of the aſcenſion, ſtation at St. Peter's; the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the ſervice; a cardinal biſhop ſings maſs, and a ſecular prieſt preaches the ſermon, after which the pope bleſſes the people.

The ceremonies on the Feſtival of the ASCENSION.

On Aſcenſion-day, after the goſpel, the paſchal taper is * put out, to denote that on that day our Saviour left the earth, and returned up into heaven. † The altar is adorn'd with flowers, images and relicks, upon which occaſion the officiating prieſt and his miniſters are dreſs'd in their white ornaments.

The bleſſing which his holineſs pronounces that day is one of the three ſolemn ones. Antiently, it was cuſtomary for his holineſs, before he pronounced them, to ‡ excommunicate hereticks and infidels in a ſolemn manner, but that is now confin'd to holy thurſday only, as was before obſerv'd. The bleſſing concludes with the plenary indulgences.

On the ſunday of the octave of the Aſcenſion, feſtival of the bleſſed Francis Patricci of the order of the Servites at St. Marcellus's.

Whitſon-eve, ſtation at St. John's of Lateran; at veſpers the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the office in the apoſtolical chapel.

Ceremonies obſerved at WHITSON-TIDE.

Whitſon-eve the altar is cover'd with purple till ſuch time as maſs is celebrated, and at maſs the altar is cover'd with red, and the officiating prieſt is in veſtments of the ſame colour. The bleſſing of the baptiſmal fonts is perform'd after the ſame manner as on Eaſter-eve, and on Whitſon-day the miniſter who officiates is dreſs'd in ſcarlet ornaments; this being an emblem of the Holy Ghoſt, who deſcended on the apoſtles on Whitſon-day in the ſhape of cloven tongues.

On || Whitſon-day a proceſſion is made at Caen, in which the ſeveral bodies or companies of tradeſmen bear a part; a taper is carried in it, the expence of which is paid by the Apprentices of the ſeveral companies, and on this taper are fix'd all the little pieces of money which have been given by way of earneſt, for the binding of bargains, during the courſe of the whole year. We are told that in order to put a ſtop to the abuſes which were committed in the levying or diſtribution of theſe earneſt-pieces, it was antiently enjoin'd, that every company of tradeſmen ſhould elect a provoſt, who ſhould receive the ſeveral earneſt-pennys, that might be given on all the bargains made in their trading; and that on Whitſon-day they ſhould be carried in proceſſion as above-mention'd.

Whitſon-

* Piſcara, Baudry. † Piſcara Praxis Cerem. ‡ Lunadoro Relatione della corte di Roma. || Origines de Caen, by Mr. Huet.

Whitſon-day, ſtation at St. Peter's, at S. Mary of the angels: the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the office in the apoſtolick palace; maſs is ſung by a cardinal biſhop, and an eccleſiaſtick of the Romiſh ſeminary preaches the ſermon: feſtival in the ſeveral churches of the Holy Ghoſt; and at St. Bartholomew's of the Bergamaſchi.

Monday, ſtation at St. Peter's in Vinculis.

Tueſday, at S. Anaſtaſia's; feſtival at the chapel of Mount Piety.

Wedneſday in ember week, ſtation at S. Maria Maggiore's.

Thurſday, at St. Laurence's without the walls.

Friday, at the holy Apoſtles.

Saturday, at St. Peter's; at veſpers the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the office in the apoſtolical palace.

* Trinity-ſunday, in the churches dedicated to the trinity; the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the office in the apoſtolical chapel, a cardinal prieſt ſings maſs, and a ſecular prieſt preaches the ſermon. Wedneſday at veſpers, the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly as aforeſaid.

Corpus Chriſti day, ſtation at St. Peter's, the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the office at the apoſtolick palace.

This feaſt was inſtituted by pope Urban IV. in 1263, upon occaſion of a viſion which was reveal'd to a nun of the city of Liege. Thomas of Aquin, by order of the above-mention'd pope, drew up the office of the bleſſed ſacrament, in the manner it is now uſed in the church. About an † hundred years after, the inhabitants of Pavia began to carry the hoſt in proceſſion under a canopy on corpus Chriſti day.

After maſs the proceſſion of the hoſt carried by the pope, is made round the portico's of St. Peter's, where are aſſembled, the clergy both ſecular and regular, the aſſiſtant biſhops, and cardinals in their copes, with their mitres on their heads, and in general, all the prelates, embaſſadors, and noblemen of the court of Rome.

PROCESSION of the bleſſed SACRAMENT.

The proceſſion of the hoſt, when his holineſs himſelf aſſiſts at it, claims a particular deſcription; and as that which ‡ Aymon has given us, is very circumſtantial, we ſhall give it our readers entire.

" The cardinals go into the palace of the Vatican, where they clothe themſelves in " their red copes; whence they go and receive the pope at the apartment of the " bed where the ornaments are laid, and accompany him to the chapel of pope " Sixtus, where a private maſs is uſually ſaid to conſecrate the hoſt that is to be " carried in proceſſion.

" After maſs the proceſſion begins to wheel off; each body of religious ſings the li- " tanies, but the chapters have each their ſeveral choirs of muſick, and that of " St. Peter's of the Vatican marches the laſt but one, between that of S. Maria " Maggiore's and St. John's of Lateran.

" After that the ſeveral fraternities of ſeculars, the different orders of Monks, " and the canons of the collegiate churches are paſs'd by, all the officers of the " chancery come thither according to the order of their governor, upon pain of " forfeiting two months ſalary, unleſs lawful cauſe be ſhewn for their abſence. The " number of theſe officers, who each walks with a torch in his hand, amounts " to a thouſand at leaſt, and ſometimes to twelve hundred," as may be ſeen by the liſt which Aymon has given of them in chap. xviii. part iii. of his work.

" The

* We are aſſur'd that Alcuinus who was cotemporary with Charlemagne, drew up the office for trinity-ſunday.

† Caſalius de Chriſti ritibus & alii.

‡ Picture of the Court of Rome, p. 452. & ſeq. edition of 1707.

" The pope's houſhold and the prelates walk next, viz. the ſquires of the reigning " pontiff; the procurators-general of the ſeveral religious orders, the chamberlains " without the walls, the fiſcal of the apoſtolick chamber, the conſiſtorial advocates, " the ſecretaries of ſtate and of the cloſet, the private cubicularii and chamberlains, " the conſervator of Rome, the various bands of his holineſs's muſick, the abbrevi- " ators of the great and little Parquet, the acolyths, and the clerks of the chamber, " the auditors of the Rota, the apoſtolical ſub-deacons, and the croſs-bearer.

" Afterwards the twelve penitentiaries of St. Peter come two and two, dreſs'd in " their chaſubles, and preceded by two clerks with their ſtaves gilt with ſilver, which " is the badge of their office; theſe, before they go away, pay obeyſance to his ho- " lineſs ſitting on his throne, by kiſſing his foot.

" The biſhops, archbiſhops, and conſecrated patriarchs appear afterwards, cloth'd " in their copes, with white mitres on their heads; and theſe, before their ſetting " out, pay obeyſance to the pope by kiſſing his knee.

" The cardinals walk next two and two, according to their ranks, having firſt paid " obeyſance to the pope by kiſſing his hand, and have each of them their train or " attendants walking before them: the cup-bearer of each reſpective cardinal carries " before his maſter a thick flambeau lighted, made of white wax; and behind him, " on one ſide of the train-bearer, is his maſter of his chamber, who carries a hat " of peacock's feathers, cover'd with red taffety, which he holds over the head of " the cardinal his maſter, like an umbrella, to ſhade him from the ſun-beams; which " however is altogether unneceſſary, ſince all the ſtreets thro' which the proceſſion " paſſes, are cover'd either with linen cloth, or tapeſtry, thro' which it is impoſſible " for the ſun to dart its rays.

" The next that comes is the captain of the Swiſs guards, follow'd by his men " bearing halberds, and drawn up in two lines, thro' which there paſſes the captain " of the pope's guards, the princes of the throne, his holineſs's nephews, and the " embaſſadors of crown'd heads, who according to the regulation for the ceremoni- " al, made by pope Julius II. march in the following order. Firſt the embaſſador " of the emperor, and that of the king of the Romans, who is ſeldom there, ſince " the time that this kingdom has been in ſome meaſure united to the empire of " Germany, by the election which is generally made of the eldeſt ſon of the houſe of " Auſtria, who by this means is made vice-gerent of the empire, and conſequently " preſumptive ſucceſſor to it. Immediately after comes the embaſſador of France, " and afterwards thoſe of Spain, of Portugal, of England, when that kingdom is " govern'd by a prince of the Romiſh communion; thoſe of Sicily, Hungary, Cyprus " and Bohemia next, when thoſe nations have a monarch of their own as formerly; " laſtly the embaſſadors of Poland and Denmark.

" After theſe ſeveral embaſſadors, the pope himſelf advances forward, carried in a " vehicle in which he ſeems to be on his knees, tho he is really ſeated. He has " on a rich cope, and over it a pall made of cloth of ſilver, which covers his ſhoul- " ders and arms like a ſcarf. Before him is ſet a wooden ſtool gilt, with a cuſhion " of red crimſon velvet, embroider'd and enrich'd with gold lace *, on which is laid " the pyx wherein the hoſt is contain'd, which he bears with his own hands.

" The canopy over the pope's head, is carried by the patriarchs, archbiſhops, and " biſhops at their firſt ſetting out from St. Peter's; and afterwards, at their ſetting out " from the portico of the Vatican, by the prime nobility of the nations, ſuch as the " Florentines and the Sienneze, who relieve one another till the proceſſion is almoſt " ended, when the Roman conſervators, and the prior of the captains of the ſeveral " diſtricts, take it and carry it into church.

* Like that of Bruſſels or Mechlin.

" The Swiſs who go on each ſide the pope are caſed in iron from head to foot,
" with each man a great two-handed ſword unſheath'd in his hand. After this guard " of cuiraſſiers, the prelates advance, in their ſeveral ranks, viz. the apoſtolical
" prothonotaries, the auditors, the clerks of the chamber, the generals of the or" ders, the referendaries or officers in chancery of the ſignature of grants, and of " juſtice; and laſtly the ſeveral companies of light-horſe four in a rank, the horſes
" cover'd with very rich trappings; and theſe cloſe the march.

" Sometimes his holineſs walks on foot in this proceſſion, in order to ſet an ex" ample of greater reſpect and veneration for the holy ſacrament, which he carries
" in his hand. Urban VIII. and ſome other popes formerly carried it on horſeback,
" an ambling nag being made uſe of for that purpoſe.

" When the conſecrated hoſt is not carried by his holineſs, the dean of the ſacred
" college, or the eldeſt cardinal, bears it inſtead of him, but is on foot: and on theſe
" occaſions the princes and embaſſadors do not aſſiſt at it.

" The proceſſion generally laſts about four hours, tho it has not above a mile to " go; but then they walk with the utmoſt gravity, and extremely ſlow. It paſſes
" under the portico's which Alexander VII. built round the ſquare before St. Peter's;
" marches down the ſtreet which goes to St. Angelo's-bridge, call'd St. James Shake-
" horſe's-ſquare, and returns to St. Peter's by the old town, after having croſs'd the " other portico, and the gallery which joins it to the church, into which they enter
" in the ſame order that had been obſerv'd at the going out of it.

" His holineſs being come to this place lays down the pyx, in which the conſecrated
" hoſt is put, on the high altar of St. Peter's church, and whilſt incenſings are " performing, and the hymn pange lingua glorioſi corporis myſterium, &c. with the " prayer Deus qui nobis ſub ſacramento mirabili paſſionis tuæ memoriam reliquiſti, &c. by " which they beſeech of God, that he would pleaſe to make all the congregation preſent,
" taſte efficaciouſly the fruits of our Saviour's reſurrection, of whoſe paſſion this ſacrament
" is a commemoration; during this, I ſay, the cardinals take off their mitres and or" naments and put on their red copes, when they accompany the pope to the chamber " of the bed, where he is carried in his pontifical veſtments, which he lays down here,
" as alſo his triple crown, and puts on his ordinary habit, which being done he with" draws into his apartment.

" Thoſe who have not ſeen this ceremony will no doubt be gladly inform'd,
" how, in order to prevent any diſorder or diſturbance, the chief cardinal dea" con, cloth'd in a dalmatica of white damaſk, and having a mitre on his head,
" ſits at the gate of the apoſtolical palace, in a chair of crimſon velvet with gold
" fringe, ſet at the head of the Swiſs guards; and at the right-hand of this cardinal
" ſtands the governor of Rome with his battoon in his hand; and at his left the major-
" domo, or chief ſteward of the pope's houſhold, who ſtands in that place till ſuch
" time as thoſe who aſſiſt at the proceſſion have march'd off; and where he determines
" upon the ſpot all diſputes that may ariſe with regard to precedency, or any other
" cauſe. They have a right to command all the pope's guards, not excepting the " Swiſs themſelves, who are all under arms in the midſt of the ſquare; it extends al-
" ſo to the light-horſe, two of whom, by their order, are poſted with their lances
" couch'd, at the corner of every ſtreet thro' which the proceſſion paſſes.

" While the proceſſion continues, the caſtle of St. Angelo makes a triple diſ-
" charge of all its artillery. The firſt ſalvo is made when his holineſs goes out of the " chapel Paulina, the moment when he takes in his hand the pyx in which the hoſt
" is laid, and that the great culverine of St. Peter's is fired off to give the ſignal; the " ſecond ſalvo is made when the pope goes out from the portico of the great ſquare
" before the apoſtolical palace, and the third when he enters into St. James's ſquare."

Here follows the order which is generally obſerv'd in the proceſſions of the hoſt.

During

During its march the bells of the cathedral and of thoſe before which it paſſes are rung. The ſtreets * muſt be ſwept, and ſtrew'd with flowers and greens, and the outſides of the houſes and churches adorn'd after the ſame manner. The officiating prieſt conſecrates two large hoſts, one whereof is to be us'd in the proceſſion. Maſs being ended, the tapers are diſtributed, and a ſub-deacon, clothed in veſtments ſuitable to the feſtival, comes out of the ſacriſty, preceded by two incenſe-bearers in ſurplices, with the thurible in one hand, and the navicula in the other. Two incenſe-bearers go up to the ſub-deacon, ſtand by him without the chancel of the altar, and there continue ſtanding till they are ready to march. About ſix clerks in ſurplices, and carrying lighted torches in their hands, range themſelves up and down at the foot of the altar; and thoſe who are to carry the canopy, ſet themſelves at the entrance of the chancel of the altar.

The laſt goſpel being read, the officiating prieſt makes his genuflexions, having the deacon and ſub-deacon on each ſide of him, and afterwards goes to the epiſtle-ſide; then goes to the bottom of the ſteps, lays down his maniple and chaſuble, and puts on a white pluvial or chaſuble. The deacon and ſub-deacon alſo put off their maniples, when they all three go and make a genuflexion on both knees, making a very low bow in the middle of the laſt ſtep of the altar, where they continue a little time in prayer; after which the deacon riſes up, and makes another genuflexion; and this in order to uncover the pyx, ſet it up, and place it in the center of the corporals, or pieces of fine linen uſed at maſs. The third genuflexion, he comes back, and ſtands near the officiating prieſt, who riſes up, and withdraws a little towards the goſpel ſide: and after having thrice put incenſe into each thurible, he again falls down upon his knees; and the deacon who ſtands up at his right hand, the ſub-deacon ſtanding at the left hand of the officiating prieſt, gives the thurible to the officiating prieſt, who incenſes the bleſſed ſacrament thrice, making a low bow both before and after. This triple incenſing being over, the ſub-deacon ſpreads the veil over the ſhoulders of the officiating prieſt, when the deacon goes up to the altar, takes the pyx from thence, and gives it to the officiating prieſt, and afterwards covers the hands of the latter with the extremities of the veil that lies over his ſhoulders; after which, the officiating prieſt having the pyx in his hands, turns about to the right, and his miniſters after him, when they all three continue on one of the ſteps of the altar, till ſuch time as the whole proceſſion is wheel'd off, when they begin the pange lingua, and the proceſſion ſets out.

† A clerk dreſs'd in purple carries the banner of the bleſſed ſacrament, after whom the ſinging boys advance; then thoſe who carry the torches, and the members of the brotherhood, two and two: then the croſs-bearer, between two taper-bearers. The clergy advance afterwards, the clerks in ‡ ſurplices, the deacons and ſub-deacons in dalmaticas, and the prieſts in chaſubles. Thoſe on the right carry their tapers in their right hand, and thoſe on the left in their left; they are followed by clerks, carrying torches: two incenſe-bearers walk immediately before the hoſt, and perfume it all the way, obſerving to walk ſide-ways, in order not to turn their backs to it. The officiating prieſt carries it under a canopy, ſupported by the chief men of the place: The two firſt ſtaves that ſupport it, are carried by two men of the greateſt diſtinction;

* In ſome parts of Italy, triumphal arches are rais'd, adorn'd with emblems and mottos in honour of the bleſſed ſacrament. The cuſtom of laying carpets in the ſtreets thro' which the proceſſion is to paſs, was alſo obſerv'd by the antient Romans on theſe occaſions; to which we will add, that they had altars, as is now the cuſtom, erected in the ſtreets for their proceſſions to make a halt.

† In Spain, and ſeveral parts of Italy, there are buffoons and merry-andrews, who go at the head of the proceſſion, where they dance in the moſt groteſque manner, to heighten the ſolemnity of the feſtival. We have already obſerv'd, that the proceſſions of the old Romans were burleſqu'd with ſuch buffooneries.

‡ All theſe veſtments muſt be white.

diſtinction; and the reſt of the perſons of note ſtand at the right hand of the officiating prieſt, who is plac'd between the deacon and ſub-deacon, who hold up his chaſuble.

All theſe devout perſons ſing hymns, but the officiating prieſt, and his miniſters, repeat what is ſung with a low voice. The laity follow after the canopy bare-headed, and holding lighted tapers in their hands; and the women cloſe the proceſſion.

The proceſſion frequently makes a ſtation at ſome church by which it paſſes, or at certain altars, which are ſet up for that purpoſe; then the faithful kneel down, during which the miniſters prepare the altar: which being done, the deacon lays the hoſt upon it, and the officiating prieſt falls on his knees and adores it; after which he incenſes it thrice, making a low bow at the ſame time, while the hymn O! ſalutaris hoſtia is ſinging: which being done he repeats ſome prayers, receives the hoſt from the deacon, and prepares himſelf to ſet out; whereupon the choriſters begin an hymn, which is, as it were, the ſignal for marching.

Being return'd to the church, the ſupporters of the canopy ſtop at the entrance of the chancel of the altar, when the deacon receives the bleſſed ſacrament upon his knees, and lays it again on the altar, where the officiating prieſt incenſes it thrice, as before. After this they begin to chaunt and pray, when he takes up the hoſt and walks about with it; which being done, the deacon riſes, bends his knee, and lays the hoſt on an eminence, round which lighted tapers are ſet.

Thus have we deſcrib'd the order of the ceremony, to which we might have added certain other cuſtoms; but as they are generally obſerved in all proceſſions, and are us'd at the canonization of ſaints, &c. we thought it needleſs to mention them in this place. When the hoſt is not expos'd, the deacon ſhuts it up in the tabernacle after the bleſſing.

During the octave, the hoſt is expoſed on the altar; it is alſo exhibited in any publick calamity: but there is nothing particular in this ceremony.

When the officiating prieſt pronounces the bleſſing with the holy ſacrament, he is incens'd; during which the choir ſings the two following hymns, Tantum ergo ſacramentum; O ſalutaris hoſtia! * The bleſſing is perform'd as follows: the officiating prieſt, with his right hand, takes the hoſt by the nodus, and by the foot with his left hand; then turning about towards the people, he elevates the pyx as high as his forehead, after which he deſcends below his girdle; then raiſes it in a perpendicular line as high as his ſtomach, where he makes a ſign of the croſs, from the left ſhoulder to the right. This being done, he ſtops a little in the middle, lays the hoſt again on the altar, makes a genuflexion, and returns to his place, where he kneels upon the ſtep. Then the chief aſſiſtant riſes, goes up to the altar, and puts the ſacrament again in the tabernacle. We ſhould take notice of ſeveral other particulars, were theſe deſcriptions deſign'd for the uſe of the clergy.

In what manner the HOST is carried before the POPE, when he is travelling.

As the croſs is carried before the pope whenever he appears in publick at Rome, ſo the hoſt goes before him when he is upon a journey. † Father Rocca, who has written the riſe of this cuſtom, tells us that it was borrowed from the antient practice of the pope's hanging the hoſt about his neck, when the church labour'd under perſecution: this was alſo practiſed in the ſame manner by the reſt of the clergy, but it was afterwards aboliſh'd; and the ſovereign pontiffs have arrogated to themſelves only the privilege of having the hoſt carried before them whenever they travel.

The

* Alet's ritual.

† Bonanni, c. 93. della Gerarchia.

MANIERE de porter le S. SACREMENT quand le PAPE est en Voiage.

† The moſt antient inſtance of the hoſt going before the pope is that of Stephen III. in his journey to France, where he went to implore the aſſiſtance of king Pepin againſt Aiſtulfus king of the Lombards. However, ſome authors affirm, that a crucifix, and not the ‡ hoſt, was carried before his holineſs: Be this as it will; father Rocca aſſures us, that the cuſtom of carrying the hoſt in pomp is not of greater antiquity than two hundred years. The examples of preceeding ages do indeed ſhew that this cuſtom took its riſe from a principle of devotion, in order to excite the piety, &c. of the people; but then it does not prove that it was uſual for it to be carried with ſo much pomp and ſolemnity as before the latter popes.

When pope Pius II. went in 1458 to Mantua, to make an alliance againſt the Turks, he had the hoſt carried before him on a white horſe, under a ſilken canopy, and a gilt tabernacle, ſurrounded with a great number of lights. This is the moſt antient example of the hoſt being carried in pomp. In 1494, when Alexander VI. went to Naples, he had the hoſt carried before him on a pacing nag. Pope Julius II. and Leo X. obſerv'd the ſame at the coronation of Charles V. and Clement VII. caus'd it to be carried on horſe-back under a golden canopy. The holy ſacrament was put in a tabernacle of cryſtal, and lighted by ten flambeaus; which, during the march, were carried round the horſe on which the hoſt was ſet. When the pope went to Marſeilles by ſea, in order to hold a conference with Francis I. king of France, he cauſed the ſacrament to be carried in the admiral-galley.

Paul III. and Gregory XIII. followed the cuſtom which had been obſerved by their predeceſſors, and the latter reſolved to rival all the preceeding popes by the magnificence of their equipage; but nothing can enter in compariſon with the pomp with which the hoſt was carried into Ferrara, in 1598. when Clement VIII. went to take poſ-ſeſſion of that city after the death of Alphonſo of Eſte. The hoſt was carried in pro-ceſſion out of Rome in a magnificent tabernacle, which it would be needleſs to deſcribe in this place. The tabernacle was carried by eight canons of the Vatican upon a kind of litter, and under a magnificent canopy embroidered with gold, ſilk, &c. The brotherhood of the bleſſed ſacrament, with each a torch in his hand, walk'd before the hoſt. The religious orders, the muſicians of St. Peter's chapel, and the clergy with our Saviour's croſs carried before them, followed the brotherhood. Afterwards the hoſt appeared under the canopy, carried by eight of his holineſs's private chamber-lains, and was guarded by a body of Swiſs, and other ſoldiers. After the hoſt his holineſs appear'd, holding a taper or torch in his hand; and next to him the ſacred college, the prelates, and the Roman nobility, all of them holding tapers in their hands. In this manner the hoſt was carried out of Rome.

It was carried to Ferrara on a pad-nag, adorn'd with the moſt gaudy trappings; but his holineſs, before he began the march, bent his knee before the hoſt, and did not riſe up till it was gone out of ſight. The mules employ'd to carry the baggage, and his holineſs's lacqueys carrying his arms, marched at the head; theſe were re-inforced by ſeveral companies of ſoldiers, who ſounded the trumpet as they march'd: after which eight led horſes came forward, and theſe were followed by the domeſticks of the cardinals and prelates, all of them on horſe-back; two couriers belonging to the apoſtolick ſee, the band of muſick of the pope's chapel, two eſquires, two mace-bearers, followed by the maſter of the ceremonies, and the two clerks of the pontifical chapel: the latter carry'd each of them a lanthorn, fix'd at the end of a lance, in order to light the hoſt, which followed immediately after. Two of his holineſs's grooms held held the reins of the horſe on which he rid, and the hoſt was guarded by a body of armed Swiſs. Afterwards came the ſacriſtan, with his white ſtaff in his hand, the badge of his office, and was followed by a great number of Roman prelates. After this another band of muſicians, and a company of lacqueys belonging to the baggage appear'd, and five hundred horſemen, in very magnificent habits, divided likewiſe into companies. We are not to forget his holineſs's barber, taylor, and ſhoemaker, who all advanced forward, according to their rank. Four chamberlains carried four ſtudents pontifical caps, made of purple, at the end of four pikes. All the nobility of Rome and of Ferrara aſſiſted alſo in it, dreſs'd in a very ſumptuous manner: and after theſe came the acolyths, the chiefs of the apoſtolical chamber, the auditors of the rota, the ſub-deacons, the orators; the biſhop of Ferrara, with his clergy, his holineſs's key-bearers, his chief maſter of the ceremonies, his croſs-bearer; twenty clerks of the cathedral of Ferrara, each having a lighted torch in his hand. The hoſt, when the proceſſion went out of Rome, and during the whole journey, was carried along with the baggage; but at the entrance into Ferrara it was plac'd in the center of the proceſſion. The pope's chief treaſurer had bags fix'd on each ſide of his ſaddle, out of which he threw money to the people. St. Peter, who from a poor fiſherman was become a temporal prince, had found by long experience, that the good things of this world have a greater influence over the minds of men than apoſtolical bleſſings. Theſe were wonderfully efficacious when the lame, at the bare command of our Saviour, uſed to riſe up and walk; but things are greatly changed ſince that time. After the treaſurer came thirty youths of the greateſt quality in Ferrara, walking on foot, bare-headed, dreſs'd in cloth of ſilver, with little black cloaks embroidered with ſilk, and caps in their hands enrich'd with golden roſes, pearls, and precious ſtones. After this ſhining troop pope Clement VIII. himſelf advanced forward, not as one who ſtil'd himſelf the * ſervant of ſervants, but in quality of the lieutenant of the Almighty, clothed in a robe of very rich ſilk, having on his head a crown enrich'd with jewels of immenſe value: He was carried on the ſhoulders of eight tall lacqueys, clothed in long ſcarlet robes, under a canopy of the fineſt crimſon-velvet embroider'd with gold; ſurrounded with a double range of guards very richly dreſs'd, and followed by his Swiſs and an auditor of the Rota, who carried his triple crown after him, having on each ſide of him the great chamberlain and the chief butler. We take no notice of the great number of coaches and horſemen which followed the hoſt and the pope.

† Idem Ibid.

‡ We are of opinion, that the Chriſtus prævius, mentioned in the above-cited paſſage of Anaſtaſius the librarian, is to be explain'd in this manner.

During the whole march, the holy perſons ſung anthems and motets, a kind of muſical compoſition, repeating prayers, making ſigns of the croſs, giving and receiving bleſſings; and, in a word, practiſing all the exterior of devotion. They marched very ſlowly: the clergy, both ſecular and regular, in all the places thro' which the proceſſion paſs'd in the night time, advanc'd to meet it, with a body of the militia at their head; after the clergy came the magiſtrates, and other perſons of diſtinction; and at their entrance into the city, the trumpets ſounded, and the air echo'd with ſpiritual ſongs, and people crouded from all parts to come and adore the hoſt. People of faſhion ſtrove who ſhould firſt preſent him the canopy, ſtudiouſly endeavouring to pay all kinds of worldly honour to a Saviour, who, during his reſidence here below, had trampled on pride, vanity, and oſtentation. Such was the proceſſion, whereof we find

* As the popes were deſirous of having it thought that they did not affect any great titles, but profeſs'd that humility on which their greatneſs had been chiefly founded; the more they found their grandeur increaſe, the more they ſought out for unambitious titles, and called themſelves the ſervant of ſervants: an humble title, which has the ſame effect on our minds as thoſe which the Perſians uſed to give their monarchs, viz. king of kings. The firſt pope who made uſe of it was Damaſus, and it was afterwards truly eſtabliſhed by Gregory I. Vid. Paſquier, in his enquiries concerning France.

find a more particular deſcription in father Rocca, or in Bonanni, to whom we are oblig'd for this extract.

Bonanni is of opinion that this ceremony took its riſe from the practice obſerv'd by the primitive chriſtians of keeping the hoſt in their houſes, and taking it along with them in a journey; and that they looked upon it as a preſervative againſt dangers: it gave them ſpiritual comfort in the ſtorms of perſecution; and whenever they found themſelves in danger of dying, they received it as the life of their ſouls. The popes have been deſirous of preſerving this cuſtom; but as the times are chang'd, and that the ſpiritual father of the chriſtians is now the image of the triumphant Jeſus, it is but reaſonable, that this divine Saviour of mankind ſhould appear in ſplendor, and march in great * pomp. But it may be asked, that in caſe the cuſtom of carrying the holy ſacrament on a journey took its riſe from the piety of the ſovereign pontiffs, and the deſire they have of being always in a readineſs to receive the ſacred body of Chriſt Jeſus in caſe of death, why it is carried a whole day's journey before the holy father? An anſwer is indeed made to this objection, but ſo trifling a one, that 'tis not worth taking notice of. 'Tis very probable, that this ceremony is an imitation of the ſolemn march of the ark, under the antient law, on certain extraordinary occaſions. This judaical cuſtom was ſo neceſſary to the majeſty of the chriſtian religion, that 'tis very ſurpriſing the popes, who from time to time have bent all their endeavours to heighten the ſolemnity of it, ſhould, for ſo many centuries, have neglected to borrow from the Jews the moſt auguſt of all their ceremonies.

In this plate are exhibited two different manners of carrying the holy ſacrament before the pope; the one on horſe-back, and the other in a kind of litter between two mules.

We ſhall conclude this article with the manner of the deacon's giving notice to the people that the pope is to carry the holy ſacrament, which is done the eve before. The form of words us'd on that occaſion is pretty remarkable; † to morrow, ſays the deacon, the moſt holy will carry the moſt holy.

The chief PROCESSIONS in Rome, during the octave of Corpus-Chriſti day.

Corpus-Chriſti day, after veſpers, at our lady's of the Victory.

Friday-morning, at Minerva.

Saturday-morning, at S. Maria Maggiore's, and our Lady's of the people.

Sunday-morning, at that of Anima for the German nation; and for the French at St. Lewis's, where the cardinals, protectors of the ſeveral nations, aſſiſt. There is afterwards another fine proceſſion at St. Apolinarius's in Traſtevera: In the morning at S. Mary's del Horto, at which all the fraternities that are eſtabliſh'd there aſſiſt; and in the evening at S. Mary's in Traſtevera, and at our lady's of the Mountains. The ſame day after veſpers, at St. John's of Lateran; at S. Mary's Della Scala, and at the Tranſpontina.

Monday, at the fraternity of Death, and at the trinity of the Mountain.

Tueſday-evening, at the holy Apoſtles.

Wedneſday, at our Lady's del Pianto, and at the Rotunda.

Thurſday, the day of the octave, in the morning at St. Laurence's in Damaſo; at St. Andrew's Delle Frate, at our Lady's of Monte Serrato, at S. Blaiſe de la Pagnote; at St. Mark, where the magiſtrates of the Roman people aſſiſt. But the fineſt of all theſe proceſſions is that of Jeſus, from the richneſs of the Jeſuits copes, which are embroidered ſtuffs, enrich'd with pearls and precious ſtones of prodigious value. On the evening of the ſame day, at St. Laurence's in Lucina; at St. James's of the Spaniards, and at St. Peter's. The octave concludes with a proceſſion made by the chapter.

In

* Bonanni, c. 94. della Gerarchia.

† Craſtina die ſanctiſſimus portabit ſanctiſſimum.

In J U N E.

1. St. Theobald of the order of the Camalduli, in the churches of the order.

2. St. Peter and St. Marcellinus martyrs, in their churches.

3. St. Pelerinus of the order of the Camalduli, feaſts in the churches of the order.

4. St. Quirinus biſhop and martyr, at S. Mary's in Traſtevera where his body is depoſited.

5. St. Boniface the benedictine, biſhop and martyr, feſtival in the churches of the order.

6. St. Claudius archbiſhop of Beſançon, at the church of the Burgundians in Franche Comté. St. Artemus the martyr, at St. Martin's of the mountains, where his body is interr'd. St. Norbert biſhop and founder of Premontré, in their college.

7. St. Robert abbot of the Ciſtertians, in the churches of the order.

8.

9. St. Primus and St. Felicianus, at St. Stephen's the round. Dedication of St. Peter Montorio.

10. Tranſlation of the body of St. Philip Benizi founder of the Servites, feaſt at St. Marcellus's.

11. St. Barnabas the apoſtle, at St. Peter's, for the tranſlation of the body of St. Gregory Nazianzen.

12. St. Baſil, St. Cirinus, St. Naborus, and St. Nazarius, martyrs; at the holy Apoſtles, where their relicks are depoſited. St. Onogrius, feaſt in his church. St. Leo III. pope, feaſt at St. Peter's.

13. * St. Anthony of Padua, feſtival at St. Anthony's of the Portugueſe; in the churches of the order of St. Francis, and at St. Peter's in the chapel of the choir.

The ſecond ſunday in June, feſtival at our Lady's of the conſolation.

14. St. Baſilius the great, feaſt at his churches, and at St. Peter's, in his chapel.

15. St. Vitus and St. Modeſtus martyrs, in their church.

16. St. Quirico and Julitus martyrs, at their church; at S. Pudentiana's, and in the other churches of the order of the Ciſtertians, for S. Lutgarda the virgin.

17.

18. St. Marcus and St. Marcellinus martyrs, at St. Coſmus and Damian in campo Vaccino, where their bodies lie.

19. St. Gervaſius and St. Protaſius martyrs, at St. Vitalis's and at St. Charles's of the court.

20. St. Novatus, brother to the ſaints Pudentiana and Praxeda, at their churches, and at that of Ara Cœli, for the bleſſed Francis Solano.

21.

* Ribadeneira gives the following relation in his life of this ſaint: A certain Franciſcan novice throwing off his habit, ran away from the monaſtery in which the ſaint lived, and ſtole away with him a pſalm-book, written with St. Anthony's own hand, and explain'd with marginal notes, which St. Anthony often uſed, when he privately expounded the ſcriptures to the friars. As ſoon as St. Anthony perceived his book to be ſtole, he fell down on his knees and earneſtly intreated God to reſtore him his book again. In the mean time the apoſtate thief having his book with him, as he prepared to ſwim over the river, he met the devil, who with a drawn ſword in his hand, commanded him to go back again immediately, and reſtore to St. Anthony the book he had ſtole from him, threatning to kill him in caſe of non-compliance. The devil gave this order with ſo dreadful an aſpect, that the thief being aſtoniſh'd, return'd immediately to the monaſtery; reſtor'd the ſaint his book, and continued in a religious courſe ever after. Hence 'tis ſaid that St. Anthony is implor'd to reſtore loſt goods.

'Tis farther related, that the following accident happen'd to him in the beginning of Lent. Having wearied himſelf with labour, and being laid down to ſleep to refreſh himſelf, the devil ſet upon him cowardly, and grip'd him ſo faſt by the throat, that he had almoſt choak'd him; till invoking the virgin Mary, and making the ſign of the croſs, and ſinging while the devil had him faſt by the throat, the hymn, O glorioſa domina, &c. his cell was immediately fill'd with a celeſtial light, which the devil not being able to endure, immediately departed.

St. Anthony is alſo very famous for his ſermons. See that to the fiſhes related by Mr. Addiſon in his travels.

21. S. Demetria virgin and martyr, ſiſter of St. Bibiana, at her church; and at that of the Jeſuits, for the bleſſed Lewis Gonzaga.

22. St. Paulinus biſhop and confeſſor, at St. Bartholomew's in the iſland, where his body lies.

23. St. John prieſt and martyr, at St. Bibiana's, and at St. Syveſter's in Capite, where his body is depoſited.

24. Nativity of St. John Baptiſt; the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the office at St. John's of Lateran; the cardinal arch-prieſt chaunts maſs; feaſt at St. John's of the Florentines, at St. John's of the Genoeze, in the other churches of St. John and St. Syveſter in the field of Mars, where they pretend St. John Baptiſt's head is depoſited.

Formerly it was cuſtomary to ſing three maſſes at the Nativity of St. John Baptiſt, as at Chriſtmas. To preſerve part of this cuſtom, the church of St. Maur, two leagues diſtance from Paris, cauſes high maſs to be ſaid at midnight.

25. St. Eloi, biſhop and confeſſor, feſtival at his churches.

26. St. John and St. Paul martyrs, in their churches.

27.

28. St. Leo II. and St. Paul I. popes, feaſt at St. Peter's; after veſpers the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the office: afterwards the embaſſador of the king of Spain, preſents his holineſs with a pad-nag in very rich trappings, with a ſaddle and houſings embroider'd with the pope's arms. The groom who leads the horſe, carries in a ſilken purſe richly embroider'd, a little inſtrument or note of ſeven thouſand crowns of gold for the tribute of the kingdom of Naples, which, ſince ſome ages, is become a fief of the holy ſee, as the pope's pretend. This ceremony had been diſcontinued under the pontificate of Clement XII. his ſucceſſor, and was revived by Innocent XIII. Here follows the order of the ceremony: " * Annually, the eve of the feſtival of St. Peter, the " Spaniſh embaſſador, or ſome prince who is a vaſſal of his catholick majeſty, ſets out " from the palace in cavalcade, much after the ſame manner as in an embaſſy " when obeyſance is paid to his holineſs. This nag goes immediately before the " embaſſador, between the pope's guards, accompanied with the tall lacqueys and " pages of the miniſter cloth'd in new liveries." In the evening there are illuminations and fireworks in the caſtle of St. Angelo and in the Spaniſh ſquare, as alſo in the evening of the following day.

29. St. Peter and St. Paul apoſtles; the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at maſs at St. Peter's; his holineſs ſings a pontifical maſs, and reads a homily in Latin after the goſpel; feaſt at St. Paul's, and at St. John's of Lateran, where their heads are ſhewn: feſtival in their other churches; at St. Charles's of the Cantinari, and at the oratory of the Gonfaloniere.

30. Commemoration of St. Paul, at St. Paul's of the three Fountains; at the Victory, &c.

JULY.

1. The Octave of St. John Baptiſt, feaſt at St. John's of Lateran.

2. The viſitation of our Lady, at S. Maria Maggiore's, and the other churches of the virgin; at S. Elizabeth's of the German bakers; at the Maidens of the Viſitation at the church of Longara; and at St. Peter's, for St. Proceſſus and St. Martinian martyrs.

3. St. Lanfranc biſhop and confeſſor, of the order of St. Benedict, feaſt in the churches of the order.

4. St. Elizabeth queen of Portugal, at St. Anthony's of the Portugueſe, in the churches dedicated to St. Francis.

5. St. Zoé the martyr, at St. Peter's.

* Picture of the court of Rome, by Aymon.

6. Octave of St. Peter and St. Paul, &c. at St. Coſmus's and Damian's, for St. Tranquillinus the martyr.

7. Tranſlation of St. Thomas of Canterbury to St. Mary's de Cacabari.

8. St. Aquila and Priſcilla martyrs, at St. Priſcus's.

9. St. Zeno and his companions martyrs, feaſt at St. Vincent's, and the three Fountains.

10. S. Ruffina and S. Seconda martyrs, feaſts in their churches of the Vatican, and on the other ſide the Tyber; at St. Coſmus's and St. Damian's martyrs, for St. Leontius the martyr; and at St. Marcellus's, for the ſeven ſons of S. Felicita, all martyrs.

11. St. Pius pope and martyr, at St. Peter's, where his body is interr'd.

12. St. John Gualbert, founder of the order of Val-ombroſa, at St. Praxeda's.

13. St. Anacletus pope and martyr, feaſt at St. Peter's where his body lies.

14. St. Bonaventure the cardinal, feaſt in all the churches of the order of St. Francis; the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the office, in the church of the holy Apoſtles.

15. St. Henry the emperor, in the church of Jeſus, where his relicks are depoſited.

16. Dedication of the chapel of St. Paſtor, at S. Pudentiana's, at Tranſpontina's, and our Lady of the Mountains. Another feaſt of our Lady's of the Carmelites; the ſunday following, feaſt at St. Martin's of the Mountains's, and at St. Chryſogonus's of the ſame order.

17. St. Alexis, feaſt in his church, at St. Paul's, at S. Mary's in Porticu; and at St. Peter's for St. Leo IV.

18. St. Symphoroſa and her ſeven children martyrs, at St. Angelo of the Fiſh-market, where their bodies are depoſited.

19. St. Epaphrius the martyr, diſciple of St. Paul, at S. Maria Maggiore's, where his body lies.

20. * S. Margaret virgin and martyr, at her church on the other ſide the Tyber; and at the Tranſpontina, for St. Elias.

21. St. Praxeda, feaſt in his church, at S. Pudentiana's, at the four crown'd heads, and at St. John's of Lateran.

22. S. Mary Magdalen, feaſt in her church, at the Converted in the Courts, and at St. Celſus's, where ſome of her relicks are depoſited.

S. Mary Magdalen has a particular reverence paid to her in Provence, where is the ‖ famous grotto, in which ſolitude we are told ſhe lived during thirty years. That part of it where ſhe wept and bewail'd the diſorders of her youth is incloſed with iron rails; and torches burn therein night and day to her honour. Above this we ſee the holy pillar, to which this holy woman was raiſed ſeven times a day by the angels.

23. St. Apollinarius biſhop and martyr, in his church; at St. Celſus's for St. Liborio the biſhop; at S. Mary Maggiore's, for St. Romula and St. Redempta.

24. † S. Chriſtina virgin and martyr, at S. Mary Maggiore's where her relicks are.

25. St. James the apoſtle, feaſt in his churches.

26.

* There's a famous legend of this ſaint in the old Roman and Salisbury Breviaries, in which are the following remarkable particulars: She begg'd of God that ſhe might have a conflict face to face with the devil, who hitherto had been her ſecret and hidden enemy. Whereupon the devil appeared under the ſhape of a terrible dragon, and ſwallow'd her up; but immediately arming her ſelf with the ſign of the croſs, the dragon burſt aſunder, and the virgin came unhurt out of her belly.

‖ The holy balm, ſo pleaſantly deſcrib'd by Father Peter of St. Lewis, a Carmelite of Provence, in his poem entitled Mary Magdalen.

† 'Tis related in the Romiſh Breviary, that this ſaint was bound to a wheel, and roaſted at a fire; and as they pour'd on oil, the flame broke forth, and ſlew a thouſand of the heathens. She was again thrown into priſon, where being viſited by an angel he heal'd and refreſh'd her. Then ſhe was caſt into the lake Vulſinus, with a great ſtone faſtned to her body, but the angel kept her from drowning. Upon her prayers the image of Apollo which ſhe was commanded to worſhip, was ſuddenly reduced to aſhes, by which miracle three thouſand were converted to the faith. She was afterwards put into a fiery furnace, and remain'd five days unhurt in it.

26. S. Anna, in her churches, and at St. Paul's; at S. Frances's the Roman, for St. Sempronius the martyr.

27. St. Pantaleon the martyr, feaſt in his churches.

28. St. Nazarius, Celſus and Victor martyrs, feaſt at St. Peter's for St. Victor; and at St. Martin's of the Mountains, for pope St. Innocent.

29. S. Martha, feſtival in her churches; at S. Maria Maggiore's, for St. Simplicius, St. Fauſtinus, and St. Beatrix, whoſe bodies are there interr'd; at St. Coſmus's and St. Damian's, for St. Felix II. pope and martyr.

30. St. Abdon and St. Sennen martyrs, feaſt at St. Mark, where their bodies are interr'd.

31. St. Ignatius founder of the Jeſuits, feaſt in the churches of the company of Jeſus.

AUGUST.

1. * St. Peter's in Vinculis, feaſt in his church; and for the holy brethren the Macchabees, in the great churches.

2. St. Stephen pope and martyr, at St. Martin's of the Mountains, where his body is interr'd. At St. John's of the Florentines, feaſt of the knights of the order of St. Stephen. In all the churches of St. Francis, feaſt for the pardon of the Portiuncula at Aſſiſa, feaſt at S. Bridget's.

3. Invention of the body of St. Stephen firſt martyr, feaſt in his churches, and at St. Laurence's without the walls.

4. St. Dominic founder of his order, feaſt at the church of the Minerva, and in the other churches of the order.

5. Our Lady of the Snows, feaſt at S. Maria Maggiore's; at St. Dominic's, and at St. Sixtus's in mount Magnanopoli, the nuns exhibit their fineſt ornaments, which are all exceeding beautiful and ſurprizingly rich.

6. ‖ Transfiguration of our Lord, in the churches of St. Saviour and that of Minerva.

7. St. Albert the Carmelite, in the churches of the order.

8. St. Cyriacus, Largus and Smaragdus, feaſt at S. Maria's in Via Lata, and at St. Sylveſter's in campo Marzo.

9. St. Romanus the martyr, feaſt at St. Laurence's without the walls.

10. St. Laurence, feaſt in his churches.

11. S. Suſanna virgin and martyr, in her church, and at St. John's Colabit, for St. Jaurin the biſhop.

12. † S. Clara, feaſt in her church, and the others of her order.

13. St. Hypolitus the martyr, at St. Laurence's without the walls.

14. St. Euſebius the martyr, in his church.

15. The aſſumption of the virgin, the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the office in S. Maria Maggiore's,

* This feſtival was inſtituted about the middle of the fifth century by pope Sixtus III. at the deſire of the empreſs Eudoxia; it was cuſtomary for people to celebrate on the ſame day the anniverſary of the defeat of Anthony and Cleopatra.

‖ The feaſt of the transfiguration was inſtituted by pope Calixtus III. in 1456, in commemoration of a great victory which the Chriſtians gain'd over the Turks.

† One day in the monaſtery of St. Clare, when meal-time was come, ſhe was told that there was but one loaf of bread, and that not a large one, to ſerve the whole community. Notwithſtanding this ſhe commanded one half to be given to the friars, and reſerved the other half for her nuns, to be divided into fifty parts according to their number. This command, tho a ſtrange one, was yet humbly complied with by her ſervants; yet theſe ſmall portions, by the divine power, did ſo ſwell in the hands of every one that brake them, that the whole convent was fill'd.

Maggiore's, where the cardinal arch-prieſt ſings maſs; feaſt in all the churches of the virgin, and particularly at our Lady's of the Miracles.

16. †St. Roch, feſtival in his church, and in that of the Minerva, for St. Hyacinth; dedication of S. Lucia in Selce.

17. Octave of St. Laurence, feaſt in his churches, and at St. James's della Longara, for the bleſſed Clara of Monte Falco.

18. ‡ S. Helena the empreſs, feſtival in her church of the Credenceарii, and at St. Croſs's in Jeruſalem.

19. St. Lewis archbiſhop of Toulouſe, of the order of St. Francis, in the churches of the order; at St. Peter's, for St. Magnus biſhop and martyr, and at St. Michael's of the Ladder, where his body lies.

20. St. Bernard abbot of Clairvaux, in his churches, and in all thoſe of the order of the Ciſtertians.

21. St. Cyriacus the martyr, feaſt at S. Mary's in Campitelli, where his body is interr'd; at St. Laurence's without the walls; at St. Agathe's in Suburra; at St. Francis's in campo Vaccino, for the bleſſed Bernardo Ptolomei, founder of the Mount of Olives.

22. Octave of the aſſumption, feaſt at S. Maria Maggiore's; at St. Paul's for St. Timothy; and at St. Marcellus's, for St. Hypolitus biſhop and martyr.

23. St. Philippa Beniſi founder of the order of the Servites, feaſt at St. Marcellus's and the other churches of that order; at St. Sylveſter's in campo Marzo, for St. Chryſanta and Daria martyrs; at S. Maria Maggiore's, for the tranſlation of St. Simplicius, St. Fauſtus and St. Beatrix martyrs.

24. Eve of St. Bartholomew, feſtival in his churches.

25. St. Bartholomew the apoſtle, feaſt in his churches; at St. Lewis's of the French, for St. Lewis, where the cardinals aſſiſt ſolemnly at the office; at St. Laurence's in Lucina, for St. Euſebius, St. Vincent, St. Pontian and St. Pelerinus martyrs, and at St. John's della Pigna, for St. Geneſis the martyr.

26. St. Zephirinus pope and martyr, at St. Sixtus's where his relicks are depoſited; at St. Bartholomew's delli Bergamaſchi, for St. Alexander the martyr.

27. Feſtival at St. Bartholomew's, and at St. John's Colabit's.

28. St. Auſtin, feaſt in the churches of his order. The ſame day they go into the church of the Oblates of the ſeven ſorrows.

29. Beheading of St. John the baptiſt, feaſt at his, and the other churches; feaſt at S. Sabina's the martyr, in her church; and at S. Praxeda's, for S. Candida virgin and martyr.

30. St. Felix and other martyrs, feſtival at St. Laurence's in Lucina, where their relicks are depoſited; at the church of Minerva, for St. Roſa of Peru; and at St. Auſtin's for the dedication.

31. St. Raimon Nonat cardinal of the order of Mercy, feaſt at St. Adrian's, and St. John's in campo Marzo.

† 'Tis ſaid that this ſaint was born with the ſign of the croſs on his left ſide; and that, as a token of his future ſanctity, when he was a child, he would never ſuck but once a day; that he cured men of the plague, by only making the ſign of the croſs upon them; that a little dog brought him bread, and an angel healed him of the plague; that he died in Lombardy, and that an angel deliver'd him a table, written in gold letters by God's own hand with the name of St. Roch in it, and that whoever commemorated him ſhould be cured of the plague.

‡ 'Tis related in the Breviary of pope Pius V. that Helena being ſent by her ſon Conſtantine to the holy Land, to find out the wood of the holy croſs, that ſhe there found inſtead of it a marble ſtatue of Venus: that the ground being dug three croſſes were found, and alſo the title that was once faſtned to our Saviour's croſs, but now was fix'd to none of them, but lay by it ſelf a-part from the croſſes; ſo that they knew not which it belong'd to. However that doubt was ſoon taken away by a miracle, for a woman, who by a fit of ſickneſs was brought almoſt to the grave, having two of them applied to her by Macarius biſhop of Jeruſalem, ſhe received no benefit at all; but the third being applied ſhe was inſtantly heal'd.

SEPTEMBER.

1. St. Giles the abbot, feaſt in his churches; and at St. Laurence's in Damaſo, for the dedication.

2. St. Bonoſus the Benedictine abbot, feaſt in the churches of the order; at S. Pudentiana's, where his relicks are depoſited.

3. S. Seraphia the virgin, feaſt at S. Sabina's where her body lies.

4. St. Theſauro cardinal, of the order of Val-ombroſa, at St. Praxeda's.

5. St. Bertin the Benedictine abbot, feaſt in the churches of the order.

6. St. Eleutherius the abbot, feaſt at St. Gregory's on Mount Cælius.

7. St. Adrian the martyr, in his church in campo Vaccino.

8. The nativity of our Lady, the pope aſſiſts ſolemnly at the office at our Lady's of the people, where a cardinal prieſt ſings maſs; feaſt in the churches of the Virgin, and at the new Church.

9. St. Gregory the martyr, feaſt at St. Peter's.

10. St. Nicholas Tolentine in his church, and at that of the order of St. Auſtin.

11. St. Protus and Hyacinthus martyrs, at the holy Apoſtles, and at St. John's of the Florentines, where their relicks are depoſited.

12. Feaſt of the name of Mary, at St. Bernard's at Trajan's Pillar. On ſunday of the octave of the nativity of the Virgin, feaſt at St. Marcellus's, and at our Lady's of the Oak, of the butchers company; S. Maria Maggiore's, feaſt at our Lady's of Loretto of Trajan-ſquare.

13. St. Martin the abbot, feaſt at St. Gregory's on Mount Cælius.

14. Exaltation of the holy croſs, feaſt in its churches; at the Crucifix of St. Marcellus, and at St. Charles's of the Catinari.

15. Octave of the nativity of our Lady, feaſt in her churches.

16. St. Cornelius pope and martyr, and St. Cyprian biſhop and martyr, at St. Mary's in Traſtevera, where the body of the above-mention'd St. Cornelius is depoſited; at Jeſus's church, for St. Abundus and St. Abundantius martyrs; S. Euphemia virgin and martyr, feaſt in her church at Trajan's Pillar.

17. Feaſt of the Stigmati of St. Francis, in all the churches of his order; and at the fraternity of the Stygmates eſtabliſh'd in the church of the forty martyrs in the Cæſarine palace. At St. Laurence's without the walls, feaſt of St. Juſtin prieſt and martyr, where his body is interred.

18. S. Sophia virgin and martyr, feaſt at St. Martin's of the Mountains, where her body lies; and at St. Auſtin's, for St. Thomas of Villa Nova.

19. St. Sylveſter biſhop and martyr, at the church of the Holy Ghoſt of the Neapolitans, and at St. Sylveſter's of the field of Mars.

20. St. Euſtachius and his companions martyrs, feſtival in his church, and at St. Martin's of the Mountains, where the body of St. Theophilus lies.

21. St. Matthew the evangeliſt and apoſtle, at his church; at St. Croſs's in Jeruſalem; at S. Maria Maggiore's; and the Trinity of the Pilgrims.

22. St. Mauritius and his companions martyrs, at the church of the Piemonteze; at S. Maria Maggiore's, where her head is depoſited; and at St. Marcellus's, for S. Digna and S. Emerita virgins and martyrs.

23. St. Linus pope and martyr, feſtival at St. Peter's; and at the hoſpital of the Holy Ghoſt, for S. Thecla virgin and martyr.

24. St. Girardus the benedictine abbot, feaſt in the churches of the order; at St. Adrian's in Campo Vaccino, chief feaſt of our lady of Mercy.

25. St. Herculanus martyr, feaſt at St. John Colabit's, where his body is interr'd.

26. St. Cyprian and St. Juſtina martyrs, feaſt at their chapel; at St. John's of Lateran.

27. St. Coſmus and St. Damian martyrs, feaſt at their church; at S. Maria Maggiore's; at St. Marcellus's; and at the church or oratory of the Barbers behind the holy Shroud of the Piemonteze.

28. St. Wincenſlaus king of Bohemia, feaſt at St. Peter's; at St. Coſmus's and St. Damian's for S. Antimus, St. Leontius, and St. Eutheremius martyrs.

29. * Dedication of St. Michael the archangel, feaſt in his churches.

30. St. Jerom the doctor of the church, feaſt in his churches; at S. Maria Maggiore's, and at S. Anaſtaſia's.

O C T O B E R.

The firſt ſunday, feaſt of the Roſary at the Minerva, and at the churches of the order of St. Dominic.

1. St. Remi biſhop and confeſſor, feaſt at St. Mary's in Traſtevera where her relicks are depoſited; at St. Agathe's and St. Lewis's.

2. St. Leger biſhop of Autun and martyr, feaſt at St. Peter's where his relicks are depoſited. † Feaſt of the guardian Angel in his church.

3. St. Candidus the martyr, at S. Bibiana's.

4. St. Francis of Aſſiſium confeſſor, feaſt in all the churches of his order; and at St. John of the Bolognese, for St. Petronius.

5. St. Placidus and his companions martyrs, feaſt in the churches of the order of St. Benedict; and at St. Peter's for S. Gall.

6. St. Bruno founder of the Carthuſians, at St. Mary's of the Angels; and our Lady's of the Peace, for the dedication.

7. St. Mark pope, feaſt in his church; St. Sergius and St. Bacchus martyrs, feaſt in their church.

8. S. Bridget the widow, feaſt in her church; and at St. Laurence's in Paniſperna for the holy martyrs Marcellus and Apuleius; dedication of St. Lewis of the French. St. Simeon, who held our Lord in his arms the day of the Purification; feaſt in his church near Piazza Fiametta.

9. ‡ St. Denis and his companions martyrs, feaſt in their church; and at St. Lewis of the French.

10.

